This short verse text, known in Sanskrit as the Pañca Tathāgata Maṅgala Gāthā and in Tibetan as bDe bar gshegs pa lnga'i bkra shis kyi tshigs su bcad pa, or "The Auspicious Verses of the Five Tathāgatas," is a liturgical composition invoking blessings through praise of the five buddha families. Following an invocation of the Sugata's perfect auspiciousness and homage to the Three Jewels, the verses proceed to celebrate in turn Vairocana, Akṣobhya, and the other tathāgatas, praising their qualities of wisdom, purity, and accomplishment as a means of generating auspicious conditions for all beings. As a text of dedication and blessing, it belongs to the genre of auspicious verses (maṅgala gāthā) recited to invoke favorable circumstances, often used in ritual or ceremonial contexts. It is catalogued as Toh 822 in the Kangyur, situating it among the canonical collection of shorter ritual and devotional works attributed to buddhas and bodhisattvas.

...ba. May the Sugata's auspiciousness be perfect and complete here today.

The verses on the auspiciousness of the seven supreme buddhas are complete.

In the language of India: Pañca Tathāgata Maṅgala Gāthā.

In the language of Tibet: The Auspicious Verses of the Five Tathāgatas.

Homage to the Three Jewels.

Vairocana, possessed of sacred wisdom vast as a great ocean, whose body is like the full moon, who has reached the farthest shore of existence—

whatever auspiciousness lies in the complete fulfillment of all his intentions,
by that auspiciousness may all beings be brought to peace.

Akṣobhya, the Unshakeable King, who thoroughly purifies existence and delusion,

the Protector, auspicious through the perfect completion of all qualities—whatever auspiciousness lies in possessing a mind of equal, virtuous intent,
by that auspiciousness may all beings be brought to peace.

Adorned with the ornament of all a buddha's qualities, unfailingly bestowing the riches of genuine truth—

whatever auspiciousness lies in the one called Ratnasambhava, Source of

Jewels,

by that auspiciousness may all beings be brought to peace.

The abode of the perfection of the sacred wisdom of meditative concentration and absorption,

seated upon a lotus of wisdom, possessing immeasurable life—

whatever auspiciousness lies in his blessing beings with countless lifespans,

by that auspiciousness may all beings be brought to peace.

Turning his mind to acts for the benefit of sentient beings,

freeing all migrators from the bonds that bind them—

whatever auspiciousness lies in the supreme sage Amoghasiddhi, Unfailing Accomplishment,

by that auspiciousness may all beings be brought to peace.

Translator's Notes

- The passage is truncated at both ends: it opens mid-word from the close of a preceding text (a "Seven Buddhas" auspiciousness prayer) and breaks off mid-sentence at "Tathāgata..." at the start of what would be a further verse or colophon. The five buddhas praised—Vairocana, Akṣobhya, Ratnasambhava, Amitāyus/Amitābha, and Amoghasiddhi—are identified here by their standard epithets ("Unshakeable King," "Source of Jewels," etc.) rather than always by their Sanskrit names in the Tibetan, so these have been rendered descriptively with the Sanskrit name supplied where the epithet clearly indicates it.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.
