

Auspicious Verses

Maṅgalagāthā · Toh 826 · Derge Kangyur

བཀ་ཤིས་ཀྱི་མཚོ་སྤྱོད་པ།

This short text, entitled in Sanskrit Maṅgalagāthā and in Tibetan བཀ་ཤིས་ཀྱི་མཚོ་སྤྱོད་པ། (Bkra shis kyi tshigs su bcad pa), translates as "Verses of Auspiciousness" and is catalogued as Toh 826 in the Kangyur, placing it among the collection's short dhāraṇī and ritual verse texts. Opening with homage to the Three Jewels, the composition consists of a series of auspicious verses invoking the blessings of the Buddha's deeds and presence, celebrating his descent from the higher realms surrounded by divine hosts, his honoring by gods and celestial beings, and his passage into supreme peace. Each verse follows a refrain-like structure, naming a source of auspiciousness—such as the veneration offered by Indra, nāgas, garuḍas, yakṣas, and gandharvas—and dedicating that merit to bring peace to all beings. As a devotional and liturgical work, it belongs to the genre of auspicious verses (maṅgala-gāthā) recited for blessing and benediction, reflecting a tradition of invoking the Buddha's qualities and the reverence of both human and divine beings to generate well-being for all migrators.

Whatever auspiciousness belongs to the Victor who draws near to teach,
by that auspiciousness may all beings be brought to peace.

For the benefit of migrating beings he came here from the higher realms, surrounded by Brahmā and the hosts of gods holding in their hands yak-tail whisks, parasols,
and various other emblems—whatever auspiciousness there is in that,
by that auspiciousness may all beings be brought to peace.

The Tathāgata who passed into supreme peace,
openly honored with many mandārava flowers, openly praised by the supreme gods—whatever auspiciousness there is in that,
by that auspiciousness may all beings be brought to peace.

Honored by the lord of gods (Indra), by nāgas, and by the lords of men, worshipped by garuḍas, yakṣas, and the lords of gandharvas, the Tathāgata endowed with the ten powers—whatever auspiciousness there is in that,
by that auspiciousness may all beings be brought to peace.

This completes the auspicious verses of the Three Jewels and of the Twelve Deeds.

Translated, edited, and finalized by the Indian preceptor Jinamitra and the chief editor-translator, the monk Yeshe De.

Translator's Notes

- The phrase "□□□□□□□□□□" in the first line is somewhat ambiguous; it could describe the Buddha as "the one who draws near to teach" or refer more specifically to his act of turning the Wheel of Dharma. I have rendered it in the more general, natural sense, as the precise doctrinal reference (likely to one of the "twelve deeds") is not fully explicit from context alone.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.