The Sādhana of the Maṇḍala Rite Called Thoroughly Well Grasped, known in Sanskrit as the Suparigraha maṇḍala rite and in Tibetan as Dkyil 'khor gyi cho ga'i sgrub thabs bzang po yongs su gzung ba, is a tantric ritual manual composed by the Indian scholar Durjayacandra. Opening with homage to the glorious Heruka and to the compassionate Buddha, it sets out in verse the procedures for a maṇḍala rite, from its preparations and mantras to the closing fire offering, with its reading of omens in the flames and its dismissal of the fire god. Its author presents it modestly, as a practical guide that follows established convention rather than an exhaustive account of every tantra's rites. The work is Toh 1240 in the Tengyur, where it is preserved among the commentaries on the tantras.

In the language of India: suparigraha nāma maṇḍalanopikavidhi. In the language of Tibet: The Sādhana of the Maṇḍala Rite Called Thoroughly Well Grasped.

Homage to the Blessed One, glorious Heruka.

Beings have fallen into the spreading light of saṃsāra's destroying fire, its garland of sickness and sorrow, and are blistered by a disease that turns and is hard to turn back; to bring peace to these afflicted beings, a river of loving-kindness for beings, filled with the water of a rain of the nectar of compassion, flows down everywhere: to that Buddha, the Blessed One, I bow.

No one knows in full
the rites for the meaning of all the tantras;
no one is able to accomplish
the rites for the meaning of all the tantras.
Therefore, following mere convention,
I do not elaborate;
I compose this,
a good compendium of the maṇḍala rite.

A master not carried off by gain and honor, skilled in the activities, who has seen the maṇḍala,
a learned one well praised for accomplishment and emanation, should perform it.
For peace, increase, consecration and the rest, able to bring about the aims desired,
with up to two or three disciples, one lays things out clearly in order to draw the maṇḍala.

To increase the accumulations and pacify obstructors, one who knows the path of omniscience should first perform the approach;
without the approach there is no accomplishment.
One who knows the distinctions among places should at once remain in solitude and meditate on the circle of deities.
When weary, he recites the secret mantra:
he recites the mantra of the Lord of the Circle a hundred thousand times, a hundred thousand for his own special deity,
and ten thousand for each of the others.
Having obtained the supreme signs of accomplishment,
he gathers the maṇḍala into his own body.
This is called the preliminary approach.
That was the preliminary approach.

Having destroyed the hosts of obstructors through the approach,
one should take possession of the ground:
a mountain, a village or a city,
a region where the mind delights.
Where there are bones, ashes, thorns, stones, or uncleanness from excrement, go elsewhere.
Ground with udumbara, nyagrodha, aśvattha, palāśa, bakula or arjuna trees,
or shaped like the back of a turtle:
these six kinds of ground should be avoided.
Ground where water turns to the right, sloping to the east and the north,
four-cornered and whitish:
dig there, refill the hole with that earth, and some is left over.

The mantrin holding vajra and bell,
with a mind full of compassion,
standing in the posture with the left leg extended, should clear away all obstructors.
Dig half a cubit deep and fill it with water;
walk a hundred paces,
come back quickly and look:
if it stays just so, that is especially praised.
There, give torma to the lords of the earth,
the guardians of the field, and the rest.
Then, with mantra
and mudrā, one should request the ground.
Bind the two vajra fists,
and hold both at the edge of the boundary;
request it with the words, "Grant me this good ground!"
oṃ hūṃ jraṃ jraṃ svāhā.
That is the mantra and mudrā for requesting the ground.

Signs of good and ill appear;
if the next day they are favorable,
one should perform a pacifying fire offering,
or else subdue the obstructors.
With a mind steady as a mountain, guard the ground well with the circle of protection.
One should dig to the depth of the knee, the navel or the waist, according to the accomplishment sought.
Beginning from the winter months and so on,
for three months at a time,
the mahoraga has its head to the south, the west, the north and the east, and lies on its left side.
Knowing where its belly is, dig.
The faults of digging at its head, its back and so on
are to be learned from the extensive works.
That was the rite of digging the ground for the maṇḍala and so on.

Throw out husks, stones, gravel, charcoal and the like;
place jewels, grains and medicines within,

and pound it until very firm.
If one is not able to remove all the flaws of thorns, press it with the hand and recite the secret mantra;
it then becomes powerful and pure.
oṃ hana hana krota hūṃ phaṭ.
That is the mantra for purifying the ground.

Sprinkling it with urine,
take possession of this pure ground.
For five nights without interruption the vajra master should do this.
Binding the two vajra fists
and placing them before the two breasts, drive everything away,
and afterwards enter the ground.
oṃ apasarantu bhavanto yi ge ci ta sthana svamina deva nāga yakṣadi gandharva bhūta bhūtani ḍākini satva ath kṛya aparaṃ vagacha traṃ sigraṃ me vantu oṃ hūṃ phaṭ.
That is the mantra and mudrā of expulsion.

The vajra ground and fence,
the nets and the canopy,
a net of arrows outside,
and the mountain of fire as well, are to be blessed.
oṃ medīnī vajri bhava vajra bandha hūṃ oṃ vajra prākara hūṃ vaṃ hūṃ oṃ vajra pañcara hūṃ yaṃ hūṃ oṃ vajra vidhana hūṃ khaṃ hūṃ oṃ vajra sara jvala tra saṃ traṃ oṃ vajra jvala analārka hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ oṃ suṃbhani suṃbha hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ gṛhṇa gṛhṇa hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ gṛhṇapaya gṛhṇapaya hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ ānaya ho bhagavān vajra rājā hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ gha gha ghātaya ghātaya sarva duṣṭaṃ vighā hūṃ phaṭ oṃ kīlaya kīlaya sarva pāpaṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ vajra kīlaya vajradhara ajñāpayati sarva vighnāṃ kāya vākcitta vajra kīlaya kīlaya hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra hūṃ muṅgara vajra kīlaya ākoṭaya hūṃ phaṭ.

With these accomplished mantra words,
outside the blazing fire,
the ritual daggers in wrathful form,
in forward and in reverse order,

are to be driven into the crowns of the obstructors.
That was the rite of the ritual daggers and so on.

The suchness of the vajra, the bell and the rest,
the welcoming water and the rest,
and the commitments of the extensive rite:
the door guardians are set in place with the action vajra.

Beginning from eight finger-widths and going up to twenty, make them in even numbers.
Take vajras of three kinds,
made of gold, red bronze and the like:
three-pronged, five-pronged and nine-pronged, these are the three kinds.
By distinguishing peaceful and not peaceful,
they are again said to be of two kinds.
The fourth is the crossed vajra itself.
The five-pronged has four faces.
The middle is the place where it is held;
the outer prongs are of that same measure.
The central prong is shaped like a barley grain.
Not going beyond their portions of the directions,
the outer prongs are tips of makara fangs, emerging from the mouths of makaras:
thick at the root, growing thinner toward the tip, sharp, their heads gradually curving.
On the inner side of the prongs, leave a gap from the central prong.
In keeping with the size of the vajra, increase or reduce by portions of two finger-widths.
Make the tips equal with one another,
and a little shorter than the central one.
At the roots of the eight prongs, picture lotuses, lotuses in bloom.
Make the waistband somewhat larger than the middle portion.
The remainder, equal on either side, rises progressively twice as high.

With beautiful eight-petaled lotuses,
there are two bead strings at the head and the foot.
This is the description of the vajra.

In the center is Vairocana; Akṣobhya is the east; likewise Ratnasambhava is the south;
on the western and northern prongs are Amitābha and Amoghasiddhi.
The eight limbs of the noble path, made pure,
are on the eight petals of the lotus:
they are the eight bodhisattvas, whose marks should be clearly seen: Padmapāṇi, Maitreya, Gaganagañja, Samantabhadra,
the Lord of Yakṣas (Vajrapāṇi), Mañjuśrī, Sarvanivaraṇaviṣkambhin, and Kṣitigarbha.
The central one abides as the ground of all:
the essence of the buddhas, the casket.
Vajrāṅkuśī, Pāśī, Vajrasphoṭā, and Tārā.
In the intermediate directions, the Urger, Jewel Lightning, the Chain, and the Invincible are declared to be the lotus ḍākinīs.
Their proper places on the prongs are declared:
in the east, Vajraḍākinī;
in the north, the Terrifying Ḍākinī;
in the west, know her as Vetālī;
in the south, call Caṇḍālī to mind;
in the center, Jñānaḍākinī.
This is held to be the suchness of the vajra.

Of the bell, in six parts overall,
four parts of it are to be made of bell metal unmixed;
the rest should be examined from other sources.
The space within that bell is equal in width and in height.
A garland, an utpala, eight marks,

above and in the center, in their order;
by the rite it is marked with eight petals.
On one portion above the utpala rest three garlands, and above them a vase made of gold or copper, silver or brass.
Above that, of the same measure,
make the face of Prajñā, looking to the east.
Above the face is a half vajra,
like half of the vajra described before.
Thus the bell of eight finger-widths and so on should be made to match the vajra.
Its mouth is like a lotus slightly opened,
or else like the lip of an ox.
This is the description of the bell.

Facing the eight directions and intermediate directions, meditate on the seeds of the deities.
In the east is the goddess Tārā; Pāṇḍaravāsinī is in the north;
in the west know her as Māmakī;
in the south is Buddhalocanā.
The Fair-Colored, the Red, the Radiant One, and Vajra Garland are in the intermediate directions.
The space residing within is the formless realm, made pure.
Of this form realm, completely pure,
the utpala at the base, in bloom, abides as the nature of the nectar of wisdom,
the ground of the perfection of wisdom.
The lotus and vajra above are to be imagined as a vajra.
The handle in the center is wisdom, gathering in and sending out all things.
With five kinds of lotus-turning gestures,
it should be rung at the eight places.
This is the suchness of the bell.

From gold and other substances, from the wood of the sacrificial tree, or else from nimba wood,
the filling ladle is two cubits long.
Its divisions shall now be explained.
On a width of eight finger-widths, carve a hollow equal to half of that.
Carve a vajra equal to the hollow.
The mouth is like a lotus petal.
The rim is square,
four finger-widths all around.
In that two-finger carving, of that measure,
is a three-pronged vajra inside.
The hole from which its essence drips is the size of the little finger.
Below the waistband, of that same measure, is the place of beautiful petals,
like a datura flower;
make this at the top of the handle.
Below the handle, a jewel of two finger-widths,
and at the end, a vajra of six finger-widths.
This is the description of the filling ladle.

The pouring ladle is a cubit and a half.
Its mouth is six finger-widths, shaped like the petal of a lotus.
In its center, in width and depth, carve three finger-widths, of that measure, adorned with a five-pronged vajra.
Two finger-widths are the place of adornment;
know that the jewel is one finger-width.
The handle of the filling ladle is just long enough to grip in the fist and pour.
The pouring ladle is somewhat thinner,
and its vajra is three finger-widths.
This is the description of the pouring ladle.

Vessels of gold, silver, mother-of-pearl, conch, stone, wood, and copper:
these are the vessels for the welcoming water;

at the least, use a vessel of leaves.
That teaches the vessels for the welcoming water.

Scented water, sweet milk,
pure water, and white flowers,
as they are found, are placed in the vessel;
then fumigate with incense and recite the secret mantra.
This is the rite of preparing the welcoming water.

White, yellow, red and green:
in accomplishing peace, increase and the rest, prepare the scents, the water and the rest
in keeping with the action.
This is the rite of the varieties of welcoming water.

Flowers, incense, lamps,
the conch of scented water and the rest are set on the right;
on the left, the mantra's welcoming water first;
and a vessel is also placed in front.
This is the arrangement of the vessels for the welcoming water and so on.

The three-syllable or five-syllable mantra, as taught in the tantra,
in keeping with the action,
is made the mantra for the welcoming water and the rest.
For peace it ends with vaśaṃ;
for increase the ending is vauṣaṭ;
for killing, hūṃ phaṭ comes at the end;
for summoning and subjugating, jaḥ and hriḥ.
These are the mantras for the welcoming water and the rest.

First, scented water should be offered;
second, sweet milk;
third, pure water;
fourth, flowers are added.
The scented water from the mouth of the conch should be offered at the feet.
oṃ niriti hūṃ khaṃ: this is the mantra of the water for the feet.

For the water for rinsing, it is milk and sweetness. The purifying sprinkling is pure water alone; with a bundle of kuśa grass, recite the mantra of the welcoming water. oṃ sarbba saṃśodhani hūṃ phaṭ: this is the mantra of the water for the mouth and of the purifying sprinkling.

Having taken the flowers with the white wisdom, one distinguishes the borders and the rest in sequence.
For the water for the feet, the water for the mouth and the basin:
copper bowls, or vessels of iron,
or vessels made of other substances such as gold and silver, are set on stands.
This is the classification of the water for the feet and the rest.

The water for the feet, the water for the mouth, the purifying sprinkling and the rest should be offered in their proper order.
Because all of these are limbs of the welcoming water,
they are spoken of by the word "welcoming water."

The sequence of the rite of offering the welcoming water:
binding the two fists evenly together, extend the two middle fingers and join their tips;
this is shown as the great argham.
oṃ pratīccha arghaṃ hūṃ svāhā: this is the mantra and the mudrā for offering the welcoming water.

Recite the mantra of Amṛtakuṇḍalin over white mustard seed.
With the two fists, around the chosen deity, circling with one's own circling,
one should purify, two by two, in the spaces between.
With both fists together at once,
one also circles to the right.
As before, the white mustard seed should be put into the fire vessel in order to purify.
oṃ sarbba pāpaṃ dahana bajrāya bajra satvasya sarbba pāpaṃ daha svāhā: this is the rite of purification.

Having drawn the wisdom consciousness inward, take water in the cupped hands, circle it in the same way, and to purify,

put it into the fire, just as with the white mustard seed.
oṃ hūṃ taṭi phaṭ: this is the rite of ritual touching.

Moonstone, indranīla sapphire, puṣparāga topaz, the red gem, and the supreme emerald: the powder of these is the finest jewel dust for coloring.
Gold and silver and pearl, lapis lazuli and coral:
these are declared to be the five jewels.
I shall explain the five twigs:
they come from the jambu and the kadamba,
the bilva and the mango,
and the bījapūra citron.
Sesame and wheat, pulses, rice and barley are to be known as the five grains.
hasadeba kapira kretaṃ jali bṛhapala:
these are to be known as four herbs;
the fifth is karṇika.
kaṇḍakari bṛhati hasadeba hasa sete aparaji:
these are the other group of herbs.
The two sandalwoods, and saffron, and lakudranthika, making five:
these are taught as the five scents,
and are prescribed for bathing the deity.
udumbāra śiriṣa aśvattha and nyagrodha and parkati: with the barks of these five the oil from the deity's bath is cleared away.
The cow's ghee, its dung and urine, curd and milk, properly mixed:
these are to be known as the five products of the cow;
they accomplish the bathing of the deities.

To delight fully
the buddhas and bodhisattvas, one who always knows the pledges should worship with the pledge offerings.
Song is offered to the Vajra Holder;

dance is offered to the buddhas;
likewise scent to supreme Hari;
food and drink to the Lord of the World (Lokeśvara);
the offering of garments to Paramāśva.
These are the supreme pledges.

hūṃ The scent arisen from the vajra:
black aloeswood for Heruka;
white sandalwood for the Permanent One;
red is offered to the Lord of the World;
saffron to Vajra Light;
for the King of the Seven, all of them.
Bitter and pungent are offered to Vajra;
sweet to Vajra Permanent;
sour to Vajra Sun;
likewise salty to the Lord of the World;
for the King of Horses, all of them,
or else astringent, should be carefully considered.
Beautiful black flowers that grow on trees are for the Vajradhara of Hevajra.
Mallikā and mālatī
and kunda are always offered to the Buddha.
The supreme lord of trees and the stainless one are to be offered to the Illuminator (Vairocana).
Red utpala, the water-born lotus,
red bandhu and pāṭala,
and lotuses are offered to Padmanarteśvara, Lord of Dance.
All of them are for Vajra Paramāśva.

Having performed the yoga of one's own deity, with certainty driving away the adverse forces, sitting in the center of the ground,
one should petition the buddhas:
"Until the ritual wheel is fully completed,
in order to protect us,
it is fitting that the Sugatas bless this ground this very day."

The wise one, wrathful, sets upon the host of hostile beings who would interfere.
On the right and left eyes,
from ma the sun, and from ṭa the moon.
With the rays of light streaming from the vajra beneath the feet, one burns the nāgas and the rest.
Adorned with every ornament,
playfully twirling the vajra, ringing the bell at each place,
and continuously proclaiming the dense sound of hūṃ,
the wise one, circling to the right,
goes all around the four directions.
With modulation and supreme grace,
first moving along playfully,
by the rite of the eight stances
one should dance with vajra steps.

Make the gesture of the flower's heart;
for incense, the gesture of the twig;
for the lamp, the hand manner of the wick;
and for anointing, anoint in the manner of anointing;
with the hands, the eyes and likewise the ears;
with both feet, circling to the right
with stamping steps,
and likewise circling to the left.
Then perform the continuous dance,
and after that the moving dance;
dance likewise with rapid stamping,
and whirl around like a wheel.

The right-extended stance, the left-extended stance, the even stance, the vajra stance, the round stance, the various-cutting stance, the tortoise stance, and the one called "like a flying bee": these are the eight stances. Stirring the ocean, lifting the mountain, the graceful step and the wrathful step: this is the arrangement of the stances.

The vajra mode, the wheel mode, the jewel mode, the lotus mode, the sword mode, the spear mode, the bow mode, the staff mode, the staff mode, the hammer mode, the pestle mode, the single-pointed vajra mode, the ten-pointed mode, the small sword mode, the variegated club mode, the short spear mode, and the single-pointed weapon mode: these are the sixteen modes.

The double banner, the triple banner, the flower mode, the incense mode, the lamp mode, the scent mode, the hand of Lāsyā, the hand of the garland, the hand of song, the hand of dance, the hand of the flute, the hand of the vīṇā, the hand of the clay drum, the hand of the mukuṇḍa drum, and the hand of infinite activity: this is the arrangement of the hands.

The vajra cross-legged posture, the sattva cross-legged posture, the lotus cross-legged posture, the excellent seated posture, the half cross-legged posture, and the auspicious seated posture: this is the arrangement of the seated postures.

The erotic sentiment, the heroic sentiment, the sentiment of disgust, the fierce sentiment, the comic sentiment, the terrifying sentiment, the peaceful sentiment, the majestic sentiment, and the sentiment of compassion: these are called the nine sentiments of dance.

thahi thahi thaga thaga thuma thuma thama thama thoho thoho cihi cihi dhadhaṃ dhadhaṃ kraka kraka thaka thaka ḍiṃhi ḍiṃhi taṭava taṭava traṃ

The hand drum, the cymbals and the long drum, and likewise the half clay drum;
the flute and the pipe, likewise;
the vīṇā, the many-stringed lute and the single-stringed lute:
these are to be played in three distinct ways,
slow, forceful and fast.
In the maṇḍala and the other places
this offering is unsurpassed.
These are the arrangement of the music.

The song following ṣaḍja, the song following ṛṣabha, the song following gāndhāra, the song following madhyama, the song following pañcama, the song following dhaivata, and the song following niṣāda; the slow division, the forceful division, the complete division, the deep division, halving, intermingling, taking two phrases, taking three phrases, sounding in the throat, sounding at the palate, sounding with the tongue, and sounding at the teeth: these are the arrangement of the song.

When taking possession of the ground,
these pledges are earnestly urged.

In order to accomplish all the actions,
the master, the vajra holder, should perform them.

After the vajra ground and the rest are accomplished,
one should meditate on the source of phenomena arising from Vajrasattva. Within it is a lotus arisen from hrī, and on the lotus, arisen from a,
is the vajra facing in all directions.
On the vajra are wind and the other elements;
on these, from bhrūṃ, the wheel itself,
situated in the center of the expanse of space:
the maṇḍala that is the essence of the four elements.
On it, having fully meditated on the buddhas, emanate them and set up the blazing celestial mansion.
One should meditate on the delightful palace beautified with victory banners, pennants and the rest.

With white, gold and other powders one should draw an eight-petaled lotus.
The vase called "Accomplishing All Actions" is placed in the middle of the hub.
The thread of the five colors is laid out on the eastern petal.
In the south the vajra should be placed,
and likewise in the north the bell.
Conch cups filled with the five nectars are set on the petals other than the east.
The colored powders, the portions of the five buddhas, having been placed each in its own separate shining vessel, are to be set at their respective corners.
In the vase, with bodies and seats just as they are,
one visualizes Vajradhara.
One worships properly with the offerings, and urges with mantra and mudrā.

Binding both fists together,
extend the rocana and the white finger,

and joining tip to tip,
show the heart mudrā.
oṃ āḥ svāhā: this is the heart mudrā and mantra.

Touching the vase with the tip of the vajra, recite the secret mantra a hundred and eight times. oṃ hūṃ svāhā: this is the mantra.
Sprinkling that water on the colored powders and the marking cord, make offerings and give the torma.
Recite the secret mantra of one's own lord,
and meditate on his body as well.
Emanating, one should then gather in the wheel.
At night one should remain there for a moment.
These are the taking possession of the ground.

The yogin rises at dawn,
and having done all the tasks of the body, gathers the vase and the rest and places them in the southern part of the maṇḍala ground.
Again, having anointed it with scent, imagine the goddess arisen from baṃ,
her two hands holding an excellent vase,
her body yellow in color and radiant.
Worship properly the one perfect in wisdom,
and once she is firmly established, request her to depart:
"In the ways of conduct and the special qualities of all the buddhas, the protectors,
and in the grounds and the perfections, goddess, you have mastery.
In order to attain all the accomplishments,
I shall draw the maṇḍala."
Saying this three times, one requests Pṛthivī, the earth goddess, to depart.

Bathe the body and anoint it with scent, adorn it with as many shining ornaments as there are,
and wearing yellow garments,
enter in the afternoon.
Seated in the center of the maṇḍala, strewn with scent and flowers, meditating on oneself as the chosen deity,

and joyfully holding incense, bowing deeply with all the limbs,
one should petition the Victors:
"Buddhas dwelling in all directions without exception, please consider me.
Great Vajradhara, I, so-and-so,
wish to draw the maṇḍala.
Buddhas and all the rest, please come,
and grant this accomplishment."
This is the petition to the buddhas.

To the master, who is like Vajrasattva, and is equal to the Permanent One and the other Victors, the disciples who hold vajra and bell should make petition:
"Peace of all the Tathāgatas,
abode of all the Tathāgatas,
supreme selflessness of all phenomena,
please explain the sacred maṇḍala.
All the marks perfectly complete,
all that are not marks entirely abandoned, Samantabhadra, supreme body,
please explain the sacred maṇḍala.
Arisen from the supreme Dharma of peace, purifying the conduct of wisdom, Samantabhadra, supreme speech,
please explain the sacred maṇḍala.
Great mind intent on the welfare of beings,
pure by nature and without stain, Samantabhadra, supreme mind, the guide,
please explain the sacred maṇḍala."
Or else this single verse should be recited by the four with one voice:
"Peace of all the Tathāgatas,
abode of all the Tathāgatas,
guide, please explain the maṇḍala that arises from Vajrasattva."

Then, rising, and bowing to the buddhas who dwell in the sky, one should generate the pride of being oneself the union of all the buddhas:
"I am the Buddha Vajrasattva;
I am Vajra Sun;
I am Amoghavajra, the Dharma;
I am all the buddhas."
With the mantra hūṃ bajrotiṣṭha, one's own manifested wheel
is raised into the sky, and with the vajra dance one circles all around it.
With the mantra explained earlier,
make the base into the nature of vajra.
The fence, the net, the canopy and the rest are done as before.

For the pegs in particular:
a peg eighteen finger-widths long,
or else twelve finger-widths,
six or four finger-widths in thickness,
made of khadira wood, of bone or of iron.
It should be anointed with red sandalwood,
and beautified with garlands and a red crest.
It is to be held in the left fist.
The hammer, placed on the head of the peg with the other hand,
strikes it with the earlier mantra,
and the pegs are driven in at the east and the other places.
Or else, with mantra and mudrā,
make the pegs, the fence and the net.
Showing the palm of the hand upward, turn it over and strike the ground.
oṃ bajra hūṃ phaṭ: this is the mantra and mudrā of the vajra peg.
The two hands, with fingers interlinked like a chain, are stretched upward and turned outward.

oṃ hūṃ phaṭ: this is the mantra and mudrā of the net.
Making both hands into fists, extend the wisdom and the lotus.
Join the earth parasol and the eight consciousnesses;
join wisdom and consciousness;
joining the earth parasol and the lotus,
circle through the eight directions and intermediate directions.
oṃ jaṃbhani hūṃ phaṭ: this is the mantra and mudrā of the fence.

The one endowed with yoga should consecrate the vase.
Vases free from black bases and other faults are to be set out in front:
long-necked and big-bellied,
their mouths beautified with fine branches,
filled with milk, urine and the rest,
and their necks wrapped with cloth.
Having made the matching ones firm,
they are to be placed in the maṇḍala house.
In order to fulfill the aims of the eight accomplishments, the recitation is done up to seven times. oṃ tapte tapte maha tapte svāhā: this is the mantra for summoning the water of the Gaṅgā.
Joining the earth parasol and consciousness,
and extending all the rest, touching the vase, with this secret mantra
one recites up to seven times: oṃ suṃ kṣuṃ yuṃ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā. This is the consecration of the door vases.

With the stainless lines laid down, at the four doors of the ritual wheel, beginning from the eastern door,
the vases are to be set out.
Those called Victory and Auspiciousness are on the two sides of the eastern door;
in the south are declared Accomplishment and Protection;
in the west, Victorious and Peace;
in the north, Accomplishment and Miraculous Power.

This is the offering of the precious accomplishments.

Whatever here is the abode of the deities, wherever the maṇḍala is fixed,
that maṇḍala should be anointed with the five scents, or else with others.
By emanating the syllables with their own mantras,
one should set out the wheel of the deities.
Then, by the practice of summoning,
the wheel of wisdom deities is summoned there.
Then with the five kinds of offerings
one worships the Victors properly, with faith, and petitions them for blessing until the maṇḍala is complete:
"Buddhas, whose intention is loving and beneficial,
please consider me.
Having come together with the mantras,
you take possession of the ground.
Great Vajradhara, I, of this name,
in order to create the maṇḍala of so-and-so,
with whatever offerings I am able,
shall draw the maṇḍala at dawn tomorrow.
In order to care for the disciples and also to make offerings to you, it is fitting that you, moved by loving compassion, draw near and remain."
Saying this three times is the consecration of the deities of the maṇḍala.

Then the disciple, having bathed and put on clean garments, holding flowers in cupped hands and prostrating, should petition the guru:
"You alone draw us out
from the ocean of existence in which we sink, fearful with its sea monsters of birth, aging, sickness and death.
Great Bliss, since you are my Teacher,
master, please consider me.

I seek you, great protector,
who show the way of great awakening.
Grant me that very pledge;
grant me also the mind of awakening;
grant me also the three refuges,
the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha.
Protector, please lead me into the supreme city of great liberation."
This is the disciple's petition for the pledge.

"Since you are a vessel of the great way, come here, my son! The rite and the manner of conduct of the secret mantra of the Great Vehicle I shall rightly explain to you.
The perfect buddhas who have passed, likewise those who have not yet come,
and the protectors who have now appeared and remain for the benefit of beings:
having known this excellent rite of the secret mantra of them all, the Hero, at the foot of the tree of awakening, attained omniscience, free of signs.
Through the unequalled application of secret mantra, the protector Śākyasiṃha destroyed the most terrible hosts of Māra, and their great armies as well.
Therefore, in order to attain omniscience, my son, make this your resolve!"

Having thus advised the disciple, one performs confession, rejoicing and the rest.
First one has him go for refuge to the three,
and then he should generate the mind of awakening:
"Just as the protectors of the three times made certain of awakening, so I shall generate the unsurpassed,
sacred mind of awakening.
The training of moral discipline,

the gathering of virtuous qualities, and the working for the welfare of beings: these three moral disciplines
I shall firmly uphold.
The Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha,
the unsurpassed Three Jewels:
the vow that arises from the yoga of the buddhas
I take first, beginning from now.
For the great supreme vajra family,
the vajra, the bell and the mudrā,
these very things I shall rightly uphold,
and I shall uphold the masters as well.
For the delightful pledge connected with the jewel family, every day at the six times
I shall always give the four kinds of giving.
For the great pure lotus family, arisen from great awakening,
the outer, the inner and the secret, the three vehicles,
the sacred Dharma, I shall uphold each one.
For the great supreme action family,
I shall rightly uphold
being endowed with all the vows, and I shall perform the acts of offering as best I can.
Having generated the unsurpassed,
sacred mind of awakening,
for the welfare of all beings
I take the vows without exception.
Those who have not crossed over I shall carry across;
those not liberated I shall liberate;
those not relieved I shall relieve;
and I shall establish beings in nirvāṇa."
Saying this three times, the vows are taken.

Then the disciple, set before one,
is sprinkled with scent, and at his heart
one holds a five-pronged vajra.
On the crown of his head one imagines

a vajra marked with various colors, and at the place of the throat a lotus.
Then, having made offerings with flowers, incense and the rest, set him in front.
A tooth stick twelve finger-widths long is washed with scented water and milk, its tip bound with flowers;
and scented water recited over seven times is also given to purify the mouth.
oṃ ajitva saṃbartani hūṃ phaṭ: this is the mantra recited over the tooth stick.
oṃ hrīḥ biśuddha dharmmā sarbbā pāpaṃ niśca saṃśodhaya sarbba bikalpa apanaya hūṃ: this is the mantra for giving the water.

The disciple, facing north,
holding the tooth stick without splitting it, throws it onto the ground,
onto an area the size of a cowhide.
If it falls with its upper end facing toward him,
he will be most fortunate.
If it falls with its outer end facing away,
he will be without good fortune.

For protection, over a thread recite the mantra of Amṛtakuṇḍalin;
then make three knots in it and tie it on the disciple's right upper arm.

Then, so that they will not turn back,
one should arouse enthusiasm in the disciples,
and so that they turn away from other vehicles, proclaim the greatness of the Great Vehicle:
"You great beings
today have gained an unequalled gain, because all the great Victors together with their heirs have taken all of you
into this teaching, and you are being born in it.
Therefore tomorrow you will be truly born into the Great Vehicle.

This supreme path, from which the Great Vehicle greatly arises, is glorious.
Since you are going there,
you self-arisen ones of great fortune, through knowing all the world
you will become Tathāgatas.
Beyond existence and nonexistence,
stainless like space,
profound, wholly beyond the conceptions of all reasoners, without any abode, free of all elaboration,
yet elaborated through elaborations,
free of response, of action and the rest,
abiding in the two truths:
this supreme among excellent vehicles is attained if one abides in its way.
My son, tomorrow the maṇḍala will be drawn. Now sleep!"

Having said this, one enters, makes offerings properly, and requests the maṇḍala deities to depart.
Having bestowed the yoga of the chosen deity, one then brings the disciple into the celestial mansion and protects him well.
One should carefully examine the lion's sleeping posture.
Shoots of kuśa grass with unbroken tips should be imagined as arisen from dhi.
The first is placed as a pillow,
and the others are spread as a mat.
"With a virtuous mind, sleep, and tell me the dream you see, just as it is."
Saying this, one has the disciple lie down.
One should ask what dream he saw.
Having heard it, one should explain without doubt whether it is good or not good.
Through a virtuous dream the three kinds of accomplishment are achieved;
an unvirtuous one is to be pacified by fire offering and so forth.

This is the consecration of the disciple.

On a good planetary day, lunar mansion and the like,
and also on the fourth day,
the guru, having performed the fire offering,
together with the disciple begins the maṇḍala.
The six months, the four planets, whichever are the fourteen lunar mansions, and the number of seven lunar dates are praised by the Victors for consecration and the rest.
The middle and last months of spring, the last of summer,
the autumn month, the middle and last of winter;
the planetary days of Mercury, Jupiter, Venus,
and the day of the moon: these are good.
The second day and the third day,
the fifth, the seventh, the tenth,
the thirteenth, and the full moon:
these seven days are good.
Puṣya, Hasta, Anurādhā, Uttaraphalgunī, Rohiṇī, Abhijit, Mṛgaśiras and Ārdrā, Jyeṣṭhā, Mūla, Pūrvāṣāḍhā and Uttarāṣāḍhā, Pūrvabhādrapadā and Uttarabhādrapadā: these are the lunar mansions.
Under Uttaraphalgunī one should perform consecration;
through it wisdom will increase.
Whatever accomplishment abides in the mind will be accomplished under Hasta.
Under Mūla and Abhijit
the teachings will be fully understood.
Ārdrā brings good fortune.
Under Rohiṇī wealth will arise.
Mṛgaśiras is declared to be for peace.
Pūrvāṣāḍhā and Uttarāṣāḍhā bring increase of sons.
Pūrvabhādrapadā and Uttarabhādrapadā are known for increase.
Under Puṣya one is victorious in everything.
Jyeṣṭhā rightly bestows happiness.

Anurādhā bestows the supreme.
Relying on the right time and good planets,

this activity is the consecration.

The marking cord, new and clean, beautiful, of nine or five threads, twisted into one, five in number,
should be twisted while reciting the secret mantra:
oṃ anyonya ānugata sarbba dharmāḥ para anuprabaṣṭi sarbba dharma atyanta ānuprabaṣṭi sarbba dharmāḥ. This is the mantra.

With a blazing gaze, from the heart of the buddhas draw forth a cord of light, and, holding it in the middle of the joined hands,
one then consecrates that marking cord.
oṃ a ā a ā āṃ svāhā: this is the mantra for consecrating the marking cord.

The guru, placing his left fist at his navel, holds the marking cord; immediately the disciple should take hold of it with this mantra:
oṃ jja jja jja, which is said up to three times.

With the mantra, the pure water of all the vases is sprinkled inside the house.
In the same order as laying down the marking cord,
the wisdom cord is stretched out.
oṃ sarbba saṃśodhani hūṃ phaṭ: this is the mantra for sprinkling the maṇḍala and the rest.
oṃ bajra sūtra samaya matikrama hūṃ: this is the mantra of the wisdom cord.

Without the signs, nothing is truly accomplished.
If the marking cord breaks, the master dies.
If it is drawn too long or too short, illness strikes.
Through confusion of directions, harm will be suffered.
Circling to the right,
laying down the lines as taught,
upon the lines of the emanated maṇḍala as well the wisdom cord is laid down.
Accompanied by the cry hi hi,
the doors should be opened with the mind.
With oṃ hūṃ trāṃ aṃ khaṃ

the colored powders are applied as the forms of the deities.
They should be consecrated with a blazing gaze, reciting the secret mantra a hundred and eight times.
Incense, garments and the rest should be offered, as much as one has.
Twirling the vajra and ringing the bell, urging with vajra songs and the rest, wearing red garments, give the torma.
One should also do it with special devotion, in this way:
"This is the pure dharmadhātu, which liberates the realm of sentient beings,
the abode of all the Tathāgatas." Having made oneself the Victor Vairocana, one should begin to lay out the colors,
free from every fault.
The master lays them first,
and afterwards the disciples all around.
Taking the powder with the left vajra fist, beginning from Īśāna, the northeast, and circling to the right, in the order that accords with the families of the wheel, draw the colored powders with the mantra:
oṃ bajra citra samaya hūṃ. This is the secret mantra.

Afterwards the skilled disciple should lay them out as is comfortable.
Crooked, impure, broken, thick, thin and ill-formed lines are to be avoided.
Thick ones give rise to illnesses;
thin ones destroy wealth;
crooked ones cause discord;
broken ones bring death to master and disciple.
Freedom from these and other faults will be known from the drawing of the colored powders.

Of the nature of indranīla sapphire,
and likewise another like emerald,
of the nature of padmarāga ruby,
and one known as blazing yellow,

and likewise another of white color: thus one should know the colored powders in order.
In the east is great white;
in the south is blazing yellow;
in the west, intense red;
likewise in the north, green;
and in the central part of the ground blue color should be carefully applied.

The master stays at the east of the wheel, possessed of the concentration of Vajrasattva.
Four masters, embodying the yoga of Hūṃkāra and the others, are at the four doors.
Those to be placed at the four corners are four proclaimers of the Dharma.
For fear that the pledges may be broken, one who is not a disciple should not be brought in.
If there are none, take two or three;
at the very least, even one is acceptable.

Twirling the vajra with the right hand, ringing the bell with the left,
one dances, changing the mudrās, or lets them go.
With gaze and mudrā one conquers the enemies.
With the stamping stance and the mantra
one should press down the eastern place.
In this same sequence the others,
those stationed at the doors, also press it down.
With the right and left hands, playfully one emanates out to the borders.
With angry eyes slightly widened,
one moves the eyebrows.
This, the cause of bringing beings under control,
is to be known as the mudrā of the eyes.
right extended and drawn in, left extended and drawn in,
together with the mantra hūṃ and the mudrā:
this is the yogin of Vajradhara.

That is for the principal master; now for the others.
The kneeling stance, the squatting stance,
the circling stance and the reversing stance.
oṃ hūṃ phaṭ: this is for the eastern door.
The knee-touching stance, the left-lifting stance,
the circling stance and the lion's offering stance.
oṃ hūṃ āḥ phaṭ: this is for the southern door.
and the round stance.
oṃ hūṃ āṃ āṃ āṃ phaṭ: this is for the western door.
The concordant stance, the discordant stance, and the stance with one leg drawn in and the left extended.
oṃ hana māra duṣṭāna ghātaya ghātaya a a hūṃ hrīḥ phaṭ: this is the stance and mantra of the master of the northern door.

In order to accomplish the desired aims and to pacify the hindrances of obstructors, with mantra and mudrā, extending and bending the right hand, give the torma to the deities and the rest.
Binding the two vajra fists,
join them back to back.
Interlock the earth parasol and the lotus,
extend the rocana and the white finger,
and bending the white finger to draw them in,
summon the accomplished gods and asuras:
oṃ āḥ bāhani mahā bāhani preta bāhani sūrya candra sidha mukhi jaya rājī soma rājī uma debi gaṅgama surūpī tāraya saṃgha grahāna sarbe gaṇapati kāritikaya śrī sasi debi agalo bagala asurā surā jayo pukkasī mahā pukkasī hūṃ ho ho ākarṣaya ākarṣaya samayādhipe hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ ja svāhā. This is the mantra and mudrā of invitation.
oṃ batali batali mahā batali hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ bhakṣaya bhakṣaya samaya tiṣṭha jarju phruṃ phaṭ svāhā.
With this mantra, from the mudrā of invitation, bind the index fingers, snap the fingers three times, and release.
This is the mantra and mudrā for pleasing them.

On a square maṇḍala of scented water scatter white flowers.

With abundant food of śāli rice, molasses, curd, cooked rice and butter, lamps and a feast offering, in the playful dancing posture, give the torma to the guardian of the eastern gate.
oṃ ekabīke smaśāne pa parbate kandare gṛhe grāma pāraśe pakrethetre śunyagare biśiṣat bhvajvane sṭhalagate mātadhana biśeṣataḥ kṛṣṇa rudra debadatte samāśrīta kṛṣṇa ākarāla bhibāca nandatīta bināyaka camuṇḍa gaurī bibhaccha umadebī camatāra jayānaca bijayāṇaceba ajita aparājitā bhadrakāle mahākāli sthūlakāli tujoginīndri candrigaurī duṣṭalaṃbaki tridaśiśvari kaṃboci dāpī cuṃpi nyāgrāmā vasthita yogini ghorarūpi mahārūpi daṃṣārūpi kapāli mālāmālinya khaḍaṅgina mahādhika khaṅga paraśu hataya vajrahasta dhanustathā mahāsukha mahāvajra sarbba karma mānusādhaka yogamaṇḍal mahārājā vajrādhapati brabhutha tathāgata mahālala nirañja yogi dhṛṣṭikā idaṃ mahāsukha ajñenā abahanaṃ sarbba sarbiṇi oṃ kakkaḍhana babbandhana khakhkhāni sarbba duṣṭāṇāṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ jaḥ svāhā
In the vajra posture, with the mantra joined to the earlier mudrā, invite them.
Having bound the Trailokyavijaya mudrā, link the two index fingers like a chain:
oṃ dṛṣṭi hū hā bhakṣa bhakṣa phaṭ svāhā
With this mantra and mudrā one should please them;
with three finger-snaps, please them with this.
With water of red sandalwood make an outer triangular maṇḍala.
On it scatter red flowers.
Dried fish, dried meat, garlic, blood, sesame flour, roasted flour, rice and bean porridge,
and especially the five nectars and the like,
and foods of many different kinds:
this is the torma for the guardian of the southern gate.
oṃ maṇibhadra purṇṇabhadra subhadra jayabhadra nandakīla mahākila sukīla padmaśika śaṃkhaśikanaṭa mahānaṭa bhedanī cchedanī puranī dhanadhasudhana surūpa kelimahākeli haseta kṝḍitabakṣipa suśrīyarūpakanti idaṃ vajreśvarāgenāvanaṃ yakṣa yakṣani hūṃ avatara avatara patali batali pākṣapṛye yogīni hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phruṃ svāhā Joining the two fists, bind them firmly and press them at the place of the heart.

This is the mantra and mudrā of invitation.
Bind the vajra, turn it, and place it at the heart;
having pleased them with this mantra, send them off.
oṃ danādhipati padali phruṃ svāhā Making a red maṇḍala manifest, worship with red and yellow flowers.
Setting down a vessel filled with various foods endowed with the five nectars, recite the mantra in the circular posture:
this is the torma for the one who dwells at the western gate.
oṃ ananta basuki takṣaka karkoṭa padma mahāpadma śaṃkhapāla kulikapāla debati mahādebati somaśakhī daṇṭadhara mahādaṇḍadhara apālala hulunadānandopananda sāgara mahāsāgara taptamahātapta śrīkānti mahākānti rattakanti surūpa mahāsurūpa bhadrahikaṃ mahorāga śili mahāśili oṃ bhakṣa bhakṣa āgaccha āgaccha mahānāga adhipati sarba rabhubhuba phruṃ phu svāhā Forming the moon fist, extend the earth-parasol and consciousness fingers;
extending the sun hand,
make it like a snake with its hood raised.
oṃ hili hili mahāhili phruṃ phruṃ phraṃ svāhā
With the former mudrā and the finger-snaps, give the torma with this mantra.
On a maṇḍala of white sandalwood, furnished with white flowers,
one should set down a vessel filled with milk and the three sweet substances, and perform it in the fitting stance of the feet:
this is the torma for the guardian of the northern gate.
Because, in coming and going, one fears the fault of stepping over the colored powders and the lines, by vajra force one should, with the mind,
lift up the colors and the lines with the vajra.
oṃ vajra begākrama hūṃ
This is the mantra for lifting the colored powders and the lines into the sky.

In the maṇḍala of scented water,
at the separate places of the deities,
upon their seats, properly set out,
draw their emblems correctly.
In order to complete with these emblems those that make the wheel complete, as the Sugata (the Buddha) has taught,
offer incense without fail in the directions.
Sandalwood and saffron themselves,
and likewise bitumen, not as one pleases:
the great incense of these substances offer fully to Akṣobhya.
Kacora and corika,
and third, jātikośa:
these incenses that give rise to accomplishment are to be used for the beneficial one.
Kunduru and polaka,
musk from the deer's navel, and nakha:
the incense that fully brings about accomplishment is the Jewel King, Ratnasambhava.
Arura and molasses,
the scent of śathi and śathi itself, śalika and sihlaka:
this is the incense of Lokanātha, Protector of the World.
Scents that are taught and scents not taught,
known from the treatises on perfumes:
this incense is the King of Horses.
That is the practice of offering to them.
Then, sprinkling the maṇḍala with scented water over which Amṛtakuṇḍalin's mantra has been recited, make protection and go outside,
and prepare the vases and so forth.
Rejecting all that are black, rough, and the like,
long-necked and big-bellied,
tied with white thread,
washed with water, the mouth adorned with sprigs,
the neck wrapped with a beautiful cloth, holding at its core jewels, grains and medicines,

marked with the emblem of the family,
its four empty sides furnished
with the emblems of the four Victors:
make this the Vijaya vase, the vase of complete victory.
The others are like it, but smaller,
each with one family emblem.
A canopy, victory banners, flowers and the like,
and vast offerings and tormas should be prepared.
Then, with body clean, wearing fragrant clothes, together with the maṇḍala's ritual assistant,
adorned with every ornament,
necklace, armlets and anklets,
earrings and bracelets,
rings, belt and the rest,
bind on the head a beautiful red crown
over which the mantra has been recited seven times.
Glorious, holding vajra and bell,
being like Vajrasattva,
walking around and looking, make up what is lacking, remove what is excessive, and open the doors.
Then, beneath the canopy, outside the maṇḍala, upon a place smeared with scent above the corner of Īśāna, the northeast, one should consecrate the vase.
With this mantra, oṃ hūṃ svāhā,
one should set on the crown and the mouth ornament.
With a white thread over which hūṃ has been recited seven times, bind on the flower garland in particular.
Put it into scented water of white sandalwood,
and, holding the end of the garland in the hand,
tie it to the middle of a vajra and set it on top.
The mantrin, meditating on the lord, consecrates it by reciting the secret mantra a hundred and eight times, and places it in front.
The other eight vases
are arranged clockwise, and with the left hand, with the secret mantra of the lord of each emblem,

one recites over each a hundred and eight times.
Then, to purify the disciples and the rest, in the Kuṇḍalin vase
form the image of Amṛtakuṇḍalin, and, having recited his secret mantra alone
a hundred and eight times, place it near the eastern door.
Remaining in the eastern place, fully endowed with deity yoga,
in order to worship the deities of the maṇḍala's accomplishment, here one performs the practice of worship.
The vajra master, as he thinks fit,
following worldly custom, should set out the vessels for the welcoming water and the rest in their proper places.
First, with the secret mantra of pure mind, sprinkle to purify the welcoming water and the rest.
oṃ sarba saṃśodhani hūṃ phaṭ
This is the mantra for purifying the various things, fruits, flowers and the like.
oṃ āḥ svāhā
This is the secret mantra for purifying the five nectars that are in the conch-bowl vessel.
oṃ āḥ hūṃ a svāhā
This is the mantra for purifying the samaya water.
oṃ śrī hūṃ ghuṃ jraṃ svāhā
Joined with consciousness and the terrifying one,
this is the secret mantra for purifying the five hooks.
Then, oneself in union as one's own principal deity,
the body in which all the buddhas are gathered,
entering into union with the wisdom mudrā,
one should focus on samādhi.
The buddhas sent forth by samādhi should be placed on their own emblems.
Complete the blessing and the rest,
up to the empowerment.
Then, from the vessels

holding pairs of garments, set out as appropriate, with the mantra for offering garments one should offer to each deity:
oṃ vajra vāstra sa svāhā
With the pure welcoming water and the rest, purified earlier, one should make offering.
Then, reciting the praises without fail,
one tastes the nectar and gives delight.
This flower is excellent and virtuous, pure, born from a pure source.
I offer it with faith:
accept it and be pleased with me.
Born of the forest, supreme in flavor,
the supreme incense of fragrance:
I offer it with faith:
accept it and be pleased with me.
That which destroys rākṣasas and purifies, virtuous, dispelling darkness:
I offer it with faith:
accept it and be pleased with me.
Scent joined with the innate,
pure scent that satisfies the nose:
I offer it with faith:
accept it and be pleased with me.
All pure food offerings for the gods,
with every variety of food and of things to chew,
endowed with color, fragrance and flavor:
I offer them; please accept them each.
oṃ kuru kuru mahābhakṣa śrīṃ śrīṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for offering the food.
oṃ jaṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for offering all the fruits.
oṃ śrī hūṃ ghuṃ jraṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for offering the five hooks.
The twenty offerings to be made,
which fully propitiate all the buddhas, arisen from the samaya of hūṃ,

are all offered with their own mudrās.
With charming hands make the offering of charm;
the garland, through the garland ḍākinī;
the song, through the samaya of hūṃ;
the dance is done with vajra feet.
In the same way, the lute, the flute and the rest:
the offerings should be made by one endowed with intelligence.

Likewise flowers and lamps, incense and many other things,
garments of every kind and canopies,
bells and beautiful yak-tail whisks,
male and female servants, mounts, horses, elephants and the rest: offer them.
When the great feast taught by the Sugata is offered within the heart of the maṇḍala, not passing beyond the meaning of suchness,
the wheel of those who know the meaning is delighted.
Without letting go of vajra and bell,
one should praise and sing auspicious songs:
hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ debadharu saṃsara dharudhanadhaligana jaudharu hevajratu hūṃ tena hūṃ tena hūṃ tenatete hūṃ suranarabantitacaraṇadharu kusumabimanamatharoṣakaru hevajratu hūṃ tena hūṃ tena hūṃ tenatete hūṃ bhababimutti biśeśoguhyaniguji a e ramarama hevajratu hūṃ ghuhyanapiṭi agajutu hūṃ
The five nectars, resting on the maṇḍalas of wind and fire, blessed by oṃ,
are made to boil up; then, thinking of them as the nectar of wisdom, one recites the three syllables.
With the tongue bearing a vajra arisen from hūṃ,
one should fully satisfy the whole maṇḍala of the Victors, the countless lords of sages dwelling within,
on the moon at the heart.
The yogin whose mindfulness does not lapse,
in order to bring about awakening for all,
should please the deities by offering dances, both those explained and those not explained, performed with vajra steps,

worship, praise, enjoyments and the rest.
Leaving the supreme companion in practice in the maṇḍala, one goes outside and worships the Dharma protectors with tormas of rice, fish, meat and the like, together with beer.
Entering again, endowed with yoga,
in order to pacify the faults of impurity, one circumambulates the whole maṇḍala and completes the night there.
In the morning the lord of the maṇḍala goes outside once more
and, by performing the fire offering for increase, fully worships the wheel of the maṇḍala.
For the purpose of bringing increase,
by the rite that will be explained,
one skilled in its limbs, with all its limbs, should burn the offering substances for increase.
Placing the disciple outside the door of the maṇḍala,
in order to bring him in,
one enters, makes a great offering, receives empowerment from the lord of the wheel, and speaks this truth:
"Phenomena are like reflections, pure, clear and without turbidity, ungraspable and inexpressible, arising entirely from causes and from karma,
born with certainty from suchness.
By this truth, may the disciples all see clearly and without stain the reflection in the maṇḍala."
With the two verses that came from the mouth of the lord of the maṇḍala, one makes the request.
Holding vajra and bell in the two hands,
one praises the Wheel-Holder in song:
"Because you bear the mark of arising as space,
supreme, without beginning or end,
by nature the great vajra being,

Akṣobhyavajra, grant me accomplishment.
Supreme over all, the great accomplishment, Maheśvara (Śiva), god above the gods,
vajra holder, king of all,
supreme unchanging one, grant me accomplishment.
You are without fault, you are also the Permanent One, attached in keeping with all desire,
great desire, great joy:
Blessed One, grant me accomplishment through suchness itself.
Utterly pure, supreme over all,
tathāgata liberated from the very beginning, Samantabhadra, the self of all,
bodhisattva, grant me accomplishment.
Great accomplishment, supreme over all,
Maheśvara, supreme among mudrās, greatly praised vajra of accomplishment,
lord of vajra pride, grant me accomplishment.
You who pervade the minds of all beings,
who have entered the hearts of all beings,
who have become the father of all beings, supreme desire, supreme samaya:
by the truth through which supreme wisdom,
the self of wisdom and means, is the maṇḍala,
by that truth, Protector, fulfill my wishes completely." Having praised and prostrated in this way,
one makes this supplication as well:
"Lord of the maṇḍala, into the maṇḍala
I shall bring the disciples.
For the sake of beings I make this request:
be patient, and please consider me." Having thus obtained permission at that time, one should bring the disciple in.
Then the disciple who is fortunate enough for empowerment, bowing at the master's feet and filling his cupped hands with flowers, should say these words:

"Great Bliss, you are my teacher;
master, please consider me.
Firm in the way of great awakening, great protector, I seek you.
Please grant me that very samaya;
grant me the vows as well.
The supreme city of great liberation, arisen from the music of the buddhas, endowed with the wealth of the irreversible wheel:
I shall enter the great secret.
Into all the secret families that are seen,
great master, let me enter.
The empowerment of the irreversible,
grant to me, of great fortune.
Sealed with all the major marks,
fully endowed with the minor marks,
the delightful body of a buddha,
great master, grant to me.
Empowerment is a great marvel;
for the sake of all beings
may I always become a master:
great master, grant it to me."
Then, according to the disciple's wish,
one supplicates the Wheel-Holder:
"The one named So-and-so, utterly pure, fully embracing the mind of awakening,
having entered this secret maṇḍala, seeks the samaya and the vows." Then, having obtained the master's permission,
one should ask the disciple:
"The pure family of the great secret:
O great being, do you wish to hold the secret completely?"
And he too should say, "I seek it."
Then the guru, the vajra holder, has the disciple who holds the vows put on red clothes, and covers

his eyes with red cloth;
with water from the Amṛtakuṇḍalin vase
he sprinkles him for protection.
On the one who holds in his hand
a garland of flowers of many colors,
in order to purify the three bodies,
he sets out the three syllables.
Reciting the secret mantra and taking him by the hand,
he brings the disciple in.
oṃ kīli kīli mali ghurni ta vajra cale yuṃ yuṃ yuṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for bringing in the disciple.

"Dear one, who are you?"
the guru asks the disciple.
"Dear one, I am the greatly fortunate one":
with this he should answer, in order to enter.
Then, having brought him inside,
one blesses Vairocana and Śakra (Indra) with mantra,
and then the samaya is to be taken.
oṃ sarba buddha pajopasthanāya ātmanāṃ naryitāyami oṃ ācarya pūjobasthanāya ātmanaṃ niryatāyami oṃ sakale satva paritranātha ātmanāṃ niryatāyami Then the guru who holds vajra and bell sets a vajra at the disciple's heart, and, entrusting it to him there, speaks the supreme samaya three times:
samaya stvaṃ samaya ahaṃ
This is the taking of the samaya.
Then one should say these words: "Today you enter the family of all the tathāgatas. I shall generate in you that vajra wisdom through which one attains even accomplishment as all the tathāgatas; what need is there to mention any other accomplishment? You must not speak of this before those who have not seen the great maṇḍala, lest your samaya be broken.
Today Vajrasattva
has truly entered your heart.
If you speak of this way,

he will at once tear it apart and depart."
Then, having recited seven times over the five nectars prepared beforehand, with a conch one gives them into the disciple's mouth, saying this mantra:
"This is your water of hell:
if you transgress the samaya, it burns;
if you keep the samaya, it gives accomplishment.
Drink the water of vajra nectar!"
oṃ āḥ svāhā
This is the mantra for pouring in the water of the five nectars.
When he has drunk the water of samaya and faith is close at hand, lest it be unstable,
the guru should make it firm.
One should say: "From this day on I am your Vajrapāṇi. Whatever I command, saying 'Do this,' that you must do. Do not despise me, lest, without having abandoned misery, you die and fall into hell."
In order to make his mind fully joyful,
if one performs the descent,
at the heart, on the maṇḍala of wind, meditate on the seed syllable of wind.
Lifting it with wind from the soles of his feet,
one drives it into his heart.
With the pride of union with one's own deity,
one recites the secret mantra.
The mantra is oṃ lole lale hūṃ āḥ.
The mantrin, having brought on a swoon, ringing the vajra and bell, should dance in a terrifying manner to the vajra song of his mantra.
oṃ tiṣṭha vajra samaya pratibaliṃta hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ ho ho ho svāhā
This is the mantra for rousing him after the descent of wisdom.
Then one should snap the fingers, and, with this excellent flower garland, saying oṃ pratīccha vajra ho,
cast it into the heart of the maṇḍala.

If it does not fall well,
one should cast it up to two more times.
Then, binding it on his head,
one should confer the rite of the garland.
With this the face covering is removed,
and the guru speaks this verse:
"oṃ Vajrasattva, today
please strive to open his eyes.
You open all eyes;
the vajra eye is unsurpassed."
oṃ jñāna cakṣu hūṃ a svāhā
After saying this, his eyes are opened,
and he bows at the guru's feet.
Then the guru should also say this to the disciple:
"Right now, look upon this maṇḍala with the force of faith.
You too are born of the buddha family, blessed by mantra and mudrā." Seeing what he has never seen before,
the disciple, filled with longing, bows at the guru's feet
and then should say this:
"oṃ I have entered the maṇḍala of the great vajra maṇḍala.
oṃ Today I have seen the maṇḍala of the great yoga maṇḍala.
oṃ By the great secret maṇḍala
I am empowered in the maṇḍala."
Then the samaya is also to be spoken: samaya hoṃ hoṃ hoṃ.
Then one attends to the wheel of the maṇḍala, and should point out the emblems of the family lords and the goddesses, together with the petalled lotuses,
and the places of the deities.
These are the rites for bringing the disciple into the maṇḍala.

Then the disciple bows respectfully
at the feet of the master, and with this verse he supplicates
the guru for the sake of empowerment:
"You are the glorious Heruka,
to whom the sugatas pay homage;
the pure, supreme, true meaning of the great bodhisattvas.
Just as they conferred the supreme empowerment with the nectar of suchness itself, so, for me, please clear away
the sufferings of saṃsāra.
Supreme stainless nectar of yoga, destroyer of the blinding film, the fault of ignorance:
grant that today I may attain that unsurpassed awakening." Leave two cubits to the east of the maṇḍala, and there, in a second maṇḍala having the proper characteristics, about half the size of the inner maṇḍala, place the disciple.
Give him welcoming water, water for the feet and the rest,
and, having performed the rite of purification,
because he wishes the disciple well,
the guru should sing the auspicious songs:
"Holder of every perfection, with a color like a mountain of gold, protector of the three worlds, who has utterly abandoned the three stains, Buddha whose eyes are like the full-blown petals of a lotus:
by that auspiciousness may happiness come to you here today.
Supreme and utterly unshakable, taught by him, renowned in the three worlds, worshiped by gods and humans,
the most excellent sacred Dharma brings peace to all creatures:
may the second auspiciousness of the world come to you here today.
Endowed with the sacred Dharma, rich in the auspiciousness of learning, the Saṅgha, worshiped by gods, asuras and humans, abode of modesty and glory, the very best among assemblies:
may the third auspiciousness of the world come to you here today.
From the heart of the celestial palace of the gods in Tuṣita, the Sugata came for the benefit of beings, followed by the gods together with their lord:

whatever auspiciousness of the Tathāgata there is,
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
In the Lumbinī grove, shining with leaves, where a rain of flowers fell,
when the Protector was born, attended by many gods, whatever auspiciousness there is that brought existence to its end,
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
In order to overcome every kind of fault, joyfully, at midnight, he went forth to the grove of austerities;
whatever auspiciousness of his going, followed by the gods together with their lord, by that auspiciousness too may peace come to you here today.
On the riverbank, surrounded by garlands of offerings, wondrous, purifying existence for the sake of peace, well praised by the king of the nāgas: whatever auspiciousness there is,
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
In that supreme city called Kapilavastu, praised by the gods of great and wondrous renown, whatever auspiciousness of the Tathāgata who accomplished inconceivable virtue,
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
Awakened for the benefit of all beings, the precious treasury of the sacred Dharma, arisen from the Sage, whatever auspiciousness of his effort, vast in accomplishing the aims of beings,
by that auspiciousness too may peace come to you here today.
Possessing a body like blazing gold, seated upon a seat of grass the color of beryl, whatever auspiciousness of his well-crossed legs and unmoving body,
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
At the root of the king of trees, when the Blessed One, by the power of love, was victorious over all the forces of Māra, on earth and in the sky whatever auspiciousness of wonders of every kind there was,
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
Dwelling at Vārāṇasī, the Sugata, the Teacher, turned the sacred wheel of Dharma, clearly and wondrously manifest on earth and in the sky:
whatever auspiciousness of that turning,

by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
The auspiciousness borne in order to worship the supreme benefactor, praised by the noble ones who perform meritorious deeds, proclaimed in full by the Blessed One, the Sage Śākyasiṃha:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today."
Ringing the bell and brandishing the vajra, accompanied by the auspicious songs, with him seated on a seat of gold or the like,
there one should confer empowerment on him.
Thus, in such an empowerment, whatever the union of the deity may be,
with that deity's mudrā embracing him at the neck,
one should have the disciple do this without fail.
First is the water empowerment;
second is the crown empowerment;
third is the vajra empowerment;
fourth is the empowerment of one's own lord;
fifth, the name empowerment is to be conferred;
sixth is the perfect buddha himself;
seventh is the vase empowerment;
eighth is the secret empowerment itself;
ninth is the wisdom empowerment,
fully joined with the vajra of suchness;
and the vow and the prophecy:
these are to be given in their proper order.
With the water of all the eight vases,
the man together with his own consort,
fully meditating on the heart as vajra, imagines Vajradhara and confers empowerment.
Meditating on Vajra Sun,
one should give him the crown ornament.
Meditating on everything as before,
and fully applying the vajra verse,
the great nine-pronged vajra is held at the heart with his own hand.
The disciple meditates on Lokeśvara, and Vajrasattva confers empowerment:

"With the empowerment of the buddha vajra
I empower you today.
This is all the buddhas themselves:
hold the vajra, so as to be perfectly accomplished."
The disciple meditates on Paramāśva, fully embraced by the goddess Tārā;
the vajra lord confers the empowerment and has him ring the vajra and bell.
oṃ vajra adhipati tvāṃ abhiṣiñcami tiṣṭha vajra samayastvāṃ
The disciple meditates on Vairocana, and the name empowerment is conferred.
oṃ vajra satva stvāṃ abhiṣañcami vajra nāma abhiṣekata
"O glorious So-and-so Vajra": thus is he named.
"Whatever things appear,
that lord is one's own supreme deity.
Phenomena are by nature untroubled;
look on them as the wisdom of the buddhas.
This is all the buddhas themselves,
abiding in the hand of Vajrasattva.
You too must always hold it.
Be firm in the vow of the vajra essence."
oṃ sarba tathāgata siddhi vajra svabhāva tiṣṭha vajra samaya stvaṃ dharāyami hi hi hūṃ
I shall now summarize in order, together with the words of the Sugata.
When the Blessed One himself was teaching the Dharma in Sukhāvatī, the Lord of Secrets (Vajrapāṇi) then asked,
"How should humans be empowered?"
The Blessed One declared:
"For those of laughter, the master empowerment;
for those of gazing, likewise the secret empowerment;
for those who touch with the hand, the wisdom empowerment itself;
and suchness is the embrace of the two together."

is the empowerment yet to come;
it becomes clear from the lips of the guru.

These are the sixfold empowerment.

Having joined the palms and bowed, remaining in front, with this verse that follows below
the disciple should supplicate the guru:
"Just as Bodhivajra made manifest the greatness of the great to the buddhas, so too, for the sake of protecting me, bestow on me today the vajra of space."

When the disciple has supplicated thus,
the guru, abiding for an instant in meditative concentration, should, in order to empower him,
emanate the supreme maṇḍala of the buddhas.
All around, with pennants, victory banners and the like,
with songs, drums and so forth, on the ground,
having spread out parasols and a canopy,
he sits and says this to the disciple:
"I shall bestow the great and precious empowerment,
to which all the three realms bow, arisen from the abode
of the three secrets of all the buddhas.
The vase empowerment is the first;
the second is the secret empowerment;
the third is the wisdom gnosis;
the fourth is that of the Tathāgata."

By the rite of skillful means for all,
all are worshipped with unsurpassed offerings.
Then, from hand to hand,
one gives the disciple the vajra discipline:
"The being without beginning or end,
Vajrasattva, the great delight,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
Vajragarvā, lord of lords."
The form of wisdom arisen from A,
the bell, is also given to him.
For the benefit of all sentient beings

these are the very names vajra and bell.
"This is declared to follow the melody of the wisdom of all the buddhas.
You too must always hold it;
the Victors esteem it for supreme awakening."

Its meaning is this:
"Hold the great vajra and the great bell,
you who are firmly established in the vajra.
Today you have become a vajra master:
gather disciples to you."
Truly endowed with the five ḍākas, completely filled with the five sacred commitments, possessing the marks of the ḍākinīs,
the disciple is empowered as Vajradhara.

The maṇḍala is said to be the lotus.
The sublime maṇḍala of the mind itself is explained as the immeasurable mansion;
the mind is the tiered immeasurable mansion.
Its outer square
is equal in its measures.
The mind of loving-kindness and the rest is spoken of as the four marking cords.
What is properly explained as the line is recollection of the Dharma through union.
Gnosis fully freed from all views is spoken of as the line.
What is properly explained as the ornaments is the supreme vow of moral discipline and the rest.
The mind of the two faculties and the rest arises as the five walls.
What are explained as the doors are the four kinds of liberation.
The four pillars of the archways are called the four right abandonments.
The four applications of mindfulness are spoken of as the four porticoes.

The four doors, whatever they are,
are the four bases of miraculous power.
Likewise the adornment of flower garlands is the seven limbs of awakening.
The eight limbs of the noble path are called the eight pillars.
The special gnosis of the path is known as the yak-tail fly whisks.
What are explained as the full necklaces are the cutting of all afflictions;
by its nature of cutting completely,
the snatching away of afflictions is the netting.
Through the union of the two accumulations the wheel is turned, and because it cuts half of the afflictions, it is called the half necklace.
This is the suchness of the maṇḍala.

The five aggregates, in brief,
are known as the five buddhas.
The vajra sense sources themselves are the supreme maṇḍala of the bodhisattvas.
Earth is explained as Locanā,
the water element as Māmakī; Pāṇḍaravāsinī and Tārā
are known as fire and wind.
By enjoying delusion with delusion,
the exhaustion of delusion is Yamāntaka.
Thereby it is the ender of the aggregates;
thereby it is the ender of the knowable.
By ending aversion to its exhaustion,
through the exhaustion of faults, it is Prajñāntaka.
Therefore it is the ender of mind;
thereby it becomes the ender of afflictions.
By enjoying desire with desire,
the exhaustion of desire is Padmāntaka.
Therefore it becomes the ender of speech, and likewise the ender of meditative absorption.

The exhaustion of all afflictions,
and likewise the exhaustion of all karma,
the gnosis exhausting all obscurations,
is explained as Vighnāntaka, the ender of obstructors.
This is the suchness of the deities.
This is the irreversible master empowerment.

Having let go of the yoga of Akṣobhya, one should recollect the yoga of the Permanent One.
Having placed the disciple close by,
after that the guru,
having covered his eyes with a cloth or the like,
should seat him on the prepared seat.
Entering fully together with Prajñā, the wisdom consort, one should properly undertake the vajra union and practice the yoga of one's chosen deity.
Through the union of vajra and seed, intending to examine the disciple,
as for what is called the flowing kind:
"Just as the buddhas of the past empowered the heirs of awakening, so I, with the secret empowerment, empower your mind stream."
So that it does not go to waste, it should not be taken with a shell or the like;
with the supreme, pure tongue
one should take what arises from both.
This is the unsurpassed suchness, nondual, not expressible in letters.
One truly tastes the sublime bliss that has the aspect of the dharmadhātu.

The guru, Vajradhara,
with his right fist at the heart of the patron, holds the corner of the Dharma robe and with his hand entrusts the bell to him.
Having given every consolation, having himself become Śākyamuni,

he prophesies the great disciple:
"You will become a buddha, without doubt.
Birth, aging, sickness and death will not befall you;
fear, grief and disease will not arise.
In this vehicle of great bliss,
son, I prophesy you.
Thus I prophesy you:
Vajrasattva, Tathāgata.
Because existence is perfectly accomplished,
having been delivered from the lower realms of existence,
with the name of your own special deity you will be accomplished as a tathāgata beneath the earth, in the human world, and in the heavens."
This is the secret empowerment and the prophecy.

Either the former one or else another,
by the sequence taught in the tantras, having carefully examined an excellent mudrā, a consort, one gives her, endowed with the yoga of Amitābha:
"The goddess who liberates, the giver of joy,
of manifold form, full of love:
take her, take her, great being!
Having taken her, worship her."
Through the union of the vajra bond
one properly undertakes the vajra worship;
having thereby drawn out the vajra mind,
one should consume it with the vajra tongue.

By the rite of rising from equipoise one should draw the sublime maṇḍala, perform the fire offering arisen from meditative concentration,
and then give the words of consolation:
"Through what is supremely secret and pure,
by seeing and fully entering the maṇḍala,
you are thereby freed from all wrongdoing;
today you all abide well.
In this vehicle of great bliss

you will not die again.
Being invincible and deathless,
you will play, fearing nothing at all.
Because existence is thoroughly purified,
you have passed beyond the suffering of existence;
because existence is perfectly accomplished,
you have become the supreme Teacher.
This accomplished vow of sacred commitment you must always guard.
All the buddhas have taught it in accord;
it is a command to be supremely heeded.
Do not disparage the master,
do not transgress the word of the Sugata, and never speak
in disparagement of your vajra brothers and sisters.
Do not be lacking in love for sentient beings;
do not speak of suchness to those without the fortune;
do not abandon fortunate beings;
never disparage your own body.
Do not set limits on the sublime Dharma, nor scorn the teachings of others.
Until you reach the heart of awakening,
do not abandon the Three Jewels.
Always guard the sacred commitments;
hold the vajra and the bell;
always keep the crown knot;
always perform the fire offering;
always erect maṇḍalas;
always consecrate the Sugatas;
give torma to the great bhūtas."
With these words and the like, the consolation should be given at length.

Having conferred the wisdom empowerment,
one should then speak of the fourth:
"Vajra and bell: by the sleep of that melody
the eyes are sealed;
realizing, and wholly free of concepts,

peace comes clearly forth.
This gnosis is exceedingly subtle,
the vajra essence, equal to space,
stainless, bestowing liberation, peace itself;
and you yourself are its father."
From the lips of the holy guru
the fourth is to be known.

After the disciple's rites are complete,
having come out of the maṇḍala,
one should perform the fire offering to complete the rite.
Then, having entered, ask the Victors' forbearance;
having made offerings and praises,
ring the bell with the left hand,
move the vajra with the right and offer incense,
and recite the verse requesting them to depart:
"oṃ You have accomplished every aim of beings;
grant the accomplishments that accord with them.
Though you depart to the buddha realm, please come again."
This is the mantra requesting departure.

When the maṇḍala of deities has departed,
one should gather the colored powders with the mantra, place them in a clean vessel,
and then cast them into a river.
oṃ gili gili hūṃ ja svāhā
This is the mantra for gathering and casting away the colored powders.

Then, anointing with nectar
the ground within the maṇḍala, one should offer the torma of the guardians of the directions or the torma for all bhūtas.
The torma for the guardians of the directions was taught before the accomplishment of the maṇḍala.
Now, not unlike the former,
the torma for all bhūtas is explained.
In the center of the element of space
one should visualize an eight-petaled lotus.

On the eastern petal imagine Indra;
in the south place Antaka (Yama);
on the western petal the lord of waters, Varuṇa;
in the north, likewise, the yakṣa lord.
In the fire quarter, the southeast, the great Agni;
in the southwest, Nairṛti, lord of the rākṣasas;
in the wind quarter imagine the Homeless One, the wind god;
in the northeast, Īśāna, lord of the bhūtas.
The sun, the moon, Brahmā and the rest,
the holy Brahmakāyika gods,
the Brahmapurohita gods,
those dwelling in the Joyless and the Boundless,
the Truly Arisen, the Great Kings, the Paranirmitavaśavartin gods,
the gods of Nirmāṇarati,
those dwelling in the Pure Abodes, those dwelling in Sukhāvatī,
those dwelling in Akaniṣṭha,
the Radiant world realm,
and those dwelling in the Heaven of the Thirty-Three:
all of these are to be placed above.
Those of the lower realms, in the source of phenomena:
Karkoṭa and Śaṅkhapāla, likewise Ananta and Vāsuki, Takṣaka and Kulika, Mahāpadma and the excellent Padma,
the asuras, and the beings of the hells:
imagine them below the source of phenomena.
From oṃ come Brahmā and the other gods,
from hūṃ come Śakra and the rest,
from āḥ come Karkoṭa and the rest,
each with two arms and one face.
The gods above are brilliant white,
Indra and the rest are black,
Karkoṭa and the rest are deep red.
Each is embraced by a consort like himself, holding vajra and bell in the hands,

and stands on a seat with the right leg extended.
Brahmā and the rest are sealed by the Permanent One,
Śakra and the rest by Vajra, Karkoṭa and the rest by Narteśvara;
all are born from the three families.
Gaurī having summoned them,
Caurī binds them with the noose, Vetālī fetters them with chains,
and Ghasmarī delights them with the bell.
Then give water for the face and water for the feet,
and prepare the torma according to the rite.
Upon the maṇḍalas of wind and fire imagine a lotus vessel arisen from a;
by blazing and radiating
one should prepare the five nectars.
Having meditated on this transformation of the parts, bless it with oṃ and offer it.
oṃ akāro mukhaṃ sarbba dharmmāḥṇāṃ ādyanutpannatvāt oṃ ā hūṃ phaṭ svāhā
Then, having pleased them, one should request them to depart:
oṃ bajra satva samaya manupālaya bajra satva tvenopatiṣṭha dṛḍho me bhaba supoṣyo bhaba śaśvato me bhaba anurakto me bhaba sarba siddhimme prayaccha sarba karma suca me cittaṃ śriyaṃḥ kuru hūṃ ha ha ha ha ho bhagavān sarba tathāgata bajra māme muñca bajrī bhaba mahā samaya satva āmuḥ
These are the rites for accomplishing the maṇḍala.

Since consecration and the fire offering are two limbs of the maṇḍala, after the maṇḍala I shall teach both the consecration and the fire offering.

A master of good birth and intelligence, who performs all his actions without conflict with the world,
and who knows the ten principles,
is fit to perform the consecration.
At a captivating place of consecration, anointed with the five well-thickened substances,

adorned with flowers,
beautified with a canopy, white parasols, pennants and much else besides,
and fragrant with burning incense,
on a day of good planets and constellations, or on another,
the master, properly dressed, proceeds.
He should wear a necklace, anklets, armlets,
earrings and bracelets;
if he has none, at least a finger ring,
of no less than a māṣa in weight.
The images, painted scrolls and books there are adorned with as many ornaments as there are.
Joining himself with the special deity, he places them before him and performs the preliminary consecration.

First of all, the vidyādhara diligently rings the bell, brandishes the vajra in his right hand,
and gives the torma according to the rite.
With the five products of the cow, the five barks,
and in particular the five fragrances,
he washes what bears the form of the deity,
and offers water for the face and the rest as before.
Again, through that same yoga,
he washes it and blesses it.
Knowing the place and the time,
he performs the preliminary consecration in the evening.
He sprinkles cleansing water from the conch.
In the chamber that has been sprinkled,
upon the images and the rest set there,
the form accomplished through the six limbs,
he visualizes it as the very deity;
with verses he invites the forms of the deities into the sky and properly worships them.
Thus he performs this preliminary consecration:
"Just as the perfect buddhas abide in Tuṣita,

and as they entered the womb of Queen Māyā,
so likewise please abide in this form.
Protectors who always dwell here,
for the full increase of the awakening mind, please accept with loving compassion these flowers, incense and the rest."
He properly worships, and then praises;
after that he purifies,
and then fully protects.
This is the preliminary consecration.

"Akṣobhyavajra, great gnosis,
vajra sphere, great space,
supreme three vajras, three maṇḍalas:
to the vajra melody I bow and offer praise.
Vairocana, great purity,
vajra peace, great bliss,
luminous by nature, supreme of the supreme:
to the vajra Teacher I bow and offer praise.
Jewel King, Ratnasambhava, most excellent,
vajra space, stainless sky,
pure by nature, untainted:
to the vajra body I bow and offer praise.
Deathless Vajra, great king, nonconceptual, holder of the vajra of space,
who has reached the far shore of desire:
to the vajra speech I bow and offer praise.
Amoghavajra, perfect buddha,
who fulfills all wishes,
arisen from the pure essential nature:
to Vajrasattva I bow and offer praise." Brandishing the vajra in the right hand and holding the bell in the left, fully knowing the meaning as it is,
he praises with the song of these five verses.
These are the preliminary consecration of the deity.

A vase free of black marks, cracks at the base and the like, long-necked and large-bellied,
smeared with water mixed with white stone powder,
its mouth adorned with fine leafy branches,
with jewels, grains and medicines placed inside,
marked with the emblem of the family,
its four sides of the belly furnished
with the emblems of the four Victors,
its neck wrapped in beautiful cloth:
this is held to be the victory vase.
The others are like it,
but smaller, each with a single family emblem.
A white cord twisted from seven strands,
over which hūṃ has been recited seven times,
and a garland of flowers are tied at the neck.
Placing in it water scented with white sandalwood,
one should firmly perform its preliminary consecration.
Holding the end of the cord in the hand, one ties it to the middle of the vajra and sets it on top.
Meditating on its lord,
one recites his secret mantra a hundred and eight times.
The other eight vases
are arranged all around as in the maṇḍala, and over each, with the secret mantra of the lord it bears as its mark, one recites a hundred and eight times.
With the secret mantra of Amṛtakuṇḍalin one recites over the tenth vase alone.
Because the lord is not fixed,
the secret mantras of the others are given:
oṃ dhara dhara dhāraya dhāraya mardha mardha bajra dhṛka dhitiṣṭha oṃ śaśvat parama śaśvata ehyehi jin jṛk adhitiṣṭha oṃ bajra sūrya tamobhidhamana samaya stvāṃ haṃ ratna dhṛka dhitiṣṭha oṃ bajra dharmā samayastvāṃ hulu hulu āroḷka adhitiṣṭha oṃ phu phu phu hi hi hi phrajñā dhṛka adhitiṣṭha oṃ moha rati adhitiṣṭha oṃ dveṣa rati adhitiṣṭha oṃ rāga rati adhitiṣṭha oṃ bajra rati adhitiṣṭha

At the place of the buddhas' preliminary consecration, having worshipped these vases,
the wise one holding vajra and bell should give the torma and draw the rite to a close.
This is the preliminary consecration of the vases.

Then, not very far from the chamber of the preliminary consecration, a square of about four cubits
and two cubits in height, built of earth and stone or of brick, beautified with auspicious features and pounded very firm:
such a fine platform the wise one should make.
Here the deity is set facing east.
Sitting facing it,
holding vajra and bell,
one should give the torma. After that, meditating on the seed syllable in one's own heart,
one draws in the buddhas abiding in space,
and through the yoga of the nectar of gnosis emanates the offering goddesses in order.
From these, jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥdi,
one should emanate the four gatekeepers;
by them the four actions of summoning, drawing in and the rest are performed.

Covered with yellow cloth and turned to face east, with oneself facing them, after that the images seated
on the seat of the platform are bathed in order.
Painted images, books, clay figures and the like:
the one who knows the rite washes the reflection of these deities in a mirror;
for the others, the form itself.
For purification, first,
with the five products of the cow placed in a bronze vessel, reciting the secret mantra aloud,

one bathes the deity:
oṃ sarba tathāgata kāya biśodhani svāhā
With a brush made from the tips of bound dūrva grass, one anoints with fragrant oil placed in a bronze vessel, and the mantrin recites its secret mantra:
oṃ hūṃ trāṃ hrī khāṃ
Then, to remove the oil,
one rubs it well with earth ground with the five barks,
and, as the very self of the deity, bathes the deity once again.
Anointing it with the five fragrances taught before,
kept in a bronze vessel,
and reciting the secret mantra given above,
one bathes the image.
Auspicious songs, music,
dance and many other beautiful things are performed.
As at the perfect empowerment of the Victors,
all the splendors
are performed by Locanā and the others, and with vases held by all the tathāgatas, filled with the water of nectar,
the wise one washes it through supreme meditative concentration:
"Just as all the tathāgatas, the moment they were born, were bathed with the pure water of the gods, so likewise do I bathe you."
oṃ sarba tathāgata abhiṣekata samaya śrīye āḥ hūṃ
This is the mantra for bathing the image.

With a golden stick
of no less than a māṣaka in weight,
one takes a little eye salve from the colored powders,
and with these one opens the eyes:
oṃ cakṣu samanta cakṣu biśodhani svāhā Wiping off the water with a cloth, one seats it firmly in whatever its place may be,

and to each deity of the circle one offers a pair of garments:
oṃ bajra vastraye svāhā
This is the mantra for offering garments.
Having offered water for the feet, water for the face, water for rinsing the mouth, and water for welcome, after that,
at the end of the purification,
one performs vast offerings:
ema puṣpa śubadrabya śucayaṃ śucayonāma yamanibitobaghya pratigṛhṇa prasiddhima banaspati rasahṛdo gandha dhūpa mudhama yamanibiditobakṣu pratigṛhna prasadme rākṣoghaśca papitraśca tamobhidhamanasubha mayanibidhitobhakṣa pratigṛhṇa prasidame sahajasaṃśogakiśuddho gandhoyaṃ ghaṇaḍarpaṇa yaṃmayanipidotyobāghya pratigṛhna prasadame naibidye sarba saṃyughaṃ khadabhojasamananitaṃ varṇa gandharāsobitaṃ dabhami pratighṛhṇa taṃ oṃ jaṃ saṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for offering all the fruits.
oṃ pratīccha arghaṃ hūṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for offering the water of welcome.

Brandishing vajra and bell,
like Vajrapāṇi himself, singing the verses of auspiciousness,
one offers the torma to the buddhas:
ṇama hūṃ kāṃrana buru seji bisaddha uttaru tena hūṃ tena hūṃ tena tete hūṃ dhaṃbala su saṃkhaṃte hadharu saraya susobha candhamu hūṃ tena hūṃ tena hūṃ tena tete hūṃ dana bhila kanayo udharu gaṇḍa bajra mutta dharu tena hūṃ tena hūṃ tena tete hūṃ māyabīdhe hina jagu so i akarana rūpi tena hūṃ tena hūṃ tena tete hūṃ
It should be sung blended with the fifth melody.
These are the rites of consecration.

After the consecration and the rest, whatever was forgotten, could not be done, or left the rite incomplete should be completed by the fire offering.
Through the variety of aims to be accomplished
the fire offering becomes of many kinds;

but since a lengthy text is daunting,
I shall teach here only a brief summary.
First, with mantra and mudrā,
one should purify the ground:
extending the right hand, visualizing it as a vajra, one strikes the ground.
oṃ hana hana krodha hūṃ phaṭ
This is the mudrā and mantra for purifying the ground.
The hearth is a cubit across and about half that in depth.
Then come the base and the rim,
and outside, a vajra garland.
The base has anthers,
the rim has lotus flowers;
each is four finger-widths,
equal throughout in breadth and height.
Wheel, jewel, lotus or sword,
and in the center of the hearth a vajra:
in the central field, one finger-width,
and at the lip, eight finger-widths, are to be drawn.
For pacifying, the colored powder is white;
for increasing, it is made yellow;
for subjugating, red; for the others,
black: these are the five kinds.
The directions differ according to the kind of rite,
and the times too are to be determined;
the wise examine the direction and the time for each such rite.
Facing north, the mantrin properly undertakes the rite of pacifying;
increasing is always facing east;
for fierce rites it is facing south;
for subjugating, west is taught,
and likewise for summoning and for expelling.
Pacifying is performed in the evening, increasing in the morning,
fierce rites at midday,

and subjugating and the like at midnight.
Twigs of the sacrificial tree, their tips unbroken,
fine, and bearing two leaves,
are to be distinguished according to the kind of rite:
for increasing, fourteen finger-widths;
for pacifying, twelve;
for subjugating, ten; for hostility and for expelling, eight finger-widths.
The grain, the kindling sticks and the rest, having been cleansed, are placed accordingly
in the right-hand corner, and one recites the mantras over them all.
Joining the two hands as fists,
one fully extends the two middle fingers.
This is the mudrā for purifying all substances.
oṃ śriṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for purifying the butter.
oṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for washing the substances.
oṃ jṛṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for purifying the grain.

oṃ kuru kuru svāhā
This is the mantra for purifying the other substances.
oṃ ā svāhā
This is the mantra for purifying the kindling sticks.

The wood that comes from the limbs of the fire offering, shorter than the hearth, is placed in the hearth.
Kindling the fire through meditative absorption,
one mentally gives the oblation of butter.
He appears distinctly,
possessing a body arisen from meditative concentration;
to him one offers in order water for the feet, water for the face, water for rinsing the mouth, and the water of welcome.
Kuśa grass, not too long, its tips unbroken, is spread facing east, turning to the right,

with the tips all pointing one way,
and is laid upon the rim.
With sandalwood or aloeswood, or else with other fragrant woods,
in order to perform the fire offering,
one fans the fire into flame with a fan,
makes it blaze brightly, and examines the signs.
In the middle of the fire one meditates
on a lotus and a sun disc, and then once more one invites him:
the god with three eyes, four faces and four arms,
large-bellied, with a topknot of matted hair,
in his right hands the gesture of granting boons and a rosary,
in his left a staff and a water pot,
his color according with the rite;
one visualizes him arisen from the source of the syllable ra.
oṃ ehyehi mahābhūta deba ṛṣi dveja satvama ahāṃti mahārasmin sannihito bhaba
This is the verse of invitation.
Having offered the water of welcome and water for the feet,
and having taken full possession of the enclosure, in order to realize the accomplishment of the aims one desires, one should properly recite the sacred commitment:
oṃ bajra anala mahābhūta jvalaya sarba bhasmin kuru sarba duṣṭa hūṃ phaṭ dṛśya jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ smayastvaṃ samaya ho
This is the verse for giving the sacred commitment.

On the fine filling ladle and pouring ladle
one visualizes the seed syllable marked with a vajra.
Holding them with the right hand and keeping them between the knees, having blessed body and speech,
one offers the oblations to the god of fire,
who is crowned with the lord of his own family and whose tongue bears a three-pointed vajra.
oṃ agnaye svāhā
This is for the butter.

oṃ sarba pāpaṃ dahana bajrayā bajra satvasya sarba pāpaṃ dahana svāhā
This is for the black sesame.
oṃ bajra puṣṭaye svāhā
This is for the unbroken rice.
oṃ sarba saṃpade svāhā
This is for the curd and the finest food.
oṃ bajra bijaye svāhā
This is for the husked rice.
oṃ mahā begāya svāhā
This is for the barley.
oṃ mahā balāya svāhā
This is for the peas.
oṃ bajra ghasmari svāhā
This is for the wheat.
oṃ bajra āyuṣe svāhā
This is for the young dūrva grass.
oṃ apratihata bajraye svāhā
This is for the kuśa grass.
oṃ bajra yajñā svāhā
This is for the udumbara wood.
oṃ bodhi bṛkṣāya svāhā
This is for the aśvattha wood.
oṃ bajra lathāya svāhā
This is for the plakṣa wood.
oṃ bajra kuberāya svāhā
This is for the nyagrodha wood.
oṃ satakaraya svāhā
This is for the mango wood.

Holding the pouring ladle firmly by its head with the right hand, one fills the filling ladle to the brim of its mouth with a stream of butter from the pouring ladle.
Then with filling ladle and pouring ladle together,
again three times each,
one should give full oblations,
in every way as much as one is able.

This is common to pacifying,
and the same is taught for increasing.
For other rites such as subjugating other oblations are to be given.
Whatever substances, one, two or three,
bring about pacifying and increasing,
since a lengthy text is daunting,
I shall state them briefly.
oṃ padma rāga agne ma pṛṇaya amukasya śyantiṃ kuru svāhā
This is for lotuses together with butter.
oṃ gha gha ghātaya tejorā pṛṇaya śāntiṃ kuru svāhā
This is for blue lotuses together with milk.
oṃ supuṣpa kule bale jalane śāntiṃ kuru svāhā
This is for white water lilies together with saffron.
oṃ dharme dharmārāje daha daha sarba bighnāṃ śāntiṃ kuru svāhā
This is for storax together with sandalwood.
oṃ kili sukili kālareti sarba pāpaṃ daha amukasya śīntaṃ kuru svāhā
This is for oleander together with fragrant sesame oil.
For increasing, the mantrin should perform the fire offering with the five substances, mango, arka, kaṇḍapala,
bilva and udumbara,
using this mantra:
oṃ gagani gagana bilokite hūṃ phaṭ tejorāja amukasya puṣṭiṃ kuru svāhā

By the color, the smell, the tongues of fire, the shape, the sound and the like,
one should examine the fire omen, as the oblations burn,
for the patron's good or ill fortune.
For pacifying, a white blaze;
for increasing, a yellow appearance;
for subjugating and for fierce rites
red and black fire are praised.
A fire like Indra's bow, the rainbow, is good,
and one that swirls to the right is best.

A sound deep like that of a clay drum and flames that are glossy and single-pointed are praised.

Scattering sparks, much smoke, rising by stages and blazing sluggishly,
at the end blazing of itself and splendid,
hot and radiating light,
three-pointed and thin,
and likewise like a cow's head:
these and other bad marks,
the inauspicious ones, should also be examined.

To bring the fire offering to its close,
offer a host of offerings, flowers, incense and the like,
praise the blazing fire,
and request it to depart with this verse:
"Eater of oblations, you have accomplished
my own aim and the aim of others, so depart.
Likewise come again at the proper time,
and grant me all accomplishments."
By this the wisdom fire is pleased, Vajradhara is greatly pleased,
the Victor, the Permanent One, is pleased,
the Lord of Gold is gratified, Padmanarteśvara, Lord of the Dance, is pleased,
and King Paramāśva becomes pleased.
Brahmā, Śakra (Indra), Maheśvara, Viṣṇu, the mighty Vāyu, Kāmadeva, the god of desire, and the Plough-Bearer (Balarāma), the Moon, the Sun and the other grahas,
the lords of the earth, the Noose-Holder (Varuṇa), Kubera and Nairṛti,
the King of Dharma (Yama), and the nāgas, gandharvas, asuras, kiṃnaras,
the gods dwelling in the Heaven of the Thirty-Three,
those dwelling in Akaniṣṭha,
those where the Great Kings dwell,
the gods dwelling in Yāma and in Tuṣita,
the gods of Nirmāṇarati,
likewise those of Paranirmitavaśavartin,

those who dwell in the Pure Abodes,
the Radiant world realm,
those dwelling in the Sahā world,
the sentient beings dwelling on the four continents, whoever dwells in the three realms,
the world as vessel and the world of sentient beings, grass, branches, herbs, trees and so on;
those who dwell on the Joyful Ground,
those who have reached the Stainless,
those dwelling on the Radiant, those abiding on the Illuminating,
those who have reached the Difficult to Conquer, those who have attained the Manifest,
those who have attained the Far-Gone,
those who have gained the Immovable,
those who dwell on Good Intelligence,
and those who have reached the Cloud of Dharma:
the lords of the ten grounds, the protectors,
all of them become pleased.
The eight noble persons,
the perfect buddhas and the śrāvakas,
the rhinoceros-like and those who live in groups, hell-beings, hungry ghosts and animals,
gods, asuras and humans:
thus the whole circle of the assembly's maṇḍala,
all of them, by this rite
of the fire offering, become satisfied.
For pacifying, make offering with milk;
for increasing, accomplish it with yellow water;
for subjugating and for fierce rites
pour red and black water.
This is the quenching of the fire.

Flowers grown from the many trees of the tantras,
the stainless mantras, mudrās and the rest:
by this which Durjayacandra has composed, may it be like a radiant garland of flowers for beings.

This completes the maṇḍala sādhana called Suparigraha, composed by the great scholar, the glorious Durjayacandra.

Though my mind is little practiced in the ocean of Sanskrit, so that beings without eyes may gain the eye of wisdom, by this good translation of the maṇḍala rite, its mantras, mudrās and so on,
may they become kings of vidyādharas.
With faith and a mind to benefit others,
I have revised, translated and established this text;
since I have not attained the noble path,
may the ḍākinīs forgive whatever errors there are.

Translator's Notes

• The ground-testing lines follow the familiar test: a pit is dug and refilled with its own earth, and earth left over is a good sign. "The extensive works" renders □□□□, taken as the fuller tantras or manuals. The trees in the list of grounds to avoid are given in their standard Sanskrit forms.
• "Red bronze" renders the unclear □□□□□□□□. In the list of eight bodhisattvas, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as Samantabhadra, since he completes the standard set. The goddesses of the intermediate directions on the vajra (the Urger, Jewel Lightning, the Chain, the Invincible) and on the bell (the Fair-Colored, the Red, the Radiant One, Vajra Garland) are translated literally because they cannot be identified with confidence; so too "the essence of the buddhas, the casket". □□□□□□ in the closing list of offerings is taken as scented water, matching the earlier list of the welcoming water's ingredients.
• "With the white wisdom" (ye shes dkar po) taking the flowers is obscure; it may denote a hand or a deity; rendered literally. The identities of Hari, the Permanent One / Vajra Permanent, Vajra Light, Vajra Sun and "the King of the Seven" (bdun gyi rgyal po) are uncertain and are translated literally; the parallel line two verses later reads "King of Horses" (rta'i rgyal po, Hayagrīva / Paramāśva), and "the Seven" may be an error for it, or may refer to the sun with its seven horses. "Five products of the cow" reads the text's pa yi lnga as ba yi lnga (pañcagavya). The herb names and lakudranthika are given as spelled; they could not be identified with confidence. The list called "sixteen modes" gives seventeen items, with "staff mode" written twice; translated as it stands.
• The fifth of the nine sentiments is written rgad po ("old man"); it is taken as a variant of rgad mo, "laughter", i.e. the comic sentiment (hāsya). The seven songs are named after the seven notes of the Indian scale, rendered with their Sanskrit names (Tibetan drang srong here is the note ṛṣabha, not "sage"). "Rocana" and "the white" are code names for fingers that are not identified with certainty. The text reads spros bzung ("holding emanations"); it is read as spos bzung, "holding incense".
• "Earth parasol", "wisdom", "lotus" and "consciousness" in the fence mudrā are code names for fingers that cannot be identified with certainty; they are rendered literally. "Urine" for dri chu follows its ritual sense in vase filling; it might instead be scented water. The names of the door vases are translated literally.
• Dri chu for rinsing the disciple's mouth is taken as scented water, following the washing of the tooth stick with scented water just before. Dkyil 'khor gshegs su gsol could mean either inviting the maṇḍala deities or requesting them to depart; it is rendered as departing, in keeping with the earlier request to the earth goddess. The lunar mansions are given their standard Sanskrit names (byi bzhin = Abhijit, lag = Ārdrā, me bzhi = Hasta). "Middle and last of spring" reads tha dad as tha dang.

• The mantra of the sprinkling is called gtor ma'i sngags, here taken in the sense of sprinkling water, not a torma cake, since it accompanies the sprinkling of vase water. The names of several dance stances are obscure (the "round" stance of the western door is written sa ga zlum po); they are rendered as literally as possible. "Earth parasol", "lotus", "rocana" and "the white" are finger code names, as earlier in the text.

• "Earth-parasol" and "consciousness" in the moon-fist mudrā are code names for particular fingers; which fingers are meant is not certain from this passage alone. In the line on pleasing the gate guardians, the written □□□□ is read as the evident □□□ ("this").

• The line on bitumen (□□□□□□□□□□) is obscure; it is read as saying the substances are fixed, not chosen at will. The "beneficial one" for whom the second set of incenses is used is not named more clearly. "Rough" reads □□□□ as □□□□□□. The "ritual assistant" (□□□□□□) and "consciousness and the terrifying one," used with the mantra for the five hooks (the five meats), are uncertain; the latter may be code names for seed syllables.

• "Lord of vajra pride" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is taken as an epithet in the praise, not as a separate deity's name. The five nectars are "made to boil up" (□□□□□□) in the inner offering on the wind and fire maṇḍalas.

• The line on blessing "Vairocana and Śakra" with mantra is translated as it stands; it most likely refers to blessing the disciple, but the text does not say so. The three mantras that follow are the disciple's offering of himself to all the buddhas, to the master, and to the protector of all beings.

• In the last lines, the four kinds of practitioner, those of laughter, gazing, touching with the hand and embrace, are matched with the empowerments. In the ninth verse of auspiciousness the text reads □□□□□□□□, taken as the refrain's □□□□□□□□, "here today." "The empowerment of one's own lord" (□□□□□□) is translated literally.

• "These are the sixfold empowerment" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; it could also be read "the sixth empowerment." The Bodhivajra verse here reads □□□□□□□□ ("made manifest the greatness") rather than the more familiar wording, and is translated as it stands. "The mind of the two faculties" (□□□□□□□□□□□) is translated as written, though five faculties would better suit the five walls. The "patron" (□□□□□□□□□□, yajamāna) is taken to be the disciple; this is uncertain. The four wrathful ones (Yamāntaka, Prajñāntaka, Padmāntaka, Vighnāntaka) are explained through a play on "ender" (antaka).

• The southern guardian is written □□□□□□□□, evidently a slip for □□□□□□□□, Antaka (Yama), and is translated so; likewise □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□, "not unlike the former." "The Homeless One" (□□□□□□□) stands in the wind quarter and is taken as the wind god Vāyu's epithet. The heavens rendered "the Joyless and the Boundless" (□□□□□□□, □□□□□□□) and "the Truly Arisen" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) could not be securely identified with standard Sanskrit names and are translated by meaning. □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as the nāga king Karkoṭa, completing the list of eight nāga kings.

• □□□□□□□ / □□□□□□□□□□□□ is rendered "preliminary consecration" (adhivāsana), the rite of the evening before the main consecration. The phrase □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is obscure; "smeared with water mixed with white stone powder" is a tentative rendering. The "five well-thickened substances" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) are not further specified in the text.

• The hearth is written □□□□□□, evidently a slip for □□□□□□, "hearth," which appears a few lines later and is translated so. The long offering mantra and the torma song are in a heavily corrupted Sanskrit and Apabhraṃśa, transcribed here exactly as spelled.

• The phrase □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is obscure; "having taken full possession of the enclosure" is tentative. "Kaṇḍapala" (□□□□□□□) is given as written, as one of the five substances; its identity is uncertain.

• "The wisdom fire is pleased" reads □□□□□□□□□ for the written □□□□□□□□□ ("wisdom is not pleased"), which contradicts the sequence of beings who are pleased; likewise □□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□, the fifth ground (Sudurjayā), and □□□□□□□ as □□□□□□□ (Tuṣita). The line "three-pointed and thin" (□□□□□) is uncertain. "The rhinoceros-like and those who live in groups" are the two kinds of pratyekabuddha. The order of the third and fourth grounds follows this text.
