

The One Hundred and Eight Names of the Blessed One, Together with the Dhāraṇī Mantra

Bhagavannāmāṣṭottaraśataka · Toh 533 · Derge Kangyur

བཅའོ་ལཱ་འདས་ཀྱི་མཆོན་བར་རྒྱ་མར་རྒྱ་པ་གཟུངས་སྒྲས་དང་བཅས་པ་

Toh 533 in the Kangyur is a short dhāraṇī text known in English as "The One Hundred and Eight Names of the Blessed One, Together with the Dhāraṇī Mantra," dedicated to the Buddha Śākyamuni, whose name in Sanskrit is Śākyamuni and in Tibetan is སྐུ་མཆོག་ལྷན་པོ་མཆོག་ཀྱི་མཆོན་བར་རྒྱ་མར་རྒྱ་པ་གཟུངས་སྒྲས་དང་བཅས་པ་. The text belongs to the dhāraṇī class of canonical literature, presenting a collection of one hundred and eight epithets of the Buddha alongside a concluding mantra — the well-known formula "muṇi muṇi mahāmunaye svāhā" — together with assurances of the vast merit to be gained through its recitation. Texts of this type serve both devotional and ritual purposes, offering practitioners a structured means of venerating the Buddha through his names while invoking the protective and purifying power of the accompanying dhāraṇī. It sits within the Kangyur, the Tibetan canon of translated Buddha-word, as Toh 533, in the broader category of dhāraṇī and mantra literature.

The one hundred and eight names of the Blessed One, together with the dhāraṇī mantra, is complete.

Homage to the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly and fully awakened Buddha Śākyamuni.

Tadyathā: muṇi muṇi mahāmunaye svāhā.

If this is recited even once, one hundred million eons

Translator's Notes

- The text ends mid-sentence, cutting off after "one hundred million eons." The passage is clearly the colophon and closing formula of a text on the one hundred and eight names of the Blessed One, and the sentence about the benefits of recitation is incomplete as given.
