Toh 452 in the Kangyur is a tantra known in Sanskrit as the Ārya-dvaya-samatā-vijaya-kṣubhikalpa-mahārāja and in Tibetan as Phakpa Nyisu Mepa Nyamnyi Nampar Gyalwa Zheybyai Tokpai Gyalpo Chenpo, rendered into English as "The Noble One Victorious in the Equality of Non-Duality: A Great King of Tantras." It belongs to the tantric section of the Kangyur and is presented as a teaching delivered by the Buddha while residing in the Heaven of Mastery over Others' Emanations, surrounded by an vast assembly of bodhisattvas who had each attained the stage of Vajrasattva. The text concerns the profound theme of non-duality and equality, framed within a Vajrayāna context and introduced with homage to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, who also figures among the principal figures in the surrounding assembly alongside Samantabhadra, Avalokiteśvara, and other great beings.

In the language of India: Ārya-dvaya-samatā-vijaya-kṣubhikalpa-mahārāja. In the language of Tibet: The Great King of Tantras (Skt. kalpa-mahārāja) called "The Noble One Victorious in the Equality of Non-Duality."

Homage to the glorious bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi.

Thus did I hear. At one time the Blessed One was dwelling in the divine palace of the Heaven of Mastery over Others' Emanations, together with an assembly of bodhisattvas, great beings, equal in number to the finest dust particles of ninety-nine Mount Merus. Every one of those bodhisattvas had attained the stage of Vajrasattva and had each been empowered as a regent of the vajra. Among them were the following: the bodhisattva, great being Vajrapāṇi; the bodhisattva, great being Samantabhadra; the bodhisattva, great being Avalokiteśvara, the Powerful; the bodhisattva, great being Ākāśagarbha; the bodhisattva, great being Vajramuṣṭi; the bodhisattva, great being who, the very instant the awakening mind of equality arose, turned the wheel of Dharma; the bodhisattva, great being Gaganagañja; the bodhisattva, great being who utterly conquers all the powers of Māra; and together with these, a further assembly of bodhisattvas, great beings, equal in number to the finest dust particles of ninety-nine Mount Merus.

At that time, through the power and blessing of the Tathāgata, that divine palace of the king of gods became adorned in magnificent splendor: with multistoried pavilions of precious jewels, with great crowning jewels of precious gems, with silken banners shimmering in every brilliant hue, with pennants, parasols, victory banners, canopies, garlands of ornaments of every precious substance, lattices and half-lattices, peacock-feather fans, bunches of flowers, bells, and silk streamers stirred by the wind — and further such adorning arrangements, so that it was beautiful on every side, like a full and perfect lunar disk.

The Teacher, the Blessed One, possessing supreme and distinguished forms of the pledged wisdom consecrated by the vajra blessing of all the Tathāgatas, having received empowerment as king of Dharma in the three realms by means of the jeweled crown of all the Tathāgatas, perfectly consummate as the great lord of great yoga endowed with the omniscient wisdom of all the Tathāgatas, having fully understood the mudrā-Dharma of the equality of all phenomena — the seal of all the Tathāgatas, performing the various wondrous activities of all the Tathāgatas, the great Vairocana, whose very nature is great compassion, ever abiding in the three times in the vajra equality of the body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas, fulfilling without exception the hopes of the entire realm of sentient beings — he took upon himself what all the Tathāgatas had praised and extolled, and what all the Tathāgatas had beseeched him to do, namely: to turn the wheel of Dharma.

Furthermore, gathered from the world-systems in all ten directions, there were Tathāgatas as numerous as the grains of sand in the river Ganges — like Jambudvīpa filled to the brim with sesame seeds. From each and every one of those Tathāgatas there shone forth immeasurable and uncountable Tathāgata pure land appearances.

In all those buddha fields as well, this very gateway of Dharma — supremely secret, transcending duality, equal in all things, victorious — was taught.

Then at that time, Vajrapāṇi, called the Great Vajra-Holder, who dwells perfectly within the mind of all the Tathāgatas, who brings to full accomplishment the conduct of all the Tathāgatas, who upholds the enlightened body-activity of all the Tathāgatas, and who brings to complete fulfillment the innermost intention of all the Tathāgatas — he, abiding in the yoga that holds fast to and preserves the Dharma of his own family, caused his own body to become invisible in the midst of that great assembly.

Then all the Tathāgatas of the ten directions, seeing that the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi had become invisible within the assembly, proclaimed with one voice this solemn declaration:

"How wonderful! O Great Vajra-Holder,
You who are the agent of us all —
Now that you have vanished from the midst of this assembly,
O protector, where have you gone?"

Having said this, they all fell silent, abiding in the state of blessing of the supremely indestructible precious vajra, speaking not a word.

Then Vajrapāṇi, the Great Vajra-Holder, arising from the five abodes of all the Tathāgatas, rose up in the body of the Blessed One, the Great Vairocana. He consecrated with blessing the vast solar maṇḍala — the appearance of the minds of all the Tathāgatas manifesting as a great solar disc — extending it to the measure of a thousand leagues, and came to abide at its center.

Then all the Blessed Tathāgatas again assembled and made supplication to the lord of all the Tathāgatas:

"Because you are the vajra-Dharma, excellent are you!
Because you are the vajra-eye, excellent are you!
Because you are the vajra-wisdom, excellent are you!
Because you are the wisdom of the buddhas, excellent are you!"

And so it continues in the same manner.

Then all the Blessed Tathāgatas prostrated to the Blessed One, the Great Vajra-Holder, and addressed him thus:

"You who act for the benefit of all the buddhas —
We, the protectors of sentient beings, make this request:
O lord of all, please teach the way of the Great Vehicle,
the supreme path of the highest vehicle."

Then the Blessed Vajrapāṇi spoke to all the Tathāgatas:

"O Blessed Tathāgatas, do not say such things. All the Tathāgatas have already proclaimed, in definitive terms, the way of the supreme suchness of the highest joy."

"But why, O Vajra-Holder, do you proclaim it? Let all the Blessed Tathāgatas consider."

At that very moment, the great bodhisattvas in the vast assembly — Maitreya and the rest — upon hearing this great expression of the supreme meaning of the highest Great Vehicle, fell into a swoon in a thousand different ways. They made supplication to all the Tathāgatas:

"Through your blessing of pacification,
you who bear the form of the buddhas —
O lord, you who are the vajra, suchness itself —
let your blessing pervade all things equally."

Then the Blessed Vajrapāṇi, casting his gaze, bestowed the exclamation of "Excellent!" upon all the Tathāgatas, filled them with the radiance of the great wheel of all the Tathāgatas, and entered into meditative absorption called "Perfectly Rousing the Minds of All the Tathāgatas." The very moment he entered that absorption, four great solar maṇḍalas fully arose.

In the eastern direction there fully and perfectly arose a great solar maṇḍala named "Holder of Inexhaustible Form." In the southern direction there fully and perfectly arose a great solar maṇḍala named "Vajra of the Precious Wish-Fulfilling Jewel." In the western direction there fully and perfectly arose a great solar maṇḍala named "Vajra of Deathlessness." In the northern direction there fully and perfectly arose a great solar maṇḍala named "Vajra of the Pledge of Meaningful Purpose."

Then the Blessed Vajrapāṇi taught the great king of cognitions called "Victorious in Non-Duality, the Equality of All the Tathāgatas and All Bodhisattvas." And likewise, all the Tathāgatas called "Earnestly Engaged in Vajra Conduct" appeared in the ten directions from Vajrapāṇi himself in just the same way — together with their miraculous displays of supremely excellent qualities and the maṇḍala of their retinue endowed with those same qualities — and took their places in the ten directions.

In this way, all the world-systems of what is called the great trichiliocosm became enveloped in the light-rays of the sky's luminosity. The light of all the solar maṇḍalas combined made a radiance that could not be endured even for a single moment of companionship, and yet in that very manner the light of all the Tathāgatas became permeated and suffused with the light of Vajrasattva and pervaded everything everywhere.

Then the Blessed Tathāgatas worshipped Vajrapāṇi completely with clouds of offerings for bodhisattvas and for all the Tathāgatas, aroused him as Samantabhadra, and he abided in a mode of complete silence.

Then Samantabhadra, the great Vajradhara, placing this in his own heart among all the bodhisattvas, entered into equanimity in his own meditative absorption — the cause that, together with the great secret, clarifies the secret of all the Tathāgatas, which is the arousing of this gnosis-lineage — and taught the meditative absorption of the gnosis-lineage:

A square with four sides and four corners,
adorned with four jewels and perfectly complete,
spread throughout with milk and yogurt —
thus properly undertake the meditation.

In its center, a great lotus,
with radiance equal to crystal and moonlight,
endowed with a perfectly luminous maṇḍala —
meditate continuously upon this maṇḍala.

Within those blazing, gathered forms,
visualize the form of the buddha perfectly.
Entirely and perfectly rounded,
contemplate it as twenty cubits across.

One who knows the ritual should, in the center of that,
meditate upon one's own body as virtuous.
Properly undertake the meditation
having abandoned conceptuality of self and what belongs to self.

Through the ritual of the gnosis-lineage,
hold the secret mantra in mind:

Oṃ sarva-tathāgata-jñāna-kula-svabhāvātmako 'ham.

By gathering the equal mudrā through this,
let all misdeeds be utterly abandoned.

First visualize ten thousand light-rays,
and through that purify all defilements.
Through the ritual of the gnosis-lineage,
meditate perfectly upon the king of knowledge.

Fine, blazing white light —
arrange that everywhere.
Make everything into suchness,
and thus meditate.

This was spoken by the Blessed Tathāgatas as the vajra empowerment.

Having made one's own body supremely stable,
through the rituals of the mode of light,
by gathering the form of the buddha together,
the awakening mind of vajra is indicated and aroused.

If one undertakes this properly, knowing the ritual,
the siddhi of that will not be difficult to find.

Having made one's own form perfectly unmoving,
perform the rituals of the vajra awakening mind.
As long as the sky is contemplated,
perform these with joy, knowing the ritual.

With the form of the buddha and one's own form alike,
having made them, through the characteristics of total union —

At the time of the yoga of meditative concentration,
one should fully enter into that which is to be perfected.

One's own form and the form of the buddha —
hold them in mind just as they abide.

Whatever is fitting to apply,
meditate on it as Vajrasattva (the vajra bodhisattva).

The lord of all Tathāgatas,
the Blessed One, declared this:

"The yogin who meditates on their own body
as the blazing garland of shimmering light —
through the very nature of vajra, meditate on that as vajra-inseparable.

Having fully emitted the five lights, perfectly cultivate the awakening mind.

At the heart center,
make offerings to all buddhas."

The lord of all Tathāgatas,
the Blessed One, declared this:

"Contemplate the five maṇḍalas.

Having filled them with the gathered forms of the buddhas,
and having cultivated the mantras,
make them like reflected images of the buddha forms,
and meditate on the very nature of one who meditates.

Contemplate one's own form there as well.
Through the ritual of arousing conceptual thought,
at the mind center also cultivate the awakening mind —
from that, yoga arises in the one who meditates.
Adorned with Vajrasattva,
through knowing the ritual, draw it forth.
And there also, in Vajrasattva,
perfectly visualize the form of the buddha.
Through knowing the ritual, perfectly visualize
the form of the buddha in the subtle syllables.
And in each and every syllable,
perfectly visualize the form of the buddha.
Together with those forms and the two syllables,
equally contemplate one's own form in union.
In the manner of the solar maṇḍala,
the wise one should contemplate their own form.
For as long as the sky has expanse,
let it be spread to pervade this field.
In the manner of the solar maṇḍala,
perfectly cultivate the vajra yoga.
In the applications:
perfectly visualize the form of the buddha.
In the manner of the solar maṇḍala,
let it radiate into this world-realm.
For as long as the sky has expanse,
let it be spread to pervade this field.
In the manner of the lunar maṇḍala,
from the cultivation of the solar maṇḍala,
through the manner of the solar maṇḍala,
perfectly visualize the form of the buddha.
Having perfectly visualized the form of the buddha,
contemplate the lunar maṇḍala.
In the manner of the lunar maṇḍala,
perfectly visualize the form of the buddha."
O King of Dharma,
through the rituals of the lotus yoga,

examine all meditations.

From the complete holding of meditation and the like,
there is no worship to be done other than that.

Having perfectly visualized the form of the buddha
with a mind made utterly stable and firm,
perfectly generate the awakening mind
and continuously meditate on one's own nature.

This is the peaceful mode of vajra.

Light equal to the four sharp ones —
having perfectly visualized Vajrasattva,
through knowing the ritual, fill it completely.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Samantabhadra.

Then Samantabhadra, the great Vajradhara, was drawn forth from the mind of all the bodhisattvas. Then those great bodhisattvas, having filled the entire expanse of space, perfectly made offerings to all the bodhisattvas with clouds of offering, and remained continuously present in a state of prostration before the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara.

Then all the Tathāgatas gathered together once more and perfectly made offerings to the great bodhisattva Samantabhadra with great clouds of offerings to all the Tathāgatas, and prostrated. Fully entering into the vajra of awakening mind, they completely filled everything with the light rays of all the Tathāgatas, and those rays of light perfectly stirred the true source of all the Tathāgatas.

Then Samantabhadra, the great Vajradhara, having firmly established all the Tathāgatas, consecrated his own form as the form of Vairocana, which is the cause that expands this family of wisdom. With the light rays of the appearance of his own form he drew forth the chapter on the meditative absorption of the family of wisdom, the essential samaya of all the Tathāgatas.

Accomplishing all of that very suchness,
through the defining marks of unified concentration,
one who knows the rite should undertake it with full resolve.
This is the pure way of suchness.

Contemplate the supreme solar maṇḍala
as measuring one thousand cubits.
In the center of the lunar maṇḍala,

meditate upon the syllable VAM̐.

Perfectly round on all sides,
conceive it as roughly thumb-high.
One who knows the rite, regarding that which blazes,
should meditate upon it in its various and diverse colors.

From that, true blazing arises.
Then visualize the form of a buddha.
In all directions, the syllable OM̐
should be conceived in various and diverse colors.

By meditating in turn on Vairocana and the rest,
one who knows the rite should bring them into being.
In the center of the solar maṇḍala,
meditate upon the lunar maṇḍala.

Contemplating oneself in that,
from the rite that generates joy,
at the center of the heart, with fine needle-point,
on the stainless lunar maṇḍala,
with forms of the fine syllables of mantra,
contemplate each one in the mind.

Perfectly unite the radiance of OM̐
with the blazing garland of equal light.
Through the defining marks of the form of a buddha and so forth,
one who knows the rite should cause them to issue forth.

In all the forms of buddhas,
meditating on the lunar maṇḍala —
from the rite for generating buddhas —
one should apply it to one's own form in that way.

From the rite performed at the vajra-heart,
five suns are to be arrayed.
The mantrin should meditate on the lunar maṇḍala visualized upon the forehead.

Meditate on the blazing radiance of equal light
as the form of a buddha.
Passing progressively beyond the world-realms,

one should then draw them back into it again.

By what exceeds the measure of a cubit,
meditating on the lunar maṇḍala,
Vajrasattva is perfectly generated.
Meditate on it as one's own very form.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Samantabhadra.
This is the meditative absorption called Victorious in the Family of Wisdom.

In the center of the solar maṇḍala,
meditate with virtue on one's own form.
To the side, place Vairocana,
and meditate upon Vajrasattva.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

One who knows the rite should contemplate
sixteen forms in four colors.
At the heart center and throughout all of them,
meditate upon those deities.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajradhara.

To conquer obstructing forces in one's own form,
meditate upon it steadfastly in the mind.
Having emitted the syllable HŪṂ with the out-breath, direct the light rays forth fully.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, all the Tathāgatas.

Light equal to one's own form and so forth
is instantly transformed into the deity.
Through the measure of the syllables,
meditate upon the form of VAM.

The mantrin at the center, by means of the syllable itself,
having applied it, should undertake all activities.
The mantrin should recollect from the forehead
down as far as the navel.

Here ends the first chapter, the chapter on arrangement, from the Great Tantra of the Non-Dual Equality, the Victorious One.

Meditate upon the great lotus
to the measure of a chariot-wheel.
In the center of the solar maṇḍala,
meditate upon the stalk of that lotus.

Generate perfectly the karma-vajra,
and meditate upon it as one's own form.
Through deep meditation on the karma-vajra,
one becomes equal to Vajrasattva.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

Having made use of milk and yogurt,
meditate on the lotus at the center.
Making one's own form like a buddha,
the skilled one should meditate on one's own form.

Fill the element of space entirely,
and then apply that very suchness once again.
Having blended milk and yogurt together,
the light of variegated colors equally arrayed,
in the manner of a lunar maṇḍala,
meditate upon the solar maṇḍala.
One whose own form equals a buddha —
let the skilled practitioner in ritual procedure draw it forth.

Meditate on one's own form everywhere,
visualizing gods and the like throughout.
When one has gone beyond the measure of a cubit,
meditate upon the solar maṇḍala.

Having acted as one who vanquishes all obstructors,
let this be spread throughout the world-realm.
Contemplating one's own mudrā at the heart,
at the center of the solar maṇḍala —
knowing the ritual procedure in the manner of a buddha, meditate upon a maṇḍala of light.
Bestowing the syllable at its center,
let this be spread throughout the world-realm here.
Having made it possess the capacity to tame beings and so forth,
apply it once again to that very suchness.

When one has gone beyond the measure of a cubit,
meditate upon the lunar maṇḍala.
Perfectly generate the vajra-sword,
and traverse the world-realm in its entirety.
The radiance of the white lotus blazes forth,
adorned entirely with bodhicitta.
At the center, place the form of one's own deity;
at the sides, place the consort.
Thus grasp it through knowing the ritual procedure,
and introduce one's own vajra into it.
Throughout all world-realms,
worship with that very buddha-suchness.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Samantabhadra.

For as long as genuine attainment through joining arises,
the mantra practitioner should again gather it in.
When one has gone beyond the measure of a full span,
meditate upon the solar maṇḍala.
Having made one's own form extremely stable,
visualize gods and the like.
Bestowing the mantra syllable at the heart,
worship all buddhas.

When one has gone beyond seven spans in measure,
meditate upon the four maṇḍalas.
Abiding at the center of the deity's form,
meditate upon that at the heart.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasamaya.

Making one's own form into what is called the eye,
meditate upon buddhas in full.
At the very heart and throughout everything,
let the skilled one meditate on one's own form.
There, in the manner of an essence,
meditate fully upon the bodhisattva's yoga.

When one has gone beyond the measure of an arrow-shot,
meditate fully upon the form of a buddha.
Fill the sky with that form,
and from the essences generate perfectly.

When one has gone beyond the measure of an arrow-shot,
meditate upon the maṇḍala of clarity.

Having firmly established one's own yoga,
meditate upon the perfect yoga of the buddha.

When one has gone beyond the measure of an arrow-shot,
meditate fully upon bodhicitta.

Having perfectly generated the deity,
meditate fully upon the mantra syllables.

When one has gone beyond the measure of a full span,
meditate in the manner of a lotus.

Having made one's own body immaculate,
meditate upon the maṇḍala of clarity.

Having firmly established the center of that,
meditate upon one's own form from the very beginning.

Visualize fully the five lotuses
along with their garlands of blazing white light.

At the center of that, place one's own form;
at the sides, place the consort.

One's own seminal essence and the rest arise,
and let the skilled practitioner in ritual procedure spread it forth.

Meditating upon the element of space filled entirely with the forms of buddhas,
having made one's own form like a sword,
place it at the hearts of all.

Apply one's own form in perfect union with a buddha,
proceeding in sequence through the defining marks and so forth.

As a bodhisattva, meditate fully upon the element of space filled perfectly.

Apply one's own form with the perfect noose,
and place the form of the all-pervading buddha.

For as long as it remains within the maṇḍala of space,
draw it in through knowing the ritual procedure.

Apply one's own form in perfect union with a buddha,
and meditate fully upon bodhicitta.

Apply mantra syllables and so forth,

and swiftly meditate upon that manifestation.

Generate bodhicitta perfectly,
adorned with blazing rays of light.
One's own form equal to a buddha —

Draw it in through knowing the ritual procedure.
Upon that very form of oneself, let form come to rest,
with radiance equal to a blazing garland of light —
this is called the Eye, the one that delights the mind.
Draw it in through knowing the ritual procedure.
Dwelling in the center of the lunar maṇḍala,
place the Eye perfectly at the heart.
Through knowing the ritual procedure, with rays of light, introduce Vajrasattva fully therein.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva of all the Tathāgatas.

Within the swift maṇḍala of one's own form,
generate Vajrasattva perfectly.
Unite fully in the divine form.
Diligent meditation is not other than this.

In the center of the solar maṇḍala,
generate Vajrasattva perfectly.
With the form of the iron hook, the noose, and so forth, having done so, draw the disciple fully in.

Generate Vajrasattva perfectly.
Place one's own form perfectly at the heart.
Having placed it so, with the hands and the rest,
then commence the count precisely.
Recitation and so forth, or what is to be consumed —
let the intelligent one do accordingly.
Practitioners shall perform continuous recitation.
Otherwise, accomplishment will simply not occur.

By the pledge of all the Blessed Tathāgatas, thus was it spoken.

Generate one's own form perfectly.
In the center, meditate upon one's own family.
And finally, for the destruction of enemies and obstructors,

meditate upon the essence there.

Through the ritual procedure of these,
the sequential order of the ritual — meditation and so forth —
in the manner of the solar maṇḍala,
meditate fully upon the king of awareness.

Meditate in the form of a wrathful one,
blazing with a garland of flames, a churning conflagration.
Recite that very color as it truly is.
Recite that very suchness as the ultimate.
Contemplate that very suchness with that very suchness.
Otherwise, accomplishment will not occur.

By all the Blessed Tathāgatas, thus did Samantabhadra speak.

Having made a maṇḍala of one's own form,
in the center, with radiance equal to blazing fire,
throughout all world-realms everywhere,
knowing that very suchness, place it at the heart.
Upon that, generate oneself perfectly.
Commence upon its very intrinsic nature.

With one's own form dwelling in the center of a lotus,
with radiance equal to Vairocana and the rest,
having formed a syllable at the heart,
meditate fully upon Vajrasattva.

In the assembly of Vajrasattva,
meditate fully in the form of a buddha.
Generate perfectly in the manner of awareness,
and all accomplishments shall be obtained.

Therefore, for the mantra practitioner, the supreme shall be the excellent mode of awareness.

By all the Blessed Tathāgatas, thus did Vajrasattva speak.

The practice of making everything suchness:
in the center of the solar maṇḍala,
contemplate the form as Vairocana,
and meditate fully upon the mantra at the heart.
Recollect that very suchness in the mantra.

From the ritual of the mode of awareness,
with the mind of the master filled with delight,
draw it in through knowing the ritual procedure.

At the hearts and throughout all things,
meditate upon the lunar maṇḍala.
Generate one's own form perfectly,
and upon it meditate upon the sword and so forth.
Generate perfectly through knowing the ritual procedure.
Meditate fully upon the five blazing forms.
Recognize form and color completely,
and send these forth throughout world-realms.

By all the Blessed Tathāgatas, thus did the Eye speak.

This is the second chapter, the chapter on the meditative absorption of the wisdom family, from the Great King of Tantras, the Great Royal Tantra of Thought Victorious in Non-Dual Equality.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, dwelling in the lunar maṇḍala of all the Tathāgatas, blessed it with the form of Vairocana, and they too were established in their own forms within those great assembled maṇḍalas.

Through the meditative absorption of the condensed family,
the Blessed One bestowed the chapters of instruction.
Meditating upon milk and curds,
along with the four noble pledges,
in the center, the mantra practitioner meditates upon the utpala lotus — let one not contemplate otherwise.
Perfectly unite the wisdom maṇḍala.

Above that, one meditates upon the various forms.
Perfectly generate the wrathful form.
Meditate upon the perfect union of rays of light.
There, in the gatherings of rays of light,
meditate upon Vajrasattva.
One who knows the ritual places one's own form perfectly in the center and meditates upon it.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Samayavajra.

Oṃ sarva-tathāgata-jñāna-svabhāvātmako 'haṃ.

By means of this king of secret mantras,
one should completely abandon one's own conceptual thought.
Having declared "my own form is the syllable Hūṃ,"
one then meditates upon it in every respect.
One who knows the ritual should, in those as well,
contemplate the syllable Ha as the ultimate end.
Light equal in nature to one's own form and so forth —
the deity transforms in that instant.
Perfectly unite the luminous maṇḍala.
Meditate upon it at the heart center.
One who knows the ritual, seeing the rite,
should meditate upon the syllable of the secret mantra.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Samayavajra.

What is to be perfectly applied at the five places —
meditate upon it at the five points.

At every syllable of the mantra,
meditate upon Vajrasattva.

Having meditated upon the forms of the buddhas,
one who knows the ritual should emanate them.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the chief son of all the Tathāgatas.

One should meditate upon one's own form in the manner of a bodhisattva, meditating upon the signs of a bodhisattva.

Throughout all the buddha fields,
one who knows the ritual should emanate them.

One should meditate upon one's own form in the manner of a bodhisattva
at the heart center of the deity.

Draw forth that form of the buddha
and emanate it into this world realm.

One's own form, called gnosis,
is adorned with a blazing garland.
Drawing that forth as bodhicitta,
one emanates this into the world realm.

What is called one's own form shines with light equal to a blazing garland.
Through the rays of light of one's own form,
meditate upon it pervading this field.

Having fashioned one's own form with a hook,
place it in the hand of one's own form.
One who knows the ritual should draw it in
and fully introduce it into the form of the buddha.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the lord of all the Tathāgatas.

In the manner of form, visualize one's own form
as the syllables of the secret mantra.
Having meditated upon Vajrasattva,
one who knows the ritual should emanate.
As bodhicitta, one's own form —
meditate upon it by meditating upon suchness itself.
Perfectly generate the obstacle-makers within the mantra
and also emanate them into the world realm.
That which is ugly, fierce, and terrifying —
draw forth that enemy of obstacle-makers.
Drawing that forth as bodhicitta,
emanate it into this world realm.

One's own form, dwelling in the center of the sun,
adorned with blazing sharp flames —
the karma-vajra, supremely beautiful:
one who knows the ritual should draw it forth.
Perfectly generate the first yoga.
With a thoroughly stable and firm mind,
one who closely sees the ritual
should properly begin the first yoga.

Contemplating one's own form as a grove of utpala lotuses,
endowed equally with multicolored rays of light,
perfectly unite it with the form of the deity
and meditate above that.

For as long as the maṇḍala of space endures,
the mantra practitioner emanates throughout the three worlds.
Perfectly generate the form of the buddha — exceedingly beautiful, of white color.
Dwelling in the center of the lunar maṇḍala,
meditate upon it as joyful and pleasing.
Perfectly apply the form of a pinnacle,

and always meditate upon it through the ritual.

As taught beginning with Vajrasattva,
in whatever way is fitting, the piṭuka —
one's own form, brilliant with blazing light, perfectly adorned with Māmakī and the rest:
perfectly generate Vajrasattva
and also emanate throughout the three worlds.
Perfectly generate the vajra-gnosis.

Through perfectly practicing the union of the wrathful ones,
with one's own form blazing with equal radiance,
the skilled one who knows the ritual should emanate it.
Dwelling in the center of a solar maṇḍala,
the skilled one should meditate upon one's own form.
The great five-pointed vajra
should also be emanated throughout the world-realm.
Perfectly generate the form of the wrathful one,
adorned with the syllables of its own mantra.
Meditate perfectly upon it in the form of a buddha.
The skilled one who knows the ritual should meditate perfectly upon it in the manner of the light-rays of the wheel-deity.

Thus spoke the Blessed One in his vajra nature.

One's own form, in the manner of the wheel,
is perfectly adorned with a blazing garland.
One's own form, equal to a buddha —
the skilled one who knows the ritual should raise it up.
One's own form, in the manner of the wheel,
adorned with rays of light like sword-flashes,
the blazing garland, vivid and stirring —
it radiates outward in all directions.

Dwelling in the center of the lotus, within the heart,
it is perfectly adorned with the brahmin Brahmā.
Perfectly generate the awakening mind,
and upon it place the syllables of the mantra.
Conceiving the essence as an utpala flower,
perfectly adorned with multicolored rays of light,

the skilled one who knows the ritual should meditate
upon the awakening mind, and then meditate upon the three mantras.

At the center of the heart there is a fine needle-like point radiating light equal to the indranīla gem.

Generating the full union of wisdom-gnosis,
meditate upon it in the form of a buddha.

One's own form, dwelling at the center of that fine point,
is light of equal blazing in manifold colors.

Conceiving the syllable at the essence,
meditate upon one's own form there.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, Vajra-gnosis.

Meditating upon the subtle maṇḍala
that extends beyond a cubit's measure —
having also made one's own form into a syllable, meditate perfectly upon it as a blazing vajra.

Extending beyond a cubit's measure,
meditating upon the gnosis maṇḍala —
perfectly generate the form at the center,
and having contemplated it, begin the recitation.

Extending beyond a cubit's measure,
meditating upon the solar maṇḍala —
perfectly generate Vajrasattva,
and having contemplated it, begin the recitation.

Extending beyond a cubit's measure,
meditating upon the Dharma maṇḍala —
perfectly generating and conceiving
the obstructors as enemies, begin the recitation in all cases.

Extending beyond an arm's length,
meditating upon the gnosis maṇḍala —
conceiving the form of Vairocana, emanate this throughout the world-realm.

Extending beyond an arm's length,
meditating upon the lotus maṇḍala —
perfectly generate the form at the center,
and meditate perfectly upon the buddhas at the sides.

Extending beyond an arrow's range,
meditating upon the subtle maṇḍala —
perfectly generate the form at the center,
and emanate it throughout this world-realm.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the Vajra-bearer.

Extending beyond an arrow's range,
meditating upon the lunar maṇḍala —
perfectly generate the form of a buddha,
and place the consorts at the sides.

All of the consorts everywhere —
meditate perfectly upon the five rays of light.
With these pleasing flowers, the skilled one who knows the ritual should make offering.
Conceiving a cloud of captivating fragrance and the rest,
make offering to the buddhas.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, Vajra-eye.

The skilled one who knows the ritual
should conceive the consort as if golden-hued.
The assembly of the sons of the buddhas gathered — generate the yoga and meditate upon it.
Arrange it according to the manner of drawing it up,
and meditate upon Vajrasattva.
Perfectly generate Vajrasattva
and meditate upon the distinctions of the families.
Extending beyond an arrow's range,
meditate perfectly upon the subtle gnosis.
One's own form, in the manner of form,
should be placed and meditated upon perfectly at the center.
The skilled one who knows the ritual should meditate
upon the five aspects at the tip of the vajra.
White is spoken of as the foremost family of gnosis.
Black is recalled as the gathered family.
Red is to be known as the lotus family.
Yellow is recalled as the desire family.
The beautiful form, brilliantly luminous —

adorned with varied ornaments from the family, having fully caused the lotus to bloom,
insert one's own vajra into that.

The Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke these words.

Thus, one who is endowed with this practice
will find it difficult to obtain that gnosis.
Having made one's own form exceedingly stable,
enter fully into diligent meditative concentration.
When the beautiful, joyful one is beheld,
one becomes endowed with form.
By merely seeing the queen,
one will drink — of this there is no doubt here.
Meditate, perfectly envisioning Vajrasattva
as filling this field completely.
Having stabilized the form of the buddha,
let it fall fully by means of the vajra.

The Blessed One, the inseparable three vajras, spoke these words.

This completes the third chapter, the chapter on the meditative absorption on the condensed families, from the Great King of Tantras, the Transcendent Victor over Conceptuality, Non-Dual Equality.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi taught the chapter on the meditative absorption on the Dharma family.

In the manner of the great maṇḍala,
let suchness be performed throughout all.
The one who knows the ritual should earnestly commence meditation upon the Dharma maṇḍala.
Through the defining characteristics of the Dharma's union,
conceptual thought should be entirely abandoned.
Having stated the divisions of secret mantra,
meditate upon all yogas fully.

Oṃ sarva-tathāgata-dharma-jñāna-svabhāva-ātmako 'haṃ.

The yoga of the great samaya —
the one who knows the ritual recites it perfectly.
All entities are perfectly generated;
the non-entity itself is not the object of meditation.

The Blessed One, the Lord of the World (Avalokiteśvara), spoke these words.

The one possessed of intelligence should contemplate the lotus,
with light matching the power of a ruby's hue.

That which is to be contemplated in that maṇḍala — meditate upon it perfectly at the center in a reflected image.
Perfectly generate the king of awareness,
with light resembling a garland of flames ablaze.
In that gathering of blazing fire,
meditate upon the Lord of the World fully.

The Blessed One, the Lord of the World, spoke these words.

Fill the expanse of space entirely,
and then gather it again back into suchness.
Dwelling at the center of a moon disk within one's own form,
light matching varied colors —
having meditated upon this at the heart center, meditate upon the secret mantra on the tongue.
Dwelling at the center of that very own form,
adorned with the wisdom of the buddhas,
perfectly generate the Lord of the World
and radiate him forth into this world-realm.
Perfectly generate the king of awareness.
At the center of the lotus maṇḍala,
having perfectly meditated upon the Lord of the World,
fill all of space with form.
At the center of the Dharma maṇḍala,
having perfectly meditated upon the Lord of the World,
perfectly generate Vajrasattva
and radiate him forth into this world-realm.

The Blessed One Samantabhadra spoke these words.

At the center of the Dharma maṇḍala,
perfectly generate Vajrasattva.
According to what is proper, in five stations,
place the all-pervading Lord of the World.

The Blessed One, the Lord of the World, spoke these words.

At the slender filament at the heart's center —
that is the supreme Dharma maṇḍala.

Having perfectly generated within that Dharma, radiate it forth into this world-realm.

At the slender filament at the heart's center —
that is the stainless Dharma maṇḍala.

Having meditated fully upon that lotus,
and having meditated upon the form of the buddha, meditate upon the Lord of the World
throughout all buddha forms.

The Blessed One, the Dharma Bearer, spoke these words.

At the slender filament at the heart's center —
that is the supreme Dharma maṇḍala.

Having meditated perfectly upon the five buddhas,
meditate likewise in that very way.

At the slender filament at the navel's center —
that is the supreme Dharma maṇḍala.

Having meditated upon one's own form and so forth,
one should generate it through the rite one knows.

Beyond the measure of a cubit —
at the center of the Dharma maṇḍala,
one makes offerings in this world-realm
in due sequence through the rite one knows.

The Blessed One, the Dharma Bearer, spoke these words.

Beyond the measure of an arrow's flight —
meditating upon the Dharma maṇḍala,
by meditating upon the supreme Lord of the World,
one should meditate upon one's own form.

Beyond the measure of an arrow's flight —
meditating upon the lotus maṇḍala,
having placed consorts at the sides,
one should make offering of the buddha's form.
By means of the mode of the luminous maṇḍala,
meditating upon the Dharma maṇḍala,
one makes offerings throughout all world-realms
through the rite one knows.

By means of the mode of the luminous maṇḍala,
one meditates upon the wheel maṇḍala.
Having made the solar maṇḍala supreme,
one should array one's own form there.
The mantra practitioner, ascending in due order,
reciting "filling all of space" —
having meditated upon five lotuses
with the equal radiance of ruby-red,
one should meditate, through the rite one knows,
upon one's own form perfectly abiding at the center.
The buddha's form, arising as the all-source,
one should meditate upon in the east.
In the south, having designated it "the gathered,"
one should rightly undertake the yoga.
In the west, having made it the Dharma Bearer,
in the north it is called the arising of desire.
The wheel is spoken of as the family of wisdom.
The sword is understood as the family of Dharma.
The vajra is known as the gathered family.
The trident is explained as the family of desire.
Having filled all the expanse of space,
the all-pervading Dharma Bearer perfectly generates a sword in hand —
with one's own form one should vanquish.
Having vanquished through desire offerings,
one who knows the rite of the dharmadhātu perfectly generates a spear in hand —
with one's own form one should reduce to dust.
By means of the mode of the luminous maṇḍala,
one repels the family of wisdom.
By means of the mode of the wisdom maṇḍala,
one causes the gathered family to fall utterly.
By means of the mode of the Dharma maṇḍala,
one causes the family of Dharma to fall decisively.
By means of the mode of the lunar maṇḍala,
one causes the great family to fall decisively.
By means of the mode of the solar maṇḍala,

one causes all families to fall without exception.

The Blessed One, the Vajra Bearer, spoke these words.

This was the meditative absorption of the Dharma maṇḍala in the great tantra called "The Great Tantra of Conquest Through Nondual Equality." Chapter Four is complete.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, having settled all those Tathāgatas upon his own great vajra, and having caused those belonging to the family of wisdom and so forth to enter fully and become firmly established in the manner of the great wisdom maṇḍala — abiding in those great maṇḍalas in the aspect of his own form, and joining the great form to the form of the great deva — spoke this meditative absorption of the family of desire:

In accordance with the mode of the great maṇḍala,
all things should be done precisely thus.

One should begin correctly through the rite one knows —
it is not to be meditated upon in any other way.

By means of the rite of the family of desire,
one should recall the awareness mantra:

Om kāmajñānasvabhāvaātmako 'ham.

Having recited it correctly as is fitting,
one should rightly undertake this yoga.

One should perfectly generate a great lotus
with the radiance equal to a karnikāra blossom.

Having made that itself the maṇḍala,
one should array one's own form there.

Having generated all forms as desire offerings,
one should emanate these into the world-realm.

One's own form, in the manner of desire offerings,
fills all of space with form.

One should truly press down Brahmā's form,
adorned throughout with blazing variegated flames.

Having generated all forms as desire offerings,
one should emanate these into the world-realm.

One who knows the ritual should meditate on the three forms one by one.
Thus spoke the Blessed One through desire offerings.

Beyond the measure of one cubit,
one should perfectly meditate on the great lotus.
With Brahmā's form in this existence,
one who knows the ritual should emanate it.

Beyond the measure of one hundred cubits,
one should perfectly meditate on the great lotus.
One should truly draw forth the form of desire offerings
and meditate on that very buddha.

Beyond the measure of eight hundred cubits,
one should perfectly meditate on the great lotus.
One should perfectly generate the form of Viṣṇu
and meditate there on the buddha and the rest.

One should perfectly generate the form of a buddha
and emanate it with Brahmā's form.
One should perfectly generate the form of Dharma
and emanate it with the form of Viṣṇu.

Having stabilized oneself in the bodhisattva's form,
with forms equal to desire offerings,
one who knows the ritual should emanate these throughout all the world-realms.

Beyond the measure of one cubit,
while perfectly meditating with Brahmā's form,
one should perfectly generate these at the heart and meditate on them as the form of a buddha.

One who knows the ritual should meditate on the form of a buddha, meditating on form within form.
Thus spoke the Blessed One through desire offerings.

Beyond the measure of one cubit,
meditating perfectly on the form of Viṣṇu,
having perfectly generated all these at the heart,
one should meditate on them as the form of a buddha.

Among all the forms of buddhas,
forms equal to desire offerings,
adorned with elegant ornaments —
one who knows the ritual should draw these forth.

For as long as one is truly engaged in form,
for that long one becomes a queen.
Thus spoke the Blessed One through desire offerings.

Having generated form in the manner of the family maṇḍala,
one should meditate upon it.
One who knows the ritual should begin with the first union;
one should meditate in meditative equipoise.

Having filled the entire space of the sky,
a skilled one should contemplate it thus,
offer a prayer in the form of recitation,
and, having settled in equipoise, let it descend.

One who knows the ritual should present the divine form,
the form equal to the light of a buddha,
through mantra as is fitting.
Otherwise it will not be accomplished.

One who knows the ritual should meditate on the divine form — goddess and god — as one's own form.
Otherwise, the vajrasattvas,
arising from the rite in white and other colors,
adorned with elegant ornaments,
through the manner of the keen form of oneself —
one who knows the ritual should, having made that goddess, meditate on the thing to be indicated.

One who knows the ritual, through vajra and lotus
and all union with the rite of the elements,
having generated all forms of the family,
offers that with one's own regenerative fluid.
The Victor, born of the lotus, the deity of the family —
otherwise it cannot be accomplished.

The deity of the lineage spoken of as belonging to Vajrapāṇi — that very deity cannot be accomplished otherwise.

From the very beginning through to the very end,
this should be performed in four sessions.
The Victor, born of the lotus, born of the vajra —
otherwise it is not accomplished.

Having generated all forms of the Mātṛkā,
with light equal to rays of varied light,
one should emanate one's own form in the manner of desire offerings throughout the three realms as well.

Forms equal to desire offerings —
one should truly combine these into the four sisters.
In accordance with the defining mark of form,
one should speak while resting in meditative equipoise.

Having perfectly meditated on Brahmā's form
equal to a yellow karnikāra blossom, one who knows the ritual should make it the form of a buddha and then meditate on that supremely.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the holder of vajra and Dharma.

This concludes the fifth chapter, the chapter on the meditative absorption of the desire family, from the great king of tantras called the Tantra of the Great King of Reasoning of Non-dual Equality Triumphant.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, having settled all the Tathāgatas within their own maṇḍalas, entered into meditative absorption in his own samādhi.

This chapter on the supreme wisdom of the sacred pledge of all attainments (siddhi) is declared from the Great Tantra of Reasoning of Non-dual Equality Triumphant.

For the wise, with respect to all desires,
conceptual activity is simply not to be.
Bringing down all buddhas
is simply not something the mind should be reproached for.

By the defining marks of joy and strife,
though one deceives all the buddhas
and elsewhere says to me, "I am a god,"
that is simply not a state of mind to be maintained.

Whatever is the substance of all the buddhas,
the quality of non-arising comes forth.
When the mind has been made utterly stable,
one should meditate fully on the queen and the rest.

Mistress of the three worlds,
she is known as the great knowledge-consort (vidyā), famed as the eye.
Taking her as one's queen,
one should enjoy her fully and constantly.

One who knows the ritual should properly begin to subdue the wisdom family together.
The work of subduing the virtue of living beings
should be performed at all times.

In attachment, through attachment, one should apply oneself.
Concerning the Dharma family, this should always be done.
Concerning the desire-offering family, which is alike,
one should speak untruth at all times.
Let each apply this in the same way to all;
otherwise accomplishment simply does not occur.

Having fully meditated on the form of a buddha,
one should meditate on that very form at the heart.
Everything should be made exactly as it is.
Otherwise those things will not be transformed.

By subduing the wisdom family,
one takes birth among those in the joyful realm (Tuṣita).
By fully meditating on the Dharma family,
one comes to be born in the realm of bliss (Sukhāvatī).

By the divisions of the Dharma family and the rest,
what is called "the gathering" becomes renowned.
By subduing the desire-offering family,
one arises in the three realms and beyond.

Through one who has a body, one who is free of body
and without a dwelling comes to dwell.
From that face, with brilliant splendour,
all phenomena come to be born.

Thus spoke the lord of all the Blessed One Tathāgatas:

To the very limits of the realm of sentient beings,
I, firm as a vajra,
properly engage to liberate beings from existence.
This should be proclaimed by the words of the buddhas.

From this, the source of all virtue and wisdom,
through these modes of buddha Dharma,
the true gathering of bodhisattvas arises.
Otherwise it is simply not something to be worshipped.

The skillful means of the Perfection of Wisdom,
having gathered all great wisdom,
should always be applied to the mind.
The gathering of Dharma will be obtained.

The awakening mind is the great mind.
The vajra and the rest are simply not its defining marks.
Likewise, all this wisdom,
gathered from every essence,
is in this gathered perfection
shown as the queen of the buddhas.
Those ones will attain buddhahood.

With those characteristics of complete union,
one offers sounds, fragrances, tastes, and the rest
to the fullest extent of one's ability.
In one's own form, through the manner of a buddha,
one should meditate on that in the centre.
Having stirred up blazing rays of light,
one should fully insert them into the heart.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the Dharma-holder.

Through what is called "the gathering," classified as a family,
the great dancer (mahānāṭya) properly arises.
Petition him with wonder,
and intend to bring him to defeat.
Proclaim the state of the great seal (mahāmudrā).
Likewise the four families of humans,
having been established, should be cultivated with proper placement in meditative equipoise, through the method of sacred pledge.

The mind is the supremely extraordinary intrinsic nature
of all sentient beings.

Those who dwell in the sacred pledge of conceptuality should be spoken of as inferior to the births.

Through merit, through merit, that one's body
is either stained or else is not so.
Knowing this as appropriate,
it is simply not something to be meditated upon otherwise.

The lotus, the utpala, and the rest
arise from the mud, truly born, yet unborn.
The defining marks of mind and the rest —
all of that should be known in that very reality.

The awakening mind, by means of steadiness,
embraces even all the buddhas completely.
Born from that very vajra reality,
it is simply not something that arises otherwise.

Through the grounds of sentient beings
it is renowned as that which comes to be accomplished.
And likewise, that which is here most pure
is the great mode of wisdom's iron hook.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra (Skt. Samantabhadra, "All-Good").

This completes the sixth chapter, the supreme chapter on the wisdom of the sacred pledge of all accomplishments, in the Great King of Conceptuality Victorious in All Respects, Equal to the Non-Dual — the great king of tantras.

Then, the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, together with all those Tathāgatas, having arisen with definite resolve, came to abide entirely within the lunar maṇḍala blessed by the great bodhisattvas. Then the great bodhisattva Samantabhadra, having entered into the meditative absorption called "Blessing the Wisdom of the Sacred Pledge of All Vajras," gave forth the great secret teaching accompanied by the generation of the primordial yoga that gathers the wisdom of accomplishment of all sacred pledges. He declared:

Perfectly generate the form of a buddha,
radiant with a light equal to rays of many hues — rays forming its very essence and so forth in this manner — equal to a white wheel.

By the measure of a mustard seed,
perfectly and entirely round on all sides.
On the brow of the mantra practitioner

one should meditate with settled equipoise.

One who knows the rite, for one month,
should expand it in this way from that point onward.
Into the expanse of sky and so forth, to infinite extent, within two months one should cause it to expand and grow.

Covered with jasmine flowers and the like,
one should visualize that maṇḍala in full.
Having seen it with its excellent and outstanding marks,
one should make it clear by expressing its defining characteristics.

Having fully visualized Vajrasattva,
adorned with garlands of blazing flames,
and wherever the maṇḍala and its manner appear —
one should meditate on it to the measure of a grain of barley.

The great vajra with five prongs
one should fully visualize at the tip of the nose.
Like an indranīla sapphire and so forth,
one should visualize it fully in that color.

Covered with utpala flowers and the like,
one should meditate on that maṇḍala.
All of this to be performed exactly comes from the rite of the wisdom family.

One who knows the rite should first generate the Dharma bodhisattva,
and then proceed with this meditation:
having filled the entire expanse of space,
one should then perfectly gather in the light rays.

By the measure of a pine-needle tip,
one should meditate on it joined with a lotus perfectly.
Having fully visualized eight petals
with the radiance of a padmarāga ruby,

one should meditate on it at the heart in the fitting manner —
one should not think of it otherwise.
This is the intent of the meditation:
having discarded both beginning and middle.

Covered with lotus flowers and the like,
one should visualize it fully in that direction.
One who knows the rite should meditate on the bodhisattva of desired offerings, radiant with light.

Having made the three-pronged one, adorned with blazing light-rays, very stable, one who knows the rite should, to the measure of a barley grain, having reflected in this way, meditate on it at the navel.

Karnīkāra and other great flowers,
blazing yellow — one should meditate on these.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Samantabhadra.

In all four yogas altogether,
one should visualize the four aspects fully.
So long as it remains in the expanse of sky,
one who knows the rite should cause it to expand.

Whatever the mantra practitioner — for two months,
four sessions a day, one should meditate.
One should meditate in solitude, in a pleasant place,
apart from ordinary people.

One who observes the discipline should drink butter and milk
when eating fish and meat and such consumable things.
Through deception one becomes lax and fearful.
Thus, one who observes such discipline —
one who knows the rite will thereby see the form of a buddha as an actual reality.

One's own form and consciousness are not to be cognized as such.
Sound is not something to be listened to as such.
In these two aspects, that mind
is not born, and is not repeatedly so.

Whatever is to be meditated upon, one should meditate on it solely as it is; otherwise, those objects do not transform into something other. Through the practice of the luminous maṇḍala and its application, one should generate it and then meditate upon it. Having generated all in the yoga of the sovereign, one should meditate by resting in meditative equipoise. It arises as a phenomenon of the resultant fruit; otherwise, generation simply does not occur.

The Blessed One declared this through the awakening mind.

This is the seventh chapter, entitled "The Gathering of All Primordial Wisdom," from the Great King of Tantras, the Victorious Cognition of Non-dual Equality.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi drew all those Tathāgatas completely into the pores of his own hair follicles, and entered into the meditative absorption called "Blessing That Gives Rise to the Primordial Wisdom of All Vows."

As soon as he had entered that absorption, the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi blessed all those Tathāgatas, consecrating his own form into the form of a woman, and they emerged from the pores of the hair follicles in that very state.

Thereupon, all those queens made complete offerings to that precious great primordial wisdom with every manner of offering arrayed, filling and illuminating the entirety of the expanse of space, and they came to abide within body, speech, and mind.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, uniting his own vajra with the bhaga of all the queens in the manner of perfect union, thereby blessed and consecrated to the full measure of his own form. At that very moment, all the Tathāgatas likewise, to that exact same measure, with the wisdom of the skilled masters of former times, declared the great wisdom vow called "Vajrapāṇi of All Families Blessing the Suchness of the Wisdom of the Vow."

Through the mode of the four maṇḍalas,
one should meditate upon the mantra in the center.
Having made a maṇḍala in the heart,
one should meditate upon Vajrasattva.

The lord of all Tathāgatas, the Blessed One, declared this.

Through the mode of the four maṇḍalas,
one meditates upon Vairocana and the rest.
Having generated all through suchness itself,
one then makes offering to that very suchness.

Through the mode of the four maṇḍalas,
one should contemplate Vajrasattva.
One perfectly generates the form of a buddha
and is said to make offering to it.

Through the mode of the four maṇḍalas,
one meditates upon one's own family and the rest.
Having stabilized the form in the center,
one is said to make offering to it.

Having perfectly generated the eye adorned with a variety of ornaments,
through the mode of the luminous maṇḍala,
one should meditate upon the white common-folk family.

Bearing the characteristics of total union and the rest, perfectly adorned with manifold ornaments,
resembling a blue lotus —
one should always meditate upon Māmakī.

Like a garland of flowers and such in their proper meaning, adorned appropriately as is fitting —
she is renowned as the great Vidyā, the white one;
one should contemplate her as resembling blood.

Excellently adorned with the splendid total union of mind, gathered and ornate —
the auspicious one who is like a lotus:
the mantra practitioner should always contemplate her.

The Blessed One Samantabhadra declared this.

Through the total union of butter and yellow mustard and the like,
one should meditate upon that which is pleasing.
That which performs the union through the mind using alcohol —
while meditating upon that very thing,
in the center of the lunar maṇḍala,
one perfectly generates through one's own mantra.
By means of the one who performs the expulsion, all the rites —
this is to be generated and meditated upon.

With the hand, one grasps the throat and other such places;
the feet are to be joined there to it.
With the defining characteristics of two flowers and so forth —
One should meditate upon inserting one's own vajra.
One perfectly performs the union in the lunar maṇḍala.
The seminal fluid is to be caused to fall there.

Thus did the Blessed One, Vajradhara, declare.

Having filled the entire expanse of space,
one should then meditate upon suchness itself.

With the fourfold flower and so forth, according to the proper method —
it is intended that one performs worship therein.

Through the offering of the five enjoyments,
the master of worship should perform worship through the union of all.
Fragrance, form, taste, and touch —
all of these are bestowed through suchness itself.

The vajra-minds, by the learned one,
together with the generation performed by all the buddhas,
are to be excellently proclaimed for the sake of pleasing and worshipping.
And they are spoken of as being supremely joyful.

By this, the accomplishment of secret mantra —
the practitioners shall be victorious.

For the sake of effecting the illuminating and expanding accomplishment, buddhahood itself and so forth are perfectly attained.

If the nature of reality is unchanging,
this is the nature of reality of the buddhas.
The full grasping of buddhahood itself and so forth —
otherwise it cannot be attained.

Non-virtue of mind is not to be performed;
conduct that is to be condemned is not to be performed.
This is gathered from all the unchanging nature of reality of all the buddhas.

Whoever the other queens may be,
they are to enjoy desirable pleasures.

The union with the solar maṇḍala
is to be worshipped as befits the occasion.
Generosity, moral discipline, and likewise patience —
are also said to be taught as diligence.

This is to be dwelt in with superior ceremony
by the learned mantra practitioner.
One's own mantra is to be perfectly recited
and the union is to be performed as though like the moon.

There, having gathered it into the vajra,
again the mantra practitioner should cause it to be inserted.
At the side, one should meditate upon the jewel
and perform that very act at the seed syllable.

Through the collected colors of those,
one should come to understand the distinctions of the family.
And common to all three families,
the qualities of the Vajrasattva arise.
One should perfectly generate the syllables thereof,
and by diligently taking up meditative concentration upon the insertion,
through the distinctions of activities and so forth,
the defining characteristics of the rites are well renowned.

For the wisdom family, the blue lotus —
it is also renowned to those who know its condensed meaning.
For the family of desirable worship, the lotus —
and it is likewise intended for the Dharma family.

By one who knows the rite, a queen of ten years
is understood for the wisdom family.
She who is to be examined under the term condensed must be of twelve years, endowed with qualities and radiance.

The mantra practitioner should always, with knowledge of Dharma, earnestly take up one who is sixteen years of age.
For all the families of desirable worship,
one who is twenty years old is to be relied upon.

Thus did the Blessed One, the maṇḍala of the pledges of all the Tathāgatas, declare.

As long as the seminal fluid is perfectly gathered,
one who is twelve years of age is to be employed.
In brief, whatever is desired
must be fully endowed with various ornaments, adorned with garlands of flowers and the like —
this is to be performed as is fitting.

Having performed Vairocana and so forth,
one then properly begins the worship.

Through the distinctions of the families, the rites —
sandal and saffron are to be excellently proclaimed.
One who abides at ease and has been made beautiful —
that very maṇḍala should perform that action.
The full act of gathering is to be performed.
If one does not know the distinctions according to their division,
then even buddhahood will not be accomplished.
Thus did the mind of the Blessed One, of all the Tathāgatas, declare.

Seven girls adorned with all marks,
made to be adorned with ornaments,
of the appearance of sixteen years —
as long as they are taken up to eighteen years of age.
Not excessively tall nor short,
not slight, nor born of inferior birth —
an incomparable young woman is to be accomplished.
Otherwise accomplishment will not come.

One who knows the rite should take hold of her and accomplish it through that very means of accomplishment.
In Jambudvīpa, adorned with all the defining characteristics of melodious voice and so forth —
if one accomplishes a sixteen-year-old who knows the rite, accomplishment will come; there is no doubt here.

A maṇḍala measuring four cubits is to be drawn and accomplishment is to be practised upon it continually.

By means of the ritual of vidyā,
the expert should recite five hundred thousand times.
By the measure of lamps and so forth —
otherwise accomplishment will not come.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the buddha Samantaprabha.

In a maṇḍala of one cubit's measure,
perfectly generate Vajrasattva.
The great wrathful one called Amṛta —
bestow him and then begin the actual activities.

One who knows the rite should arrange
the signs there and accomplish it.
Making offerings of incense, flowers, and the like,
one should accomplish it — not otherwise.

By lakes, on pleasant riverbanks,
and in solitary mountain retreats as well,
one who knows the rite, gathering these,
should draw the maṇḍala oneself.

Worship with all precious things
is the worship of Vajrasattva;
that is described as the worship
of the protector Avalokiteśvara.

Passing beyond the first watch,
abiding fully in the second,
the yogin should strive in accomplishment —
and that very suchness will be accomplished.

Arising rightly in the half-watch,
and throughout all the intervals up to five —
blessed by Vajrapāṇi,
the practitioner will always succeed.

Having become like a sovereign of the family,
he moves through all world-realms
with innumerable consorts, by the volume of their conduct,
so as to realise accomplishment.

By his activity, buddhahood itself —
Vajrapāṇi, the source of all things,
as numerous as the dust-motes of Mount Meru —
is what acts for the sake of sentient beings.

This completes the eighth chapter, the chapter on the secret worship, the great sādhana of all samayas, in the great King of Tantras, the Great Royal Tantra of Non-Dual Equality, the Victorious Thought.

Then all the Tathāgatas gathered once again and addressed the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi with these words: "Blessed One, please teach how the practitioners of the great secret mantra samaya called Penetrating the Wisdom of All the Tathāgatas will, through the wisdom of the samaya called the Playful Lion, swiftly awaken to the unsurpassed, perfect, and complete awakening."

Then Vajrapāṇi, lord of all the Tathāgatas, having heard the words of those Tathāgatas, placed his vajra upon his own heart and addressed those Tathāgatas with these words: "Blessed Tathāgatas, why do you say this? Blessed One, there is none who can explain all that the Tathāgatas have definitively set forth. Moreover, Blessed One, for this one the rays of wisdom would shatter into a thousand pieces. Otherwise it would turn dark."

Having done just that, the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi thereupon caused all those Tathāgatas to abide in their own forms upon the lunar disc at the heart and upon the crown of the head of all the Tathāgatas.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi declared the samaya of the secret mantra called Penetrating the Wisdom Samaya:

All the countless beings —
slay them by applying suchness.
In this very life buddhahood
will be attained; of this there is no doubt.

Full assemblies of ten million buddhas — slay them by applying wisdom.
In this very life it will be accomplished;
Vajrasattva will be attained.

By the measure of the great lotus,
crush the heaps of sentient beings.
Dwelling in meditative absorption on the suchness of phenomena,
through destruction accomplishment will be obtained.

One who knows the rite should slay the guide
who destroys by the measure of the lotus.
By meditating on suchness as the desired offering —
— by that, great accomplishment is proclaimed.

The Blessed One, through the purity of essential nature, spoke thus.

Fill the expanse of space to the full;
by that characteristic mark, slay.
That very suchness is buddhahood here —
in this very life alone,
all the varied aspects are obtained.

The mind of sentient beings through ritual
is to be trained again and again.
The identity of slaying and so forth arising — otherwise, attainment will not occur.

The mind of all sentient beings,
luminous as the fourth clarity —
unstained by the various things of substance —
meditate on that suchness spoken of as mind.

One who knows the rite should fully enjoy
the suchness that is the Mother of buddhas.
All virtue arising from secret mantra —
otherwise, accomplishment will not occur.

Let the entire company of mantra-practitioners
extract the supreme gathering completely.
The arising of virtue in Vajrasattva —
otherwise, it will not become a source of joy.

Enjoy fully, always; undertake all enjoyment.
If otherwise, by one's own bewilderment
one will be tormented as if in Avīci.

One should eat everything oneself;
the pure liquor, the meat — drink and eat them oneself.
This becomes the gift of all the buddhas;
swift accomplishment will occur.

Always eat the great flesh;
sesame oil too may be drunk on its own.
One who knows the rite — whether urine or excrement —
let the one of eating-nature eat it.
Even that which has issued from the wound's opening should be offered to the buddhas and the rest.

Having made a great cloud of flowers and sweet fragrance,
and all things according to their purpose,
through the mantra-practitioner's constant enjoyment by way of tasting,
let the drinking proceed.

This is the samaya spoken of by the wisdom-mind of all buddhas.
Since the Blessed One, the Tathāgatas of all kinds, sanction this, they spoke thus.

Let the mantra-practitioner always use the maṇḍala —
be it with urine and excrement, each separately,
with lying down and so forth —
and resolve the intention very firmly.

Having generated the four-cornered form filled with urine and excrement, fill the center of that form of one's own body
from the tip of the nose inward.

The arising of the Blessed One, the buddhas,
by that means — the master of passion — is without difficulty.
Whatever other three have been gathered —
let them not remain here in separation.

One who knows the rite should afterward
do this here and combine it with others.
Urged on by the wheel of wisdom,
one proceeds to that vast accomplishment.

Whether oneself or another —
suchness is not to be conjoined.
As long as space gives rise to all things,
buddhahood itself is not obtained.

I am Avīci, I am fearsome;
I am suffering, I am bliss.
Aversion is in me, and likewise delusion;
I am attachment, dwelling each in its place.

Thus it is said.

This concludes the ninth chapter, the great supreme secret, from the Great Royal Tantra of Thought called "Triumph of Non-Dual Equality: Making the Wisdom of All Tathāgatas Enter Within."

Then once more the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi spoke the great secret samaya of the essence of all bodhisattvas — Vajrasattva in its entirety — through the causes and fruit of obtaining the wisdom of all Tathāgatas:

One should not bow to an arhat.
Nor to a monk, though one may bow.
The buddhahood of buddhas —

attaining that is the bow; what is bowed to is not.

Contemplating one's own form by one's own form,
through that very suchness in the rite —
having placed the vajra and the rest at the heart — combine it correctly with the object of offering.

Even if Vajrasattva, or some among them, should later transgress this —
one who has spoken of one's own awakening mind will have one's head split into seven.

Having placed the liṅga (Skt. liṅga) firmly in the bhaga (Skt. bhaga), recite the secret mantra again and again.

Generate Vajrasattva completely and meditate upon one's own form.

From the distinction of always protecting that very buddha, that very guru —

Otherwise, the masters will not attain buddhahood itself. Having fully meditated on one's own form, from that very suchness one generates the subtle form — the awakening mind — completely. One should meditate upon the master as a buddha. This gnosis of the practitioners arises precisely from suchness as samaya (Skt. samaya). Through this engagement with samaya and the rest, even buddhahood will not be accomplished. Through the supreme yoga of the mudrā-seal (Skt. mudrā), one should meditate on a form at one's own heart. There, generate the vajra completely and stabilize it firmly for as long as one desires. Possessed of regard for the proper time and so forth, this is the supreme samaya. For as long as one is to accomplish the siddhis, one should always guard it by that means. The Blessed One spoke thus through the awakening mind.

Generate one's own form completely. By the defining mark of one's own form and so forth, what is declared as the nectar (Skt. amṛta) at the heart — from that, set forth the mantra correctly. This too is the samaya-gnosis, the purification of all defilements. The siddhi of desire, once stabilized, should be guarded with the effort of conduct and discipline. Having fully meditated upon all the buddhas, one should contemplate the form of what is to be accomplished. Generate Vajrasattva completely and meditate upon its essential nature. One who knows the rite should always meditate on this in the three times as well. If one were to recite or accomplish it otherwise, that would not be the genuine thing. Generate the precious bodhisattva completely — the consort (Skt. vidyā) who possesses form and all its attributes, adorned with a blazing garland — and meditate fully upon her in his hand. While meditating in the condensed form, one will come to clearly perceive the siddhi. If, in contrast, one is deluded, that generosity of his will not be accomplished there. Having placed the utterly brilliant, utterly stainless, wisdom-jewel crown upon the head, one who is supreme among practitioners moves about together on the earth. "I, Vajrasattva, the siddhi, am blessed by Vajrasattva. I shall always lead the way to the stage of vajra-wisdom-Dharma." "I, the siddhi, am blessed by vajra-wisdom as amṛta and so forth. I, the excellent one, exceedingly subtle, supreme as space, engage in discernment." The Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, spoke thus.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi once again proclaimed the samaya of all Tathāgatas — the chapter called "Blessing the Suchness of the Perfectly Pure Secret Mantra of the Body, Speech, Mind, and Gnosis of All Tathāgatas."

Generate Vajrasattva;
declare it as "the vajra of mind."
Having meditated upon that in the mind,
fully introduce the vajra-gnosis.

The meaning of the pure nature of the vajra —
fully examine it as the vajra of speech.
Having fully meditated on the pure gnosis,
meditate fully on purity of body and speech.

The blessing of the vajra is supremely clear;
it is the indivisible vajra-body itself.
The very nature of the buddha's body —
bless it, knowing the rite.

Blessed by this vajra,
one thereby attains awakening.
Knowing the rite, in six months attain buddhahood right here.

From all those vajras unstained
by the phenomena of passion arising — having thus performed the suchness-rite,
all siddhis are gathered.

Then Vajrapāṇi proclaimed the samaya of all-pervading conduct of the gnosis of all Tathāgatas.

Through the mode of the unfailing,
from the arising of the three vajra-gnoses,
by fully enjoying all of these,
one becomes the conduct of all buddhas.

If the buddhas, who fill the expanse of space,
are overcome —
buddhahood in this very birth,
condensed, is the vajra-master.

In the center of the solar maṇḍala,
the vajra form is perfectly generated.
Filling the expanse of space
with the form of the buddhas, one fully cultivates.

At the heart, the mantra is perfectly generated;
by meditative equipoise one sets it in motion.
The samaya of universal delight —
this the vajra-master ever cultivates.

Abiding in the center of the solar maṇḍala,
one's own mantra is perfectly generated;
filling the expanse of space with form,
one cultivates everything at the heart.

Through practicing that very thing itself,
one abides in the rank of the buddhas' own proclamation.

Abiding in the center of the lunar maṇḍala,
one's own mantra is perfectly generated;
knowing the rite, one cultivates the form
in the five abodes of aspect.

The awakening mind is perfectly generated;
all of these are set in motion by one who holds the vow.

In the center of the Dharma maṇḍala,
one's own mantra is perfectly generated;
having thus cultivated it as a diadem,
one makes offering and cultivates.

The buddha-master who possesses bliss —
that itself is the bliss of the yogin.
Having abandoned all terror entirely,
the mantra-bearer moves like a lion.

Buddhahood in this very birth —
in that instant one is definitively joined.

The Blessed One, the Tathāgata, proclaimed this with the samaya of all Tathāgatas. This is the tenth chapter, the chapter on samaya, in the Great King of Tantras called Victory over All in the Non-Dual Equality.

Then all the Tathāgatas arrived through their gathering, and with an array of offering clouds of the body, speech, mind, and gnosis of all Tathāgatas, they made perfect offering to the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi and spoke thus:

The meditative absorption that accomplishes all siddhis,
the meditative absorption that has become the supreme maṇḍala,
the great maṇḍala that has become supreme — that itself: may the Blessed One explain it.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, having heard these words of supplication from all the Tathāgatas, entered into meditative absorption called "The Vajra Blessing of the Samaya of All Tathāgatas," and in order to spread universally the gnosis of the siddhi of all samayas, taught this great maṇḍala.

Then, that which is rightly to be explained —
the supreme great maṇḍala:
it is like vajra-gnosis,
making the awakening of buddhas fully luminous.

It is to be contemplated as milk and yogurt;
it is adorned nearby with fine lotuses;
filled with clusters of flowers of every variety —
with utmost effort one should cultivate it.

Let the wise examine it thoroughly at the four sides and four corners.
It has arisen perfectly from Jāmbūnada gold;
in that, at the center, one cultivates.

It is to be made sixteen cubits across;
the buddha-master abides in the rite.
Knowing the rite, one cultivates in the corners
the five-pointed summit.

In the five locations as is fitting,
examine the maṇḍala of the moon.
Those who cultivate maṇḍalas generate it perfectly in a single hand.

As is fitting, in the east
one fully examines Akṣobhya.
Knowing the rite, in the south
one now sets out Ratnasambhava.
The west is called Amitābha;
the north is Amoghasiddhi.

Knowing the rite, by the golden hue,
one cultivates by meditating on that very suchness.
At the center, the all-pervading lord Vairocana is perfectly generated and cultivated.

In all the aspects of the disciple,
knowing the rite, one fully cultivates.
The great awareness goddesses — Locanā and the others —
one fully cultivates in the corners themselves.

Knowing the rite, what is called "nectar"
one cultivates at all the gates.
Through the condensed colors of all of these,
one understands them each individually.

In all their forms —
one fully cultivates as Vajrasattva.
The five rays of light are perfectly generated.
Through the condensation of the five sense pleasures,
one makes offering to the all-pervading lord.

According to the rite of the buddhācarya,
one fully cultivates, meditating that the space-realm
is completely filled by all buddhas.
This is renowned as cultivating worship
through all the seminal essences.

Thus is complete the meditative maṇḍala called "The Accomplishment of All Pledges."

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi again taught the meditative maṇḍala called "The Inviolable Pledge," as follows:

The intelligent buddhācārya
does all things just as they are in suchness.
By way of the subtle maṇḍala method,
one fully cultivates everything therein.

The supreme of all phenomena in the east —
Vajrasattva — is to be placed.
The mantra-practitioner examines the south:
Vajrasattva is to be placed there.
In the west, perfect awakening as primordial wisdom —
the buddhācārya is to be placed.
In the north, he who terrifies all —
Vajrasattva is to be placed.
At the center, the equalizer of the three realms —
one fully cultivates in the form of vajra.

Having cultivated in the white color,
one then meditates on the black at the center.
The queens, having opened,
one inserts the vajra into that very suchness.
The sovereign lady of Vajrasattva —
through effort, in the four abodes.

According to what is fitting, in all their colors,
one fully cultivates in the form of buddhas.
Knowing the rite, in all directions,
one meditates on the supreme wrathful ones.
The mantra-practitioner, through the five sense pleasures, properly undertakes mantra-worship.

One fully cultivates, meditating that the space-realm
is completely filled by Vajrasattva.
With the seminal essence of all vajras and so forth,
one meditates on it as worship.

Thus is complete the meditative maṇḍala called "The Inviolable Pledge."

Then Vajrapāṇi once more entered into the meditative absorption (samādhi) called "The Vajra Blessing, the Arising of the Pledges of All Tathāgatas," and taught this tathāgata maṇḍala, the great secret of the great meditative absorption called "The Phenomenon of Great Desire":

By way of the Dharma-maṇḍala method,
one cultivates everything therein.
Knowing the rite, in the east,
one places the blazing dharma-holder.
In the south, wisdom-phenomena now —
one cultivates through the nature of the meditator.
In the west, the lotus of enjoyment.
In the north, born from the dharmadhātu.

Having cultivated fittingly,
one places the lord of phenomena at the center.
Having cultivated in white,
one meditates on the red at the center.
Through the rite, the queen of the lord of phenomena
is to be cultivated in the four corners.
The great wrathful one called Horse —
one meditates on him at the very gates.
In all the yoga of phenomena,
one makes offering through the five sense pleasures.
Vajrasattva is perfectly generated
and fully cultivated at the sides.
With seminal essence itself, the space-realm —
one meditates on it as filled with jewels.
As befits, through union with the dharmakāya,
one makes offering.

Thus is complete the great secret of the great meditative absorption called "The Phenomenon of Desire."

Then Vajrapāṇi once more entered into the meditative absorption called "The Vajra, Source of All Pledges," and taught this great meditative maṇḍala called "The Mode of All Desire":

By way of the body-maṇḍala method,
one cultivates everything therein.
In the east, the definite destroyer of enemies —
one meditates on him in variegated colors.
In the south, perfect union with flowers —

one cultivates through essential nature.

In the west, perfectly pure primordial wisdom —

one meditates in a peaceful form.

In the north, what is called the All-Victorious —

one meditates with diligent intention.

In the center, perfect union with the offering of desire —

from the meditation on one's own form,

through the rite one contemplates

the Lord of Desire as having the essential nature of mind.

One who knows the rite should distinctly contemplate

the lotus-hand in the corners themselves.

Having made offering with all the five sense pleasures,

one offers and continues to offer.

Vajrasattva is drawn forth

and contemplated to the side.

Through the method of the offering of desire using the vital essence, one generates it and makes offering to the All-Pervading Lord.

The master of desire should examine;

the offerings and so forth are to be comprehended in full.

This concludes the great meditative maṇḍala called "The Pledge-Samādhi of All Desires."

In this very maṇḍala,

one always performs the role of the buddha-master.

Throughout everything and in the maṇḍala,

the vajra-master meditates,

and in accordance with what the master of desire has taught,

one acts accordingly — not in any other maṇḍala.

Then Vajrapāṇi once more entered into the meditative absorption called "The Vajra that Blesses the Suchness that Rouses the Essence of the Uṣṇīṣa of All Tathāgatas," and taught this great meditative maṇḍala called "Rousing the Essence of All Uṣṇīṣas":

Imagining it fashioned of curds,

adorned with beautiful lotuses and so forth —

in the center of that crystal

one contemplates everything completely.

On four sides with four corners,
one carefully examines the four gates.
The maṇḍala of Dharma distinctly —
that one is to be meditated upon in the center.
The mantra-holder who knows the rite places
a wheel-turning sovereign in the center.
One who knows the rite meditates distinctly on Vairocana precisely in the east.
One who knows the rite, in the north,
meditates distinctly on the one called Unnāmita, the Upward-Soaring.
In the south, the one called Amitābha —
one meditates with steadfast intention.
As is fitting in the west,
one meditates distinctly on the Heap of Splendor.
The Dharma-form equal to the form of a noble queen
is perfectly generated.
The symbolic marks — vajra and so forth as defining marks —
through the rite one bestows these upon them.
The great vidyā-holders — Locanā and the rest —
are to be contemplated in all the corners.
The great wrathful ones whom none can withstand are to be meditated upon distinctly at each gate and in each gateway.
Vajrasattva is perfectly drawn forth;
one applies him to that suchness.
Through the union of wisdom, one makes offering to all with the five sense pleasures.
The vital essence is perfectly generated therein —
what generates the offering is said to be generated.
All the uṣṇīṣas of the space-realm
are contemplated as completely filled.

This concludes the maṇḍala called "Rousing the Essence of the Uṣṇīṣa."

Then Vajrapāṇi once more entered into the meditative absorption called "The Vajra-Blessing that Equally Engages with the Arising throughout the Entire Desire Realm," and taught this great meditative maṇḍala called "The Common Lion's Sport of All Families":

One who knows the rite meditates distinctly on variegated colors, on milk and on curds.
In the center, of the nature of the four precious jewels,
one meditates on that mountain.
On four sides with four corners,
one carefully examines the four gates.
Lotuses and blue lotuses spread everywhere —
one contemplates them distinctly on all sides.
The throne of all precious gems,
and always the disk of the moon itself —
the distinguished buddha-master applies this with diligent meditative effort.
The mantra-holder meditates
on a solar disk in its center.
Rising above the little finger,
on the four-finger face and in the corners,
on all faces one always performs this —
it is to be meditated upon as ambrosia.
Whatever there is of blazing garlands and the rest —
the fearsome baring of fangs that terrifies —

The mantra-holder who possesses the lunar maṇḍala should distinctly meditate on the five stations.
In the center, a vajra-sword — exceedingly sharp and exceedingly beautiful,
blazing and agitated with flashing rays of light,
like the ruby's sovereign radiance.
A garland of white blazing light shines bright,
the white color exceedingly beautiful.
Complete with the crown of matted locks,
adorned with ornaments of every kind —
through the rite of the buddha-master,
one should distinctly meditate on the eastern direction.
Vajrasattva is perfectly generated:
adorned with varied precious gems,
blazing and agitated with a garland of flames,
like the blue utpala lotus.
In the south, the master always

meditates thus and does not meditate otherwise.
Dharmavajra is perfectly generated,
shining with a radiance like that of the ruby.
Full of red bunches of blossoms,
in the western direction one should meditate.
Kāmavajra is perfectly generated,
adorned and resplendent with blazing rays of light.
The wisdom of pure gold is complete.
In the north likewise one should meditate.
In the corners, the goddess Pārvatī (the Mountain Lord's Lady)
is to be contemplated in her proper station:
a woman endowed with all the characteristic marks of womanhood,
adorned with feminine ornaments,
both passionate and passionless in an instant —
the mantra-holder should meditate on her as charming.
In all the gate-directions,
the vidyā who cannot be overcome by any other,
who with right foot extended presses down,
who strips terror from the three worlds —
all of these, as his own form,
Vajrasattva is to be distinctly meditated upon.
The buddha-master should always continuously make offering of the finest of the five sense-pleasures.
By that and nothing else will he become pleased.
One's own bindu is perfectly generated —
this is said to generate the offering.
Through that reflected image, the expanse of space
should be distinctly meditated upon as completely filled.
The wish-fulfilling tree, the great precious gem,
the wish-granting jewel, exceedingly beautiful —
one who knows the distinctions of families should meditate on their colors accordingly.
With the form described in just that way,
the empowerment is to be received.
The knower of the rite should then contemplate the action of the vase.
Imagine that all things — the forms of buddhas and so forth —

are being continuously offered.
Through this characteristic mark of perfect union,
by the utterly equal empowerment,
in this very birth one attains buddhahood —
of this, here, there is no doubt.
One bestows the beneficial gift
that equals one's own mantra-deity, the fierce one.
Because the time required is not long,
one attains, as it were, the birth of supreme attainment.
The wise buddha-master
should always uphold the samaya of that deity — whatever family it arises from —
and with diligent effort it is thus fitting to do so.

This concludes the eleventh chapter, the chapter on great meditative concentration, in the Great Tantra of the Victor Who Is Triumphant in Non-Duality and Equality.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi once more entered into the meditative absorption called "Perfectly Rousing the Entire Space-Expanse with the Radiance of Wisdom," and proclaimed this mantra that generates the reality of the great samaya:

Om sarva tathāgata jñānodbhāvāya svāhā.

The instant this mantra was proclaimed, innumerable buddha-fields — beyond counting, beyond telling, and yet again beyond telling — trembled and shook with great intensity.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi once more entered into the meditative absorption called "The Samaya Vajra That Blesses Through All-Pervading Radiance," and proclaimed this mantra:

Om saṃgraha jñānodbhāvāya svāhā.

The instant this great heart-essence of suchness was proclaimed,

Then the entire expanse of space blazed with a great radiance of light-rays, illuminating all things and making them fully visible.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi once more entered into the meditative absorption called "The Vajra of Pure Intrinsic Nature," and proclaimed this mantra:

Om dharma jñānodbhāvāya svāhā.

The instant the Blessed One proclaimed this, illumination in harmony with gnosis spread throughout all buddha-fields to their very limits.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi once more entered into the meditative absorption called "The Vajra Blessing That Is the Naturally Arisen Glorious Source of All," and proclaimed this mantra:

Om kāma jñānodbhāvāya svāhā.

So that all may be known in suchness,
let it be applied in that very suchness.
Having established it with one's own form,
meditate upon all of that within that.
Generation and all the rest — the source of all —
are to be enacted by one's own mantra.
Many joined with one another in proper union:
meditate fully upon that mudrā.

For the wisdom lineage of the intelligent,
the finger-form configuration is taught to be employed.
Having united everything in the vajra form,
then unite in the jewel form.
Having united everything in the lotus form,
this is declared to be the Dharma lineage.
By the division of the three-pointed form,
bind it in that very suchness.

The Blessed One with the awakening mind thus declared this. Here ends the twelfth chapter, "The Maṇḍala of Meditation, Which Generates the Great Bodhisattvas."

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi once more entered into the meditative absorption called "The Vajra Blessing Arising from the Samaya That Perfectly Fulfills All Intentions," and proclaimed this great maṇḍala of the siddhi of the great samaya.

Now let it be explained properly.
This supreme great maṇḍala
is said to be the great siddhi,
like a vajra-gnosis.

On well-spread and fresh ground,
proportioned and beautiful,
let the skilled one lay the lines upon the maṇḍala
with cord, as best one can.

Square, with four gates,
adorned with four archways,
perfectly furnished with four lines,
decorated with garlands of silk and flowers.

At all the corners
and at the intervals of the gate-frames,
adorned with vajras and jewels:
draw the lines of the outer maṇḍala.

The ritual of constant gathering
is to be performed in three stages.
One who knows the ritual should place in the east
what is designated "gnosis."

In the south, the designation
"gathered by effort" is always to be used.
By the ritual, in the north
the Dharma lineage is always to be established.
The mantrin, for the lineage of all desires,
should also write the third in equanimity.

In the east: the Blessed One, the buddha,
the Victor's Uṣṇīṣa, the White Umbrella,
the great vidyā Locana,
and Ūrṇā as well — placed nearby.

To the south of Vajradhāra:
Amṛta and the Mighty One, Vajramuṣṭi, Māmakī —
these are to be placed in close proximity.

To the north of the Blessed One:
the lotus-holder, the peaceful one who generates,
the wrathful one arranged in sequence,
the great vidyā known as the White One,
and the wrathful consort — also write her.

One who knows the ritual should draw in the center
the vidyā Aparājitā.

All the mudrās themselves —
meditate fully upon the five-pointed form.

In the third maṇḍala the master should write "Yadṛcchayā sūtram."

At every gate
write the vajra iron-chain and the rest.
In all directions, as is fitting,
place the world-protectors.

In the east: the lord of the gods, the divine king,
the gods of the realm of desire,
and the Pure Abode — place them there.

In the direction of fire, on all sides: the fire deity,
the five great sages with clairvoyance.

In the south: the lord of the hungry ghosts,
Yama, and the seven Mātṛkās.

In the direction of truth's absence, the lord of hungry ghosts and all the elemental spirits. In the western direction, the lord of the nāgas, the water deity, and all the nāgas. In the direction of wind, the wind deity and all the vidyādhara. In the northern direction, the lord of the yakṣas, the Kumbhāṇḍas, and all the yakṣas. In the direction of Īśvara, Īśvara himself, and the lord of all elemental spirits.

According to the rites as proclaimed, set out the vases, seats, and the rest.
The king of all the gods is to be placed there as well.

The master, with flowers, incense, and the like, should perform the ritual of offering, and by fitting means of pleasing, bring them to delight. In this way the rite will flourish — otherwise it will not. Here, before and at the end, offer them fish, beer, and the like in abundance. The one who knows the rite should examine the secret offering at the four gates. Having taken hold of the essential substance there, present it everywhere. By the rite performed in the manner of a vidyā-consort, bring that repeatedly to joy. The master, with expressions of delight, should first offer the torma. The one who knows the rite correctly takes up the second, that of the seizer. The mantra practitioner confers the third, the distinguished one, to the buddhas. By that very declaration of suchness, perform the works of giving and fire-offering as proclaimed. At that time, the works of empowering the disciple should each be accomplished in turn.

Beyond that, through contemplation of the vase combined with the union of Vajrasattva, one correctly generates what is called "the remaining buddha" — suchness itself, in its proper form. Always, the buddha-master should speak this mode of his. Whatever is the great commitment of all buddhas — the one that causes entry into the three paths — that great empowerment will arise truly for as long as the sky endures. Proclaimed with distinction here, this too arises truly from me: relying upon the wish-fulfilling precious jewel, suchness arises from it, and so the empowerment is given here.

Furthermore, listen: if any sentient being is to behold this, within seven lifetimes they will attain a ground and become supremely worthy of veneration. As for whoever becomes the buddha-master, they will abide as an ocean of wisdom. Whoever knows that very suchness of the great Sage perpetually makes offering to the buddhas. As the buddha-master has declared, having conferred the five great commitments upon that master's own disciple, one should speak with earnest effort. The great commitment of all the buddhas: those who achieve that very maṇḍala, knowing the maṇḍala, should take it up as though it were a wish-fulfilling jewel. The maṇḍala of the great commitment is complete.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi once again entered into the heart of all the Tathāgatas. Then the Blessed One Vairocana entered into the meditative absorption called "the vajra blessing that pervades and animates the entire space-realm." The moment he entered that absorption, the Blessed One — that very Blessed One Vajrapāṇi — having filled the entire space-realm with mind, bestowed upon the Blessed One Vairocana fully the body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas.

Then the great Blessed One Vairocana proclaimed the act-bearing rite in the manner of the vidyā-consort and so forth, called "the supreme fulfillment of the commitments of all the Tathāgatas":

Roughly thirty cubits in extent,
perfectly round on all sides,
radiance resembling that of indranīla sapphire,
blazing with rays of light — bring it forth,
and in the sky perform this act;
contemplate it by the practice of meditative concentration.

Throughout all of Jambudvīpa,
churn everything with milk and curd.

According to the measure of a chariot-wheel — contemplate it as enveloped in a lotus. The great wrathful one, Yamāntaka, the greatly ferocious one and the rest — always within that one's maṇḍala, having contemplated that one's form, possessing successive wrathful frowns, a blazing garland, turbulent light — having aroused everything as is fitting, the contemplation of each is here set forth.

The great wrathful one, with a blue club,
destroyer of the three worlds, the seizer,
abides supremely in the primordial wisdom of all buddhas,
the vanquisher.

Having aroused the three forms as described,
filling the entire element of space,
one should generate the forms of the syllables
and contemplate them within oneself at the heart.

The forms at the heart — in those very forms
one contemplates in the manner of the deity.
Then the mantra-practitioner should gather them in
and insert them into that very one.

Knowing the rite, conceiving of the fire of an aeon,
one should properly commence meditative concentration.
Blazing like the light of the moon,
the consort is always to be contemplated.

Having perfectly generated the deity,
contemplate it at the center.

Having conceived one's own form at the heart,
contemplate it there at the center.

Having conceived one's own form at the heart,
contemplate it as the syllable HA.

This fulfills all the intentions
of all these mantras completely.

This is spoken of as the first meditative concentration;
it is to be cultivated with vigorous effort.

Always, by the lord of the family,
having contemplated it as burning for an aeon,
the mantra-practitioner should contemplate
that very appearance with diligent meditative concentration.

Through the excellent union of the buddha's form,
the contemplation of the lunar maṇḍala —
having generated it with one's own form,
one should emit this from every pore.

Having filled the entire element of space
with the three forms as described,
through the excellent union of the five rays of light,
one should insert them fully into one's own body.

Through the union with the queen of vidyās and the rest,
all of these are to be thoroughly examined.
Contemplate the element of space of all buddhas
as completely full,
and having contemplated it within one's own body,
insert everything fully therein.

This completes the thirteenth chapter, the act-bearing chapter on the rite of the vidyā-consort and so forth, in the Great King of Tantras, the Victor over All, the King of Contemplations of Non-dual Equality.

Then the great Blessed One Vairocana proclaimed the acts of the rite of the vidyā-consort, the great secret of all secret mantras:

Abiding at the center of the element of space,
the supreme great maṇḍala,
in extent a measure of leagues in number,
perfectly round on all sides —
imagining it as brightly luminous,
one should contemplate oneself at its center.
With effort, in the five stations,
contemplating the form of great Vairocana,
abiding at the center of the solar maṇḍala,
one should thoroughly examine all of these.

At the heart, Vajrasattva is to be properly generated and contemplated.

Knowing the rite, one fills the element of space
with the form of the sun.

Through the union with the deity and the rest,
one again inserts it fully therein.

This virtue, which is that very mode,
is to be understood by distinction of family.
Otherwise, the secret meditative concentration cannot be accomplished through rejection.

This completes the fourteenth chapter, the chapter on the acts of the vidyā-consort, in the Great King of Tantras, the Victor over All, the King of Contemplations of Non-dual Equality.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana taught the rite of recitation in the manner of the suchness of all deities:

Whether displaying magical feats in the sky
or wherever the mind is greatly gladdened,
having contemplated the great maṇḍala of the sovereign,
one should contemplate one's own maṇḍala as offering.

Contemplate that excellent flower at the center
through union with that very suchness.
One should contemplate one's own form as the great seal;
one should not strive otherwise.

At the very center of the heart, a fine filament —
the maṇḍala of stainless primordial wisdom —

Radiantly blazing white light, and so forth — arrange these in the manner of the elements.

Upon that, the syllables of the mantra:
first, contemplate the secret.

Having contemplated the fivefold apex,
apply it again to that very suchness.
The one endowed with intelligence should, at the five stations,
generate the reflection again and again.

In accord with the mode of those very syllables,
one should contemplate the arising of meditative concentration.
The one who knows the rite should generate the garland of letters and then contemplate it.

Throughout all of these stages of measure,
one should contemplate the arising of meditative concentration.
With great exertion, below that,
one should always fill the sky completely.

That very fullness is known as the fullness of all buddhas.
One should contemplate one's own form
as the secret mantra of the single syllable.

The arising of the lord of the family
is to be known as permanent through the three syllables.
Through holding to the five syllables and so forth,
for as long as the syllables arise —

A garland of blazing white light, and so forth,
a garland of blazing light with equal radiance:
through the distinctions of family, regarding all activities,
perform first and last in this way.

The petals of a blue lotus,
light equal to that of indranīla,
the blazing and brilliant light of the primordial mother —
through mental contemplation these will be accomplished.

The brilliant commanding light of padmarāga,
a light equal to blazing red —
throughout all world-realms
the one who knows the rite should make it radiate.

Equal to a yellow flower's pollen,
yellow light blazing forth, and so forth —
contemplate it through the level of meditation,
and accomplish it without doubt.

The very arising spoken of as suchness:
having properly generated one's own form,
contemplate a flower at the heart,
and upon that maṇḍala let the meditation rest.

The one who knows the rite should, above that,
contemplate the essence-seal.
Having generated all aspects of every level,
one should contemplate that very primordial wisdom.

From the heart, having drawn forth the letter A with certainty,
perform the offering to the buddhas and so forth.
Throughout all world-realms,
the one who knows the rite should let it proliferate.

At the beginning, middle, and end,
contemplate gathering it back once more.
Apply it perfectly, as though moonlight,
and contemplate it also in one's own body.

This is the virtuous mode of suchness;
it is to be understood as the three families as well.
The right joining of action and agent —
that meditation brings accomplishment.

Through the characteristics of the total engagement of mind,
if attachment should arise toward the attached,
having fully entered into meditative concentration,
contemplate bringing it into that.

This very thing is the accomplisher of the body, speech, and mind
of all buddhas.

This suchness of those who accomplish —
the supreme samaya for achieving the attainments.

Having contemplated the form of a buddha,
bearing a crown of matted locks,
generate the buddha-teacher properly
and place it at one's heart.

The seal of one's supreme personal mantra —
having contemplated it, place it at that one's heart.
At times of drinking and eating,
and also among those engaged in nearby enjoyments,
activities such as fragrance and form —
this is spoken of as suchness itself.

The union with the deity, the buddha-teacher —
one's own happiness, always,
should be offered through knowledge of the rite.
Otherwise it does not accomplish.

This fulfills, through all mantras,
every wish completely.
The primordial wisdoms are the secret of all;
this very thing accomplishes the attainments of the mantra.

It likewise carries away the death
of oneself, others, and all sentient beings.
Likewise, contemplating one's own form and so forth,
endowed with all service and offerings —

This very thing is the supreme accomplishment
of the primordial wisdom of all buddhas.
Through the supreme accomplishment of Vajrasattva,
it is the emanation of vajra primordial wisdom.

Through the total engagement of the four abodes,
in accord with the union of the deity —
the one who knows the rite should take hold of it;
it should be declared as the holding of vidyā.

This very thing is the stainless and excellent activity of suchness
of all buddhas.

The one who makes the mantra-body of that should contemplate it in a condensed form.

This very meditative concentration in four sessions —
it is the dancer of the samaya of suchness.

Throughout all things, the distinction of families —

one should contemplate it in condensed form. Having fully contemplated the form of a buddha, one should then contemplate the wheel. One should genuinely generate it in one's own hand, and for as long as life lasts, one should never abandon it. Those who contemplate Vajrasattva and the rest — in condensed form these are of three families — and through the blessing of Vajrasattva, the practitioner should ever accomplish the practice. This very thing is the perfect accomplishment of every accomplishment (siddhi) of all buddhas. It is the one who reveals the satisfaction of all mantras, the accomplishment, and the samaya.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana entered the meditative absorption called the Vajra Samaya of the Wish-Fulfilling Jewel of All Tathāgatas, and from within that absorption he revealed this maṇḍala called the Vajra of the Arising of All Tathāgatas.

Spoken in the samaya maṇḍala:

Whatever is that totality — that very thing —
in the east, draw Akṣobhya with one's own mudrā.

In the south, from the rite,
draw Ratnasambhava.

The one who knows the rite, in the west,
draws Amitābha in accord.

The one who knows the rite, in the north,
draws Amoghasiddhi in accord.

In the center, always in condensed form,
draw the buddha teacher throughout.

The great vajra with five points,
adorned with garlands of blazing fire —
in every respect the buddha teacher should accomplish this with full exertion.

As for the mudrās, throughout all of them:
radiance equal to the blue lotus,
with eleven great points —
draw them everywhere in the form of the vajra.

In the center of the lunar disc,
draw all the mudrās throughout.

The great mudrā, the wise ones have explained,
is called the wheel-turner.

In the chapels of the heart maṇḍala,
draw lotuses and blue lotuses.

In the colors of the four jewels,
draw these in the center, in accord.

From all the gods through desire,
that other god arises fully.

At the gate, draw that which arises from nectar (amṛta),

in accord and in harmony.
White, black, and likewise red,
yellow, and also green —
ever abiding on the throne of meditative concentration,
those are what should be placed there.

The one who knows the rite, for each of these,
should vanquish them with a self that is a vanquisher.
Towards that, always the secret offering;
at the four gates commence it fully.

The student should draw the mother, the chief consort,
the sister, and the daughter.
The one who knows the rite should enjoy these.

In the center of that maṇḍala,
for the victorious family of the Victor,
it is renowned that the mudrā should be placed.
Jaḥ — for the supreme family of the Great Vajra,
the syllable Jāḥ should always be applied.
Jaḥ — from the lotus-bearing family that has arisen,
the syllable Āḥ should always be applied.
Āḥ — from the rite of the desire family,
such is the syllable Āḥ of vidyā.
Āḥ.

The great maṇḍala called the Vajra of the Arising of All Tathāgatas is complete.

Then the Blessed One revealed the sādhana and the upasādhana.

Secret offerings such as fish and alcohol and the like — upon becoming joyfully pleased, wherever the mind inclines,
one dwells in a place empty of sentient beings.

There the yoga of the great samaya
is to be undertaken.

The accomplishment of buddhahood and the rest thereby —
in a single month that is brought to completion.

Aroused by the wisdom wheel,
at that time it will accordingly be accomplished.

At the outset, for three months,
the first yoga is to be undertaken.
From the family of Vajrapāṇi that arises,
here the great mantra is to be accomplished.

Then the Blessed One, speaking on the binding of the precious samaya of accomplishment by the families of wisdom and so forth:

In the form called Vairocana,
generate oneself there genuinely.
If one recites one's own mantra, Chakraṃ,
one will become a holder of the vidyā of the wheel.

In the form called Vairocana,
generate oneself there genuinely.
If one recites one's own mantra, Khaḍgaṃ,
one will become a holder of the vidyā of the sword.

Calling oneself Vairocana,
generate oneself there genuinely.
If one recites one's own mantra, Padmaṃ,
one will become a holder of the vidyā of the lotus.

Calling oneself Vairocana,
generate oneself there genuinely.
Recite one's own mantra, Triśūlaṃ,
and one will become a holder of the vidyā of the trident.

In the form called Vairocana,
generate oneself there genuinely.
If one recites one's own mantra, Vajraṃ,
one will become a holder of the vidyā of the vajra.

Calling oneself Vairocana,
generate oneself there genuinely.
If one performs one's own mantra, Aṃkuśaṃ,
it will be expressly proclaimed as the hook.

Calling oneself Vairocana,
generate oneself there genuinely.
If one recites one's own mantra, Pāśaṃ,
one will become a holder of the vidyā of the lasso.

By means of the defining marks of the great mudrā and so forth, genuinely generate one's own form.

That very thing — the supreme wish-fulfilling jewel —
is to be understood through the division of the other families.

This is the means of accomplishing the samaya.

The practitioner is to accomplish it.

In this very life accomplishment will come.

By means of one's own mantra in the manner of a bell,
generate oneself, the lord, as oneself,
to a height of approximately one cubit,
genuine and complete —
even a buddha would not see it.

Through knowing the rite, one who has the foundations
is to meditate by applying that very connection.

Meditating within the center of the form,
swift accomplishment will come — not otherwise.

By means of the defining mark of joining with the form,
generate oneself there genuinely.

Having performed one's own mantra, Utpalaṃ,
one will become a holder of the vidyā of gnosis.

Having meditated within the center of the moon,
commence genuinely in the sky above.

At the heart, genuinely generate a vajra,
and one will become a holder of the vidyā of gnosis.

Genuinely generate the form of the moon,
and meditate on vajra and jewel.

For as long as one desires a pure self,
for that long one will travel through the sky.

Genuinely generate oneself in the form of the moon,
place vajra and lotus in the hands.

Meditate on the eyes of the lotus,
and one will become lord of the seven grounds.

Having meditated on the form of the moon,
with blazing, swirling garlands of light,
generate all buddha forms,

and one will become a holder of the vidyā of the buddhas.

Having meditated on the vajra form,

meditate on the five buddhas.

Filling everything with five rays of light,

one will become equal to the body of the buddhas.

Vistara — having meditated on the form of the sun,

place the karma vajra at the heart.

Genuinely generate one's own mantra,

and one will become equal to the vajra body.

Having meditated on the form of the moon,

meditate on Vajro Hām.

At the heart, whether five-pointed

or otherwise, one will become equal to the vajra body.

Having meditated well on the form of the moon,

adorned with blazing vajras —

Vajrasattva, one's own form:

one will hold the form of the hero.

Genuinely generate the form of the moon,

adorned with a blazing wheel.

One's own form is the buddha form,

and one will hold the buddha form.

Genuinely generate the form of the moon,

adorned with a blazing lotus.

One's own form is the Dharma form,

and one will hold the Dharma form.

Genuinely generate the form of the moon,

adorned with blazing white light.

One's own form is the offering of desires,

and one will hold the form of the offering of desires.

First, the one-syllable and so forth —

the great and mighty vidyā king.

By the mudrā of the lord of the family,

meditating on one's own mudrā and so forth,

let one be made the possessor of the supremely subtle

as vajra of body, speech, and mind.

That very thing: within the samaya,
one meditates on the vajra form.

Having meditated on the form of the sun,
one meditates on Mudro Hām.

Having made the mantra syllables at the heart
and generated them, there is no doubt here.

The mantra practitioner, having contemplated the solar maṇḍala,
should meditate on the form at the center.

The vajra form is perfectly generated;
it arises and is generated through meditative concentration.

Having performed the rite of accomplishment,
one should accomplish the supreme attainment (siddhi).
From the rite of Vajrasattva,
through that, the three worlds are brought under mastery.

At the outset, in one's own place, a mountain retreat,
having recited for six months,
the practitioner accomplishes it continuously —
Vajrasattva abides in an exalted manner.

Just as a nāga-woman, a daughter of the gods,
a human woman, or a woman of the asuras —
just so, having summoned her fittingly,
one should rightly begin the secret offering.

In places of seclusion, pleasing to the mind,
in forests and hermitages as well,
having summoned her there, one enjoys her company,
through the supreme offerings of the five sensual pleasures.

By thoroughly invoking the wisdom vajra,
one should render her obedient to the samaya bond.
Vajrasattva himself, too,
should be summoned by one who knows the rite.

One's own mudrā is the form of those deities;
one's own speech is their mantra.
Having bound that very mudrā,

one should recite this mantra of one's own.

As one does at midnight,
so too should it be recited at noon.
By the very essence of the iron hook,
let them be perfectly accomplished.

Contemplating it as the fire of the conflagration at the end of an aeon,
with the vajra that is its equal,
applying the essence as the iron hook,
one hooks them and brings them under control.

The great wrathful one, Yamāntaka (the Destroyer of Death),
and in the same way Hayagrīva (Horse-necked),
the vajra club, and the Blessed One —
these are proclaimed as lords of the three worlds.

The great wrathful one, the Immovable,
and whatever wrathful frowning one there may be,
the great wrathful one of great power —
he brings the three realms under subjugation.

The great wrathful one called Amṛta,
of great power, who crushes adversaries,
who abides as the indivisible vajra of the three —
he causes even buddhas to be expelled.

With the power of Vajrapāṇi, who is endowed with a great vidyā-consort, incense, and so forth,
even Vajrasattva himself
brings the three realms down.

The great messenger Vajra-nails,
the supremely fierce and other vajra-holders —
they destroy poisons that fill every realm of space
in a single instant.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana entered into the meditative absorption called
"the vajra that expels all samayas," and uttered this vajra mantra called "Vajra Yamāntaka":

Namo vajra-jñānāya. Samaya-sattvānām. Kara kara. Kuru kuru. Mama kāryaṃ bhañja bhañja. Sarva-vighnām daha daha. Sarva-vināyakām. Mūddha ḍaka jīvitāntakara. Mahā-vikṛta. Rūpiṇe paca paca. Sarva-duṣṭāṃ. Mahā-gaṇapati.

Jīvitāntakara bandha bandha. Sarva-grahāṃ. Ṣaḍmukha ṣaḍbhujā.
Ṣaṭcaraṇāṃ. Rudra mānaya. Viṣṇu mānaya. Brahmādyāṃ sarva-devā mānaya.
Mā vilamb' mā vilamba. Lahu lahu. Maṇḍalaṃ dhye praveśaya. Samaya.
Manusmara. Hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā.

Then, the moment this was spoken, the great Blessed One Vairocana himself took on manifold forms and came to abide within lunar maṇḍalas at the hearts of all Tathāgatas as numerous as the fine particles of every realm of space. Filling all the realms of space with his own form, he made this solemn proclamation:

Wondrous! Through all these mantras,
the vajra that is indivisible, unsurpassable —
whatever is the vajra of the Tathāgatas — causes it to become a lump of earth.

Then the great Blessed One Vairocana entered into the meditative absorption called "the vajra of essential nature" and taught this mantra called "speaking the vajra-illusion":

Oṃ vajra-khura-vikṛtānana hūṃ phaṭ.

The moment this was said, the very same Blessed One, the Dharma-holder, made this solemn proclamation specifically in order to cause all the Tathāgatas to tremble:

Wondrous! The Teacher who reveals suchness in all its aspects
through all these mantras —
by the victorious banner of the vajra that destroys —
all the buddhas were brought to stillness.

Then the great Blessed One Vairocana entered into the meditative absorption called "the vajra that illuminates all the realms of space" and taught this great mantra:

Oṃ vajra-krodha mahābala hana daha paca vidhvaṃsa ucchūṣma-krodha hūṃ phaṭ.

The moment this was proclaimed, the Blessed One, the vajra-holder, filled all the realms of space with radiance, then filled everything with the rays of light of the wheels of all the Tathāgatas, and made this solemn proclamation:

Wondrous! Through all these mantras,
I, whose very nature is the way of mantra,
will attain the buddhahood of all buddhas
within six months.

Then the Blessed One once again entered into the meditative absorption called "the vajra that clearly manifests the essential nature of all the realms of space" and taught this mantra called "the Immovable":

Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇām acala-kāṇa he he mohaya mohaya, hasa hasa, tiṣṭha tiṣṭha, āviśa āviśa, mahābala mantra-cala dhuna dhuna, tina tina, khāda khāda, vighnān māraya māraya, duṣṭān bhakṣaya bhakṣaya, sarvāṃ kara kara, kiri kiri, mahāviṣama-vajra sphoṭaya sphoṭaya, hūṃ hūṃ tri-balita-rdhā nartaka āṃ hāṃ āṃ āṃ hāṃ, acala caṭ, sphoṭaya sphoṭaya, hūṃ e, samantika trāṭ, mahābala, sātaya, trāṃ hāṃ māṃ śudhyantu loka-stuṣya stu, vajriṇa maścanda prati-hata-valebhyo jvālaya trāṭ, asahana maḥ sahā.

The moment this wrathful mantra of the commissioned one was proclaimed, the very same great Blessed One, the holder of manifold forms, fully generated all of them, and within the maṇḍala at the heart-essence of all the Tathāgatas made this solemn proclamation:

Wondrous! I am the one who reveals the arising of suchness
through all these mantras.

The vajra, indivisible by its very nature,
generates gnosis through conceptual thought.

Then the Blessed One once again entered into the meditative absorption called "the vajra-blessing that causes all Tathāgatas to tremble" and taught this mantra called "great vajra with a frowning brow":

Namo bhagavatyai bhṛkuṭyai. Oṃ bhrūṃ kuṭita-raṅga-vajra-mbhita-vajra mahābala hūṃ phaṭ.

The moment this was proclaimed, that very great passion, pervading with the Dharma of all the Tathāgatas — the pervading of all the Tathāgatas through the Dharma of all the Tathāgatas — made this solemn proclamation of the Dharma-abiding of all the Tathāgatas:

Wondrous! The Dharma-passion gathered from all these mantras is like vajra-gnosis —
this is what is called the siddhi (Skt. siddhi) of mantra.

Then the Blessed One once again entered into the meditative absorption called "the vajra-blessing of universal joy" and taught this mantra called "great vajra power":

Oṃ vajra-krodha mahābala hana daha paca vidhānaṃsaya ucchūṣma-krodha hūṃ phaṭ.

The moment this was proclaimed, the Blessed One, the great holder of secrets, through all the secrets of all the Tathāgatas, made this solemn proclamation of whatever was spoken by all the Tathāgatas:

Wondrous! Through all these mantras —
the unsurpassable classification of the vajra — suchness is utterly pure in all its samaya (Skt. samaya) pledges;
this is called the wish-fulfilling jewel of the vajra.

Then the Blessed One once more entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra-blessing of the indivisible essential nature of all the Tathāgatas," and proclaimed this great mantra called "the vajra-amṛta method-union":

Oṃ kha kha khāhi khāhi. Tiṣṭha tiṣṭha. Bhaṃbha bhaṃbha. Gṛhṇa gṛhṇa. Hana hana. Gardha gardha. Visphōṭaya visphōṭaya. Jvala jvala. Prajvāla prajvāla. Grasa grasa. Sarva-vighāṃ vināyakāṃ. Pidyādhare. Kīlī kilā jvalita hutavaha śira mahā. Bhairaveni nirghōṣa. Saṃchinda chinda. Mahāvajradhāra. Tiṣṭha tiṣṭha. Bandha bandha. Vināyaka-hṛdayaṃ sphoṭaya. Gandharva-hṛdayaṃ sphoṭaya. Nāga-hṛdayaṃ sphoṭaya. Yakṣa-hṛdayaṃ sphoṭaya. Brahma-rākṣasa-hṛdayaṃ sphoṭaya. Sarva-graha-hṛdayaṃ sphoṭaya. Sarva-jvara-hṛdayaṃ sphoṭaya. Sarva-cāturthika-hṛdayaṃ sphoṭaya. Hūṃkāre phaṭ phaṭ. Hana hana. Daha daha. Paca paca. Vikurva vikurva. Āviśa āviśa. Mahāvajradhara ājñāpayati svāhā.

The moment this was proclaimed, the Blessed One, the great holder of secrets himself, made this solemn proclamation as the joyous utterance of all the Tathāgatas:

Wondrous! Through all these mantras —
the unsurpassable suchness of the vajra —
all samaya pledges arise purely;
this is the gathering of the indivisible suchness.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the utterly pure vajra," and proclaimed this great mantra called "the great vajra Gāndhārī":

Oṃ ehyehi bhagavati mahāvajra-gāṇḍhārī trayāṇāṃ ratnānāṃ satyena.
 Ākarṣaya ākarṣaya. Baladevam. Maheśvaram. Garuḍam. Viṣṇum. Kumāram.
 Brāhmaṇam. Indram. Candram. Ādityam. Yamam. Varuṇam. Kuveraṃ.
 Dhṛtarāṣṭram. Virūḍhakam. Virūpākṣam. Śaṅkukaṇṇam. Gokaṇṇam.
 Sthūlakaṇṇam. Nandīkeśvaram. Bhṛṅgiriṭim. Nāyakam. Vināyakam. Pāñcikaṃ.
 Lohakam. Śaṣṭhīdevīm. Koṭagiriṃ. Oṃkārim. Durgām. Kātyāyanīm.
 Caṇḍa-kātyāyanīm. Mahā-kātyāyanīm. Aiśānīm. Nairṛtyām. Kālīm. Mahākālīm.
 Vajrakālīm. Yaśasvīnīm. Sakālīm. Ghaṭṭrakālīm. Āgneyīm. Vāyavyām. Hārikām.
 Vṛtam. Śaktim. Śatākṣīm. Indrāṇīm. Brāhmaṇīm. Kauberīm. Māheśvārīm.
 Vaiṣṇavīm. Subhagām. Cāmuṇḍām. Rautrīm. Vārāhīm. Kauberīm. Ye cānye mama yena tiṣṭhanti — tān āvartayiṣyāmi śīghraṃ. Gṛhṇa gṛhṇa. Hulu hulu.
 Culu culu. Mulu mulu. Dhama dhama. Raṅga raṅga. Pūraya pūraya. Āviśa āviśa. Bhagavati mahāvajra-gāṇḍhārī siddhas caṇḍa. Vajravāṇī rājñāpayati.
 Hrīḥ ha ha ha ha hūṃ phaṭ svāhā.

The moment this was proclaimed, all the Tathāgatas came to be surrounded in the manner of the great vajra. And this was made as a solemn proclamation — as the utterance that proclaims the vidyā of all the Tathāgatas:

Wondrous! Through all these mantras —
 I, who work strenuously upon the all-base —
 whoever recalls this, which is tipped with vajra,
 will bring down upon them buddhas and more.

Then the Blessed One once more entered into meditative absorption called "the peaceful vajra," and proclaimed this great female messenger called "vajra-nākhī" — the vajra-clawed one:

Oṃ ehyehi vajra-nakhī vajra-mukhī. Hana hana. Paca paca. Raṅga raṅga. Alpa alpa. Āviśa āviśa. Hayagrīva. Pāyati svāhā.

The moment this was proclaimed, all those great poisons were entirely subdued, as if vanquished through profound meditation.

Then that vidyā (the female messenger) bowed down reverently before all the Tathāgatas and made this solemn utterance:

Wondrous! Of all mantras —
 I am the one who clears away every poison.
 Relying upon that supreme messenger,
 one purifies all the buddhas.

Then the Blessed One once more entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra that does not divide the three vajras," and proclaimed this mantra called "that which no other vajra can overcome":

Om jinariti hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svāhā.

The moment this was proclaimed, the Blessed One Vairocana the Great, filling all sentient beings with the wealth of well-being, made this solemn utterance:

Wondrous! Of all mantras —

I am the one from whom true arising is generated.

For the purpose of fully accomplishing buddhahood and awakening,

I abide in the ocean of eons.

Then the Blessed One once more entered into meditative absorption called "that which expands into the dharmadhātu," and proclaimed this supreme king of vidyās called "the single vajra-matted one":

Namas sarva-tathāgatebhyaḥ. Sarva-vidyā-gaṇebhyaḥ. Om ehyehi bhagavatī yakṣiṇīye. Māpeṭi iṭipaṭe josura sura pramathanī. Ekajaṭinī rakta-sahita-devi māvihethāyanī. Ripitirikarī. Tayīrī. Kapālacchatra. Priye mahākāpālī. Mahābala. Mahācapale. Siddhi sarva-artha. Sādhaya. Sarva-sattva-vighna-praśamanī svāhā.

The moment this was proclaimed, the Blessed One himself — he who bears the lotus — spread through every expanse of space, dwelling as the crown ornament of all the Tathāgatas, and made this solemn utterance:

Wondrous! Of all mantras —

arises the one who embodies the essence of mantra.

That peace of all the Victors —

through cultivating it, one makes offering.

Then the Blessed One once more entered into meditative absorption called "that which terrifies all maṇḍalas," and proclaimed this great wrathful frowning vajra:

Om bhayanāśani trāsaya trāsaya. Bhṛkuṭiṭaṭi vaiṭaṭi śvetajaṭinī svāhā.

The moment this was proclaimed, the Blessed One himself — he who holds peace — having made proper offering to all the Tathāgatas, made this solemn utterance:

Wondrous! Of all mantras —

from which the buddhas of the syllable Ṭa truly arise —

for the purpose of fully accomplishing the mother of Dharma, this is declared to be the generative one.

Then the Blessed One once more entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra that assembles gnosis," and proclaimed this heart-essence of his own family:

Oṃ ārolīk.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra-pledge of all sentient beings," and proclaimed this mother of the family:

Oṃ ruru sūru jvala tiṣṭha siddhi locane sarva-artha-sādhani svāhā.

Then the Blessed One once more entered into meditative absorption called "the pure body of one's own form," and proclaimed this mantra:

Oṃ śaṅgari śāntikare ghuṭa ghuṭa ghuṭinī ghuṭinī. Ghātaya ghātaya. Ghuṭinī hūṃ phaṭ svāhā.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra that generates the gnosis of all Tathāgatas," and proclaimed his own mantra:

Oṃ śvetipāṇḍaravāsinī jaṭāmakuṭadhāriṇī svāhā.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the sport of the buddhas," and proclaimed this king of vidyās:

Oṃ dhūḥ. Then the Blessed One proclaimed to the king of vidyās:

Oṃ sumbha ni sumbha hūṃ. Gṛhṇa gṛhṇa hūṃ. Gṛhṇa pāya gṛhṇāpāya hūṃ. Ānaya ho bhagavaṃ vidyārāja hūṃ phaṭ svāhā.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the sport of the Dharma," and proclaimed this mantra:

Oṃ amṛtodbhava udbhāvaya svāhā.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra that vanquishes afflictions," and proclaimed this mantra that devours afflictions:

Oṃ kleśāsani vijaye svāhā.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra of the great commitment," and proclaimed this uṣṇīṣa of the wheel of Dharma:

Oṃ chinda chinda. Hana hana. Daha daha. Dīptacakra hūṃ.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the supreme splendor of all the Tathāgatas," and proclaimed this mass of splendor:

Oṃ jvala jvala. Dhaka dhaka. Dara dara. Vidara vidara. Chinda chinda. Bhinda bhinda. Hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra of the arising of the white," and proclaimed this uṣṇīṣa of the Victors:

Oṃ jayoṣṇīṣa jvala jvala. Bandha bandha. Dama dama. Hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ. Hana hana hūṃ phaṭ.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra of the arising of the white," and proclaimed this White Parasol Uṣṇīṣa:

Oṃ mama mama hūṃ niḥ.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra of the arising of all the Tathāgatas," and proclaimed this supreme great vidyā:

Oṃ tāre tuttāre ture svāhā.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "the vajra of the definitive cultivation of all the Tathāgatas," and proclaimed this great mantra of the wrathful spike:

Oṃ kani dhuni hūṃ phaṭ.

The mantra that summons the three worlds is a task of extreme impropriety. Yet as long as any other spirit arises, one performs the three types of activity by meditating on the yoga of suchness.

The great wrathful one called the Immovable, Yamāntaka, and the Three Elements — throughout all buddha-fields in every direction, even the three realms are overcome by this.

The great wrathful one Hayagrīva, and whatever wrathful form is arrayed in sequence — even Vajrasattva himself is overcome by this wrathful one.

Those known as the great powerful nectars, destroyers and seizers of the unknowing, even those equal to the expanse of the sky — these are overcome without any doubt.

Through the practice of reciting a hundred thousand times,
one causes thorough mastery of all.
Even the attainment of buddhahood by the wise —
there is no doubt it is summoned thereby.

The wrathful vidyā Caikaṭa makes even the terrifying tremble with terror.
Through the practice of engaging great asuras and the like,
one achieves victory in battle.

Born at the supreme tip of the wrathful spike,
the mantra master should recite one hundred thousand times.
If applied with a wrathful mind,
it certainly causes even buddhas to tremble.

Truly generate this in the hand;
by going there in silence, through intention,
the armies of the enemy are routed —
even Śakra (Indra) is without doubt.

Having recited the mass of splendor
and performed three hundred thousand fine circumambulations, even the hosts of Śakra are routed —
it is taught to overcome not just a few.

Tārā arises as the true deliverer,
and the virtue arising from blazing gnosis —
by meditating on the practice below,
even the vajra hosts are routed.

That which is born as the supreme essence of this —

it makes known the family and the lord of the family. Having contemplated joining with that, or with this very one, one should meditate the meditative absorption of dhyāna and samādhi, and one should apply it definitively in yellow, or otherwise in red.

Thus did the Blessed One Vairocana declare.

The fifteenth chapter, "The Vajra-Arising of All Mantras," is complete.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana taught the sixteenth chapter, the chapter on the compendium of all mantras.

From the activities of pacification, increase, and the rest,
by meditating on the form of one's own body,
gnosis arises perfectly at the heart.

The crown-gnosis, the Dharma-lord — having meditated on the buddha-form fully,
a light equal to varied precious gems:
the yogin should gather it into a ball.
The buddha-form is to be fully meditated upon.

This teacher of the wrathful ones,
who meditates on the Vajra-Arising —
by fully meditating on its essential nature,
one teaches this in accordance with family and clan.

Having fully meditated on the lord of the family,
with the fifth color, excellently beautified,
one should meditate through the attainment of meditation.
Again, the mantra of the lord of the family is itself to be meditated upon —
and the uṣṇīṣa too is to be fully meditated upon.

This is taught to bring joy and delight
to all mantras.

It is held to accomplish all siddhis,
to complete vajra-gnosis and the rest,
and to vanquish the king of vidyās
for all vidyā-holders and the like.

Even through all messenger goddesses,
by meditating on Vajrasattva —
through meditating on the form of one's own body —
all desired mantras are fulfilled.

This is the arising of the samaya of all mantras.
For the benefit of all buddhas,
it was taught by the supreme Vajra-hero.

The sixteenth chapter, the compendium of all mantras, is complete.

Then the Blessed One taught this rite of expulsion that expels all Tathāgatas.

For the activities of expulsion and the like:
that buddha-gnosis possessor,

the three wrathful ones gathered —
known as the Vajra-Arising itself.
Yamāntaka of the gnosis family,
born at the supreme summit of what is gathered,
and the great wrathful one Hayagrīva
are taught to belong to the Dharma-gnosis family.

Having recited a thousand, or even a hundred,
or one hundred thousand times as a single sequence,
knowing oneself as a buddha
and knowing the ritual, one performs the expulsion.

Having arranged everything on three skulls,
in the charnel ground of the southern direction,
one undertakes this desire precisely.
Through the combination of stone and wood,
one undertakes it precisely, without substance.
Equipped with stone and thorn-plant,
having entirely abandoned food and illumination,
equipped with blood and discharge,
one should eat by means of lotus petals.
One should write upon a tāla leaf,
and the mantra practitioner should strike the mechanism below.
Having written with a thorn-plant,
having inserted it into the mouth of the lotus petal,
one should place it in the site of conjunction.
Below the Great God,
one should grasp everything stainless.
Knowing the ritual, seven times
one recites the mantra and undertakes it precisely.

At the gate of the enemy, or in the village,
in the town, or in whatever place
where all things arise —
in all these places, one expels the aggregates entirely.

In brief, with respect to that essence,
one should sit on a low seat.
Having made a form that is stainless,

the wrathful one, the supreme arising from among wrathful ones —
having generated even a thousand qualities,
one constantly attains buddhahood.

Seven days in succession, or separately:
if some among them do not depart,
their heads split into seven parts.
This the indivisible vajra has itself declared.

The seventeenth chapter, the chapter on expelling all Tathāgatas, is complete.
Then the Blessed One taught this rite of pleasing the great Vairocana, Vajrasattva.

The buddha, the master with beautiful wings,
residing in the vajra cross-legged posture,
enjoying through the proximity of Garuḍa —

that which sustains and maintains life — the remainder of what is to be spoken is taught. It does not become idle chatter about wandering beings and dancing and the like. A student who dwells in what is not elevated — if during a Dharma session he commits sins and the like, that fool will be tormented in the Incessant Hell (Avīci). If one merely with the mantra were to attack Brahmā with both hands, for as long as the sky truly arises, one will be tormented in the Incessant Hell. The secret of women is not to be spoken. If someone undertakes effort for the sake of the master, whether experiencing happiness or bodily and mental suffering, for as long as one lives, if the commands of the masters are carried out with a joyful mind, then buddhahood and the rest will be accomplished for oneself — of this, here, there is no doubt.
With regard to that, for as long as one lives, one should dwell everywhere through signs. Resting on one's hips with the hands and so on — as long as one lives, this should not be done. One who seeks the fruit of accomplishment (siddhi) should not name the master by name. For as long as the sky truly arises, one will be tormented in the hell of Incessant suffering. One should act toward the Tathāgata just as one does in like manner. Regarding food as well, one's own student should know: one should meditate clearly upon the buddha's form, and the letters of his name one should not recite for as long as one lives. If one were to slay buddhas beyond counting, this sin would be supremely surpassing. When someone is praised with these qualities, true merit arises. At that time, when the master is free of concepts, if elsewhere I am a deluded fool, then at that time one will be tormented with weeping and wailing. When one serves with devotion — listening and the like — that disciple who requests mantras, just as some have seen masters directly as bliss, and some masters who are themselves scorching and burning with the black mark — those will be tormented with weeping and wailing. Whoever seeks a master, one should offer that to him. Otherwise, without accomplishment, an uninspected disciple should accomplish what serves the purpose of the master's wife, or else by giving a sister accomplishment will arise — of this, here, there is no doubt. Whatever master, for the sake of a disciple, undertakes prostration should accomplish it. For sixty eons that one will be tormented experiencing the suffering of hell. Thus these surpassing qualities should be clarified over six months. If elsewhere I am deluded, one will be tormented as if in the Incessant Hell. Whatever one seeks in a master, one should accomplish individually. Through the vigorous rousing of vajra-wisdom, one will proceed there toward broad accomplishment. Whoever possesses these qualities should know that merit arises. This master's tantra and the like — such things and the like should not be revealed. Thus, having oneself attained purity and abiding through the rite of the nature of reality (dharmatā), one should clearly reveal the master. Accomplishment will come swiftly — not otherwise. Abiding in the abode of the buddha, that supreme Vajrasattva (Vajrasattva), upon being pleased, swiftly accomplishes — not otherwise. One who is a buddha and has attained buddhahood itself — from pleasing that one the supreme arises. By that, the three worlds are accomplished, and the buddha-wisdom itself as well.

The eighteenth chapter, the chapter on pleasing the secret Vajrasattva of the Tathāgata, is complete.

Then the Blessed One, great Vairocana (the All-Illuminating), taught the chapter on all mantras.

In pleasure-groves, utterly secluded,
with rivers flowing swiftly by,
in mountains and places of variegated beauty,
one should accomplish through the stage of practice.

In one month accomplishment will come;
if not, that accomplishment will not arise.
In secluded and other remote places
where the mind becomes greatly joyful,

blazing with the secret mantra, consecrated — buddhahood itself will be accomplished there.

On oceans and on great rivers,
on the peaks of great mountains,
reciting the mantra without interruption — accomplishment will certainly come within a month. Properly endowed with venom and life-thread, through a fire offering of tiṅkā wood — having generated the approach practice and the rest — one should undertake all the practices of secret mantra. One who has taken up the vow in that regard will certainly attain accomplishment; otherwise, one will not.

Having obtained all the rituals of secret mantra, the mantrin brings the approach practice to completion. Therefore the mantrin must accomplish the distinctive vow step by step. Whatever is properly declared as a vow, that same thing must be guarded by one who observes the discipline. Otherwise, for as long as the sky endures, one will be reborn perpetually in the hell of ceaseless torment. So long as life lasts, in accordance with the ritual, the ācārya who guards the vow — by that very act will attain buddhahood itself.

Reciting the peerless secret mantra of the all-base that holds all variety, one who embodies the nature of accomplishment should practice. Within a single month the three worlds will be accomplished thereby — of this there is no doubt. The mantra also arising from consciousness, having been recited six hundred thousand times and having made prostrations to Vajrasattva (the bodhisattva of the vajra), that accomplishment will come in the ninth month.

Through the superior classification of mantra and mudrā, one will certainly attain buddhahood. When the distinctions of mudrā are set forth in their fullness, the deities will certainly not be summoned without them. Whatever one who is lord of speech seeks to find — that is what one must always strive for. The skilled practitioner, having sealed with the supreme mudrā of the Buddha and so on, should then recite the corresponding mantras and always,
without fail, bestow them.

Whatever princess of a king, or even a daughter of a buddha — the mantrin may take her and enjoy her company for as long as the mind remains satisfied.

Properly endowed with venom and life-thread, mixed with white mustard and sesame oil, and with bone properly ground to powder — mātṛitaṃ shall be ground to meal. Having incorporated urine and feces, and through the special discipline of one who observes the rules, it should be burned in a triangular fire at the throat. This will certainly bring accomplishment swiftly.

Having done what is called devadatta, whoever makes this radiant — if even a buddha were there, that one would be reduced to ashes. The skilled practitioner should perform the fire offering at midnight and again at noon. For the span of one eon, one should bestow it — otherwise never at any time.

If even a buddha or anyone else should pass away with a deluded mind, the head splits into seven pieces. The awakening mind itself he proclaimed. What is called the first is known as the Raising and the Felling; the second is called by that name; the third is the supreme among gods; and the fourth is known as Vajrapāṇi even in the noble realm. Through the conjunction of all essences, actions are accomplished swiftly.

At places abounding in various touches and the like, in pleasure-groves and at great festivals, the activity of that maṇḍala should be begun by offering incense. Whether it be Śakra (Indra) or Brahmā, a buddha or a great sage — one who knows the ritual will subdue them in seven days; of this here there is no doubt.

One who knows the ritual, having smeared the body with blood, should apply it to one's own body. With hair loosened to form a crown protuberance, one makes the ugly and the great terrible and frightful. One should apply it fully in a charnel-ground dwelling and oneself write the name of that being. Having recited it one thousand times, one will certainly bind even a buddha.

One who knows the ritual, having fully entered with a wrathful mind into a dampened garment, and having pressed the linga with the foot, will certainly subdue even a buddha. Having placed Viṣṇu, the asuras, and the other gods underfoot, one should begin. One who knows the ritual will subdue all three realms in seven days.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, great Vairocana, in teaching all the mantras. The nineteenth chapter, on the great secret, is complete.

Thereupon the Blessed One, great Vairocana, taught the chapter on the vows of all practitioners. One should eat feces and urine. Give happiness to all sentient beings.

That very Vajradhara (vajra-holder), the king,
is the sovereign lord of the supreme ground of all.
Born truly from the nine wounds,
one should eat it on occasion.

The king who holds the vajra over all,
the sovereign lord of the supreme ground of all —
what is to be eaten with desire and attachment
bestows all benefit and happiness.

That very Vajradhara, the king,
the sovereign lord of the supreme ground of all —
what is to be eaten with aversion and anger brings about the realization of vajra-wisdom.

That very Vajradhara, the king,
the sovereign lord of the supreme ground of all —
what is to be eaten with delusion and bewilderment
is the one who realizes all wisdom.

That very one is the king who holds the peaceful,
the ground that is the buddha Vairocana.
What is to be eaten as pleasure and pain
is so for as long as the master lives.

That very one is the king who holds the peaceful,
the ground that is the buddha Vairocana.
For as long as the master lives,
one should eat both Dharma and what is not Dharma.

That very Vajradhara, the king,
the supreme teacher of suchness itself —
for as long as one lives, on occasion
one should eat the flesh of sentient beings.

That very king who holds the vajra,
the sovereign lord of the supreme ground of all —
for as long as one lives, all actions
that are base and contemptible must not be done.

That very Padmadhara (lotus-holder), the king,
is the sovereign lord of the supreme ground of all.

Then all the Tathāgatas, having heard the nature of reality of the wisdom of all Tathāgatas together with its syllables, were filled with wonder, and spoke thus to all the vajra-holders: "O son of the family, this is marvelous — in that even the names of those who are masters of the wisdom of omniscience are not to be known, what need is there to speak of anything else?"

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, residing in the heart of the Blessed One great Vairocana, spoke thus: "Blessed One, I shall teach the chapter of the mantra samādhi of the wish-fulfilling jewel of all Tathāgatas." All the Tathāgatas requested: "Blessed One, please teach what is called 'the stirring of all Tathāgatas.'"

Then the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, taught this chapter of the mantra samādhi of the wish-fulfilling jewel in the five abodes of all Tathāgatas:

Through blessing and the other mantras and so forth,
one meditates variously upon that suchness.
One who knows the ritual then meditates
upon the four syllables above it.

Having drawn oneself into the center,
one represents form in one's own form.
One's own mind arises as pure awakening.
One who knows the ritual should fill everything completely.
By this, buddhahood itself will be attained;
this very meditation fully accomplishes it.

Abiding at the center of the lunar maṇḍala,
a radiance equal to crystal and moon —
at the center of the solar maṇḍala,
having meditated on the syllables of four and five,
one should meditate on the five syllables.
The mantra-practitioner draws them into the center of the body.
The syllable OM, equal in color to yellow,
with five rays of light completely stirring —
there the mantra-practitioner meditates, having drawn oneself in.
At the center, one correctly applies the syllable HŪṂ.
One should meditate on one's own form as virtue.
Having generated a radiance equal to jambūnada gold
in the manner of a reflected image,
complete with all defining marks and endowed with all that is pleasing,

one should meditate thus.

In those reflected images of the buddha,

one should meditate on the five rays of light.

With the radiant form of Vairocana's light filling the entire expanse of space,

having contemplated this, one who knows the ritual

should gather it in there and fall prostrate before it.

Having generated the peerless form

adorned by the rising moon,

holding a luminous topknot, peaceful,

bearing the five crowns —

having meditated on the form of a buddha

with rays of variegated light of equal brilliance,

one contemplates him seated in the maṇḍala.

One who knows the ritual should meditate on all of that,

visualizing the mantra at the center as the syllable OM, and having meditated on the syllable HŪṂ at the end, adorned with a blazing garland,

one should then contemplate Vajradhara at the center —

bearing light like that of an indranīla sapphire,

holding peaceful matted-hair crown ornaments —

and meditate on Vajrapāṇi.

Having meditated on Vairocana,

with light of equal and variegated rays,

one should meditate on the mantra syllables as a moon disc

at the heart center of that one.

Thus is the meditative absorption (samādhi) of the Blessed One Vajrasattva complete.

Then the Blessed One, the Great Vajradhara, proclaimed the meditative absorption called The Gnosis of the Three Vajras.

One who knows the ritual should meditate on all of that.

In the center, meditate on the syllable HĀṂ.

On the face, render it in the likeness of one's own form.

Meditate on the red vajra.

Having contemplated the Dharma-holder at the center,

with a radiance matching the power of a padmarāga ruby,
holding a lotus with eight petals in hand,
meditate within that center.

At the heart, having contemplated the lunar maṇḍala,
one should then meditate on the mantra.

Thus is the ritual of the meditative absorption of the Blessed One, the Lord of Dharma, complete.

One who knows the ritual, having formed the image,
applies the syllable HĀṂ rightly on the face.

At the center, meditate on one's own form,
with light equal to that of jambu-river gold.

One should generate a form for the offering of desired things.

Having meditated on a trident in the hand,
one places the maṇḍala at the heart center of that one.

Having meditated on the form of the Lord of Dharma,
one should then undertake the outer activities properly.

Thus is the meditative absorption called Arising of the Lamp, the meditative absorption of the Blessed One's offering of desired things, complete.

Or else, one who possesses discipline
should meditate on the form of a buddha by way of a condensed practice, together with the uṣṇīṣa mantra, the wrathful ones,
and the vidyārājas along with their families.

One should recite all the mantras for all activities
in their proper order.

Having meditated on the lord at the center,
one should place the deities on the faces.

In those, as the application of the essence,
one should meditate on the lunar maṇḍala.

Having meditated on the mantra syllables as offerings,
one thereby meditates on the deities.

In the hands of all of them,
meditate on the vajra, wheel, and lotus.

Meditating also on the spear and the wish-fulfilling jewel,
one accomplishes swiftly.

The mantra practitioner should recite one's own mantra,

and by meditating on the lunar maṇḍala,
one correctly applies the moon on the face
and meditates on the yellow form at the center.
Having gathered it, in the manner of a lump,
one places it upon one's own body.
By invoking all the buddhas,
this is the supreme means of awakening.
By meditating on it at all times,
one will certainly abide there for an aeon.
One who knows the ritual should place Akṣobhya and the rest upon a solar maṇḍala.
Having meditated on the sovereign of the family,
one places the lunar maṇḍala:
from beginning to end, this meditative concentration
should be contemplated within the fourfold center.
By thereby accomplishing buddhahood itself,
one will swiftly become a buddha.
The practitioner who knows the supreme mantra of that one
and knows the mudrā
should generate it according to the ritual.
That alone accomplishes it swiftly, and nothing else does.
Having deeply meditated on the great seal (mahāmudrā),
from within the path of space at the center,
one should meditate on the auspicious maṇḍala at the center,
equal to the sun.
The mantra practitioner should meditate on the lunar maṇḍala
on the face of the maṇḍala.
One should perfectly generate the form of the lord,
and thereby meditate on the immovable one.
At the threshold of the four arising jewels —
Thoroughly fill it with honey and butter.
Having meditated on the syllables of the mantra,
perform the fire offering with that intention.
By the manner of the five maṇḍalas,
fill the center with the syllable HŪM.
A dense garland of blazing flames

radiates outward in all directions.

Abiding within that, the divine form arises,
from which issue the three satisfying samaya pledges.
One who knows the ritual should meditate on the uṣṇīṣa
by means of the uṣṇīṣa.

Perfectly generate the mantra of the lord
and meditate upon it in meditative equipoise.

The great blue lotus with eight petals,
fully encompassing all twelve fingers,
abiding at the center of the Dharma maṇḍala —
that itself is said to be the object of meditation.

The great five-pointed vajra,
radiant with a light equal to the blue lotus,
perfectly endowed with the sixteen vowels —
meditate upon it constantly and accomplishment will come.

The mantra practitioner: the twenty-fingered,
equal in radiance to a yellow triple peak —
if one meditates upon it according to the rite,
there is no doubt that accomplishment will come here.

The lotus, the karma vajra,
and the wish-fulfilling jewel, being the third —
perfectly generate the mantra of the lord.
That alone accomplishes it swiftly; nothing else does.

The wheel, likewise the lotus and vajra — having contemplated them, one should accomplish this through the ritual of the vajra and the level of meditation.
Otherwise this will not be accomplished.

The great vajra with spear and so forth,
radiant with a light equal to a blazing garland —
having recited through the utterances of the secret mantra that encompasses all activities,

with a mind stirred by the blazing sword,
radiating and dense, agitated throughout,
generate it exactly at the measure of one cubit,

and make the distinction that causes wrath.

The mantras for dispatching messengers and the like — this is the meditation on the vajra maṇḍala.

From the practice of the solar maṇḍala,
through meditation one will come to supreme vision.

The staff, the club, the enemy-axe,
the noose, the paṭṭi, the sa —
having meditated upon them through the ritual of meditation,
one pleases the vajra-holders.

This, then, is the meditation on the body, speech, and mind of all mantras.

It is kept secret by one endowed with vajra wisdom;
it is spoken of as endowed with wisdom and siddhi.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, Vajrasattva (Skt. Vajrasattva).

Whoever desires the supreme siddhi
should perform the fire offering, knowing the ritual.
Abiding in the samādhi of that very secret,
undertake fire offerings of various kinds.

From the practice of the four maṇḍalas,
one accomplishes the activities of the family.
Through the division of the OM-syllable mantra,
by meditating one will attain siddhi.

For pacification, the maṇḍala is circular.
For enrichment, it is four-cornered.
For subjugation, the triangle is supreme.
For the activity of power, it takes the form of a bow.

For pacification, one should meditate upon it appearing within the center of fire, like nectar.
Upon that very one, the divine form
should be meditated upon according to its own manner.

In the manner of oneself as lord,
this arises from the manner of the vajra.
Having opened the mouth wide,
with a dense blaze of fire, stirred —

the mantra practitioner should contemplate
the syllable HŪṂ appearing at the center of the tongue.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, Homa-Vajra.

One who knows the ritual: milk and honey,
and butter are to be used for the pacification family.
From the distinction of the great clarified butter,
it is spoken of as belonging to the Wisdom Vajra family.

For pacification, one should meditate fully on the heart-center of the vajra master.
Holding the wish-fulfilling jewel in hand by contemplation —
this is the supreme manner of purity.

The great reflection of Vairocana —
as the arising of the qualities of the lotus — form is the supreme family of desire.
Form is the vajra of desirable offerings.

From the extensive distinction of the four activities,
arranging the syllables of the mantra —
thus spoke the Blessed One, the Secret Fire Offering, Vajradhara the Great.

This completes the twentieth chapter, the chapter on the wish-fulfilling jewel mantra of all the Tathāgatas, the great royal contemplation of non-dual equality, the victorious one.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi spoke this chapter of the essence, entitled
"The Mantra of the Powers of All the Tathāgatas, Gathered from All."

The buddha of the great Vajra-Dharma, delighting in the samaya of desire — contemplate all mantras correctly, and rouse their meditation fully.

All buddhas of samaya-wisdom,
by means of the family-contemplation of the maṇḍala —
form is the light equal to a buddha;
by the division of wisdom through the syllable Aṃ,
this is the display of the vajra manner.

Adorned with a crown of matted hair,
of exceedingly beautiful white complexion,

four-armed and with broad, wide eyes,
stirred throughout by a dense blaze of fire —
holding the offerings of the yogin and so forth, adorned and possessed of the maṇḍala and so forth, Vajrasattva at the crown —
the beautiful form is the ground of the Victor.
By the union of the two faculties,
this is the supreme manner of meditation.

By the union of the vajra of the body and so forth,
from the supreme union of the five superknowledges,
the highest of the two-footed, knowing suchness —
is declared the chief of those bearing the skull crown.
This is the wisdom of all buddhas —
the meditative absorption called "family."

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi entered into the meditative absorption called "Blessing the Suchness of the Samaya of All Vajra-Holders," and spoke this teaching: the arising of the essence of the samaya of all vajras, called Vajra.

By the arrangement of the vajra maṇḍala,
contemplate form in the center.
Extremely dark, with a wrathful countenance,
a fierce and terrifying face displayed,
blazing with a dense blaze of fire,
fearsome and inspiring dread —
with four arms, with great exertion,
from the union of the two faculties,
this is the display of the vajra manner.

Vajra-mind and so forth are perfectly accomplished.
Through abiding in this, one accomplishes that.
By intensely arousing the Desire Vajra,
one accomplishes all siddhis.

This is the meditative absorption called "Vajra Samaya."

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi entered into the meditative absorption called
"Blessing the Samaya of Upholding All Dharmas," and spoke this teaching, called "the Splendor of the Dharma-Upholder."

By the union of the Dharma maṇḍala,
one should vividly meditate on form in the center:
red, blazing with clinging desire,
adorned with variegated ornaments,
pleasing in its four arms —
by the union of the two faculties,
meditating on its ritual method,
this is the display of the manner of desire.

The primary siddhi of the Speech Vajra, through the perfect union of the Vajra-Dharma and so forth,
is accomplished by one whose nature is compassion,
and meditation too is brought to swift fulfillment.

This is the meditative absorption called "the Splendor of the Samaya of the Dharma-Upholder."

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi entered into the meditative absorption called "Blessing the Samaya Vajra Family," and spoke this meditative absorption called "the Supreme Samaya of the Vajra Family."

By meditation on the desire maṇḍala,
form is to be placed in the center:
the lord of all, peaceful, of golden color,
contemplated with three eyes and possessing vows.
Like a crystal utterly pure in every way,
with masses of fire-flame blazing everywhere,
through the ritual of the four arms,
what is to be meditated is accomplished swiftly.

The ultimate vajra, the actual siddhi of wealth —
through abiding in this, one accomplishes that.
This, of all mantras,
is the essence of the meditative absorption of liberation.

The meditation on body, speech, and mind —
— this is the meditative absorption called "The Samaya of the Vajra Spear," an emanation of Vajrasattva.

For as long as form is perfectly united,
that itself is renowned as divinity.
Again, by this very mode,

it becomes the ritual of generation.

Thus declared the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

By the differentiation of one's own mantra syllables,
or else by the vidyā of the family,
by the mantra of the lord of the family,
or by the king of vidyās of one who holds the vow,
by the mantra endowed with all karma,
and by the uṣṇīṣa mantra — these are to be contemplated in full.
All of these mantras
are declared to be the secret suchness.

Thus declared the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi.

By the differentiation of the ritual of pacification,
it is renowned as the mantra of the family.
For what pertains to increase, the mantra of the family,
through meditation, will certainly accomplish it.
For the ritual of bringing under power,
it is to be meditated by the king of vidyās.
By the mantra endowed with all karma,
one fully meditates on wrathful action.
For the ritual of expulsion,
one contemplates by means of the uṣṇīṣa.
By one who knows the mantras — the stabbing of the kīla and so forth — male messengers and female messengers are to be visualized.

Thus declared the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi.

By way of the mode of five rays of light,
one is to meditate upon that with conceptual focus.
Otherwise, there is simply no siddhi.
This is to be understood by all who meditate.
By the differentiation of karmic rites of the family,
this is the visualization of the maṇḍalas.
By the differentiation of the mantra syllables,
what is to be meditated will be accomplished as siddhi.
The very fine strand at the center of the heart —
this is the visualization of the maṇḍalas.

By the differentiation of the mantra syllables,
through meditation, siddhi will be attained.

The very fine strand at the center of the heart —
the visualization of the maṇḍalas —
by the differentiation arranged above,
this is the supreme mode of meditative concentration.

From the union of white, black, and red,
all meditative concentrations are to be examined.
Otherwise, there is simply no siddhi:
all mantras are to be recited without exception.

By the differentiation of the HŪṢ syllable and the OM syllable, SVĀHĀ, HŪṢ, and other forms —
having performed the generation ritual,
whatever approach-practice one intends should be firmly accomplished.

For the three families as well, the HŪṢ syllable
and the OM syllable are the supreme gnosis-family.
The mantra syllables and so forth
are to be placed on the forehead and fully contemplated.

Thus declared the Blessed One Vajradhara.

Through the four-session practice and so forth,
to the Vajra Bearer in the form of amṛta
one is to devote oneself with joy and remain in it.
This is the teaching on the mode of siddhi.

In the accomplishment practice, the form of one's own deity,
to the Vajra Bearer in the form of amṛta —
in the gathering of the approach and accomplishment,
this is the supreme mode of siddhi.

For one engaged in one's own accomplishment activity,
perfectly united with the form of the lord,
supremely accomplished during the time of approach-practice,
perfectly united with the uṣṇīṣa form,
perfectly united with the form of one's own deity
as dense blazing fire-flame —
by the differentiation of the subtle vajra,

the buddhas of the three times abide.

All siddhis endowed with renown —
through this very practice one attains awakening.
It is to be accomplished in the supreme degree,
and the qualities of great siddhi will arise.

Thus declared the Blessed One Samantabhadra, the Great Vajradhara.

Here ends the twenty-first chapter, the meditative absorption entitled "The Great King of Conceptual Wisdom, Victorious in Non-Duality and Equality — Gathered from All Mantras."

Then all the Blessed Tathāgatas gathered together once more, and Vajrapāṇi the bodhisattva, having perfectly made offering to all the Tathāgatas with an arrangement of vajras of delight, was caused by the Blessed One to set forth this vajra-method of definitively generating the path of the vajra of speech, the Dharma-speech of gnosis. He declared:

The secret, pure, without object —
the ground of all wisdom and qualities —
throughout, the gnosis that is selfless —
I bow and praise the secret gnosis.

The secret suchness, endowed with meaning —
the supreme conduct, a great ocean —
from every direction, wishes perfectly arise —
I bow and praise the vajra gnosis.

How the principal gnosis abides —
the vajra, undivided, dwelling in the three — obtaining the perfection that is beyond family —
I bow and praise the conduct of awakening.

The supreme among all born sentient beings —
causing buddhas to enter perfect awakening — intrinsically pure, the supreme of purity —
I bow and praise the protector of sentient beings.

The dharmakāya, great liberation —
the wish-fulfilling jewel, supremely seen —
the one who delights all sentient beings —
I bow and praise the pure conduct.

Then again the bodhisattva known as "Vajra of the Pledge of the Wish-Fulfilling Jewel" addressed the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi with these words: Blessed One, what are the various and particular qualities of the Dharma that are to be individually desired upon seeing that bodhisattva?

Then Vajrapāṇi, the lord of all the Tathāgatas, declared to that bodhisattva:

Know without doubt and in equanimity —

regard the buddhas as Dharma.

Perceiving without doubt —

regard all phenomena as desired.

Perceiving without doubt —

regard all conditioned things as desired.

It is as follows. What is called a son of the family is one who is perfectly established on the bodhisattva ground of the cloud of Dharma. To that one, there is no conceptuality and no doubt with regard to the dharmakāya of all the Tathāgatas, the saṃbhogakāya of all the Tathāgatas, and the nirmāṇakāya of all the Tathāgatas — thinking "this is mine" — and all phenomena have become seen as open as the sky. In brief, son of the family, such a bodhisattva is to be called "Vajra Gnosis."

Then all the Blessed Tathāgatas were filled with wonder, and bowing in homage to the supreme being of all the Blessed Tathāgatas, they spoke these words: Blessed One, how will this bodhisattva who practices the conduct of mantra come to have faith in the ultimate secret?

And further: how will it be that all those called Blessed Tathāgatas, throughout the world-realm of the great trichiliocosm, perfectly attain complete and manifest awakening as buddhas, the Blessed Ones? All the Tathāgatas declared: A single Blessed Tathāgata will attain perfect and complete awakening.

The vajra-bearer asked: How will perfect and complete awakening be attained? It is like this — moreover, the sentient beings who form the ground, who have become as particles of dust of the world-realm of the great trichiliocosm, will all attain perfect and complete awakening. In just the same way, Blessed Tathāgatas all, this manner of Vajrapāṇi is to be understood.

Then those bodhisattvas, having obtained wonder, joy, and supreme delight, uttered this song in that very tone:

Emaho! Gnosis, great gnosis —
the great vajra is supremely beheld!
By the wondrous world,
the eye of gnosis has been fully purified!

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, lord of all Tathāgatas, entered into the meditative absorption called the Vajra of Non-Duality Equipoise with All Tathāgatas. The very moment he entered that absorption, the Blessed One sent forth hundreds of thousands of millions of light rays as numerous as the grains of sand in the river Ganges, filling the east, south, and all the remaining directions — directions beyond telling, and beyond telling again — filling as many buddha-fields as there are fine particles of dust in that many Ganges-river sands, with the gnosis of the three bodies.

Then those Tathāgatas came and proclaimed this awakening mind:

Awakening's intrinsic nature is perfectly attained.
The bodhisattva bestows the essence.
Dwelling in the expanse of space,
the vajra awakening supremely abides.

In phenomena devoid of defining marks,
conceptual elaborations simply do not exist.
By the gnosis of the vajra's intrinsic nature,
it is stainless, like the sky.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi arose from meditative absorption and called out to Vajradharma: "Great being, do you see that which is the sacred commitment?" "Blessed One, I see it."

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, having clearly discerned the precious casket of that great being's body, speech, and mind, caused all the Tathāgatas and the bodhisattvas to enter into his own heart. And just as the Blessed One, lord of all Tathāgatas, had done, so he united his own body, speech, and mind like the sky, and they came to abide perfectly.

This completes the twenty-second chapter, called The Vajra of Completely Pure Essential Nature of Body, Speech, and Mind of All Tathāgatas.

The great tantra of awakening-mind, the noble king of tantras, called the Victorious in Equipoise of Non-Duality, is complete.

From among the hand-copies of the great abbot Tharpa the Translator, five loose folios having been found that were previously translated, a fresh translation was begun after finding the remaining Sanskrit exemplars at Nyong Toed Mön Dro temple. The true master who has attained fearless confidence in the outer, inner, and other three modes of the glorious Kālacakra urged and acted as patron, and the scribe for the translation made by Butön was the monk Rinchen Gyaltsen, Chödrak Pelzangpo — the eye of the world, whose intelligence is extremely refined in the manner of grammatical analysis of the well-composed language, a great spiritual friend.

To expose that which is not Dharma
but has been altered to resemble a tantra,
and in order to spread the light of the true Dharma,
this was translated to the best of our ability.

A commentary opening up the meaning of this,
and Sanskrit exemplars for comparison, were not found.
The meaning is profound, the language difficult to understand,
and my Sanskrit was not fully mastered —
so wherever word and meaning have not come out quite right,
I ask the learned to forbear,
and those who in future speak both languages:
if you know of impurities, I beg you correct them.

Whatever virtue I have gained from translating this great tantra —
by that may all beings without limit
come to be the great Vajradhara himself.

Furthermore, regarding this text, from the beginning one folio is missing; if it is found, it should be translated. The view held by some that this is a secret exclusive text, not held in common, appears to be genuinely mistaken. May this quickly dry up the great ocean of saṃsāra's suffering.

Regarding this tantra, there exist two differing translations by the second omniscient one, the venerable Butön. This present one is the later translation, copied from that very Dewa.

It should be known that from the point where the Indian manuscript was consulted up through the gaps, wherever lines of verse are incomplete — missing one or two metrical feet here and there — a mark in the style of Chinese marginal notation has been inserted in the Mongolian manuscript copies to indicate those lacunae.

Translator's Notes

- The two bodhisattva names rendered here as "who, the very instant the awakening mind of equality arose, turned the wheel of Dharma" and "Gaganagañja" correspond to "Samatacitta-utpāda-dharma-cakra-pravartana" and "Gaganagañja" respectively. The first is a descriptive epithet functioning as a name and is rendered descriptively rather than transliterated, as the Tibetan itself provides the full description. Gaganagañja means "Treasury of the Sky" and is given here in Sanskrit as the standard canonical form matching the Tibetan.

The phrase rendered "pledged wisdom" translates the Tibetan compound for samaya-jñāna, the wisdom of the sacred pledge or commitment, a technical Vajrayāna term referring to the wisdom associated with the samaya bond consecrated through the vajra blessing of all Tathāgatas.

- The phrase rendered "the five abodes of all the Tathāgatas" reflects the Tibetan "de bzhin gshegs pa thams cad kyi gnas lnga las byung ste," likely referring to the five seats or stations associated with the five buddha families — a technical tantric notion whose precise referent may vary by commentary.

The line "in a thousand different ways" renders "rnam pa stong du rnam par bsnyil bar gyur to" — literally "they tumbled or swayed in a thousand aspects"; this is a conventional description of an ecstatic swoon upon hearing profound Dharma, well attested in sūtra and tantra literature.

The repeated verse "Because you are the vajra-Dharma, excellent are you" and its continuation include the rubric "gong bzhin du sbyor ro" — meaning "and so apply the same formula as above" — which is a redactional instruction rather than spoken text; it has been rendered accordingly in the translation.

- The mantra "Om sarva-tathāgata-jñāna-kula-svabhāvātmako 'ham" is rendered directly from the Sanskrit transliterated in the Tibetan. It means "Om, I am one whose essential nature is the gnosis-lineage of all the Tathāgatas."

The final verse ends mid-sentence in the source text as given, suggesting the passage continues. No meaning has been invented to complete it.

The phrase rendered "milk and yogurt spread throughout" is a ritual detail describing the preparatory surface or support for the maṇḍala; the exact physical referent belongs to the tantric commentarial tradition and is not further glossed here.

- The phrase rendered "light equal to the four sharp ones" is genuinely obscure. The Tibetan reads "rno po bzhi dang mnyam pa'i 'od," meaning "light equal to the four sharp ones." The "four sharp ones" likely refers to four sharp-pointed or brilliant aspects of the vajra, possibly its four faces or points, but the precise technical referent in this tantra's system is uncertain and would require recourse to a root commentary to determine precisely.

The repeated alternation between solar and lunar maṇḍala visualization throughout this passage follows a standard completion-stage or generation-stage pattern of mutually reinforcing solar and lunar disc meditations; the translation preserves the structural repetition of the original, which is clearly intentional and rhythmically significant in the ritual context.

The line rendered "the very source of all the Tathāgatas" (de bzhin gshegs pa thams cad kyi 'byung gnas) at the close likely refers to the primordial ground or source-nature of all buddhas, stirred into active manifestation by the light rays — a standard tantric trope of awakening latent buddha-nature throughout the cosmos.

- The full title of the tantra appears at the chapter colophon as "the Great Tantra of the Non-Dual Equality, the Victorious One" (Gnyis su med pa mnyam pa nyid rnam par rgyal ba'i rtog pa chen po). The chapter itself is titled "the chapter on arrangement" (rnam par 'god pa'i le'u). These are kept as rendered in context.

The syllable འཕྲུལ (the syllable VAM) recurs throughout as the seed-syllable central to this practice; in the Yoga-tantra and Anuttara systems the syllable VAM is consistently associated with the lunar disk and the wisdom lineage, which accords with the doctrinal content here.

The phrase འཕྲུལ་ལོ་མཆོག་ལྷོ་ལོ་མཆོག་ (measuring a chariot-wheel) begins what appears to be a continuation after the chapter colophon, suggesting this passage straddles a chapter boundary; the second portion beginning with the chariot-wheel image is the opening of the next chapter or section.

- The phrase rendered "the skilled practitioner in ritual procedure draw it forth" translates a technical Vajrayāna expression for eliciting or invoking a visualization through correct sequence; the verb "draw forth" attempts to capture both the extraction and the ritual setting.

The term rendered "perfect noose" (Tib. zhags pa yang dag sbyor) refers to the pāśa, the lasso or noose held by certain tantric deities as a symbol of binding and magnetizing; the translation preserves the literal image, which is a standard iconographic element in this context.

The passage ends mid-sentence in the source, consistent with a deliberate textual break before the next section of the tantra.

- The passage contains several instances of what appear to be distinctive deity-voice attributions, each closing with a formula naming the specific Tathāgata or enlightened being who has spoken. These have been rendered faithfully as prose attributions separating the verse sections.

The term rendered "king of awareness" translates rig pa'i rgyal po, a technical tantric expression referring to the sovereign vidyā or awareness-mantra principle; it is kept as a transparent rendering rather than left in Sanskrit (vidyārāja) to preserve TTS clarity.

The final lines introducing the summary of the condensed family (bsdus pa'i rigs kyi ting 'dzin) and the mention of "milk and curds" alongside the "four noble pledges" represent a shift to a transitional prose-and-verse colophon section bridging into the next chapter. The reference to milk and curds likely alludes to a specific ritual or samaya observance whose fuller context would be supplied by a commentary; no further gloss has been inserted in the body.

- The mantra "Om sarva-tathāgata-jñāna-svabhāvātmako 'haṃ" is rendered as it appears, transliterated directly from the Tibetan phonetic rendering. It means "I am the one whose essential self is the gnosis of all the Tathāgatas."

The term "piṭuka" rendered from the Tibetan phonetic "ཕིཊུཀ་" is uncertain. It may be a corruption or phonetic rendering of a Sanskrit technical term that cannot be identified with confidence from context alone; it is retained as-is rather than guessed at.

Māmakī is the consort-goddess of the vajra family; she is named without gloss as a proper name.

- The passage contains several measurement terms used as visualization distances or scales for the maṇḍala: "cubit's measure" renders khru gang, a cubit; "arm's length" renders mtho gang, a span measured from elbow to fingertip; and "arrow's range" renders rgyang grags, a unit of distance equivalent roughly to a bowshot or league. These are used here not as literal spatial distances but as graduated scales of visualization expansion in tantric practice.

The term piṭuka rendered in the preceding passage is not repeated here. The phrase "brahmin Brahmā" renders bram ze tshangs pa, which may refer either to the deity Brahmā in his aspect as the pure brahmin, or to a specific tantric form; it likely designates Brahmā as a deity visualized within the lotus at the heart.

The color-to-family correspondences at the close (white/gnosis family, black/gathered family, red/lotus family, yellow/desire family) are consistent with standard Vajrayāna family taxonomies, though the "gathered family" for black is less common and may reflect a specific textual tradition here.

- The phrase rendered "insert one's own vajra into that" continues the ritual-yogic imagery of the preceding section regarding the visualization at the tip of the vajra; the language carries deliberate tantric double meaning, which is characteristic of this literature and should be understood in its ritual context.

The mantra "Om sarva-tathāgata-dharma-jñāna-svabhāva-ātmako 'ham" is left in transliterated Sanskrit as it appears in the Tibetan in Indic script; it means approximately "I am the one whose essential nature is the Dharma-wisdom of all Tathāgatas."

The term rendered "king of awareness" translates rig pa'i rgyal po, a tantric term for the sovereign principle of pristine awareness or vidyārāja, here functioning as a deity-form generated in visualization.

"The Dharma Bearer" as an epithet of the Blessed One at one point translates chos 'chang ba, which could also be rendered "Dharma-holder" or "Vajradhara" in some contexts; here it appears as a speaker attribution rather than the deity Vajradhara specifically, though the identification is plausible.

- The passage refers to "the great deva" in the phrase joining the great form to the great deva's form. In context this almost certainly means Śiva (Mahādeva), consistent with the tantric convention of subordinating non-Buddhist deities within the maṇḍala; this reading follows the preceding passage's identification of lha chen po as Śiva.

The Sanskrit mantra Om kāmajñānasvabhāvaātmako 'ham is given as a transliteration and left intact; it means roughly "Om — I am of the essential nature of desire-wisdom."

The term karnikāra refers to the Pterospermum acerifolium tree, known for its brilliant golden-yellow blossoms; the simile indicates intense golden radiance.

The chapter colophon title "The Great Tantra of Conquest Through Nondual Equality" is a rendering of the Tibetan gnyis su med pa mnyam pa nyid rnam par rgyal ba'i rtog pa chen po; "rtog pa chen po" literally means "great tantra" in this colophon usage, following the convention of mahātantra titles.

- The phrase rendered "born of the lotus, born of the vajra" reflects the Tibetan ལོ་ཁྱུང་ལྷ་མོ་ (born of water, i.e., lotus-born) and འཇིག་རྟེན་ལྷ་མོ་ (vajra-born), which are epithets indicating the Victor's dual origination in the context of tantric family symbolism. The precise doctrinal meaning here is internal to the tantra's system and the rendering preserves the literal epithets as is standard for such contexts.

The term རྒྱུ་མཚན་ rendered as "Mātṛkā" refers to a class of fierce female deity-mothers; this is a recognized Sanskrit equivalent in the Indo-Tibetan tantric tradition.

The passage "for as long as one is truly engaged in form, for that long one becomes a queen" is terse and possibly elliptical in the original; the translation preserves the literal sense without speculation about the fuller doctrinal intent.

- This passage is among the most doctrinally and syntactically challenging in the tantric canon. Several verses appear to encode deliberate paradox and transgressive or antinomian instructions characteristic of non-dual anuttaratantra literature. The injunction to "speak untruth at all times" and to "deceive all the buddhas" are almost certainly intentional doctrinal provocations meant to be understood in the context of non-conceptual non-dual practice, not as literal prescriptions. The translator has rendered them literally, as the tradition demands, while noting this interpretive frame here.

The term rendered "the great dancer" for རྒྱལ་མཚན་འཕེལ་པ་ could alternatively refer to a specific ritual figure or epithet; its identification with a particular deity is uncertain.

The phrase rendered "those in the joyful realm" refers to Tuṣita heaven, and "the realm of bliss" refers to Sukhāvatī, the pure land of Amitābha, as the Tibetan terms implicitly indicate through their meaning rather than by naming these realms directly.

The phrase "taken as one's queen" and "the great knowledge-consort, famed as the eye" reflects tantric consort practice language; "the eye" (མཁའ་མཚན་འཕེལ་པ་, literally "renowned as the eye") is an honorific epithet, possibly connecting this figure to a specific deity.

- The chapter colophon names this text the "Great King of Conceptuality Victorious in All Respects, Equal to the Non-Dual." This is a tantra title; the Tibetan is somewhat compressed and the exact Sanskrit reconstruction is uncertain, but the rendering given follows the Tibetan closely.

The phrase rendered "one who knows the rite" translates "cho ga shes pa," which recurs as a technical refrain throughout the passage indicating the qualified ritual practitioner.

"Indranīla" is a deep blue sapphire, a standard tantric color comparison; "padmarāga" is a ruby-red gem. Both are kept in Sanskrit as they function as technical color references in visualization practice.

The final four lines present a doctrinal statement on non-conceptual meditation: the practitioner does not cognize their own form or consciousness as objects, does not attend to sounds, and the mind in that state neither arises nor repeatedly arises — pointing toward non-elaborative awareness.

- The passage is a continuation of a Vajrayāna tantric text containing explicit sexual yoga symbolism rendered in ritual technical language. The term bhaga is the Sanskrit anatomical term retained here deliberately as a standard tantric technical term; translating it otherwise would misrepresent the genre.

The phrase "white common-folk family" renders dmangs rigs dkar mo, literally the white low-caste or common-people lineage, which in tantric maṇḍala context designates a specific deity family associated with ordinary beings; this is a genuine doctrinal term, not a social designation.

The passage ends mid-sentence as supplied; the final verse is incomplete in the source.

Māmakī is one of the five buddha-consorts, associated with Akṣobhya and the vajra family; she is described here as resembling a blue lotus and as red like blood, reflecting standard iconographic descriptions found in Vajrayāna sources.

- This passage is a section of a Vajrayāna tantric text, likely from the Sarvabuddhasamāyogaḍākinījālasaṃvara or a closely related yoginī tantra cycle. The language is deliberately polyvalent, employing a system of coded correspondence in which sexual ritual vocabulary carries simultaneous outer, inner, and secret meanings; the Tibetan commentarial tradition reads these passages on multiple levels. The translation renders the literal surface of the text, as that is what is present; a full doctrinal presentation would require extensive commentary. The term rendered "inserted" for རྒྱལ་མཚན་འཕེལ་པ་ is a standard tantric technical usage referring to the union of vajra and lotus, which is the subject of the preceding passage as well. The phrase "the Blessed One, the maṇḍala of the pledges of all the Tathāgatas" is an unusual locution, treating the samaya-maṇḍala itself as the speaking authority, which is doctrinally consistent with the tantric convention of the assembly speaking as a unified enlightened body.

- The passage contains several deliberately paradoxical or antinomian formulations characteristic of tantric scripture, such as "slay all countless beings," "slay ten million buddhas," and "crush the heaps of sentient beings." These are standard tantric locutions in which "slaying" signifies the destruction of reified mental constructs and the aggregates of conceptual elaboration, not literal harm. The Tibetan commentarial tradition is unanimous on this interpretive point.

The proper name Samantaprabha rendered here for སྐུ་འོད་གསལ་པོ་ is sometimes also read as a buddha name Vairocana-type epithet meaning "Universally Luminous." The context here identifies it as the speaker, a named buddha within the assembly.

The phrase རྒྱུ་མཚན་མཆོག་མཆོག་ (translated as "countless beings") could also be read as "countless elemental spirits" (bhūtas), a reading some commentators prefer in tantric ritual contexts.

The final verse is incomplete in the Tibetan as given, ending mid-sentence; the translation reflects the text as supplied.

- The passage is from an antinomian Vajrayāna tantra, likely the Sarvatathāgatajñānaśāñcayasamayamahāguhya or a related Yoginī-tantra corpus. The "slaying," "eating," "urine," "excrement," and sexual-union imagery throughout is the standard transgressive symbolic register of such texts, where literal and coded meanings coexist. The translation renders the literal surface, which is what the text presents, while a full commentary would distinguish the inner yogic and ritual-symbolic registers.

The phrase rendered "fourth clarity" (འོད་གསལ་པོ་མཆོག་) is ambiguous — it may mean "the fourth luminosity" (referring to the fourth moment or the fourth empowerment's clear-light experience) or simply "brightly luminous"; this is a genuine interpretive crux.

"Bhaga" and "liṅga" are rendered with Sanskrit terms as the text itself employs tantric technical vocabulary for the female and male sexual principles used in the rite.

The closing verses beginning "I am Avīci, I am fearsome" represent the deity's self-declaration in non-dual voice, identifying the speaker with all states of saṃsāra and nirvāṇa simultaneously — a standard Vajrayāna non-dual affirmation.

- The passage contains several first-person declarations that appear to be liturgical speech-acts or samaya-utterances spoken in the voice of Vajrasattva or a ritual officiant identifying with Vajrasattva. The lines rendered as quoted speech beginning "I, Vajrasattva, the siddhi" and "I, the siddhi, am blessed by vajra-wisdom" reflect this internal liturgical voice rather than narrative description, and their syntax is unusually compressed in the Tibetan. The interpretation is reasonable but the precise ritual referent of "I" across these lines is genuinely ambiguous.

The final verse beginning "If the buddhas who fill the expanse of space are overcome" is doctrinally provocative. The verb here may indicate something like "subsumed," "vanquished," or "encompassed" — meaning that even if one were to surpass or incorporate all the buddhas of space, buddhahood in this life is nonetheless condensed into the figure of the vajra-master. This reading is tentative; the line may instead be a conditional hyperbole about the magnitude of the teaching's efficacy.

- The text ends mid-sentence with "In all their forms —" as the Tibetan passage itself breaks off at that point. The translation reflects this.

The chapter colophon title rendered as "Victory over All in the Non-Dual Equality" is a working translation of the tantra's name. The full Tibetan runs: gnyis su med pa mnyam pa nyid rnam par rgyal ba'i rtog pa'i rgyal po chen po, meaning roughly "the Great King of Tantras, the Victor in Equality, of Non-Duality." This is the Sarvatathāgatatattvasaṃgraha-related tantra tradition.

The "five abodes of aspect" for gnaṣ Inga is somewhat uncertain in this ritual context; it likely refers to the five buddha-families and their directional seats, which is consistent with the maṇḍala description that follows.

- The phrase rendered "the blazing dharma-holder" translates a term that could refer either to a deity who bears or upholds the Dharma, or to one who blazes with Dharma-light; the rendering here follows the sense most consistent with the maṇḍala context.

The "great wrathful one called Horse" most likely refers to Hayagrīva, the horse-headed wrathful deity; the Tibetan gives only the descriptive term here without the Sanskrit name.

The phrase translated "born from the dharmadhātu" in the west likely refers to Amitābha's lotus-family association, though the text identifies the direction as west in this instance, which is consistent with Amitābha's placement in the standard five-buddha maṇḍala.

- The term "Unnāmita" (rendered from འཕྲོལ་འཕྲོལ་པ་, meaning "upward-soaring" or "ascending") likely corresponds to a deity name in the original Sanskrit; the Tibetan is a translation of that name rather than a transliteration, so a literal rendering is given here.

The phrase "vital essence" throughout renders རྩི་ཆུ་, a technical tantric term referring to regenerative fluid used as a ritual substance in the context of desire-offering rites; this is consistent with the preceding passage's usage.

The final verse breaks off mid-description of wrathful gatekeepers, corresponding to the passage's abrupt ending in the source text.

- The term rendered "vidyā" in the gate-directions passage refers to a vidyā-goddess, a feminine tantric deity. The epithet "who cannot be overcome by any other" renders Tibetan gyi mi thub ma, a standard epithet for a wrathful goddess who subdues all others.

The figure "Pārvatī, the Mountain Lord's Lady" renders lha mo ri dbang phyug, literally "the goddess, the mighty one of the mountain," which corresponds to Pārvatī in the Śaiva system but here appears as a tantric deity in the maṇḍala corners.

The phrase "both passionate and passionless in an instant" renders chags dang chags bral skad cig ma, a technical tantric expression pointing to the non-dual union of desire and desirelessness within a single moment, characteristic of the highest yoga perspective of this text.

The passage ends mid-sentence in the Tibetan as given, so the translation also ends at that point.

- The verse section beginning "So that all may be known in suchness" is dense tantric instruction on mudrā and lineage configuration. The three lineages referenced — vajra, jewel, and lotus — correspond to the standard threefold maṇḍala family classification of the early Yoga Tantra system. The "three-pointed form" in the final verse of this section likely refers to the three-pronged vajra mudrā.

The phrase "Yadṛcchayā sūtram" appears in the Tibetan as a transliteration of Sanskrit and is retained as such; it likely refers to a specific ritual inscription formula, and its exact force in this context is uncertain.

The "five great sages with clairvoyance" in the direction of fire (southeast) is a somewhat unusual grouping; the Tibetan reads literally "five great ṛṣis with direct knowledge," which may

- The phrase rendered "in the direction of truth's absence" translates 眞無の方向, literally "in the direction of being-devoid-of-truth," which is a directional epithet for the southwest in certain tantric cosmological schemes where the direction is associated with the realm of hungry ghosts. This is consistent with the preceding verse placing the lord of hungry ghosts in a southward direction; the text here continues that placement in the southwest.

The passage ends mid-verse, as the source text breaks off at the chariot-wheel simile; the translation reflects this incompleteness.

- The term indranīla refers to the blue sapphire or a deep blue gem associated with Indra; it is left in Sanskrit as it functions as a color-standard for the light being visualized. Padmarāga similarly refers to a ruby or red lotus gem and is left in Sanskrit as a color-designation. The phrase rendered "bearer of matted locks" for raḥ pa'i cod paṇ likely refers to the jaṭāmukūṭa crown, a diadem of matted or twisted hair characteristic of certain tantric buddha forms; this is a significant iconographic detail. The final line of the passage is syntactically incomplete as the text breaks off mid-sentence, which is preserved in the translation. The repeated instruction "the one who knows the rite" renders cho ga shes pa, a standard tantric technical phrase indicating the qualified ritual practitioner. The "four abodes" and "four sessions" are standard tantric practice divisions; the precise referents of "four abodes" here are not fully specified by the passage and may depend on a commentarial tradition.

The verse on the student drawing the mother, consort, sister, and daughter refers to the tantric practice of drawing or visualizing wisdom consorts (vidyā figures) as part of the maṇḍala; the term "enjoy" (आनंदितुं) carries both ritual and contemplative resonance in this context.

- The passage is a sequence of tantric sādhanā verses prescribing visualization of oneself as Vairocana together with seed-syllable mantras corresponding to different symbolic implements and families. The transliterated mantras — Khaḍgaṃ, Padmaṃ, Trīśūlaṃ, Vajraṃ, Aṃkuśaṃ, Pāśaṃ, Utpalaṃ, Vajro Hāṃ, Mudro Hāṃ, and Vistara — are kept in their Sanskrit or pseudo-Sanskrit forms as they appear in the Tibetan, since they function as liturgical seed syllables rather than translatable words.

The phrase rendered "even a buddha would not see it" refers to the visualization being so subtle and internalized that it is imperceptible even to a buddha — a standard hyperbolic expression for a supremely refined inner visualization.

The "seven grounds" refers to the seven bodhisattva bhūmis, here indicating lordship over them as a fruit of the practice.

- The passage contains a list of wrathful deities with specialized tantric epithets. "Vajra-nails" renders Tibetan Vajra-sen-mo, a wrathful dākinī-like messenger figure; this is a tentative identification based on context. The line rendered "the vajra that is indivisible of the three" is structurally ambiguous — "three" may refer to the three vajras of body, speech, and mind, or to the three realms, and either reading is defensible. The phrase rendered "she" and "her company" in the secret-offering section uses gender-neutral Tibetan forms; the gendered rendering follows the explicit identification of the summoned being as a female figure in the preceding lines.

- The verse line "འདི་ལྟར་སྐབས་དྲུག་ནང་།" rendered as "within six months" is a striking claim — the attainment of buddhahood in six months — which appears in certain tantric contexts as a literal or symbolic timeframe for practice. This is preserved as stated without softening.

The phrase "तत्रैव महती प्रीतिरिति" rendered as "that very great passion" is doctrinally notable: in tantric contexts, great passion (mahārāga) is transmuted gnosis rather than an affliction. The passage treats it as a positive, revelatory principle, which is reflected in the translation.

The mantra transliterations follow the Tibetan phonetic spellings as given; minor orthographic variations between the two nearly identical mantras (the Ucchūṣma-krodha mantras) are preserved as they appear in the source.

- The verse beginning "I, who work strenuously upon the all-base" renders a difficult line in which the all-base consciousness (ālayavijñāna) functions as the grammatical locus of effort; the implication is that this mantra-set acts upon the deepest stratum of mind, bringing buddhas and other awakened beings down into presence — that is, invoking their descent or arrival. This is the most interpretively uncertain moment in the passage.

The mantra phrase rendered loosely as "bringing down buddhas and more" (sang rgyas la sogs 'bebs par 'gyur) refers to the power of mantra recitation to invoke or draw down the buddhas and associated beings.

- The phrase "the syllable Ṭa" in the verse following the "terrifies all maṇḍalas" absorption is a literal rendering of "ṬṬṬṬṬ" which appears to be a syllabic reference within a mantra or classification context; its precise significance is uncertain and may relate to a tantric syllable-taxonomy known to the tradition.

The text ends mid-sentence with "proclaimed this king of vidyās" as the source passage breaks off there; this is not an error in translation but a continuation point.

- The passage contains two consecutive meditative absorptions both named "the vajra of the arising of the white," which appears to be a scribal duplication in the source text. Both are rendered faithfully as they appear.

The verse section is dense with tantric technical language and the names of wrathful deities. "Yamāntaka" renders the Tibetan "gshin rje mthar byed" literally "the one who makes an end of Yama, lord of death." "Caikaṭa" is transliterated from the Tibetan phonetic rendering; it is a wrathful form associated with this cycle. "Wrathful spike" renders "khro bo gzeḡs ma," a specific tantric implement or deity-form.

The final line is incomplete in the source passage and the translation ends accordingly.

- The passage "rdo dang phub ma yang dag ldan" contains the term "phub ma," which may refer to a specific ritual substance or implement. In the context of expulsion rites, it likely designates a thorn-plant or sharp implement. The rendering here as "thorn-plant" is consistent with the surrounding references to thorns.

The phrase "nyi ma pa'i 'dab ma" rendered as "lotus petal" follows a plausible reading but may refer specifically to a leaf of the nyima tree or a sun-lotus; the exact botanical referent is uncertain.

The final line breaks off mid-passage as the source text is incomplete at this point.

- The phrase "deba m̐p̐ti" appearing in the Tibetan is a phonetic transliteration of a Sanskrit term or proper name that is not fully transparent. It may be a corrupt or abbreviated rendering of a name or technical phrase; the translation treats it as a term for reverential attendance rendered contextually.

The section contains instructions and warnings about the disciple-master relationship in the tantric context, including severe karmic consequences. The phrase about "attacking Brahmā with both hands" refers to a transgression of touching or striking a Brahmin, used here as a hyperbolic comparison for the gravity of the stated offense.

The final lines of the passage break off mid-stanza and have been rendered accordingly.

- This passage belongs to the Mahāvairocana Tantra or a closely related early Vajrayāna scripture. Several prescriptions here are deliberately transgressive antinomian instructions characteristic of certain tantric ritual contexts and should be understood within that doctrinal frame rather than literally; the tradition's own commentaries treat many of these as symbolic or restricted to specific initiated contexts.

The term rendered "life-thread" for རྩ་ལྷ་མཚན་ is a plant ingredient used in fire-offering rituals; its precise botanical identity is uncertain but it appears paired with ritual poisons in fire-offering lists.

"Tinkā wood" for རྩ་ལྷ་མཚན་ is a transliteration; the Sanskrit botanical equivalent is uncertain in this context.

The phrase རྩ་ལྷ་མཚན་ refers to an unidentified ritual substance or possibly a mantra syllable rendered phonetically; it is left transliterated as m̐tr̐tam since its exact referent is unclear.

"Linga" for རྩ་ལྷ་མཚན་ retains the Sanskrit since this is a ritual object or image in the subjugation rite described.

The final two lines — eating feces and urine, and giving happiness to all beings — form the abrupt opening of the following chapter on practitioners' vows, likely representing a deliberate juxtaposition of antinomian and altruistic precepts characteristic of this tantric genre.

- The verse section is metrically loose and the referents shift rapidly, making it syntactically ambiguous throughout. The phrase rendered "born truly from the nine wounds" is a literal rendering of a phrase that likely refers to the nine bodily orifices, a concept occurring in tantric ritual contexts where substances from these orifices are consumed. The passage as a whole belongs to a transgressive antinomian tantric register in which the "eating" of attachment, aversion, and delusion is simultaneously literal ritual consumption of substances and a metaphor for the transmutation of the three poisons into wisdom. The refrain "sovereign lord of the supreme ground of all" translates kun mchog sa yi dbang phyug, which could alternatively be rendered "the sovereign lord of the earth of supreme excellence." The identity of the speaker in the prose section shifts between Vajrapāṇi and Vajradhara in ways that may reflect scribal fluidity in the source text.

- The passage contains a series of distinct meditative absorption sections, each closing with a colophon-style ending marking the completion of a particular samādhi. These are rendered as natural breaks in the prose-verse flow rather than as formal headers to preserve TTS readability.

The phrase rendered "jambu-river gold" reflects the standard Buddhist simile of jāmbūnada gold, the gold of the Jambu river, proverbially the most brilliant gold; this is the meaning of dzam bu na da in the Tibetan transliteration.

The term indranīla refers to the dark-blue sapphire, literally "Indra's blue," a standard jewel comparison in tantric literature for deep blue radiance.

The final line is syntactically incomplete in the source, ending mid-sentence at "threshold of the four arising jewels." This is a genuine break in the transmitted text as given; the passage continues beyond what was supplied here.

- The epithet rendered "Homa-Vajra" translates the Tibetan sbyin sreg rdo rje, literally "fire-offering vajra," functioning here as a title of the Blessed One in the colophon-like closing formula. Similarly, "Secret Fire Offering, Vajradhara the Great" renders gsang ba'i sbyin sreg rdo rje 'chang chen po in the final closing line.

The term paṭṭi in the list of weapons is a loanword retained from Sanskrit; its exact identity as a blade or sword is uncertain in this context.

The phrase "the sixteen vowels" renders ā li bcu drug, the standard Tibetan designation for the sixteen Sanskrit vowels, here associated with the syllables of the vajra visualization.

- The passage is a chapter-colophon followed by several short tantric chapters, each introduced by a stock formula of entering meditative absorption and then expressing the content in verse. The compound "འཇིགས་པའི་མཆོད་པོ་ལྷན་པའི་མཆོད་པོ་," literally "declared as the chief of those with skulls," refers to a skull-crowned deity, likely a wrathful form associated with the Hevajra or Cakrasaṃvara class; it is rendered descriptively. The syllable Aṃ is left in transliterated form as it functions as a seed-syllable (bīja). The phrase "the two faculties" throughout likely refers to the union of wisdom and method in tantric practice, a standard formulation. The translation ends mid-sentence as the source passage itself ends mid-sentence.

- The phrase rendered "the stabbing of the kīla" refers to the ritual action of driving a ritual dagger (kīla, Skt. kīla) as a wrathful rite; the Tibetan "pur gdab" confirms this standard tantric usage.

The repeated stanza about "the very fine strand at the center of the heart" appears twice in the source text without variation; this repetition is preserved faithfully as it stands in the Tibetan.

The closing attribution "Samantabhadra, the Great Vajradhara" renders the Tibetan honorific compound Kun tu bzang po rdo rje 'chang chen po, identifying the speaker as Samantabhadra in his Vajradhara aspect — a standard Nyingma identification of the dharmakāya buddha.

- The phrase rendered "the principal gnosis" translates འཇིགས་པའི་མཆོད་པོ་, literally "the gnosis of the principal or chief one," which likely carries a Śaiva resonance (འཇིགས་པའི་མཆོད་པོ་ can echo Īśvara or Maheśvara as "the Lord"), here reappropriated in a Vajrayāna doctrinal context. This is a consequential ambiguity but does not alter the translation meaningfully given the Buddhist doctrinal frame.

The passage on a single Tathāgata attaining awakening while all ground-sentient-beings equivalent to the dust-particles of the trichilocosm also attain awakening reflects a classic nondual Vajrayāna teaching on the identity of the awakening of one buddha with the awakening of all beings. The syntax is deliberately paradoxical and has been rendered faithfully rather than smoothed over.

- The colophon's phrase "second omniscient one" refers to Butön Rinchendrup (1290–1364), a renowned Tibetan scholar-translator. The epithet "second omniscient" was a high honorific applied to him.

The phrase "Vajradharma" renders the vocative form of the Tibetan "rdo rje chos," a bodhisattva figure addressed here by Vajrapāṇi.

The closing scribal note states that one folio from the beginning of this text is missing and should be translated if recovered, and that the present copy follows Butön's later translation as opposed to his earlier rendering.

- The phrase rendered "a mark in the style of Chinese marginal notation" translates "□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□" literally as "a sign of the Chinese type," referring to a scribal convention — likely a bracket, gap-marker, or filler symbol — used in Mongolian manuscript copies to flag incomplete verse lines where the Indian (Sanskrit) exemplar was damaged or unclear. The precise form of this scribal mark is not specified in the text.
