The Analysis of the Secret Tantras, Called the Taming of the Three Fierce Ones, known in Sanskrit as the Vibhaṅgaguhyatantrāṇāṃ Trirudradamaṇaṃ and in Tibetan as Gsang ba'i rgyud rnam kyi rnam par 'byed pa drag po gsum 'dul, is a tantric text belonging to the Kangyur, where it is catalogued as Toh 455. The text concerns the analysis and classification of secret tantras, framed around the taming of three fierce or wrathful beings, and opens with Vajrapāṇi inquiring into the secret meaning of practice, abode, and characteristics as declared by the awakened buddha. Its verses describe a fearsome, multi-faced and multi-armed deity set amid dramatic landscapes including iron-peak mountains, dense forests, and stūpas, situating the work firmly within the tradition of wrathful tantric practice. The text was translated from Sanskrit into Tibetan by an Indian master together with the monk-translator Dharma Sangpo.

translated by the Indian master and the Tibetan monk-translator Dharma Sangpo.

Homage to the gentle vajra, Mañjuśrī.

In the Indian language: Vibhaṅgaguhyatantrāṇāṃ Trirudradamaṇaṃ Nāma.

In the Tibetan language: The Analysis of the Secret Tantras, Called the Taming of the Three Fierce Ones.

Then Vajrapāṇi

made this correct inquiry into the secret meaning:

the practice, the abode, and the characteristics that the perfectly awakened buddha declared.

Possessed of wisdom, compassion, and the secret empowerment, with iron-peak mountain, bird-shading rock, dense forest, and the interior of a stūpa — three faces, six arms, greatly fearsome, gnashing white fangs, dark-complexioned, white on the right, with the color of one enraged, breathing out flames while crying Hūṃ, red-gold on the left, with a laughing face, eyes red like a mass of fire, a face like the orb of the full moon — the head adorned with a yellow conch-bearing lord of wealth, wearing bright red ear-ornaments of joy and near-joy, shoulders adorned with lotus, water deity, and white, with peacock-feathered headdress, clan-bearing and dark, with his hands in the fierce vajra-pointing gesture, and with clasped palms he subdues the māras, holding a black serpent.

Three-faced, greatly fearsome, perfectly marked by the three enlightened bodies, tamed by three messengers.

Antidote to nāgas, lord of yakṣas, subduer of māras, messenger of Brahmā — upon the moon and sun:
a golden throne of white elephant Karka.
The golden-hued Śakra (Indra) holds a vajra, Brahmā holds a sword and a lotus, the nāga-tamer holds a black serpent.

The subduer of māras stands upon the sun and the lord of gods, the yakṣa upon the moon and upon power, the nāga-tamer upon a mountain peak and within the ocean, with a coiled black serpent, possessed of strength, upon that which is pressed down by sky and mountain.
Golden-hued, with two powers, upon a golden throne, feet set upon an eight-part lion-throne, pressing down Mount Meru, his body blazing with masses of fire, light shimmering, a wrathful one radiating through the three realms, the body of the assembled buddhas — to him I pay homage.

Then the secret maṇḍala, endowed with the light of vajra and masses of fire, arising from suchness, from space and the elements, the abode endowed with the eight charnel grounds, arising from the seed syllable of the lord — from moon, sun, skull, and vajra, the great chief bearing the signs of the fierce one, beautifully entwined about the body, the great tamer of the violent, chief of the scent-eaters (gandharvas):

holding a blazing white trident, white light entwined about the body.

The destroyer holds a blazing razor knife.

The protector, majestic lord of Yama (the god of death):
yellow-hued, holding a staff, tamer of Yama, radiant yellow form entwined about the body, holding a copper knife like a rainbow, roaring with the sound of thunder, chief of nāgas, red-hued, taming nāgas with a serpent-lasso, the goddess of sound entwined about the body, holding a red cutting knife.

Wrathful activity, lord of yakṣas:
dark green, taming yakṣas with a spear, wind-exhaling green form entwined about the body, holding a blazing wheel in hand.

The hook of attraction is the iron hook, the iron hook;
the lord of the lasso of gathering is the lasso, the lasso;
the iron chain of binding is the iron chain, the iron chain;
the pacifying bell of peace is the bell, the bell.

On the wheels of union-bliss, enjoyment, Dharma, and emanation, with blazing seeds,
skillful means and wisdom are kindled and sustained.
From the emission and gathering of sun and moon, the nature of the drop is indestructible.

This is the first chapter from the work called The Analysis of the Secret Tantras: The Taming of the Three Fierce Ones.

Then, what is to be correctly explained:
Seize these secret mantras yourself — for the accomplishment of all activities and the pacification of misdeeds, for the cowing of nāgas and yakṣas and the complete pacification of all māras, the mantra of the vajra-bearing one, blessed by the buddhas of the three times, shall be set forth.

That is to say: Bho bho pannāga adhipataye, idānīm lambara dhara śarīraṃ, Vajrapāṇi hṛdayaṃ.

Yasmātikramatha mākuloḥsādanaṃ bhāviṣyanti. Tadyathā: Buddha buddha, vibiddha vibiddha, mātikramatha, hara hara nāgānām, prahara prahara nāgānām, chinda chinda nāgaḥṛdayāni, bhinda bhinda nāgamarmāṇini, viśīryantu nāgaśarīrāṇi, visphoṭaya nāganayānāni. Tadyathā: Hūṃ phaṭ. Nāgavidāraṇāya hūṃ phaṭ. Nāgotsādanāya hūṃ phaṭ. Nīlāṃbarasanāya hūṃ phaṭ. Apratihatavalaparagrāmāya phaṭ. Kṛtāntāya phaṭ. Kṛtāntarūpāya phaṭ. Roṣaṇāya phaṭ. Trasanāya phaṭ. Kuṣmāṇḍotsādanāya phaṭ. Pretapiśācavināśakarāya phaṭ. Yakṣāpasmāravināśakarāya phaṭ. Hasa hasa, dhara dhara, mārāya mārāya, nāśāya nāśāya, sarvaVighnāṃ, vināśakarāya phaṭ. Sarvaśatrūsamghavināśakarāya phaṭ. Nīlāṃbaradhara Vajrapāṇirājñāpayati svāhā.

This is the secret mantra of the garland.

Proclaimed by buddhas as numerous as the sands of the Ganges River, this knowledge mantra (vidyā) purifies all misdeeds, overcomes all that is contrary, and accomplishes all activities. It is accomplished by one who holds the knowledge mantra and who possesses the sacred commitment (samaya).

For that, one must be respectful toward the guru, have faith in the chosen deity and the Three Jewels, hold the awakening mind and the vow, be reverent toward deities and mantras, be continuously possessed of yogic practice, and be diligent in the meaning of the tantra's intent — then all activities will be accomplished.

The bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, acting in accordance with the Blessed One's command, made this request to the Blessed One: "When one has transgressed the sacred commitments, the activities are not accomplished — they are without purity and without purpose. Where then will the result arise?" The Blessed One replied: it becomes an inexhaustible fruit of suffering in the vajra hell.

Vajrapāṇi then asked the Blessed One: "For how great a measure of time will one experience suffering there?" The Blessed One replied: "Excellent! Excellent, O Vajrapāṇi, great bodhisattva, great being! Do not be afraid. This has distressed the hearts of all the Tathāgatas, and by acting contrary to their minds, one will be liberated at the very moment Vajrāsana, the seat of awakening, is shaken apart."

Vajrapāṇi asked: "Blessed One, when will Vajrāsana be destroyed?" The Blessed One replied: "When all sentient beings throughout the realm of space have attained the fruit of buddhahood, Vajrāsana will be destroyed and liberation will come. The intermediate state and the places of birth will also be destroyed."

The secret mantra for that is arranged by placing the syllable A upon a moon disc, and the pure mantra of the nature of reality (dharmatā) is recited:

Namaḥ samanta vajrāṇāṃ sarvadharmata vajrasattva hūṃ.

Facing the ten directions, one joins the palms in the vajra gesture and makes supplication through the light of primordial wisdom, and one should contemplate oneself as having the form of Vajrasattva. Reciting Oṃ Vajrasattva hūṃ one hundred thousand times, the breakage of root sacred commitments will be pacified.

Vajra, vajra, great and terrifying, mirror, mirror, clear-bodied one,
three-faced, six-armed, greatly fearsome, bearing weapons — to you I bow and offer praise.

Tathāgata, thus-gone, dharmadhātu, dharmadhātu, perfectly pure,
three-faced, six-armed, bearing weapons —
to the Tathāgata I bow and offer praise.

Separately discerning, free from all conceptuality, lotus unstained, lord of the lotus, three-faced, six-armed, crying with a horse's neigh,
three-faced, six-armed, bearing weapons —
born of the ocean, to your form I bow and offer praise.

Blazing with the splendor of jewel and beryl (vaiḍūrya), equal, body of the wisdom of equanimity,
three-faced, six-armed, bearing weapons —
to the ocean of jewels I bow and offer praise.

Body of action, performing enlightened activities, master of accomplishing each and every deed,
three-faced, six-armed, bearing weapons —
to the ocean of enlightened activities I bow and offer praise.

Oṃ anantapara svāhā. Oṃ sumbha ni sumbha hūṃ. Ākarṣaya bandhaya svāhā. Hayagrīva bandha śoka svāhā. Oṃ apare aparājita svāhā. Roṣaṇāya bhyaḥ phaṭ.

Then the secret mantra of the gods is to be recited. Oṃ vajra krodha trailokya vijaya hūṃ phaṭ. Mārāya citta citta rbad rbad. Oṃ vajra krodha mahākālāya hūṃ phaṭ. Citta la krodhī duñja. Oṃ vajra krodha nāga hūṃ phaṭ. Mārāya rakta rṅgubs rṅgubs. Oṃ vajra krodha amṛte hūṃ phaṭ. Mārāya sod sod rbad.

Then the vidyā offered by the eight classes of gods and spirits, the goddesses and rākṣasas: Mahādeva mārāya sod sod. Mahāyakṣa asura mārāya hana hana. Nāgarāja mārāya jaḥ jaḥ. Mahāmaṇi mārāya rṅgubs rṅgubs. Mahābhruṃ mārāya tiṣṭha tiṣṭha. Mahāyakṣa mārāya bhinda bhinda. Kharga mārāya khos khos. Mahābrahma deye phaṭ. Māraṇa sod sod. Māraṇa bying bying. Māraṇa mugs mugs. Māraṇa hala hala. Māraṇa dhuna dhuna. Māraṇa myos myos. Māraṇa bying bying. Thum ri li li. Thum ri li li. Jaḥ jaḥ.

With a fine and excellent vase, three medicinal plants, diverse herbal medicines, leaves of the khadira tree, and in the hollow of an iron vajra, the secret mantra is to be recited.

Into the hollow spout of meteoric iron, to cut off clouds and hail, this secret mantra is to be recited.

Tadyathā. Oṃ ṭakki cati guhyā li miṣa śa gugu. Śati biti. Huya huya. Puruta svāhā. Oṃ vajrapāṇi vajratākini nāga he he. Huya huya. Hulu hulu. Purute purute svāhā. Having spoken thus, all were brought under subjugation.

This concludes the chapter on secret mantras, the second chapter of the text called Taming the Three Fierce Ones, an Exposition of the Secret Tantra.

Then the proper rite is explained. Upon a maṇḍala adorned with flowers, along with a stūpa containing sacred relics, a blue vase bound with a neck-cord, and the five offerings, those who are practitioners, observing fasting and purity, and having clearly seen the sequence of dream omens, shall recite mustard-seed mantras over the sick. The Blessed One, the Protector, with three red faces —

With six arms bearing vajras, the left hand making the threatening gesture, the wrathful joined palms strike terror, the lower hands crushing a deadly serpent upon Mount Meru.

In his retinue stands a great yakṣa:

a flesh-eating, supremely fearsome one with matted locks, with a yellow face and a lion's face, a female yakṣa, with donkey's ears, the ears drooping down, the matted hair standing upright, with a sword's edge.

The yakṣa retinue numbers five hundred.

Yakṣa-vidāraṇāya hūṃ phaṭ. Yakṣa-krodha-sādhanaṇāya hūṃ phaṭ.
Yakṣa-nīlāṃ-vasanāya hūṃ phaṭ. Yakṣa-pratihata-bālāya hūṃ phaṭ.
Yakṣa-parākramāya phaṭ. Yakṣa-kṛtāntāya phaṭ. Yakṣa-kṛtānta-rūpāya phaṭ.
Yakṣa-roṣaṇāya phaṭ.

Having recited these, one praises them over water and scatters it, and thereby one is freed from affliction by yakṣas.

Before the stūpa containing sacred relics, with offerings of five-colored threads, worshipped with the five offerings, practitioners who observe fasting and purity, and who have clearly seen the sequence of dream omens, shall bind the sick with five-colored threads.

The Blessed One, the Protector, with three faces, six arms bearing vajras, the left hand making the threatening gesture, the wrathful joined palms striking terror, the lower hands pressing down a deadly serpent upon Mount Meru —

Māras possessed of supernatural power soaring through the sky, Garab Wangchuk adorned with a garland of skulls, vase-nosed, nine-clawed, flesh-eating māras, the Queen Beautiful as a Flower, the Seizer of Rays and the Seizer of Splendor, with a retinue of eighty thousand kinds of spirits, all without exception — this mantra is the vital life-mantra, the one that strikes at the very core.

Preta-piśāca-vidhāṇāya hūṃ phaṭ. Preta-piśāca-krodha-sādhanaṃ hūṃ phaṭ. Preta-piśāca-nīlāṃ-vasanāya hūṃ phaṭ. Preta-piśāca-apratihata-balāya phaṭ. Preta-piśāca-parākramāya phaṭ. Preta-piśāca-kṛtāntāya phaṭ.
Preta-piśāca-kṛtānta-rūpāya phaṭ. Preta-piśāca-roṣaṇāya phaṭ.

Between the new moon and the full moon, one shall mount this upon the wind; bound with five-colored threads, they are to be driven away.

Before the stūpa containing sacred relics, upon a maṇḍala adorned with flowers, by fasting one accomplishes rites over dog-flesh; one examines by means of the sequence of dream omens.

Of eighty thousand, treading the western quarter, instilling fear, he who resounds with great laughter, the one with three faces, the black-footed one, terrible and fierce, holder of the serpent-scepter, the great crusher endowed with vast power, the great nāgas (Skt. nāga), malevolent and venomous:

Noryé, and Dungkyong,
Gabo, and Jogpo, Padma and Mahāpadma —

those endowed with the lineage of powerful causes, the nāgas dwelling in the oceans, the three: nāgas, nyens, and earth-lords, accomplished through the karma of emanation, the foolish, arrogant ones possessed of miraculous power, with a retinue of one hundred thousand emanations — all without exception, this mantra is the root-mantra that strikes at the very core.

Hara hara nāga phuḥ. Prahara prahara nāga phuḥ. Chinda chinda nāga phuḥ. Bhinda bhinda nāga phuḥ. Viśīryantunāga-śarīrāṇi phuḥ. Visphōṭaya nāga-nāyanani phuḥ. Nāga-vidāraṇāya phuḥ. Nāga-krodha-sādanāya phuḥ.

Smearing with the dung of Nepali deer and with the excrement of cats — that is the rite for repelling nāgas.

Nāga-duna-duḥ. Nāga-śon-duḥ. Hili hili nāga-duḥ duḥ.

This is the vital essence and life-force of the great nāga king — the very vital essence that strikes to the core. Reciting it with a clear visualization of the Blessed One's form in the mouths of the serpents, from mouth to mouth.

Then the Blessed One declared to Vajrapāṇi: The four activities are accomplished through the four actions. One shall examine each ground separately. For pacification: white, round, with a lotus. For enrichment: yellow, square, with a wheel. For magnetizing: red, crescent-shaped, with an iron hook. For wrath: dark blue, triangular.

For pacification and enrichment, four finger-breadths wide, one cubit, half a cubit, equal in measure.

For magnetizing and wrath, three finger-breadths wide: one cubit, half a cubit, three cubits, one cubit.

Woods that yield milk and sweet-smelling woods, together with their fruits, are for pacification and enrichment. Thorns and charnel-ground woods, red and black in color, are for magnetizing and wrath. Kuśa grass too shall be prepared, and fumigation is to be performed with the activity vase.

For pacification: yogurt and butter, and — milk, fragrant flowers white in color, rice, barley, and wheat, offered mixed with a portion of yogurt. For enrichment: the three whites of yogurt, clotted cream, and milk curds; the three sweets; three fruits; the wood of the yam tree with its leaves; and white sesame — these are auspicious. Crow, owl, raven, and cuckoo; life-force tree (nimba), white mustard; and all substances smeared with blood — yam wood, thorns, clarified butter, flesh, fat, and with images; and black sesame — these are auspicious for wrathful rites.

Facing east, one performs pacification. Facing north, enrichment. Facing west, magnetizing. Facing south, one performs destruction. Through the performance of fire-offering, all activities are accomplished. Extending the right leg is the posture for magnetizing; extending the left is for destruction.

The vase is blue in color, sixteen finger-breadths in the measure of meteoric iron. The five medicines, the five grains, and precious substances; the three fruits and three grains; fragrant wood with its leaves; the five kinds of cow-product, of the measure of one cubit. Square for one cubit, round, made from four pieces of acacia wood: a ritual dagger adorned with variegated colors. Together with the three whites and the three sweets, this is to be offered to the one who bears the necklace. The accomplishment vessel is to be bathed and guarded.

Rice gruel, molasses, treacle; grain broth, fragrance; the three whites, the three sweets, and pure water — having arranged these in front and in all directions, present in front: flesh, blood, and bones; barley, rice, and wheat and so forth; garlic, onion, and grains and so forth; together with beer — present these in front.

Om Brahma. Om Viṣṇu. Om Rudrāya. Om Kārtika. Om Gaṇapati. Om Indrāya. Om Mahākāla. Om Mahābrahmāya. Balinta tale, balinta tale svāhā.

Tiger and the plant called kapilikā (kabilen-ti-tsa) are to be placed on top of a triangular maṇḍala. With a black skull holding a curved knife, one who is endowed with protection accomplishes the secret mantra.

Mahākāla mirūpaṇā. Om śrī gr̥bodedajah jah ha ha. Samaya gagsol.

For the rite called "extracting the iron heart," the action is to be performed with iron.

For protection against illness, one vividly imagines oneself in the form of the bodhisattva, and with the seed syllable at the heart blazing with fire, all illnesses without exception are to be burned away.

Om biduglu ma pratibairoh svāhā.

Grain, medicine, and khuwa (a carrying load), precious substances, beer, and flesh; legs and garlic; the three whites and the three sweets together — the torma thus composed, together with flowers and incense, is to be offered at the water's edge or to the ocean.

Namaḥ sarva tathāgata avalokite saṃbhara saṃbhara hūṃ.

This concludes the third chapter, the chapter on activities, from the text called "Taming the Three Wrathful Ones," which is an exposition of the Secret Tantra.

This was completed. Translated by the Indian master Deva Pūrṇamati and the Tibetan translator, the monk Chökyi Zangpo.

Translator's Notes

- The opening line is a colophon fragment indicating a prior Indian paṇḍita collaborated with the Tibetan translator Dharma Sangpo; the paṇḍita's name appears to be incomplete or damaged in the source.

The term rendered "scent-eaters" for "dri za" refers to gandharvas, celestial musicians in Indian cosmology who are said to subsist on fragrances.

The mantra passage at the close is a transliteration of Sanskrit preserved phonetically in Tibetan; the translation renders it back into reconstructed Sanskrit rather than attempting a semantic translation, as is standard for dhāraṇī and mantra material.

The iconographic description of the central deity with three faces, six arms, and associated attributes strongly evokes Vajrapāṇi in a fierce Trailokyavijaya-related form, consistent with the text's title referencing the taming of the three fierce ones, which in this tantric context likely refers to the subjugation of Śiva, Brahmā, and Indra or related groups of powerful beings.

- The phrase rendered "born of the ocean" translates a term for one who arises from or belongs to the ocean — in context a Ratnasambhava-family epithet, possibly referring to Vajrapāṇi's jewel-ocean aspect.

The five stanzas of praise correspond structurally to the five buddha families and their associated wisdoms: dharmadhātu wisdom (Vairocana), mirror-like wisdom (Akṣobhya), discriminating wisdom (Amitābha), wisdom of equality (Ratnasambhava), and all-accomplishing wisdom (Amoghasiddhi). The three-faced, six-armed form throughout is Vajrapāṇi in his wrathful aspect.

The phrase "Vajrāsana will be shaken and destroyed when all beings are liberated" is a doctrinal hyperbole for the ultimate dissolution of saṃsāra — not a literal cosmological claim; the passage follows a pattern found in tantric literature on the consequences of samaya violation and the scope of Vajrapāṇi's compassionate commitment.

- The Tibetan exclamatory and command syllables embedded in the mantras, such as sod sod, bying bying, mugs mugs, rngubs rngubs, rbad rbad, khos khos, and similar expressions, are ritual Tibetan-language injunctions mixed into the Sanskrit mantra strings. They carry meanings such as "strike, strike," "sink, sink," "stupefy, stupefy," "draw in, draw in," and "split, split," functioning as wrathful command syllables within the incantation. They are left in transliteration in keeping with the mantra context, as is standard for liturgical passages of this kind.

The phrase rendered "mustard-seed mantras" translates yung sngags, meaning mantras to be applied with mustard seeds, a standard ritual technique for healing or protection rites.

- The nāga names in the retinue list — Noryé, Dungkhyong, Gabo, Jogpo, Padma, Mahāpadma — are rendered phonetically from Tibetan as these are proper names of specific nāga kings. The Sanskrit equivalents would be Dhanaughā, Śaṅkhaadhara, Nandaka, Upanandaka, Padma, and Mahāpadma, a well-known grouping of nāga kings in Buddhist literature; however, since the Tibetan provides Tibetan-phonetic forms rather than full Sanskrit transcriptions, they are left in phonetic rendering here.

The phrase rendered "Garab Wangchuk adorned with a garland of skulls" represents a māra figure named Garab Wangchuk, literally "the Lord of Supreme Bliss," here identified as a specific māra entity with skull ornaments rather than the tantric master Garab Dorje.

The text breaks off mid-sentence at the end of the passage supplied.

- The plant name rendered as "kapilikā (kabilen-ti-tsa)" is a phonetic transcription of an unidentified plant name in the Tibetan; the identification is uncertain and the Sanskrit equivalent, if any, cannot be securely established.

The mantra syllables throughout this passage are rendered in Roman transcription as they appear phonetically in the Tibetan; several are highly corrupt or idiosyncratic forms and should not be taken as authoritative Sanskrit.

The term rendered "clotted cream" for "sbags" follows standard Tibetan ritual glossaries where the three whites (dkar gsum) consist of milk, yogurt, and a cream or butter product; there is some variation across traditions as to the precise identity of "sbags."
