

Toh 583 in the Kangyur is a dhāraṇī text associated with the Perfection of Wisdom

Toh 583 · Derge Kangyur

Toh 583 in the Kangyur is a dhāraṇī text associated with the Perfection of Wisdom, known in Tibetan as the Bhagavatī Prajñāpāramitā tradition. It belongs to the class of dhāraṇī or mantra literature within the Kangyur, presenting a series of sacred syllables and formulaic phrases intended to confer specific spiritual attainments upon the practitioner. The text opens with dhāraṇī formulations oriented toward the cultivation of the four immeasurables — loving-kindness, compassion, empathetic joy, and equanimity — and proceeds with homage to the Blessed Lady, the noble Perfection of Wisdom, situating it within the broader Prajñāpāramitā scriptural tradition. While precise Sanskrit and Tibetan title lines are not fully determinable from the available material, the text's content and framing place it firmly within the esoteric or dhāraṇī-bearing dimensions of Prajñāpāramitā literature preserved in the Kangyur.

Tram. Hu lu hu lu mu lu mu lu svāhā. By reciting this once, one will attain equanimity.

Namas sarvatathagatahridaya. Anugate. Om kurum gini svāhā. This concludes the dhāraṇī for attaining the four immeasurables.

Homage to the Blessed Lady (Bhagavatī), the noble Perfection of Wisdom.

Tadyathā: Om muni dharme, saṃgraha dharme, anugraha dharme, vimukti dharme, sadā anugraha dharme, vaiśravaṇa parivṛta dharme, sarva kārya paripramaṇa dharme, samatā parivartana dharme svāhā. Om

Translator's Notes

- The passage consists largely of dhāraṇī mantra syllables in Sanskrit transliterated into Tibetan script, preserved here in their Sanskrit phonetic form as is standard practice. The individual Sanskrit terms embedded in the longer concluding dhāraṇī carry meanings such as "the Dharma of the sage," "the Dharma of gathering," "the Dharma of grace or bestowal," "the Dharma of liberation," "the Dharma of constant grace," "the Dharma attended by Vaiśravaṇa," "the Dharma that fulfills all purposes," and "the Dharma that turns toward equality," but these are ritual mantra formulas and are conventionally left in their Sanskrit form rather than translated. The title "Blessed Lady, noble Perfection of Wisdom" refers to the Prajñāpāramitā personified as a goddess, a standard object of homage in this genre of text.
