This text, known in Sanskrit by a title invoking "all five nectars" (Sarva-pañca-amṛta) and rendered in Tibetan as "The Nature of the Five Nectars" (Tib. རྒྱལ་པོའི་ཕྱེད་ལྔ་འམྲིཏ་པ་ལྟེན་ལྟན་པའི་རྣམ་ཐར་པ་), is catalogued as Toh 841 in the Kangyur, where it belongs to the tantric collection associated with esoteric ritual practice. Its very opening lines signal that the work is considered profoundly secret, a teaching meant to be transmitted and clarified only through careful oral and written transmission among initiated practitioners. As a tantric composition, it concerns the symbolic and ritual significance of the "five nectars" or "five amritas," substances and principles central to certain advanced meditative and consecratory practices within Vajrayāna Buddhism. The text's concern with secrecy and precise verbal transmission reflects its function as a specialized ritual or yogic manual rather than a doctrinal treatise intended for general audiences. Positioned among the tantras of the Kangyur, it exemplifies the esoteric literature concerned with transformative substances and their symbolic correspondences in tantric Buddhist practice.

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
