Toh 574 in the Kangyur is a dhāraṇī text known in Sanskrit as the Ārya-cūḍāmaṇi-nāma-dhāraṇī and in Tibetan as the Phakpa Tsuk gi Norbu Zhejawa'i Zung, rendered in English as "The Noble Dhāraṇī Called The Jewel at the Crown." It belongs to the dhāraṇī section of the Kangyur, a class of texts centered on sacred ritual syllables and formulas understood to concentrate and transmit the power of enlightened beings. The text opens with reverential homage to the buddhas, bodhisattvas, śrāvakas, and pratyekabuddhas of the ten directions, and gives particular prominence to the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, praised for his great compassion and his power to protect beings from fear, poverty, epidemic, and other terrors. As a dhāraṇī literature it serves both devotional and practical purposes, offering practitioners a means of invoking protective and liberating blessings through recitation.

The dhāraṇī called "Mother of All Phenomena" is complete.

In the language of India: Ārya-cūḍāmaṇi-nāma-dhāraṇī. In the Tibetan language: The Noble Dhāraṇī Called "The Jewel at the Crown."

I bow to all buddhas, bodhisattvas, noble śrāvakas, and pratyekabuddhas. I bow to the Three Jewels. I bow to all the Tathāgatas, arhats, and perfectly complete buddhas of the ten directions — utterly supreme and wondrous beings whose minds are perfectly pure, whose objects of knowledge are boundless and without remainder, pervading everything.

I bow to the bodhisattva, the great being, the noble Avalokiteśvara, the Powerful One, who is endowed with great compassion; who bestows fearlessness; who fully protects from all poverty and want; who liberates from all terrors; who dispels the terrors of epidemic disease and all harm; who utterly pacifies all discord, dispute, conflict, and strife; who destroys all evil; who strikes terror into spirits, reanimated corpses, those who die inauspiciously, evil dreams, and all misleading spirits sent by obstructors; who turns back all the terrors of enemy armies, famine, and grief; who subdues all gods, nāgas, yakṣas, rākṣasas, gandharvas (fragrance-eaters), asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras (half-humans), and great serpents; and who strikes terror into all poisons, pustules, afflictions, executioners, sorcery, reanimated corpses, and all inauspicious terrors.

He removes all that would execute or harm.

He seizes away all evil.

He causes wealth and grain to increase.

May my sons, grandsons,

and retinue of servants grow ever many.

This repelling dhāraṇī should be recited.

When gods and demigods do battle,

Śakra (Indra, lord of the gods) is defeated by the demigods.

He then comes straightway, without delay,

to the presence of the Lord of the World,

and then, his heart filled with great fear,

he addresses him with these words:

"I, the demigod's defeated foe, O Lord of the World —

how shall I strive and what shall I do?

O Lord of the World, upon me

let the divine gaze fall and rest upon me always."

Having heard the words of Śakra,

the Powerful One (Avalokiteśvara) spoke these words:

"O king of the gods, hear me.

I shall give you protection.

O king of the gods, long ago, in a time now past, in a world-system called 'Surveyed by the World,' I received and retained this repelling dhāraṇī called 'The Jewel at the Crown' — proclaimed by tens of millions of Tathāgatas, arhats, and perfectly complete buddhas, the Tathāgata Lokeśvaraprabha among them."

Whoever is learned and writes down this vidyā mantra and places it upon the crown of the head, or recites it, or even reads it —

all terrors depart from that person.

They are always protected and kept safe,

and they shall be victorious in battle.

Evil and bad dreams are stilled,

and merit and auspiciousness greatly increase.

Therefore, O king of the gods,

whoever desires to be victorious:

write it down and place it upon the crown of the head;
keep it always in mind.

It is not only for battle —

this dhāraṇī always seizes away evil, causes women to give birth to sons,
fully protects what dwells in the womb,
brings about all excellence,
and utterly destroys all evil.

This is called "the repelling dhāraṇī."

It brings benefit to all the limbs.

O king of the gods, this "repelling dhāraṇī," this great queen of vidyā mantras — which benefits all sentient beings, defeats the demigods, and utterly pacifies all enemy armies — take hold of it, keep it.

I bow to the Buddha. I bow to the Dharma. I bow to the Saṅgha. To the seven perfectly complete buddhas together with their assemblies of śrāvakas —

— together with all the bodhisattvas and their assemblies — I bow down.

This is called "the noble crest-jewel dhāraṇī." Through the repelling it performs, it purifies all karmic obscurations, thoroughly pacifies all illness, brings peace everywhere, gathers all merit, perfectly reveals all buddhas and bodhisattvas, and bestows splendor in every respect. By writing it, teaching it, reading it, and holding it in mind, one protects oneself and others. Likewise, through bathing ritual and fire offering, it thoroughly pacifies epidemic disease and all harm.

The noble dhāraṇī called "The Crest Jewel" is complete.

Translator's Notes

- The phrase "the Tathāgata Lokeśvaraprabha" renders "de bzhin gshegs pa 'jig rten dbang phyug 'od las," a compound meaning "the Tathāgata whose light is the Powerful Lord of the World." This is a buddha name, not a reference to Avalokiteśvara, and is kept accordingly.

The passage ends mid-sentence, as the source text appears to be incomplete at this point, cutting off after the invocation of the seven buddhas.

- The text breaks off mid-name at the end; the translator's name is incomplete in this passage and would have continued on the following folio. The Indian paṇḍita Śīlendrabodhi is a well-attested figure in the Tibetan canon who collaborated with several Tibetan lotsāwas.

The mantra syllables throughout are rendered as transliterated Sanskrit following standard dhāraṇī convention; they are not translated, as they function as sonic dhāraṇī formulae rather than semantically parsed prose. Some syllable clusters show Tibetan phonetic approximation of Sanskrit, and minor orthographic variants from other recensions are present but do not affect the overall sense or identity of the text.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.
