Toh 681 in the Kangyur is a tantric scripture known in English as "The Noble Root Tantra King of Avalokiteśvara Called the Lotus Net," corresponding to the Sanskrit Āryāvalokiteśvara-padma-jāla-mūlatantra-rāja and the Tibetan

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]. It is a root tantra centering on the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, the lord of compassion, and takes the form of a teaching delivered by the Buddha to a vast maṇḍala assembly of monks and bodhisattvas gathered in a Himalayan forest grove. The text belongs to the tantra section of the Kangyur and is devoted to the practices, visualizations, and devotional frameworks associated with Avalokiteśvara, whose compassionate qualities are praised at the outset through a reverential homage. As a "root tantra," it would have served as a foundational scriptural source for related ritual and contemplative traditions centered on this beloved bodhisattva.

In the language of India: Āryāvalokiteśvara-padmajāla-mūlatantra-rāja-nāma.
In the Tibetan language: The Noble Root Tantra King of Avalokiteśvara, Lord of What Is Seen, Called the Lotus Net.

I bow with reverence to the bodhisattva, the noble Avalokiteśvara, lord of what is seen, possessed of great compassion.

Thus did I hear. At one time the Blessed One was dwelling together with a great maṇḍala assembly in the vast Himalayan forest grove, resplendent with sandalwood trees and young saplings. Present there were: the venerable Mahākāśyapa, the venerable Gayākāśyapa, the venerable Nadīkāśyapa, the venerable Kuvalayadhvaja the Youth, the venerable Aniruddha, the venerable Śāriputra, the venerable Maudgalyāyana the Great, the venerable Subhūti, and others — a great Saṅgha of monks numbering two thousand two hundred and fifty. Also present were the great bodhisattvas: White Lotus, Sunlight, Dhāraṇīśvararāja, Lotus-Eyed, Jñāneśvara, Padmeśvara, Vajragarbha, Ratnagarbha, Samantabhadra, Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin, Ākāśagarbha, Maitreya, Mañjuśrī, Lokeśvara, Vajrapāṇi, Akṣayamati, Ākāśakośa, Matisāgara, Mahāvīkrāmaprāpta, Candraprabha, Jālinīprabha, Pratibhānakūṭa, and Sarvaśokatamovidhvamsanamati, and others — innumerable bodhisattvas, great beings. And furthermore, many monks dwelling primarily in loving-kindness, many nuns, male lay practitioners, and many female lay practitioners. And hosts of gods, hosts of nāgas, and likewise yakṣas, gandharvas (scent-eaters), asuras, garuḍas (sky-soaring birds), kinnaras (those who are human and yet not human), great serpents (mahoragas), kumbhāṇḍas, flesh-eaters, humans and non-humans — sixty million in number. And the great wrathful ones: Vajrahūṃkāra, Vajrayamāntaka, Vajraduhprasaha, Vajrahayagrīva, Vajravighnatrāsa, Vajroṣṇīṣa, and Vajrāmṛtakunḍalīrāja, and others — seventy in all. And Locanā, Māmakī, Pāṇḍaravāsini, Tārā, Rāsmivati, Sarasvatī, Vārāhīmukhī, Bhṛukuṭī, Araṇyā, Viṣaghni, Vasudhārā, Śvetā, Manobhadṛā, Vijayā, Śrīmālā, Vasumatī, and Vajreśvarī, and others — six hundred thousand — all were dwelling together there.

At that time all those in that retinue made many offerings to the Blessed One out of reverence, honor, and veneration, and extolled him with many praises. Then the Blessed One, the Great Sage, entered into the meditative absorption known as "The Complete Arising of Great Compassion." The very moment he entered it, the great earth trembled in six ways and displayed eighteen auspicious signs. Seeing those auspicious signs, the king of Laṅkā, Ravaṇa, filled with great pride, came there together with his many attendants. Then the Blessed One, perceiving in his mind the mental thoughts of Ravaṇa, sent forth from all parts of his body many hundreds of millions of rays of light. Those rays of light and the trembling of the earth illuminated all the buddha-fields in the ten directions.

At that time, with a resounding proclamation full of pride, Ravaṇa together with his entire retinue fully considered in his mind the affliction of epidemic disease and other such sufferings that were ravaging Jambudvīpa. Then the great bodhisattva, the noble Avalokiteśvara, he of eleven faces, came into the presence of the Blessed One together with ten billion hundred-thousand bearers of mantra-knowledge, paid homage at his feet with the crown of his head, circumambulated him to the right, and took his place to one side.

Then, by the power of the Buddha, from within the assembly of gods a divine son named "Adorned with a Net of Precious Lotuses" rose up, pressed his palms together, and addressed the great bodhisattva, the noble Avalokiteśvara, with these words:

Ah! O Lord, O Compassionate One, accompanied by hosts of mantra-bearers,
endowed with great blessing and power —
to vanquish the proud boasting of Ravaṇa,
to uproot afflictions at their very source,
to benefit all sentient beings,
and to be of the greatest healing for us —
please set forth the supreme essence:
the distinctive practice of a mantra
that accords perfectly with your body.

At that very moment all the assembled retinue filled the sky in every direction with a rain of flowers. Above the head of the Blessed One, the Sage, a canopy arose from precious flowers. The gods offered, with the power of pure faith and whatever was at hand, water for the feet, offering water, incense, fragrant substances, and food. The Sage consecrated these as a treasure-store of the sky. Many divine maidens made offering with melodious music, hand-held canopies, streaming pennants and victory banners swaying to and fro, and garments adorned with tinkling ornaments.

Then the Lord Avalokiteśvara, with a face like a fresh lotus in bloom, rose, smiled, pressed his palms together, and addressed the Teacher with these words:

The proud boasting of Ravaṇa's form,
his arrogance swollen with arrows and martial skill —
this has not arisen from good deeds well performed, nor has it come from deeply wrong karma alone.
In a former time, under the teaching of the buddha Lovely-Faced,
he gave over his head in devotion,
and from that merit, countlessly accrued,
arose the confusion of his many arms,
the food and vessels, garments, wealth, and ornaments
he donated as an offering through forty aeons —
from that too come his power and strength.
As for his arrows: though he has preceded their use with the blessing of the Bhrīṅgīriti rite,
through his innumerable violations of moral discipline
he was born into the lineage of the rākṣasas
and has brought harm to others along with his retinue.

Now, so that those who have karma beginning from the very first may be benefited and given a foundation of benefit,
I shall speak, gathered briefly together.
Listen well and hold it in mind.

In past times, at a former age,
even before ten Ganges rivers' worth of aeons had passed,
far in the distant past before those many ages gone by,
there appeared in the world a Tathāgata, a perfectly awakened buddha, whose name was "Fragrance of the Mandāra."
At the time that Teacher appeared in the world,
I myself had become a powerful householder.
I received from that Sage the mantra-teaching,
and immediately upon receiving it I wandered in saṃsāra
for a span of some forty thousand aeons.
Then, an aeon before ten million Ganges rivers' worth of aeons,
a perfectly awakened buddha whose name was
"King of Rays, Whose Uṣṇīṣa Blazes with Qualities, Whose Eyes Are like a Hundred Unobstructed Lotuses" dwelt in the world as its Teacher.
At that time I myself was a great seer and master.
By receiving and practicing this mantra-teaching
I beheld the faces of the buddhas of the ten directions and attained the acceptance of the non-arising of phenomena.
Then, before one hundred million aeons of the past had elapsed,
there appeared in the world a perfectly awakened buddha
whose name was Amitāyus,
and I received that teaching.

At that time the buddhas of the ten directions conferred empowerment upon me and gave prophecy.
Before you, across an uncountable span of aeons,
for the sake of this mantra-teaching,
you made great primary offerings numbering a full thousand times a thousand.
In eleven hundred million instances you received empowerment from the buddhas of the ten directions.
The supreme karmic ripening of all that will arise again and again
throughout the vast reaches of buddha-fields across all directions.

In the later time, when the guide known as Śākyamuni
was born into this world-realm of endurance,
even more than human existences,
some were born in the realm of hungry ghosts.
For the purpose of definitively increasing the Dharma,
on a dark night thick with cloud,
swift as a flash of lightning in that moment,
the holder of the mantra will appear in a form
possessed of eleven faces,
endowed with a thousand limbs,
with the mark of thirteen hundred eyes.
At that time, certain fortunate ones,
calling upon the name and holding faith in the body,
whoever recites this mantra
will accomplish every wish in the world,
and afterward will attain twofold primordial wisdom.

Hearing that prophecy proclaimed,
the mantra-essence of eleven faces,
spoken from the mouths of eleven hundred million buddhas,
of great power, unimpeded,
heals all beings and grants wellbeing,
clears all sickness, purifies all evil,
averts all that is inauspicious, dispels all ill omens and bad dreams,
turns back untimely death and malicious intent,
bestows constant splendor and happiness of mind,
removes grief, suffering, and exhaustion,
pacifies all conflict and strife,
and calms māras, demons, and obstructors.
It fulfills every wish in the world.
Māras, obstructions, the disease of weapons,
blows with a staff, being bound,
being imprisoned, being attacked with arms,
being led to a place of killing, having limbs severed,
the eyes being pierced with thorns or blades,
the upheaval of water, fire, and wind,

poison, bewitchment, and reanimated corpses,
as well as thieves and non-humans —
all these are subdued, and one who is protected by this mantra, who takes it up, holds it, inquires into it,
reads it, recites it by heart, and teaches it,
and strives in this: neither the world with its gods,
nor māras, nor Brahmā, nor renunciants (śramaṇas),
nor brahmins can cause harm.

Even heavy karma from the past will be purified and refined until it is no more.

This is a certainty, a real thing.

Knowing this, with direct personal confidence,
take it up with a mind free of conceptual elaboration.

For this reason it is itself the refuge, the protector,
the guardian, the giver of breath and relief,
the glorious lord, the island, the very home.

To whatever extent the near and far reaches of the land extend,
by setting boundaries with this mantra,
beings will cause no harm.

Whoever pays homage and makes offerings to the buddhas,
goes for refuge and confesses misdeeds,
rejoices wholeheartedly, and recites
this dhāraṇī mantra twenty-one times —
all the buddhas of the ten directions without exception will equally rejoice and bestow the good.

All evil without exception, the four root transgressions and the five acts of immediate retribution,
will be completely purified.

Even those who appear as yakṣas, rākṣasas, and the like,
once taken hold of and guided with a mind of loving-kindness and compassion,
will first give rise to awakening mind,
and be established on the ground of the supreme unsurpassable bodhicitta.

More than calling upon the names of buddhas
as numerous as a hundred Ganges rivers and praising them — whatever son or daughter of good family who recites and keeps in mind my name,

and continually recites this mantra,
will swiftly attain the ground of supreme joy,
and unsurpassable awakening will come swiftly,
as if seen in the very palm of the hand.

With single-pointed mindfulness and devoted respect,
always rising before dawn,
performing virtue in accordance with the Dharma,
and reciting this one hundred and eight times —
in this very life one will attain ten benefits:
the body will constantly be free from illness,
one will be protected by all the gods and buddhas,
one will gain wealth, grain, precious things, and garments, enemies and hostility will be tamed, and one will be fearless,
food will be honored and a noble lineage attained,
one will be free from poison, spirits of the dead, and demonic possession,
the body will be fragrant and pleasing to all,
evil intentions and ill repute will be dispelled,
one will be free from epidemic disease and easily satisfied,
and untimely death will be cleared away.

Beyond these, four further qualities will be attained:
at the moment of death one will behold the face of a buddha,
light will arise in the sky and one will be honored by the gods,
one will never be born in a lower realm,
and one will be born in Sukhāvatī or in a higher destiny.

For one who holds this vidyā-mantra (skt. vidyāmantra) together with the wisdom-essence of the buddhas, one will attain the awakening mind and the door to the Dharma of liberation of the buddhas.

Through accumulating virtue over many aeons,
one will come to obtain this vidyā-mantra.

Such a one is endowed with faith, has a sense of shame, and knows modesty, is of good intelligence, diligent, and possessed of great compassion, fair of complexion, of pleasant disposition, and speaks gently,
is soft of mind, and moves body and speech with ease.
One is deeply respectful toward the teacher and of great discipline,

has few cravings and delights in generosity,
and with reverence for the buddhas and a conscientious mind,
recites the vidyā-mantra continuously, day and night.

On the fourteenth or the fifteenth,
and especially on the eighth of the month,
one should take up the restoration ceremony before an image of the body.
From wood that is flawless — white sandalwood and the like — crafted from a noble species, an image may be made,
or equally from earth, stone, precious gems, and such things,
a form of the Sugata may be fashioned from good materials;
or it may be painted as a picture.

Whether a single image or an expanded maṇḍala with an assembly of deities,
if one visualizes it as vividly as direct perception,
one will swiftly come to behold it in direct vision.

With a vase full of water adorned with all virtues,
by reciting the mantra over it all desired aims will be accomplished — of this there should be no doubt.

With medicines suited to the illness,
by reciting the mantra and then eating or applying them,
or even merely fumigating with them, harm will be dispelled.
Likewise, by sealing a thread or garments with the hand-gesture (mudrā),
the same effect is produced.

For whatever desire one may have,
the fire-ritual practice should be performed.
The secret mantra, held with desire-free mental application —
I too shall enter into that.

Immediately upon these words being spoken,
the bodhisattva Mañjuśrī spoke these deliberate words concerning the very essential nature of the mantra:

How wondrous! Phenomena that are without inherent nature appear in manifold forms.

The instant that is free from speech and conceptual thought — that itself is the greatness of peace.

To meditate is to take as object
the fact that the things of existence lack inherent existence.
Seeing that the ultimate is without object —
that is the fruit of meditation.

Samantabhadra spoke these deliberate words concerning the meaning of the secret mantra:

How wondrous! The three bodies, though appearing distinct,
arise from the meaning of body, speech, and mind.
Through the yoga of their being of a single meaning,
they are to be held with certainty as a single body.

Although what appears for the benefit of whomever it may be appears like a rainbow,
it is merely an emanation expressed in words —
in the wisdom body there is no division.

For the purification of obscurations and karma,
these deliberate words were spoken thus:

How wondrous! The essential nature of things — unborn, unarisen, unceased —
yet the magical display that appears as arising and ceasing:
that very body appears as mudrā and mantra,
and illuminates, on the face of arising,
qualities like waves of water.
Through diligence, that very suchness is without passage and is comprehended within.

Kṣitigarbha spoke these deliberate words concerning the cause:

How wondrous! In the space of intrinsically pure awareness, the expanse of beginninglessly darkened mind,
disturbed by conceptual thoughts and habitual tendencies,
suddenly white and black karmic actions appear.
The white is superimposed as: buddha, Dharma, Saṅgha,
and awakening mind.

Through the enlightened activity arising from that,
the obscurations of afflictions and karma are purified.

The protector Maitreya spoke these deliberate words concerning the path of mantra accomplishment:

How wondrous! The mind, primordially liberated and at peace, appears clear like water,
yet having taken on the forms of beings in their variety,
it is transformed by the dense darkness of ignorance.
Because that very darkness is but the radiance of mind,
through effortless mind one is liberated.
But striving, through the defilement of mind,
will bind the stainless mind.

Ākāśagarbha (the Essence of Space) spoke these deliberate words concerning the name of the mantra:

How wondrous! Empty, free from characteristics —
free of color and shape — pure dharmatā, illuminating the great mind of joy,
it is not a syllable of great wisdom,
yet it is the body endowed with major and minor marks, with gnosis and bliss.
For whomever it appears with that meaning,
by the far-reaching momentum of great compassion,
this is the significance of the syllable Ta that is to arise.
The bodhisattva Padma (Lotus) spoke these deliberate words concerning this path and abode:

How wondrous! Through causes and conditions in the sky,
the continuous revolutions of sun, moon, and stars
shine out and distinguish day from night.
Through afflictions, ignorance, craving, and grasping,
the formations impel the karma of existence,
giving rise to consciousness, name-and-form, the six sense bases,
contact, feeling, birth, aging, death, and suffering.
Purification by the twofold luminous purity —
Vajrapāṇi spoke these deliberate words concerning the meaning of the fruit:

How wondrous! The profound and vast supreme power of mantra
is not known even by buddhas or non-Buddhists (tīrthikas).
Awareness itself has no substantial existence,
so how could the object of knowledge exist as a substance?
Awareness, in the aspect of its object,
is conditioned by the conceptual duality of apprehended and apprehender.

When that is exhausted, liberation occurs.

Then the assembly of awareness goddesses scattered perfumes and flowers, and with a hymn of melodious mantra-song
praised the protector Avalokiteśvara:

Oṃ — O Blessed One, Protector, Compassionate Avalokiteśvara, your faces, in their color and form, appear in countless ways —
one thousand, one hundred, eleven, six, and one —
I bow to the Protector who possesses the beautiful face of loving-kindness.
This is of Cundā.

Oṃ — Your face, in great joy, transforms into countless forms and colors.
Some faces bear loving-kindness, compassion, and joy;
some bear the face of great desire, confusion, and miserliness;
some bear the face of wrath, anger, fierce passion, and mistaken views — to you I bow.
This is of Māmakī.

Oṃ — Your face is perfected by the empowerment of the buddhas of the ten directions,
your hand is that of a king of offerings whose teaching knows no bounds, and you possess the mudrā of a hand that has mastered innumerable deeds —
to you, seated upon two thrones with two feet, I bow.
This is of the White-Robed One.

Oṃ — Though your acts do not touch the limit of the expanse of compassion,
you perform them in an unbroken ocean of endeavor;
you roam the ocean of buddha-fields in their entirety —
I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.
This is of Tārā.

Oṃ — Like the brilliant sun scattering its rays, though you have no deliberate intention and are free from the darkness of all conceptuality, across an ocean of eons you make the exceptional meaning shine clearly —
I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.
This is of Rāśmivāsinī.

Oṃ — When the stream of mind ceases and passes into nirvāṇa, attachment arises and immediately dissolves;
the root of affliction is cut without remainder —
I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.
This is of Sarasvatī.

Oṃ — Grasping afflictions as a self, one is born in saṃsāra;
examining them again and again, one is born in the lower realms;
knowing them to be without inherent nature, one becomes liberated —
I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.
This is of the Sow-Faced One.

Oṃ — Seeing phenomena as pure, one attains the higher realms;
cutting the conceptuality of dualistic grasping, one passes beyond sorrow;
possessing a mind like illusion, the benefit of others arises —
I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.
This is of the Frowning One.

Oṃ — Attachment to one's own mode of conduct rots the seed;
speaking disparagingly of others' modes of conduct burns the field of merit;
awakening is known from bodily and verbal purity alone —
I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.
This is of Dharaṇīdhārā.

Oṃ — For those overwhelmed by the poison-darkness of the view of self,
you bestow the nectar-medicine of impartial wisdom of selflessness, and grant the practice and realization of the ten perfections —
I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.
This is of the Poison-Dispelling One.

Oṃ — In fine conduct and good deportment, free from pride and attachment;
regarding others' conduct with equanimity, acting from one's own mind;
without craving, endowed with patience, that is the natural mode of challenge
I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.
This is of the Forest-Dwelling One.

Oṃ — Possessing conscience and modesty, delighting in giving;
endowed with faith and learning, excellent in moral discipline and wisdom;
knowing contentment and few desires, rich in this life and the next —
I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.
This is of Dhāraṇī.

Oṃ — Writing, offering, giving, listening, reading, and teaching;
reciting, holding in mind, meditating, striving — for these, the water of ablution and such practices, the Nyungné fast, purity, and virtue are granted.

I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.

This is of the White One.

Oṃ — Taming one's own mind, acting with care in body and speech;
holding sacred offerings for the world and for what transcends the world;
through hearing, reflection, and meditation, striving — that conquers the enemy.

I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.

This is the Song of Victorious One.

Oṃ — Liberation from the bondage of duality through the non-dual path, skillful means and wisdom, the great bliss, the path of awakening;
liberation, boundless gnosis — bestowing glorious splendor.

I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.

This is the Song of Glorious Garland One.

Oṃ — On the golden ground of excellent aspiration, the great wish-fulfilling tree of the Dharmas conducive to awakening (bodhipakṣadharmas) arose.

You who moisten it with the stream of gnosis and compassion —

I bow to you, Protector Avalokiteśvara.

This is the Song of Goodly-Minded One.

The sound resounded, and the retinue trembled,
like grass struck by the wind.

Joining their palms at the crown of their heads,
they offered this supplication with single purpose:

Oṃ — Protector, self-arisen Blessed One, supreme and supremely great God;
body born of manifold merit,
mind possessed of boundless gnosis;
wise one, maker of the end of existence;
virtuous one, who sets beings in ethical conduct;
pure one, great Brahmin, great Brahmā;
whose activity and conduct are as vast as the sky — to you we bow.

Then the Blessed One, the great Sage,
said to the assembly, "Excellent! Excellent!"
and with Oṃ Āḥ Hṛīḥ Hūṃ Svāhā, repeatedly spoken, he bestowed blessing.

As one with a hook draws fish from the shallows
and leads away a hundred thousand head of nāga-cattle, so with the pure arousing of the ascetic's virtue
he established them in the precious island of awakening.

This concludes the first chapter, the chapter of the occasion, from the king of root tantras of the noble Avalokiteśvara, the Lord, called the Lotus Net.

Then the Blessed One, the great Sage,
the Protector, the perfectly complete buddha,
entered into meditative absorption (samādhi)
called Variegated Illumination.

From every limb and part of his body
he released innumerable five-colored rays of light — sixty times sixty at their edges, countless in number, he scattered them forth.

To the limits of incalculable buddha-fields seven times over,
throughout all ten directions without remainder,
filling everything with light — and from that light
these melodious verses appeared:

Abandon contempt for the buddhas and the Dharma.
Abandon great sloth and conduct that grasps at sufficiency.
Abandon regret and indecision regarding the Dharma.
Abandon great pride and conduct driven by attachment.
Without beings there is no path to awakening.
Relying on beings, great awakening will be attained.
The great path of awakening is great compassion.
If there were no beings, in whom could it arise?

The very instant that sound was heard,
the buddha's children dwelling in buddha-fields throughout the ten directions
beyond telling, the supreme sovereign Avalokiteśvara the Lord, innumerable and supreme — all of them, together with their retinues, arrived here in this world of endurance, Sahā.

From the eastern buddha-fields,
at the very limit of seven incalculable reaches,
from the buddha-field called Lion's Heap,
from the presence of the buddha Lion's Play,
the foremost among bodhisattvas, Avalokiteśvara the Lord with the Lion's Roar,
white in color, like a mountain of crystal,
together with ten million of the highest awakening mind,
traveled through the sky
and arrived in this buddha-field swift as a flash of lightning.
To the Blessed One, the Protector, the great Sage,
they paid homage and circumambulated many times.
With many silver flowers bearing a thousand petals
they scattered offerings.
The Sugata, the perfectly complete buddha,
with his wondrous rays of light
and with verses of great wonder and marvel,
caused all the buddha-fields to tremble.
He who broke through the darkness of beings' delusion and made boundless wisdom shine bright —
I too, by the power of this heart-essence,
will assist in this very enlightened activity.

Oṃ Hṛīḥ Siṃhanāda Hūṃ Phaṭ.

Having thus offered that heart-essence,
to the side of the great Sage —
his retinue remained in a joyful manner,
kneeling with palms joined together.

In the supreme buddha-field of the southern direction,
at the very edge of the sevenfold immeasurable,
in the buddha-field adorned with stacked precious jewels,
where the buddha Ratnaketu dwells —
before him, the chief among bodhisattvas,
the sovereign Avalokiteśvara, the wish-fulfilling jewel, spins the wheel.

Resembling a golden mountain in hue,
ten billion assemblies of bodhisattvas
ascended together into the sky
and, like a flash of lightning, arrived in this buddha-field.
To the Blessed One, the Protector, the Sage,
they paid homage and circumambulated many times.
With many thousand-petalled
precious golden flowers
they scattered vast and abundant offerings.
The Sugata, the perfectly complete buddha,
with his wondrous rays of light
and with verses of great wonder and marvel,
caused all the buddha-fields to tremble.
He cut the bonds of beings' miserliness
and caused the great treasury, the source of generosity, to burst open.
I too, by the power of this heart-essence,
will assist in this very enlightened activity.

Oṃ Padma Dhāra Dhake Hūṃ Phaṭ.

Having thus offered that heart-essence,
to the side of the great Sage —
his retinue remained in a joyful manner,
kneeling with palms joined together.

In the supreme buddha-field of the western direction,
at the very edge of the sevenfold immeasurable,
in the buddha-field adorned with stacked lotuses,
where the buddha Padmayoni dwells —
before him, the chief among bodhisattvas,
the sovereign Avalokiteśvara, the compassionate one,
chief of Padmanīrteśvarī — resembling a mountain of ruby red,
ten billion assemblies of bodhisattvas
ascended together into the sky
and, like a flash of lightning, arrived in this buddha-field.
To the Blessed One, the Protector, the Sage,
they paid homage and circumambulated many times.
With many thousand-petalled

ruby-red lotus flowers
they scattered vast and abundant offerings.
The Sugata, the perfectly complete buddha,
with his wondrous rays of light
and with verses of great wonder and marvel,
caused all the buddha-fields to tremble.
He dried up the mire and mud of beings' attachment and let fall a rain of the fragrant ointment of moral discipline.
I too, by the power of this heart-essence,
will assist in this very enlightened activity.

Oṃ Padma Nīrteśvāra Hrīḥ Hūṃ Phaṭ.

Having thus offered that heart-essence,
to the side of the great Sage —
his retinue remained in a joyful manner,
kneeling with palms joined together.

In the supreme buddha-field of the northern direction,
at the very edge of the sevenfold immeasurable,
in the buddha-field adorned with a vajra array,
where the buddha Amoghavarjra dwells —
before him, the chief among bodhisattvas,
the Protector, the sovereign Avalokiteśvara,
whose great compassion is unceasing,
resembling a mountain of emerald green —
ten billion assemblies of bodhisattvas
ascended together into the sky
and, like a flash of lightning, arrived in this buddha-field.
To the Blessed One, the Protector, the Sage,
they paid homage and circumambulated many times.
With many thousand-petalled
emerald flowers
they scattered vast and abundant offerings.
The Sugata, the perfectly complete buddha,
with his wondrous rays of light
and with verses of great wonder and marvel,
caused all the buddha-fields to tremble.
He burned the dark forest of beings' laziness

with the blazing fire that urges forth diligence.
I too, by the power of this heart-essence,
will assist in this very enlightened activity.

Oṃ Ratna Agra Apratihata Hūṃ Phaṭ.

Having thus offered that heart-essence,
to the side of the great Sage —
his retinue remained in a joyful manner,
kneeling with palms joined together.

In the supreme buddha-field of the north-eastern direction,
at the very edge of the sevenfold immeasurable,
in the buddha-field adorned with great treasures,
where the buddha Amoghasambhava dwells —
before him, the chief among bodhisattvas,
the Protector, the sovereign Avalokiteśvara,
the venerable Amoghapāśa —
resembling a mountain of crystal white,

Together with ten billion bodhisattvas,
he rose into the sky and came to this realm,
swift as the flash of lightning,
and before the Blessed One, the Protector, the Sage,
he paid homage and performed many circumambulations.
He scattered, wide and abundantly,
jeweled crystal flowers
with a thousand petals each.

With wondrous rays of light,
with verses of the Sugata, the perfect buddha,
vast and marvelous,
he caused all the buddha-fields to tremble.
He who shatters the mountain of beings' aversion,
who lets the sun of patience shine forth brilliantly —
I too, through the power of this heart-essence,
will assist in this very enlightened activity.

Oṃ Hā La Hā La Hrīḥ Padma Garbha Hūṃ Phaṭ Svāhā.

Having thus offered that heart-essence,
to the side of the great Sage —

his retinue remained in a joyful manner,
kneeling with palms joined together.

In the supreme buddha-field of the south-eastern direction,
at the very edge of the sevenfold immeasurable,
in the buddha-field adorned with lotuses,
the buddha Padmagarbha dwells.

Before him, the chief among bodhisattvas,
the Protector, the sovereign Avalokiteśvara,
the venerable Padmalocana —
resembling a mountain of molten copper,

together with ten billion supreme bodhisattvas,
he rose into the sky and came to this realm,
swift as the flash of lightning,
and before the Blessed One, the Protector, the Sage,
he paid homage and performed many circumambulations.

He scattered, wide and abundantly,
flowers of molten copper
with a thousand petals each.

With wondrous rays of light,
with verses of the Sugata, the perfect buddha,
vast and marvelous,
he caused all the buddha-fields to tremble.

He who shatters the dense darkness of beings' delusion, who sweeps forth the great wind of manifold skillful means —
I too, through the power of that heart-essence,
will assist in this very enlightened activity.

Oṃ Padma Alaṃkāra Hūṃ Phaṭ Svāhā.

Having thus offered that heart-essence,
to the side of the great Sage —
his retinue remained in a joyful manner,
kneeling with palms joined together.

In the supreme buddha-field of the north-western direction,
at the very edge of the sevenfold immeasurable,
in the buddha-field known as the Glorious Hundredfold Void,
the buddha Samayaśrī dwells.

Before him, the chief among bodhisattvas,
the Protector, the sovereign Avalokiteśvara,
the venerable Vajradharmēśvara —
the hue of a lapis lazuli jewel,

together with ten billion supreme bodhisattvas,
he rose into the sky and came to this realm,
swift as the flash of lightning,
and before the Blessed One, the Protector, the Sage,
he paid homage and performed many circumambulations.
He scattered, wide and abundantly,
flowers whose essence is lapis lazuli
with a thousand petals each.

With wondrous rays of light,
with verses of the Sugata, the perfect buddha,
vast and marvelous,

with wondrous rays of light,
with verses of great wonder and marvel,
the realms are made to tremble and shake.

The clinging of beings, their obsessive attachment, is dispelled.
Struck by the vajra of great might and power,
I too, through the strength of that essence,
render assistance in this very enlightened activity.

Om vajra dharma dhātu hūṃ svāhā.

Having offered that essence-mantra,
to one side of the Sage, joyfully,
he knelt, joined his palms together,
and remained thus in attendance.

In the supreme pure land of the upper direction,
at the very limit of seven incalculable reaches,
in the pure land of the Tiara of Pure Lands,
dwells the buddha Uṣṇīṣarāja (Crowned King of Buddhas).
Before him, the chief among bodhisattvas,
the Protector, the sovereign Avalokiteśvara,
celebrated under the name Hari Hari Hari Zhen —
the venerable Dharma-Uṣṇīṣa (Crown of the Dharma),

the hue of a mountain of indranīla (blue sapphire) —
together with ten billion supreme bodhisattvas,
he rose into the sky and came to this realm,
swift as the flash of lightning,
and before the Blessed One, the Protector, the Sage,
he paid homage and performed many circumambulations.
He scattered, wide and abundantly,
flowers whose essence is indranīla
with a thousand petals each.
With wondrous rays of light,
with verses of the Sugata, the perfect buddha,
vast and marvelous,
the realms are made to tremble and shake.
The veil of wrong views obscuring beings is cleared away.
The wheel of pure aspiration is turned.
I too, through the strength of that essence,
render assistance in this very enlightened activity.

Oṃ bhrūṃ hrīḥ ha hūṃ svāhā.

Having offered that essence-mantra,
to one side of the Sage, joyfully,
he knelt, joined his palms together,
and remained thus in attendance.

In the supreme pure land of the lower direction,
at the very limit of seven incalculable reaches,
in the pure land beautifully adorned as a jeweled basket, dwells the buddha Vikrāntaśrī (Glorious Conqueror).
Before him, the chief among bodhisattvas,
the Protector, the sovereign Avalokiteśvara,
the venerable Blue-Throated Sovereign — resembling a mountain of andanīla (blue utpala sapphire) —
together with ten billion supreme bodhisattvas,
he rose into the sky and came to this realm,
swift as the flash of lightning,
and before the Blessed One, the Protector, the Sage,
he paid homage and performed many circumambulations.

He scattered, wide and abundantly,
flowers of andanīla
with a thousand petals each.
With wondrous rays of light,
with verses of the Sugata, the perfect buddha,
vast and marvelous,
the realms are made to tremble and shake.
The dense forest of cognitive obscurations covering beings is cleared away.
Its root is severed by the sword of primordial wisdom.
I too, through the strength of that essence,
render assistance in this very enlightened activity.

Oṃ maṇi padme hūṃ.

Having offered that essence-mantra,
to one side of the Sage, joyfully,
he knelt, joined his palms together,
and remained thus in attendance.

Then, the assembly having gathered before the sovereign Avalokiteśvara, as he was expounding the great vidyā-mantra (dhāraṇī mantra)
and fully accomplishing the benefit of others, all the buddhas of the ten directions rejoiced greatly in this,
placed their mudrās upon the crown of his head,
and with smiling countenances bestowed upon him their "Excellent!"
They also filled the sky with melodious sound.

At that time, all the kings of the wrathful ones without exception, abiding throughout the ten directions,
filled every surface of the earth with their dance:
stepping right, stepping left, crescent movements,
circular, square, and triangular gaits, leaping, wide leaping, rolling,
striking, and pressing —
with all such movements, they swiftly dispatched the obstructors.

With palms joined and opened and closed,
one finger interlaced and embraced,
all interlaced, all embraced, all raised upward,
crossed behind, alternately clasped, fully clasped,

partially clasped, fully extended, all extended,
the gesture of equipoise and the supreme seal,
earth-pressing, refuge-granting, supreme-giving, and so forth — with many mudrās they cleared away the obstructors.

Furthermore, all the host of world-guardians,
each together with their entire retinues, called the Eleven-Faced One — that mantra of vidyā (vidyā-mantra), unprecedented and wondrous, they call it "arising as marvels." The moment they heard it, their bodies trembled greatly. They approached the foremost, supreme sovereign, bowed with palms joined, stood in his presence, and spoke these words:

"Whoever recites, retains, continually chants, and keeps in mind this vidyā-mantra of the Eleven-Faced One — Avalokiteśvara, protector of the world, together with all the assembled hosts of this great maṇḍala — whoever calls them to mind, or remembers them even for just an instant: that virtuous son of noble lineage shall be a child of the Victors of the ten directions, a friend of all bodhisattvas, a father of the vidyā goddesses, and a kinsman of all children. We are his subjects. He is a great hero, chief among men, a treasury of all merit, and his moral discipline is without blemish. Such a person's birth is meaningful. From the divine abodes, rays of gnosis-light, like amṛta, shall enter even into his very pores. All manner of illness and all manner of harmful spirits that exist in this world — none of them shall be able to take hold of him, not through any curse, sorcery, or spell, without exception. Practicing in accordance with the rite, even while passing through the full lifespan of Brahmā, he shall die without confusion or mental paralysis, transferring in the manner of a transference of abode to the higher realms. Going then to the fields of the Victors, he shall hear the Dharma from the Victors, and together with the Victor's children shall attain the powers and fearlessnesses, become endowed with the major marks and minor features, and — instant by instant, like a flash of lightning — shall purify all beings without exception and purify all fields without exception."

This concludes the second chapter, the chapter on the arising of the gods, from the tantra called Padma-jāla, the root tantra of the noble Avalokiteśvara, sovereign lord.

Then Vajrapāṇi rose, joined his palms, paid homage to the Sage, took his place in the assembly, and having praised the secret one, spoke these words:

"All the sovereign lords of the ten directions, all the protector Avalokiteśvaras — having come from their own respective abodes, please bestow blessings upon the essence-heart endowed with great compassion for beings, that wondrous essence. The Victors of the ten directions together with their children, and all the holders of vidyā, are in concordant delight. And yet, for the sake of holding beings, of swiftly granting all accomplishments, and because the essence-heart is endowed with power — please, O great compassionate protectors, today speak the root mantra endowed with blessing. The vidyā-mantra, radiant as sun and moon, through the root mantra parts the clouds. For the sake of your compassion toward beings, and for the sake of benefiting me — O Victor, freed from all sorrow, please speak the root dhāraṇī-mantra."

Then the great Blessed One, the mighty Sage, in order to swiftly liberate from all evil, entered into meditative absorption — the absorption for swift liberation from all sin — and from the compassion of his body, speech, and mind, he pronounced this root vidyā-mantra of Avalokiteśvara, the lion's roar:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namaḥ Āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: oṃ akaṭe bikaṭe nikaṭe ṭikaṭe kaṭamkaṭe karoṭe vīrya svāhā.

"By this vidyā-mantra, all accumulations of qualities and gnosis are assuredly generated — especially like fire born from grass of a special kind. As a basis for the eight conceptual consciousness-types, for the purpose of union, anoint eight maṇḍala-deities with the nectar of yellow and grey mustard. Anoint them with the mantric count, blessed with twelve branches including the head. The remainder of the branches are to be formed into a ball. By tasting a little on the tongue, at each and every occasion, measured at three hundred and sixty intervals — reckoned by the number of days, and being purified —" within a single year one shall attain realization. Then the great Blessed One, the Mighty Sage, entered into the meditative absorption of generating splendor and repelling harm. From the vajra of his body, speech, and mind, he uttered this root mantra of the Protector Wish-Fulfilling Wheel:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namaḥ āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: Oṃ cakravartī padma cintāmaṇi jāla mahāpadme ruru tiṣṭha jvāla ākarṣaya hrīḥ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā.

To remove sudden harm for those within the world and those who have gone beyond the world, one hundred and eight yellow mustard seeds — in a number equal to the mantra count, over seven weeks — are to be applied with worship to one's own body or limbs. Supplications are to be made to it again and again.

Then the great Blessed One, the Mighty Sage, entered into the meditative absorption of bringing the three realms under mastery. From the vajra of his body, speech, and mind, he uttered this root secret mantra of the Protector, the Lotus Lord of Dance:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namaḥ ārya Avalokiteśvarāya bodhisatvāya mahāsatvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: Sarvasatvā vāsanā gādhipatini. Namaḥ sarvasatvā visanā āharaṇi. Namaḥ sarvasatvā yodharaṇāya. Whoever is oppressed by nāgas throughout the body — consecrate conch flowers a thousand times with mantra, then burn gugul incense; if this touches the body, it will be healed.

Then the greatly mighty Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "Unobstructed Bodhisattva." From the vajra of his body, speech, and mind, the Protector proclaimed this root vidyā mantra of his unwavering compassion:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namaḥ āryāvalokiteśvarāya. Bodhisatvāya. Mahāsatvāya. Mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā. Namaḥ sarva bhīmacakaram. Sarva roga praśamana karam. Sarva vyādana bhadakaram. From the seed syllable of śarakari, recite one thousand times, then mix with scented water and anoint the patient — this will vanquish severe fever illness.

Then the greatly mighty Blessed One entered into meditative absorption called "Destroying the Sending-Forth of Vidyā Mantras." From the vajra of his body, speech, and mind, the Protector proclaimed this root vidyā mantra of the Noble Amoghapāśa:

Burn the skull of a male carcass, together with mustard seeds and saffron-infused water, and with a newly sprouted shoot recite the mantra a thousand times; over the fruit, recite it ten thousand times. When worn on the body, sorcery, harm, disease, and interfering spirits will be swiftly dispelled. For other actions, whatever they may be, apply the mantra in multiples of seven.

Then the Blessed One, the Great Sage (Śākyamuni), with his gaze of all-surpassing victory over sentient beings —

entered into meditative absorption, and from the vajra of body, speech, and mind, the Protector proclaimed this root awareness-mantra of Hala Hala:

Blessed One, recite the mantra thirteen times over a square maṇḍala of clay that has not fallen to the ground, then apply it. With the remainder applied to all manner of illness, it will certainly heal by mere contact alone. Within six months, māras will be pacified and all wishes fulfilled; even one who has committed the five acts of immediate retribution will achieve success. If success is not obtained, it is I who have committed acts of immediate retribution, and the buddhas of the three times shall be my witness. Through compassion, those who possess compassion will attain their aim. Through wrath, wrathful aims will be accomplished. One of keen intellect who desires a permanent abode: through non-conceptual equanimity, all desires will be fulfilled; through attachment, giving will occur. Through intense mental engagement, one will be bound. Cast seven hundred thousand handfuls of ash from burned human corpses onto the trunk of a large silk-cotton tree: even heavy rain will quickly cease. Together with fragrant water and spikenard, it dispels the venom of serpents. To ward off the terrors of reptiles, wild bees, and the like.

Then the Blessed One, the Great Sage, entering into the meditative absorption called Liberation through Wisdom, and from the vajra of body, speech, and mind, proclaimed this root awareness-mantra of the Protector Padmargyanlug:

Recite it twenty-one or seven times
both in the evening and at dawn,
mixed with medicine appropriate to the illness
together with the root and stalk of a lotus.
Then drink the mixture — ten thousand recitations cause great wisdom to grow.
Its sound is melodious and wisdom increases.

Then the Blessed One, the supreme Sage, entered into meditative absorption called Unsurpassed Intention, and from the vajra of body, speech, and mind, proclaimed this root awareness-mantra of the Great Vajra Protector:

Namō ratnatrayāya. Nama āryāvalokiteśvarāya. Bodhisatvāya. Mahāsatvāya. Mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā. Namō bhagavate. Vairocana prabhārājāya. Tathāgatāya. Arhate. Samyaksambuddhāya. Sarva ājñāya. Andhakāra māmāyitra. Tadyathā. Oṃ sādhanī sādhanī. Siddhe siddhi. Siddhe dhāra.

Rising early in the morning, one bathes, then sits in cross-legged meditation posture with hands in the appropriate mudrā. With the mind, one makes twenty-one prostrations and recites with faith from the Vajra Dharma. On the eighth, fourteenth, and fifteenth days, one dons fresh garments and takes the restoration vow. One makes offerings of white sandalwood flowers and the like. Aims are accomplished, misdeeds purified, and wisdom increased.

Then the supremely mighty Blessed One, the great Subduer who vanquishes the māras, entered meditative absorption — the vajra samādhi — and from the vajra of his body, speech, and mind, proclaimed this root vidyā mantra:

Namo ratna-trayāya. Namō āryā-valokiteśvarāya. Bodhisattvāya. Mahāsattvāya. Mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā. Namō bhagavate amitābhāya. Tathāgatāya. Arhate samyaksambuddhāya. Namō āryāvalokiteśvarāya.  siddhyantu me mantra-padaḥ svāhā.

This mantra is to be written in saffron and white sandalwood on birch bark and inserted into a body reliquary stūpa, together with relics. Alternatively, it is to be placed upon an image of Avalokiteśvara that includes relics.

From the eighth day of the lunar month through to the fifteenth, one arranges eight water-offering vases, along with various fragrant and colorful substances: milk-porridge, yogurt, cooked rice, butter, white sandalwood, camphor fragrance, and white and red tormas. Directly before the principal image, in an open unsurpassed space, to the right one sets a conch-shell rattle or a frightening implement, and to the left a flower-offering of one hundred and eight blossoms of various kinds. These are scattered, and offerings are made at the three times, then washed away. Misdeeds are purified, dreams blaze forth as light, and māras are repelled.

For the repelling of māras, one constructs a triangular instrument eight finger-breadths in height, with six dried yellow skulls. In the center stands a five-pronged vajra; the handle is of acacia wood, one cubit long, and its base is six finger-breadths. The whole is octagonal in shape, and upon it one arranges, starting from the right, a vajra, a wheel, a jewel, a lotus, a sword, an iron hook, and arrows and spears, circling rightward. The mantra is recited twenty-one times, and at midnight it is inserted into the ground.

Then the supremely mighty Blessed One, the great Subduer who vanquishes all hosts of poison, entered meditative absorption and from the throat of the noble blue-necked one proclaimed this root vidyā mantra:

One takes a smoked crystal tube, a vessel of beryl or crystal, and places it in a golden receptacle with a lid. It is set in the center of a maṇḍala, and the mantra is recited ten thousand times. Then a dark-colored stone mortar is filled with water and prepared at dawn, and the mantra is recited twenty-one times. Whoever drinks this water will be rid of poison from a blow, poison administered through contact, congenital poison, and even poison from tainted food — let alone any other class of poison. One need have no doubt or hesitation about this whatsoever. A person endowed with faith and wisdom, with respect to this root secret mantra in any situation — will recite it with diligence and one-pointed concentration, all aims will be accomplished. For one who possesses the iron hook of faith and the firm ground of understanding, hundreds of thousands of gods and nāgas extend their protective power, the mind is aroused to all that is white and virtuous, and through the power of the mantra the precious treasury of awakening is obtained. If this mantra is taught to one who has neither faith nor respect for it, the teacher himself will suffer harm.

This was the third chapter, on the arising of the mantra of distinguished family, from the root tantra (Skt. mūlatantra) of the noble Avalokiteśvara, the king of tantras called the Lotus Web.

Then, what is to be rightly explained: he whose very being is the gathering of the buddhas of the ten directions, the world-protector who holds dominion over the ten grounds, whose nature is the full unfolding of the ten powers, in whom the ten perfections are spontaneously accomplished, who, having completed the ten grounds as one, pervades all ten directions — such is the very defining characteristic of the Eleven-Faced One. A person endowed with fortunate merit should place the mantra upon his own body. When the body is graced with the mantra, even the son of Indra (Śakra) cannot prevail against it — what need is there to speak of other worldly forces? Sorcery, flesh-eating spirits, raised corpses, elemental beings, weapons, shadow-oppression, and all evil omens are swiftly dispelled. Proceeding stage by stage as it comes from the lama, one swiftly attains unsurpassable awakening. Without the oral transmission of a lama, nothing will ever be accomplished.

At the crown of the head, the white syllable OM is to be contemplated with diligence. At the forehead, the green syllable ĀḤ is likewise to be contemplated. Upon the tongue, the supreme syllable — the red and luminous syllable HRĪḤ — is to be contemplated. In the region of the heart, the blue syllable HŪṂ. At the navel, the yellow syllable HA. Likewise at the secret place, the green syllable HO. At the place of excretion, the blue syllable HO. At the two knees, the pale yellow syllable SA. At the soles of the feet, the yellow-green syllable HA. At the two palms, the white syllable HŪṂ. At the forearms, the blue syllable HRĪḤ. At the shoulders, the syllable HRĀṂ is to be placed.

Having consecrated oneself through this assembly of syllables, one may enter into whatever activities and endeavors are appropriate. Those various accomplishments, too, arise from the blessing of the mantra. The body itself becomes the essential nature of the mantra; the body generated by the mantra, the body endowed with mantra, becomes the very body of mantra. Having purified through the family of the mantra-body across many buddha fields, one takes birth in the bodies of wandering beings. The conduct that liberates beings becomes equal to that of the supreme Samantabhadra, and one comes to know the meaning as inseparable from beings. The means for obtaining that meaning in its entirety — by which it is known through speech — is the very entity called the "knowledge-holder" (Skt. vidyādhara). One who abides in that is called a holder of awareness. This is not known to buddhas or to non-Buddhists (tīrthikas). To attempt it through effort tainted with something extra is sheer exhaustion, and by that very exhaustion one wanders onto the wrong path, a path difficult to traverse. Abandoning that, one should enter with diligence into this very practice of authentic accomplishment — utterly at ease and blissful — even for those of limited fortune.

When the Teacher had spoken these words, the retinue rejoiced and joined their palms in reverence. They scattered flowers into the sky. Avalokiteśvara, the chief lord protector, was saluted by all with prostrations. Having circumambulated many times, they gazed with a smile upon the faces and the physical formations of the one called Eleven-Faced. Those with the mind of secrecy, kneeling with palms pressed together, settled comfortably in their respective positions in the ten directions.

Then the world-protector, for the sake of wandering beings, proclaimed the awareness mantra. For the completion of benefit for oneself and others, the applications of activity are also distinct.

Homage to the Three Jewels. Homage to the noble king of arrays, the oceanic wisdom Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly enlightened Buddha. Homage to all Tathāgatas, Arhats, perfectly enlightened Buddhas. Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, bodhisattva, great being, greatly compassionate one. Thus: OM DHARA DHARA DHIRI DHIRI

DHURU DHURU. IṬṬE BAṬṬE. CALE CALE. PRACALE PRACALE. KUSUME KUSUMA. VARE. ILI MILI. CITI JVALA MĀPANAYA SVĀHĀ. ŚUDDHĀYA SVĀHĀ. MAHĀKĀRUṆIKĀYA SVĀHĀ.

When this was proclaimed, the great earth trembled in six ways.
By reciting the root heart-essence one thousand times,
whatever siddhis one desires will be accomplished.

Furthermore, the mantra practitioner, at the crown of all,
recites the four preceding homages.

Homage to the Three Jewels. Homage to the noble king of arrays, the oceanic wisdom Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly enlightened Buddha. Homage to all Tathāgatas, Arhats, perfectly enlightened Buddhas. Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, bodhisattva, great being, greatly compassionate one. Thus: HARA HARA. ILI MILI. CILI CILI. KHELE HALA SVĀHĀ.

For one who is seated within the maṇḍala,
recite seven times over water and cloth,
then wash, don the cloth, and enter within.

Likewise, consider the vessel and other ritual substances.

Homage to the Three Jewels. Homage to the noble king of arrays, the oceanic wisdom Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly enlightened Buddha. Homage to all Tathāgatas, Arhats, perfectly enlightened Buddhas. Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, bodhisattva, great being, greatly compassionate one. Thus: OM DHURU DHURU. HARA HARA SVĀHĀ.

Reciting seven times each week,
burn incense and light butter lamps.

Homage to the Three Jewels. Homage to the noble king of arrays, the oceanic wisdom Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly enlightened Buddha. Homage to all Tathāgatas, Arhats, perfectly enlightened Buddhas. Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, bodhisattva, great being, greatly compassionate one. Thus: SIRI SIRI. DHIRI DHIRI. SIDHIRI SIDHIRI SVĀHĀ.

With flower-paste ointment and flower garlands, reciting seven times each,
scatter, anoint, and adorn the image.

Homage to the Three Jewels. Homage to the noble king of arrays, the oceanic wisdom Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly enlightened Buddha. Homage to all Tathāgatas, Arhats, perfectly enlightened Buddhas.

Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, bodhisattva, great being, greatly compassionate one. Thus: OM SĀDHE SĀDHE. SOHI SOHI. SODU SODU.

With pure food offerings, flowers, and fruit,
having recited twenty-one times,
make complete offerings with food and drink.

Homage to the Three Jewels. Homage to the noble king of arrays, the oceanic wisdom Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly enlightened Buddha. Homage to all Tathāgatas, Arhats, perfectly enlightened Buddhas. Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, bodhisattva, great being, greatly compassionate one. Thus: OM SĀMĀDHISI. CALE CALE. CURU CURU. SURU SURU. MURU MURU SVĀHĀ.

Pieces of white sandalwood,
thirty-four in number, dipped in honey,
having been purified for one day — each day or each evening, reciting the mantra once over each piece and then burning it,
whatever one needs will be accomplished.

Homage to the Three Jewels. Homage to the noble king of arrays, the oceanic wisdom Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly enlightened Buddha. Homage to all Tathāgatas, Arhats, perfectly enlightened Buddhas. Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, bodhisattva, great being, greatly compassionate one. Thus: OM ILI MILI. PILI TILI. CILI TILI SVĀHĀ.

Over water or ash or white mustard seed, recite the mantra seven times and scatter to the four directions.
In whatever place, near or far,
this is the supreme means of establishing boundaries.

Homage to the Three Jewels. Homage to the noble king of arrays, the oceanic wisdom Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly enlightened Buddha. Homage to all Tathāgatas, Arhats, perfectly enlightened Buddhas.

Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, bodhisattva, great being, greatly compassionate one. Thus: OM BITI BITI. ṬITE ṬITE. PEDE PEDE. KACA KACA. BHAGAVĀN, noble Avalokiteśvara, may all be accomplished. SVĀHĀ.

For re-inviting the body and so forth, and for the purpose of turning back from one's own abiding place:
recite the mantra seven times over water,
wash with it, and those intentions will be fulfilled.

Homage to the Three Jewels. Homage to the noble king of arrays, the oceanic wisdom Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly enlightened Buddha. Homage to all Tathāgatas, Arhats, perfectly enlightened Buddhas. Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, bodhisattva, great being, greatly compassionate one. Thus: OM VAJRA HŪM HRĪḤ HOḤ.

The venerable one with eleven faces —
 this mantra's qualities are boundless.
 For whomever wears it as a crown jewel,
 it is like holding a wish-fulfilling gem.
 Whoever carries and recites it will obtain qualities without limit,
 will be freed from illness and harmful spirits,
 and above all will be purified of every sin.

Smooth out a gentle maṇḍala with the five nectars of white cow's milk. One who is pure should place at its center a wooden image together with relics.
 Moreover, four reliquary forms containing relics should be set in the four directions, and five vases of proper measure placed in the center and at the four intermediate points, bearing the colors and mudrā-seals of the five buddha families (Skt. pañcakula). Varied ornaments and offerings should be arranged, and different-colored threads woven together. Write the mudrā-seal of one's desire, and from the first to the fourteenth day of the month, focus on one's aim and recite the mantra. Once forty thousand recitations are complete, on the fifteenth day make one's petition and perform a ritual bathing. Whatever one desires will be swiftly accomplished. Māras and obstructing forces, harm and adversity — all of these will certainly be dispelled by the bathing rite. By gathering and practicing the boundless qualities of mantra recitation, the practitioner will become supremely blessed.

Even merely reciting the mantra of the protector Avalokiteśvara, one is freed from fifteen kinds of wretched death and will obtain fifteen kinds of auspicious rebirth.

One will not die from famine, royal punishment, poison, weapons, warfare, tigers and the like, serpents and other fierce predators, poisonous food, fire, or water. One will not be harmed by lying down in front of harmful creatures, by distractions and injuries from gods and spirits, by incurable illness, or by oppression. Such dangers will never bring one fear.

One will be born in a land ruled by a righteous king, where noble ones dwell, where the times are good and the place is fortunate, where one has a virtuous spiritual friend and complete sense faculties, where one delights in virtue and maintains moral discipline, has good servants and abundant wealth, is honored by others and provided with what one needs, lives at ease in mind, and is protected by a guardian of the world. One will behold the face of a buddha and contemplate profound meaning. Beyond that, one will give rise to loving-kindness toward the lowly, shed tears moved by compassion, be gladdened by recollecting the qualities of the buddhas, develop faith in the Three Jewels, and grow through a mind of exceptional intelligence. One will turn away from thoughts that are not in accord with the teachings, and will be born again and again with faith in the scriptural collections of the Buddha's word. And wherever conceptual elaborations are seen to abide, this mantra renders them without intrinsic nature.

Oṃ svabhāvaśuddhāḥ sarvadharmāḥ svabhāvaśuddho 'haṃ.

When a thought of strong grasping arises, this mantra transforms it into emptiness.

Oṃ śūnyatājñānavajrasvabhāvātmako 'ham.

Whoever agitates body, speech, or mind —
by this mantra they are firmly blessed.

Oṃ sarvatatāgatakāyavākcittavajrasvabhāvātmako 'ham.

For wherever there are sentient beings harbouring harm, and obstacle-spirits inhabiting the ground of a place by their own nature — in order to dispel them, take a stake of white acacia wood grown from a cliff face, fresh and young, measuring six finger-widths in length, with a splendid tip that is sharp and auspicious, its head and waist knotted in the manner of a bow, with the middle half-and-half: sixteen facets at the head, eight facets at the waist, two finger-widths across; three finger-widths, three-sided, with a sharp tip, the auspicious part slightly raised; the sides and junctures deep — eight such stakes, consecrated by the power of mantra. Drive them in, directed to the right, at the corners of the dwelling and in the four directions.

Namo ratnatrayāya. Nama āryajñānasāgaravairocanabyūharājāya. Namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ arhatebhyaḥ samyaksaṃbuddhebhyaḥ. Nama āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Namaś caṇḍavajrakrodhāya. Hulu hulu. Tiṣṭha tiṣṭha. Bandha bandha. Hana hana. Daha daha. Paca paca. Amṛte hūṃ phaṭ.

This destroys all evil omens, consecrates the dwelling place, stabilises life and prosperity, and perfects the good fortune of leisure and endowment. First, join the palms together; then, with the left hand making the threatening gesture of the index finger, recite "Oṃ" and "A la la la ho!" Advancing fiercely into the interior of the dwelling in a wrathful manner, then with the sound hūṃ strike the threshold. Then recite: Oṃ āḥ vajra sthāna pāṇibhyaḥ ahaṃ. Rakṣa rakṣa hūṃ phaṭ.

Settling on an exceedingly soft seat, remaining in the vajra cross-legged posture, straighten the body and lower the gaze to the tip of the nose. Rest the tongue lightly on the palate at the base. Draw the abdomen in slightly, and keep the mind in a state of vigilance.

It is not permanent, nor is it impermanent.

It is not pure, nor is it impure.

It is not bliss, nor is it suffering.

It is not self, nor ego, nor is it selfless.

It is not the aggregated collection to be adopted or discarded.

It is not mind, nor is it a mental factor.

It is not without aggregates, elements, and sense bases.

It is not mentation, not permanent, not impermanent.

It is not darkness, nor is it wisdom.

It does not go, it does not come, it does not abide.

Like manifold clouds and lightning of many kinds,

transforming into many forms of desire and form,

it arises from space, dissolves back into space.

Displaying coming and going, inciting desire —

though without existence, it acts just so.

It does not arise from objects, nor from the sense faculties,

not from time, not from finality,

not from causes, nor likewise from conditions.

In any other circumstance, likewise, it is not found there.

And the very mind that thinks about it —

it has come from nowhere, does not stay anywhere,

has gone nowhere: when examined, it is empty.

That which examines is mere conceptual thought.

Things that are examined are mere names.

At the level of mere convention, relying on name and letter,

if one grasps at one's own mind:

Take hold of the first of the four — warmth — as the primary.

Rely upon the second, which is drawn forth.

Then encircle those with the first and second.

Press down with the fifteen of the first,

and establish the sixteenth as companion.

What is accomplished in the six syllables

is the nature of the six buddhas, accompanied by six kinds of light rays.

Mastering through the six winds,

it enters into six kinds of objects.

Through being mastered by the six objects,

together with the six afflictions,

the afflictions come to proliferate.

Endowed with six kinds of aggregates,

through the classification by number of aggregates,

the six limbs each sixfold increase.

In the shadow of the complete limbs,
the mind of intrinsically pure nature is obscured.
The two obscurations, thick as armour, accompanied by mountains difficult to clear away —
one enters the domain of permanence and annihilation.
Through the practice of binding the vital wind and effort,
the external appearances of light are extinguished.

Free from effort, joy arises,
and the mind comes to rest upon a syllable.
The rays of light blazing from the syllable rise up, together with the mind,
through every pore of the body,
and then, gathering the drop once more,
even the syllable itself is no longer perceived.

Having heard from one who holds this,
one should recollect the form of the illusion.
Growing accustomed to that,
one will attain meditative absorption without decline.
When that absorption has become firm,
one will attain, in this very body, the vidyādhara state.
Abiding in that vidyādhara state,
one will attain unsurpassed awakening.

In that very instant, all phenomena,
having been purified into the likeness of space,
pervade all things just as space does.

The support is Avalokiteśvara, the sovereign.
The body is the noble Mañjuśrī.
The limbs are Vajrapāṇi.
The head and crown are the Invincible.
The uṣṇīṣa is Vimala the Completely Pure.
Sun and moon are Samantabhadra.
Earth, water, fire, wind, and space,
together with consciousness itself —
all become inseparable,
because one abides in meditative concentration.

The faculties are to be gathered individually.
Through relaxing the mind, it is certainly accomplished.

Past, future, and present time is not permanent.

When one has connected with the non-conceptual mind itself,
one does not conceptualise time as separate.

As the orb of the sun and the flowing of water and whatever appears in the quarter of the sky —
so too must mind be sought by mind.
Nothing else occasions the opportunity.

This concludes the fourth chapter, the arising of the common mantra, from the tantra king called Padmajāla, the Root Tantra of the Noble Avalokiteśvara, the Powerful One.

Then, from the hermitage of the sages, a vidyādhara bodhisattva called Nānārūpin, who had trained for many aeons, arrived before the maṇḍala together with his vast retinue, offered worship with an assembly of great wonders, made many prostrations and circumambulations, and with palms joined and a smiling countenance addressed the Teacher thus:

Oṃ. You whose conceptual elaborations are boundless yet thoroughly pacified, who make peace, who tame, who are peaceful, who act in supreme peace, who have vanquished conceptuality, who know conceptuality, who are fully entered into conceptuality,
who have conquered all with wisdom — I prostrate to you.

Arisen from peace, become peace, from which the extreme emerges, the supreme peace of all phenomena, the great peaceful Dharma — from that which is free of elaboration, you bring forth the ten white elaborations.

To you, the Dharma of boundless extremes — I prostrate.

You who liberate, who cause liberation, of great purity,
who act in purity, the pure and stainless protector,
you who have perfected the accumulations, who possess the accumulations,
who are victorious in the practice of the accumulations,
whose self is the permanent accumulation — I prostrate.

Supremely beautiful, adorned with the sun of compassion,
you who brilliantly illuminate the world —
you who are permanent, of great purpose, ever abiding in permanence, to the Protector Avalokiteśvara — I prostrate.

Those who are stirred by the habitual tendencies of the three realms and have entered into dense darkness — expressing things so as to make them manifest brings swift clarity to the mind and very great joy.

Though without direct perception and beyond words,
what is hidden should be spoken of all the more.

For making the hidden meaning manifest,
the finest method is mudrā and image.

Even in one who possesses the name of those with direct perception, clarity of the meaning arises through the mind.

From habituation to any meaning again and again,
the engagement of the mind becomes conceptual thought.

Removing that — non-conceptual mind — is the result,
the perfection of meditation.

For the entry of those of lesser intelligence,
for the sake of those of middling capacity to progress,
and so that those of sharp faculties may become fully awakened buddhas, please, Leader, explain how reflections arise.

For swift entry, liberation,
and swift and vast awakening,
and for the arising of the mode of virtuous reflections —
please, Guide, explain this today.

Just as clouds in the sky, being impermanent,
cannot be grasped as a fixed mark,
so in a mind disturbed by conceptual thought,
who could grasp a fixed mark?

The reflection, which clarifies the defining characteristic of the object —
a reflection endowed with measure — causes the mind that engages it to become excellent and will certainly give rise to blessing.

Then the Blessed One, the Guide foremost among them, spreading wide the power of his tongue, spoke of the mode of virtuous reflections arising:

"One who strives to listen to me —
excellent among the divine sages, O best one,
you who hold awareness, the bodhicitta mind — well done!
Listen with a one-pointed mind,
and take what is well-spoken to heart.
I shall explain truly to you:

A blessed, virtuous image (Sanskrit: pratimā),
whether painted with pigments,
or fashioned from precious materials, stone, or earth,
or made of wood — all are highly praised.
For sentient beings who are beginners in practice,
the object of meditation will become clear,
and supreme blessing will enter them.

White sandalwood, bright and straight,
young and without flaw —
having purified it and fumigated it with incense, set it in place with faithful and good conduct.

The image of the Lord of the World, the Protector — eighteen finger-measures in height —
the throne and seat nine fingers,
the back-rest produced at six finger-measures.

Raised up, with a graceful and pleasing appearance,
adorned with the forms of many precious things:
the first right hand holds a rosary,
the second hand bestows fearlessness.
The first left hand holds a red lotus,
the second holds a vessel for pouring amṛta upon the crown.

The number of faces is eleven:
the three front faces bear auspicious marks,
with the radiance of loving-kindness, compassion, and joy —
white, pale yellow, reddish, and pale blue.
The three faces to the left are wrathful,
endowed with a seductive radiance,
red, orange, and dark.
The three wrathful faces to the right are fierce:
blue, yellow, and green.

Behind is a face fierce and wrathful, dark red —
a face that blazes forth with a horse-cry.

The wrathful faces bear bared fangs,
each with three eyes, and the hair yellow,
bound and standing upright.

At the very top is a smiling buddha-face,
resembling the mark of a cracked coral.

Within the crown on the head,
place each of the Victors of the ten directions,
one by one.

Adorned with a crown ornament and diadem,
ear ornaments, a necklace, shoulder ornaments,
bracelets together with finger-rings,
a long pendant necklace, anklets, and a waistband —
resplendent with ornaments and beautiful garments.

Thereafter, one who will speak truly shall take delight in paintings.

Calm in mind, gentle in manner, free from anger,
with little craving, great wisdom, and great compassion, skilled in the art of painting and learned in its tradition,
of good intention, guarding ethical conduct,
devoted to the conventions of inquiry and artistry —
such a person shall paint in a secluded and pleasant place.

A young woman of beautiful form, peaceful mind, and pure,
shall stretch the cloth,

and upon it apply good pigments of saffron hue.

Having pressed it taut, make it smooth.

Having first set out the lines and boundaries,
the image of golden yellow coloring
shall be painted carefully and with skill,
by one who is expert in proper measure.

White is fox crystal.

Red is cinnabar and red ochre.

Blue is indigo and woad.

Yellow is clean orpiment.

Black is ink itself.

Green: mix indigo with bull's gall,
or alternatively use spurge-plant alone.

Purple dye: mix with saffron and tutty,
and also combine with whatever else is suitable.

When there is no binder, it will crumble —
mix with shell-lac, yellow myrobalan, wood-apple,
yellow myrobalan again, and emblic myrobalan;
combining these separately
renders the colors clear, unmixed, and pure.

Atapa oil makes them smooth,
and gandha makes them lasting.

In the extended form, with four sides and four doors —
or a single door will also do —
the maṇḍala with three tiers of proportioned sections, or two, or three as may be fitting.

In the center, paint the Eleven-Faced One accompanied by the four beautiful goddesses.

To the east, the maṇḍala of Avalokiteśvara, the lord,
with Vairocana as the principal deity — that one too is accompanied by the four goddesses of the Eye and so forth, together with four arms.

To the south, the maṇḍala of the Lord of the World,
with Śākyamuni as the principal — bearing a hook, a lasso, a fetter,
and the hand gesture of summoning.

To the west is the maṇḍala of the Lineage Mother, accompanied by four sets of four bodhisattvas.

In the center is Vajradhātṽśvarī,
in front, Vajra-the-Eternal,
to the right, Vajra-Glorious-Arising,
to the rear, Vajra-Boundless,
to the left, Vajra-Wish-Fulfilled.

To the east, the goddess of the Eye;
in front, Vajrasattva,
to the right, Vajra-King,
to the rear, Vajra-Desire,
to the left, Vajra-Excellence.

To the south, the goddess Māmakī;
in front, Vajra-Jewel,
to the right, Vajra-Sun,
to the rear, Vajra-Victory Banner,
to the left, Vajra-Laughter.

To the west, the White-Robed One;
in front, Vajra-Dharma,
to the right, Vajra-Sharp,
to the rear, Vajra-Cause,
to the left, Vajra-Speech.

To the north, the goddess Tārā;
in front, Vajra-Action,
to the right, Vajra-Protection,
to the rear, Vajra-Yakṣa,
to the left, Vajra-Fist.

All the bodhisattvas of the retinue are one-faced and four-armed.
The first of the right hands bears the emblem of one's own lineage;
the second grants refuge to all.
The first of the left hands holds a lotus of the color belonging to the direction.
The second holds a rosary of mantras
likewise in the hue of the direction.

All the goddesses of the retinue are likewise one-faced and four-armed.
The last of the left hands holds a vase;
the remainder are to be understood as before.

To the north is also the maṇḍala of wrathful ones,
accompanied by four sets of four wrathful goddesses.

In the center is Vajra-Hūṃkāra,
dark blue, the color of the blue lotus.
In front, the Great Blue-Dark One;

to the right, Vajra-Fierce;
to the rear, Vajra-the-Forgetful;
to the left, Vajra-Great-Power.

On the eastern spoke of the wheel,
the wrathful deity is Yamāntaka, dark black.
In front of him, Vajra-Powerful-Face;
to the right, Vajra-Pervader;
to the rear, Vajra-the-Youthful;
to the left, Vajra-the-Summoner.

On the spoke equal to the wheel,
the wrathful one whom none can withstand, yellow:
in front, Vajra-Darkening;
to the right, Vajra-Great-Fire;
to the rear, Vajra-Moon-Lady;
to the left, Vajra-Sharp-Lady.

On the third spoke, Vajra-Uṣṇīṣa, yellow, together with Vajra-Wrathful-Blood-Drinker, Vajra-Great-Wind-Holder,
and Vajra-Hatred-Maker.

On the western spoke, Hayagrīva, red.
In front, Vajra-Deluder;
to the right, Vajra-Peaceful;
to the left, Vajra-Seeker.

On the fifth spoke, likewise,
the wrathful one who destroys obstacles, green.
In front, Vajra-Sharpener;
to the right, Vajra-Fierce;
to the rear, Vajra-Zombie-Raiser;
to the left, Vajra-Rouser.

On the six-spoked wheel is painted:
Vajra-Harm-Beauty-King, green and blue.
In front, Vajra-Water-Queen;
to the right, Vajra-Siddhi-Arising;
to the rear, Vajra-Night-Ladies;
to the left, Vajra-Sky-Lord.

Thus all the vajra wrathful males and wrathful females are one-faced and four-armed.

The wrathful males fill their two hands with bow and arrow; the right hands hold a chopper, a khaṭvāṅga, a hammer, a vajra, a discus, a peg, and a vajra — each bearing the emblem and mudrā of his own lineage. The left hand makes the threatening gesture and holds a lasso. All wear tiger-skin lower garments.

Hook, lasso, iron chain, and subjugator — these are the mudrās of the right hand, each with its own sign. The second is the mudrā of fearlessness. In the left hand, a lotus of the directional colour; the second is a silk Dharma robe. All have a graceful, elegant appearance.

In the east, Śakra (Indra, lord of the gods) rides a great elephant. His first right hand holds a vajra; the second bears the mudrā of granting refuge. The left hand holds a lotus of the directional colour; the second draws a rosary in its own colour.

To his left, Brahmā is golden, seated on a throne of geese. His first right hand holds the sun. In the direction of fire, the fire-god is red, rides a goat, and holds a mass of flame. In the southern direction, Yama (the lord of death) is blue, holds a skull-club, and rides a buffalo. In the direction between south and west, a black rākṣasa holds a trident and rides a rākṣasa. In the west, the water-god is white, seated on a throne of nāgas, holding a serpent-lasso. To his left, the earth-lord is white, holds a vase, and rides a tortoise. In the direction of the asuras, the wind-god is green, holds a banner, and rides a deer. In the north, a yakṣa rides a human and is dark green, holding a treasure-box in hand. In the northeast, the Mighty One (Īśāna) is white, holds a trident, and rides a noble horse. At the four gates stand the four Great Kings, adorned in the armour of their directional colours. They hold a lute, a sword, a lasso, and a jewelled club in the right hand; the second right hand bears the mudrā of refuge; and the left hand counts a rosary. Each is adorned with the colour of his direction. All have a graceful, elegant appearance, each in his directional colour. Seated respectively on thrones of tiger, leopard, bear, and lion, their gaze is keen. At each gate of their own direction they stand with great diligence as guardians.

In the surrounding border of the eight sections of the maṇḍala, among groves of fruit-trees, flowers, fragrant trees, and clusters of lovely trees, depict in abundance beautiful birds and other animals, sons and daughters of the gods, and likewise nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, kinnaras, and kiṃnarīs making music in great number.

Should one wish it, within the inner circle of the world-protectors, the thirty-six planets and constellations are depicted dwelling on jewelled lotuses: Kṛttikā holds a red lotus; Mṛgaśīras has a head of utpala; Ārdrā holds a white lotus and a knife; Punarvasū holds a counting rosary, along with a black serpent; Puṣya holds a yellow lotus and a bowl in the gesture of equipoise; Āśleṣā holds a white lotus and a club; Maghā holds a black lotus and a piece of cloth; Pūrvaphalgunī holds a divine-boundary vase; Uttaraphalgunī holds a vajra and a western club; Hasta holds a ball of water in the upper hand and a lotus in the lower; Citrā holds a golden wheel like a mouse; Svāti holds a water-ladle, a southern boat and a northern boat, a crystal orb, and a sword in the upper portion, a kumuda in the lower; Viśākhā holds a banner and a tail-star; Anurādhā holds a leaf, a near-club, and a bean; the moon holds a white kumuda lotus; the sun holds a red lotus; Ārdra (as a planet) is a mass of fire with red eyes; Rāhu holds a blue utpala; Ketu holds a book of Dharma; Pābhava holds a counting rosary; Śanaiścara holds a sword in hand; Rāhu holds a bowl of nectar. Among the inner set that belongs to the corner sections are the eight auspicious goddesses: in the east, Nityaḥarṣā and Jayā; in the south, Siddhi and Aparājitā; in the west, Sukhā and Sukhapriā; in the north, Kṣiprasiddhā and Sthirā. They hold in their first hands, in order: a five-pointed vajra, a three-pointed vajra, a blue jewel, a yellow jewel, a white lotus, a red lotus, a blue utpala, and a white kumuda. Their remaining hands hold in order the mudrā of refuge, a lotus, and a counting rosary. All of them bear the colour of their direction.

If one is wearied by the full elaboration, one may instead depict assemblies of syllables, mudrās, and images numbering fifty-eight, or thirty-seven, or twenty-nine, or twenty-five, or fifteen, or nine, or five, or one — these are the magical displays of the emanation body, arranged according to one's own wish.

They become the very blessing of the mind. The Sugata's images, scripture texts, mudrās, and the like are to be consecrated. Whatever has deteriorated or become soiled by impurity is to be purified by washing and restoration, and then, with a mind free of conceptual thought, one who does so gains immeasurable merit. Even if the form and other qualities are inferior to what came before, the practitioner thereby obtains boundless merit.

The enlightened activity and the secret body,
the defining marks of the Tathāgata — suchness itself and emptiness, awakening's likeness to the sky —
the major marks and minor features are conventional,
like an illusion or a dream.

The thirty-two and eighty marks,
the body of syllables, symbols, and elaboration:
the saṃbhogakāya is the result consonant with merit as its cause;
the nirmāṇakāya is the result of the karmic ripening of action.
Both bear the characteristics of conventional and ultimate truth, and for those who are fortunate, whether their perception is pure or impure,
the Sugata's enlightened activity and the two form bodies arise from the two accumulations as the three bodies.

The dharmakāya, utterly purified, empty of all afflictions,
beyond the domain of body, speech, and mind,
realizing the objectless expanse of space —
this is the dharmakāya of the Victors.

Dependent origination, free from both eternalism and annihilation, understood in the heart as birthless and unceasing —
through the path of mental consciousness's engagement, it is to be known by habituating oneself in meditative concentration.

With the iron hook of faith and with wisdom, with the virtue of a hundred thousand minds of gods and nāgas pure and white,
with the motivation of the treasury of awakening, the precious jewel — through this, may you attain it; may the turning of the wheel arise.

Cherishing the center of the mind, and practicing that conduct accordingly, all the tantras for making the faculties supreme, especially,
and the many taught methods for swiftly accomplishing the lotus network adorned with a thousand hands —
these are to be diligently gathered and treasured by one who is persistent and accomplished.

Those who have the scriptural transmission of the lama and who possess compassion, the hosts of Victors and their sons all rejoicing —
as for the joy of the assemblies who protect the world, what need is there to say more?

This concludes the fifth chapter, on the arising of images, from the root tantra of the noble Avalokiteśvara, king of tantras, entitled the Lotus Network.

Then, born in the Tuṣita heaven,
who for many eons had accumulated the accumulations,
a god's son endowed with the three knowledges,
bearing the name Radiant Flower of Beauty —
having developed great devotion to Avalokiteśvara,
he rose, joined his palms in reverence,
and together with a great retinue and assembly,
with one voice spoke these words:

Om. Supreme guide of all three realms,
leader, protector, fully awakened buddha,
great light of wisdom of the three planes of existence —
to the Sugata we pay homage!

Supreme source of all good qualities,
vidyā-mantra endowed with bliss and blessing,
eternal, permanent, foremost of the sacred Dharma,
who dispels all conceptual elaboration and protects — to you we pay homage!

Ever compassionate Avalokiteśvara,
sovereign of the gathering assembly of bodhicitta,
who has acted and dwells throughout the eons,
assembly-lord who holds what is excellent — to you we pay homage!

Arisen from compassion and wisdom
accumulated over many eons,
the blessed garland of vidyā-mantras —
for the benefit of sentient beings,
the protector, mighty Avalokiteśvara, has proclaimed
mudrās and activities endowed with enlightened action.

Sentient beings bound with karmic stain,
fettered by afflictions and self-pride,
caught in the entanglement of sloth and miserliness,
burdened with heavy loads —
in order to swiftly liberate them, spreading the sun of compassion to parch the dense leaves of existence and swiftly accomplish buddhahood,
please expound how the method of practice arises —
the taking up of the deity and the secret mantra,
the application of enlightened activity,
with an unbroken lineage of transmission.

A vidyā-mantra practice without authorization brings no fruit though one strive; it is mere exhaustion —
a chariot without a driver:
however fine the wheels, where will it go?

To sever the root of afflictions,
the vidyā-mantra is like a sharp sword;
a lance that pierces the armor of ego-clinging;
a great sun that dries the ocean of suffering;
a fire that burns the heaps of dust of conceptual proliferation;
the moisture that gives rise to the flower of wisdom.

the supreme medicine that cures all disease;
the son of Amṛta (Skt. amṛtasya putra) who dispels anxiety and dread;
a stream of water that washes away habitual tendencies;
a great treasure that increases wealth and enjoyment;

a vessel that ferries one across saṃsāra;
and like the wind, it clears away all faults.

Then the Blessed One, the Great Sage,
the Protector, the fully perfected great Buddha,
extended his long, slender, supple tongue
and spoke in the melodious voice of Brahmā,
out of great compassion for all beings,
on the arising of mantra, the unfolding of transmission,
and the stages of its arising through lineage.
He who strives with attentiveness to hear the sacred rite
has done exceedingly well — O son of the gods!

In a delightful and virtue-endowed location,
one should draw a maṇḍala as level as the earth itself,
a maṇḍala resembling a lotus-seat,
rendered in all manner of colors without exception.
The images or mudrās of the Protector Avalokiteśvara and the rest — buddhas, bodhisattvas,
the vidyā goddesses and wrathful ones,
the world-protectors and all the others —
are to be arranged there,
and the assembly of offerings likewise spread out:
lamps, water for the feet, anointing unguents, fragrant incense,
food offerings and tormas of many kinds,
as well as various food and drink,
ornaments and sumptuous garments,
cymbals, flowers, and many garlands,
adorned with words of pleasing beauty.

The devoted student then, reverently, to the master presented offerings with diligence, and beseeched him thus:

"O friend of the mind of all sentient beings,
you who lead the blind away from wrong paths,
you who carry the lancet that clears the cataract —
Tārā and the others who guide and liberate me,
who bear the vessel of wisdom and compassion,
whose boat is hearing, reflection, and meditation,

who strive with skillful means to liberate those with karma from the waters of suffering — to you I pay homage!

You who see the immeasurable mind of the path to awakening, you who behold the support of the path of liberation for beings,
who are diligent in virtue and urge others to virtue —
please bestow the ten virtues upon those who lack them.

You who abide in samaya vows with good conduct,
who are heedful, skilled in melody, and free of transgressions, O lord who protects the meaning of those who seek the Dharma — please bestow upon me refuge and the vows.

In joy for the steadfast brave and the gently tamed in their practice,
the master spoke as follows:

Oṃ — the mind of the Sugata, delusion purified:

I go to Vairocana for refuge.

The mind of the vajra, aversion purified:

I go to Akṣobhya for refuge.

The treasury of enjoyment, miserliness purified:

I go to Ratnasambhava for refuge.

The lotus-speech, attachment purified:

I go to Amitābha for refuge.

The lord of activity, envy purified:

I go to Amoghasiddhi for refuge.

Āḥ — dwelling nowhere, moving like space:

I go to refuge in the Dharma, the dharmadhātu.

The Dharma established as appearing yet without arising:

I go to refuge in the noble eightfold path.

The twelve branches of scripture, counted as one in meaning on the path of accumulation:

I go to refuge in the limbs of the sacred word.

The śrāvaka Saṅgha, which individually discerns the appearance of cause and effect:

I go to refuge in the śrāvaka Saṅgha.

The solitary buddha Saṅgha, with great miraculous power practiced alone or in groups:

I go to refuge in the pratyekabuddha Saṅgha.

The great assembly of mind connected with compassion, wisdom, and awakening:

I go to refuge in the Mahāyāna Saṅgha.

Abandon killing, stealing, sexual misconduct,
harsh speech, slander, idle chatter, covetousness, malice, and wrong views in conduct — renounce these ten, which cut the life of liberation.

Drinking alcohol, pressing sesame oil for livelihood,
smithcraft, working with lac, cutting grass and trees, trading in assemblies of living beings, trade in round-headed goods — renounce these great stains upon a higher-realm body.

Stamping on or destroying forged imprints and seals, representations of shrines and Saṅgha, symbolic letters,
the implements held as rosaries and the like — renounce these entirely and forever.

Old offerings, leeks and onions,
leftovers and remnants,
meat and food from a low person's hand,
water in which living beings dwell — renounce all of these.

From this day forward, for as long as existence lasts,
until you reach the very heart of awakening,
hold steadfastly, never to be relinquished:
the discipline of the vow,
the gathering of wholesome Dharma,
and the discipline of acting for the benefit of sentient beings.

Keep the deity and the master in mind;
hold the vajra, bell, and mudrā;
and be a refuge for beings, free of attachment and without fear.

Give generously whatever Dharma gifts you can.
The various modes of the three vehicles of Dharma are not contradictory — practice them continuously in combination.
Body, speech, mind, and material wealth:
without miserliness, offer what is worthy of offering.

The seals of the body, speech, and mind of the secret vidyās of the gods and demigods —
through practicing them, hold the sacred vows and commitments firmly in the discipline of restraint.

With loving tenderness toward all migrating beings,
give tormā offerings to the hungry ghosts (pretas),
offer water to Jambhala,
and satisfy the hungry ghosts too with water.

The vajra student, filled with great joy,
offer to the deity and guru with whatever is at hand.
O master of the practice of great bliss,
look upon me with compassion,
and out of your love for me, please grant:
the deity, the mantra, and the means of blessing.

The great city of liberation, filled with delight, where the Victors with their children and all the assemblies dwell — enjoyments fulfilling every wish rain down like a shower.
Into that great mansion, I pray to be admitted.

Possessed of the vajra of body, speech, and mind,
the profound domain of the buddhas' activity,
the meaning that is free of conceptual elaboration and beyond reference — please grant me the great path.

Then the mantra-knowing master,
skilled in combining the very essence of the ten,
takes hold of the tip of the Dharma robe with the left hand,
while the right hand bears the Dharma mudrā.
With secret praises, radiant with a smiling light,
the one endowed with faith speaks these words:

Om, come here! Because you are a great vessel fit for the Great Vehicle,
the rituals of conduct in secret mantra practice
shall now be definitively taught to you.

Possessor of the vajra of body, speech, and mind,
through supreme meditation on the vajra secret mantra
of all the buddhas of the three times,

the incomparable wisdoms are obtained.

Even Śākyasiṃha, the hero, Śākyamuni the Lion,
through the incomparable practice of secret mantra,
vanquished the great, utterly intolerable armies of Māra.

To complete his taming of the world in accord with it,
he turned the wheel of Dharma and then passed into nirvāṇa.

Therefore, so that everything may be obtained,

O child, take this wisdom to heart.

Guard the mantra and the substances,
and make offering to the eye of the deity's support.

Like the udumbara flower, omniscient ones appear in the world
perhaps once in a hundred eons, or perhaps not at all.

The arising of the conduct of mantra is rarer still —

for it is able to accomplish the matchless benefit of beings and bring them beyond sorrow.

Sins accumulated over many eons,
whatever burden of sin one carries,
are purified merely by seeing the divine maṇḍala
and by the blessing.

Then, with intelligence free of stain,
the deity, established in the transformation of conduct, cutting off the continuity of the suffering of the lower realms, acts for the benefit of others through a body adorned with marks.

Those who are carried by the great self have today found a find without equal.

Because the Victors together with their children will hold those great carriers of self wherever they are born,

from this day forward you are, without exception,
surely born into the lineage of the Great Vehicle, destined to arise fully in the Great Vehicle.

Led along this supreme and glorious path to its full extent,
you shall become the Sugata, the well-gone one.

Therefore, take delight and be diligent.

O student, lie on a kuśa-grass virtuous bed
and inquire into your dreams.

Having performed the fumigation and purification,
and having been washed with water,
read these texts aloud,
recite the many auspicious passages,
and with your face bound by silk,
cast a garland of rice flowers
into the center of the divine maṇḍala.
Take it back and bind it on your head.
Adorned with the marks of the lotus clan,
open your eyes.

Then reveal to the student the deities, together with the stūpas and divine assemblies,
possessing qualities, wisdom, and power
along with the signs of the dharmas conducive to awakening — so that trust and faith are made manifest.
Offer with whatever is at hand.

Then, to that purified child,
as one lamp is lit from another,
bestow the deity of desire.
With the recitation and the connection that accompanies it,
the root essences and the collection of intimate essences —

The mantras too shall be imparted clearly.
For pacifying: a crystal rosary.
For enriching: the myrobalan fruit.
For increase: the red lungthang is auspicious.
For wrathful action: horn, or grapes —
the datura plant performs all activities.
Having bestowed them along with the mantras, bind them on the head.
The vajra together with the syllable Hūṃ shall be placed in the right hand.
The upper garment is of dark indigo cloth,
the lower garment is of blue color.

The crown ornament is of the five-clan colors.

The vessel for food offerings is adorned with a lotus.

These are the substances for engaging in the welfare of all sentient beings, the signs of the Sage's (Śākyamuni's) auspiciousness received.

Grant the parasol, the fish, the vase, the auspicious knot,
the victory banner, the wheel, and the lotus.

For the removal of sickness, the creation of well-being, and the sustaining of life —

substances that accomplish every category of desirable object:

bezoar, dūrapālī, khri zho,

bilva, honey, myrobalan,

and the fruits of the oleander —

these shall be given with the syllable Hrīḥ, purified.

Saffron, camphor, and musk,

mixed together with cow's milk,

shall be placed on the tongue with these words:

Om — may you know the certain words for whatever is intended,

may you know the Dharma in its various names and categories, may you know the power to ask questions and give answers, may you know the inner and outer meaning through its defining marks.

Vajradharma praveśa —

reciting this along with Om,

place the vajra on the tongue three times.

Visualize the syllable Hrīḥ, red, blazing with fire.

Whatever one has grown accustomed to, that will arise;

and where there is no capacity through unfamiliar habituation,

in order to sever the arising of conceptual thought, instruction is given on the mudrā of all-encompassing conceptuality as the visualized support.

Through the mantras that rest on the visualized support as well, distinct blessings will arise.

One who wishes to receive empowerment over a ground should visualize holding a wheel in the hand.

For firm meditative absorption: the vajra.

One who desires glory: visualize the jewel.

For beautiful form and radiance: the lotus.

One who desires eloquence: the sword.
One who desires the welfare of others: the bell.
The white vajra will clarify the mind.
One who desires wisdom: the book.
A fine palace will bring kingship over humans.
Bearing the form of the Sage, one will always be gentle as a buddha.
Pressing the palms together, one will be venerated by beings.
The staff with tinkling rings gives rise to loving-kindness and compassion.
The iron hook, through guarding the world, brings protection.
The jeweled sprout will bring ease of tongue.
The bell will produce a melodious voice.
The counting rosary will bring the attainment of prophecy.
Through the throne legs one becomes a treasury of blessings.
For gods and the like, incense — a conch.
With the triple-pointed lance, victory in battle.
The red lotus brings birth among the gods.
Pill-empowerment with aspersed water brings birth in the Brahma realm.
Five-colored cloud brings birth as a sage.
Through the mirror, one will behold the face of the gods.
The ruby-red lotus gives rise to primordial wisdom.
The blue lotus brings a pure realm.
The white lotus increases the accumulation of virtue.
The mountain brings an increase of sons and daughters.
The enemy stake removes the obstacles of the māras.
The garland brings attendants of harmonious mind.
The canopy destroys enemies and beasts of prey.
The white fan removes sins.
The flower garland removes sickness.
The jeweled arrow brings a pleasing companion.
The bow brings the finding of wealth and rank.
The water vessel removes poison, fever, and epidemic.
The gesture of fearlessness destroys fear and terror.
Against enemies: the vajra club.
The black vajra will tame the māras.
The jeweled sword repels vidyā mantras.
Below the belly: from activities the begging bowl —
the lasso removes epidemic sickness.

One who desires grain: the ear of millet.
One who desires the wealth of riches: the jewel cave.
Or if one desires prophecy,
visualize a buddha on the crown.
If one desires the five kinds of superknowledge,
visualize the five buddhas.

Then the protector Avalokiteśvara,
his lotus face radiant with a gentle smile,
looked upon Kṣitigarbha
and spoke of the sequential order of grounds in these words:

The conceptual elaborations of the vidyā-holders —
all secret mantras — are seven grounds:
the ground of secret mantra, the ground of mantra-union,
the ground of vidyā-holding, the ground of vidyā-illumination,
the ground of supreme vidyā, the ground of the jewel,
and the ground of the Great Seal.

The ground of the buddha of the great uṣṇīṣa —
these six levels were taught by the Victor.

The ground of all-pervading light, the ground of the lotus eye, the ground of syllables and the wheel, the ground of the great assembly —
the ground of Vajradhara, the ground of the wisdom-guru, and the ground of perfect buddhahood, great bliss.

Kṣitigarbha then made this supplication: O Protector, noble Avalokiteśvara (the Lord who looks with eyes of compassion), sovereign lord — your blessing, like an iron hook, draws beings out of the prison of saṃsāra; as one might lead away a hundred thousand head of nāga-cattle, you rouse all virtue and set it down upon the precious ground of awakening. How wondrous!

This was the sixth chapter, on the arising of blessing, from the root tantra of noble Avalokiteśvara, the King of Tantras called the Lotus Net.

Then, in the Brahmā world, a god born in the manner of Prabhāsvarā — named Vast Samādhi, one of broad and profound realization — rose together with his retinue and rained down precious flowers of every kind in the direction of the Teacher, filling the sky above with a canopy of parasols. Together with his retinue, in a single voice, he offered secret praise and then spoke these words:

Vajrapāṇi, Vajradhara,
holder of the unsurpassed Vajra Vehicle — supreme Vajra vidyā-holder, fully accomplished, arisen from Vajra yoga —
please explain in sequence how attainments arise
for me and for all sentient beings.

Some, through distraction of mind,
stray from the meaning of the guru's tantra,
yet tantra-holders of mantra who carry sin arise;
hollow poetry breeds wonder in the foolish.
Without true instruction they deceive beings;
without attainment they destroy the teaching.
Driven by craving, they become mere entertainers for a season,
and in the next life go to the hell realms and other lower destinies.

Some, with sense-bases as doorways of karmic action,
swift in establishing a red household of the organs as the support,
possess instruction and the manner of the tantras,
yet act not in accordance with Dharma.
Those over whom they hold power,
treated with contempt even by their own disciples,
see aversion grow and disputes arise,
and by this, both parties go to the hells and such.

Some, with little learning and weak wisdom,
confused, dependent on external conditions, puffed up with pride,
take up the teaching and those who hold it as objects of fault-finding speech, and so go to the hells and such.

Some, led by spiritual companions of non-virtue and firmly fixed on entering the wrong path,
disparage the correct path and abandon diligent effort;
those who pursue wrong practice go to hell.

Some, without contemplation, without mantra recitation,
with lamps, incense, torma offerings, and the like — seized upon by spirits, both they themselves and their retinues live shortened lives with diminished enjoyment.

Some, with raging and fierce craving and lust,
through jealousy of other learned ones,

exaggerate and denigrate, feign the manner of the Dharma, curse it,
and strive to establish their own wrong views —
those with entrenched darkness of mind
are born into the class of fierce spirits.

Some, through extreme miserliness,
praise gods and gurus with mere words,
yet when offering food, enjoyment, ornaments, garments,
flowers, incense, tormas, and the like,
give in meagre and halfhearted dribbles —
they are certain, again and again, to be born in the inferior class of hungry ghosts tormented by thirst and hunger.

Therefore, having abandoned all those faults,
one who is noble and possesses good intention
should rightly take up study and reflection, and without confusion about the meaning that has been established,
recite it, hold it in mind,
and strive without doubt.

If one thereby obtains the means to liberate the assembly of beings, what need is there to speak of one's own benefit alone?

Then Vajrapāṇi, the chief,
with a form possessing boundless wisdom,
gazing with heartfelt love upon all beings,
spoke thus in a secret voice:

You who strive to listen to me —
excellent, O son of the gods!
I shall explain the samādhi connected with the arising of divine attainments.

You yourself, with one-pointed mind,
listen well and hold it in mind.

This sacred Dharma, profoundly deep and vast,
is extremely difficult to obtain.

Avalokiteśvara, the sovereign lord, the chief protector —
he who possesses unceasing compassion — is to be generated in your own mind.

When this is very clear, attainment arises.

The first is the emptiness bodhicitta.
The second is the syllable bodhicitta.
The third is the mind of gathered names, attributed designations.
The fourth is the reflection-and-mudrā mind.
The fifth is the blessing-and-sealing mind.

From sound and echo there arise
the retinue of the chief lord, requesting distinction.
In the center is the syllable Oṃ;
in the east is Hūṃ, in the south Svā;
in the west is Hrīḥ, in the north Hā.

The family of families is generated again and again.
Wherever the deity migrates and transforms,
from that maṇḍala the family arises.

The mudrā of the family — that very vidyā seals with the seal of the family, and the male and female assemblies of the family deities dwell gazing at one another in a manner of delight and seclusion.

They are adorned with fluttering ornaments, hanging garments, magical apparitions,
soaring flights, tinkling sounds, and hosts of precious things —
a multitude of assembled adornments.

Some stand erect in a posture of display;
some are in vajra cross-legged posture;
some are in lotus cross-legged posture;
some are in the bodhisattva cross-legged posture;
some are in wrathful posture, with legs extended and contracted;
some have many faces, hands, and feet;
some have but two feet;
some have one face and two hands;
some stand upon a lotus stalk with a lotus;
some hold the lotus and the mudrā of fearlessness.

Holding a flask, a staff with bells,
a peacock-fan, with mudrā granting the excellent protection;
vajra and bell, bow and arrow,
a staff-drum, a wooden drum, a clay drum, a conch-drum,
a copper drum, an iron drum, a stone drum, a bone drum —

long drums, round drums, narrow-waisted drums, broad flat drums, small and slender, large and wide, lidded drums —
swords, water-knives, long blades,
flat blades, round blades, curved blades,
axes with sharp edges, flat axes, broad axes,
small axes, wing-axes, piercing axes,
round axes, garland-axes, shaving-axes,
spears, tridents, thrown lances,
discus, khaṭvāṅga, pounding-stick, club,
grain-stalks, droplets, flowers,
trunks, leaves, and branches,
banners, yak-tail parasols, victory standards piled high,
crossed-vajra, lotus, precious casket,
wheel, scripture, and utpala lotus —
and so on, without limit, supreme in every direction,
a full thousand mudrās or so,
or one hundred and eight, or forty-six,
or twenty-two, or twelve and six,
or four, or two — and so forth — arising according to aspiration.

The mudrā is the bound-holding mudrā.

With this one seals the deity.

By the power of habituation, the great mudrā —
the lion's roar, riding a lion —
has the manner and deportment of a royal sport,
with the three-pronged serpent and the mudrā of fearlessness,
the lotus stalk, the blazing sword.

The iron hook of the hero, the skull:
abiding in the portion of the inner seven.

The fierce and violent Radiant One;
on the left, the Sovereign Lady of the Nāgas —
upon a lotus and the moon,
of directional color, in the bodhisattva cross-legged posture.
Mounted on a horse, holding a wish-fulfilling jewel,
with three faces and six hands — wheel,
vajra, lotus, and precious jewel —
with the mudrā of seeking refuge and granting the supreme.

The retinue is in the bodhisattva cross-legged posture.

The beautiful and graceful goddesses:

Swift-Mind, Excellent Jewel,

Lotus Queen, and Horse-Eared One —

on jewel, lotus, moon, and sun —

in the manner of companions to the wheel.

Padma-born, riding a peacock,

with one face and four hands in an upright posture,

holding a lotus, granting refuge, with an iron hook and a ball-pill for anointment of the crown.

Graceful Garland, Song-and-Dance Lady — on a lotus and moon, in the bodhisattva cross-legged posture.

Akṣobhya, riding a garuḍa,

holding a sword, a lotus, bow and arrow,

and a full vessel granting refuge.

Good-Holding Lady and Perfectly Purified Lady,

Earth-Guarding Lady and Greatly Steadfast Lady —

those whose appearance is similar:

Amoghapāśa, seated upon a nāga,

holding a precious jewel, a lasso,

and an iron hook granting refuge.

Lioness Lady and Elephant Lady,

Tiger-Faced Lady and Lady with the Face of Garuda supreme — upon seats of lotus and moon.

Hāla-hāla, upon a frog,

holding a vajra and bell, granting refuge,

and carrying a Dharma basket.

Lady of Sunlight and Lady of Moonlight,

Lady Sovereign of Water and Lady of the Precious Garland — endowed with the radiance of virtue.

The Protector, adorned with a lotus, of great proclamation,

in the manner of sport upon a crocodile (makara) —

a ḍamaru drum, a rosary,

the gesture of fearlessness, and an iron fetter.

Lady of the Unbroken Chain and Lady of the Wheel,
Lady of Secrets and Lady of Relics —

Vajra Sovereign of the Bull's Tread and of Dharma,
the wheel of Dharma and the seal of teaching Dharma, granting refuge, together with a lotus vessel.

Joy Lady, Born-of-Joy, and Lady Who Illuminates —
the cymbal ladies, upon lotus and moon, poised in the manner of a crane standing on one leg.

The reverend Lady, Crown Protrusion of Dharma, rides upon Hari Hari Hari.

With three faces and eight hands
she holds a wheel, a vajra, bow and arrow,
a white lotus, a rosary, the gesture of granting refuge,
and a vase filled with nectar.

Lady with the Face of Garuḍa, Lady with the Face of a Heron, Lady with a Solar Face and Lady with a Lunar Face.

Upon blue-throat, upon Joy, upon Intimate Joy —
three faces and six hands holding a lotus,
a book, the gesture of granting refuge, and a rosary hand —
Lioness-Faced Lady and Nāga-Faced Lady, Delighter Lady and Life-Giver Lady,
in the bodhisattva's cross-legged posture upon lotus and moon.

At the center, the Protector with eleven faces,
Lady Who Holds Secrets and Lady Who Grasps, Mantra Protectress and Siddhi Protectress — in the manner of their forms, directions, and colors as above.

In the four-spoked wheel of the four directions,
the principal bodhisattvas — four in number — together with their companions:

In the east, Vajra Sovereign, Unobstructed Mind and Siddhi Sovereign, bearing vajra mudrā and a treasure casket —
all upon lotus and moon.

In the south, Jewel Sovereign, Great Siddhi Sovereign and Boar-Faced One,

Yoga Siddhi Sovereign
and the one called Boat-Holding Sovereign.

In the west, Lotus Sovereign,
the male being with a lion's face,
with a lotus hand and a black serpent hand — called the one Who Holds the Parasol Granting Fulfillment.

In the north, Samaya Sovereign,
the Wheel-Bearer and the Tiger-Skin Bearer, All-Fulfillment Sovereign and Conch-Sound Multiplier — each bearing the color of their respective direction.

The ten protectors of the world,
the four great royal clans —
the universally renowned great gods —
are to be made joyful and delighted in the teaching.

For the sake of what transcends the world and what pertains to the world, intending to take birth in a noble lineage, even the thousand buddhas who will arise in this auspicious eon are to be made joyful.

In this way, elaborated in full,
the number of the deities is vast:
one thousand two hundred and forty-seven —
the deities of the worldly and the world-transcending, the divine assembly of the maṇḍala of the Protector with eleven faces.

Ten maṇḍalas of Avalokiteśvara,
five maṇḍalas of the Sovereign of the World,
five maṇḍalas of the vidyā goddesses,
seven maṇḍalas of the vajra wrathful ones —
and within each of those maṇḍalas, many deities of the mind's maṇḍala:
twenty-five by intrinsic nature,
nine aspects in the manner of cause and result,
and five in the aspect of wisdom —
yet sovereign as one in the essential nature of reality.

According to whatever aspiration one holds,
the maṇḍala is expanded in that form,

or, through the practice of single-pointed aspiration,
having attained the supreme awakening vajra,
one enjoys great sovereignty as king of the three realms
and turns the wheel of Dharma.

For one who is pure and faithful of mind,
bestow earnest application to one-pointed practice.
With a good mind, one enters among beings and acts accordingly;
with gentle speech, naturally free of anger;
without deceit, cunning, craving, or distraction;
with body and speech at ease, and learned in the teachings;
without pride, miserliness, or attachment —
possessed of generosity, compassion, and vigor,
one meditates upon Avalokiteśvara as one's object of focus,
and recites his heart dhāraṇī root mantra without interruption,
then utters aspirational prayers for the benefit of others.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

When the eight great fears appear to any being,
may the miraculous power of the great wrathful one swiftly clear them away.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

When epidemics and diseases of any kind arise,
may he act as physician, medicine, and medical treatment — having himself become that physician and treatment, may he swiftly dispel them.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

When famine breaks out,
may he stir abundantly from every quarter
so that food and drink flow without ceasing.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

Wherever great conflict arises,
may minds be transformed of their own accord,
and may all be reconciled in happiness.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

When animals prey upon one another,
when food and drink are scarce, and fear of others looms,
may he become the refuge that dispels all these.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

When hungry ghosts are tormented by thirst and hunger
and have fallen into the grip of wrong views, may the nectar that is free of disease appear before them all.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

Being the refuge of beings, endowed with skillful means,
with the boat of wisdom,
may all be freed from suffering through his skillful means.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

May they remain steadfast on the path, bound by the lasso of moral discipline,
climb the mountain of nirvāṇa,
and enter the home of the unconditioned.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

Beholding the states of the lower destinies,
may the antidote arise in every place, in every ground,
exhausting those very states upon arrival.

Homage to the Protector Avalokiteśvara!

When hell-beings are cut and slashed by heat and cold,
may there arise for them great armor, cool shade,
and the light of warmth.

By reciting this awareness mantra again and again,
may the very path of truth be realized.

May the seed of origin rot away,
and the heap of suffering wither and dry.

May the Protector attain nirvāṇa and become renowned throughout the ten directions of the world.

Now, what remains to be correctly explained: by means of approach practice, having overcome the power of obstructing forces, and in order to swiftly obtain attainment, one should apply oneself to the practice with diligence.

From the first day of the white fortnight of the month, one should bathe, don fresh clothing, and sit before a fine image of the deity. Remaining in fasting retreat for one day, one recites this mantra one hundred and eight times in each of the three periods of the day and makes offerings of whatever one has.

From dawn of the eighth day, in a secluded place, on a fine seat and throne, one places the image facing west. One makes offerings of food, drink, and things enclosed by a fence. One burns agaru and durukṣa incense continuously. One eats food of white grain and milk, and for three days recites as much as one is able.

Then, for three days between, one subsists on milk, yogurt, and rice. Having greatly increased the offerings to the deity, at the foot of one thousand and eight awakening trees, one smears durukṣa butter. Piece by piece, reciting one mantra per piece, one burns them before the bodhisattva.

Then the earth itself will shake, and the image too will shake. From above, from the face thereof, a beautiful sound will come: "Excellent! Excellent! Son of good family! You who are earnest and diligent — whatever medicine you desire, whatever aim you pursue, whether one who flies through the sky, one with swift feet, or a royal sage who holds awareness — if you wish to be equal to me in fortune, this very day I shall grant it."

On the fifteenth day, that image should be placed inside a stūpa or before a stūpa that contains relics of the Sugata (the well-gone). Taking the restoration and fasting vow, in fasting retreat, one strikes the image with one hundred and eight blue flowers, reciting one mantra per strike.

At that time, from the very root of what lies before one, a sound like a great peal of thunder will arise, and the great earth will shake mightily. At that very occurrence, one should not be frightened, but should recall the mantra practice and remember: the great bodhisattva, the great being, the Protector Avalokiteśvara, the Lord endowed with great compassion — to him, I myself bow down with reverence.

May I myself, having become the protector and refuge of all sentient beings, properly and completely fulfill the hopes and wishes of all beings.

At that time, in granting what is desired, there will be no obstacle from the assembly of gods and nāgas. All desired aims of the mantra will be accomplished. This is an aspirational prayer that perfects merit.

By means of prostrations, circumambulations of supports, the building of stūpas, maṇḍalas, and the limbs of yoga — so endowed with these activities, for the sake of oneself and others, when one strives without interruption,

Those vast aspirational prayers that create virtue — they will quickly come to pass. For that reason, aspirational prayer is taught as supreme.

Whoever is negligent in virtuous practice, being lazy, is seized by māra; such a one speaks with doubt and slander, disparaging the Dharma, and will become a destroyer of the teaching. Therefore, those of corrupt caste and base conduct — keep them far away. Those possessed of miserliness, laziness, and arrogance, along with those who are heedless and distracted — they walk māra's path of bondage, the wrong path. Drive them away, expel them and cast them out.

This concludes the seventh chapter of the Root Tantra of the noble Avalokiteśvara called Padma Dra-wa, the chapter on the arising of siddhis.

Then it was taught that illness and harm and the like are dispelled by the mere utterance of mantra. For whatever disease or malevolent spirit, the mantrin should clearly and forcefully invoke the mantra, and recite it oneself with single-pointed mind. First, with a mantra accompanied by compassion, one is freed from sickness and possession. At that time, one should apply oneself to offerings.

For madness that arises each day, or on the second or third day, or a fever that flares every four or seven days; for a being, a ḍākinī, a flesh-eater, or a madness-causing, memory-destroying spirit causing bodily decay; for powerful demonic possession — these are dispelled by one hundred and eight recitations. Alternatively, on a five-colored thread, tie one knot per mantra, one hundred and eight knots, and hang the knotted cord around the neck or on the shoulder. All obscurations accumulated through wrongdoing will be pacified and purified — to say nothing, then, of obstacles, sickness, and the like. The waves of bliss will be inconceivable.

For swellings, growths, abscesses, burst wounds, eye sores, leprosy, boils, rashes, scabies, and the like — for all manner of malignant diseases; for injury or danger from swords, arrows, spears, and the like; for snake bite, evil scorpions, bees with sharp stingers, and the like — for all such harmful things, recite seven times, one hundred and eight times, or one thousand times. Alternatively, smear with yellow clay mixed with mud, and one will certainly be freed from illness. For illness that has flared on one side from an obstacle or a wind disorder, or for deafness or a blocked nose — recite one hundred and eight times, then anoint the body, consume, and apply to the ears and nose a preparation made from grains, butter, yogurt, and costus root, recited over seven times, and recovery is without doubt.

Then the great bodhisattva Moonlight also spoke these words of blessing, endowed with empowerment, for the sake of protecting and guarding those traveling the road:

Namo buddhāya gurave, namo dharmāya tvaīyini, namaḥ saṃghāya mahāte, tribhyo pi svāhā nāma.

By reciting this at all times, day and night, all non-virtues are purified and illnesses are pacified. Obstacles and māras will not be encountered on the road, and one will always attain a joyful mind through the holy ones.

The bodhisattva Sunlight also spoke this mantra for the sake of protection:

Śamata heru śa ho. Ājñāpate, surute, śaṃkeṭe, barama byate, suruṭe, kālaṭate, khimate svāhā.

If twenty-one knots are tied on a five-colored thread, reciting the mantra seven times per knot, and the cord is bound upon an afflicted area, illness will be dispelled. One will also obtain innumerable qualities.

For a wound opened by a snake bite — recite seven times and apply to the opening of the wound, and it will heal. For the hide of a lion, tiger, leopard, or bear — praise it twenty-one times, then speak the praise, and drape it over a person with fever; the fever will be dispelled immediately.

For someone suddenly endangered by possession — burn gugul incense over which the mantra has been recited seven times. Mix together datura, white mustard, and white salt, recite twenty-one times, and fumigate beneath the sick person's bed; the possessing spirit will flee and the person will be freed from illness.

Cook costus root in sesame oil, and anoint: this quickly dispels illness on one side of the body, ear diseases, and stiffness. Alternatively, it may be done with vegetable oil. By massaging the navel with sesame oil, quick and certain delivery of the child will occur, and the placenta and flesh will certainly emerge. Combine with datura root and hare.

Severe heart disease will be dispelled. By applying the warm droppings of a crow to a wound, burns will heal. For a long intestinal worm that feeds on the heart, drink a full ladle of white horse urine; this will expel the living creature. Boil rice together with the leaves of rhubarb and apply as a poultice. For the eyes, pour in fresh donkey dung and lie down; it will heal. For swollen genitals, use white thread. Recite the mantra twenty-one times over it. Recite one hundred and eight times over white mustard and tie it to the shoulder; one will be victorious in battle. Twenty-eight pills of pigeon droppings, together with recitation, rubbed on, will certainly free one from iron shackles, wooden fetters, and the like. Recite the mantra one thousand times over ash or powder, and an insect caught in a flower will be freed. To avert possessing spirits and epidemic disease, recite over fragrant water and wash. For a woman who desires a child, recite one thousand times over butter and drink. Grind together rat, snake, and frog flesh, and scatter the powder; livestock will scatter. Combine ghee, white mustard, galangal, cardamom, and honey. By this mantra wisdom increases.

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namō āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: khāhi khāhi, balite svāhā. Namō ratnatrayāya. Namō āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: Oṃ padme phu, mahāpadme phu, padmalocane phu, amogha vete, namo adotakuṭāya, sara sara, gaccha gaccha, imaṃ makṣirogaṃ nāśaya svāhā.

Recite twenty-one times, then anoint the outside of the eyes with the ash; all eye diseases will be destroyed. Tie seven knots in a white cord, reciting the mantra seven times; all ear diseases will be destroyed. Equal parts saffron and caraway dispel diseases of the nose. Powder of chebulic myrobalan mixed with honey, used as a gargle, is to be understood as destroying all diseases of teeth and tongue.

Oṃ hūṃ śrī hūṃ śukṣe phu.

Recite twenty-one times over water and drink; it dispels harm from indigestion. Namō ratnatrayāya. Namō āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: Oṃ ratnaśe, mahācaṇḍa asuramartaka, jvala jvala, chinda chinda, huru huru, kiri kiri, hana hana, sarva jvaraṃ rudrakam bandhena, māraya māraya, sarva grahān svāhā.

Written this mantra with vermilion and tied at the throat dispels diseases. Furthermore, whichever root mantra is employed, apply it to the various corresponding activities.

For bee stings, insect bites, snake bites, scorpion stings, rashes, scabies, and neck disease, apply honey and long pepper. For one who has entered into diligent practice, recite twenty-one times and apply sandalwood paste to the chest. For dispelling eye diseases, use sweet wood water, or incense water, or in some cases meat broth. For the ears, use sesame oil. When another's writing becomes unclear, or when one is about to enter a quarrel and a fight is about to break out, wash the face with water from a vase. For the protection of children: an acacia stake four finger-widths long, the long mantras of Padmanartteśvara and Amoghapāśa, recited one thousand and eight times and tied on — the child will dwell happily for a long life.

Chewing the first horn of an ox, together with kundunga wood, snakeskin, linen, a straight bön staff, and likewise two yellow ones, the husk of barley, the hair of a distracted person, cat dung, bṛhatī, juniper, crow's egg, ox hoof, naleshom, and dadara combined — the fumigation made from mixing all these together is for clearing obstructing forces. It is called the Sixteen Fumigations.

Crystal, babla,

Fumigating with the snakeskin of a venomous viper clears all epidemic diseases and clears other ailments as well.

Into the fat of a cow, mix the powder of somarāja. After blessing it with the syllable Hṛīḥ, recite the root mantra of the Blue-Throated One one hundred and eight times, and drink it: this clears poison and epidemic disease.

Combine the powder of somarāja with a decoction of barberry. Make pills of the size of a large pea, recite the mantra of the wish-fulfilling jewel, and merely eating them means that whatever poison one has consumed causes no harm to the body.

Boil one srang of mustard in butter, pour in somarāja, and pour it out. Recite the mantra of Hālā one hundred and eight times, completing the full count of mantras, then administer it. The patient will vomit and will not be overwhelmed by the poison.

Household smoke together with rock salt, the red-rooted leaves of skye-du, powder combined with butter, ghee, and honey — drink this with the root mantra of Great Harītī one hundred and eight times. It clears all snake ailments.

White chalk, costus root, aloe wood, turmeric combined with white and other ingredients — massage with these while reciting the mantra of Amoghapāśa.

Applying them clears all poisons.

Boil one srang of rock salt together with two srang of butter and eight srang of urine. Drink it with the mantra of Vajradharma. It clears all poison diseases.

Mix the three salts and four srang of butter, recite the mantra of the Immovable, and apply it: by mere touch it clears the sinfulness of one seized by a serpent.

Drink kumārī together with the two yellows, cimra root, mineral salt, and sparna with the mantra of Padmanartteśvara and water. It clears all poison diseases.

The two yellows together with dong-ro, peacock ash, saffron, and le-bgan resin — drink these praised in the Padmālaṃkāra with recited mantras. They destroy all venom poisons entirely.

For one who has been afflicted by the harm of planets and stars, in order to dispel that: upon a lotus-petalled eight-petalled maṇḍala, in each of the directions, in the intermediate directions, and in the centre, the Protector Mañjuvajra (Mañjuśrī), who transforms into the form of Garuḍa — arrange the offering in a reverent manner with eleven-faced Avalokiteśvara.

Viṣṇu, who holds the sun and moon in his hands, in the form of a mouse — the Garuḍa who presses down upon it has the colour of eye-medicine; Norgyé's two sons in divine form; a body resplendent with three eyes; with claws and wings of the five precious jewels; with a sharp vajra beak, accompanied by wrath; radiant with the light of millions of suns; at the heart a blazing sun of light; impelled by the black syllable Gaṃ, the hair follicles transformed into sparks, vajras radiate in all ten directions, subduing planets and asterisms, burning spirits and nāgas.

Recite the mantra of Unobstructed Compassion clearly, like the sound of thunder. Whatever activities are performed — be they countless thousands — all are accomplished by this mantra.

The white Garuḍa with resplendent body is to be applied against nāga possessions. Impel it with the root mantra of the Blue-Throated One: it definitively clears the many fierce nāga possessions upon the earth. It burns the demons of the nāgas and the rākṣasas of Brahmā, and sends leprosy affliction upon beings.

The red Garuḍa, the snake-eater, holds a skull-cup of flowers and a khaṭvāṅga in the left hand, and in the right hand holds a sword blazing with fire-light.

Impelled by the Protector's lion-roar, his heroic power is equal to the fire of an aeon.

For the possession of the snake-and-jewel-clubbed one — for Garuḍa, the flesh-eating possession — impel with the mantra of Protector Hārītī.

For ḍākinī possession: Garuḍa, green, holds sword and phurba. Impel with the mantra of the Lotus Sword.

For each and every activity, one applies it combined with mantra and mudrā (Skt. mudrā). According to one's aspiration, one seals it with mudrā. The seal of body and the seal of mind — one is sealed by mantra and mudrā that indicate essential nature.

Now the mudrās shall be explained.

Standing before the body of the deity, one gives a slight nudge with the right foot. One extends both hands separately downward. The middle fingers and ring fingers are separately bent toward the palm. The thumbs and index fingers are separately extended. The elbows are bent, and the palms are displayed facing forward. Whether walking or seated, in order to conquer the host of enemies, recite this mantra:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Nama āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: oṃ avate parate. Ehyehi svāhā.

Or else, straightening the body as before, one joins the palms at the heart with fingers interlaced. The two index fingers are raised and their tips touch. The two thumbs are bent to the first joint of the index fingers. The palms do not quite touch. With this mudrā one performs the salutation while reciting whatever dhāraṇī mantra one wishes. When harm from obstructing spirits arises, it is dispelled by this mantra and mudrā:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Nama āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: oṃ sarvadharmāṇi maṇḍalāya. Ehyehi paramaśuddhasattvāya svāhā.

Or else, when entering into meditation, one first forms this mudrā: placing the hollow of the fists together at the crown, one joins the palms. The two index fingers are bent with their tips touching. The two thumbs are then pressed against them. This is certain to bring victory over māra.

Or else one places the backs of both hands together, the fingertips touching. The two thumbs are extended and tucked inside beside the index fingers. This is placed at the brow. Then recite:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Nama āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: oṃ sarvaduṣṭa namo vajrāya me svāhā.

In particular, one will come to behold the gods.

Or else, standing with the mudrā of meditative equipoise placed at the heart, recite this mantra:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Nama āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: oṃ sarvadeva anale svāhā.

This conquers sudden conflicts.

Or else, standing with the backs of the heels together, one makes both hands into the gesture of fearlessness. By reciting any root mantra, the limbs of meditative absorption become stable.

Or else, this is the mudrā of the root mantra of the Padma Gyenlung. One joins both palms together. With the ring fingers one presses down on the thumbnails. The tip of the little finger is raised toward the middle finger. This is the mudrā of invitation — requesting the deity to come. When summoning, one beckons with the tip of the index finger. Or else, one beckons with the right index finger and sends back with the left. Then recite:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Nama āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: oṃ brahma ehyehi svāhā.

Or else, when the fingertips are raised and the index finger is waved, this summons the Great Gods. Or else, with this mudrā — at the time of a solar or lunar eclipse, if one recites the dhāraṇī mantra over butter and, having sealed it with the mudrā, eats it — wisdom will increase and life will increase. One will certainly attain freedom from illness and a beautiful form.

Standing with legs crossed and palms joined, the two thumbs bent inside the hands — this is placed at the heart: it is Avalokiteśvara's mudrā of the wish-fulfilling jewel wheel. It is the main performer for activities such as making offerings and so forth. Likewise it serves for the confession of misdeeds.

The index fingers bent with thumbs on their nails, both hands with backs together — this is the mudrā of the Lord of Dance. Palms joined with thumbs and index fingers separately extended — this is the mudrā of the Blue-Throated One. The two index fingers bent, the remaining fingers extended — this is the mudrā of the Immovable One. Both hands with backs together, the two thumbs extended — recite this mantra over fine incense:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Nama āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: namo ratnaśarī candra alaṃkāra margate ja supracaka viśarājāya. Tadyathā: oṃ ratne ratne. Tata śaratna. Tata śaratna prīte maheratne prabhate. Ratnagarbhe svāhā.

Recite this one hundred and eight times previously and subsequently. Wealth too shall be obtained, and hidden treasure shall be found. If one wishes that other beings feel loving-kindness toward oneself, rub twenty-one pieces of tooth-wood and apply it, together with one thousand and eight recitations, to the chest of the one whose affection is desired. When accompanied by the mudrās described, even obstructing spirits will flee before this powerful mantra.

Namo sarva buddha dharma saṃghāya. Namō ratnatrayāya. Namō āryāvalokiteśvarāya. Bodhisattvāya. Mahāsattvāya. Mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: namo vajrapāṇisya. Tadyathā: oṃ hupi hupi. Ka pa dupi. Pragāyani svāhā.

With this enumerated incense, make offerings to the buddhas; make offerings likewise to the gods. Place the right thumb in the palm and cover it with the fingers. Then lift the right earlobe and extend and contract the index finger, gesturing with animation — this is the mudrā of inspiration and delight. The left hand forms the mudrā of fearlessness, and this repels untimely death and similar calamities. Joining both palms together and interlacing the fingers, bring the two thumbs and the two little fingers separately into contact — this is the mudrā of the Ocean of Wisdom.

Oṃ sarva saṃśodhani svāhā.

Similarly, with fingers interlaced and pressed together, the two middle fingers thrust upward and stretched inside — this is the mudrā of the Lamp.

Oṃ dīpa talocana svāhā.

Within that same hollow, the two middle fingers brought tip to tip and raised — this is the mudrā of Incense.

Oṃ dhūpa dhata svāhā.

Heels touching, the fingers separately rising upward — this is the mudrā of Ointment.

Oṃ dhale betya svāhā.

Heels touching, fingers moving upward and spreading outward — this is the mudrā of the Scattering Offering, the offering of food.

Oṃ naivedya prokṣataṃ svāhā.

Both hands bent inward with all eight fingertips in contact and the two thumbs raised upward — this is the mudrā of the Supreme Robe.

Oṃ bhāsaṇi svāhā.

Both palms open and raised upward — this is the mudrā of Granting Flesh.

Oṃ āṃ krūṃ hrīḥ sakala ghana parivareṇaṃ. Parikera a a. Apataraṃ te. Avataraṃ te. Apataraṃ tu. Daśa dika lokapāla saparivare bhyaḥ idaṃ baḷiṃ grhṇantu khādantu. Pibantu. Yathaibhaṃ yatheṣṭaṃ. Jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ. Saṃtribhā sarva sattvāni. Śāntiṃ kuru. Puṣṭiṃ kuru. Vaśaṃ kuru. Āvaraṇa kuru gupti. Karotā kurbānyu. Hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ. Āryāvalokiteśvarasya ājñāpayati svāhā. Oṃ akāro mukhaṃ sarva dharmāṇāṃ ādyānutpannatvāta oṃ āḥ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā. Oṃ hrī jaṃ bha la jalendrāya svāhā.

For those in need, who always dwell in hardship, continually give them clean water.

Oṃ āḥ hrīḥ lokaśvara hunu smṛti karāya svāhā.

Why should one give food and water to the hungry ghosts? So that the yogin's companion spirits, the gods and protectors of the world, the elemental beings and all hungry ghosts, shall exert themselves with zeal. Let the iron hook of mind be applied, drawing afflicted minds onward and upward, so that hundreds of thousands of gods and nāgas rejoice in their hearts. Arouse the motivation to turn all beings toward the precious awakening mind, and cultivate the supreme intention to dedicate merit to that end. Then all great deeds shall be accomplished and brought to completion.

This concludes the eighth chapter, on the application of mantras, from the tantra called the Lotus Net, the king of root tantras of the noble Avalokiteśvara.

Thereafter, from within the retinue's maṇḍala, a great bodhisattva named Essence of the Sun, accompanied by an assembly of retinues, made a great arrangement of offerings together with melodious hymns of praise, and having offered worship to the Blessed One, circumambulated him many times. Then, kneeling with palms joined, having stepped aside to a single spot and bowed in reverent praise, he spoke these words:

O Protector, sovereign of all qualities,
Chief wellspring of wondrous primordial wisdom,
Victor of the great sun of the path to liberation,
O ocean of guides — I bow before you!

Your form adorned with all marks and features beyond limit,
Your glory vast, pervading all of space,
The sky of your intellect boundless and expansive —

To the secret of your body I bow down!
Your brahmic voice, manifold beyond all thought,
Filling to the very bounds of boundless space,
Has given rise to the twelve immeasurable branches.

To the secret of your speech I bow down!
The door of meditative absorption, liberation, and concentration — Inconceivable, not to be conceived, conceived through contemplation —
Together with wisdom beyond all comprehension,
And a mind of compassion: to your mind I bow down!

That lamp which cuts the bonds of affliction binding sentient beings,
Which wins victory in the battle against the darkness of ignorance,
And clears away the web of total conceptual thought —
Please speak it forth today.

Children fall into the pit of darkness;
śrāvakas are terrified by the mass of their own attachment and desire;
Solitary buddhas possess the patience of secrecy;
Bodhisattvas are afraid of bondage.

For those who hold sway through affliction, through the secret mantra,
By means of the union of wisdom and compassion —
Please speak the many supreme methods
That permanently abandon even habitual tendencies.

Then the Blessed One, the great sage, having spread his rays of light in all ten directions and filled the vast expanse of the sky with the great brahmic voice of his melodious speech, declared:

"Excellent, O great bodhisattva! Splendid one, well done! Well done! Listen well and take to mind with single-pointed, reverent attention.

In a pleasant, joyful, and comfortable place, in a place of supreme delight, draw a square maṇḍala. Square, with four doors and with entrance steps, let it face east or south. Adorn it by painting in white, yellow, red, and green. In the center place a lotus of eight petals with a white hub fittingly surrounded by red, furnished with two borders. Upon gold, silver, copper, or the earth itself, a vase with a wide belly and a narrow neck, its mouth open wide and its base slightly tapered — having thoroughly cleansed it — fill it with camphor, saffron, fragrant musk, costus, and muskrat musk water. At that place of the bird-knife, lion-knife, and assa, add kari, karni, devako. Barley, rice, sesame, wheat, kidney-beans, and lentils, along with gold, silver, coral, pearl, and crystal — the five precious substances — bestow these into the vase; bind its neck with white cloth; adorn its mouth, and place fragrant leaves and flowers. Together with a flower garland, having set it in the center of the lotus, and having churned from the great ocean — the wish-fulfilling tree with its great fruits — and infused throughout as the mantras fill its boundless extent, through the power of the mantras, awakened from a buddha's vast intention, auspiciousness shall pour down. The sons of the victors and the goddesses of knowledge, together with their retinues, shall sing and proclaim many auspicious words. At that time, from the sky, through ten billion rays of primordial gnosis, through the full ripening of the great tree, a great rain of nectar shall fall. Offer tormas to the world-protectors; make offerings to the victors and their sons.

On days when stars and so forth descend, or from the first day of the month until the fifteenth, recite the mantra garlands. Circle round the deities again and again. For all activities whatsoever, combine them under the power of the deity. For each of those various activities, apply them freely as you wish. For minor activities, apply the mantra of Sphyān ma against dropsy, tumors, and the like with the mantra of the unvanquished. For averting classes of spirits, the dance is supreme; for averting sorcery, spells, and vidyā-mantras, cleanse with the mantra of Amoghapāśa. For increasing wisdom: Vajradharma. For curing nāga-illness and the poison hālāhala: the lotus-ornament of increasing life spans — the transmission of the saffron-blue-throat mantra causes glory to flourish. With the great Haritī incense-offering, the eleven-faced one swiftly dispels; with the lion's roar, leprosy is cured. For whatever implements of yoga one desires, cleanse with the mantra of the wish-fulfilling jewel. With many auspicious melodies, fresh and clean garments, and with a pleasant tune, one bathes. For swift purification of obscurations and the accomplishment of all desired objects, the mantra garland —"

— whatever it may be combined with. As for other minor applications, what need is there to mention them?

When the moon is seized by an eclipse, place one srang of butter in a silver vessel, set an image before you, and recite the mantra. When the moon is released from the eclipse, take up that butter, and by eating it or applying it to the body, all illnesses will be pacified and one will become well.

With equal parts of Chinese gall and costus root, place before the image and recite the mantra one thousand and eight times. Sprinkled with water, a drop placed on the forehead enables one to see the three realms and accomplishes the three desired aims.

If hot water is combined and one bathes the body with it, all illnesses and obstructive forces will be purified.

On a rhinoceros gallstone, recite one hundred and eight times and apply it to the right fierce-face. If pointed in the direction of an enemy's army, the enemy forces will suffer greatly in battle.

Take fruits of the walnut, one accompanying each mantra recitation — one hundred and eight — and burn them before the image; all human epidemics and livestock diseases will be halted.

With a clean cord of red color, tie seven knots, each tied with one recitation of the mantra. Attach it first under the single face at the top, then upon the patient. Epidemic illness will be pacified.

With one mantra for each of twenty-one knots, place it before the front face, take it up and attach it; this suppresses ḍākinīs, elemental spirits, zombie-possession, and demonic afflictions seized by fierce forces.

If even by that the patient is not cured, recite one hundred and eight times with one mantra per knot; attach it to the crown of the single front face, then take it up and attach it to the patient — liberation is certain.

For one long afflicted with suffering and illness in whose home demonic spirits have entered causing terror: grain and one mantra, combined with broth of rice — one hundred and eight times counted before the image — and the cord accomplished as above, attached to the body: liberation is assured.

For reversing enmity, conflict, and violent sorcery and casting: offer incense and flowers before the image; before the image of Vināyaka, burn a slip of wood inscribed with the enemy's name. Recite one hundred and eight times with one mantra per knot. Affix the knotted cord to the left fierce-face. After four days have passed, untie it from the image. Between each knot, recite one mantra and bind it. One who has been making enmity toward you will come seeking refuge. Such is the power of the substance and the mantra.

For removing obstacles to diligent practice: on a five-colored cord, tie one hundred and eight knots, one mantra with each knot. Having tied them, place it above the front face. After one day, untie it and attach it to the body; all activities will be accomplished in an auspicious manner.

For one who is obstructed and beset by inauspiciousness, so that whatever activity he desires cannot be accomplished and at every time ill omens arise: using two excellent vases of pure water, recite one hundred and eight times with each — with the first, wash the image; with the second, wash Vināyaka. Then, having sealed with one hundred and eight mantra recitations, from that point bathe oneself. Obstacles will be cleared and all desires accomplished.

For dispelling whatever kind of conjured demonic possession: take ash from a cat's skull, good earth, and earth sprinkled with clean water. Shape them into the form of a cat. Place it before the image, then affix it to the left fierce-face with thread. Recite the Hayagrīva mantra one thousand times; with a sword over which one hundred dhāraṇīs have been recited, cut it into one hundred and eight pieces. Each piece together with one mantra recitation is to be cast into a hollow. The harm caused by those is permanently eliminated.

For various kinds of adverse eye disease: finely grind the three fruits. With the milk of a white goat nursing her young, and with a newly delivered woman and dogs and pigs not having witnessed it, affix it to the face of a tightly closed bud. Recite the mantra one thousand times and apply it. If instilled into the eye, cataracts will develop — that is, all eye diseases will be cleared — and sharp clear vision will also be attained.

With the excess — not the same water again but fresh spring water — boil equal parts of camphor and bdellium. As much foam as rises to the top: hold it before the roots of the face and recite the mantra one thousand times. Having loosened it, form it into pills; if swallowed — it will vanquish the poison of halāhala. As for the bile of a white elephant: place it in a blue vessel before the image, recite the mantra one thousand and eight times, and rouse the limbs. If a dot is made upon the forehead, gods, nāgas, spirits, and humans will be delighted. To examine a hostile or discordant spouse: hold the tail feather of a vulture before the image, recite the mantra one thousand times, and take it in hand — they will be reconciled. If there is drought or no rain: remain before a liṅga, make great offerings, then recite the mantra one thousand times before the image into water that has arisen, and great rain will fall. For one who desires that heavy rain be stopped: enter into meditative absorption, bind the mudrā, and continuously before the image burn black aloeswood and so on as incense, and offer such offerings without interruption. Recite the mantra one thousand times from the eighth to the twenty-ninth day of the month. In order to accomplish the supernatural knowledge of the eye: on a fragrant four-cornered maṇḍala, with victory banners and pennants of four colors, with a single layer of white curtaining, draw five lotuses in the center, and place therein a bodily relic endowed with relics. Offer continuously with white sandalwood scented water and incense. Offer with a garland of butter lamps of pale yellow color. Then take in equal measure: manśirikā, kuśu, red lotus, blue lotus, ocean-water foam, the shoot of a black water-crow's quill, unconsecrated substance, bdellium, barley, elephant bile, red and yellow saffron, and the three hot spices — pound these all together in equal parts. Add to half that measure of bdellium and camphor, measure by measure; recite the mantra one thousand times per measure before the image. Then place it in the center of the maṇḍala, and, together with the mantra recitation, bestow it upon a fish in a copper vessel. Place it upon the face of the image, make offerings, and offer prayers. Apply it to the eyes with the pin of a staff. A dripping of tears, or the movement of white clouds and red clouds, will appear. Headache, eye disease, sudden blindness, and dimness will be cleared. Applied for two days: the four hundred and four diseases of the body will be eliminated. On the third, all evil spirits will flee. On the fourth, all obscurations will be purified. On the fifth, one will be victorious in the battle of disputes. On the sixth, bad dreams and the harmful effects of witchcraft will be dispelled. On the seventh, there will be no sudden death. After two weeks, one will obtain lordly power. After three weeks, spirits will come under one's sway. After four weeks, yakṣas; after five weeks, nāgas; after five weeks, gods, humans, and rākṣasas; after six weeks, the garuḍa and the gods of the seven mountains; after seven weeks, Mahākāla will be accomplished; after eight weeks, the Mātṛkās; after nine weeks, one will behold treasures; after ten weeks, one will become a healer of all beings; after eleven weeks, one will go to the palace of a goddess; after twelve weeks, to the home of a vidyādhara or sage; after thirteen weeks, to the palace of the nāgas; after fourteen weeks, to the realm of the Thirty-Three; after fifteen weeks, one sees everything by night; after sixteen weeks, one will certainly behold the treasures of the elements; after seventeen weeks, the vajra ground and the wind maṇḍala are traversed without obstruction; after eighteen weeks, one moves swift as the sun; after nineteen weeks, all the sons of the Victors will be seen; after twenty weeks, Avalokiteśvara himself will give prophecy and expound the sacred Dharma; after twenty-one weeks, one will reach the form realm and come to possess the five supernatural knowledges; after one year, one will travel to many buddha fields, hear the sacred Dharma, and act within those fields.

This supreme compounding of eye-medicine is to be kept secret from buddhas who are non-Buddhists — that is, from tīrthikas.

Now, furthermore, there is something else to be explained. By compounding various medicines, hear how all aims desired by oneself and by all beings without exception may be fulfilled. Take camphor, bdellium, elephant bile, saffron, nutmeg, cloves, katanla, cardamom, white sandalwood, lotus, golden flowers, and blue utpala lotus. Recite the mantra one thousand times over each one. Grind them together with white honey. In the center of the maṇḍala, affix them to the face of the image. From the first day up to the fourteenth — each day recite the mantra one thousand times, make offerings abundantly, and offer praise and supplication. Whether one is a monk, a novice, or a layman, on the fifteenth day recite it five thousand times. After that, place the substance in a clean vessel, and for whatever purpose is desired, apply the paste to whichever deity image is fitting. For one who has been harmed by obstructing spirits (māras), recite the Lotus Dance mantra seven times. To dispel epidemic diseases that have broken out, recite the Hala Hala mantra and fumigate clothing and the like with its smoke. One who wishes to please others should apply the garland mantra of the wish-fulfilling jewel to the eyes. If one wishes to bring under one's power kings, queens, and other men and women, apply a drop to the forehead using the garland mantra of the Vajra Dharma. For diseases such as leprosy and the like, apply it gently to the body using the garland mantra of the Lion's Roar. For the disease of blindness, drink it internally together with the great Harī mantra and water. To avert curses, poison-curses, and spells of witchcraft, fumigate with the noose mantra of the Unerring Lasso. To eliminate poisonous disease, anoint the throat blue. For the purpose of purifying obscurations, apply the mantra of the Eleven-Faced One. The authority for obtaining royal dominion is the scripture of the Protector, Padmālaṃkāra.

Now the preparations shall be explained. For spirit possession by flesh-eating beings, sky-going beings, corpse-raising spirits, and memory-stealing spirits, and for sudden fevers — whether lasting from one day to seven days — and for chronic fevers, severe fevers, intermittent fevers and all manner of fever types, and for sudden and chronic spirit afflictions, and for all manner of severe illnesses, for poisonous fevers and rashes, swellings, welts, boils, oozing sores, pimples and blister-like eruptions, excrescent growths, eye inflammations, festering sores, and the like — for whatever of these manifests openly — take the paste over which the mantra has been recited one thousand times, affix it to the center of the face of the image, make offerings, recite the mantra ten thousand times, and from the first day up to the eighth day also offer supplication. On the morning of the ninth day, release the bond. Recite it seven or twenty-one times. Apply fragrant ointment and the diseases will be dispelled.

With a ritual thus complete: for nasal disease, smear the grain oil on the area. Or else apply it to the throat together with the mantra. For a child threatened by spirit possession, use grain oil or a string cord. For animals, use water alone, or else a small scale weight. When refined herbal oils are used, the result is supremely excellent.

For any and all of these preparations, visualize the form of the one endowed with a beautiful body marked with major and minor signs as clearly as a reflection in a mirror. By offering supplication, accomplishment will be attained.

The first is the mind endowed with the six sense sources — the common lineage possessing the element of solidity.

The second is the mind endowed with aspiration — the lineage of those who have entered the common path.

The third is the mind endowed with the mark of discernment — the lineage of wisdom-holders who uphold the secret mantras.

The fourth is the mind in harmony with elevated intention, which has mantra as its forerunner.

The fifth is the mind without acceptance or rejection.

The sixth is the mind that makes no distinction between self and other.

The seventh is the mind in which phenomena are conquered by the Victor.

The eighth is the mind of the noble truths.

The ninth is the mind in which dependent origination appears as profound.

The tenth is the mind accomplished beyond characteristics.

The eleventh is the mind that perceives beyond characteristics.

The twelfth is the mind of the gateway to the Dharma.

The thirteenth is the mind of supreme arising.

The fourteenth is the mind that reaches the limit of all that is to be known.

These fourteen stages — of expanding, illuminating, pervading, permanence, unchangingness, and excellence — are thoroughly realized. Having realized the mind, the Dharma of a buddha, the Victor has taught it throughout all tantras.

Rays of light, iron hooks, the encircling mountain range —

Through elaboration, hundreds of thousands of gods arouse all virtue and the mind.

From the arising of the white, one reaches the precious island of awakening.

That mind which has been turned by understanding: how marvelous is this!

This concludes the ninth chapter, the chapter on the fire offering practice based on the body, from the Root Tantra of the noble Avalokiteśvara, the king of tantras known as the Lotus Net.

Then the assembled hosts of world-protectors, gathered in the maṇḍalas of the great ones, dwelling in the southeastern quarter — Ānaka and the rest — the hosts of sages, with one voice, addressed the Blessed One with these words:

Oṃ. God who is like the sun of omniscient gnosis, adorned with many major and minor marks, Victor over māra, supreme among two-footed beings —
to the guides we bow.

Peaceful, free of attachment, luminously clear,
turning the wheel without interruption —
liberating from birth, old age, sickness, and death,
to the pure Dharma of the three accomplishments we bow.

The great grounds, and the other great grounds too —
guiding beings to the stages, perfecting the great assembly;

arising in body without cease,
with palms joined, knees upon the ground, all gathered in one direction.

Then the father of all victors, the supreme deity of great lordship, Avalokiteśvara, the compassionate one, out of love for beings, proclaimed the unsurpassed vidyā mantra. In order that the mantra be swiftly accomplished, in order to remedy deficiencies and clear what relates to speech, and in order to rely upon the activity of fire, the assembled sages supplicated: "Please teach the successive steps of the fire offering practice."

Having made that supplication, the assembled sages, after paying homage and circumambulating, poured down a great rain of offerings, then with palms joined and knees upon the ground, all gathered in one direction.

Then the father of all bodhisattvas, sole protector of beings and chief among guides, earnestly gave instruction on this ritual of the fire offering activity.

"Smooth a square maṇḍala using fine earth, fragrant substances, and water. Take ground rice, butter, excellent grain, tree resins or sap, and the hundred-and-eight herbs. Proclaiming them, illness and epidemic harm are pacified. For sickness, drink a small portion of the butter remainder. Any pain of illness will be overcome. Or one may take ground grain or powder, or make an effigy of earth or monkey-fat, bind it about the face in a wrathful manner with thread, recite the vidyā mantra one hundred and eight times, strike it with a sword, and perform the fire offering. With five hundred repetitions, the power of an enemy is diminished. Or one may roll together an effigy using poison, and burn it on a tree smeared with poisoned blood. With the count of sixty-four, one brings that person under control.

For a fierce spirit that clings obsessively, burn guggul and white mustard in the same manner. Smear the serika plant with sugar and honey and sour butter, and by burning it before the image of the deity, epidemic diseases of the head will be cut off. Burning twenty-one portions of white guggul summons bodhisattvas. Burn twenty-one portions of sour butter, honey, and long pepper wood before the image of the deity, and one will attain the great miraculous powers equal to all bodhisattvas of the vast earth.

If one wishes to expand one's merit, on fragrant water and pure ground, make a square maṇḍala one cubit across. Stack fragrant wood to a height of one cubit. Mañjuṣaka flowers, white mustard, honey, milk, sour butter, aloeswood, white and red sandalwood, fragrant sweet-smelling wood of the measure of one cubit's height, excellent grain in measured portions — first recite the mantra one thousand times, then proclaim it one hundred and eight times: thereby one attains long life, freedom from illness, and kingship. With one thousand, worldly aims are accomplished. With ten thousand, the gods of the desire realm come to one directly. With one hundred thousand, the form realm is directly realized. One will see all bodhisattvas of the vast earth and come to possess the six kinds of direct knowledge. With ten million repetitions, one will see all victors and move through many buddha-fields.

Furthermore, for minor activities, whatever they may be, perform the practice anywhere from twenty-one up to one hundred and eight times, keeping the mind steadfast on the mantra and the deity.

For clearing away severe epidemic illness, the primary substances to burn are three fruits. For removing great malevolent spirits, burn guggul, garlic, and the flesh of a female dog, one hundred and eight times. For bad dreams, ill omens, subtle illness, and various types of spirits, dūrvā grass and white mustard are declared supreme."

For whichever grain one desires, perform a fire offering using that very grain. One who wishes to bring down rain should burn campaka flowers, the three parts, the three sweets, nāgakeśara, and the hand of Indra — rain will fall as desired. If one wishes to cut off rain, scatter ashes and white mustard again and again in all four directions with the mantra of the dance-lord, applying oneself earnestly. White mustard, yogurt, butter, honey, and rice — by these a child is healed. For fear of spirits or epidemic illness, and for one who wishes to protect the home, perform a fire offering of red lotus exactly twenty-one times. One who desires a good mind and long life should perform a fire offering of white sandalwood. For clearing away minor epidemic illness, perform a fire offering of leaves of the campaka tree. When wishing to cure livestock disease, burn milk together with white flowers. For dispelling both illness and spirits, burn the three sweets, fine grain, camphor, the epidemic-wood of white dūrvā grass, wood that yields milk, and the wood of beautiful flowers. For one who wishes to pacify spirit-illness, burn the three fruits and similar woods. Minor spirits are pacified by burning the three sweets and white dūrvā grass. For bad dreams and whatever ill omens there may be, ground rice in butter with the mantra clears them away. For clothing, vessels, cut substances, and the body — when these are defiled by another's evil shadow — burn ground rice in butter, white incense, and white flowers. Burning tiṅglo and byid flowers clears away all eye diseases. Burning masuli together with its root clears away diseases of the ears. Burning sandalwood, musk, and butter clears away all diseases of the nose. Burning nutmeg, guggul, and chebulic myrobalan clears away diseases of the teeth and tongue. Burning sonamja and kakura destroys throat disease. Burning honey, sandalwood, and sugar clears away lung disease. Burning the three fruits together with the five sour milks clears away heart disease. Burning uśī (coriander), a type of wasp, and biyandaka clears away liver disease. Burning flowers of the five colors pacifies all internal diseases of the stomach and so forth — every last one — and one also attains a beautiful body. One who desires wealth should burn acacia in butter mixed with curd. For whatever color of cloth one desires, burn flowers of matching color together with twelve finger-lengths of thread, using fragrant woods of matching color — the acquisition is certain, do not doubt. Burning priyaṅgu, kaliṅga, lotus pollen, and the branch, while making supplication, greatly expands one's treasury of wealth. Burning rice and fruit of sprouts and so forth makes one's wealth stable. For one who wishes for offspring, burn the three fruits one hundred times — sons and daughters will increase. One who wishes retinue and troops to grow should burn jāṭī flowers, white cardamom, white milk, yogurt, and butter — by this, retinue and armies increase. Performing this a hundred thousand times, one obtains royal sovereignty. By burning the three sweets and the fruit of bael one hundred thousand times, one becomes a king oneself. For the sake of increasing the power of the mantra, burn neem wood with butter, white mustard, and honey one hundred and eight times. One who wishes to bring a king together with his retinue under one's control should burn white mustard together with the mustard of the Victor six times the weight of six peas. To bring the yakṣa (yakṣa) women under one's power, burn the three fruits and saffron one thousand times using the epidemic-wood of aśoka. To bring an assembly of yakṣas under one's power, burn the three fruits and guggul two thousand times using the wood of the three fruits. One who wishes to bring the gods under one's power should burn chebulic myrobalan wood, sarala resin, milk, yogurt, butter, and honey three thousand times — by this the gods come under one's power.

One who wishes to bring women under one's power should burn sesame, rice, and the like upon a ladle one hundred and eight times together with naturally occurring things — by this a lovely woman comes under one's power. One who wishes to bring children under one's power should perform a fire offering of priyaṅgu grain. Whatever ritual actions one undertakes, apply to them a mind that matches the nature of the activity. For pacification, use a mind of peace.

In one of good fortune whose mind is expansive — one endowed with longing and aspiring intent — subjugation will certainly come about, without doubt. When the mind is wrathful, fierce rites ensue. A stable mind endowed with leisure and opportunity, continuously clear and present — whatever one intends through such a mind will be accomplished; otherwise it will not be so.

Just as an object in front of the body appears clearly to an eye free of defect, so when one is separated from a guru, the blessing of the mantra does not dawn. Through body, speech, and mind, in every way, one should make a committed effort to abandon disparaging the guru. Through disparagement one goes to hell and other lower destinies.

Worship the samādhi, mantra, and mudrā that have come from the guru's speech.

Oṃ ru ru sphuru jvāla tiṣṭha siddha locanī sarva artha sādhanī svāhā — this is the mantra for fumigation offerings and for spreading the kuśa grass.

Oṃ jvāla jvālanā larka svāhā — this is the mantra for kindling fire.

Namas samanta buddhānāṃ. Oṃ agnaye ādīpya abhiśama mahāśriye havya kavya vahānāya svāhā — this is the mantra for the butter offering.

Oṃ sarva pāpaṃ dahana vajrāya svāhā — this is the mantra for sesame.

Oṃ sarva sampāde svāhā — for yogurt and excellent boiled grain.

Oṃ vajra bhasmīṃ kuru kuru svāhā — for the utpala lotus.

Oṃ vajra puṣṭaye svāhā — for rice.

Oṃ vajra apratihātā vajra svāhā — for kuśa grass.

Oṃ vajra vijāya svāhā — for the hand-born lotus.

Oṃ vajra māle puṣpaye svāhā — for the three sweets and white things.

Oṃ vajra mahā vegāya svāhā — for barley.

Oṃ mahā balāya svāhā — for lentils and meat.

Oṃ vajra ghasmari svāhā — for buckwheat.

Oṃ vajra yajñāya svāhā — for udumbara figs.

Oṃ titi primi svāhā — for the wood of the awakening tree.

Oṃ vajrārthāya svāhā — for nyagrodhā.

Oṃ vajra naṃkāya svāhā — for mango.

Oṃ āḥ hrīḥ hūṃ — for fumigation in all circumstances.

Water purifies and pacifies the obscuration of dust and darkness. The maṇḍala of water for pacification is white and circular alone. Earth causes grass, trees, grain, and flowers to grow and makes things flourish. The maṇḍala of earth for enrichment is yellow and square. Wind gathers and disperses, and having brought things under its sway, causes them to move. The maṇḍala of wind for subjugation is crescent-shaped and red in color. Fire ripens and burns, and by its fierce power causes things to wither away. The maṇḍala of fire for fierce rites is triangular — red within and black on the outside.

When the sun rises in the sky it pacifies the obscuration of darkness. For pacification, face east, and the auspicious garment is white. When the sun moves north, things flourish and expand — for enrichment, face north, and yellow or green garments are auspicious. After midday and through the night, things come under subjugation — for subjugation, face west, and red-orange garments are most auspicious. When the sun moves south, by means of extremely cold water one kills grass and other living things, causing scattering, uprooting, affliction, wounding, exhaustion, and violent agitation. For fierce rites, face south and wear blue or black garments.

Campaka, putikā, the hand-born white lotus, white kumuda, moonflower, and clean water together with — these are praised for offering in rites of pacification. Mañjunāgaviśarī, sumule, asprā, great golden-hued conch, ciuleser, and yellow lotus, together with water from a great river — these are praised for enrichment rites. Mucina, red maṇḍu, great royal leaves, fish flesh, sindhura, red lotus, red varieties of kumuda — together with the water of a ewe — are to be offered in subjugation rites. Utpala, kṣepalaka, udkhyepa, māmiśi, head of jumodsbyin, pig's ear, daṇḍotṭpala — together with well water — are to be offered in fierce rites.

White sālu rice and curd, with prikā incense, for pacification. Red sālu rice with milk and red sandalwood — for subjugation. Barley and masa cooked into a meal with huluka — for enrichment. Barley and millet porridge with gugul, cooked meat, and the like — know these as the food offerings and fumigants specific to fierce rites.

For the flame lamp, a wick of castor oil with an aśvattha stem is most auspicious for pacification rites, or alternatively a white lotus stem. Sesame oil or highly refined oil with a sarihaya stem is most auspicious for enrichment rites, or alternatively a portion of a cow's leg. Coconut oil, red lotus oil — these are most auspicious for subjugation rites, or alternatively bayamari. Mustard and sesame oil with a citron-tree wick, or alternatively bark of the gośma tree —

A flame whose color is pale red, glowing and clear, blazing white like the peak of a snow mountain, with the fragrance of bar-dre, smaragdus, and white incense — by these, pacification rites will be accomplished. A flame that flickers red and is swaying and thick, resembling the peak of a sun-drenched mountain, with the fragrance of thick mali-kali — subjugation rites will without doubt be accomplished. A flame whose color is yellow, with flickering clarity, blazing like a mountain at sunrise, with the heavenly fragrance of campaka — enrichment rites will without doubt be accomplished. A flame that is dark and maroon in color, writhing and flickering, emitting a rotten stench, blazing like a forested mountain — fierce rites will be accomplished.

Although there are countless seers (rṣis) of the world who have attained meditative absorption, the forty-four fire deities are to be excluded from the fire offering rites. The twelve who have transcended the world and possess meditative absorption are to be taken hold of: Gñānaka, Sābiki, Tukṣuseu, Myasyetro, the Wrathful of the Belly, the Wrathful Mind-Born, the Red Mṛtacomali, Bhisuyaki — these twelve are to be applied in rites such as giving benefit and so forth.

With the ash of the pacification fire offering, subtle spirits are pacified. With the ash of subjugation, spirits are bound. With the ash of enrichment, desired activities are bestowed. On the peak of a mountain it is to be scattered — thereby fierce rites dispel spirits. On the middle of a road it is to be scattered. For pacification and subjugation, scatter it in the corresponding direction, in fields, gardens, and parklands. That which purifies is like a great river; that which is enriching is like the circle of the sun; that which fills is like the ocean.

By the fire offering, the gods are gladdened; the recitation of mantras is accomplished, and mantra activities come to fruition. All assemblies of seers, all assemblies of gandharvas, and all assemblies of spirits — delighted by the fire offering, they become helpers and protectors of the yogin, warding off harm; life is lengthened, splendor increases, illness is absent, abundance of enjoyments flourishes, and all aims are accomplished just as wished.

This concludes the tenth chapter of the tantra known as the Lotus Web, the Root Tantra of the Noble Avalokiteśvara, Lord of the World — the chapter on the application of fire.

Then the great bodhisattva known as the Miraculous Wheel, who conjures letters in the sky and performs manifold works for the benefit of beings, arrived together with his retinue at that maṇḍala. He paid homage, performed many circumambulations, made abundant offerings with clouds of offering substances, and, taking his seat to one side, addressed the Teacher with a single voice in melodious speech:

With these words he makes his supplication:

Om — to you whose body is adorned with the major marks and minor features,
who range over worlds and beyond the world, who fully enjoy whatever Dharma's wealth there is —
I pay homage.

For whomever has need, you, the foremost guide,
hold countless reflected forms.
To you of the great bliss, whose body performs manifold miracles,
I pay homage.

To the unchanging, utterly pure path of awakening,
the thirty-seven wings of awakening that are the Dharmas of every direction,
you who act with powers and fearlessness —
to you, whose body is phenomena spontaneously accomplished,
I pay homage.

From those who are endowed with an ocean of purity flows an unceasing ocean of compassion;
you who move through oceans of buddha-fields —
to the protector Avalokiteśvara,
I pay homage.

Through the successive stages of mantra, substances, and mudrā,
you accomplish benefit through manifold means.
Among all vehicles the mantra vehicle is supremely distinguished.
What need is there even to speak of diligent practice —
even the mere bearing of mantras and mudrās purifies the obscurations of an aeon, dispelling illness and harm; it is supremely distinguished.

Even those of low birth and poor estate
gain happiness the moment they enter it,
and once even slight accomplishment is reached immeasurable power and force arise; it is supremely distinguished.

Protector, Blessed One, perfect buddha — glorious great gnosis, treasury of all,
blazing with the light of a hundred million suns —
supreme guide and leader of beings, guide of the faithful:
how should the mantras and mudrās of the Lord Avalokiteśvara be employed so as to bring manifold benefit to beings?
Please, teach this.

Then the Blessed One, the great Sage, raised his lotus eyes, smiled gently, and, in melodious brahmic speech, spoke these words for the benefit of beings:

"Excellent! You who bear wisdom and ask for the benefit of beings with the auspicious mudrā and mantra — excellent, O great Miraculous Wheel! Therefore, O great bodhisattva, I shall explain to you this wondrous goodness. Listen now with one-pointed mind; hold it well and spread it widely.

On cloth, or birch-bark, or tree-bark — whatever is smooth and free from dark markings — draw the mudrā with saffron, giwang, seng-rtsi, and sandalwood. Draw it with a lotus of eight petals and a border, luminous and bright.

The first syllable is dha ra dha ra; the second, spread as dhī ri dhī ri; the third, dhu ru dha ru; the fourth and fifth, iṭṭhe biṭṭhe; write two syllables ca le ca le; the sixth is pra ca le, two syllables; ku su me and ku su ma, written as the seventh; and on the eighth, write ba le i li mi li. In the center, write oṃ mi ci ti dza lam and svāhā. Write the homage together with the mantra around the border.

Having visualized the deity using the perfectly complete mantra, offer pure offerings, recite the mantra one thousand times, then place it on the body. This will become the supreme protection. It will surely protect against illness, epidemics, malevolent spirits, and the eight fears.

For the repelling of harmful vidyā-mantras in particular, draw on a five-pronged white vajra, within a circle of light-rays, two emblematic marks. On each of the prongs write the syllable hūṃ twice, together with the vidyā-mantra for repelling. At the center write from oṃ hrīḥ to svāhā, together with the words 'protect myself.' In the first border write the mantra of the All-Seeing, the Wish-Fulfilling Jewel; in the second border, the mantra of the Eleven-Faced One; in the third, the mantra of Padmanartteśvara — all arranged circling to the right.

If it is for repelling illness and epidemic, place the syllables as before within a lotus of eight petals with three borders; in the second border write the mantra of the Eye, and in the third write the mantra of dependent origination. When worn on the body or around the neck, illnesses, contagious diseases, swellings and sores, and the like will be cleared away like dust in the wind."

Then, the very moment these words were spoken, an asura maiden, mistress of illness, by name Satu Devī, rose to her feet, joined her palms together, and —

With one voice, the maiden Satu and her attendants addressed the Blessed One with these words:

"Venerable one, sole protector of all beings,
guardian, the Blessed One, the buddha —
whoever holds this mantra of mine,
if an epidemic should arise among them,
may I go to the hell realms.
Let this oath be remembered."

Trevaḷa-jāya-kākavanita, sumaya-vilāsakakara-ni,
kiśunapañcatra-lihenaye,
kenaka-tacaraṇi,
yamirna-damanaca,
yamir-nāda-burda,
dacapitra-cittranaddam —
Satu Devī, may this be.

The very moment the goddess had spoken these words, the Protector spoke:

Oṃ oṃ bhavita-vittimiti, gacandrakara-ni, amukasya kasya, lohitaṃ gandha-parakṣa kuru svāhā.

That mantra endowed with blessing,
recited continuously, will bring accomplishment.

Oṃ hana-serūpa-dhari svāhā.

On twenty-one evenly spaced knots of white thread,
recite the mantra four hundred and four times,

then bind it on the body or around the neck.

Kraṃhiti-kati-gatra-thapragśig,
tathā-yothā-calahehūṃ hūṃ phaṭ.

For each individual bean
recite the mantra one hundred and eight times.
Gather seven of them into a bundle
and wear it around the neck together with fragrant substances.
All manner of epidemic disease and the black plague,
every form of virulent affliction, will be dispelled.

Then Śrīmālā, the vidyādhārīṇī, the bearer of knowledge mantras, addressed the assembly with these words:

"Whoever recites this knowledge mantra of mine
will be freed from all epidemic disease."

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namō ārya-Avalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Namō vajramāra-vijayāya tathāgatāya arhate samyaksaṃbuddhāya. Tadyathā — Oṃ vajre vajre, mahāvajre, sarva-bhīratha, hana-hana-vajra, sarva-jvara-praśamanaye svāhā.

With human hair, human bone, slitra,
myrrh, mustard seed, white garlic,
saffron, costus, and the mantra wheel —

On half the spokes, write the syllable Hrīḥ facing the four directions.
At the four corners, write Hrīḥ.

Hrīḥ ghīvaśiṃ kuru Hrīḥ.

In the first border, write the mantra of the Protector, Padmanartteśvara.
In the second, a garland of red utpala lotus flowers.
In the third, twenty-one iron hooks.
In the center, write the syllable Bhrāṃ together with Hrīḥ.

If even the deity himself makes this commitment,
what need is there to speak of other beings?

For those who desire the recitation of prayers and auspicious words and who wish to dispel the harm of obstructing spirits, draw a three-pointed vajra and crossed-vajra;
in the center write the mantra of the protecting lord Avalokiteśvara, the Padmauṣṇīṣa mantra.

On all the prongs, write the syllable Hūṃ,
encircled by the names of the obstructing spirits,
written in the manner of a fire-oblation.

In the first border, write the mantra of Avalokiteśvara, the Halahala.

In the second, write the fierce horse-sound mantra.

In the third, write the mantra of the enemy of obstructors.

Behind this, draw a mass of fire.

Whoever draws this wheel
will have power like that of Sureśvara, and will scatter even the most virulent and malicious forces —
what need is there to speak of lesser harms?

For those to whom misers cling and whose wealth does not increase — for the sake of increasing excellence and flourishing prosperity,
the mudrā of the Protector is to be explained.

Take a length of pure, fine white cloth —
whether for a king or for the Saṅgha — wash it until it is clean, anoint it with fine fragrance, adorn it well, and rule it with lines.

With saffron and costus, draw a lotus of sixteen petals.

On the petals in the four directions, draw auspicious vases (śrī-vase emblems),

In the four intermediate directions, draw wish-fulfilling jewels. On the eight intermediate points, write the syllable Gam. Then Oṃ vajra-dake Hūṃ — encircle it with these six syllables. On the first border ring, write the mantra of the Immovable One. On the second, the mantra of the Eleven-Faced One. On the third, a garland of blue lotuses. Then, having placed a finial or a vase at the peak, make offerings and prayers, and prosperity will increase.

For a woman who desires a son — likewise draw a lotus of eight petals. In the four directions write Hrīḥ, and in the four intermediate directions rule the lines. In the centre draw the image of a boy. In the four directions draw wish-fulfilling jewels, and write the mantra bestowing a son. In the four intermediate directions, encircle it with Oṃ amarā jīvanātiye svāhā. On the first border ring, write the mantra of Avalokiteśvara adorned with lotuses and bearing the scriptural transmission. On the second, the mantra of the Eleven-Faced One. On the third, a garland of red blue-lotuses. Make offerings continuously with radiant light, and praise with the most excellent hymns. Pray and recite the mantra — there is no doubt that a son will be granted.

The mudrā for protection, increase of wealth, subjugation, and the beseeching of a son — draw these on the palm-leaves of the Pleiades constellation. The remainder may be drawn as one finds convenient.

For one who has lost their mind, becomes displeased, and suddenly falls into bewilderment — on a four-petalled lotus, draw one's own image with its marks in the centre. On the petals draw the four-coloured vajra. Encircle it with the mantra of the Eleven-Faced One. On the border ring, write the mantra of Avalokiteśvara and of Amoghapāśa. On the second, draw a garland of vajras. Behind that, draw a garland of light. Make offerings continually and pray. It will dispel illness, lengthen life, and increase merit.

For one who desires wisdom — on the image of the crowned royal Śrī-jewel, written many times, encircle the syllable Tri on its reverse with this mantra: Oṃ kāla-deka-la maṇi svāhā. Behind that, on the surrounding border ring, write the root mantra of the Blue-Throated One. Behind that, draw a fence of light. Whoever carries and worships this will be freed from all illness and harm; poison and epidemic diseases will be overcome, and wisdom will swiftly increase.

When the harvest in the land is ruined, when there is lightning, thunder, hail, and storms, and when nāgas and earth-lords cause harm — for those, a combined application is to be explained.

Take wood of the kovidāra tree, one or two cubits in length, square in shape, without cracks, holes, breaks, or faults, very smooth and soft — two fingers' breadth in width. On that wood, draw the form of a descending horse, with a wheel and a canopy stacked above it. In the first corner on the right, a blue five-pointed vajra. In the second, a red blue-lotus. In the third, a golden eight-spoked wheel. In the fourth, a white lotus. In the first corner on the left, a red lotus. In the second, a blue lotus. In the third, four diamonds in the form of jewels. In the inner chamber, make a lotus — eight-petalled, radiant with light. On the hub and on the eight petals, write: Oṃ piśāci-parṇa-śavari sarva-vyādhi-praśamanī svāhā — write it encircling the syllable Baṃ. On the first border ring, write the mantra of Avalokiteśvara of the Eleven Faces. On the second, write the root garland-mantra of the Dharma-Uṣṇīṣa. Use lac and vermilion — smear the wood with these materials. As for the offerings, the prayers, and the mantras — reciting each seven thousand times. When affixing it above the door and entering, recite:

I bow to the Protector of the World.

Upon all pestilences of horses and cattle without exception, by the power of the vidyā-mantra of the Protector of the World together with the host of vidyā-goddesses,
may they swiftly be suppressed and dispelled,
turned back and bound.

As though tended by the Great Lord of Cattle,
the herds of elephants, horses, donkeys, and buffalo
shall be stable, free from sickness and harm,
shall greatly multiply and be victorious.

Then, what is to be properly taught:
listen to the mudrā practice
that specially protects against the terror of great armies.

On cloth or wood, using turmeric, draw upon a white lotus a khaṭvāṅga and a sword radiant with light.
Encircle this with three rings.

On the first, write the mantra of the Eleven-Faced One.

On the second, write the mantra of Lion's Roar.

On the third, write the mantra of the Great Hayagrīva.

Behind it, draw a fence of fire.

Having offered prayers to this,
whoever carries it onto the field of battle and enters the fray —
the great enemy host shall flee,
and one shall oneself emerge victorious.

For the sake of wealth, draw it facing north.

For subjugation, draw it facing west.

For turning back armies, draw it facing south.

For all other purposes, draw it facing east.

By the distinctions of white, yellow, red, and blue,
one should understand food and clothing accordingly.

The expressions of the faces — smiling, fierce, laughing, and wrathful — and the mantras and their garlands of light,

the colors of the deities, the distinctions of vessels and the like,
and the ornaments as well — these are to be understood in the same way.

All dwell on jeweled lotus thrones of varied hue.
The syllable-deities are installed by mantras.
When the mantra is complete, visualize it as mantra.

Whoever holds the mudrā shall have as ally and support, accomplishing all tasks without exception according to the proper method,
every host of bodhisattvas,
every host of vidyā-goddesses,
every host of world-guides,
the great assembly of the sovereign Avalokiteśvara,
the complete hosts of wrathful ones,
and all the famed protectors of the world.
In whatever one strives, one should not be in doubt.

This is the eleventh chapter, the chapter on mudrā practice, from the root tantra-king called Lotus Net, the root tantra of the noble sovereign Avalokiteśvara.

Then the supreme sage who travels through the sky,
a holder of vidyā, of many and expansive marks and signs,
called Sun-Orb,
the supreme lord among sages, chief of the assembly,
one endowed with compassion who accomplishes the benefit of beings —
he addressed with words of the Buddha
the sovereign protector Avalokiteśvara, speaking thus:

Om — Victor who with many rays of light clears away the dense mire of existence,
whose body is adorned with gnosis of every quality —
to the protector Avalokiteśvara I bow.

Whose melodious speech is Dharma beyond articulation, Victor who levels the mountain of habitual tendencies —
who teaches freedom from arising and ceasing, through the three scriptural collections —
to the protector Avalokiteśvara I bow.

Who abides in equipoise, free from the harm of arising and ceasing, Victor who causes meditative absorption and wisdom to flourish,
whose mind is limitless in the seeing of gnosis —
to the protector Avalokiteśvara I bow.

Having compounded various medicinal substances with mantra, forming pills like divine orbs —
bestowing all siddhis, both worldly and transcendent, without exception,
you who are the compassion-sun that truly illumines —
O protector Padma, please speak.

Beings cling to the mire of ignorance,
bound by the rope of existence, shackled on all sides,
veiled by the darkness of attachment and aversion,
scattered by the river of pride and envy,
falling into the abyss of wrong views and false paths,
intoxicated by the poison of heedlessness and miserliness,
thoroughly overgrown by the shadow of wrongdoing,
pressed down by the mountain of dense habitual tendencies —
O protector, you who are tireless in compassion,
for the sake of clearing away the ocean of faults —
please speak the arising of wisdom and skillful means.

Then the Protector of the World, the Lord, possessing the splendor of compassion at heart,
together with the fruit of his perfected sacred resolve,
declared these distinguished words:

Acting through the six boundless superknowledges (abhijñā) — hearing all forms and sounds, transforming through miraculous powers, knowing others' minds,
knowing the meaning of past and future —
through direct realization, signs, and correspondence,
these come to be eighteen in number in their aspects.

Subtle and light, worthy of veneration,
becoming master and wielder of dominion,
obtaining all one desires wherever one goes,
dwelling in delight — these are the qualities of sovereignty.

Through these eight aspects as illustration:
mastery over wealth, mastery over dominion, mastery over the body,
mastery over life, swiftness of foot,
not sinking in water, moving through the sky,
traveling beneath the earth, becoming invisible,
activities of pacification, enrichment, magnetism, and subjugation — whatever deeds and purposes one seeks to accomplish will arise from a pill.

Other methods will not accomplish them swiftly.

Even a bodhisattva's pill, although used in creating the five acts of immediate retribution and the like,
will upon acquisition immediately yield accomplishment.

If one with proximity and sovereignty gains mastery over a divine prince and subjects the unwilling — flesh-eating spirits, asuras, humans,
matriarchal spirits, ḍākinīs, elemental spirits, nāgas,
animals, and the like who possess a perfected form,
to say nothing of other sentient beings —
all these will be brought under one's power.

For those who desire excellent accomplishments,
this is to be achieved especially by means of the pill.

Take musk-deer gland (givaṅg), the mouse's eye herb (ligbu mig),
and datura, finely compounded together,
make a pill the size of a large pea,
and place it within a clean vessel.

Recite the mantra before the sacred image,
and within the first three days of the waxing moon
there will appear previously unseen visions, sounds will be heard, or the form of a Sugata will manifest in a pleasing and direct way, and so forth.

When the moon is seized by Rāhu, offer whatever is to hand as an offering, held in joined hands,
and recite; when the sun rises,
it will emit smoke and become fragrant.
Even by anointing the body with that smoke,
one will have a luminous, radiant form,

will be able to travel to all directions of Jambudvīpa,
and will become endowed with great wealth.
Upon death one will be reborn in the realm of Tuṣita.

Even by anointing the body with just the fragrance,
one will come to hold sway over all beings,
retain what one hears, and be skilled in the arts.
After death, in this very Jambudvīpa, one will be reborn as a yakṣa of the Lush-Leafed Grove among its retinue of noble youth,
or one will be born as a human king
or as an elephant.

If one applies a blazing form upon the body and beholds it, the body of one who holds the knowledge-mantra will be the color of the rising sun.

Dwelling for an eon, enjoying all desires,
one travels unobstructed throughout the entire world,
flying above like a hawk, moving below through watercourses.
Having passed through all the buddhas,
one abides as a lord and dwells as a king.
With emanated substances one makes offerings to the Sugatas.
When one wishes and passes away from this world-realm,
one is born among other departed buddhas.

Through what transcends the world and the world itself,
desiring for oneself what is pleasing and agreeable,
burn saffron, camphor, valerian, and musk-deer gland,
reciting a thousand mantras;
then pound and reduce them to powder,
recite a thousand more mantras,
and with pure water form a pill the size of a large pea.
Over each pill recite a thousand mantras in turn.
Not touched by wind or sun,
dry them and place them in a clean vessel.

Even if one merely holds a single pill in the mouth,
kings, ministers, and their entire retinue,
upon seeing one, will regard one as their own child —

to say nothing of ordinary desolate ones.

Others will give their wealth freely,
and one's speech will become compelling when directing them.

Camphor, saffron, musk-deer gland,
sandalwood, its essence in refined form,
and valerian — in equal portions — reciting a thousand mantras over each,
pound them and form into pills,
then apply them to the left cheek.

From seven days up to a month,
recite the mantra and make offerings.

The smoke of the burning will dispel illness and harmful influences.

Anointing the eyes with it,
kings, queens, sons and daughters —

ministers and all others will come under one's power.

Just by placing it in the mouth, liberation comes.

All counsel one gives will prove effective.

Affixed to the crown of the head, it repels harmful sorcery,
and in battle one will triumph utterly.

Even if the powder is fumigated,
all wrongdoing will be purified,
all will delight in beholding one,
and one's splendor will be so exalted that noble ones pay homage.

Camphor, musk-deer gland, saffron, sandalwood, the essence of sandalwood, kakola,
the king of incenses, lotus,
blue utpala, and red sandalwood —
recite a thousand mantras over each,
then in equal portions, combined with musk,
form into pills the size of a chickpea.

Dry them in the shade and carry them on the body.

One will attain sovereignty spreading across all four continents.

The decoction of trakula root, combined with dong-ro bead, blue utpala,
sea foam, musk,

white mustard, barberry, saffron,
camphor, and the three musk substances —
recite a thousand mantras over each,
then hang the pill at the throat of a statue.
Recited a thousand times and formed into pills,
it dispels eye disease when mixed with water.
For tooth disease, use kakaru.
For ear disease, use costus root.
For eye disease, utpala and pearl.
For throat disease, vāśaka.
For lung disease, bāleka,
combined with a decoction of sugar.
For wind disorders, combine with butter.
For bile disorders, combine with tiktaka.
For phlegm disorders, combine with ginger.
For leprosy, black mustard.
For indigestion, rock salt.
For swelling disorders, thick gruel.
To dispel obstructing spirits and epidemic illness,
fumigate together with guggul.

The boundless qualities of these pills can never be fully described.

A pill of guggul, over which a thousand mantras have been recited, disperses all assemblies of obstructing spirits.

Take the roots of kesura, fresh sinew of sdeu,
and three hot spices of the bālātaka;
combine the yellow muzhi powder
with honey and form into pills.

Recite the mantra of Padma Garvāṇ a thousand times.
Simply eating it, the body flourishes,
illness, harmful spirits, and enemies cannot prevail,
and all desires will be accomplished.

The root of taka, baheru, skyu-ru-ra, and sesame — combined in equal parts with the blood of an insect-eating bird, formed into a pill and applied to the eyes —

one will certainly see nāgas, hungry ghosts, their dwellings, and everything beneath the earth.

The tongue of a three-month-old infant:
on the first day, insert it into fragrant incense smoke within a vessel.
On the second day, let it encounter three kinds of goat's milk.
On the fourth day, cook the pill in great fat.
On the fifth day, place it within honey.
On the sixth day, set it in mercury.
On the seventh day, anoint it with cat's blood in a skull of a low-caste person and set it aside.
When it is dried, place it in one's own mouth together with the flesh of a bird and a wolf —
immediately one will become invisible.
Other qualities are beyond measure.

Dong-ro bead with the upward-facing component,
together with nutmeg, leaf and seed —
formed into a pill and recited over a thousand times with the mantra — one will certainly travel through the sky.

Bandumā, Kirmā, Makari, Sumitam,
and Drapantamā — these pills,
swallowed at the time of an eclipse of the sun, moon, or planets,
produce supreme and extraordinary wisdom;
that one will retain what one has heard goes without saying.

Form a pill of musk, swāhā-ci-na,
and sreta honey.
Recited over a thousand times with the mantra and swallowed,
one will come to know the meaning of things past.

Musk, dry sugareed powder,
vara-svāta, hasuri,
and ara-huri — combined with honey — formed into a pill and recited over with the mantra a thousand times, swallowed, one will know the meaning of things to come.

Next, the great pill for drawing out illness will be described.

Jaya, Vijaya, nāgula, Kandhana-guli,
Ruṇi, Apayavāṇi,
Ipāyana-tagara,
Gandhaga, Priyaṅgu,
Great Wheel and Wheel, Viṣṇukaṭi likewise,
and Somaraca, Unnati —
over each, recite the mantra garland
one hundred and eight times.
Then pound them together with honey.
For a child, apply to the shoulder;
for a woman desiring a son, hang at the throat.
The very moment it is affixed, liberation from the eight fears and from illness arrives.

Clarified ghee, pure beeswax, and lac,
cooked in an iron vessel —

A pill the size of an āmra fruit — recite this mantra eight hundred times,
then afterward recite it twenty-one times,
and by swallowing it morning and evening, wisdom grows.

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namō āryāvalokiteśvarāya bodhisattvāya mahāsattvāya mahākāruṇikāya. Tadyathā: oṃ śuddhe mṛtaṃ balavardhani svāhā.

In the evening and at dawn, one who is a renunciant (śrāmaṇa), speaking quietly, gentle, and tamed, delighting in bathing and attending to pleasant fragrance, whose conduct is utterly peaceful and free from anger, ever reciting praises with a loving heart, deeply moved with reverence toward Avalokiteśvara himself, tears upon the face, trembling with longing, one who rejoices greatly in a guru from whom transmission has been received — such a supreme person is truly blessed. What need is there to speak of the guardian gods of the world, the elements, and the rest? At all times, within one's own mind, one should keep the essence, the secret mantra. The essence of the proximate recitation purifies the body, and the deity too draws near to one.

Reciting the root mantras many times — ten thousand, one hundred thousand, one million, three million, six million: for some, four or five such recitations complete the task. When applied to activities: seven, fourteen, twenty-one, one hundred, and likewise one thousand complete it. Immediately after, it is liquid; let it cool a little with butter. When it becomes firm it is of the consistency of raw sugar; when firmer still, it is like thread.

Medicine and mantra together dispel illness, and the pill sustains one for a long time. This is addressed to those who are disinclined toward the accomplishment of mantra, should they undertake it from the outset.

Immediately upon these words being spoken, the great bodhisattvas — Vajra Heart, Sun Radiance, White Lotus Jewel Heart, Lotus Eye Gaze, Wisdom Lord, and Lotus Lord — each with their own host of attendants, surrounded by their great retinues of followers, their vast maṇḍala assemblies, directing their attention intently upon the Lord of the World, spread forth clouds of offerings. Born from the lineage of the Precious Jewel, they filled the entire sky with offerings. With cascades of manifold music, cymbals, and assemblies of divine sounds, arrayed like beautiful gathering clouds, they arranged boundless displays.

Then the assembly of bodhisattvas, those lords possessed of primordial wisdom, rejoiced at the melodious speech of the lord Avalokiteśvara and proclaimed his great names:

We bow to Avalokiteśvara, supreme, great and steadfast —
Lord of the World, the great sovereign,
Lotus Bodhisattva, great Lotus Arisen,
Vajra of Dharma, to you we bow.

Great Purity, chief among Dharma Kings, Great Wisdom, great being,
Lotus Bearer and Lotus Hero,
Lotus Protector, to you we bow.

Sacred mind arisen from the lotus,
Illuminator of the lotus, maker of joy,
Lotus Vajra, lotus-bodied —
to you, the supreme lotus-eyed, we bow.

Great Illuminator of all appearances, greatly skillful in means,
supremely equal in joy, of vast intention,
Great Hero, King of great steadfastness,
Great Bliss — to you we bow.

Great in aspiration, great in knowledge, belonging to the Great Vehicle, great in yoga, greatly ancestral,
Bestower of happiness, Maker of happiness, Great Maker of joy,
Lotus of fully bloomed countenance — to you we bow.

Lord of Dharma, lord of meaning, Lotus King,
Pure Lord of Dharma, Holder of Supreme Dharma, Wondrous, greatly endowed, most excellent upholder of Dharma,
Assembly of Dharma — to you we bow.

Buddha Bodhisattva, supreme bodhisattva,
Jewel Bodhisattva, Dharma Bodhisattva, Commitment Bodhisattva, Activity Bodhisattva,
Omniscient Bodhisattva — to you we bow.

Hero of the world, supreme hero,
great all-seeing chief protector,
Illuminator of the world, benefit of the world,
Protector of the world — to you we bow.

Great letter of the world, great in color,
great letter without equal, the supreme six-syllable,
seeing the nature of letters, beholding letters,
Wheel of Letters — to you we bow.

Lotus mudrā, lotus hands,
Bestower of the excellent, giver of relief.
Buddha assembly, Buddha Dharma, great Buddha — to you we bow.

Measureless great body, body of a buddha,
bearing excellent form, vajra form,
supreme great splendor, light of the Dharma,
you who illumine — to you we bow.

Chief lord and king, glory of the lotus,
glory of the Dharma, lord who guides,
great lord of Brahmā, lord who pervades,
son of Brahmā — to you we bow.

Supremely brilliant chief, foremost illuminator,
maker of great light, self-luminous,
great illumination, lord who lights up all,

O luminous one — to you we bow.

With buddha eyes, with great wide vision,
Dharma eye, beholding all with great sight,
great meditative absorption, ocean of primordial wisdom,
O Vajra Eye — to you we bow.

Chief among guides, sovereign lord,
great sage, son of the buddhas,
supreme noble one who delights in royal ways,
O Amitābha — to you we bow.

Great fierce one, greatly powerful,
great Hāla, with the voice of a lion,
blue-throated, chief lord of the dance,
O Crest of Primordial Wisdom — to you we bow.

Whoever bears these one hundred and eight names will be free from illness and free from obstacles.
They shall behold the prosperous sovereign of the world,
be born again and again among the gods, and pass beyond sorrow.

When this was proclaimed, all those of noble mind settled visibly upon their respective seats.
At that moment the ten directions trembled,
and every kind of māra was struck with confusion.

Then the Sovereign of Dhāraṇī spoke to the assembly of bodhisattvas
the essential nature of realizing primordial wisdom,
and declared these defining marks of mine.

The domain of Samantabhadra's conduct,
the tenth white path, fully unfolded — whatever class of beings desires to engage with it,
that class is the great class, encompassing all.

Though the ten actions of body, speech, and mind
may be practiced without interruption,
through the power of a reflection in coarse form,
by one who holds mantra and secret mantra,
one accustomed to the deity beholds the deity,

and through the first of the superknowledges, clarity of mind,
the great miraculous power of the mind pervades the sky.

The stage of consciousness-illumination, the stage of holding awareness — superknowledge including subtle signs and the rest, illuminating the world without obstruction,
is the very heart of what transcends the world,
arisen from stable primordial wisdom.

The samaya vow practiced as vast as the sky,
mind and mind-hero inseparable,
the peaceful path free from superimposition and denial, suffering, origin, cessation, and path —
the four-by-four accomplished spontaneously, dependent origination with its profound meaning made manifest, supremely noble among all that transcends the world —
abiding in signless meditative absorption, accomplishing the benefit of others with effort,
and effortlessly, through natural power, bringing forth bliss,
the determinate word, the conceptual horizon of the meaning of Dharma, the domain of countless miraculous powers —
this is the stage of the great lineage, perfectly complete, traversing the sky in full excellence,
transforming the illumination of mind into manifold forms.

Phenomena gathered and engaged without conceptual elaboration,
through the great mudrā of the vidyādhara:
the dharmakāya, illuminating all, luminous in all directions,
appearing as a body of bliss, with lotus eyes,
the letter-wheel, the great host of emanations,
the signified and the defining mark — the vajra-holder,
the stage of the guru of undefiled primordial wisdom,
the stage of great bliss without meeting or parting.

Thus these six are the great stages of the buddhas, unsurpassable, abiding to the ultimate end.

Essential nature beyond conceptual elaboration, contemplating Dharma-mind
this is the one cause for accomplishing secret mantra.

Equalizing one's mind toward sentient beings, holding the bodhisattva vow — this is the second cause for definite accomplishment.

Not abandoning sentient beings, guarding moral discipline, not giving up the meaning of mantra — these make the third.

Accomplishing mantra oneself, others accomplishing mantra, not interrupting that, and toward beings cultivating loving-kindness and cultivating compassion — these are the four causes that bring accomplishment.

Resorting to solitude and abandoning crowds, listening, reflecting, and practicing the meaning of that, relinquishing external mantras and subduing aversion — these are the five causes for accomplishing mantra.

Faith, aspiration, and supplication, not practicing outer and inner mantra contrary to its intention, entering the path of the Teacher who is free from conceptual elaboration, holding the scriptural corpus of the Great Vehicle sūtras, seeking out the mantra scriptures without weariness — diligent in virtuous conduct — this is the sixth.

Striving at recitation, fire offering, offering of tormas, outer austerities without self-torment, viewing vessels and contents, the highest realm, its deities, the goddess of the perfections, and the local deities of the domain, not deceiving beings, and not dividing the Dharma, not taking up the Lesser Vehicle — this is the seventh.

Wisdom regarding śrāvakas and solitary buddhas, unwavering certainty about the vidyādhara and their miraculous powers, reverential service to the deities and the guru, receiving empowerment and scriptural transmission with enthusiasm, absence of miserliness and delight in giving, delight in secrecy and freedom from distraction, having attained a body of glory and great power, renowned to all — look upon these eight qualities of the wise.

Free of slander and speaking truthfully, abandoning pretense of being careful — these too are the eighth, the causes of accomplishment.

Without a cause, how could a result ever exist?

Just as one who seizes with an iron hook draws up myriads of nāga offspring one after two,
so the virtuous mind — aroused as one's motivation, causing the attainment of the precious jewel of awakening — if held to constantly, becomes the means of transforming one's abode.

Then the Blessed One, the Mighty Sage (Śākyamuni), declared to those endowed with wisdom:

Excellent! Excellent! Great bodhisattvas!

Those who are thus distracted by the desire for pleasure —
by that very fact they pass beyond suffering and sorrow.
Tormented by attachment, aversion, and agitation —
by that very fact they abandon false Dharma.

Ascetics with wrong views are haunted by Brahmā's spirits;
those who practice perverse mantra are haunted by vidyādhara spirits.

For those who are difficult to tame, the stream is long.

For fear of bad rebirths, one of deep wisdom acts.

In whatever home this tantra exists —
through copying, reading, offering,
and clearly expounding it for ritual purposes —
there arise auspiciousness, long life, and the arising of prosperity.

When the Blessed One had thus declared these words, those assemblies of great bodhisattvas, the goddesses of awareness, the many wrathful ones, all the assemblies of śrāvakas, gods, humans, asuras, and gandharvas together with the world rejoiced, and they gave full praise to what the Blessed One had taught.

This is the twelfth chapter, the chapter on the variety of methods, from the King of Root Tantras of the Noble Avalokiteśvara known as the Lotus Web.

The King of Root Tantras of the Noble Avalokiteśvara known as the Lotus Web is complete.

This was translated and definitively established by the great paṇḍita Soma Śrī Bhava and the Tibetan translator Kyura, the monk Tsültrim Özer, at the great temple called Amṛtodbhava in the great region of Kashgar, which is illuminated by the radiance of vidyā and in which the lotus of wisdom fully blooms.

Translator's Notes

- The names of the bodhisattvas and wrathful deities in the assembly are rendered by their standard Sanskrit equivalents or by close English approximations of the Tibetan where no fixed Sanskrit equivalent is universally established. Several of the wrathful deity names (such as Vajravighnatrāsa and Vajrāmṛtakunḍalīrāja for Vajra Begse Mthar Byed and Vajra Gnod Mdzes Rgyal Po) involve some interpretive latitude; the Tibetan epithets are descriptive rather than direct transliterations, and the Sanskrit names assigned here follow the standard Vajrayāna iconographic tradition where identifiable. The "eighteen auspicious signs" is the conventional rendering of ltas bco bryad, though some sources enumerate these differently. The total assembly figure of six hundred thousand for the female deity retinue follows the Tibetan literally.

- The phrase rendered "the confusion of his many arms" translates bāhūbhirvibhramamāyāt, which is grammatically ambiguous: it could mean either "confusion or delusion arising in many arms" or "he who is mistaken with many arms." The most contextually coherent reading, given the karmic biography being narrated, is that Ravana's supernatural multi-armed form is itself a karmic by-product of those merit-generating acts intertwined with ethical failures, but the exact nuance is genuinely uncertain.

The name भ्रृङ्गिरीति (Bhrīṅgīriti) is a Śaiva rite or mantra associated with the attendant Bhrīṅgin of Śiva; it is kept transliterated as it is a proper ritual name.

- The phrase rendered "realm of hungry ghosts" for "yi dwags gling" refers to the Preta-island or continent, a cosmological region assigned to hungry ghosts in certain Buddhist cosmologies; the passage seems to say that some beings were born there rather than in human existences, emphasizing the breadth of the bodhisattva's activity across different realms and births. This is a somewhat unusual cosmological reference and may reflect a specific textual tradition within the larger dhāraṇī literature being translated.

The "twofold primordial wisdom" renders "ye shes nyis 'gyur" — literally "primordial wisdom becoming two" — which could refer to the two aspects of wisdom: knowing suchness and knowing the variety of phenomena. The exact doctrinal valence here depends on the source tradition and is worth flagging.

- The phrase rendered "easily satisfied" for "易易易易" literally means "easy to fill" or "easy to satiate," a standard idiom for contentment or being easily nourished; the translation is idiomatic.

The line "सुखवातीं लोकं गच्छामि" pairs the pure land Sukhāvātī with the general term "higher destiny," reflecting both the specific aspiration for Amitābha's realm and the broader meaning of a favorable rebirth.

The final line is incomplete as transmitted, ending mid-verse; the translation reproduces only what is present in the Tibetan.

- The passage identifying the syllable "Ta" is part of an acrostic or name-letter series, where individual syllables of a mantra are glossed with doctrinal content. The speaker called "the bodhisattva Padma (Lotus)" is likely Padmapāṇi, an aspect or epithet of Avalokiteśvara himself.

The epithets of the goddesses — Cundā, Māmakī, White-Robed One, Raśmivāsinī, Sow-Faced One, Frowning One, Dharaṇīdhārā, Poison-Dispelling One, Forest-Dwelling One, and Dhāraṇī — are well-known iconographic forms of ḍākīnī or awareness goddesses associated with Avalokiteśvara's entourage; the Tibetan rubrics identify each stanza's speaker or dedicatee.

The line rendered "two thrones and two feet" likely refers to a particular seated iconographic posture with doubled supports, though the precise iconographic referent is not entirely transparent from the text alone.

- The text ends mid-sentence with "to the side of the great Sage," indicating the passage breaks off here and continues in the next chapter. This is not an error in translation but a genuine mid-sentence break in the source as given.

The line rendered "the great Brahmin, great Brahmā" reflects a deliberate parallelism in the Tibetan between gtsang ldan, "endowed with purity," and bram ze tshang pa che, which carries both the meaning of "great Brahmin" and an allusion to Brahmā (Tshang pa, a Tibetan rendering of Brahmā); both senses appear to be simultaneously intended.

"Nyungné" is the Tibetan name for a specific fasting and silent-retreat practice associated with Avalokiteśvara; it is retained here as a recognized proper term in Tibetan Buddhist practice.

The phrase rendered "nāga-cattle" translates klu phyugs, a compound that may indicate cattle belonging to or associated with nāgas, or possibly a poetic image of nāga beings themselves likened to livestock; the hook-and-fish simile suggests drawing sentient beings out of saṃsāra.

- The buddha name རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཕགས་པ་ is rendered Ratnaketu, a standard name in buddha-field literature for a jewel-glory buddha. རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཕགས་པ་ is Padmayoni, literally "Source of Lotuses." རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཕགས་པ་ is rendered Amoghavarjra (Unobstructed Vajra); the spelling in the Tibetan is as given. རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཕགས་པ་ is Amoghasambhava, "Source of the Meaningful." The Padmanīrteśvarī mentioned in the western-direction stanza is a specific deity name preserved in the mantra. The text breaks off mid-stanza at the end of the provided passage.

- The passage presents a repeating liturgical structure in which different emanations of Avalokiteśvara from different directional buddha-fields arrive to make offerings and recite praises. The rendering follows this formal repetition faithfully.

The names Padmalocana, Samayaśrī, and Vajradharmēśvara are Sanskrit equivalents of the Tibetan epithets Padma-spyan-gyi-lung, Dam-tshig-dpal, and Rdo-rje-chos-dbang-phyug respectively; these are kept in Sanskrit form as proper names of these Avalokiteśvara emanations, consistent with the treatment of similar names in the preceding passage.

The term rendered "flowers of molten copper" for རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཕགས་པ་ reflects the unusual image of copper-colored or copper-essence blossoms. The phrase may indicate a type of flower with a copper-red hue rather than literally molten metal; the literal rendering is preserved to match the parallel structure of the other directional flowers, each named after their characteristic jewel or substance. Similarly, རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཕགས་པ་ is lapis lazuli, rendered accordingly.

The passage breaks off in the middle of a stanza as given; the translation ends at the point where the Tibetan text ends.

- The name "Hari Hari Hari Zhen" is a phonetic transcription within the Tibetan text (རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཕགས་པ་ / རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཕགས་པ་) and appears to be a Sanskrit-derived name-epithet specific to this manifestation of Avalokiteśvara; it is rendered phonetically as given rather than translated, as the Sanskrit original is treated as a proper name.

The term "andanīla" (རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཕགས་པ་) for the lower-direction buddha-field's flowers and colors is a transliteration of a Sanskrit term, likely a variant of indranīla or a related blue gemstone name; it is rendered phonetically as a gemstone name parallel to indranīla above.

The dance postures and mudrā descriptions in the wrathful kings' section are highly technical tantric terminology. The renderings given follow the literal meanings of the Tibetan movement terms as closely as possible for a listening audience.

- The colophon phrase ending the second chapter ("Padma-jāla," the root tantra of Avalokiteśvara) marks a chapter break mid-passage; the translation preserves this as a natural prose pause. The phrase rendered "arising as marvels" for "ngomtshar 'byung" is the name or epithet of the mantra as heard in context. The final section concerning the ritual application of the mantra (anointing with mustard nectar, twelve branches, three hundred and sixty intervals) is a technical tantric ritual prescription; the text breaks off mid-sentence as given, and the final lines are rendered faithfully though the complete ritual instruction is clearly continued in the following passage.

- The mantra passages in this text are in highly corrupt Sanskrit — a common feature of late tantric dhāraṇī literature transmitted through Tibetan — and many phrases resist confident grammatical parsing. The transliteration above faithfully renders what the Tibetan script preserves, without normalization or emendation, as is standard practice for liturgical mantra texts. Doctrinal glossing of individual mantra phrases has not been attempted, since these function as sacred speech-acts rather than parsed sentences, and reconstructing an authoritative Sanskrit Vorlage would require access to parallel manuscript traditions.

The epithet "Lotus Lord of Dance" renders Padma Gar-dbang, a form of Avalokiteśvara associated with the dance aspect of his emanation activity; this is a recognized tantric form.

- The epithet rendered "Unobstructed Bodhisattva" translates Thogs med sems dpa, which is the standard Tibetan rendering of Asaṅga, but here it functions as the name of a samādhi rather than referring to the historical master Asaṅga; the translation reflects this contextual usage.

The phrase "Destroying the Sending-Forth of Vidyā Mantras" renders rig sngags sbod gtong gzhom pa, a somewhat unusual compound; the general sense is an absorption that neutralises or overpowers the projection of harmful spells, and the rendering is provisional.

The seed syllable "śarakari" renders sha ra ka ri'i sa bon, which appears to be a bīja or dhāraṇī element used as an ingredient specification for a medicinal rite; its precise Sanskrit reconstruction is uncertain.

- This passage is an extended dhāraṇī sequence within the Amoghapāśa cycle. It consists almost entirely of Sanskrit mantra syllables and sacred names transcribed into Tibetan script, with no Tibetan-language prose of its own. The translation therefore renders the Sanskrit phonetically as reconstructed from the Tibetan transliteration, which is the correct treatment for liturgical mantra passages of this kind.

The phrase rendered "mukhod gi rna" within the hṛdaya-introduction appears to be a partially corrupt or hybrid Tibetan insertion within an otherwise Sanskrit passage; it has been reproduced as found rather than emended, as its precise original Sanskrit equivalent is not recoverable with certainty from this witness alone.

The sequence of seven past buddhas — Vipasyin, Śikhin, Viśvabhū, Krakucchanda, Kanakamuni, Kāśyapa, and Śākyamuni — follows the standard enumeration of the seven buddhas of the past, confirming the text's doctrinal coherence.

- The line rendered "You whose feet are adored by the hosts of gods and seers" translates the Sanskrit epithet devaparīṣaṇābhycāritacārāṇa as transcribed in Tibetan. The syntax of these Tibetan transliterated dhāraṇī passages is purely phonetic and the epithets are parsed from the underlying Sanskrit rather than from the Tibetan letters, which function only as a phonological transcription.

The final verse fragment breaks off mid-sentence in the source; the translation reflects this incompleteness.

- The name "Padmargyanlug" in the second mantra section is a Tibetan rendering that likely corresponds to a Sanskrit title such as Padmābharaṇa or Padmālaṃkāra; the exact Sanskrit form is uncertain and the Tibetan here may preserve a local or hybrid name.

- The Tibetan verse section presents a transliteration challenge. The lines beginning with "ཁྱད་རིགས་བོན་པོ་ལྟ་བུ།" are partly in Tibetan and describe the ritual instructions for recitation combined with medicine, lotus root, and lotus stalk, to be performed a certain number of times morning and evening. The phrase "འཇམ་ཐང་ཀླུ་ཡི་ཕུ་ཤིང་ཅིང་།" is obscure and may refer to specific medicinal plants or ritual substances whose precise identification is uncertain; the translation renders the overall sense as "medicine appropriate to the illness together with the root and stalk of a lotus," which is the most defensible reading in context.

• The mantra syllables throughout are rendered as they appear in the Tibetan transliteration. Many sequences are corrupt or phonetically irregular by any Sanskrit standard, and scholarly reconstruction of their original Sanskrit forms would require collation with parallel witnesses. The passage "ci mahā-viṣkaṃ kṣamid pod sed dhariṣāṇām" in particular appears to be a garbled transmission and is left as-is. The reference to "the noble blue-necked one" in the closing section identifies Avalokiteśvara in his Nīlakaṇṭha form, one of whose epithets is "the blue-throated," borrowed from Śiva's mythological association with the poison of the cosmic ocean; this form of Avalokiteśvara is the presiding deity of the nīlakaṇṭha dhāraṇī tradition from which this text derives.

- The syllable placements on the body constitute a standard nyāsa-style visualization practice; the transliteration of the syllables follows the Tibetan phonetic rendering of Sanskrit seed-syllables and is retained as-is, since these are liturgical items not subject to semantic translation.

The phrase rendered "even the son of Indra cannot prevail against it" refers to Indra's son as a powerful divine being; some traditions gloss this as a specific deity but the text does not name him further.

The expression "tainted with something extra" for "lhag dang bcas pa'i rtsom pa" involves a degree of interpretive choice; it refers to practice motivated by or mixed with extraneous aims or conceptual additions, as opposed to pure, direct engagement.

- The Tibetan verse "འབྲི་རྩ་དང་གོ་སྒྱུ་ལྷན་པར་བཀྲམ་པའི་ཕུ་ཤིང་གི་ཁྲ་བཟེད་ཆེན་པོ།" more literally means "pieces of white-flowered wood," but in ritual manuals this standardly refers to white sandalwood. The count of thirty-four pieces soaked in honey is the literal reading; some traditions read this differently depending on the specific sādhana context.

[illegible]

- The verse section beginning "For re-inviting the body and so forth" describes the liturgical use of the preceding mantra: water recited over seven times is used to wash an image or person to invite back the presence and to reverse departures, whether of consciousness, vital force, or a deity's presence from an image. The precise referent of "body and so forth" (sku 𑖦𑖪𑖫𑖬) in this context is the icon or representation of Avalokiteśvara, and the rite concerns its consecration and animation.

The long dhāraṇī passage following "Homage to the Protector with eleven faces" is the root dhāraṇī of the Eleven-Faced Avalokiteśvara. The Sanskrit syllables as transmitted in Tibetan phonetic transcription are often corrupt or condensed; they have been rendered in normalized Roman transliteration as closely as the Tibetan phonetic spelling permits, without emendation to a Sanskrit dictionary form, since the dhāraṇī text as recited is authoritative in its received form.

The phrase rendered "the Muni who transforms the world" translates ṛāṣṭrāṇāṃ, which is slightly ambiguous; it may mean "who greatly rejoices in transforming the world" or "who, through the transformation of the world, greatly rejoices." The rendering chosen reflects the most natural reading in the context of a blessing mantra's purpose.

- The passage is a dhāraṇī ritual text associated with the eleven-faced Avalokiteśvara. The Sanskrit syllables throughout are transliterated from Tibetan phonetic script, and some forms are corrupt or irregular; they have been rendered as faithfully as the script allows without emendation.

The list of fifteen wretched deaths and fifteen auspicious rebirths is a standard feature of the Nīlakaṇṭha and related Avalokiteśvara dhāraṇī cycles; the text here presents abbreviated prose summaries rather than formally enumerated lists, and the translation reflects this.

The phrase rendered "smooth out a gentle maṇḍala with the five nectars of white cow's milk" refers to a ritual preparatory purification of the maṇḍala surface using five products of the cow, a standard Indic rite.

- The stake-consecration passage is a technical ritual prescription for a kīla or phurba-type stake. The specifications — finger-width measurements, number of facets, the white acacia wood from a cliff face — are precise ritual instructions of a genre well attested in Tibetan and Indic ritual literature. The translation renders these literally.

The sequence beginning "It is not permanent, nor is it impermanent" is a classical cataphatic-apophatic meditation on the nature of mind, following the fourfold negation style familiar from Madhyamaka and Mahāmudrā literature. The passage deliberately refuses all binary predicates applied to mind.

The closing technical section on "the four: warmth... the sixteenth... six syllables... six buddhas... six winds... six objects... six afflictions... six aggregates... six limbs" is a compressed, highly technical meditation instruction — likely drawn from a specific tantric system — whose precise referents are internal to the root text's tradition. The translation renders the Tibetan faithfully but the doctrinal system behind the enumeration is not identified here, as it depends on the unspecified root tantra.

- The chapter-colophon names the text as the Padmajāla, the Root Tantra of Avalokiteśvara, and marks this as chapter four on the arising of the common mantra.

"The Invincible" renders Ajita, a standard epithet associated with Maitreya but here used as a name for a deity identified with the crown of the body. "Vimala the Completely Pure" renders Vimalaprabhā or similar, identified with the uṣṇīṣa.

The bodhisattva name Nānārūpin is a standard Sanskrit back-formation from the Tibetan རྒྱལ་ལོ་འཕྲུལ་པ་འཇུག་པོ་, meaning "one endowed with various forms."

The phrase rendered "ten white elaborations" translates འཕྲུལ་པ་འཇུག་པོ་འཕྲུལ་པ་འཇུག་པོ་, a technical tantric enumeration whose precise referent is text-specific and not universally standardised; it is left as given.

- The passage is a detailed iconographic manual for the creation of an image of the Eleven-Faced Avalokiteśvara, embedded within a larger sūtra or tantra. Several of the pigment and medium terms in the later section are technical Sanskrit loanwords rendered phonetically in Tibetan. The identifications offered here — fox crystal for white, cinnabar and red ochre for red, indigo and woad for blue, orpiment for yellow, shell-lac and various myrobalans as binders, Atapa as an oil medium, and gandha as a fixative — follow standard Indic painting-manual conventions and are best approximations; some of these substances remain subjects of scholarly debate in the history of Indic material culture.

The phrase rendered "horse-cry" for the back face refers to a standard iconographic description of the Hayagrīva aspect embedded in the Eleven-Faced form.

The term rendered "Lineage Mother" for the western maṇḍala refers to a principal female deity, most likely Tārā or a related figure, though the text does not name her explicitly here.

- The names of the vajra deities throughout this passage are epithets embedded in a maṇḍala description list and are translated literally from their Tibetan components, following the convention of the genre. Some names are standard Vajrayāna deity epithets with known Sanskrit equivalents (Vajrasattva, Yamāntaka, Hayagrīva, Māmakī, Vajradhātviśvarī, Tārā), while others appear to be descriptive epithets particular to this maṇḍala text whose Sanskrit originals are not recoverable from the Tibetan alone and are therefore rendered by literal translation.

The phrase "Vajra-the-Forgetful" renders Vajra-Brajed-Byed, literally "Vajra-the-Forgetter" or "Vajra-Obliviator," a name of one of the wrathful attendants; this unusual epithet is rendered as given.

The term "awareness-beings" at the close renders sems ma mchog, literally "supreme mind-beings" or "supreme awareness-women," likely referring to the vidyā-consort figures or jñānasattva-class female deities who encircle the outer maṇḍala; the reading is somewhat condensed here and the exact referent depends on the broader ritual commentary.

- The passage containing the twenty-eight nakṣatras (lunar mansions) is a dense iconographic list in which several items pair a constellation name with the implement it holds. Some pairings are compressed and elliptical in the Tibetan; the rendering follows the most plausible iconographic reading, but the exact assignment of attributes to certain intermediate constellations (particularly around Citrā, Svāti, and Viśākhā) is not entirely unambiguous in the source text. The sequence of numbers at the close (fifty-eight, thirty-seven, twenty-nine, twenty-five, fifteen, nine, five, one) refers to standard abbreviated forms of the maṇḍala, reflecting decreasing levels of elaboration in the iconographic programme.

- The phrase rendered as "who holds what is excellent" (ལྷན་པོ་ལྷན་པོ་) is literally "holder of excellence" or possibly "holder of nectar." The Tibetan could be read as ལྷན་པོ་ལྷན་པོ་ལྷན་པོ་ ("holder of ambrosia/nectar"), which would also suit the context. The reading as given in the input is slightly unclear, but the general sense of homage to Avalokiteśvara is unambiguous.

The colophon verse closing the fifth chapter appears mid-passage and then the text transitions directly into the sixth chapter's opening narrative without a formal chapter heading for the new section.

- "Son of Amṛta" (sred med bu): this epithet, literally "son of Amṛta" or "son of Tṛṣṇā-less-one," is an ancient Vedic and Buddhist epithet. In this context it functions as a stock metaphor for the vidyā-mantra as something that, like the divine ambrosia of deathlessness, dispels anxiety (bag tshogs). The rendering preserves the epithet's sense while flagging it for the listener.

The five refuge verses structured by purified afflictions followed by the syllable Āḥ correspond to the five buddha families (pañcakula) and the Triple Jewel expanded through tantric reckoning. This is a standard vajrayāna refuge formula.

"Round-headed goods" (mgo zdum tshong): the precise referent is uncertain. Traditional commentaries identify it with trade in slaves or in skulls; others read it as trade in certain kinds of produce. The uncertainty is noted but does not affect the surrounding doctrinal content materially.

- The phrase "deity of desire" renders 'dod pa'i lha, which in tantric initiation contexts refers to the deity associated with the desire realm or, more specifically, the conferral of the deity through the medium of bliss and desire in the context of highest yoga tantra initiation. This is a technical term from the empowerment sequence; the translation preserves the doctrinal register without over-specifying the tantric level.

The closing line "the root essences and the collection of intimate essences" renders rtsa ba'i snying po nye snying tshogs, which appears to be the beginning of a new sentence describing the content of what is conferred; the passage breaks off here mid-phrase, which is a feature of the source text's continuity format, not a translation lacuna.

"Those who are carried by the great self" and "great carriers of self" are literal renderings of bdag nyid chen po khyer rnams, a standard tantric phrase meaning "great persons" or "those of great being" (mahātman); the translation preserves the literal sense as the context is a conferral of identity and lineage.

- The text is a ritual manual in verse treating tantric initiation rites, attribution of empowerment objects, and the seven-ground schema of the vidyādhara path. Several substances in the passage appear as transliterated Sanskrit or hybrid terms: dūrapālī and khri zho are materia medica whose precise identification is uncertain and are rendered phonetically. The oleander rendering for karavīra is standard. The phrase translated "treasury of blessings" for ལྷན་པོ་ལྷན་པོ་ is tentative; the compound is unusual and may mean something closer to "a source of inexhaustible resources." The final verse breaks off mid-list, consistent with the passage being a continuing excerpt.

- The verse on "Vast Samādhi" and the praise-section transitions between verse and prose in the original; the translation preserves this movement. "Prabhāsvarā" for ལྷན་པོ་ལྷན་པོ་ལྷན་པོ་ is a slight interpretive rendering: the phrase literally means "a god born in the manner of Prabhāsvarā" (the highest Brahmā heaven of "pure radiance"), which accords with the cosmological context and the god's name Vast Samādhī.

The five-fold list at the close (emptiness bodhicitta, syllable bodhicitta, and so on) is a standard Anuyoga/Mahāyoga enumeration of modes of generating bodhicitta in tantric practice; the translations of the individual terms follow the literal Tibetan closely, as the technical commentarial meanings vary by tradition and no single gloss is universal.

- The passage is a dense sādhana or iconographic text listing the visualized forms, postures, implements, and retinue figures of an Avalokiteśvara maṇḍala, likely connected to the Amoghapāśa cycle. The enumeration of drum types, blade types, and axe types reflects specialized iconographic and ritual vocabulary that admits some uncertainty in precise sub-categorization; the renderings given follow the most standard interpretations of the Tibetan terms. The text ends mid-sentence, as the source passage itself breaks off there.
- The passage enumerates a complex maṇḍala system with deities whose names are descriptive epithets in Tibetan rather than established Sanskrit equivalents; these have been rendered as literal translations of the Tibetan. "Hari Hari Hari" is left untranslated as it appears to be a mantra-like invocation or the name of a mount rather than a standard Tibetan descriptive phrase. "Crown Protrusion of Dharma" renders chos kyi gtsug tor, a distinctive epithet combining the uṣṇīṣa imagery with Dharma. The total count of 1,247 deities is given explicitly in the text and is preserved as stated. The phrase rendered "boat-holding sovereign" for gru 'dzin dbang phyug may refer to a specific iconographic form whose Sanskrit name is not recoverable from context alone.
- The phrase rendered "awakening trees" translates literally "trees of awakening" and refers to Bodhi trees, here numbering one thousand and eight, used as the locus of a fire offering ritual. The context makes clear this is a homa-style practice.

The passage "one smears durukṣa butter" renders a compound meaning butter or oil of the durukṣa resin applied to the wood pieces before burning; the ritual is a fire-offering sequence.

"Blue flowers" for "skya snar me tog" is uncertain; the term can mean a pale or blue-tinged flower used in tantric ritual. This is noted as a minor but genuinely uncertain term.

The closing lines of the passage break off mid-sentence in the source, consistent with continuation in the next passage.

- The passage includes several mantric syllables in Sanskrit transliteration into Tibetan script; these have been rendered back into approximate Sanskrit phonetic form as they appear. The exact Sanskrit originals cannot be fully reconstructed with certainty from the Tibetan phonetic rendering, and some syllables may reflect Prakrit or corrupted forms.

The term rendered as "datura" for འདྲུའུ་འུ་འུ་ and འདྲུའུ་འུ་འུ་ reflects common identifications in Tibetan medical texts; the precise botanical identification remains contested in scholarship.

The phrase འདྲུའུ་འུ་འུ་འུ་ at the very end — rendered as "combine with hare" — is abrupt and likely continues into the following passage. It may refer to hare's blood or fat used in medical compounding; the sentence is incomplete in the given excerpt.

- The phrase rendered "a long intestinal worm that feeds on the heart" follows the literal Tibetan, which describes a worm eating the heart; this is a traditional medical category, not necessarily literal anatomy.

The term "naleshom" is left untranslated as it appears to be a plant name of uncertain identification in this context.

"Dadara" likewise is left in approximate transliteration as its precise identification is uncertain.

"Kundunga wood" follows the Tibetan transliteration; the precise botanical identification is uncertain.

"Bṛhatī" is a Sanskrit botanical term retained as such, referring to Solanum indicum in Āyurvedic tradition.

The final line breaks off mid-sentence as the source passage ends there; this is reflected in the translation.

- "Somarāja" is a medicinal plant name retained in transliteration throughout this medical passage; it likely refers to a species of Saussurea or a similar herb used in Indic medical traditions. The text's identification of it is not disputed, but the precise botanical referent is uncertain.

"Norgyé's two sons" renders nor rgyas bu gnyis — this appears to be a proper name or epithet within a visualisation description; the referent is not entirely clear from context. It may refer to two divine figures associated with wealth in the maṇḍala arrangement described.

"Le-bgan resin" and "dong-ro" are plant or substance names left in transliteration as their precise identification is uncertain; the preceding passage established the convention of retaining such terms.

The "Immovable" (mi shol, here mi bshol ba) mantra likely refers to Acala/Canḍaroṣaṇa; it is left as "the Immovable" as the identification, while probable, is not explicit in the text.

- The phrase rendered "Lord of Dance" translates a term literally meaning "having power over dance or movement" — likely an epithet of Śiva in his form as Naṭarāja, but in this Avalokiteśvara ritual context it may refer to a specific wrathful or tantric form. The identification is not made explicit in the text.

The term rendered "Blue-Throated One" is a direct gloss of the Tibetan epithet and is a well-known epithet of Śiva; in this context it may be borrowed as a name for a protective deity or a form of Avalokiteśvara. The text does not elaborate.

The final long mantra contains several sequences that resist clean Sanskrit parsing and may represent Apabhraṃśa or corrupt transmission; the transliteration follows the Tibetan phonetic rendering as closely as possible.

- The phrase rendered "mudrā of Granting Flesh" reflects a ritual offering gesture whose precise meaning in this context is unusual; it may refer to an offering of the practitioner's own body or a food-offering of meat, common in certain Avalokiteśvara ritual cycles. The translation follows the literal Tibetan.

The line "snyim pa kha phye btegs pa'i tshul" literally means "in the manner of opening both cupped hands and lifting upward," rendered as "both palms open and raised upward" for clarity.

The final verse is incomplete in the source passage as given; the translation preserves this open ending faithfully.

- The list of substances in the vase-consecration section includes several terms requiring comment. "Byā grī seng grī ha sa" and "ka ri kar ni de ba ko" appear to be transliterations of Sanskrit plant or substance names that resist confident identification; standard Tibetan pharmacological glossaries offer tentative matches but nothing certain. The rendering above preserves them phonetically rather than inventing equivalents.

The phrase rendered "saffron-blue-throat mantra" refers to Nīlakaṇṭha (the blue-throated deity, i.e., Śiva in one identification, though in Buddhist tantric contexts this is typically Avalokiteśvara Nīlakaṇṭha); no gloss was inserted in the body to keep the flow, but readers should note this double reference.

The passage breaks off mid-sentence at the end of the Tibetan supplied; the translation follows the source faithfully at that point.

- The phrase rendered "see the three realms" likely refers to gaining supernormal visual perception across all three realms of existence, a standard claim in dhāraṇī literature.

The term rendered "rhinoceros gallstone" for bse 'bras is a bezoar or concretion associated with the rhinoceros in classical Tibetan medical and ritual literature.

The phrase "three fruits" refers to the standard combination of āmalaka, bibhītaka, and harītakī, the classical triphala of Āyurvedic and Tibetan medicine.

The passage on eye disease contains a textual difficulty: the line saying "cataracts will develop" in context appears to mean the existing cataracts will be removed and resolve, not that new ones will form; this is a common inversion in such lists where the named condition is the one cured. This is noted here as potentially consequential for interpretation.

- The sequence of "weeks" counting benefits is unusual — the Tibetan reads "two weeks" then "three weeks" and so on up through "twenty-one weeks" and then "one year," but the fifth and sixth weeks appear slightly irregular in the source (the fifth benefit is listed twice with differing objects: "gods, humans, and rākṣasas" and "nāgas"). This may reflect a scribal irregularity in the original.

The phrase rendered "buddhas who are non-Buddhists" is a deliberately paradoxical or possibly corrupt construction in the source: the text appears to say the supreme eye-medicine formula should be kept secret from tīrthikas, and the juxtaposition with "buddhas" may be a scribal error or ironic framing; it is most naturally read as "keep this secret from the non-Buddhists."

The term rendered "maṅśirikā" and "kuśu" are plant names whose precise botanical identification is uncertain but are retained as transliterations of the Tibetan phonetic rendering.

- The list of fourteen minds or mind-stages appears to be a classification of practitioners or contemplative attainments specific to the tantra being translated. The categories are tersely expressed, and some headings may belong to a technical system whose full commentarial context is not supplied in this excerpt. The rendering follows the literal Tibetan closely and preserves the structural parallelism.

The closing verse is metrically dense and syntactically compressed. The phrase rendered "encircling mountain range" translates a term literally meaning "iron-hook encirclement mountain," which likely refers to the iron mountain chain at the periphery of the world-system in Buddhist cosmology. The verse appears to be a colophonic or summary stanza and its internal referents depend on broader context in the tantra.

- The phrase rendered as "the three accomplishments" translates a Tibetan expression referring to purity, accomplishment, and a third element that may be "conduct" or "realization" depending on the commentarial tradition; this is a compact doctrinal formulation in the verse of homage, and the rendering follows the surface reading of the Tibetan.

The term rendered as "serika plant" translates the Tibetan transliteration of a Sanskrit plant name (balpa selu lcug ma or similar); identification is uncertain and I have transliterated conservatively. This is the plant to which sugar, honey, and sour butter are applied in the epidemic-clearing rite.

The numerical sequence of recitations — thousand, ten thousand, hundred thousand, ten million — follows the Tibetan text closely; the escalating results correspond to ascending cosmological realms, a standard tantric schema.

- The passage lists a large number of Indic botanical and medicinal substances whose precise identification is sometimes uncertain. In particular, "sonamja" and "kakura" are transcribed from Sanskrit terms that do not have fully standardized equivalents; they appear to refer to specific Ayurvedic plants used for throat ailments. "Tiṅglo" and "byid" are Tibetan plant names not yet securely identified in the botanical literature. "Masuli" is similarly a phonetic rendering of an Indic plant name of uncertain identification. "Uśī" is rendered tentatively as coriander, following one commentarial tradition, but other identifications exist. The "hand of Indra" is likely a plant name (probably Indrāvaruṇī, a cucumber-like vine) rather than a literal reference. The "Victor's mustard" rendered as "the mustard of the Victor" likely refers to a specific ritual variety of mustard seed consecrated in the tradition.
- The passage transitions between practical ritual instruction and a sequence of mantras with their associated substances or contexts. The mantras are rendered phonetically as they appear in the Tibetan transliteration, following standard scholarly convention for such ritual texts; they are not translated, as they function as sacred formulae. Minor uncertainties exist in identifying some of the botanical substances precisely, but the identifications given reflect the most widely accepted traditional equivalences. The term rendered "hand-born lotus" for lag skyes pa reflects a common epithet for a lotus variety; the precise botanical identification is uncertain.
- Most of the plant, substance, and spirit names in this passage are transliterations of Sanskrit terms that have not been rendered into Tibetan by meaning but only by sound, and a number are difficult to identify with certainty from the Tibetan phonetic rendering alone. The identifications and transliterations offered here follow the most plausible Sanskrit reconstructions available given the phonetic spellings in the text. The list of twelve fire deities and their names in particular appears to be a corrupt or highly specialized tantric enumeration, and the Sanskrit forms given are approximate reconstructions. The rendering "Miraculous Wheel" for rdzu'phrul 'khor lo follows the straightforward literal meaning, though this is a specific bodhisattva known in tantric context.
- The mantra syllables throughout this passage are phonetic Tibetan transcriptions of Sanskrit dhāraṇī syllables and are rendered as they appear without normalization, as is standard practice for tantric dhāraṇī passages. The term "giwang" and "seng-rtsi" are Tibetan pharmaceutical/ritual substances (respectively, ox-bezoard and musk-derived resin) left in Tibetan form as technical ritual terms with no clean single-word Sanskrit or English equivalent. "Padmanartteśvara" renders the Tibetan "padma gar dbang," literally "lord of the lotus dance," a standard epithet in this textual tradition.
- The mantra syllables throughout this passage are rendered in a standardized transliteration. They are dhāraṇī strings and proper names are not subject to semantic translation. Several sequences are corrupt or non-standard, and the transliteration here follows the Tibetan phonetically with best-effort Sanskrit reconstruction. In particular, the string "Trevaḷa-jāya-kākavanita" and associated lines in the speech of Satu Devī do not yield transparent Sanskrit and may represent a corrupt or archaic dhāraṇī.

The term རྒྱལ་པོ་ལྷ་མོ་ is an epithet meaning "son of Sureśvara" or "son of the Desireless One," which is a standard Tibetan epithet for Indra or a great powerful deity; rendered here as "Sureśvara" for the power comparison.

The "Padmauṣṇīṣa mantra" renders རྒྱལ་པོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་, a mantra associated with the Lotus Uṣṇīṣa form of Avalokiteśvara.

- The phrase rendered "draw the form of a descending horse" translates "rta babs gzugs," literally "the form of a horse-descent" or "waterfall-horse form." In ritual iconography this likely denotes a stylized horse figure associated with a type of dhāraṇī emblem; the exact iconographic convention is not entirely certain from text alone.

The mantra syllable "Tri" in the passage on wisdom likely refers to the Tāra seed-syllable or a related single-syllable invocation; the text is allusive here and the precise referent may depend on a now-obscure ritual lineage.

- The epithet "Ther-zug" in the line "Om 'od zer du ma ther zug gi" is a phonetically rendered element of what appears to be a mantra or honorary epithet in the verse of praise; the translation renders it as an integrated descriptive clause following the sense of the surrounding verse, rather than treating it as an untranslatable mantra seed-syllable, since the surrounding lines give it clear semantic content. This is a genuine ambiguity worth flagging.

The term "mā he" rendered as "buffalo" reflects the common identification of this loanword (Sanskrit mahiṣa, buffalo) in Tibetan veterinary and ritual contexts.

- The term translated as "the mouse's eye herb" renders a Tibetan plant name (ligbu mig) whose precise botanical identity is uncertain; it is a common ingredient in ritual pill formulas.

The five acts of immediate retribution mentioned refer to the standard list of five heinous deeds that bring immediate karmic consequences (ānantarya karma). The context is deliberately paradoxical: even a pill potent enough to be associated with such acts will yield accomplishment the moment it is obtained.

The yakṣa epithet "of the Lush-Leafed Grove" renders Tibetan lcang lo can, which literally means "having leafy willow branches" or "leafy grove"; it is likely a proper name or class-epithet of a specific yakṣa realm.

The passage ends mid-sentence in the source; the translation has been kept faithful to the cut-off rather than completed.

- Several of the substances in this passage are technical medical and ritual terms that resist confident identification; these include trakula, dong-ro bead, kakaru, bāleka, tiktaka, kesura, sdeu sinew, bālātaka muzhi, and the Sanskrit-transliterated ritual plant names in the list of great-pill ingredients. Rendering follows phonological reconstruction and standard Tibetan medical lexicography where possible. The pill names in the great-pill section (Jaya, Vijaya, Ruṇi, etc.) appear to be a mixture of Sanskrit herb names and deity or spirit names preserved in phonetic transcription; they are rendered in reconstructed Sanskrit without further glossing as their precise identification remains uncertain. The tongue-of-an-infant sequence belongs to a class of Tantric siddhi rites recorded in dhāraṇī literature; no doctrinal smoothing has been applied.

- The sequence of epithets in the hymn of praise is a formal stotric list, and several compound names are virtually untranslatable with certainty; the renderings given follow the most natural Tibetan readings but some may be personal names or mantra-epithets of Avalokiteśvara rather than descriptive titles. The figure "Vajra Heart, Sun Radiance" and the others named as appearing are likely specific bodhisattva emanations or retinue figures whose identities are established elsewhere in the larger cycle from which this passage derives. The phrase rendered "essence of the proximate recitation" refers to the practice of reciting the heart-mantra in close or inner proximity, a technical term in mantra sādhana.

- The epithet "blue-throated chief lord of the dance" in the sixth homage stanza refers unmistakably to Śiva (Nīlakaṇṭha, the blue-throated one), who is here incorporated into the maṇḍala as a subordinate figure. The preceding passage established "the Great God (Śiva)" on first use, so the gloss is not repeated here per instructions.

The phrase rendered "son of Brahmā" is Tibetan tshangs pa'i sras, which in this tantric context likely designates a title for Avalokiteśvara or the deity being praised rather than a literal genealogical claim; it echoes Brahmā's epithet applied to a bodhisattva in devotional literature.

The section beginning "the ten actions of body, speech, and mind" through "born from stable primordial wisdom" is highly compressed and somewhat elliptical in the Tibetan; the rendering follows the most doctrinally coherent reading, but the syntax of the original is difficult and another lineage reading is possible.

The final portion listing "five causes" and "six causes" beginning with "faith, aspiration, and supplication" ends mid-sentence in the supplied passage; the translation reflects this and no closing verse has been invented.

- The simile in the verse beginning "Just as one who seizes with an iron hook" is compressed and somewhat elliptical in the Tibetan. The image appears to be of a hook used to draw up nāgas from the depths, with "one after two" possibly indicating a sequential or cumulative drawing-up; the exact syntax is difficult and the translation renders the most plausible sense without smoothing over the strangeness.

The colophon location "Kashgar" renders the Tibetan epithet literally: "the great region where the lotus of wisdom fully blooms, illuminated by the radiance of vidyā," which is a Sanskritized epithet of Kashgar rendered ornately in Tibetan. The monastery name Amṛtodbhava ("arising of nectar / ambrosia") and the scholar's name Soma Śrī Bhava are kept in Sanskrit as found in the Tibetan transcription.

It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
