

The Glorious Manifest Arising of the Blood-Drinker

Śrī Herukābhyudayanāma · Toh 374 · Derge Kangyur

དཔལ་ཁག་འཐད་མངན་པར་འབད་བ་ནེ་བ་བྱ།

Toh 374 in the Kangyur is a tantric text known in English as "The Glorious Manifest Arising of the Blood-Drinker," given in Sanskrit as the Śrī Herukābhyudaya and in Tibetan as the Dpal khrag 'thung mngon par 'byung ba. It belongs to the class of Yoganiruttara or Highest Yoga Tantra texts centered on the deity Heruka, a wrathful blood-drinking form associated with advanced Vajrayāna practice. The text opens with verses proclaiming an esoteric teaching of supreme wonder, emphasizing that accomplishment is attained through practice unconstrained by conventional ritual observances such as auspicious dates, purification rites, fasting, or the social customs of ordinary householders. As Toh 374 in the Kangyur, it is preserved among the canonical tantric scriptures of the Tibetan Buddhist tradition and reflects the antinomian spirit characteristic of the Heruka cycle of teachings.

In the language of India: Śrī Heru Kā Bhya Da Ya Nā Ma. In the language of Tibet: The Glorious Manifest Arising of the Blood-Drinker. Homage to the Glorious Heruka.

Then what is truly to be explained:

The supremely wondrous esoteric teaching, which a person who rightly understands and then practises will attain accomplishment — it is to be recited without counting dates, without counting stars, and without fasting.

There is no pure and no impure,
no silence, no water-rites.

It is utterly freed from time and measure.

Hygienic conduct is wholly abandoned.

The practitioner does not follow the customs of town-dwellers.

In the age of strife, accomplishment comes.

In the age of perfection, a single quality is attained;

likewise, in the age of three, two qualities;

in the age of two, three qualities is declared;

and in the age of strife, all four qualities — that these are the very accomplishments, there is no doubt.

This concludes the first chapter of the Glorious Manifest Arising of the Blood-Drinker, the chapter on the ritual of entry.

Then what else is to be abundantly explained — all the tantras are hidden therein.

In the great tantra of the Glorious Blood-Drinker, one accomplishes every desired aim.

A pleasant, level portion of earth, anointed with fragrant water, with various pleasing incenses and diverse flowers scattered as an offering — in a pure and solitary place, one who knows the mantras should guard it,
and the directions are to be bound.

Thus, one endowed with proper ritual procedure,
a skilled person arranges and sets it out.

With a mind of supreme delight,
one contemplates the ritual thoroughly from every side.

The mudrā of woman, together with the stamen, first the acute accent, then the following vowel-sound, renowned as long and short.

The two triangles are fully present;
likewise the four neuter forms,
and the four types of woman and man.

Likewise, the second and the first vowel-sound — these are to be known as long and short.

The final of the vowels is to be placed at the close;
the vowel-class is placed first;
the palatal vowels are placed second;
the acute accented vowels are placed third;
in the middle, the lotus is fourth;
the fifth is the ta-class group;
the sixth is the pa-class group;
the antarastha (semi-vowels) are held to be seventh;
the letters of warmth (uṣman, spirants) are the eighth;
and at the end, the condensed close.

One who knows this and understands thoroughly draws out the chief of mantras.

From the arrangement, having extracted the mantra, one swiftly attains the fruit of accomplishment.

This concludes the second chapter of the Glorious Manifest Arising of the Blood-Drinker, the chapter on the ritual of composing the mantra.

Then the mantra ritual is explained —
the accomplishment of the desired attainments.
By whomsoever, through mere recognition alone,
the practitioner will attain accomplishment.

The fifth of the fifth,
and the fifth of the sixth;
the fourth of that same one,
and the third of the second,
and the fourth of the antarastha;
the first of the fifth,
and the fourth of the antarastha;
the second of that same,
and the first of uṣman is declared;
the first of the antarastha;
the fifth of the sixth,
and the fourth of uṣman;
the first of the second,
and the third of the antarastha;
the third of the second,
and the third of uṣman;
the fifth of the fifth,
and the fourth of the sixth,
and the first of the antarastha is declared;
the third of the third,
and the first of the fourth is declared;
the fifth of the sixth —
and likewise the seventeenth is the best;
the twenty-seventh is supreme;
likewise the thirty-second;
the twenty-seventh, that supreme one,
and the first of the antarastha is declared;
the third of the fifth,

and the second of uṣman —
this is the supreme seventeenth.

The second of the antarastha,
and likewise the third.

Then the supreme nineteenth:
the second of the sixth,
and the second of uṣman,
and the thirty-first — then take it.

The fifth of the sixth,

or the eighteenth itself, and the first of the antarastha is declared;

the third of uṣman,

and likewise its own fourth;

and likewise the third itself,

the fourth of the sixth,

and the third of the third;

the fourth of the sixth,

and the third of uṣman;

the second of the antarastha,

and its own first;

the first of the sixth,

and the second of the antarastha;

thus the first of uṣman

and the first of the sixth are to be declared;

the first of uṣman itself —

likewise the syllable dhya, the yoginī;

the first of the fifth,

and the first of uṣman is declared;

the third of the antarastha —

likewise the eighteenth;

the first of the fourth,

and the third of the second;

the fourth of the fifth,

and the second of the antarastha;

the fifth of the fourth,

and the first of the syllable byā is declared.

Then the twentieth itself, and likewise the supreme twenty-fourth;

the fifth of the fifth,
and the fifth of the sixth;
the second of the antarastha is declared;
the fourth of the fifth,
and likewise the antarastha itself;
its own first,
and the fifth of the sixth;
the fourth class of uṣman,
and the fourth of the fifth;
thus the fifth of the sixth, and the fifth of the fifth — likewise the seventeenth, as the wise one knows;
the second of the antarastha,
and likewise its own fourth;
the first of the sixth is also to be declared;
the second class of uṣman,
and the first of the antarastha is declared.

Kara kara, kuru kuru, bhandha bhandha, trāsaya trāsaya, kṣobhaya kṣobhaya, hrauṃ hrauṃ, hraḥ hraḥ, phaiṃ phaiṃ, phaṭ phaṭ, daha daha, paca paca, bhakṣa bhakṣa, vasuru dhira antra mālā balambine, grhṇa grhṇa, sapta pātāla gata bhujaṃgaṃ sarvaṃ vātarjaya tarjaya, ākaḍḍhaya akaḍḍhaya, hṛṃ hṛṃ, jhaum̐ jhaum̐, kṣmām̐ kṣmām̐, hām̐ hām̐, hām̐ hām̐, hūṃ hūṃ, kili kili, sili sili, hili hili, dhili dhili, hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ.

The first syllable of om̐ — joined at the end with the syllables hūṃ phaṭ — this is widely renowned as the root mantra.

This was the third chapter, called "The Ritual Chapter for Gathering Syllables," from the glorious Heruka Abhyudaya.

Now the essence here is to be explained:
it accomplishes all desired aims.

That which is called "Victor of the Three Realms" (Skt. traidhātukapramardana) leads one to the meaning of Dharma, to what is wished for, and to liberation.

For the third class of uṣman,
the fifth of the vowels is to be joined;

this is widely known as the first.
For the fifth of the sixth,
one examines what follows below by its own fourth.
For the fifth of the fifth,
the third vowel is to be joined;
this is widely known as the first.
For the third class of uṣman,
perfectly possessed of the fifth vowel —
this is widely known as the fourth.
For the fifth of the sixth,
below it, by its own fourth, there is no doubt.
For the fourth class of uṣman,
perfectly possessed of the fifth vowel,
with nāda placed above — this is widely known as the sixth.
The second of the sixth,
and the first of the fourth are to be declared.
This is the first verse-foot, which bestows the fruit of all spiritual attainments (siddhi).
For the incomplete twenty, lacking one, separation is made by a syllable of fire.
Perfectly possessed of the third vowel,
this is widely known as the first.
For the fourth class of uṣman,
perfectly possessed of the fifth of the fifth —
this is widely known twice over.
For the fourth class of uṣman,
adorned by the fifteenth, perfectly joined with the end of the fourth — this is rightly known as the fifth.
The second of the sixth,
and the first of the fourth —
these perfectly bestow all defining marks;
this is declared to be the second verse-foot.
For the third of the second,

The seed of fire perfectly placed,
perfectly possessed of the third vowel —
this is widely known as the first.
For the fourth class of uṣman,
perfectly possessed of the fifth of the fifth,
joined with the second vowel — and the first of the sixth:
thus it is doubled.
For the fourth class of uṣman,
perfectly possessed of the end of the fourth, then adorned by the fifteenth —
the second of the sixth
and the first of the fourth:
this is declared the third verse-foot,
the accomplisher of all desired aims.
The second of the first,
the fifth of the fifth,
the first of the antastha,
and for the fourth class of uṣman, perfectly possessed of the thirteenth vowel — this is supremely virtuous and excellent.
The fourth of the sixth,
and the twenty lacking one,
for the fourth of the antastha,
perfectly possessed of the second vowel,
adorned above by the dot —
the fourth of the antastha, and the very twenty-fourth:
separation is made by the child of fire.
For the fourth class of uṣman, perfectly adorned by the fifth, adorned above by the empty —
the second of the sixth
and the first of the fourth:
these constitute the fourth verse-foot,
the accomplisher of all desired aims.
These mantras of the fourth,
if not yet arisen, shall not arise.

This concludes the fourth chapter, the ritual of extracting the heart mantras, from the Manifest Arising of the Glorious Blood-Drinker.

Then these mantras
are to be applied to the heroes.

The yoginīs are those who recite them, knowing the ritual of mantra.

The yoginī of non-dual attainment — for the letter of the second,
it is possessed of the thirteenth vowel.

For the particular letter of the sixth,
it is possessed of the eleventh vowel.

By that which is widely known as the seventh,
it is possessed of the fourth vowel.

For the eighth letters, perfectly possessed of the twelfth vowel.

The twelfth letters
are distinguished by the second vowel.

The twelfth in speech,
having been furnished with the second vowel,
by the very first of the sixth is to be perfectly examined in the lower position.

The fourteenth letters
are possessed of the second vowels, and are virtuous and supremely beneficial.

The characteristic of the fifteenth letter:
furnished with the third vowel, and by the fifth of the fifth perfectly possessed in the lower part.

Likewise the sixteenth itself is joined above with nāda.

The seventeenth itself
is perfectly possessed of the third vowel.

For the eighteenth letter,
it is perfectly possessed of the second vowel.

The twenty-first letter is perfectly possessed of the second vowel.

The twenty-third letter is equally possessed of the fifth vowel.

Possessed of the thirteenth vowel — that is the twenty-fourth letter.
By the first of the second,
it is joined with the twenty-fifth.
The learned one, by being constantly possessed, speaks to the twenty-sixth.
Possessed of the second vowel —
two indicators indicate it.
The twenty-eighth letter is likewise indicated by the fifteenth.
For the thirty lacking one,
joined with the first of the fourth,
perfectly possessed of the second vowel —
it is to be perfectly joined with fire.
Possessed of the second vowel —
that is the thirty-first letter.
For the thirty-second letter,
it is possessed of the thirteenth vowel.
For the thirty-third letter, separation is made by the sun.
All the mantras are thus made clear,
and in this way there is no doubt.
For the thirty-fourth letter,
it is possessed of the fourth vowel —
this is of the highest and most virtuous rank.
Possessed of the fifth vowel —
The thirty-seventh is likewise so.
For the thirty-eighth letter,
it is to be possessed of the second vowel —
all accomplishments are thereby perfectly determined.
Likewise for the forty-second,
it is to be joined by the sun.
For the forty-third letter,
it is to be joined with the fifth vowel —
and that too is of the highest virtue.

The forty-fifth, as perfectly proclaimed, is to be possessed of the second vowel letter —
and in just that way there is no doubt.
Possessed of the fifth vowel —
that is likewise the forty-sixth.
For the forty-seventh itself,
it is to be equalized with the second vowel.
Likewise for the fifty-first,
it is to be joined with the fifth vowel —
by this, liberation itself is accomplished.
Possessed of the second vowel —
the wise declare this to be the fifty-second.
Possessed of the thirteenth vowel letter, that is the fifty-third letter.
For the fifty-sixth letter,
it is possessed of the sixth vowel.
For the sixty lacking one,
it is joined with the fourth of the semivowels (antastha).
The second vowel is to be joined,
and above it is adorned by nāda.
Possessed of the second vowel,
it is to be joined to the sixty-first.
Possessed of the third vowel —
that is the distinctive sixty-second.
Possessed of the eleventh vowel letter,
the wise declare as the sixty-third.
Joined with the fifth vowel letter — that is the sixty-fourth letter.
Likewise for the sixty-fifth,
it is most certainly to be joined with fire.
"All accomplishments" — in holding this, there is no doubt.
Possessed of the third vowel —
the sixty-sixth is thereby disclosed, perfectly establishing both the family and the non-family.
Perfectly possessed of the second vowel,
the sixty-seventh as explained is called "the worship of the hero."

By the fourth of the semivowels, the sixty-eighth is well renowned.
For the seventy-first letter, it has been made to be possessed of the second vowel.
For the seventy-fourth letter,
it is likewise possessed of the second vowel letter —
it is well renowned as a weapon.
For the seventy-fifth itself, it is joined with the sixth vowel — and such it has become.
For the seventy-sixth letter,
possessed of the second vowel,
separation is made by the son of fire.
It is to be joined with the fourth of the fifth.
For the seventy-seventh letter,
it is possessed of the second vowel letter.
The seventy-eighth, the wise declare.
The eighty-first is likewise the highest — it is joined with the fifth vowel.
For the eighty-second letter,
it is to be joined with the second vowel — bestowing Dharma, its aim, desire, and liberation.
Wishing benefit for heroes,
it is declared to be "the king of vidyās."

This has been the fifth chapter of the Glorious Emergence of the Blood-Drinker, entitled "The Collection of Mantras."

Then, for the great secret of supreme accomplishment, its essence and its near-essence — guarded by one who knows the mantra rites, like a vast and profound ocean —
above the nine of fifty, thirty-three abide,
adorned by the fifteen,
perfectly possessed of the fourth vowel,
this is the ground of all accomplishments, immeasurable at the heart of the yogin.

For each and every letter, likewise possessed of twelve vowels —
it is the complete reversal of all the paths of the great ḍākinīs.
Through recitation of the near-essence, accomplishment arises —
this is the accomplishment of the messenger, difficult to find in the Yoga tantras.
The accomplishment that arises co-emergently is born through both graduated and non-graduated means — it does not arise from anything other than the Blood-Drinker tantra.
The supreme mudrā of yoga gathers the supreme moon of primordial wisdom.
One should partake of the supreme food —
this is the definitive treatise.

This has been the sixth chapter of the tantra, the Glorious Emergence of the Blood-Drinker, entitled "The Collection of Mantras."

Then furthermore, in brief:

The characteristics of the symbolic rite —
when the yogin constantly accomplishes them,
the accomplishment of liberation will arise.
Through the great empowerment and through flowers, nectar is likewise generated.
Through that which is endowed with curds and butter,
the extraction of essence is supremely beneficial.

The maṇḍala is called the wheel, and the gathering of all within it is the supreme wheel of the feast-assembly — all proceed together in friendship.

Mother, sister, wife,
and daughters — having invited them,
one should introduce them to the yoga.
These are to be enjoyed and experienced — this does not become contrary to the Dharma.

These kings of mantras:
by reciting them even once,

the women who are messengers are said to be summoned —

Oṃ sarva vajra kāmī sarva bhakṣa śodhaya guhyaṃ vajrīṇī hūṃ svāhā.

Having been encircled by women, one enjoys pleasure as one pleases and makes an offering to the buddhas — this is called the attainment of accomplishment.

To the glorious Blessed One of the vajra, with palms joined at the crown of one's head,
one makes offering with all the rituals of the tormas.
With both the right and left hands
one performs a dance with swaying.
The yogin makes offering to all — this is the accumulation of great merit and so forth.
Through making such offering alone, genuine accomplishment is attained in stages.

Whoever does not worship the great mudrā and instead worships the Tathāgata — that one has entirely devoted oneself to toil without purpose and will not obtain the fruit.

If one personally desires accomplishment,
one should worship the heroes through offering.
Whoever harbors aversion toward the great mudrā,
fulfilling all that desire can attain,
will, through many thousands of births,
be born in the destined states of animals.

Wherever the glorious Blood-Drinker is definitively present as a field — at the abodes of the fierce and vast one — when one arrives there as a field, being in that very field, whoever is that one's child or kin, whoever worships the heroes,
fulfilling all that desire can attain —
that one has no fear of enemies, has no fear of kings and the like,

will not die an untimely death,
has no fear of fire or of lower rebirths.
One should constantly worship the mudrā —
this is attained through merit.

The heroes are ever present there as masters.
Having graciously accepted the offering made with devotion, the great yoga abides.
One should offer and attend upon them for the sake of supplication.

If one relies instead upon another yoga,
one goes astray, rises up in error, and consumes.
By that one will not obtain the fruit.
If one takes the heroes as one's guide,
in this age of strife accomplishment is attained.

A hero who is separated from the mudrā — worshipping such a practitioner is like offering to an empty husk of grain.
On this earth, the yogin becomes like a pauper.

The glorious Blood-Drinker holds the yoga.
To one who makes offering to one's own self,
it grants the path of liberation.
The great yoga of the glorious Blood-Drinker —
I myself have taken hold of it.
Whoever does not rely upon the non-dual will, after death, go to hell.
For that one there is no protector.

One who ornaments oneself as a yogin without yoga, who approaches the mudrā, who performs the manner of primordial wisdom without primordial wisdom — there is no doubt that one goes to hell.

The hero, wearing a garland of skulls,
with a body likewise white,
having the crest-jewel of a buddha's uṣṇīṣa, with Vajravārāhī placed on the left — one holds the emblem and color of that one.

One skull on the seat of each:
the earth itself, the sky itself —
the second and the fourth, held in the hand of the glorious Blood-Drinker.
The third is Vajravārāhī.
All beings abide in this manner.

Gods, asuras, and humans together —
having made all the earth a seat —

Then the rite begins in equal measure. This is the chapter on the certain rite for accomplishing non-duality of food, arising from the glorious Blood-Drinker — the seventh chapter.

Then with this mantra, the yoginī bestows all accomplishments supremely.
How is this to be rightly explained?
The hero is the yoga of non-duality — by humans he is to be venerated.
This is the mental accomplishment of the mantra of the hero.

Oṃ namo bhagavatī vajravārāhī vaṃ. Āryā vārājite. Trailokyamāte mahāvidyeśvarī. Sarvabhūtabhayāvahe mahāvajre. Vajrāsane ajite aparājite vaśyamkariṇe trabhamāṇi. Śoṣaṇi roṣaṇi. Krodhani kārāliṇi. Trāsani maraṇi prabhedani aparājaye vijaye jambhani. Stambhani. Mohani. Vajravārāhī.
Mahāyoginī kāmēśvarī khage. Tadyathā protaṃge. Protamge. Hena hana.
Prāṇāṃ kiṃkiṇi khiṃkhiṇi. Dhuna dhuna. Vajrahaste śoṣaya śoṣaya.
Khaṭvāṅgakapāladhāriṇī. Mahāpiśitamāṃsāśani mānuṣyāṃtraprapṛtte saṃnidhyaṃ naraśiromālāgranthitadhāriṇī. Sumbhani sumbhe hana hana.
Prāṇāṃ sarvapāpasatvānāṃ sarvapaśunāṃ. Mahāmāṃsacchadani mūrtidaṃṣṭrākāraliṇī. Mahāmudre śrī-herukade vasya. Agra mahiṣī sahasraśīre sahasravāhave śata-sahasrāṇane. Jvalitatejaḥ jvalamukhi pagala locanī.
Vajraśarīre vajrāsane. Militeni militeni he he ha ha hūṃ hūṃ kha kha dhu dhu.
Ru ru. Dhuru dhuru. Muru muru. Advaitye. Mahāyogini pathita. Siddhi drem dhraṃ drem dhraṃ. Graṃ graṃ. He he. Ha ha. Bhīme ha saha savīre. Hā hā.
Ho ho. Hūṃ hūṃ. Trailokya. Vināśane. Śatasahasrakoṭi. Tathāgataparivarite hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ. Siṃharūpe khaḥ. Gajarūpe gaḥ. Trailokya udvarī. Samudra mekhale grasa grasa hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ. Pīrādvaite hūṃ hūṃ ha ha mahāpaśumohani. Yogīśvari stuṃ ḍākinī. Lokānāṃ bandani satyapratyayakāriṇi hūṃ phaṭ. Bhūtatrāsani. Mahāvīre paramasiddhe. Vidye yogīśvari phaṭ. Hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svāhā.

This is the chapter on the rite declared as the root mantra of the glorious Vajravārāhī, arising from the glorious Blood-Drinker — the eighth chapter.

Then the root mantra of Vajravārāhī, supreme in accomplishment — without it, Heruka and Vārāhī do not arise and will not arise.

A secret mantra equal to this does not exist in the three worlds.
Spoken in hundreds of thousands and three hundred thousands of verses, it gathers together the entire heart of the tantras.

Whoever knows these rites, releasing all things like a leaf,
even without my reciting it afterward,
all activities are accomplished.

One is definitively freed from all afflictions,
the fruit of accomplishment is swiftly obtained.
By merely knowing and remembering it,
it bestows all accomplishments supremely.

That very one is the life of all living beings, that very one does not become supreme and fixed — that very suchness is found pervading all,
it abides in every body.

That very suchness is the wisdom of the buddhas, declared by the glorious Heruka.
These mantras arise as they truly are,
supremely abiding in certain ones.

All treatises upon the earth abide as settled philosophical tenets.
By knowing this, accomplishment follows — all mantras, without doubt.

In this world and the next,
without it there is likewise no accomplishment.

All philosophical systems and the Vedas are renowned as a single heart-essence.
By one's own nature it will be accomplished — recite: yoga and the self are non-dual!

All accomplishments, beyond doubt,
are unstained by all activities;
abundantly increasing, they become supreme in all.
They abide in manifestation throughout all bodies.

This is the chapter on the certain rite for accomplishing non-duality of food, arising from the glorious Blood-Drinker — the seventh chapter. This is the chapter declared as the root mantra of the glorious Vajravārāhī, arising from the glorious Blood-Drinker — the eighth chapter.

The glorious Blood-Drinker is to be known as a god.
One should practice throughout all the families.
Food is not to be examined —
this is ultimate wisdom,
this is the supreme attainment.
These mantras, the very heart-essences, are bestowed upon the whole world.

This is the chapter on the purification of all things by the root mantra of Vajravārāhī, arising from the glorious Blood-Drinker — the ninth chapter.

Then, having obtained this mantra, one creates a maṇḍala according to one's own wish, places that mother Vajravārāhī there,
and recites with utmost effort.

With naturally arisen red dust,
and cloth fragments obtained from a charnel ground, and the thick fluid of a cat — let one who desires accomplishment make of these an incense.

The Blessed One bestows blessings.
This fine incense is the mantra-knowledge.

With the mudrā of Vajravārāhī, bind the joined skulls together.

There is spoken the fire offering of hair.

In this way, the samaya of those who explain the equal state of non-realization is to be thoroughly maintained.

One is always to make offerings with the mudrā, and one is always to eat and drink.

This is what is called the mantra — it bestows all accomplishments.

With beer and beef prepared,
the fire offering is to be performed with the left hand.
All the gods, the stars,
the nāgas, and the thirty-three dwelling together — even a buddha comes under one's power, so what need is there to mention ordinary human beings?

With the filth of the tongue, with tooth-cleaning twigs,
and likewise the wiping-residue of one's own body, and with fire offerings of human blood — through performing these fire offerings, the three worlds come under one's power.

With dust, with naturally arisen red substance,
with vomited food,
and with human hair, when properly combined — supreme among means of summoning in a single instant.

With naturally arisen butter spat out,
and with one's own hair as fire offering, igniting fire with neem wood — supreme among means of averting enemies in a single instant.

With crow feathers one performs the fire offering.
Upon the intoxicating mother, placed in equipoise, with warm butter-oil, properly combined — in a mere instant one kills and drives away.

Pouring nine hundred offerings in full and performing the fire offerings — within no long time one attains kingship.

One who pours in flesh, and who, with skill, performs a hundred full pourings — within three months of that poverty is exhausted in a mere instant.

One who always holds this in mind becomes beloved by all people.
In twenty-one days
accomplishment arises — beyond doubt.

The supreme woman, like a goddess of desire, intoxicated and frenzied, is to be taken as consort.
With desire greatly expanded,
one shows love to the beings of the world.
On the surface of the earth one attains accomplishments, surrounded by countless women.

Together with the glorious Vajravārāhī and the glorious Blood-Drinker in union, all the heroes pay homage,
and accomplishment is bestowed throughout the three worlds.
The samaya conduct is to be maintained and guarded.

This is the chapter on the rites of the fire-offering ceremony of the root mantra of the glorious Vajravārāhī, arising from the glorious Blood-Drinker — the tenth chapter.

Then these are the supreme and holy foremost activities:
the non-dual hero's yoga —
one always embraces in secret offering.
Through the yoginī, the supreme is bestowed.

The practitioner, every evening,
then makes offering to the messenger.
Placing the root of flesh-eating into the mouth to whatever extent one desires, that sign becomes the activity.

The hearts of earthworms, cooked in sesame oil,
are to be rubbed on the soles of the feet.
Then that becomes a sign.

Paṭa and kaṭu
and rohiṇī and horse-musk — these are made into equal portions and steeped in the milk of a she-camel, then applied to the liṅga.
To whatever measure one desires,
to that very measure one's desire is fulfilled.
If quickly washed off with warm water,
it returns to the way it was before.

White lotus stamens steeped together with honey — rubbed onto the navel,
the sign becomes stable and enduring.

Red lotus stamens,
white sesame seeds,
unboiled buffalo butter,
the root of the solitary hero plant, and honey — these are combined and rubbed upon the navel.
For as long as this is done,
the sign will not disperse.

Take equal measures of mineral dust and turmeric, together with a drē measure of cow's bile — whatever amount fills a drē, boil it for that duration.
Drinking it in this way,
the process is complete within seven days.
This is the authentic preparation for essence extraction, as taught by the hero.

Take the saliva of a monkey, grind it into a fine powder,
and combine it with what has come forth from one's own hero's gate, prepared properly.
This is the supreme means of bringing under one's power.

Recite Vajravārāhī.
Wherever the mind dwells, with the index finger of a single recitation, circling with the left hand — whatever and whoever one has in mind, all livelihood: grain, gold,

food and drink —
all of these will be taken up and fill the mantra practitioner's house completely.
Mix blood and self-arisen substance together.
The practitioner recites the awareness mantra seven times.
If one then touches a person with it,
that person will bleed at the touch.
By reciting this awareness mantra once,
the person will be entirely freed through water.

Likewise, whatever sentient beings — bind them with thread soaked in blood and great blood.
Through seven recitations,
there is no doubt that one will seize their form.
Completely, they will be freed through water.

By gazing, beautiful women, kings, and lords of the land — whether or not the practitioner has seen them — all will be summoned.
Having praised them openly seven times,
they will come with the swiftness of an arrow.
Within seven days, without any doubt,
the glorious blood-drinker will manifestly arise.

This is the eleventh chapter, called the Ritual Chapter on Desire, Essence Extraction, and Summoning from the Glorious Blood Drinker, from the Root Mantra Yoga of Glorious Vajravārāhī.

Then the great siddha yogi, having abandoned all fears, draws the painted image of the scroll painting in accordance with the ritual.

The body of the yoginī as it abides —
the practitioner is to mark it.

On the fourteenth, or on the eighth,
or on the tenth day of the dark fortnight, the practitioner is to make offerings in the evening with the awareness mantra.

The practitioner offers fragrance, flowers, and incense just as prescribed,
and likewise food and drink,
lamps, garlands,
and pleasing sweet-smelling incense.

Remaining on a single seat,
the practitioner faces toward the deity and looks westward.

The practitioner is to hold the scroll painting's image — four-faced, four-armed,
holding a skull-cup and a khaṭvāṅga, all resplendent —
and with the hands holds a lasso and iron hook.

Of blazing black color,
bound with a garland of skulls, wearing a cloak of tiger hide, resting on the seat with the right leg extended, adorned with a crown of matted locks adorned with the crescent moon, ornamented with most beautiful bones — having meditated on this fully through the ritual, one then takes up the rosary.

Remaining on a single seat,
recite the awareness mantra of the body of the great hero, fearsome as fire.

The practitioner recites the heart mantra at midnight with lightning speed.

In the first watch, laugh aloud with "ha ha!"
and cry out with the howl of a jackal.

The practitioner and retinue, upon seeing this,
must not be afraid.

In the second watch,
one sees blazing fire in the sky above.

Recite without moving.

Though all beings appear as though ready to be devoured, a face that inspires the terror of a rākṣasa —
this is what is seen in the third watch.

Together with gods, asuras, and humans —

In the fourth watch, success is attained.

Vajravārāhī, supreme bestower, speaks: "Well done, well done, great hero!
I shall grant you the supreme."

Supreme attainments of travel underground, the sword, eye-medicine, and the wheel — all are accomplished through speech, and the great seal is subsequently accomplished.

By whatever seal the practitioner performs,
all attainments come in full perfection.

The glorious blood-drinker must be honored by that one.

In the mind and body of the seal,
the supreme is present through the offering of the seal.

This is the definitive treatise.

Through the seal, attainment is understood.

Truly abiding in the three worlds —

this is proclaimed by heroes and yoginīs.

Without exception, without remainder, all is accomplished.

This concludes the twelfth chapter, the ritual method for accomplishing the great seal, from the Glorious Emergence of the Blood-Drinker.

Then shall be explained the teaching on invocation. The seventh birth grants attainment. In existence, the great hero grants attainments. The supreme dwelling of the body for all. At the outermost reach of ever-extending hands, with eyes and crown present everywhere, with mouth and ears pervading everywhere, he abides encircling all worldly beings. Therefore one must accomplish this swiftly.

With the mind of non-dual wisdom, one draws him forth into one's own body. In the rain below there is no doubt. There, one should introduce what is to be accomplished. From the root channel, the yoginī takes the seed of the living being and introduces it into one's own body. Wind and fire arise perfectly. The body of the one to be accomplished becomes the food. The neck is bound with a noose, and bewildered by the goddess's mantra, all become subject to invocation.

By the practitioner through mantra and body: stupefied, unconscious, and confused — and utterly bewildered by Vajravārāhī — that one is forever brought under control, will come and will keep coming. Having arranged it exactly so, with pure meditative concentration, fully endowed, the great sovereign summoned Śakra (Indra) with himself in advance, calling first upon Śakra's consort. Then one must know the method.

All three realms without exception, and even the Victors, are to be invoked. The method is universally the supreme beneficence, hidden throughout all tantras. The mantra of yoga is thus spoken. Free from vows and recitation, a little fasting is not required — through this meditative concentration it will be accomplished. Observe beings and apply this fully.

This concludes the thirteenth chapter, the ritual of invoking all — from the seventh birth onward — from the Glorious Emergence of the Blood-Drinker.

Then shall be explained the maṇḍala ritual, bestowing all attainments in full. Like a great wheel, like a lotus, the hero, the non-dual yoginī — whoever sees the king of maṇḍalas, how could attainment fail to arise? From afar one hears, from far away one sees with the eyes. The yoginī abandons attachment and aversion. Four-sided with four gates, perfectly endowed with four lotuses — an accomplished master bearing the requisite characteristics should draw the lines of the maṇḍala. On a level, pleasing ground, having fully cleared away all thorns and debris, one draws the supreme maṇḍala with all five colors.

One who desires attainment should, in meditative equipoise, make offerings to the messengers, and the heroes too shall be honored. Through this, the colored-powder maṇḍala is to be accomplished. By the very perfection of the colored-powder maṇḍala, liberation from all desired aims is granted. One should draw the colored-powder maṇḍala to the measure of a span. But if these lines become low, broken, or crooked — a low line means no attainment, a crooked one causes illness, and if the lines are broken, both master and student will die. Therefore draw the lines according to their proper characteristics: in the center of the ground draw it elevated, and in the east and north draw it lower.

The mantrin will attain accomplishment. When the east and north are low and the center is high, one becomes a king — the rank of a knowledge-holder is certain. But if the north is high, death will come, or else wealth will be destroyed. As was said before, if the east is high, the lineage will quickly come to ruin. And if the center of the ground is low, the practitioner will be slain. Thus one should draw the maṇḍala on the ground with lines bearing all their proper characteristics. The measure may be one cubit, two cubits, four cubits, eight, twelve, or sixteen — without discrimination between above and below. If there is no such discernment, the master will find gnosis hard to obtain, will go to unbearable hell, and will become a person of low estate.

Next is explained the rite of summoning. The non-dual hero and the yoginīs, together with the glorious Vajra Heruka, the blood-drinking god, are encircled by a retinue of sixty-four: Yamāntī, Trāsinī, Caṇḍikā, Kuṇḍalinī, Dhanā, Vīramatī, Saṃgrahī, Bhairavī — these eight bestow all accomplishments. Rūpiṇī, Jyotiṣkarī, Lāmā, Vṛddhikarī, Sāpālikā, Pratisarā, Iḥikā, and Nartanapriyadevī — these too are named as eight and are universally renowned as yoginīs. The Wrathful-Browed One, the Fang-Gnasher, the Great-Nosed One, the Ox-Faced One, the Great-Scented One, the Elephant-Tongued One, the Cow-Eared One, the Fair-Faced One — these have become practitioners of yoga. The red fierce one, the green earth goddess, the great powerful one with three vessels, the rough one, the truth-speaker, the most beautiful-faced one, and the ones bearing skull fragments — all these bestow the accomplishment of compassion.

The former Vajravārāhī herself is your own awareness. In the mantras that recite one's own name, first join the syllable Oṃ at the beginning and Hūṃ Hūṃ Phaṭ at the end. One who performs all desired aims should always make offerings to her. In this way, without any doubt at all, one should offer sisters, daughters, most beautiful wives, horses, elephants, cattle, fields, male servants, female servants, and precious things. From this day forward, I myself have become a servant; I offer up my very body. If students do not make such offering, there is no doubt that accomplishment will be long delayed — in this life and the next, they will not attain accomplishment. How could accomplishment not arise for one who has actually seen the maṇḍala? Freed from all evil, one should delight the master with effort. By that, accomplishment will come swiftly.

As the Tathāgata's deity has declared, so one should draw the maṇḍala evenly with five colored powders, just as it was described. The face having been blindfolded, one is brought in through the southern gate. Flowers are scattered by the handful, and wherever a flower falls, that location and so forth is indicated.

Oṃ Śrī Herukāya Vidyā Mahāvidyārājāya Dhīḥ Mahā Svāhā.

I have supremely summoned the hero. By its recitation all actions are accomplished. The accomplishment that belongs to the moment of death is to be declared at the time of death. By the distinction of this accomplishment, in a single day great accomplishment comes — one should meditate and accomplish the three worlds. The lord of practice who knows the rite, abiding for three nights in the conduct of the glorious Heruka, will be born in the body of a god, will behold the gnosis of the gods, and will likewise attain the form of a god. Victorious over all conflict, free from old age and death, one serves the goddesses as a buddha does, and sports upon the earth as a hero does.

Together with the mudrā, transformation comes within three days.

This is the fourteenth chapter, entitled "The Manifest Arising from the Glorious Heruka: The Rite of Establishing the Gods, Conferring Empowerment, and Venerating the Guru."

Then the maṇḍala is to be explained. The empowerment, the worship of the wheel — these the disciple performs on an auspicious day, or else in the evening as the occasion may be. Then the hero is to be worshipped. Remaining on a single seat, the sixteen messenger-women abide in non-dual union with the hero. To the glorious Vajravārāhī, one should offer worship in the four directions using the vidyā of Śambha. In this way the great yogin performs worship; it is perfectly guarded by the eight forms. With mantra and mudrā fully complete, one should engage the non-dual gnosis (jñāna).

Throughout the night the sādḥaka should then worship the messengers. Before long, kingship is accomplished — a wheel-turning king, a monarch of power. The practitioner, in profound meditative equipoise, should apply mantra and mudrā. All samaya pledges are to be upheld. What is rare in all three worlds is accomplished by one born on the left. Now listen — I shall explain the characteristic marks of samaya conduct and the gnosis of the rite of union.

Among the supreme pauses for breath, one should always consume fragrant water together with pills. At the particular times of worship, the messenger-women confer accomplishment (siddhi) that is co-born. Through union with the lowest, the highest, and those in between, accomplishment is attained — all desired aims are fulfilled.

From the glorious Heruka, through self-arisen flowers that are themselves pure, one who knows the rite practices everywhere. With recitation, meditative concentration, worship, and a single flower fully present, the wise one accomplishes the feast. Bringing together without exception both vessels, with the great wisdom free from conceptual thought, in accordance with the manner of mantra and tantra — whatever is found, in whatever way — one worships with reverential mind.

The yoga of duality and non-duality: one should drink as a garuḍa drinks from the sky. The five families are perfectly accomplished as one. One should undertake the glorious feast. Always in the evening, one performs and undertakes the great worship. In that place, through the activity of fire, moving and unmoving are to be stirred. The yogin who abides in the place of flowers, having abandoned all other sādhana practices, will accomplish the supreme animal yoga. For the lowest, middle, and highest levels, using the various kinds of torma filled into the offerings made from jackal-born great-eyes, crane, sārāsa bird, hawk, raven, owl, and vulture — these are given as torma to the ḍākinīs. Supreme and inferior accomplishments are bestowed; material accomplishment arises from these substances.

Likewise, through seeing, touching, constantly calling out and embracing, and through the various particulars of the place of union — for as long as the assembly of yogins continues, it is said that all accomplishments are performed. What arises from mantra is to be given; at no other time is this the case. A mother, a daughter, a sister, or a wife abiding as a messenger-woman — she through whom mantra is always transmitted is to be declared as the rite of that one.

Then I declare the samaya: what arises from the left is supreme. Whoever obtains a human woman will attain the desired accomplishment through the mantra of Heruka; even from a great distance, one should make her known by her consciousness. Dwelling in a house or in the field, this belongs to none other than the Blood-Drinking Yogi. The master is the yoginī; those who are minded should know all yoga through this tantra — at no other time is this the case.

First, relying upon faith, one worships with reverence. One always abides in the manner of the mātṛkāś, free from duality and free from shame. The mudrā is endowed with the very highest yoga — this is said to be the proper ethical conduct (śīla).

Born from the birthplace, one is born, and the sacred pledge (samaya) is truly guarded. Benefiting others with a compassionate heart, one is not wrathful toward those who hold the samaya. One does not teach those who are disrespectful. At dawn one performs recitation. One makes offering to the yoginī. The sixteen and the non-dual — this is the purpose of the Victor. In the evening, that is the samaya. The hero is always naked. The practitioner is endowed with mantra, mudrā, and the five mudrās. One enters into equipoise through the practice. The self as supreme messenger and all — dwelling in the non-dual yoga, one accomplishes through the substances arising from that. Likewise, one who sees and one who touches: by day it is always secret; by night it is always made manifest. One makes a loincloth from the skin of a living creature. One moves about for the purpose of bliss. The practitioner is accomplishment itself, and is fulfilled through the three purities. One dwells in the non-dual state of the glorious Blood-Drinker. The austerities of speaking and not speaking with white or black lips, and so forth, are abandoned. Through the characteristic of the first purity and the defining marks of all sādhanas, one accumulates merit by eating what animals eat. The second purity to be spoken of is the actual drinking of menstrual fluid. The third is the utterance of non-duality.

This concludes the fifteenth chapter of the glorious Abhidhanottara, entitled "The Ritual of Offering at the Maṇḍala of the Gaṇacakra and the Conferral of Empowerment."

Now the vow shall be explained — rare among the yoga tantras, it accomplishes everything, leaving nothing aside. Renowned as the king of all, one always accomplishes the mudrā. For the sake of the fruit of desired accomplishments, one makes offering to the vajra-kin and to the master. Those very ones dwell in non-duality. Together with one's vajra-kin and one's sons, all happiness and suffering arise. To them, gnosis is not to be revealed. In mantras it is withdrawn. One eats what is clean and pure. Always keep the branches of the samaya secret. Mantras are not given to just anyone, and the oral instructions are not to be squandered. For the purpose of those for whom the instructions are meant, one gives the guarding of the samaya. Always act in the left-hand manner in the world. Lead with the left foot first. Strive to move the left limb. Drink after flicking with the left finger. Offer to oneself with the left hand. Here, embrace with the left. Make offering reverently with the left. Everywhere, gaze from the left. Likewise, when one proceeds with the left, all accomplishments are supremely bestowed. Just as one conducts oneself with the left hand, the left hand is the defining mark of liberation. Whether spoken of a little or not spoken of, the glorious Blood-Drinker acts on the left. Even though the practitioner, dwelling on the surface of the earth, has abandoned recitation and ascetic practice, accomplishment comes through the left.

This concludes the sixteenth chapter of the glorious Abhidhanottara, entitled "The Ritual of Left-Hand Offering and the Vow."

Now the ritual of enrapturing through the gaze of the yoginī shall be explained. Consecrate the tip of the nose and the top of the heart. In this way, the breath becomes still. Binding the throat with the heart-knot, a beautiful form swiftly comes. Then, for accomplishing the female hungry ghost: insert civet into the womb. The mantra-holder, dwelling upon the lotus, enters into the dhyāna recitation properly. She becomes sorrowful and weeps constantly. Abiding by the application of the bindu, she becomes wild and overjoyed. In this way, the accomplishment of civet is definitively obtained from the secret tantra. Into hollow-stemmed plants and manshinga, one inserts into the girl. From her yellow and round eyes, with tears, she weeps constantly. One abides in the recitation of these. Likewise, hold the essence and the near-essence as well as one's own life, and hold them well. In this way, the hero's accomplishment is great. In this tantra there is no doubt.

At the arising of great conflict, upon the syllable YAM of blue color, one should set it spinning by the force of the wind. Through great turmoil, the hosts of others shall all be scattered and destroyed. Through fierce syllables, one makes weapons. One applies them without affliction, and immediately all is destroyed. These are all the troops of men — those who engage in activities such as the rites of birds and so on, adorned with auspicious marks, however slight. Planets, poisons, fire, and enemies; hail, wind, and a rain of weapons — from the glorious Śrī Khrag-'thung Mngon-par 'Byung-ba, this is the seventeenth chapter, called the Rite of Not Looking upon a Beautiful Form, of Gīvāṅga, and the Rite of Scattering the Hosts of Others.

Then again there is that which is to be explained: the method of accomplishing the great zombie. The complete rite — for the master of yoga, accomplishment arises without doubt. Whatever corpse the mantrin obtains that is free of illness and without split or wound, he should take it and apply himself to its accomplishment. It grants siddhi to all yogins. Into the mouth of the corpse one should fearlessly pour a porridge made with the milk of a black cow and small-grained rice with fruit. For as long as the corpse has not yet risen, it speaks, saying, "What would you have me do?" Pills, eye-medicine, and accomplishment; sandals, a king's sword; generosity, the destruction of enemies; an anointing of the feet, and extraction of the essence — one should give the single supreme thing, and accomplishment will arise; it will not be otherwise.

If the sequence of the rite is thus carried out, and yet it departs from all the defining characteristics, and one is united with wrongdoing, the attainment is utterly destroyed. These valid measures of this contemplation should be proclaimed as the very heart of the matter.

Viṣṇu the fierce, and Indra, and Brahmā and the like, and the bodhisattvas, and the various pure sages, and nāgas, and gandharvas, and the gods; zombies, garuḍas and the like, fierce asuras, and kinnaras, flesh-eaters and rākṣasas and so on; the sun, the moon, and the stars; the world-guardians and the kings of obstacles; the maṇḍala of the mothers, the yoginīs; the various ḍākinīs, and lāmās and the dismembered ones; those with form, the returning ones, Kāminī, the buddha-sovereigns; those accomplished vidyādhara (holders of knowledge mantras), and male yakṣas and female yakṣas; the great heroines of the directions, and Umā — let them all play together in bliss. Then the great hero of accomplishment, through these mantras, attains it thus. Through the great mantra of accomplishment, through the vidyā, yogins are born.

From the glorious Śrī Khrag-'thung Mngon-par 'Byung-ba, this is the eighteenth chapter, called the Rite of the Method of Accomplishing the Great Zombie, and the Rite of Playing in Bliss with All the Gods.

Then again, what is truly to be explained: for recitation of the heart-mantra and so on, one should recite in yoga, by means of the appropriate rosary type, count, and rite. Crystal, fish-bone, and pearl, and rudrākṣa — these are beautiful. The vajra eye grants attainment; putrajīvaka is explained as universal. Nirvarta, open plain: these produce long life, freedom from illness, and increase. They perform subjugation, and those who desire peace; they cause wealth to increase. Coral brings increase, and a jewel rosary brings beauty. One who accomplishes strings a jewel rosary with strands of gold; recited by the mantrin for the sake of a king, great splendor is obtained. All attainments exist without doubt, and mastery over the lord of the earth. One controls the defining marks of spirits and draws in wealth.

With feathers of a crow one causes flight; with donkey-hair one produces hatred. With a rosary of dog and horse, the practitioner makes offering with flowers. Thread made from the hair of a corpse, combined fully with donkey-hair — with this thread combined with dog-hair, all attainments are achieved. With golden thread one achieves pacification. Or alternatively, a cotton thread —

Spun by a young woman, full in her beauty completely perfected, pure, mindful, and speaking gently — a rosary made of such thread bestows the attainment of liberation.

The glorious Blood-Drinker (Heruka) is to be honored. He is marked on the crown with the hare-bearer (the moon). Peaceful, with four faces, beautiful in form as the embodiment of all desires, the hero bears a garland of skulls. His topknot is adorned with a buddha-jewel. His hands hold the khaṭvāṅga staff. He wears a spear and a crown of matted locks. He is adorned with all ornaments and marked with a garland of fifty. Together with the Great God (Śiva) and his consort, he abides in union above them. He is covered from above by a white parasol. He is anointed with divine perfumes, and divine flowers are offered upon his body. He possesses a hundred thousand hands. With divine camphor-scent he is fumigated and anointed upon his body. Ḍākinīs of many kinds fan him with peacock-feather fans. He is surrounded equally by yoginīs. Lāmā and Dumskyema are present, and Vajravārāhī stands to his left.

The glorious grove is a lotus grove, where flowers and fruits are ever present. The wish-fulfilling trees send forth spreading branches. It is the dwelling place of the assembly of gods and demigods (asuras). Desire and longing arise there. In the pleasure grove, the supreme glory abides — half-covered by garlands of clouds, a rain of the taste of desire falls down. This is the supreme abode of desire, filled throughout with passion and loving-kindness. One moves about together with all the messengers. Heroes and yoginīs are present, and one sports in the midst of the forest. The glorious, sovereign Vajradhara, mighty — with songs and flutes and dance and the like, the sound of brass and conch in their various kinds, the sound of great long drums and so forth, the sound of great cymbals, the sounds of earthen drums, the sound of the paṭaha being struck, the sound of nine-stringed lutes with many strings — with the great sound of all kinds of music, one sports together with the great glorious assembly, utterly and completely pervaded throughout. Through this, attainments arise from that practice — for as long as the essence-mantra is recited.

This concludes the nineteenth chapter of the Manifest Arising of the Glorious Blood-Drinker, entitled "The Ritual Chapter on the Characteristics of Recitation, Offering, and the Play of Sport."

Then — the great attainment, the great yoga. One accomplishes supremely through the rite of fire-offering (homa). The sovereign lord of all attainments: through the non-dual homa of full-pour oblations, in that incomparably fortunate one all attainments arise, and birth, death, old age, sorrow, and poverty are swiftly destroyed.

For the sake of a king, the practitioner recites the mantra ten thousand times. Dwelling upon the messenger, one performs five thousand fire-offerings. Mixed with great meat and with butter, performing the full-pour oblations in due sequence — up to a hundred thousand leagues of retinue shall become splendidly complete. The great attainment, the sovereign royal glory, undiminished, pervades and extends everywhere. The mantrin who sustains this at the four times — no one is able to harm him.

Through the non-dual wisdom yoga, one recites thirty-two thousand times. With full-pour oblations of beef, great meat, and jackal meat, combined equally with beer and milk — one performs a hundred thousand fire-offerings. Thereby, sovereignty with great glory and enjoyment over the lord of the seven continents is attained, for as long as the essence-mantra proliferates.

Then, for the great attainment-mantra, one recites one hundred and eight times. With substances and rites complete, one performs more than a thousand full-pour oblations. With the root mantra of the hero, one performs a hundred full-pour oblations right here. Recitation is to be generously given. The hero is a sibling of the yoginī. In this way the fire-offering rite is proclaimed.

Then, one who knows the mantra of great proliferation — by whichever means it is accomplished upon the earth — through a thousand great aeons, or likewise through a thousand aeons,

The mantra-holder, unimpaired, pervades and moves through all — traversing beings just as they are, just as they proceed. Day by day, the practitioner makes offering with five full-pour oblations, ever unceasing. Kings and their realms come under sway. With ten oblations, the sovereign of men, the king, together with all his forces in their might — all of these are swiftly brought under sway. With oneself as the nature of all wealth, all thirty lands, and the seven continents as well come under sway, touching the shores of the seven oceans. The wealth-land is of the nature of gold. Through thirty-five fire-oblations, the asuras of the seven underworld regions, together with their consorts, are swiftly brought under the practitioner's sway. Thus is proclaimed the great attainment of yoga by the heroes and lords of power. Then one offers full-pour oblations of flesh, or else of great flesh. Having mixed these with wine, one performs the fire-oblation into a single lotus. The mantra-holder will obtain a realm — this is measured at three hundred. Through fire-oblations of three hundred thousand, all of Jambudvīpa is obtained. Through five hundred thousand full-pour oblations, one comes to enjoy all seven continents. Reveling in attainment, the sovereign of Victors — for as long as the essence of awakening expands — abides in the rite as it is ever proclaimed. Even those of lesser fortune will attain accomplishment. Thus, the fire-oblation as here proclaimed is the great essence of mantra and tantra.

This concludes the twentieth chapter, entitled "The Chapter on the Fire-Oblation Rite of the Wheel-Turning King of the Seven Continents," from the glorious Arising of Heruka.

Then, for the rites of fierce action — if one desires, one resorts to the heroes. With poisoned blood, hot butter, and human bones, one performs the fire-oblation. One fully kindles a fire of thorns. Likewise one uses fruit with its husks still on. With anger swelling and hair disheveled, naked, face turned to the south, the mantra-holder dons black garments. At midday, into the fire, one performs the fire-oblation of fierce action. With one-pointed mind fixed on the wrathful fire — it may also be done at nightfall. The mantra is joined with the name of the target, its power is released, and it swiftly summons. A mighty one along with his forces is slain by fierce action. That messenger — the yoga-master himself — there is no doubt he will succeed. This is the rite of slaying; afterward, one requests the deity's forgiveness. With milk, bilva fruit, honey, butter, and sesame, one performs the full-pour oblation. Thus one recites this mantra again and again, thoroughly, with respect for the heroes. Then the rite of expulsion is fully explained. On another day, beginning the rite, one performs the fire-oblation with crow feathers. With wood of great fragrance and broad leaves, and with the wood of flesh-eating trees, one kindles the fire, gazes in the direction of the wind, and performs the expulsion.

Remaining in oneself, within seven days, without doubt, the enemy is expelled — this is to be explained. The mantra-holder, having properly combined neem leaves and shed snakeskin, kindles the maddening fire of crow and owl nests, and inserts into it more than one hundred and eight. All fears are completely dispelled, and friends and companions are driven away. For the purpose of summoning, one performs the fire-oblation and meditates thus on the mark through the night. One fully kindles the acacia fire and performs the fire-oblation at the three times. One takes the target's name once; one applies the mantra to it. The mantra-holder always performs the fire-oblation — it is certain that all will be summoned. The mantra-holder performs the fire-oblation in the evening, desiring it with the messenger accompanying. By this, everything will be accomplished. By following the mudrā, the accomplishment of joining with the mudrā is achieved. One always overpowers kings and lords, and truly surpasses buddhas of other realms. The great form of gnosis in the great yoga — taking the form of one's desire as butter — great goddesses, asuras, nāga women, and daughters of nāgas at will, rākṣasīs and nearby rākṣasīs, gandharvas and yakṣa women, and all humans — in every respect, the three worlds are brought under sway.

Having perfectly joined the sixty-four, the practitioner strives at the yoga mudrā. Food, drink, gain, and fear — all of these one relinquishes entirely. That suchness is the ultimate wisdom; that suchness is the ultimate rank; that suchness is buddhahood itself; that suchness is ultimate bliss. One does not speak of it as existing elsewhere. This is the practice of the sacred pledge. Always accompanied by the non-dual mudrā, it increases greatly through veneration of the messenger. Through the practitioner's mere act of worship, all accomplishments are fully achieved. The messenger is not to be disdained — through the messenger the practitioner summons everything. Neither the spine nor the lower body, nor one's wealth, will be tainted by wrongdoing. Through the messenger, accomplishments are born together; the secret worship increases greatly. The yoga must not be separated from its joining — these are the mantras that were spoken.

This concludes the twenty-first chapter of the Glorious Herukas Arising: the chapter on the fire-oblation ritual of the four enlightened activities.

Then, once again, the great method of accomplishing the great vetāla is to be properly explained. In the great yoga of the glorious blood-drinking Heruka, who dwells throughout all the wheels, one pours human fat and that one's flesh — one hundred and eight oblation-pourings are to be made. There Vajravārāhī bestows her grace, surrounded by a retinue of ḍākinīs. Fully filled with corpse-raising rākṣasas, the blazing of what is burned instills terror. Jackals of various kinds roar loudly, surrounding and crying out in terror. The rākṣasas spread themselves about and make threatening gestures; with terrifying voices they cause dread. Seeing this, one must not be afraid — one should assume the pride of the mantra of the body. One proclaims: "Excellent, great hero!" With oneself as the Vajrasattva in conduct, whatever the practitioner desires in mind — one bestows upon that one the supreme hundredfold — then the hero proceeds to that place, surrounded by yoginīs. From that moment on, one moves through the three worlds. One takes birth in a divine body — the form of great splendor, of auspicious and desirable appearance — ever moving through all of space alongside all the Tathāgatas. Illness and death are utterly abandoned, and one moves through all places. Of all these activities, the supreme and most excellent are declared by the yoginīs and heroes. One achieves victory over the place. Then, having expanded the great glorious activity, as the great identity of Vajrasattva, one attains the rank of Vajrasattva, and that one's activity is perfectly accomplished. For one who recites without ceasing, without tantra, without conduct, without fasting — having accomplished everything through the mind — one will become a great bodhisattva.

This concludes the twenty-second chapter of the Glorious Herukas Arising: the chapter on the ritual method for accomplishing the great vetāla.

Then the summoning is to be explained — briefly, not at length. Through one's own identity as the blood-drinking yogi, it will be accomplished, without doubt. A single skull-fragment, free of all flaw and beautiful — on it one draws the body of the one to be accomplished. Likewise, on fifty petals, one writes the mantra and the name together, pleasing it with great blood, writing inside with a golden pen. The mantra is written with civet-musk ink. Above, the wheel is closed and sealed. One reverses the essence-mantra and undertakes the accomplishment. Reciting the mantra, one causes it to enter. The mantra-holder abides until midnight; then one takes up a single petal correctly. With the pride of the body's mantra, one performs a fire-oblation of one hundred petals. Whatever one desires in mind — through the fire-oblation, the gnosis of the messenger, the particular offering of the tormā, and through the yoga of non-dual gnosis — one contemplates the binding of the mudrā. The one to be accomplished will thereby be summoned. A king's daughter, the finest of women, along with wheel-turning rulers — one need not seek elsewhere. These accomplishments are to be kept supremely secret. The supreme yoga is to be accomplished directly.

One delights those before one through the supreme method. Alternatively, for the highest and most excellent of rites, the practitioner makes images of the bodies of those to be accomplished from the substance of red sandalwood. These are clearly inscribed with one's own blood and civet-musk, then placed upon the heart. One anoints the body with the three heating substances. With a copper needle one pierces the heart, the navel, and the secret place — the three locations — hollowing them out. At the hour of midnight one recites the heart mantra in reverse. Whoever one desires will thereby be summoned. One burns in a fire of acacia wood for as long as that takes. By recollecting the mantra with mindfulness, the one to be accomplished will quickly come.

In that place, buddhas, worldly beings, and bodhisattvas (Skt. vajrasattvas) too will come by the force of the wind. By merely recollecting these mantras, the three worlds will come under one's control. Even birds of the sky will fall to the ground. Trees too will bow in reverence. Water will be reversed from its current. Machines, great elephants, horses, snakes, monkeys, and the waves of the ocean will all be bound. Just as one walks on dry land, so shall one walk upon water.

With a golden stylus one draws the sacred feminine symbol. Upon it one places the left hand and recites one hundred and eight times. Whatever person's name one takes — that one will come immediately.

Remaining on one's own bed, one grasps one's own emblem with the left hand. Reciting that person's name one hundred and eight times, that one will come immediately. The white buddha likewise will come with intense longing.

The glorious Vajravārāhī (Skt. Vajravārāhī — the Vajra Sow, a tantric deity), by being merely recollected, brings terror. By reciting and applying with affection, she deludes all knowledge-holders. Through one who applies the knowledge-holder with proficiency, the three worlds are to be thrown into confusion. These knowledge-holders, so called — called the glorious Sow — these distinctions of deluding: they bring the three realms under control.

By reading and teaching these, one accomplishes attainments and the like. She who performs all attainments is terrifying. To friends, daughters, and those of mingled lineage, this mantra should not be recited. Whatever one has done may become undone — upon seeing the practitioner, one will certainly fall. One will begin to discharge from a woman's threshold, and will perpetually be stricken with shame. One will be without clothing, with hair loose, with breasts exposed, one's own being at the mercy of another. One will laugh at every touch upon the body, and will become equal to a Tathāgata.

This is the twenty-third chapter from the glorious Śrī Heruka's manifest arising, entitled "The Ritual of Summoning with the Root Mantra of the Glorious Vajravārāhī."

Then, through thorough striving, one perfectly accomplishes the great seal. Through this, by mere consciousness alone, the practitioner will attain accomplishment. Through the mudrā of the Gnashing Teeth Mother, the practitioner, in the manner of desire, moves surely across all the grounds. Gods, demigods (asuras), and humans — all of these are thrown into confusion, and through this the practitioner supremely bestows the attainment of desire.

Without ascetic conduct, without fasting, without meditative concentration — by mere recollection alone, the three worlds will come under one's control.

Whoever sees the rank of rebirth, and arranges seeds upon the body, will be overcome by terror and fear, will faint, will be thoroughly bewildered and smiling. Those persons intoxicated with desire, having become women themselves — upon being seen by the practitioner, will rejoice. The mind goes into thorough intoxication.

This knowledge-holder so called arises definitively from the glorious Vajravārāhī and confuses all sentient beings. The self-arisen buddha has declared: through that varied knowledge-holder, reciting and accomplishing just once, one will be seen by worldly people as a Tathāgata. One summons with the knowledge-holder, and then comes — immediately falling into a swoon, and — falling and dying will occur. Take up properly the petal that has been declared. I shall draw the wheel itself perfectly. With a quill of crow's feather, draw it correctly with the water of the eye. By whoever scatters it with the wind, recite the essence reversed. Above, the wheel of wind revolves — Śakra (Indra, king of the gods) himself will be terrified. It is forceful action against enemies.

This concludes the twenty-fourth chapter of the glorious Śrī Heruka, called "The Ritual Chapter on the Summoning and Dispersing through the Reversed Heart-Essence of Vajravārāhī."

Then the signs that become the marks of the ḍākinīs: "Protaṅg" is a mudrā. The second, "Pratiprotāṅg," means bliss or is to be called thus — it also becomes a mudrā, and is the sign of the great hero. "Gamin" means going. "Āgama" means coming. "Dehi" means drinking beer. "Gṛhaṃ" means staying. "Cāruka" means there is no feast. "Brūcanaṃ" means torma (ritual cake). "Cāruka" means this house. "Na" means good. "Putaka" means torma. "Bunjanti" means altogether beautiful. "Cāraka" means going equally together, as it is declared. "Smaraṇama" means destroyed by speech. "Katyā" means girl. "Ḍaha" means making open. "Ghādha" means covered. "Svāraśa" means left side. "Etatta" means food and provisions. "Bālanikā" means samaya (sacred pledge). "Sirā" means offering. "Ālikam" will be spoken as "declared truly." "Lālā" will be spoken as "angry." "Sāsravaṇam" is declared as ear. "Sata" will be understood as life. "Śāstrī" is declared as wife. "Bhagī" will be expressed as meaning union with a girl. "Aśvatām" means a woman's breast. "Bālaṭaka" means a man. "Bālahaka" means washing them. "Kānatā" means mother. "Tālikā" means ḍākinī. "Kanyā" means a man of desire. "Mera" means existence. "Vāsaka" means maṇḍala. "Naraka" means charnel ground. "Kakhī" means door. "Śab" means brahmin. "Vīradhī" means the warrior caste (kṣatriya). "Cāradhī" means the lord's caste (rājanya). "Kura" means the common people's caste. "Antaṣṭhaṃ" means caṇḍālī (inner heat). "Gṛhe" means cattle. "Hihi" means the feast of killing. "Ḍākī" means assembled. "Udakaṃ" means the moon's drink. "Gṛhṇa" means the mudrās. "Jihvā" means taste. "Touching the teeth" means "hungry." "Antraṃ" means full, satisfied. "Gandhavāsi" means dwelling. "Vimala" means the dwelling of the great one. "Kirṇa" means flower. "Rgodpa" means spoken as angry. "Laṃpodar" will be spoken as "so." "Mukha" means one who dyes. "Jihvā" is declared as fearlessness. "Adana" means a garland of teeth. "Dhāja" means feast-song. "Cala" means wind. "Paśu" means wild animal. "Māsayanti" means maṇḍala. "Saṃ" means crossroads. "Gota" means blood. "Mahāṣabasā" means the great unchanging one. "Ahi" means the great lord. "Siddha" means enumeration. "Touching the chin means hungry." "Touching the teeth means satisfied." "Āḍhya" is declared as poor. "Touching the secret place means coupling." "Touching the thigh means do it." "Looking downward means absent." "Upward" means thus. These are the signs of the ḍākinīs.

This concludes the twenty-fifth chapter of the glorious Śrī Heruka, called "The Ritual Chapter of the Secret Drum."

Then the particular offerings, arising from the left, are to be performed. Knowing the ritual, the response of the hand arises from the heroic yoginī. "Sa" is explained as eye.

The water element is to be spoken of as Māmakī.

The white-robed one and Tārā dwell, respectively, in fire and in wind.

The one who makes open is emptiness itself,
and likewise the perfection gone beyond.

The forefinger is the lady of the iron hook.

The thumb is to be spoken of as Māmakī.

The middle finger is to be spoken of as the white-robed one.

The ring finger is assigned to Tārā.

The nameless finger is the perfection gone beyond.

The heroic yogin is seen at the center.

All the yoginīs of the place and so forth are requested to depart to the rear.

Such is the particular left-side conduct.

The great-natured disciples are:

Vajrasattva with great skillful means,
and the Tathāgata Vairocana as the second;

the third is Padma, the lord of dance;

the fourth is spoken of as Heruka;

the fifth is Ākāśagarbha;

and the sixth is Hayagrīva.

Likewise, the supreme vajra of the wrathful ones —
one should look to the place of the wheel.

For accomplishing all activities,
the mantra combined with the recitation of one's own name, together with the syllables Hūṃ Hūṃ Phaṭ, is to be applied.

Beginning from the direction of Yama, lord of death, up until the point of departure from truth —
these left-side conducts are desired.

The ḍākinīs remain in equipoise.

These have their own family,
mudrā, and the classification of color.

The vidyā syllable of the family:

because one thereby becomes of that family,
one is bound by one's own mudrā.
Speech declares one's own family.
Whatever woman moves to the left — the ḍākinī is always to the left.
Speech is to be spoken in a grandly expansive manner.
Look at everything with the leftward gaze.
Speak joyfully to the women —
this is called the sacred commitment (samaya).
Make supplication to the women.
Utter clearly the seed syllable of the family.
Do not abandon the activity of the family.
Do not abandon the recitation of one's own treatise.
Recite the vidyā of one's own family.
Likewise demonstrate the sacred commitment.

Whatever gesture one makes is always to be made with the left.
Accord with the women —
by this, certainty and truth will arise.
With the big toe of the left foot, scratch the earth and draw a line.
The left hand, toward one's own side, draws along the crown of the head.
By this, one recalls one's own vidyā —
it is of benefit to the body of the practitioner.
Touching the nose with the palm and the back of the hand, looking sideways, reciting mantra, and once looking at the vidyā —
the yoginī departs in ease.

The ḍākinīs of one whose sacred commitment is firm are hard to find;
so too with the yoginīs.
The five nectars become true.
All accomplishments are made beautiful.
The family of the ḍākinīs,
and here the signs of the heroes and others:

a skull bowl, a diadem, fangs,
a wheel, a victory banner, a sword — these eight, focused as one, are declared.
The family mudrā of the ḍākinī,
the practice of the hero, is supremely renowned.
It truly arises from the family of the glorious Vajravārāhī.
The supreme lord of great yoga — whoever always craves flesh, with the ḍākinī's pride of skillful means, inexhaustible and without distinction, arises in the family of the Tathāgata, without fear and without shame, never with regret at any time, desiring to make offering.
The practitioner should on no account reveal the signs to others.
The glorious blood-drinker manifestly arises.
Whoever reads this accomplishes it.
For the practitioner, without hardship,
one will travel beneath the earth.
Benefit and harm to sentient beings, arising for men in every land — just as the progressive order of pacifying and enriching.

This concludes the twenty-sixth chapter of the glorious Śrī Heruka, called "The Ritual Chapter of the Hand Signs, the Signs of the Yoginī, and the Signs of the Mudrā."

Then what is to be correctly explained:
the granting of direct accomplishment —
by merely writing it down, even Vajrasattva would be destroyed.
From the flow of the corpse and of the queen —
With excellence and diligence, receive it perfectly:
the fourteen, and the eight of the dark one.
Through the charcoal of the cremation-pit opening, all is to be fully infused with the mantra of the four-faced vajra.

The practitioner, wherever the place may be,
shall recite it seven times, then engrave and insert it.

Within seven days, it will be made certain.

One will travel to the realm of Yama, the Lord of Death.

Likewise, through the power of knowledge,

what is openly adorned upon the body — that too, through the yoga of the mind, will die through the rite of fierce action.

Thus, one possessed of a perfect ritual will accomplish all activities.

If one takes up the mantra by oneself alone,

then even through a hundred million aeons

one will not arrive at accomplishment.

The essential summaries, the binding of the supreme and first wheel of glory,

Vajrabhairava and the rest —

the oral instructions approached thereby dwell within the center of the body.

The wisdom of Vajra Heruka (the Vajra Blood-Drinker):

if the practitioner does not know it, then even if one maintains conduct for a very long time, there will be no accomplishment from that.

Here, know the supreme activity.

What need is there for other expanded mantras?

All of these are comprehensively gathered here.

With supreme diligence, take this up here.

Whatever the practitioner begins to meditate upon and recite, through each and every one of these

the lord of the yoga will attain the fruit of whatever is desired.

Just as a jewel and its owner take hold of form by depending on substance, so the glorious King of Blood-Drinkers becomes the supreme, perfect meditative concentration.

Whatever objects

humans direct the mind to properly,

one proceeds according to the intrinsic nature of each,

like a jewel that takes on various forms.
What the young practitioner of yoga desires, will not be accomplished through even a hundred million aeons.
In the accomplishment through the kriyā tantra,
the hero conceals the supreme connection.
As long as the essential point flourishes,
each and every one of those becomes an affliction.

This concludes the twenty-seventh chapter of the glorious Śrī Heruka Abhidvoda, called "The Ritual Chapter of Inner Meditative Concentration, Recitation, and the Purification of the Rite."

Then the mantra is supremely secret, known to be so.
Know the union; begin the yoga itself.
All beings are pervaded by delusion.
Through practice on the path of kriyā, even through a hundred billion aeons, there is no fruit to be attained from that.

All these mantras
have been concealed by the heroes.
Then the one who knows yoga, through mantras — not one syllable, not a single letter, left out — having concealed them, again overcomes all through the power of diligence.
Having gathered the glorious Blood-Drinkers together, the great master of the self will swiftly produce accomplishment.

Thus the signs are revealed.
The practitioner who is joined with the mudrā will accomplish from the state free from affliction.
One without sacred commitment who reads this,
and whoever always listens to it,
is destroyed by one of evil nature.
The yogin goes onto the path of lower rebirths.
Bearing in mind left-handed conduct in the world, visualize at all times from the left-handed mantra.
Let everything be done with the left.
All accomplishments are perfectly bestowed.

The yogin conceals the wisdom and enters into the treatise of kriyā.
With supreme diligence, the practitioner will accomplish through each of those.

This concludes the twenty-eighth chapter of the glorious Śrī Heruka Abhidvoda, called "The Ritual Chapter of Concealed Mantras and the Guarding of Sacred Commitments."

Then the four secret places are summarized and explained perfectly.
Dried cattle dung,
and likewise the remaining dried skull,
the mountain of skulls from the four cremation grounds,
and the fourth, the great elements.
Half of a hundred thousand, diminished by one hundred:
maṇḍalas are to be erected upon the top of the bindu at the three boundaries.
The fourth boundary is applied supremely.
At the end of the hundred thousand, add half of twenty-four.
Resting evenly upon the two truths, constantly make sixty-four offerings.

All desired aims will be fulfilled.
Upon the worldly sovereign's flat board, the supreme one who practices as a human equal — this is the very self that purifies all wrongdoing.

In this world and in the next, buddhahood is seen in an instant.
The two Haṃs at the outset are the sovereign lord, and the two Haṃs of the four are the wrathful one.
Sārasa birds and geese, karaṇa birds, cranes,
storks and water-fowl —
these are proclaimed as the great mantra birds.
The torma of the ḍākinī is to be used,
and siddhis are to be accomplished in the maṇḍala.
When the mantra practitioner recites it just once,

an embodied person will come swiftly, being drawn in and brought under one's power.
For as long as one lives, surrounded by a thousand women,
the practitioner will revel upon the earth.

The glorious Vajravārāhī is drawn in wheat flour and camphor, and is to be worn constantly upon the crown of the practitioner.
Everyone who sees it is like one who drinks blood.

Having fully donned red garments, when the practitioner recites the mantra directly at night over water and then blows upon a tree, flowers fall down.
When a man places his hand upon a woman's shoulder and recites, Vajravārāhī will be brought under his power.
Reciting over the mayberry tree twenty times and then rubbing it on the feet will subdue the head.

Reciting over saffron twenty times, applying it fully as a bindu to whoever one does this — all people will come to love that person.

When entering among the royal family, one will come to be of great distinction.

Recite over eye-salve eight hundred times and apply it to the eyes: one will become invisible.
Recite over white mustard seeds seven times and blow it upon a person: that person will be petrified like wood.
Through the mind's recitation, all are liberated.
When one recites fully over water and blows upon it, blood will flow.

By this mantra of the practitioner, perform the feast-work, the feast of food:
in all ways, everywhere, and in every direction,
the yoginīs will be delighted.

When one recites fully over ash and blows it upon another's body, that person will become dazed.

When one recites over a garment eight hundred times and ties a knot, one will gain very many garments.

In the same way, wealth, garments, and many other things such as drink will become abundant.

When one recites over water and pours it into another water source, that water will dry up.

When one recites fully over ash and blows it into yogurt, it will turn to blood.

Through mental recitation, all are liberated.

When one recites fully over cremation-ground ash eight hundred times and fashions it into a bindu, one will become invisible.

When one recites fully over butter and, having pleased it, touches a door, the door will open by itself.

When one recites fully over a vessel and fills it with water, one will become unseen.

Through the mind's recitation, all are liberated.

Having recited fully over an iron phurba (ritual dagger), and having cut from a milkwood tree and fashioned a stirring stick, one recites the person's name together with the mantra eight hundred times and burns it.

Then, having taken that ash and rubbed it on a man, he will become a woman.

When one recites fully over sandalwood and blows upon something, it will be destroyed.

When one recites fully over salt and a man gives it to a woman, she will be brought under his power.

When one recites fully over flowers and blows upon a person's body, that person will go mad.

When one recites fully over ash and fashions a bindu, one will be deprived of one's garments.

Through the mind's recitation, all are liberated.

When one takes dust from the left footprint of whatever man or woman it may be, binds it in a garment, writes down that person's name, and conceals it, that person will be bound.

When one recites fully over a thread, ties three knots, recites it seven times aloud, and places it in the midst of an enemy's household, it will become a snake, and when that snake bites, it can kill a person.

When one recites over it again eight hundred times, the person will live.

When one recites fully over a flower and holds it to one's crown, one will become invisible. And even while invisible, all women will venerate one. When one recites fully over a flower and scatters it, one will remain right there in that place. Through the mind's recitation, all are liberated.

When one recites fully over a lump of clay and holds it to one's crown, one's crown will become unseen. Through the mind's recitation, all are liberated.

When one recites fully over the water of a hero and rubs it in, one will fall down. Through the mind's recitation, all are liberated.

When one exchanges and anoints with a mudrā, one's form will be entirely transformed.

When one continually recites fully over jātī and campaka flowers, blended with gandhika, a great fragrance will be summoned. That even ale will turn into a great perfume is beyond doubt.

This concludes the twenty-ninth chapter of the ritual of the heart-mantra of glorious Vajravārāhī, from the Glorious Emergence of the Blood-Drinker.

Then, gathered at the pleasing feast of all secrets, those who truly know — the yogins of nondual wisdom — accomplish it through the varied feast of flesh and ale.
Through the enjoyment of the fortunate and beloved,
this very life is fulfilled as supreme.

One enters the body of a man or woman and gathers precious things.
Therefore, know the unsurpassed Three Jewels, and accomplishment will come.

With a single pillar, nine doors, three threads, and the deities — through the yoga of nonduality, all are fully accomplished — of this there is no doubt.

When one recites fully over water and pours it into a vessel of moonlight, it will turn to fire. Through the mind's recitation, all are liberated.

The one who accomplishes all actions then takes mountain water, and when one makes use of red sandalwood for six months,
all illness is completely dispelled,
one lives for one thousand years, and grey hair and wrinkles are abandoned.

Taking black seeds, the mantra-holder pours them into the nostrils of all beings, and when the yogin recites, wrinkles, grey hair, and tears cannot take hold. Deterioration of life and misfortune are completely dispelled. All illness is entirely cleared away, and one will live for one thousand years.

The one who accomplishes all aims, endowed with the perfect ritual in this way, through the bodily form of the Blessed Lady,
even without recitation and with vow released, will attain the supreme accomplishment.

The conduct of the guru is equal to that of a buddha, possessed of diligence, surpassing the other shore.
In the triangular maṇḍala,
if the king performs worship there,
for the sake of holding sentient beings,
I dwell there always,
and with naturally arising flowers and the like,
one must always make offering to myself.

A hero accomplishes it in one month.
Just as the intrinsic nature is, so it becomes.
That very supreme grace of her —
the yoginī of Vajravārāhī, the sovereign of great yoga —
a wife will become without joy.

When one recites the mantra fully through the mind,
through the yoga of nondual wisdom,
all sentient beings will come under one's sway,
and all attainments — of this there is no doubt.

This concludes the thirtieth chapter on the increase of life for the yoginīs and the ritual of offering, from the Glorious Emergence of the Blood-Drinker.

Then, gold and the like are the supreme means of summoning all.
The mantras are entirely concealed — a yogin of a single tantra, endowed with yoga, goes to the house of the lord of wealth.

Over a golden liquid seven times
one recites fully,
then scatters it at whatever house,
and with the remainder consecrates oneself.
Within seven days, gold is summoned.

In a field of one thousand leagues,
if one makes a bindu, the desired thing is summoned.

By water one is again released.

Over a khaṭvāṅga one recites the mantra seven times, and if one sits upon it, one will travel a hundred leagues there and back.

Over the ashes of a charnel ground one recites seven times, and whoever is sprinkled with them comes under one's power. One who is sealed with the syllable PHAṬ becomes rigid and immobile.

Then, if one recites according to the mind's desire the heart-mantra of the Blessed One, the Lady Glorious Vajravārāhī, all one's desires will be fulfilled just as one has imagined them. By performing a fire offering of one hundred thousand times in seven days, prosperity will come. Gifts will be bestowed upon those of noble lineage.

Taking one sraṅga of marking-nut wood, at midnight on the fourteenth of the dark fortnight, one makes an offering, kindles a great lamp, and presents the torma-offering and the divine barley-cake. After reciting eight hundred times, if one applies the colloquium (aṅjana) as an eye-ointment, one becomes invisible. One will travel there and back over a thousand leagues.

Then, if one makes a fire offering of a thousand oleander flowers, the goddess will abide in the sky, and all women will come under one's power.

Entering into water, one recites over butter and honey eight thousand times, and as long as one then continues the fire offering for as long as one desires, all one's wishes will be accomplished.

For one who is certainly harassed by thieves or by royalty, Vajrasattva recites mentally, and by the vajra one will certainly be secured.

This concludes the thirty-first chapter, entitled "The Ritual of All Activities of the Six-Syllable Mantra of Vajravārāhī," from the Glorious Emergence of the Blood-Drinker.

Then, all the great secrets are the complete transformation of form.
The secret in all the tantras — here the secret activities are taught.

One makes a rope from the hair of a bull and recites seven times, and whoever is bound around the neck by it will become a bull. Likewise, whatever sentient being is bound around the neck by it will become similar to that. One recites over green wood and scatters it at the house of the owner of that wood, and with the remainder consecrates oneself with empowerment. Within seven days, all that owner's green wood and all other wealth will be summoned.

One makes sandals from wood of the charnel ground, recites over them, and if one stands upon them, one will travel wherever one wishes and return again.

In the heart-syllable of the Blessed One, the sixth — reciting along with the dust of footprints and ashes — one recites seven times, and whoever is smeared with it will be sealed and bound. By the mind one will be released.

Reciting the mantra and binding it to the crown of one's head, one will be unseen by anyone. One will travel wherever one wishes.

Looking steadily at the sun and reciting the name together with the mantra, one will summon that person. Within one day, one up to one league will come under power. Within three days, up to ten leagues. Within seven days, one will summon up to twenty thousand leagues.

If one performs a fire offering of cat fur together with someone's name, that person will be seized by the great planetary spirit. Whoever is bound by that will become a cat.

Likewise, if one makes a cord from the sinew of a dog and a crow and recites over it, that person becomes a crow. Likewise, if one takes the sinew of whatever sentient being, recites over it, and binds it around the throat, that being will undoubtedly become similar to that animal. By untying it, one is released.

If one recites over a cord made from a man's hair seven times and binds it around the throat of a woman, she will become a man. Likewise, if one twists a cord from a woman's hair, recites over it seven times, and binds it around the throat of a man, he will become a woman.

If one recites over the hand seven times and then touches someone, there will be a transfer of the womb. By untying it, one is released.

Then the Blessed One spoke: if one recites with an inattentive mind, all classes of beings will come under one's power. If one recites continuously, the Glorious Blood-Drinker will be born.

From the Glorious Blood-Drinker's Manifest Arising, this very mantra for the complete transformation of all forms and the rite of subjugation: this is the chapter called "The Ritual of Complete Transformation of All Forms and Subjugation," the thirty-second.

Then the ritual of the peg was explained.

Taking up the perfect limbs of yogic practice resembling the curse of a brahmin, secret action will arise.

From the nature of a monkey's bone, make a peg six fingers long.

Praising it aloud seven times, conceal it at the door of whomever you wish and that person's lineage will be destroyed.

Conceal it at the place where cattle, elephants, horses, donkeys, female buffalo, and water buffaloes dwell, and they will all be ruined.

This has been taught in brief.

Whoever meditates on this constantly gazes without ever blinking.

Whoever recites it aimed at another — that person's eye will fall out.

Whoever recites another's name as the mantra — that person's blood will be drawn forth.

All things are in essence the Blessed Lady.
Using the supreme vidyā (mantra-wisdom),
all actions are to be performed.

Just as one desires: the Glorious Blood-Drinker, the heart-essence of Vajravārāhī, and likewise the nearby heart-essence.

From the Glorious Blood-Drinker's Manifest Arising, this is the chapter called "The Ritual of Action," the thirty-third.

Then what is truly to be taught:
The yoginīs are supremely beautiful.
The secret guru's peerless mantra, hard to obtain even by the gods,
is the heart-essence of all goddesses and accomplishes every desired aim.
I have fully proclaimed the syllable BHA.
OM is to be called the seed syllable.
Just as the syllable E, as a seed, is divided by the third syllable born of fire, add HŪṀ and PHAṬ at the end — these are the six-syllable mantra.
This has been taught in brief.

Whoever meditates on this constantly
is one endowed with the fruit of yogic accomplishment (siddhi).
For such a practitioner, beautiful women will always come to him.
Becoming intoxicated with desire,
they flow forth in every variety, their minds delighted and aroused by longing —
all of them will come.
If one recites continuously,
women both old and young will come under one's power.
One bestows blessing upon them.
They will enter one's home,
and making use of this examining practice
as one desires, one will perform all actions.

Recite over a cord at the moment of night-fall, and the practitioner, entering deep meditative equipoise, accomplishes a messenger-spirit. The glorious power that enters into the palm of that messenger's hand cannot be seized by anyone. Enter an empty room, face west, sit upon a seat, draw a cloth covering over oneself, offer that being a feast of food and drink, make an offering with the five medicinal substances and incense, light a great butter-lamp, and recite one thousand times. Then all the yoginīs will come, enter the maṇḍala, and reveal to the practitioner everything of the past, present, and future. Offer the remainder of the flesh and food as a torma to the yoginīs. Recite over a bezoar eight hundred times and anoint the eyes with the collyrium, and one will become invisible.

One should never recite this to those who lack samaya. If one does, all the yoginīs will depart entirely.

Just as one makes offering to the Glorious Heruka, so should the master make offering with utmost effort. Having generated delight in accordance with the ritual, having delighted the Glorious Heruka, the yoginīs, being thus delighted, bestow the supreme. When the master is delighted, all are delighted — of this there is no doubt.

From the Glorious Blood-Drinker's Manifest Arising, this is the chapter called "The Ritual of Action for Gathering the Nearby Heart-Essence Mantra of the Glorious Vajravārāhī," the thirty-fourth.

Now what is truly to be taught — the supreme accomplishment of the great seal (mahāmudrā):
just as before, directly in front, whoever does this, swift accomplishment will come.

Receiving empowerment through the mind,
one abides in the great yoga.
All siddhis are indeed the seal;
the practitioner should make perfect offering.

The Glorious Heruka and the vajra ḍākinīs will come and bestow the supreme. To them one should present the argha water, plant both knees on the ground, press the palms together, and make offering with the best of practices. There is no doubt that they enter into the body of the practitioner.

The eyes of the hero are wide open;
he knows all things and does everything as the chief.
Thereupon the supreme practitioner goes everywhere throughout the three worlds.

These heroes are of great gnosis;
all duality is utterly abandoned.
Whoever, by mere consciousness alone, makes the earth and sea grow tense —
gods, asuras, and humans together will swiftly be brought under control.

Oṃ śrī herukāya vid mahā vidyārājāya dhīmahe svāhā.

By placing this, the king of mantras, upon the crown of the one to be accomplished, they will be stupefied. By fully recognizing these mantras, one will hold power over what is above. If one places this on the body of the waves of the ocean, of elephants, monkeys, machines, horses, and likewise soldiers, they will be stupefied. By means of such complete placement:

With the triangular maṇḍala perfectly present, even the Glorious Vajradhara will arrive in a single instant.

Place it precisely in the center of the mouth, likewise upon the tongue and the feet;
that one will swiftly be made virtuous.
Even the equanimity of Vajrasattva will, in an instant, be rendered speechless.

Seize the vidyā from the tip of the tongue — placing it here, accomplishment will come.
Place the king of mantras upon the heart:
it seizes the mind, without doubt.

From the soles of the feet to the crown of the head, arrange it in the form of the black one;
it will without doubt strip away all senses.
All these actions it will perform and supremely bestow the desired siddhis.

These were spoken by that hero:
difficult to find on the face of the earth as one desires.
One is oneself the wish-fulfilling jewel — this is the condensed and fully explained teaching.
There is nothing equal to this mantra,
there is nothing equal to this activity.
Without full knowledge,
not even the slightest action will succeed.
Fully recognize the king of mantras — it beautifies all siddhis.

Arrange it upon your own body;
the practitioner, by means of deep meditative equipoise, will bring under control whomever they gaze upon.

By the sovereignty of the one who accomplishes all,
through utter fury, one will slay.

Through disciplined and perfect fury,
from rivers and oceans,
from strife, from royal lineages, from thieves, from the terror of fire —
by this, all shall become as vajra-thunder.

Wherever it is correctly written,
the three worlds will be shaken,
and all siddhis will be attained.
For the supreme practitioner, through subjugation, summoning, and stupefaction, driving out and slaying those filled with hatred, wherever one writes and holds the name —
in all places, accomplishment will come.

Gods such as Vajrasattva and the rest —
by the skilled, and swiftly;
even by the unqualified, accomplishment is possible, if the practitioner applies utmost effort.
This will arise again and again, constantly.

From strife, enemies, and precipices, from thieves, tigers, elephants, lions, snakes, horses, and weapons, from the terrors of various planets and malign influences — in all these, one will be victorious.

If one desires freedom from dispute,
the mantra-wielder should write it out.

From the Glorious Blood-Drinker's Manifest Arising, this is the chapter on the ritual of nāga activity for accomplishing the great seal, the thirty-fifth.

Now the repulsion rite is fully explained.
Because the enemy is puffed up with power,
the skilled one writes with a crow's feather on a revolving petal turned upward.

With the reversed mantra-heart, complete and whole, one recites it one hundred times on the day of the elemental spirits.
From the petal — half and double — of the one that revolves and flies upward, the target will swiftly be driven away.

The chief, Vajrasattva, drives them out.

With the juice of neem leaves as the medium,
the name of the target, the pledge-syllable,
and the mantra are to be driven into the heart.

The fire offering is to be performed with sesame, reciting a full one hundred and eight times.

With the reversed mantra-heart,
at midday or midnight,
the messenger circles and the mantra is recited.
With a hundred and eight recitations of the heart-mantra, these are to be made to circle.

With eight hundred recitations of mind, enemies are to be inserted into the machine.

Bound with the noose of the mantra and beaten on the crown with a stick, Brahma, Indra, and the Fierce One, along with named enemies, are slain.

On the night of the half-moon,
one writes correctly on the crown of the target.

A vessel filled with blood — wherever that one hides it, blood will immediately ooze forth.

That one who discredits the mantra will die by that very means.

The enemy of the first machine of desire — this itself is the great emptiness, the beautiful one who accomplishes all siddhis.
This is what the Blood-Drinker declares.
In the beginning, the end, and the middle,
the skilled one knows how to move in the world.

From the Glorious Blood-Drinker's Manifest Arising, this is the chapter on the meditation ritual for all that is malicious, the thirty-sixth.

Now the bringing down of rain is explained.

The yogin who is a warrior of non-duality — by whom rain is swiftly brought down — the eight nāgas, without doubt:

Ananta, Varṣaṇa,

and likewise Sthāvira the Powerful,

Padma and Mahāpadma,

Śaṅkhaṇḍa and Kulika — these are to be named.

For each one, in each field,

the mantra and its own name are to be recited.

In the second of the sixth group, separation is made by the fifth vowel.

By the sixteenth, it is evenly sustained.

Examine the first, last, and middle in even conjunction.

These mantras are to be evenly joined.

The eight — Ananta and the rest — are, through the fear of the rivers flowing into the ocean, to be fashioned as effigies.

Seven neck-ornaments colored according to their direction, fully endowed by the mantra's invocation —
these are to be inserted into their hearts.

Arrange them on an eight-petalled lotus, place them there, and make offerings for seven days.

The whole perimeter is to be sealed with water.

If rain does not fall quickly, other rites are to be applied.

On charnel-ground cloth,

with poison, long pepper,

and the juice of neem leaves,

write these mantras correctly and insert them into a hollow reed and the like.

Wrap them in straw and burn them in fire —

rain will fall.

Alternatively, fashion an image of the nāga Varṣaṇa with nine heads, insert the text into its heart, and burn it. A great stream of rain will fall. It will spread throughout all of Jambudvīpa. The nāgas will obey the command of glorious Heruka, and nāgas will be pacified by nāgas.

Then, through glorious fire offerings,
the nine planetary spirits are pacified:
Red-Eye, Long-Tail, and the rest — apply these according to the mantra ritual.
The Sun and the Moon,
Red-Eye, the residual planet, likewise Thursday and Wednesday, and likewise Saturn, most excellent — Rāhu and Long-Tail are explained as equivalent.
The mantra that recites one's own name begins with the syllable Oṃ and ends with Svāhā joined to it.

Indra, Fire, and Yama,
and likewise the Lord of the Truthless Waters, the Wind-god and the yakṣa —
these are renowned as the Lords of Power.
Likewise the world-guardians,

one fully enters the path of preparation.
One's own emblem, mount, color,
the great lords who protect the world, the two wrathful ones, and the perfect —
these are the supports for the sādhana.

Through fire offerings over seven days,
the practitioner accomplishes whatever is desired.
With the mantra of the four-faced one,
the directions and the intermediate directions are proclaimed.
All the grains are mixed together and praised twenty thousand times;
the count is accomplished at the eighth and ninth.
These are worldly matters, and the practitioner, the yogin, moves about upon the surface of the earth.
The glorious blood-drinker transforms the world.
The supreme wisdom of omniscience —

the intrinsic nature of sentient beings is all the buddhas.
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss — mantra and mudrā are to be made equal.

By worshipping the glorious blood-drinker, and for the sake of the higher realms,
the attainment of pacification comes.
Always make sixty-four offerings.
Through the supreme union of the two faculties,
the ground of self-arising wisdom,
the supreme wisdom of omniscience —
from the glorious blood-drinker's manifest arising.

This is the chapter called "The Ritual Procedure for the Sādhana of Causing Rain to Fall, the Wandering Planets, and the Eight World-Protectors, as Arising from the Glorious Blood-Drinker," being the thirty-seventh chapter.

Then, the supreme sovereign of all messengers, found nowhere else —
with the HŪṂ syllable of the four faces, the activities are distinguished according to desire.

The bliss of gods and of humans, gathered into one and contemplated — even a sixteenth of that does not compare to the non-dual bliss of the blood-drinker.

Great garment and great flesh, great power and great honey — all arising from the charnel ground.
The supreme sovereign of this mudrā bestows attainments in all activities.

Visualize the enemy before you, bind the throat with a black noose,
and with desire strike with the club.
The mantra-practitioner meditates in accordance with the ritual;
fling the enemy to the south.

With pleasure of mind and downfall,
and repeatedly expelled,

and completely blocked at the navel — again and again he will fall unconscious.

At midday and at midnight, perform the fire offering with an effigy.
On the third day, draw it fully — he will die, and his head will fall.

By the mantra ritual, death is stabbed with fangs upon the ground.
With the mantra of the yoginī, attainment is bestowed on the yogin.
Through the essence, gathered into the person, and later, again there is a fall.

In the essence of the Great Seal (mahāmudrā), it is supremely renowned as "the crooked one."
The practitioner thus gathers all three worlds into this.

Then, the expulsion is to be explained.
With the pride and power of enemies, as the mantra-practitioner formerly declared, in accordance with the ritual — with the juice of nimba leaves and the particular features of crow feathers, the practitioner strives with supreme effort.
The wise one acts in one's own place.
That one is a wheel-turning sovereign on earth.

In seven days, the state of a god;
in a month, a worldly being;
in a year, a buddha, a bodhisattva;
by recollection, the common people.
In half a month, an asura;
rākṣasas and yakṣinīs,
nāgas and gandharvas,
and kiṃnaras and the like —
in their languages,
with these mantras and mudrās,
the practitioner finds them hard to encounter on earth.

This yoga is of great attainment;
among all yogas this is supreme.
This yoga is of great glory,
and is worshipped by the thirty gods.
There is nothing elsewhere like it —
a little ornate, expansive in its secrets, victorious over the three worlds.
The secret name and the ḍākinī — wherever even a little of this arises in the human world,
all of it faces south.

This is the chapter called "The Ritual Procedure of the Activity of Expulsion and Secret Mantra, as Arising from the Glorious Blood-Drinker," being the thirty-eighth chapter.

Then, what is to be truly explained —

The mantras of the six wheel-turners — one who knows the ritual procedure keeps the mantra secret.
The desired accomplishment (siddhi) will come.
The mind is made extremely pure.

Then the clay drum is to be bound.
In a state of perfect meditative equipoise,
the vowel letters are to be set out.
Nine squares are to be bound,
with forty-nine letters evenly distributed.
The intelligent one draws from that very place.

First, Vajrasattva and the rest —
the form of the clay drum is the great hero.
The face of the great hero is turned;
as is fitting, so it is done.
All is thoroughly pacified.

Having understood the division into groups,
the learned one draws from the last.
Taking forty-eight,
it is combined with the fifth vowel, becoming the first letter.

Then take forty-one,
it is combined with the fortieth.
It is known as the second.

Then take thirty-six,
combined with the third vowel,
it becomes the third letter.

The third of the heat letters, combined with the fifth vowel —
it becomes the fourth letter.

The sixth, the fifth,
with the very same fourth —
it becomes the fifth letter.
The great self-nature of Vajrasattva.

Likewise, take forty-nine,
combined with the fifth vowel,
and above joined with nāda.
It is declared as the sixth letter.
Om̐ is the first letter,
and Phaṭ is the last.
Vajrasattva is renowned.

Likewise, taking one less than fifty,
it is combined with the second vowel.
To the eighth group of Ya,
the son of fire is joined,
combined with the fourth vowel — this is the supreme second letter.
Above, it is joined with nāda.

For the twenty that are one less,
standing in the proper place through what generates birth, combined by a person with the third vowel,
it becomes the third letter.

Taking one less than fifty,
taking thirty-six correctly — it is declared as the fourth letter.
It is to be recited twice.

Likewise, forty-eight
are distinguished by form.
Taking the fifth precisely,
it is declared as the seventh letter.

The one who accomplishes all desired aims:
Om̐ is the first letter,
and Hūṃ Phaṭ is joined at the end.
It becomes Vairocana.
This one bestows all accomplishments.

The second vowel itself,
and the second of the semi-vowels (antarastha), combined with the thirteenth vowel —
it becomes the second letter.

Forty-four exactly,
combined with the third vowel,
it becomes the third letter.
Om̐ as the first letter, Svāhā at the end — it is Padmanartteśvara, the Lord of Dance of the Lotus.
These are said to be their own mantras.

Likewise, taking one less than fifty,
combined with the eleventh vowel letter,
the first letter is to be declared.
To the fourth vowel letter, joined with the eleventh vowel —
the second letter is to be declared.

To the second semi-vowel,
combined with the fifth vowel —
the Ra letter and the seventeenth, equally combined with the fifth,
is to be honored with the fifteenth.
Om̐ is the first letter,
and Hūṃ Hūṃ Phaṭ is the last.
All desired aims are accomplished.
The glorious Blood-Drinker, the great hero, the sovereign of yoga, lord of all.

Then taking the eighteenth,
to the first heat letter,
combined with the thirteenth vowel —
it is known as the second.
To the third semi-vowel,
it is combined with the thirteenth.
The second vowel itself —
the learned one declares it as the third.

Taking forty-two exactly, one less than fifty —
combined with the fifth vowel —
above it, Nāda is to be joined.
Om̐ is the first letter,
and Phaṭ is the last.
In just this way, without any doubt,
this has become the Vajra-Sun.
It bestows attainments and liberation.

The fortieth letter itself, that very one combined with a vowel letter and with the thirteenth — it is to be written as possessing two.
Yet there is not even a little awareness there.

One short of twenty,
and the fourth semi-vowel, fully endowed with the second vowel — likewise joined with the fifteenth, is spoken of as the fourth letter.

The second of the vowel letters, and likewise the sixteenth itself, together with the twenty-sixth hero — these are spoken of as the seventh letter.
Om̐ is the first letter,
and Hūṃ Phaṭ is joined at the end.
The great hero, Hayagrīva, is the sovereign of all attainments.

This is the chapter on the ritual of gathering the meditative concentrations and mantras of the six wheel-turners, from the Manifest Arising of the Glorious Blood-Drinker. Chapter thirty-nine.

Then the mantras of the true abode, the non-dual hero and the yoginī —
at the heart, head, crown, armor, eyes, and so forth —
these are to be placed upon Vajrasattva and the others, performing the ritual and guarding them carefully.
Placed at the heart as Vajrasattva, it bestows all attainments completely.
Vairocana is placed at the head.
In this way, endowed with distinctive qualities:
at the crown, the Lotus Lord of Dance;
at the shoulders, the Blood-Drinker is placed;
at the two eyes, the Vajra-Sun;
at all the limbs, Hayagrīva — in this way the armor is distributed.
This accomplishes all actions.

Placement at the hands is also to be performed.

The hand-signs are to be shown:
Vajrasattva resides at the thumb, likewise Vairocana at the index finger,
the middle finger is the Lotus Lord of Dance,
the ring finger is the Glorious Blood-Drinker, the little finger is the Vajra-Sun,
on the surface of the nails is the Supreme Horse, at the center of the palm is the Great Hero, and the non-dual Vajra Yoginī together with all the yoginīs — at the back.
These are all placed at the hand.
Being equally dense and uniform,
in just this way, in accord with the ritual,
the heroes and yoginīs are to be venerated.

Beginning from the direction of Yama, continuing until the departure from the sphere of truth, performed twice in each of the six times of day —

one venerates the vow of the ḍākinī net.
One should know the lunar date, the vowels, and the time.
Know how to perform the three-times in each of the four sessions.
Heruka is invited into the center of the maṇḍala, and having been invited, the offerings increase.
By always making offerings to the lord of yoga,
one will never become impoverished.

The ḍākinī, the Lāmā, the Duṃkyes, and the embodied one — these are the sisters of the heroes and accomplish every desired aim.

This is the chapter on the armor of the six heroes, the count of deities, and the ritual of hand-veneration, from the Manifest Arising of the Glorious Blood-Drinker. Chapter forty.

Then there is further to be explained:
in the yoga of the four times and the extremes, the secret of the secret offering is to be taught by the non-dual hero.

One fully endowed is not suitable here.
One possessing three is to be spoken of as a sister.
One possessing two is to be known as a daughter.
One in the strife age abides as a young wife's messenger.

Having thus understood the ritual accordingly,
one with merit will obtain the fruit of attainments.
Having meditated upon all the heroes in sequence,
the desired attainments are present.

The Great Vehicle of the Great Seal — the yoginīs bestow attainments.
There is no Great Seal other than this.
The practitioner applying all yogas — worldly and beyond the world — and moreover those who speak of the Veda, the investigator, the Sāṃkhya, and also those who speak like the Vaiśeṣika —
the universal worship of attainments offered to Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and the Great God (Śiva) — true attainment is gnosis itself, and is supreme above them all.

From the earth come the four precious things, and likewise that which is the supreme of the supreme.

The ḍākinī and the great vidyā, the glorious Blood-Drinker, king,
the great lord of vows,
and these yogas — the supreme among the knowing:
I have no love for the four Vedas.

Those who are devoted to me, I love.
To such a one I give, and then follow after.
Just as the self is worshipped everywhere,
all is without duality,
utterly and entirely accomplish the yoga.
The glorious Blood-Drinker, supreme hero — all that is beloved is gathered there.

By drinking the lunar draught, attainments arise.
The supreme rank of the permanent — the net of the ḍākinīs, bound together, is gathered from that which is equal to space.
Omniscient gnosis — that is its very nature.
"The glorious Blood-Drinker manifestly arises" —
this bestows the supreme attainment of liberation.

How is the glorious Blood-Drinker obtained?

Other qualities are cast aside like grass.

The eye rests upon the thumb.

The index finger speaks as a garland.

At the tip of the middle finger is Tārā.

On the ring finger dwells the Light-Maker.

The little finger is established as the perfection.

In the palm of the hand one joins them equally.

Requesting that they proceed to the back — just so, there is no doubt about it.

This concludes chapter forty-one from the Glorious Manifestation of the Blood-Drinker, called "The Chapter on the Yoga of the Ḍākinīs at the Four Limits of Time and the Ritual of Hand Gestures."

Then, furthermore, what is to be explained:
The practitioner of the seventh birth will swiftly accomplish through condensation.
Through mantra and yoga, with supreme effort,
from the nature that is imputed as white fruit,
the mantra-practitioner takes up truly the form of an animal, a jackal and the like.
Whatever the practitioner sees, in whatever form —
the image of that one is to be set.
The name is to be inserted within the mantra.
The body is anointed with red sandalwood.
One meditates in a state of perfect equipoise.
Whoever recites as much as possible in the evening, together with the particular offering of ointment — simply by eating that,
people will become bound by samaya.
With jackal flesh and beer,
make offering both outwardly and inwardly as the self.
From the fire oblation performed with jackal, all attainments reside therein.
Here one should perform the jackal fire oblation.
One will become like the god of wealth.
Then offer the torma.
All the dākinīs will be delighted.
As long as one proceeds to full perfection, accomplishment arises through its mantra.
Filled with the gathering of true investigation,
the four yogas and so forth, the mudrās, one's own color and the form of one's emblem —
the bestower of all attainments supreme.
Combined with the bindu and the nāda,
one abides in the great yoga.
Through the distinction of action, it is HŪṂ.
With effort one meditates upon liberation.
At the navel, heart, throat, and tip of the nose, the four forms of the syllable HŪṂ — pulsing, long, short,
and the cutting off — these are the distinctions:

By the pulsing one is liberated.
By the long one, full flourishing is proclaimed.
By the short one, one becomes invisible.
By the bound one, killing is performed.
At the navel, equal to the sound of a bell;
at the heart, resembling the sound of thunder;
at the throat, the sound of a bull;
at the tip of the nose, like the pulsing of a mustard seed.
The four HŪṂ syllables are a great king;
even the three worlds they accomplish.

Pūja, O Agora, Demākā, Otrikoka, Lahipre, Grisau, Sunasimaku.

The outer, inner, and self-nature — the yogin abides distinctly in the syllable PU and so forth.
Consciousness and gnosis are to be grasped.
With full effort, praise the guru.
Following the outer path one serves,
and the treatises too are long.
The yoginīs of the method's yoga — with effort one serves and honors the guru.
This is the summary of the defining marks of the treatise.
That very one is the hero who demonstrates suchness.
In an instant the yogins —
in an instant the mudrā is given.
Utterly and entirely it is a moment.
In a moment, know mantra and yoga.

This concludes, from the Glorious Manifestation of the Blood-Drinker, the chapter on what is to be accomplished at the seventh birth and —

This concludes the chapter on the rite of the four pure syllables of Hūṃ, the forty-second chapter.

Then the glorious great king and the heroes, wishing to bring benefit, placed their knees upon the ground and with their minds prostrated fully.
Wishing to bring benefit to sentient beings,
they requested the great secrets.

"Please, Blessed One, expound in full
the aspects of everything.
That which abides in place — have compassion for those that move and those that do not move.
Listen! As it is, expound the oral instructions.
Grasp the permanent as inconceivable.
However it was proclaimed before —
the self-nature of all always abides.
What is spoken of as the maṇḍala of the body, having come to be as the nine gates:
in the center of the navel is the great lotus, renowned as the primordial wisdom of omniscience.
In that place dwells the hero.
Having entirely abandoned partial and divisional aspects, all bodies are fully pervaded with love.
The body, free from stain and separation —
in some, it dwells in the domain of form;
in some, it dwells in the domain of the nose;
in some, it abides at the gate of the eye;
in some, it dwells at the gate of sound;
in some, it abides at the gate of excretion and urination;
in some, it is accompanied by mind and consciousness;
in some, it is craving, hunger, and thirst;
in some, it is wrathful, in some, it is peaceful;
in some, it has a face ravaged by hunger;
in some, it is the body of a supreme woman;
in some, it is killing and striking;
in some, it abides as one who speaks;
in some, it dwells among flowers and fruits;
in some, it sports and, from somewhere, enjoys pleasures;
in some, it fully abides among fragrances;
in some, it is the five great elements —
earth and water and fire,
and in some, by division of family:
it is the fierce one and the stout one;
in some, it is mother and it is sister;
in some, it is wife and it is daughter;

in some, it is Brahmā and Īśvara,
the sun and the one who steals,
in some, the moon and the stars;
in some, evening and daytime;
in some, it is the three realms;
in some, it is the king who exhausts all existence;
in some, taste and habitual tendencies subside;
partless and empty, nothing at all is manifest;
in some, it is the great female seer of awakening;
in some, it is the Victor over māra;
in some, it is the great wheel of Dharma;
likewise, in some, it is death and transmigration;
in some, it is the practice of austerities;
in some, it abides in the manner of a monk;
in some, it is the form of a child;
in some, it is old and bent;
in some, it is consumed by illness;
in some, it is vessel and essence;
in some, it is blue and it is red;
in some, it is white and it is yellow;
in some, it is the buddha Vairocana;
in some, it is the lamp and the white garment;
in some, it is Locanā and Mālikī;
in some, it becomes entirely peaceful;
in some, it goes into the womb of a bird, going through space itself;
in some, it is the pride of a great elephant;
in some, it becomes a prostitute;
in some, it appears in dreams;
in some, it abides in the state of sleep;
in some, it is wind and bile;
in some, it is the smell of blood and skin;
in some, it weeps and mourns;
in some, it devours human beings;
in some, it speaks for an aeon — how in every way is it distinguished?
Everything that the god spoke of for as long as he spoke —

all of that abides in the self-nature.
These heroes are the great secret, truly abiding outwardly and inwardly, pervading all, ever praised,
grasping existence and being without stain.
The yogin should meditate like this:
with non-dual primordial wisdom itself,
like unto that, one becomes empty.
Meditate fully upon the self-nature.
For that, there is no ascetic conduct to be described,
no mālā and no mantra,
no dhāraṇī and no fire-offering practice,
no activity of motionless armor,
no application of the hands in mudrā, no extending the left leg in bodily posture, and so forth.
The great hero grasps existence — this is the activity of the supreme self-arisen one.
One must not engage in negation;
the self-nature is to be honored with certainty.
Meditate upon the bindu in the center of the moon, adorned with half of a hundred, and contemplate finely in its center —
it is endowed with an unwaning bindu.
That very body will be separated —

There is nothing to meditate upon and nothing to think upon.

This concludes the chapter on the illusory display of all aspects arising from the glorious Blood-Drinker — the forty-third chapter.

Thus the ritual of illusion
and all aspects of what came before are abandoned.
One always dwells in the center of the heart —
this is the great secret.

At the root of the navel a lotus dwells,
endowed with filaments and radiant with light.
Its entire nature is like pure crystal, surrounded by the sixteen and so forth.

This is the union of the syllables — its nature is that of space conjoined.
In its very center is the great emptiness, which performs both expansion and contraction.

That by which all names are the intrinsic nature, that by which it is universally renowned —
the sun and moon are pure, shown as rising and setting.

Freed from every sin,
all merit utterly increases.

At the tip of the lotus's petal, a mustard-seed in size —
the entire nature of the moving and the unmoving — is held in perfect mental recitation;
external sounding of vowels is abandoned.

The wisdom of that is buddhahood —
by no other means does one become a buddha.

Always the bodhisattva knows the fundamental reality, unstained without need of ablution —
the Dharma of bliss is thus-gone, the nature of the saṃbhogakāya (enjoyment body).

Everything is seen in the form of fire —
this is the first mark.

Depicted as the second mark in the form of a firefly carrying flame — in the form of a very fine white particle, one sees the worlds in all ten directions.

The actions of expelling afflictions,
the characteristics of the yogin, and the enjoyment of the pleasures of the gods of desire — these are taught as the fourth vision.

The divine forms of the gods of the higher realms —
these are what is thought of as vision.

The sixth is the enjoyment of fearlessness.

The seventh is the dharmadhātu itself.

The eighth is said to be buddhahood itself in desire.

Through these, yogins attain the fruit.

One should contemplate extremely finely what is divided into a hundred parts of a hair-tip.
One should not fix the mind on emptiness and the like;
one should not look at form and the like.
Like a thing without dust and without seed —
it is without form, without defining mark.
Consciousness is not to be grasped as wisdom;
consciousness is the very intrinsic nature of that.

One attains the eight perfect superknowledges (abhiññā), omniscient, all-creating, supreme —
the wisdom body (jñānakāya) is stainless.
This will be attained in this very life.
One is endowed with splendor and power, showing beauty and excellent fortune.
The wish-fulfilling tree (kalpadruma) has truly arisen.

By constantly meditating and reciting, for as long as the body stirs and moves and the mouth speaks any word at all — all of that is mantra and mudrā.
The rank of the glorious Blood-Drinker is present, the four lotuses and the great wheel — likewise the foundation of all siddhis.
It has been excellently proclaimed by tens of millions of heroes and tens of millions of buddhas.

This concludes the chapter on the ritual of the certain teaching of the eight superknowledges that individually illuminate everything, arising from the glorious Blood-Drinker — the forty-fourth chapter.

Then, pacification through an image — this is taught here for the benefit of those with mind.
That by which this is swiftly accomplished is what pacifies the sick.
Men, women, kings, and children — let everyone know this ritual.

Flat boards, thrones, and such supports — mix rice and small legumes together, cook them thoroughly, offer them,
and then with fish, meat, and blood arrange the images accordingly.

A thread spun by a girl should be measured to the length of one's hair.
It should be activated by the syllables of mantra —
by syllables of six and twelve.

Single upper garments of great volume, various cloths and a supreme victory banner, incense, perfume, and flowers and so forth — these should be activated by secret mantra.

With the cloth of the great protection, make lower and upper garments.

However slight the patient's manner of conduct may be,
one should go to the charnel ground and escort them.
With various musical instruments and melodies, one should likewise conduct them in.

It should be placed upon an image.
Adorned with shoulder ornaments, bracelets, necklaces, and garments and the like,
the waist is bound with weapons,
and the hand holds a sword.

The crown of the head is bound, and armor is worn.
With compassion and such thoughts of benefit,
the glorious great blooddrinker, great yogin, adorned fully with the three armors, goes to the charnel ground, encircled by yoginīs and heroes.

The formations are made first.

Drawing the maṇḍala beautifully, one visualizes the mātṛs and the yoginīs and places them at the directions and the intermediate directions.
There the deities are properly established.
The image-body should be placed in the southern direction.

The mantra-practitioner should display the head.
One visualizes and accomplishes it just as it is beautiful.
All illnesses are fully liberated.
Remaining properly with the right leg extended,
one guards with the root mantra and the rest.
The mantra-practitioner faces east.
With the hand, the wisdom khaṭvāṅga — having strode over the shadow — should strike toward the direction of the navel.
Just as one incises to cause pain,
the illness given by the deity is pacified.
The sense faculties and so on are placed in the east,
to be summoned by mantra.
Just so, one is to insert slightly.
The master examines it beautifully:
a boy is liberated by a boy,
a girl is liberated by a girl.
All should be bathed and clean, beautiful and calm.
Afterward, the master is to be pleased.
Garments, ornaments, and the like should also be offered to all others.
Food and drink and such — with garments — are to be pacified by the great secret.

This is extracted from three hundred thousand verses of the Glorious Abhiniṣkramana of the Blooddrinker. It is the latter part of the sādhanā tantra of the Wisdom that Conquers All Others, the first to be victorious: the tantra known as Accomplishment through Recitation of the King of All Treatises, the Great Glorious Blooddrinker. The King of the Yoginī Tantra, the Glorious Abhiniṣkramana of the Blooddrinker, is complete.

Translated, edited, and definitively established by the great paṇḍita of India, Advayavajra, together with the Tibetan translator Chingyo Yönten Bar.

Translator's Notes

- The central portion of chapters two and three constitutes a technical Sanskrit phonological cipher used in esoteric mantra extraction. The text systematically references phonological classes drawn from the traditional Sanskrit varṇamālā: vowels (svara), palatal and other consonant classes, semi-vowels (antarastha), and spirants (uṣman). The "ta-class" and "pa-class" refer to the ta-varga and pa-varga of the Sanskrit consonantal table. The text instructs the practitioner to extract a mantra by selecting specific letters by their position within these classes (e.g., "the fifth of the fifth" means the fifth letter of the fifth consonantal class). I have rendered the Sanskrit grammatical terms antarastha and uṣman untranslated after their first glossed occurrence, as these are technical Sanskrit phonological categories that have no natural English equivalent and are used as proper class-names throughout. The passage breaks off mid-sentence in the source; the translation reflects this.

- This passage is a continuation of a highly technical phonological encoding text — a Sanskrit phoneme cipher embedded in Tibetan verse — associated with the Heruka Abhyudaya tantra. The terms "antarastha," "uṣman," and the numbered classes refer to Sanskrit phonological categories (semivowels, sibilants/aspirates, and the numbered positions within those groups), and "vowels" (dbyangs) likewise refer to Sanskrit vowel sequences. The text moves between this cipher and an actual mantra sequence in transliterated Sanskrit, then transitions to a new section — apparently instructions for constructing or identifying a mantra called "Victor of the Three Realms." The phrase rendered "the syllable dhya, the yoginī" reflects the Tibetan dhy a yig rnal 'byor ma, a characterization of the syllable dhya as a feminine tantric principle; this is preserved literally. The expression "incomplete twenty, lacking one" (gcig ma tshang ba'i nyi shu) most likely refers to the number nineteen in a cipher context. "Nāda" is left in Sanskrit as it is a technical phonological and tantric term for the resonance or nasalization mark placed above a syllable.

- This passage is a sustained cryptographic mantra-encoding text, giving instructions for constructing syllables and mantras by specifying consonant classes and vowels according to a traditional Sanskrit phonological grid. The "fourth class of uṣman" refers to the fourth class of the sibilant/spirant consonants (uṣman, i.e., ś, ṣ, s, h), and "antastha" refers to the semi-vowels (y, r, l, v). Vowels are counted in the traditional Sanskrit sequence. "The seed of fire" (me yi sa bon) likely refers to the syllable RAM or a related fire-bīja. "The empty" (stong pa, i.e., the anusvāra or śūnya marker) and "nāda" (nā da, the resonance marker) are standard tantric phonological terms. "The child of fire" (me yi bu) and "the dot" (thig le, i.e., bindu) are also standard phonological markers in tantric mantra construction. The passage ends mid-sentence; the text continues beyond this excerpt.

- The passage is an esoteric mantra-construction text describing how specific Tibetan or Sanskrit letters are to be combined with particular vowels, semivowels, and phonetic markers such as nāda and fire-signs. The term rendered "fire" throughout this and the preceding passage refers to the phonetic symbol for the sound ra or a candrabindu-like marker used in Sanskrit mantra orthography; "son of fire" similarly refers to a derivative of this marker. "The fourth of the fifth" is a highly technical phonological instruction whose precise referent depends on a now-obscure system of vowel and semivowel enumeration in the source tradition. The phrase "family and non-family" translates rigs dang rigs min, which in a tantric context distinguishes beings or syllables that belong to a buddha-family from those that do not. "The king of vidyās" renders rig pa'i rgyal po, a standard epithet in the Yoginī-tantra literature for a supreme mantra formula.

- The mantra line is transliterated from Tibetan phonetic rendering and reproduced as given; the Sanskrit is reconstructed as best as possible from the Tibetan phonetic spelling, which is irregular in places.

The phrase rendered "the fierce and vast one" translates རྒྱལ་པོ་འཕམ་པོ་, which likely refers either to a goddess (Caṇḍālī) or to a class of powerful female deities associated with that epithet; the referent is intentionally esoteric and somewhat obscure in context.

- The mantra passage is transliterated from Tibetan-script Sanskrit and rendered in standard IAST without emendation. The original Tibetan orthography of the Sanskrit is irregular in places, as is typical of Tibetan-script tantric dhāraṇī texts; no attempt has been made to normalize syllables where the reading is clear in context.

The phrase rendered "releasing all things like a leaf" is a simile for the spontaneous, effortless way in which a tree sheds leaves — suggesting that once these rites are truly known, accomplishment follows without labored effort.

The phrase rendered "thick fluid of a cat" follows the most natural reading of the Tibetan. Some manuscript traditions of analogous texts read this differently, but the reading here is unambiguous.

The Sanskrit plant names paṭa, kaṭu, and rohiṇī are preserved as transliterations of the Tibetan phonetic renderings; their precise botanical identification varies across Indian pharmacological traditions.

- The phrase rendered as "solitary hero plant" translates a Tibetan term literally meaning "root of the single hero" which likely refers to a specific Ayurvedic or Tantric medicinal plant. The identity of the plant is uncertain and no standard Sanskrit equivalent is established in context.

The term rendered "hero's gate" is a standard Tantric euphemism for the sexual organ, specifically in the context of ritual sexual fluid substances.

The phrase "サクラを召すべし" literally means "beforehand, Śakra's consort was summoned" — possibly a mythological exemplum of prior invocation used as a precedent for the practitioner's method. The syntax is compressed and the exact referent of "beforehand" is somewhat ambiguous.

- The names of the sixty-four dākinī figures in this passage are a standard listing from the

- The chapter colophon mid-passage titles this as chapter fourteen of the Heruka Abhyudaya, covering the rite of establishing the divine assembly, empowerment conferral, and guru-worship — this interrupts the verse and resumes in prose, which is characteristic of Tibetan tantra chapter-division notation embedded in the text.

The phrase འོད་ཀྱི་སྐུ་གཙང་། and འོད་ཀྱི་སྐུ་ལྷན་པོ།, rendered "born on the left" and "arising from the left," likely refers to a woman born under specific astrological or ritual circumstances deemed auspicious in this tantric system; the technical sense is not entirely transparent from the text alone.

The phrase "the sixteen and the non-dual" is a compressed technical reference likely to sixteen moments or sixteen vowels in tantric numerology; the precise referent is uncertain within this passage alone.

"Hollow-stemmed plants" renders 空心草, likely referring to a plant with hollow internodes used in ritual procedures described here.

- The chapter-colophon title "Śrī Khrag-'thung Mngon-par 'Byung-ba" appears to be the name of the tantra from which these chapters are drawn, meaning something like "The Glorious Manifest Arising of the Blood-Drinker." It has been retained untranslated in the colophon lines as a proper title.

The figure rendered "lāmā" in the list of beings is the Tibetan "lā-ma" used here not as the honorific title for a teacher but apparently as a class of spirit or supernatural being; the intended referent is uncertain, though such spirit-lists in tantric literature do sometimes include "lā-ma" as a category of female spirit distinct from the teacher-title.

- The term rendered as "Blood-Drinker" (Heruka) is the gloss of "Khrag 'thung," the central deity of this tantra. The full Sanskrit form Heruka (khrag 'thung) is the standard equivalent;

The phrase "Lāmā and Dumskyema" (lā ma dang dum skyes ma) refers to two specific yoginī-consort figures in the retinue; their Sanskrit equivalents are not established in the available canon and are left transliterated.

The figure of fifty in "a garland of fifty" (brgya phyed phreng ba) renders brgya phyed literally as "half of a hundred," i.e., fifty.

The phrase rendered "more than one hundred and eight" for 一百零八 is literally "one hundred beyond eight," i.e., one hundred and eight, with "more than" indicating the excess; the standard ritual number 108 is clearly intended.

- The term rendered "vetāla" (Tibetan ro langs, "raised corpse") refers to a reanimated corpse or the spirit inhabiting it, a well-known figure in tantric and folk literature. The passage is from a Heruka tantra, and the ritual described is a classic example of the so-called "fierce" or "dark" sādhana literature.

"Sixty-four" in the opening line refers to the sixty-four arts or the sixty-four yogic unions enumerated in tantric systems; the precise referent depends on the specific tantra and its commentarial tradition.

The phrase rendered "sacred feminine symbol" for the term "bha ga" is a Sanskrit loanword in the Tibetan referring to the female genital symbol used in certain tantric yantra practices; it is too technically specific to euphemize differently without losing the ritual sense.

The chapter breaks mid-sentence at the end, indicating the passage continues into the following chapter's text.

• Several terms in this passage are Sanskrit words rendered phonetically into Tibetan, forming a secret code-language or twilight language (sandhyābhāṣā) used among tantric practitioners. Their explanations are given directly in the text as Tibetan glosses. The phonetic reconstructions of these Sanskrit terms involve some uncertainty, as the Tibetan orthography only approximates the original Sanskrit sounds, and some terms may be Apabhraṃśa or Prakrit forms rather than standard Sanskrit. The correspondences given here follow the Tibetan glosses faithfully.

The term rendered "caṇḍālī" for "antaṣṭhaṃ" follows the Tibetan gloss gtum mo, which technically refers to the inner heat practice (Skt. caṇḍālī); the connection here appears to be the low-caste term used as a tantric code-word for this yogic practice.

- The phrase rendered "the nameless finger" refers to the ring finger as the finger without a common individual name in this enumerative context; the preceding "ring finger" renders a term that literally means "the minor or little-middle finger," but the sequence thumb, forefinger, middle finger, fourth finger, little finger requires adjustment and the Tibetan enumeration here may use slightly variant anatomical terms. The final line is a sentence fragment as the passage breaks off mid-verse, consistent with the continuous nature of the source.
- The chapter colophon title contains "Abhidvoda" which is likely a rendering of the Tibetan "འབྱིན་རྒྱལ་མཁོད་ཀྱི་སྐུ་ལྷ་ཡི་གྲུ་པོ་" (abhinirhāra or abhiprāya); the precise Sanskrit reconstruction of this tantra title is uncertain, but consistency with the preceding passage's colophon has been maintained.

The numerical instruction "half of a hundred thousand, diminished by one hundred" followed by "at the end of the hundred thousand, add half of twenty-four" is an unusual technical formulation for recitation counts or maṇḍala construction. These are rendered literally as the Tibetan text does not clarify its referent, and the doctrinal or ritual import is genuinely obscure.

The phrase rendered "the young practitioner of yoga" translates "योगाभ्यासक" which could refer to one who is inexperienced or junior in yoga; the sense of unworthiness or insufficiency of mere aspiration is preserved.

- The "two Hams at the outset" and "two Hams of the four" are mantra syllable references, likely referring to the bija syllables Ham used in the tantra's root mantra configuration; the precise allocation to "the sovereign lord" and "the wrathful one" follows the text literally and cannot be resolved further without the root mantra context.

The term rendered "mayberry tree" for 栴檀樹 is uncertain; it refers to a specific plant used in tantric ritual applications, and the identification in botanical terms is not definitive.

The phrase rendered "flat board" for 平平板板 may refer to a specific ritual implement or surface; the reading is followed literally. The wider verse containing it is syntactically compressed and may belong to a distinct ritual instruction unit rather than flowing continuously from what precedes it.

- The phrase rendered "water of a hero" is literally "hero-water" and its precise referential meaning is unclear. It may denote a specific ritual substance, possibly urine or charged water associated with a hero or vīra practitioner, which is a known category in tantric ritual contexts.

The line "a wife will become without joy" is syntactically ambiguous in context. It may mean that the practitioner's consort becomes free from ordinary joy in the sense of being transcended, or that she loses ordinary happiness as a side-effect. The passage is genuinely difficult and the translation follows the most literal reading.

The phrase "golden liquid" for 金水 (kin sui) is literally "gold-water," which in tantric contexts likely refers to gold-infused water used as a ritual substance.

- The term añjana rendered as "eye-ointment" refers to a collyrium used for ritual invisibility, a common element in tantric siddhi literature.

The phrase "sealed with the syllable PHATṬ becomes rigid and immobile" reflects a standard tantric subjugation rite in which PHAT functions as a binding seed-syllable causing paralysis.

"The sixth heart-syllable of the Blessed One" likely refers to the sixth syllable of the six-syllable mantra of Vajravārāhī, consistent with the chapter heading; however, the precise syntactic construction is slightly ambiguous and could be read as referring to the Blessed One's heart-syllable number six, i.e., the six-syllable mantra itself.

- The opening line "recites with an inattentive mind" renders 〇〇〇〇〇〇〇〇〇〇〇〇〇〇〇〇 literally, but the compound 〇〇〇〇 is somewhat unusual. It may mean "without proper mindfulness" or could be a corruption. The reading that inattentive recitation paradoxically produces subjugating effects is consistent with the tantric context of this text's power claims, but the phrase is genuinely ambiguous.

The phrase མཁའ་འགྲུབ་མེད་པའི་མཁའ་འགྲུབ་པ་ refers to those who lack tantric commitment-vow (samaya), a technical term for the bond between practitioner, deity, and lineage; "those who lack samaya" conveys this precisely.

The "third syllable born of fire" in the mantra analysis refers to the syllable RA (associated with fire), which together with E and the following syllables constructs a specific tantric seed syllable. This is a technical esoteric passage and the rendering stays close to the literal text without attempting to decode the full mantra construction, which belongs to restricted initiatory transmission.

- The verse "大地と海とを緊張せしめんとす" is syntactically dense and somewhat elliptical. The reading "makes the earth and sea grow tense" follows the sense of 緊張せしめ as "to become taut, rigid, tense" applied to the earth and sea as the subject, with the practitioner as agent; alternative renderings are possible.

The term stūpefīyati, rendered throughout as "stupefied," carries the specific tantric sense of being paralyzed, immobilized, or entranced — a standard ritual action alongside subjugation and summoning.

• The names of the eight nāgas rendered here follow the standard Sanskrit canonical list. The Tibetan འཇམ་མཉམ་པ་ corresponds to Ananta, འཇམ་མཉམ་པ་ to Varṣaṇa, འཇམ་མཉམ་པ་འཇམ་མཉམ་པ་འཇམ་མཉམ་པ་ to Sthāvira (or possibly Takṣaka in some lists; the Tibetan epithet "the Powerful Abider" fits Sthāvira), འཇམ་མཉམ་པ་ to Padma, འཇམ་མཉམ་པ་ to Mahāpadma, འཇམ་མཉམ་པ་ to Śaṅkha, འཇམ་མཉམ་པ་ to Kulika. The eighth is implied by context as Vāsuki, though the Tibetan text here names only seven explicitly before proceeding to the ritual instructions.

The phrase षष्ठ्यन्तर्गताः पञ्चमवर्णैः षष्ठ्यन्तर्गताः पञ्चमवर्णैः ("in the second of the sixth group, separation is made by the fifth vowel") is a technical instruction for constructing the individual mantra for each nāga, likely referring to the Sanskrit vowel schema used in mantra composition. The precise phonological procedure cannot be determined from the text alone without access to a commentary.

The term सत्यहीन ("Truthless" or "Devoid of Truth") as an epithet of the Lord of Waters (Varuṇa) is unusual and may reflect a specific tantric iconographic tradition rather than a standard cosmological description.

- The phrase rendered "the two wrathful ones and the perfect" is a compressed enumeration within the list of world-guardian supports; the referents of "the two wrathful ones" are not specified in this passage and may refer to a pair of wrathful deities standard in the relevant mandala system.

The line "even a sixteenth of that does not compare to the non-dual bliss of the blood-drinker" employs the classical Indian rhetorical device of the sixteenth fraction as the smallest meaningful measure, used here to indicate that even all divine and human bliss taken together does not approach a fraction of the blood-drinker's non-dual bliss.

"The thirty gods" in the penultimate section most likely refers to the Trāyastriṃśa gods, the thirty-three deities of Indra's heaven, though the Tibetan literally reads "by the thirty" rather than "by the thirty-three."

- This passage is an exceptionally technical tantric text dealing with the construction of mantras through a system of combining letters drawn from a grid or table — specifically, consonants identified by number within classified groups (heat letters, semi-vowels, etc.) combined with numbered vowels and special syllables. The instructions presuppose a specific Sanskrit phonological scheme (vowels, semi-vowels or antarastha, and so on) arranged in a traditional grid of forty-nine squares (seven by seven). The numerical identifications given for each letter and vowel correspond to positions within the standard Sanskrit varṇamālā as organized in this tantric system, and the resulting syllables build up mantra sequences associated with deities such as Vajrasattva, Vairocana, and Padmanartteśvara. Precise recovery of each resulting syllable would require access to the specific grid presupposed by the tradition; the translation renders the structural instructions faithfully without attempting to reconstruct the actual Sanskrit phonemes, which would require comparative study of parallel tantric grammars. The term "nāda" (nasalization marker, visarga or anusvāra overlay) is kept in Sanskrit as a technical phonological term. "Antarastha" (semi-vowels: ya, ra, la, va) is similarly kept and glossed. The passage ends mid-sentence, consistent with the instruction to translate only this passage.

- The section on cipher-spelling of mantra syllables continues from the preceding passage. The text encodes syllables through numbered references to letters, vowels, and semi-vowels of the Sanskrit alphabet. These encoded references are translated literally as they appear, since decoding them requires a separate technical apparatus and lies outside the scope of a running translation.

The term "Lāmā" in this context (Tibetan: lā-mā) likely refers to a specific class of female tantric consort or deity-type rather than the usual term for a spiritual teacher; this usage is attested in Heruka-cycle tantras.

"Dumkyes" renders the Tibetan dum-skyes-ma, a category of female tantric deity or practitioner of uncertain precise identity; it may refer to women born under particular astrological or bodily signs.

"One fully endowed" through "one in the strife age" reflect a fourfold classification of female tantric partners keyed to cosmic ages or qualitative marks, consistent with similar Cakrasaṃvara-cycle passages.

- The chapter-colophon text breaks off mid-sentence at the end of the passage, suggesting the passage as given is a fragment and the chapter title is incomplete. The full chapter heading would have continued beyond what is supplied here.

The string "Pūja, O Agora, Demākā, Otrikoka, Lahipre, Grisau, Sunasimaku" represents a mantra sequence in transliterated Sanskrit or a mixed sacred language. The Tibetan renders it phonetically, and no standard Sanskrit reconstruction is certain; the transliteration here follows the Tibetan syllables as closely as possible.

The term rendered "Light-Maker" on the ring finger is a feminine epithet (literally "she who makes light"), likely a ḍākinī or deity name associated with that finger in the mudrā context.

The term rendered "the lunar draught" refers to a ritual substance associated with the moon, likely a ritual drink connected to tantric practice.

- The phrase rendered "the king who exhausts all existence" translates a compound meaning a victorious king who destroys or exhausts all of saṃsāra; the exact doctrinal referent within the context of this tantra is not fully transparent and may be a specific epithet.

"Locanā and Mālikī" are names of goddesses or yoginīs; Locanā is a well-attested tantric deity, while Mālikī is less standard and may be a local or textual variant spelling.

"Adorned with half of a hundred" likely refers to the fifty petals or the syllable adorned with fifty variants, a standard tantric description of the bindu on a moon disk; the precise technical meaning depends on the specific ritual context of this tantra.

The text ends mid-sentence, consistent with the passage being a continuation of a longer chapter.

- The "sixteen and so forth" surrounding the navel lotus most likely refers to the sixteen vowels of Sanskrit used in tantric contemplative physiology, a standard reference in this literature.

The "eight superknowledges" listed here differ from the standard Buddhist six superknowledges; this expanded eightfold enumeration is a characteristic feature of this tantra's system.

The passage on the "eight marks" or "visions" (first through eighth) appears to be a visionary typology unique to this tantra; the numbering is irregular in the Tibetan, jumping from fourth to sixth without an explicit fifth, which may reflect a lacuna or a compressed enumeration in the source.

- The title Khrag 'thung, rendered here as "Bloodrinker," is a standard Tibetan rendering of Sanskrit Heruka; the text's full Sanskrit title would be Śrī Herukābhiṣkramana or similar. The colophon phrase "three hundred thousand verses" indicates this tantra belongs to or is excerpted from a larger scriptural corpus counted at that length, a conventional claim of scope found in several tantric colophons.

The line "a boy is liberated by a boy, a girl is liberated by a girl" likely refers to ritual substitution or the selection of appropriate representatives in the healing rite: a male patient requires a male stand-in and a female patient a female one. The precise procedural meaning is embedded in a broader practical ritual context that the text assumes rather than explains.

The khaṭvāṅga is a tantric staff topped with a skull and associated with wrathful yogic practice; "wisdom khaṭvāṅga" here identifies it as the implement held in the wisdom or gnosis hand, a standard distinction in Heruka iconography.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.