Toh 378 in the Kangyur is a tantra known in English as The King of Tantras Called the Manifest Arising of Vajravārāhī, the Inconceivable Vajra Wisdom of the Non-Dual Mind of All Ḍākinīs, with the Sanskrit title Ḍākinī Sarva Citta Advaya Acitta Jñāna Vajra Vārāhī Abhibhava Tantra Rāja and the Tibetan title Mkha' 'gro ma thams cad kyi thugs gnyis su med pa bsam gyis mi khyab pa'i ye shes rdo rje phag mo mngon par 'byung ba'i rgyud kyi rgyal po. It belongs to the class of Anuttarayoga or highest yoga tantras and centers on the fierce female deity Vajravārāhī, presenting her as the embodiment of inconceivable co-emergent wisdom and the non-dual mind of all Ḍākinīs. The text opens in the classic sūtra-style setting of the Buddha — here identified with the wrathful Heruka — dwelling at a great charnel ground together with his five consorts, establishing the revelatory context for the tantra's teachings. As a tantra of the Vajrayāna tradition preserved in the Kangyur, it belongs to the tantric section of the Tibetan Buddhist canon.

In the language of India: Ḍākinī Sarva Citta Advaya Acitta Jñāna Vajra Vārāhī Abhibhava Tantra Rāja Nāma. In the language of Tibet: The King of Tantras Called the Manifest Arising of Vajravārāhī, the Inconceivable Vajra Wisdom of the Non-Dual Mind of All Ḍākinīs.

I pay homage to the Protector, the Hero, the Terrifier, the Glorious Heruka.

Thus did I hear at one time. At the supreme place that had become the great charnel ground, outer, inner, and secret, the Blessed One — Heruka who vanquishes aversion, Heruka who vanquishes delusion, Heruka who vanquishes pride, Heruka who vanquishes attachment, and Heruka who vanquishes envy — together with the consorts Buddhalocanā, Māmakī, Pāṇḍaravāsīnī, Samayatārā, and Samantabhadrī, abided in the inconceivable manner of the co-emergent wisdom within their union.

At that time, the wisdom ḍākinīs — the Lady of the Charnel Ground, the Dark Wrathful One, the White Great Bliss, the Yellow Fulfiller of Aims, the Red Proclaimer, the Consummate Variegated One, the Chief of Activities, and so forth — together with an immeasurable assembly of wisdom and activity ḍākinīs were present. There were also the Vajra Ḍākinī, the Ratna Ḍākinī, the Padma Ḍākinī, the Karma Ḍākinī, the Samaya Ḍākinī, the Viśva Ḍākinī, the Sarva Ḍākinī, and the Loka Ḍākinī, together with the ḍākinīs of the eight charnel grounds and an immeasurable assembly of heroes and heroines. There were also the worldly ancestors Brahmā and Śakra (Indra) together with an immeasurable host of gods, as well as the four great kings each with their retinues, the ten protectors of the directions, the eight classes of gods and demons, and an immeasurable retinue — all dwelling together as one.

Then the wisdom ḍākinī known as the Lady of the Charnel Ground rose from her seat and addressed the Protector, the Hero, the Terrifier Heruka, with these words:

Kyé, kyé! Protector, listen to me.

To these fortunate ones gathered here in your retinue —
not those of wrong view or the tīrthikas (non-Buddhists),
not those of the lesser śrāvaka path,
not those unripened and lacking the defining marks —
I request you to teach one inconceivable Dharma:
the supreme view, free from all partiality —
please teach it, inconceivable as it is.

The supreme conduct, free from negation and affirmation —
please teach it, inconceivable as it is.

The supreme symbolic means that clears away obstacles —
please teach it, inconceivable as it is.

The supreme empowerment (abhiṣeka) that ripens —
please teach it, inconceivable as it is.

The supreme fruit that brings about buddhahood,
the reflection of the five wisdoms —
please teach it, inconceivable as it is.

The five victorious ones who dispel conceptual thought —
please teach it, inconceivable as it is.

This is the first chapter, the introductory chapter, from the tantra called The Manifest Arising of Vajravārāhī, the Inconceivable Wisdom of the Non-Dual Mind of All Ḍākinīs.

Then the Protector gazed in all directions to every quarter, and with a vajra smile upon his face, declared:

Emaho! Listen, O Lady of the Charnel Ground.

To the assembly gathered here at this time,

teach the Tantra of Manifest Arising.

Having set aside the three vessel-faults —

the inverted vessel, the leaking vessel, the tainted vessel — listen with one-pointed mind.

That view which is free from all partiality:

behold it with the natural mind.

Meditation without a fixed reference point:

cultivate it with the natural mentation.

The supreme conduct free from negation and affirmation:

practice it with the natural mentation.

The Dharma of signs that clears away obstacles:

dispel it with the natural mentation.

The supreme empowerment that brings maturation:

confer it with the natural mind.

The fruit of buddhahood in a single lifetime:

accomplish it with the natural mind.

The reflection of the five wisdoms (pañcajñāna):

accomplish it with the uncontrived mind.

The five victors (pañcājina) that dispel conceptual thought:

cut through them with the uncontrived mind.

This is the second chapter of the Tantra of the Manifest Arising of the Sow, which the Teacher received from the inconceivable non-dual wisdom that is the heart of all the ḍākinīs.

Then the Teacher declared:

Those who wish to attain buddhahood in a single lifetime hold the view of great confidence foremost at the very start.

Therefore the view is taught first.

Know the supreme view, free from all partiality,

to be like space.

Know the supreme view, which upholds everything,

to be like the earth.

Know the supreme view, which gathers everything,
to be like water, the element.

Know the supreme view, which burns away afflictions,
to be like fire, the element.

Know the supreme view, which has no fixed reference point,
to be like wind, the element.

Then again the Teacher spoke:

Know the supreme view, free from transition and change,
to be like a mountain.

Know the supreme view, free from stirring and movement,
to be like the ocean.

Know the supreme view, luminous and unmixed,
to be like a rainbow.

Know the supreme view, free from duality,
to be like camphor.

Then again the secret words were spoken:

Know the supreme view, which overpowers and subdues,
to be like a lion.

Know the supreme view, which knows no timidity,
to be like a great elephant.

Know the supreme view, endowed with power,
to be like a supreme horse.

Know the supreme view, which roams everywhere,
to be like a tigress.

Know the supreme view, which knows no fear,
to be like a bear.

Then again these secret words were spoken:

The supreme view, unstained by fault,
appears as the awakening mind in white.

The supreme view, unchanging through the three times,
appears as the awakening mind in dark.

The supreme view, in which qualities expand,
appears as the awakening mind in yellow.

The supreme view, pervading all things,
appears as the awakening mind in red.

The supreme view, in which enlightened activity is perfected,
dawns as the awakening mind in green.

Then again secret words were spoken:

Through the supreme view of luminosity throughout the three times,
there dawns what is like Vairocana.

Through constant contemplation of the ultimate meaning of the nature of reality,
there dawns what is like Vajrasattva.

Through realizing the sameness of all things,
there dawns what is like the Jewel-Born One.

Through phenomena remaining individually unmixed,
there dawns what is like Boundless Light.

Through the variety of appearances remaining unmixed,
there dawns what is like the Accomplisher of Aims.

This is the third chapter of the Tantra of the Manifest Arising of the Sow, which teaches the view from the inconceivable non-dual wisdom that is the heart of all the dākinīs.

Then the Lady of the Charnel Ground addressed the Teacher thus:
Following upon the realization of the view,
what is the sequence of meditation?

At those words, the Teacher declared:

One who wishes to attain buddhahood:
understanding the meaning of realization comes from meditation.
Otherwise the fruit will not arise.

Grasping at permanence with respect to all phenomena appearing in their variety,
which are primordially free from conceptual elaboration —
that is the fault of meditation.

Grasping at annihilation with respect to the nature of reality, inner and outer
that too is the fault of meditation.

Then how should one meditate?

The pathless path, the path of deviation, the lesser path — abandoning these, one should meditate.

First, arouse the awakening mind;
hold the two aspects of aspiration and engagement as foremost.
The supreme meditation, with no apprehended object:
realize the selflessness of phenomena.
The supreme meditation, with no apprehending mind:
realize the selflessness of persons.
By not obstructing whatever phenomena arise,
know them as the path of skillful means.

Since no essential nature is established as anything whatsoever,
know this as the path of wisdom.

The supreme meditation on phenomena being without cause
is the liberation of emptiness.

The supreme meditation on the fruit being empty
is the liberation of signlessness.

The supreme meditation on cause and result being inseparable is the liberation of wishlessness.

The supreme meditation on loving-kindness toward all
is the essential nature of immeasurable loving-kindness.

The supreme meditation on tenderness toward all
is the essential nature of immeasurable compassion.

The supreme meditation on benefiting all
is the essential nature of immeasurable joy.

The supreme meditation on pervading all
is the essential nature of immeasurable equanimity.

The supreme meditation on gathering the accumulation of merit is endowed with four times three, that is, twelve.

The supreme meditation on what is cultivated on the path
is endowed with the four qualities of discernment.

The supreme meditation on seeing with primordial wisdom
is the seven limbs of awakening.

The path of cultivation that makes one familiar
is endowed with the nature of the noble eightfold path.

The supreme meditation of cultivation brought to completion is complete liberation at the tenth stage.

This is the liberation of the buddhas.

The supreme meditation free from the mind of attachment
is the perfection of generosity.

The supreme meditation on the purity of one's own mind
is the perfection of moral discipline.

The supreme meditation of being unperturbed by whatever arises is the perfection of patience.

The supreme meditation of donning the armor of engagement
is the perfection of diligence.

The supreme meditation free from distraction
is the perfection of meditative concentration.

The supreme meditation on knowing saṃsāra and nirvāṇa
is the perfection of wisdom.

The supreme meditation of not abandoning the afflictions
is the perfection of skillful means.

The supreme meditation of overpowering what is adverse
is the perfection of power.

The supreme meditation in which whatever is wished for is accomplished is the perfection of aspiration.

The supreme meditation on knowing all that there is to know is the perfection of primordial wisdom.

The supreme meditation on the primordial wisdom of the dharmadhātu is of the nature free from conceptual elaboration.

The supreme meditation on the mirror-like primordial wisdom is to know all things as reflections.

The supreme meditation on the primordial wisdom of equality is of the nature of evenness toward all.

The supreme meditation on the discriminating primordial wisdom is of the nature that is clear and unmixed.

The supreme meditation on the primordial wisdom of accomplishing activity is the simultaneous completion of all enlightened activities.

This concludes the fourth chapter, the chapter on meditation, from the tantra called "The Inconceivable Tantra of the Non-Dual Primordial Wisdom of All the Dākinīs, the Emergence of the Sow."

Then the mistress of the charnel ground addressed Heruka with these words:
"In the wake of cultivation, what is the sequence and manner of conduct to be practiced?"

Then the Teacher declared these secret words:

When a little warmth has been obtained,
at that time one should engage in conduct.

First, one should engage in secret conduct.

When warmth in the awakening mind has been obtained,
one should practice the conduct of vidyā-vrata.

When warmth of the innately born has been obtained,
one should practice the conduct of turning back the faithless.

When warmth like that of hot water has been obtained,
one should practice the conduct of the assembly as one pleases.

When the mind like that of a madman has been obtained,
one should practice the conduct of directionless victorious conduct.

The distinctions of these will be explained elsewhere.

Place, companion, time, and food —

these are to be understood from another chapter.

The supreme conduct, honored by all:

practice the conduct like that of a king.

The supreme conduct of knowing shame:

practice the conduct like that of a nobleman.

The supreme conduct of washing away attachment and aversion:

practice the conduct like that of a brahmin.

The supreme conduct of being free from existence:

practice the conduct like that of a commoner.

The supreme conduct of holding what is low:

practice the conduct like that of an outcaste.

Then yet more is to be explained:

The supreme conduct of holding a high position:

practice the conduct like that of a lion.

The supreme conduct free from timidity:

practice the conduct like that of a great elephant.

The supreme conduct of being endowed with force:

practice the conduct like that of a noble horse.

The supreme conduct of slaying conceptuality:

practice the conduct like that of a wolf.

The supreme conduct of displaying fierceness:

practice the conduct like that of a she-bear.

Then yet more is to be explained:

The supreme conduct of having nothing to rely on:
practice the conduct like that of a deer.

The supreme conduct of being free from shame:
practice the conduct like that of a walking corpse.

The supreme conduct of consorting with corpses:
practice the conduct like that of one of low birth.

The supreme conduct of dwelling in charnel grounds:
practice the conduct like that of a jackal.

The supreme conduct of heedful ferocity:
practice the conduct like that of a vixen.

Yet more than that is to be explained:

The supreme conduct of union:
practice the conduct like that of a shrimp.

The supreme conduct of not being seen by others:
practice the conduct like that of a crow.

The supreme conduct of enacting the five poisons:
practice the conduct like that of a peacock.

The supreme conduct of holding to time:
practice the conduct like that of a cuckoo.

The supreme conduct of being unstained by fault:
practice the conduct like that of a vulture.

Then yet more is to be explained:

The supreme conduct of ascending step by step:
practice the conduct like that of a monkey.

The supreme conduct of being without fear:
practice the conduct like that of a bear cub.

The supreme conduct of moving at night:
practice the conduct like that of an owl.

The supreme conduct of settling nowhere:
practice the conduct like that of a bee.

The supreme conduct of beholding appearances:
practice the conduct like that of a flea.

Yet more than that is to be explained:

The supreme conduct of granting every wish:
practice the conduct like that of a wish-fulfilling jewel.

The supreme conduct of there being no difference between medicine and poison:

know it to be like camphor.

The supreme conduct of being impervious to anything:

know it to be like a vajra.

The supreme conduct of cutting through opposition:

know it to be like a sword.

Then yet more is to be explained:

The supreme conduct of skillful means and wisdom:

know it to be like bow and arrow.

The supreme conduct of opening the mouth of emptiness:

know it to be like a spear.

The supreme conduct of piercing through:

know it to be like a lance.

The supreme conduct of slaying the ego and the self:

know it to be like an axe.

The supreme conduct of leading those to be trained:

know it to be like an iron hook.

When a yogin of this kind wanders through hermitages, charnel grounds, and cities, he realizes the great seal of such a person. If he sees that very nature as the distinction of mind, even without vows he arrives at the ground of a buddha. But if mind itself is not free from the knot of duality, then even though vows are practiced, manifold suffering arises. If one is fully endowed with inconceivable vows, it is like a king anointing with empowerment the crown of one of royal lineage: that unobstructed great seal touches the ground of a buddha in this very life.

Thus it was spoken.

This is the fifth chapter, the chapter on the detailed analysis of conduct, from the tantra of the inconceivable, non-dual primordial wisdom of all ḍākinīs, manifestly arising as the Vajravārāhī.

Then the mistress of the charnel ground addressed the Teacher with these words: "Please explain the inconceivable Dharma of signs — the great and perfect sign, the hidden meaning not conceived of by all, the sign-teaching that removes obstacles."

Then the Teacher declared: "All appearances are the sign of karma. All words, however many, are the sign of speech. Therein dwells the inconceivable. Know it as the sign of meaning."

Then the mistress of the charnel ground further requested: "The sequence of how persons enter, the sequence of examining the hero, the examination of the mudrā consort, supreme and common accomplishments, the times of the ganacakra, the completion of the Vajravārāhī yoga, and all the distinctions of signs — please, Protector of beings, explain these." The Protector, the hero, then declared:

The great signs of all, one and all — the hidden signs are to be explained. The right side is of the nature of skillful means, the left side is of the nature of wisdom: the body-signs are to be accomplished in full.

To one who teaches non-conceptual meditation, showing the left hand is to be said: "saro."

By the feet treading through town and country, moving through experience of practice — to convey understanding, showing the foot: it is to be said "aghula."

The ring finger is the root of the ḍākinī; therefore it is shown, and to convey that it is to be understood as great wisdom, it is to be said "bhaṭari."

Just as the tongue tastes the flavor of food, to indicate the experience of bliss through emptiness — showing the tongue: it is to be said "caryagha."

To make the fortunate one aware of the domain, showing the belly as the vessel for food: it is to be said "andhali."

Because the belly is the vessel for food, in the same way the vessel is to be shown; to convey the succession of the guru lineage, it is to be said "paṃkata."

As the five fingers share a single continuity, since the root of the five is gathered into evaṃ — showing the five fingers: it is to be said "tsaṇḍoha."

Just as the power of the teeth tames food, so does one realize evaṃ as it truly is; by showing the teeth it is to be said "cala."

Just as giving generates the body's strength, and to indicate that habituation produces the fruit — showing the armpit: it is to be said "megava."

Just as the earth supports all that moves, and the fruit is sustained through samaya — showing the ground as a square: it is to be said "maṇḍala."

Because the five fingers share concordant causes, the five aggregates (skandhas) being sealed as the five families — showing the five fingers of the right hand: it is to be said "sbaran."

To convey the two seals of Akṣobhya and Vajradhara, the breath is to be drawn in: it is to be said "palkuṃśam."

Because gnashing of the teeth is a sign of aversion and is a sign of fruit, by showing the teeth to sever the appearance of duality: it is to be said "matakhra."

Flesh arises from all living beings, and since all phenomena are mind — by showing flesh, it is to be said "racana."

Because a furrowed brow is a sign of anger, and all actions are signs of suffering — therefore showing the furrowed brow: it is to be said "niriha."

By pressing together without distinction, just as saṃsāra and nirvāṇa are inseparable, it is to be said "bhagani."

In the sense indicated by the example, since one is liberated from all stains — loosening the bound one, saying "grenan": it is a consecrated torma (offering cake). Just as it satisfies all, to satisfy all phenomena appearing in their variety with the flavor of great bliss — offering the torma, say "hikka."

Just as the belly is the vessel for food, and sentient beings are vessels for the buddhas — for that purpose, showing the belly: it is to be said "nigarmā."

All of these have immeasurable benefits; what is essential has been shown clearly in the tantra. The yogin endowed with signs, through enjoyment of the five nectars, has the supreme skillful means. By means of consecration, seed, and natural nectar — limitless benefits arise gradually.

Then further, there is this to be explained: pressing down the gathered five at the tip is the vase empowerment (abhiṣeka) — a body-sign. Thumb and ring finger making a single straight line of the evaṃ is the secret empowerment — a body-sign. The mudrā of the supreme awakening is the third: wisdom-gnosis. Being born and unborn, both non-dual, is the fourth — a body-sign.

The speech-signs for these are spoken thus: ka-la-sha-ya is the vase empowerment; ya-ra-la-va is the sign of the secret; evaṃ-mayā is the sign of the third; e-hūṃ-oṃ-āḥ is the fourth.

This has been the sixth chapter, the chapter on signs, from the tantra called "The Emergence of Vajravārāhī, the Inconceivable Non-dual Gnosis of All the Ḍākinīs."

Then the Lady of the Charnel Ground offered to the Teacher, who possessed the four characteristics, immeasurable assemblages of outer offering, immeasurable assemblages of inner offering, immeasurable assemblages of secret offering, and the offering of suchness, and then made this petition in verse:

O peerless Teacher, Heruka,
you who lead the sentient beings of saṃsāra,
you who possess great compassion —
please teach the supreme medicine of Dharma
to sentient beings who are like the sick.
Please light the lamp of Dharma
for sentient beings who are like the blind.
You who are a Teacher like a king,
please act with loving-kindness toward all.
You who are a Teacher like a minister,
please act for the benefit of all.

Thus she petitioned. Then the Teacher, the Terrifier Heruka (Skt. Heruka), was supremely pleased. Through the door of his body he performed three kinds of beautiful dance; through the door of his speech he uttered three kinds of vajra-words; through the door of his mind he gave rise to three kinds of extraordinary primordial wisdom. He then gazed upon the assembled retinue and, in the voice of Brahmā, he declared these vajra-words:

Listen, Lady of the Charnel Ground.
All sentient beings in saṃsāra,
obscured by the darkness of ignorance,
have fallen into the great ocean of saṃsāra
and are sunk deep in the mud of affliction.
For this reason all the buddhas of the three times taught the entire count of eighty-four thousand gateways of Dharma as antidotes to the afflictions,
and, matching them to those of sharp, middling, and dull faculties,
taught the common vehicles in gradual stages.
The three — sūtra, Vinaya, and Abhidharma —
are the root of all the teaching.
Such was the Sugata's inconceivable compassion
in teaching sentient beings in that way.

Then the Lady of the Charnel Ground again made this petition:

O peerless Teacher, Heruka,
you have taught the common vehicles thus.
How then is the particular path of Secret Mantra?
I beg you to explain the divisions of the classes of tantra.
What is the path of ripening?
What is the path of liberation?
Please, great hero, explain this.

Then the Teacher Heruka declared:

Listen, Lady of the Charnel Ground.
For persons of fortunate karma
I shall explain the classes of Secret Mantra tantra.
Set aside the three vessel-faults and listen.
For those who make ritual action primary,
five classes of Kriyā tantra were taught.
For those who make conduct primary,
five classes of the second tantra were taught.
For those who make mind itself primary,
five classes of Yoga tantra were taught.
For those who make the union of bliss and emptiness primary,
five classes of Unsurpassed tantra were taught.
For those who are free of mental engagement,
five classes of the Supreme tantra were taught.
Therefore, these five classes of tantra
are known as the classes of Secret Mantra tantra.
Each in turn also has five,
so the twenty-five great tantras
will not and cannot come into being without having come.

Then once again the Lady of the Charnel Ground petitioned:

Given that the classes of tantra are as you have said,
what is meant by the word "ripening"?
What constitutes the path?
Please explain their distinctions.

Thus she petitioned. Then the Teacher declared:

Listen, Lady of the Charnel Ground.
In all sentient beings of saṃsāra,
suchness is present, yet the path of ripening is absent;

therefore the fruit is not attained.

In those who follow wrong paths — the tīrthikas —
suchness is present, yet the path of ripening is absent;
therefore the fruit is not attained.

In the inferior — śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas —
suchness is present, yet the path of ripening is absent;
therefore, alas, they practice austerities
for immeasurable aeons in confusion.

In those who have entered the sūtras but remain unripened,
suchness is present, yet the path of ripening is absent;
therefore buddhahood in a single lifetime is difficult.

Then the Lady of the Charnel Ground again petitioned:

What, then, is meant by "ripening"?

What constitutes the path?

The Great Hero then declared:

"Listen well, O Lady of the Charnel Ground.

The word 'ripening' is to be understood from the sound saṃdhi.

The word 'path' is to be understood from the sound athamitha;
it is joined to the worldly sense of 'path.'

The skillful means for ripening body, speech, and mind —
those three that are unripened — into ripeness:

however many empowerment rituals have been taught,
the practice of approach is foremost and most precious.

Having completed the threefold approach — by count, by duration, and by sign

one performs the site preparation and the preliminary arrangements in the proper order.

First, fully secure the ritual ground.

Second, abide in the preliminary preparations.

On the third night, enter into the rite.

The tantras are to be understood as distinct from one another.

Then, at the eastern gate of the maṇḍala,
draw the maṇḍala of the five kinds of grain.

Seat the fortunate disciple there

and confer the vase empowerments in full.

At the southern gate of that maṇḍala,

make the maṇḍala of the five nectars.
Seat the fortunate disciple there
and confer the secret empowerments in full.
At the western gate of that maṇḍala,
draw the triangular source-of-phenomena shape of the lotus.
Seat the fortunate disciple there
and confer the wisdom-gnosis empowerment,
completing the third set of empowerments in full.
At the northern gate of that maṇḍala,
draw the maṇḍala of the four enlightened activities.
Seat the fortunate disciple there
and confer the fourth set of empowerments in full.
In the palace of that maṇḍala,
on the throne of the entwined great lions,
seat the fortunate disciple there
and confer the empowerment that makes one a vajra master, completing every ritual in full.
The three empowerments of body, speech, and mind
are to be conferred at the very beginning.
Then the eight charnel grounds confer
the eight empowerments in their entirety.
Then the empowerment of foods as nectar
is to be conferred accordingly.
Then the empowerment of ritual implements (mudrās)
is to be conferred in their proper sequence.
Then the empowerment of hearing is conferred.
Then the empowerment of explaining is conferred.
Then, for that fortunate individual,
thirty-five enthronements are to be performed.
Then, with the eight auspicious substances,
all remaining empowerments are conferred in full.
That individual for whom the empowerments are then complete
is a son or daughter of the Sugatas.
In wisdom-discernment, equal to the Sugatas themselves;
in power and might, equal to the wrathful kings;
in the span of life, equal to the sun and moon together.
Through the yoga of karma and diligence from the very first,

one firmly abides upon the eighth ground.

If one has not obtained the empowerment and its permission,
even though one's awareness and wisdom have fully matured,
one will be unable to perform the activity of a vajra master.

If one has not received the empowerment and its permission,
even though one holds all the qualities of others,
it is like a wheel without its axle-pin.

To undertake activities without having received empowerment,
and to load a burden on an untrained mule —
these are the cause of ruin.

If one has not pleased one's master
and has not obtained the empowerments,
to undertake activities such as hearing and so forth
will be fruitless and will come to nothing."

This concludes the seventh chapter, the chapter on empowerment, from the tantra called the Manifest Arising of Vajravārāhī, the inconceivable primordial wisdom of non-duality that is the mind of all ḍākinīs.

Then the Lady of the Charnel Ground, Vajravārāhī, made this petition to Heruka:

"Please explain the inconceivable qualities of the fruit by which buddhahood is attained.

The three types of individuals — superior, middling, and inferior in faculty — by what means is each liberated?

The five individuals who engage in the five poisons —
by what means is each one overcome?"

The Teacher then declared:

"Listen well, O Lady of the Charnel Ground.

To the individual of superior faculty,
reveal the Vajravārāhī of inherent purity.

To the individual of middling faculty,
reveal the Vajravārāhī of expressed sound.

To the individual of inferior faculty,
reveal the Vajravārāhī of symbolic indication."

So he declared.

Then the Lady of the Charnel Ground spoke these words to the Teacher:

"What is the Vajravārāhī of completely pure inherent nature like?"

"What is the Vajravārāhī of expressed sound like? What is the Vajravārāhī of symbolic indication like?" — and so forth she asked.

The Teacher declared:

"Listen well, O Lady of the Charnel Ground.

That which is pure from inherent nature itself —

that is the essential nature of the dharmakāya.

In six instants, complete buddhahood is attained.

That liberation will come — of this there is no doubt.

The Vajravārāhī of expressed sound, as she is spoken of —

her essential nature is the sound of enjoyment,

the essential nature of the saṃbhogakāya.

Through six months of practiced application,

accomplishment will come — of this there is no doubt.

The Vajravārāhī of symbolic indication, as she is indicated —

her essential nature is the nirmāṇakāya.

Through six months of practiced application,

accomplishment will come — of this there is no doubt."

So he declared.

Then the Lady of the Charnel Ground again beseeched the Great Hero:

"Among individuals there are five types:

the individual dominated by delusion,

the individual dominated by aversion,

the individual dominated by desire,

the individual dominated by pride,

and the individual dominated by envy — five in all.

By what means is each one liberated?"

So she asked.

The Teacher then declared:

"To the individual dominated by delusion,

reveal the white Vajravārāhī of body —

through the method of delusion, delusion is overcome.

To the individual dominated by desire,

reveal the red Vajravārāhī of speech —

through the method of attachment, attachment is overcome.
To the individual dominated by aversion,
reveal the black Vajravārāhī of mind —
through the method of aversion, aversion is overcome.
To the individual dominated by pride,
reveal the Vajravārāhī endowed with excellent qualities —
through the method of pride, pride is overcome.
To the individual dominated by envy,
reveal the green Vajravārāhī of enlightened activity —
through the method of envy, envy is overcome."

Then the Lady of the Charnel Ground addressed these words to Heruka:
"For individuals in whom one of the five poisons predominates,
how are the five kāyas as fruit obtained?
How do the five wisdoms manifest?
What are called the five families, and to what do they refer?
How are the five wrathful goddesses to be meditated upon?
How do the five wheels abide?
How are the five essences to be recited?
How are the five pledges to be kept?
How do the five experiences arise?
How do the five afflictions arise?
How do the five wisdoms increase?
What is the measure of the count for recitation?
How do the signs of the marks arise?
What is the measure of time?
How are the various enlightened activities accomplished?"

So she asked.

Then the heroic Heruka, with a mind of supreme delight, declared these symbolic words:

"Listen well, O Lady of the Charnel Ground.

The five individuals who engage in the five poisons
obtain five aspects of fruit:

the dharmakāya of the Dharma sound that pervades all,
the saṃbhogakāya of Great Vehicle conduct,
the nirmāṇakāya that tames whoever is to be tamed,
the vajrakāya that nothing whatsoever can destroy,

and the supreme svābhāvikakāya — the body of essential nature.

All these will be obtained in a single birth.

One habituates oneself to the meaning of realization,

and in this very lifetime buddhahood is attained.

So the perfectly enlightened buddhas have taught in the tantras.

The five wisdoms likewise to be obtained are these:

the dharmadhātu wisdom free of all conceptual elaboration,

the mirror-like wisdom, like a reflection,

the wisdom of equality wherein self and other are nondual,

the discerning wisdom, clear and unmixed, distinguishing individually, and the wisdom of enlightened activity, wherein all purposes are accomplished.

The five wisdoms arise in this way —

not from elsewhere, but from within oneself.

The five individuals who engage in the five poisons

likewise obtain five aspects of family:

the Tathāgata family, free of conceptual elaboration,

the Jewel family, from which all wishes and desires arise,

the Lotus family, unstained by fault,

and the Karma family, which accomplishes the welfare of sentient beings —
not from elsewhere, but from within oneself.

Those individuals who engage in the five poisons,

having meditated upon the five wrathful wisdom goddesses:

since bliss arising is the kāya,

meditate upon the white one of great bliss.

Since power arising is speech,

meditate upon the red one, sounding with sound.

Since all that arises at the measure of realization is mind,

meditate upon the black wrathful goddess."

Stabilizing is the quality-activity,

so meditate upon the yellow one, the accomplisher of aims.

Removing obstacles is the enlightened activity,

so meditate upon the multicolored one, who brings all to perfection.

This is not gradual but simultaneous — carry it out in the manner of seal and relief-carving.

The abiding nature of the syllables is as follows.

At the crown, in the wheel of great bliss,
the four syllables of the kāya that bestows bliss
abide with the form of the channels as their intrinsic nature.

At the throat, in the wheel of enjoyment,
the four syllables of the supreme speech abide in the manner of the channels as their intrinsic nature.

At the heart, in the wheel of Dharma,
the four syllables of the supreme mind
abide in accordance with the shape of the channels.

At the navel, in the emanation wheel,
the four syllables of the supporting quality —
their intrinsic nature is the shape of the channels.

The four syllables of enlightened activity —
the four syllables of pacifying, enriching, magnetizing, and subjugating — abide with forms corresponding to their respective activities.

The method of reciting the five essences
is to recite in the manner of outer, inner, secret,
and the four enlightened activities.

The method of guarding the five commitments (samaya):

In the samaya of the white great-bliss goddess,
cultivate loving-kindness toward all sentient beings.

In the samaya of the black wrathful goddess,
engage in fierce and wrathful conduct.

In the samaya of the yellow accomplisher of aims,
be free from attachment to all things.

In the samaya of the red resounding-with-sound goddess,
speak, and keep company with women.

In the samaya of the multicolored all-perfecting goddess,
engage in conduct of playing music and making offerings.

In the general samaya of the ḍākinīs,
the five nectars and the five meats —

to always partake of these constitutes the five-fold samaya of eating,

to be practiced by those engaged in secret mantra.

Now, the manner in which experiential signs and blessings arise in sequence is as follows.

The arising of objectless compassion —
this is the experiential sign of the buddha-ḍākinī.
Seeing phenomena as mere reflections —
this is the experiential sign of the vajra-ḍākinī.
The arising of the recognition that all is equal —
this is the experiential sign of the jewel-ḍākinī.
Phenomena appearing clearly, each distinct and unmixed —
this is the experiential sign of the lotus-ḍākinī.
Being unobstructed with respect to any thing whatsoever —
this is the experiential sign of the karma-ḍākinī.

The manner in which the five afflictions transform:
Delusion transforms into the dharmadhātu.
Aversion transforms into mirror-like wisdom.
Pride transforms into the wisdom of equality.
Attachment transforms into discerning wisdom.
Envy transforms into all-accomplishing wisdom.
These transformations then become the path.

There is yet more to be explained.
Through the four syllables of body,
the wisdom of the dharmadhātu increases.
Through the four syllables of speech,
discerning wisdom increases.
Through the four syllables of mind,
mirror-like wisdom increases.
Through the four syllables of quality,
the wisdom of equality increases.
Through the four syllables of enlightened activity,
all-accomplishing wisdom increases.
Through the vowel series and the consonant series,
sound and meaning are fully understood.

Next, the secret is to be explained.
The measure of the count is as follows:
One hundred thousand repetitions drives out obstructors.
Two hundred thousand drives out an entire city.
Three hundred thousand defeats a king.
Four hundred thousand summons women.

Five hundred thousand burns the directions.
Six hundred thousand reverses the elements.
Seven hundred thousand shakes buildings.
Eight hundred thousand causes clairvoyance to arise.
Nine hundred thousand gathers food and wealth.
One million accomplishes whatever is desired.

Next, the secret is to be explained.
Auspicious signs of superior, middling, and lesser degree —
three levels of signs in all —
will appear to fortunate individuals.
The vision of one with superior faculties
is a vision that arises from karmic momentum:
the five wisdom wrathful goddesses
will be seen directly and unmistakably.
To an individual of middling fortune,
the five wisdom wrathful goddesses
will appear supremely vivid in pure dreams,
in accordance with that person's own karma.

That is the auspicious sign for one of middling fortune. For a person of lesser fortune, a correctly painted scroll image of the deity will emit light and sound, will smile, and will give prophecy through a ḍākinī — and accomplishment will certainly occur within this very lifetime. For a person of inferior spiritual preparation, guidance will be given from the intermediate state (bardo), and they will be led to the celestial realm.

The measure of time is threefold: for those of superior capacity, liberation comes within six instants; for those of middling capacity, liberation comes within six months; for those of lesser capacity, the practice is applied over six years. The outer, inner, and secret — these three — are to be understood as three aspects. The classification of karmic activities by their intrinsic nature is to be understood in three aspects: concise, expanded, and extensively expanded. The concise comprises two: severance and subsequent embrace. The expanded comprises the four activities. The extensively expanded comprises the eight common activities, and from those branch twenty-five further activities. Through the meditative absorption of the Great Bliss White One, the five categories of pacifying activities are accomplished. Through the meditative absorption of the Yellow One Who Accomplishes All Aims, the five categories of enriching activities are accomplished. Through the meditative absorption of the Red One Who Resounds with Sound, the five categories of magnetizing activities are accomplished. Through the meditative absorption of the Black Wrathful One, the five categories of fierce activities are accomplished. Through the meditative absorption of the Multicolored All-Culminating One, the activities of all four enlightened activities are accomplished.

This concludes the eighth chapter, the chapter on results, from the tantra of the inconceivable non-dual wisdom of all ḍākinīs, the manifest arising of the Vajravārāhī.

Then the Mistress of the Charnel Ground offered outer, inner, and secret offerings to the Teacher endowed with the four marks, and spoke these words: "So that a person endowed with good fortune may bring benefit to self and others, how should statues and reliquary stūpas be made? Please explain the sequence of that procedure."

Thus she requested. Then the Teacher declared: "Listen, you, the Mistress of the Charnel Ground. A person of the five families who wishes to accomplish benefit for self and others should know the following five groups of five: the five bodies, the five reliquaries, the five stūpas, the five causes, the five mantras, the five stages of activity — each set of five as a group of five. The sequence of the activity therein is to be carried out in accordance with three levels of suchness (tattva): first, the suchness of one's own self; second, the suchness of the cause; and third, the suchness of the result.

The suchness of one's own self, the first: a person of the Jewel family who is abundantly endowed with faith and diligence should, at the time of commissioning a statue or stūpa, be endowed with the three perceptions. The suchness of the cause, the second, is to be understood in five aspects: on a bright and smooth white ground, the five groups of five — including the five precious substances and so forth — are to be properly arranged. Through the threefold engagement of body, speech, and mind, an appropriate statue or stūpa is to be established. The deity is invited from the realm of Akaniṣṭha, and consecration is to be performed in accordance with the standard procedure. Thereafter one bestows enthronement and offerings of food and clothing, performs offerings and praises, and the invocation for the deity to remain is to be done in accordance with the other sacred Dharma texts. The pacifying activities will be accomplished.

The suchness of one's own self, the first: a person of the Jewel family who is abundantly endowed with faith and diligence should, at the time of commissioning a statue or stūpa, be endowed with the three perceptions. The suchness of the cause, the second, is to be understood in five aspects: on a radiant yellow ground — just as described above — an appropriate statue or stūpa is to be established. The deity is invited from Akaniṣṭha and consecration is performed in accordance with the standard procedure. One bestows enthronement, offerings of food and clothing, offerings and praises, and the invitation to remain — all in accordance with the other sacred Dharma texts. The enriching activities will be accomplished.

The suchness of one's own self, the first: a person of the Lotus family who is abundantly endowed with faith and diligence should, at the time of making a statue or stūpa, be endowed with the three perceptions. The suchness of the cause, the second, is to be understood in five aspects: on a bright red ground, the five groups of five are to be properly arranged, and through the threefold engagement of body, speech, and mind,

One should place a statue or stūpa as appropriate, invite the presence from the Unsurpassed Pure Land (Akaniṣṭha), and perform the consecration in accordance with the authoritative texts. To that presence one should offer robes and food, and all the offerings, praises, and the invitation to remain should be performed in conformity with the other sacred Dharma texts. The wrathful activities will be accomplished.

The suchness of one's own self, the first: the person of the Vajra family who is abundantly endowed with faith and diligence should, at the time of making a statue or stūpa, be endowed with the three perceptions. The suchness of the cause, the second, is to be understood in five aspects. On a ground that is dark and rough, with blood, poison, thorns, white mustard seed, black mustard seed, skullcap herb, and the five groups of five — through the threefold engagement of body, speech, and mind, one should place a statue or stūpa as appropriate, invite the presence from the Unsurpassed Pure Land, and perform the consecration in accordance with the authoritative texts. To that presence one should offer robes and food, and all the offerings, praises, and the invitation to remain should be performed in conformity with the other sacred Dharma texts. The wrathful activities will be accomplished.

The suchness of one's own self, the first: the person of the Karma family who is abundantly endowed with faith and diligence should, at the time of making a statue or stūpa, be endowed with the three perceptions. The suchness of the cause, the second, is to be understood in five aspects. On a ground that is green with yellow hue, combined with the five groups of five as described above — thereon one should place statues and stūpas to the best of one's ability, invite the presence from the Unsurpassed Pure Land, and perform the consecration in accordance with the authoritative texts. To that presence one should offer robes and food, and all the offerings, praises, and the invitation to remain should be performed in conformity with the other sacred Dharma texts. The wrathful activities will be accomplished.

The five praises are to be praised individually.

This is the ninth chapter, on the placing of statues and stūpas, from the tantra called The Inconceivable Non-Dual Wisdom of All the Ḍākinīs: The Manifest Arising of the Sow.

Then the mistress of the charnel ground, having offered the three outer, inner, and secret offerings to the Teacher possessed of the four characteristics, made this request:

Ah, ah! Lord, listen to me!

The sentient beings of saṃsāra in the three realms
are afflicted throughout the three times by suffering
through the eighty-four thousand afflictions
and the eighty-four thousand conceptual thoughts.
I ask that you teach the antidote to this.

The sentient beings of saṃsāra in the three realms:
the cause is produced by ignorance,
the condition is conceptuality —
how are these beings' conceptual thoughts to be cleared away?
When one must go to an unfavorable direction and the like,
I ask that those thoughts be cut through.
When one is bound by oaths that determine good and bad in all things
and is threatened by vows and conflicts,
I ask that those thoughts be cut through.
When one is endangered by the sickness of afflictions,
I ask for a method of liberation from it.
When self and other contend with one another,
I ask for a method of prevailing in it.
When body and mind are about to separate,

I ask for a method of liberation from that.

Then the Teacher declared these words:

When causes and effects are all pervaded by suffering
and one comes to know them, without exception, as inseparable,
all that suffering is transformed into bliss.

Furthermore, here are the general methods:

When one must travel to an unfavorable direction and the like,
prevail over that direction.

When bound by oaths that determine all good and bad
and threatened by a vow or a conflict,
prevail over the oath.

When endangered by illness and malevolent spirits,
prevail over the obstructors.

When self and other contend with one another,
prevail by means of speech.

When body and mind are about to separate,
prevail over the wind.

This is the tenth chapter, on the five kinds of prevailing, from the tantra called The Inconceivable Non-Dual Wisdom of All the Ḍākinīs: The Manifest Arising of the Sow.

Then the Lord Heruka declared these words to the assembled retinue, and the gatherer of secret mantras was exceedingly delighted, and the assembled retinue too rejoiced and was greatly pleased.

Having offered outer, inner, and secret offerings, with joyful delight they offered this praise:

"The protector, endowed with compassion,
has graciously bestowed that compassion
upon me and upon the assembled retinue gathered here,
and upon all sentient beings of cyclic existence.

This is the kindness of your grace."

With such joyful delight, they offered manifest praise to what the Blessed One had declared.

The root tantra called The Inconceivable Non-Dual Wisdom of All the Ḍākinīs:
The Manifest Arising of the Sow, spoken by the Blessed One, the terrifying

Heruka, is complete.

Translator's Notes

• The five consorts named in the assembly are the standard consorts of the five Heruka families in the Cakrasaṃvara cycle: Buddhaloanā, Māmākī, Pāṇḍaravāsini (rendered here as her common epithet "White-Robed One" is translated directly from the Tibetan རྩེད་པུ་མེད་ཀྱི་སྐུ་ལྷ་མོ།), Samayatārā, and Samantabhadrī. The Tibetan རྩེད་པུ་མེད་ཀྱི་སྐུ་ལྷ་མོ། literally means "White-Garbed Lady," a standard epithet for Pāṇḍaravāsini; the Sanskrit name is used in the translation for clarity.

The "three vessel-faults" (三寶器之過) is a classical teaching metaphor: the inverted vessel cannot receive anything; the leaking vessel cannot retain what it receives; the tainted vessel corrupts what it holds — representing the three faulty modes of listening to Dharma.

The repeated phrase pratyakhyāna/śānta ("natural mind," "natural mentation") renders pratyakhyāna, which in Vajrayāna contexts refers to the innate, unmodified, or primordial state of mind, and is a key technical term in this context distinct from ordinary mind.

- The five victors rendered as "pañcajina" refers here to the five buddha families, the five Jinas or Tathāgatas, whose association with the five wisdoms is a standard Vajrayāna framework. The text pairs the five wisdoms and five victors with the five elements in a structural sequence, then maps the five awakening-mind colors onto the five buddha bodies in the subsequent stanza.

The word "camphor" renders 白檀, a white aromatic substance; the simile for non-duality points to camphor's pure whiteness and its quality of dissolving without remainder, a standard tantric comparison.

"The Jewel-Born One" renders 寶身無量壽, an epithet of Ratnasambhava, the buddha of the jewel family; "Boundless Light" renders 無量光, the longer name of Amitābha; "Accomplisher of Aims" renders 無量壽, an epithet of Amoghasiddhi.

The colophon formula appearing twice in this passage marks the end of chapters two and three within the tantra proper.

- The text ends mid-verse at "The supreme conduct free from timidity," indicating this is the end of the supplied passage and the verse continues beyond it.

The phrase rendered "vidyā-vrata" (विद्याव्रत) literally means "the vow or observance of awareness or vidyā"; this is a recognized tantric technical term for a code of conduct based on one's awareness-principle, often left untranslated in scholarly literature. It is kept here in Sanskrit for precision.

The "four times three, twelve" formulation for the accumulation of merit refers to the twelve bases of merit or the twelve aspects associated with the four times three — a numerological scheme internal to this tantra whose precise referent would require consultation of a commentary.

"Warmth" (温暖) here is a standard Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna technical term for the heat or sign of meditative progress — specifically the warmth of the path of preparation — applied here to successive stages of tantric conduct.

- The term rendered "walking corpse" (ro langs) refers literally to a risen corpse or zombie-like figure; the sense here is of conduct utterly beyond ordinary social propriety, heedless of normal appearances — a well-attested tantric trope.

"Shrimp" (ngur pa) is uncertain; the Tibetan could also refer to a prawn or small crustacean; the imagery of union likely relates to the creature's physical pairing behavior.

"Owl" (zhag mig can, literally "one with night-eyes") is rendered as "owl" by standard convention; the literal gloss is "one having night-eyes."

"Flea" (phar ba, literally "jumper/leaper") is a reasonable identification; some commentators suggest a different small insect, but "flea" fits the context of beholding appearances through swift movement.

The closing verse's logic is important doctrinally: realization of the nature of mind (the great seal, mahāmudrā) supersedes formal vows, but without that realization, vows alone do not liberate — a standard Mahāmudrā-Vajrayāna doctrinal position found across several tantric cycles.

- Several syllables in this passage function as untranslated sign-language codes or secret syllables of the Vajrayāna register: saro, aghula, bhaṭari, caryagha, andhali, paṃkata, tsaṇḍoha, cala, megava, maṇḍala, sbaran, palkuṃśam, matakhra, racana, niriha, bhagani, grenan, hikka, and nigarmā. These are technical terms of a secret gestural and verbal sign-system described in the text itself; they have been retained in transliteration rather than translated.

The colophon name "Śrī Vajravārāhī-abhisamaya-tantra" has been rendered by translating the Tibetan paraphrase of the full title as given in the closing line.

The phrase rendered "pressing down the gathered five at the tip" describes a specific hand-gesture; some ambiguity remains as to whether "five" refers to five fingers or the five families, though context suggests the former.

- The phrase rendered "will not and cannot come into being without having come" translates a compressed Tibetan expression meaning that the twenty-five great tantras will not arise unless they do in fact arise, which in context appears to mean they are definitively established as the canonical count, neither more nor fewer. The precise doctrinal implication of this phrase may warrant consultation with a lineage commentary.

The "three vessel-faults" are a standard pedagogical reference to the three metaphoric defects of a vessel as a receptive listener: being upturned (inattentive), being dirty (holding wrong views), and being leaky (failing to retain what is heard).

- The terms "saṃdhi" and "athamitha" appear to be Sanskrit etymological glosses offered within the text itself for the Tibetan words meaning "ripening" and "path." The text presents these as sonic or etymological keys rather than standard doctrinal Sanskrit. The intended derivations are opaque and may belong to a tantric or esoteric register of etymology rather than standard Sanskrit philology; they are rendered faithfully as the text gives them without further interpretation.

The "eight charnel grounds" conferring eight empowerments is a standard Cakrasaṃvara-cycle motif. The "triangular source-of-phenomena shape" renders the Tibetan term for the downward-pointing triangle that symbolizes the dharmodaya, the womb-source of phenomena, standard in tantric iconography.

The "thirty-five enthronements" is a specific technical enumeration within the empowerment sequence of this tantra and is rendered as given in the text.

- The five families enumerated in the Tibetan here list only four explicitly before the phrase "not from elsewhere, but from within oneself," omitting a fifth named family. This appears to be either a lacuna in the text or a deliberate structural compression; the Vajra family is not named in this passage, though it is implied by the fivefold scheme. This is worth noting for editorial comparison with other recensions.

The svābhāvikakāya, rendered here as "body of essential nature," is the fourth or fifth kāya in various Vajrayāna enumerations, sometimes counted separately from the three bodies and sometimes as their unity. The Tibetan is unambiguous: ngobonyid kyi sku.

- The phrase rendered "in the manner of seal and relief-carving" translates "rgya dang 'bur gyi tshul," which likely refers to visualization techniques in which the syllables are stamped or embossed, analogous to a flat seal-impression and a raised relief, indicating flat versus raised inscription modes. The precise technical meaning within this particular tantric system is not entirely certain from context alone.

The line "smra zhing bud med bsten par bya" in the samaya of the red goddess, rendered "speak, and keep company with women," is a standard antinomian tantric prescription; "bsten pa" here means associating with or relying on women as practice-partners, a recognized transgressive samaya.

The identification of the five syllable-sets with five wisdoms follows the standard Vajrayāna correlation of buddha-families and the transformation of the five afflictions into the five wisdoms, consistent with the preceding passage's context.

- The passage describes ritual procedures for constructing and consecrating divine images and stūpas according to five buddha families, with each family corresponding to a color, a type of ground, and a category of enlightened activity. The text is formulaic and repetitive by design, as is characteristic of tantric ritual manuals. The final section is mid-sentence in the source, and the translation follows the text exactly to that point.

- The "five groups of five" mentioned in the consecration instructions likely refers to five sets of five ritual substances or symbolic items arranged on the ground beneath the statue or stūpa, a standard tantric arrangement whose precise enumeration is not specified in this passage alone and would require the broader textual context or commentary to identify definitively.

The phrase rendered "the mistress of the charnel ground" translates a title indicating a sovereign female deity presiding over a charnel ground, a standard figure in tantric narratives; she is the interlocutor posing questions to the Teacher.

"Prevail over the wind" at the moment of death refers to mastery of the subtle body's wind-energy (prāṇa) at the time of dying, a technical yogic teaching, not a meteorological reference.

- The closing line "rdzogs" signals the colophon-style completion marker standard in tantric texts, rendered here as "is complete." The phrase "outer, inner, and secret offerings" refers to the standard threefold offering structure common in Vajrayāna liturgical contexts, where outer offerings are material, inner offerings involve subtle body elements, and secret offerings pertain to non-dual awareness.
