Toh 737 in the Kangyur is a dhāraṇī text known in Sanskrit as the Āryabalavatī nāma pratyāṅgirā and in Tibetan as the Phags pa phyir zlog pa stobs can, meaning "The Noble and Powerful Averter." It belongs to the genre of protective dhāraṇī literature, presenting a sacred formula invoked under the patronage of the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara to shield living beings from harm, including malevolent spirits, contagious disease, untimely death, and the harmful influences of planets and stars. The text is framed by homage to the Three Jewels and to Avalokiteśvara himself, whose great compassion for all sentient beings provides the spiritual context and efficacy for the dhāraṇī's recitation. As a dhāraṇī concerned with warding off misfortune and protecting life, it sits within the broader dhāraṇī section of the Kangyur, representing the tradition of ritual and apotropaic Buddhist literature transmitted from Indian sources into the Tibetan canon.

In the language of India: Āryabalavatī nāma pratyāṅgirā. In the language of Tibet: The Noble One Called the Powerful Averter.

Homage to the Three Jewels.

Homage to the great bodhisattva (bodhisattva), the great being endowed with great compassion, who cherishes all sentient beings with loving tenderness — the noble Avalokiteśvara, Lord of Compassion.

This dhāraṇī is to be recited in order to protect life and guard the breath: it subdues all spirits, averts all contagious disease, stops all untimely death, utterly destroys all harmful influences of planets and stars and all spirit-afflictions, vanquishes all the abodes of māra, repels all enemies one by one.

Thus: Avalokite, Avalokite, Sambhave, Dhara dhara dhara, Bara bara bara, Kāle kāle kāle, Mahākāla, Avalokita, Prasādhane, Dhame dhame dhame, Dhāmāne, Samāhite —

I pray: protect me, protect me. I pray: be my protection from all terror and fear. I pray: give me complete refuge. I pray: hold me completely. I pray: care for me completely. I pray: bring about peace and wellbeing. I pray: put aside punishment. I pray: put aside weapons. I pray: cut off the afflictions. I pray:

bind the ground.

Kuru kuru paṃ. Mokṣi. Bidhi bidhi bidhi. Mārgasaṃprasvate. Amṛtate javati —

I pray: protect me always from all harm. Protect me.

Mulu mulu mulu, Khukhu me, Ghorī ghorī, Bale bale, Tara tara, Muya muya, Muñcani, Khakhare, Dhu hūṃ hūṃ ni, Dhu hūṃ ni —

I pray: protect me from all strife, fighting, dispute, and conflict. Protect me.

Jayaṃ kuru kuru, Phuru phuru svāhā, Amale svāhā, Amṛte svāhā.

This concludes the dhāraṇī called the Noble Powerful Averter.

Translator's Notes

- The text breaks off mid-sentence at the end with the title phrase repeated, indicating this is a truncated passage — likely the colophon opener is cut off. The translation follows the text as given.

Several mantra syllables resist confident Sanskrit reconstruction and are rendered phonetically as they appear, following standard practice for dhāraṇī texts where the syllables function as sacred sound rather than transparent semantic units. The phrase "bind the ground" but may alternatively mean "bind the earth-spirits" or "fetter the earth"; the precise referent is ambiguous without a commentary.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.
