

The King Who Arrays the Qualities of All Phenomena

Ārya Sarva Dharma Guṇa Vyūha Rāja Nāma Mahāyāna Sūtra · Toh 527 · Derge Kangyur
འཕགས་པ་ཆས་ཐམས་ཅད་ཀྱི་ཉན་བཀའ་པའི་རྒྱལ་པོ་ཞེས་བ་བྱ།

Toh 527 in the Kangyur is a Mahāyāna sūtra known in English as "The King Who Arrays the Qualities of All Phenomena," in Sanskrit as the Ārya Sarva Dharma Guṇa Vyūha Rāja Nāma Mahāyāna Sūtra, and in Tibetan as Phags pa chos thams cad kyi yon tan bkod pa'i rgyal po. It belongs to the sūtra class of canonical texts and presents a discourse of the Buddha delivered at the Bamboo Grove of Kalandaka in Rājagṛha before a vast assembly of monks and bodhisattvas, the latter distinguished by their attainment of dhāraṇī and their mastery of skillful means. The text concerns the spiritual qualities and profound wisdom associated with the Dharma, set within the devotional and doctrinal framework characteristic of Mahāyāna scripture. It appears in the Kangyur immediately following the dhāraṇī text known as "The Six Gates," with which it shares a manuscript gathering.

---

The noble dhāraṇī called "The Six Gates" is complete.

In the language of India: Ārya Sarva Dharma Guṇa Vyūha Rāja Nāma Mahāyāna Sūtra.

In the Tibetan language: The noble Great Vehicle sūtra called "The King Who Arrays the Qualities of All Phenomena."

Homage to all buddhas and bodhisattvas.

Thus did I hear. At one time the Blessed One was dwelling in the Bamboo Grove of Kalandaka in Rājagṛha, together with a great Saṅgha of fully five hundred monks. Also present were twelve hundred bodhisattvas, every one of whom had attained dhāraṇī, who beheld the primordial wisdom free of attachment, whose sphere of activity was free of attachment, who were skilled in skillful means, whose minds were at peace with respect to all three realms, who had entered into the supreme intention of benefit and compassion, and who did nothing but inquire into the discourse on the Tathāgata's Dharma. These were: the great bodhisattva Maitreya (Loving-kindness); the great bodhisattva Ever Striving; the great bodhisattva Abiding in Equality; the great bodhisattva Immovable; the great bodhisattva Good Intelligence; the great bodhisattva Great Intelligence; the great bodhisattva Boundless Eloquence; the great bodhisattva Conquering Intelligence; the great bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, the Lord Who Looks Down — these and the remaining twelve hundred bodhisattvas.

Also present were Śakra (Indra, lord of the gods), Brahmā, the world-protectors, the kings of the nāgas, all the lords of the rākṣasas, three hundred female yakṣas, those who practice the ways of the non-Buddhists (tīrthikas), wanderers, six thousand naked ascetics, and seven kings of the garuḍas, all assembled together.

All of them circumambulated the Tathāgata and then, in order to perform acts of offering to the Tathāgata, made a rain of divine flowers pour down openly. They also made a rain of sandalwood powder pour down openly. Divine cymbals and kettledrums were sounded openly, in order to perform acts of offering to the Tathāgata.

All those who had faith in the teaching of the Tathāgata spoke these words: "Excellent, Blessed One! Excellent! Blessed One, this teaching of the Tathāgata which exhausts all afflictions is a great wonder — excellent, excellent!"

Then, at that very moment, the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption in the samādhi called "The Stainless Victory Banner That Utterly Vanquishes All Afflictions." By the power of that samādhi, this great earth was made to rise and fall: it trembled, trembled greatly, trembled all around, trembled all around greatly; it shook, shook greatly, shook all around, shook all around greatly; it rocked, rocked greatly, rocked all around, rocked all around greatly; it quaked, quaked greatly, quaked all around, quaked all around greatly; it rumbled, rumbled greatly, rumbled all around, rumbled all around greatly; it roared, roared greatly, roared all around, roared all around greatly.

A rain of divine sandalwood powder fell. A rain of divine flowers fell. A radiance of divine light arose.

In this world-realm of the great trichiliocosm, all sentient beings who had been born in the lower destinies were utterly liberated from those lower destinies.

The abodes of all the lords of the gods, the lords of the nāgas, the lords of the yakṣas, the lords of the rākṣasas, and the lords of humans were all made radiant. The sounds of divine cymbals rang out. Divine lights shone forth.

A fragrance of divine incense also arose and spread everywhere.

Then all of them, upon witnessing that great miracle, were filled with wonder, and this thought arose in their minds: "These places that have become radiant, this great miracle that has appeared, this trembling of the great earth, this great rain of flowers that has fallen — whose power is this? Whose blessing is this?" And so, all at once, saying nothing, they turned to one another and spoke: "This is the power of a Tathāgata. This is the miraculous display of a Tathāgata."

Then the four great kings thought to themselves: "We must go without delay to where the Blessed One is, to behold the Tathāgata, to pay homage, to make offerings, and to hear the Dharma."

Then all those lords of the gods, lords of the nāgas, lords of the yakṣas, and lords of the rākṣasas, those who were of great supernatural power and great might, took up divine flowers — utpala, padma, kumuda, white lotus, flowers of supreme fragrance, mādārava, and great mādārava — and went to the Jeta Grove, the grove of Kalandaka, where the Blessed One was residing. Arriving there, they made abundant offerings to the Blessed One and paid him homage. So great was that rain of flowers that it lay spread across the great earth to the depth of a knee.

Then all those great bodhisattvas, the great beings, circumambulated the Blessed One three times in order to hear the Dharma, and took their places to one side.

Then the great bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, surrounded by many tens of millions of bodhisattvas and many tens of millions of gods, with many tens of millions of vidyādhāras arrayed before him, made abundant offerings to the Tathāgata together with the Saṅgha of monks and the assembly of bodhisattvas, with great supernatural power and might, with great adornment, with flowers, incense, garlands of flowers, perfumed smoke, music, cymbals, and great drumming.

Then at that moment, the bodhisattva Vyūharāja made a great offering to the Tathāgata with divine adornments, with the power of adornment, and with a great rain of flowers.

Then all those great bodhisattvas, the great beings, upon witnessing that great assembly, felt a longing for Dharma talk, a desire to speak of Dharma.

Then the Blessed One, knowing with his mind the minds of those bodhisattvas, spoke thus to the bodhisattva Vyūharāja: "Son of good family, come and look upon this great earth."

Then the bodhisattva Vyūharāja looked upon the great earth. Having looked, he spoke thus to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, I have looked upon the great earth. Blessed One, I see that the Blessed One has gathered a great assembly of happiness for all sentient beings."

The Blessed One declared: "Vyūharāja, sixty-four thousand living beings will this very day receive the prophecy of unsurpassed, complete, and perfect awakening."

Then the great bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, touched his head to the two feet of the Blessed One and spoke thus to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, there has gathered here a great multitude — gods, nāgas, yakṣas, rākṣasas, humans, wanderers, and many wayfarers. Sugata, many sentient beings have assembled. Blessed One, now is the time to hear the Dharma. Sugata, now is the time to hear the Dharma."

Then the Blessed One remained silent.

The bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi made this petition to the Tathāgata a second and then a third time: "Blessed One, please teach. Sugata, please teach. Please fulfil the wishes of all sentient beings. Blessed One, for the sake of dispelling regret, and for the healing and happiness of all sentient beings, please teach the sūtra called The King Who Sets Forth the Qualities of All Phenomena — that which exhausts all afflictions, thoroughly vanquishes all māras, exhausts all sins, brings faith to the faithless among sentient beings, pacifies the harm of famine, pacifies all sickness, and turns back all untimely death. I heard this from the Tathāgata Vidyutprabhā, and the very moment I heard it, all phenomena became directly manifest to me, all lower rebirths were completely cut off, and all karmic obscurations were completely severed. Please teach that."

Then the Blessed One spoke thus to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Son of good family, in a future time, in a future age, there will appear sentient beings who have no faith in my teaching, who have no reverence and no trust in the sūtra discourses spoken by the Tathāgata, and who will say: 'This is not a sūtra discourse spoken by the Tathāgata; in this there is no karmic ripening whatsoever of virtuous and non-virtuous deeds.' These beings, overwhelmed by attachment, will not engage in making offerings, nor will they make offerings to those Dharma-speakers. In this very life they will give rise to many disturbances, and afterward they will be boiled in the hells. Son of good family, this great king of sūtras, which exhausts all actions and is like a father and mother to all Tathāgatas, is not a time for hearing by other tīrthika practitioners, wanderers, and many other sentient beings — those will go to the lower rebirths. Son of good family, those beings will have no faith in this king of sūtras; with minds intoxicated by desire they will manage their households, craving farming and digging, commerce, warfare, and fighting. Then, upon dying, they will be boiled in the eight great hells."

Then at that moment eighty thousand living beings rose from their seats, touched their heads to the feet of the Blessed One, and spoke thus: "Blessed One, we will have faith. We will revere it. We will proclaim it widely. We will delight in questioning, reading, having it recited, and reciting it ourselves. Should a time of wrong Dharma later befall us, we will endure ridicule, the eight adversities, and intimidation. Blessed One, we will repay your kindness — we will not fail to repay it — and we will not cause ourselves future regret. Blessed One, please teach the sūtra called The King Who Sets Forth the Qualities of All Phenomena. In a future time, in a future age, this will perform the enlightened activity of the Tathāgata."

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi spoke thus to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, how should a bodhisattva, a great being, thoroughly seek out a spiritual friend (kalyāṇamitra)?"

The Blessed One declared: "Son of good family, in this regard a bodhisattva, a great being, should cultivate the wish to see a spiritual friend without interruption, should rouse diligence, should possess a thoroughly pure intention, and should develop a longing for the Dharma."

A bodhisattva, a great being, who possesses these four qualities should thoroughly seek out a spiritual friend.

The bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi then asked the Blessed One: "Blessed One, what should a bodhisattva who dwells in a hermitage do?"

The Blessed One declared: "As follows: he should completely abandon dwelling in a household, completely abandon the company of unwholesome friends, and relinquish all possessions entirely."

Then the noble bodhisattva, the great being, Avalokiteśvara spoke thus to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, I do not see anyone who, upon hearing this enumeration of the Dharma, would go to a lower realm — that is simply impossible. Blessed One, if one who merely hears this enumeration of the Dharma and pays homage to it possesses great miraculous power and great might, then what need is there to speak of one who copies it in writing, has it copied in writing, retains it, reads it, and makes offerings with parasols, victory banners, and pennants, or makes offerings to the Dharma teacher with garments and ornaments? Such a person is blessed by all the buddhas. Such a person has assuredly been prophesied by the Tathāgata for the world-realm Sukhāvatī. And that Dharma teacher should be regarded as none other than a Tathāgata himself."

The Blessed One declared: "Son of good family, that is indeed so. Excellent! Excellent! I too shall make offerings to that Dharma teacher. And I shall prophesy for him the world-realm Sukhāvatī. One who serves the Tathāgata as a preceptor and makes offerings with flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, unguents, garments, ornaments, parasols, victory banners, and pennants — such a person will not die an untimely death. There will be no fear from the armies of enemies, no fear from the harm of famine, no mental distress arising from one's children, and no mental distress arising from one's wife, and all wishes will be perfectly fulfilled. Son of good family, the arising of the Tathāgatas is rare, and hearing this king of sūtras is rare. Son of good family, whatever village, city, town, household, or hermitage is a place where this enumeration of the Dharma is in circulation — that place is held in the care of the Tathāgata."

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi spoke thus to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, why is he called Avalokiteśvara — Avalokiteśvara?"

The Blessed One declared: "It is because he looks upon, contemplates, satisfies, thoroughly protects, and truly relieves all the world in this way, and because he is endowed with a mind of compassion, a mind of happiness, a mind of loving-kindness, and a mind of tender affection, and fulfills all wishes — for this reason he is called Avalokiteśvara."

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi asked: "Blessed One, if even the mere act of reflecting on the name of Avalokiteśvara perfectly fulfills all wishes, then what of those who pay direct homage to the Tathāgata, who have direct faith in this enumeration of the Dharma, who retain it, read it, copy it in writing, have it copied in writing, and make great offerings with garments and ornaments —"

— what need is there even to speak of those who adorn it with ornaments, copy it in writing, and have it copied? What could they possibly wish for that would not be fulfilled?"

Then the noble bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara addressed the Blessed One with these words: "Blessed One, this enumeration of the Dharma is of great power. It performs the deeds of the Tathāgata."

The Blessed One declared: "Son of good family, there is a dhāraṇī called Victorious. When I was a bodhisattva, I received it from the Tathāgata whose voice is the sound of the Victor, and the very moment I obtained it, I attained ten expanses of vision, and many thousands of sentient beings attained acceptance of the Dharma.

Then those bodhisattvas spoke thus: "Blessed One, we beseech you to teach the great dhāraṇī."

Thereupon the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, intoning the sound and melody of the Indian cuckoo bird, proclaimed this dhāraṇī:

tadyathā — jaya jaya, jayavaha, khavaha, jayavaha, hulu hulu, padme, avamavame, sara sarāṇe, dhiri dhiri, dhiri dhiri, devatā anupālani, yuddha uttāraṇi, para cakra niparaṇi, pūraya bhagavān sarva āśān, mama sarva karma kṣapaya, buddha adhiṣṭhānena svāhā.

Son of good family, this is the dhāraṇī called Victorious. It destroys all evil; it causes wealth and grain to multiply abundantly; it repels the armies of enemies; it thoroughly pacifies the harm of famine; and it extends life. This is an enumeration of the Dharma comparable to the mother and father of all the Tathāgatas.

Son of good family, if someone pays homage to this enumeration of the Dharma and to the words of the dhāraṇī mantra with completely pure intention, worships it, copies it in writing, causes it to be copied in writing, and with great offerings honors those who teach the Dharma — through such worship, all karmic obscurations will be exhausted. One will not die an untimely death. And in this very life one will experience happiness: one will find delight through one's sons, delight through one's wife, delight through one's household, and delight through one's kingdom, and all wishes will be completely fulfilled."

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi addressed the Blessed One with these words: "Blessed One, I pay homage to this enumeration of the Dharma. I also wish to make offerings to those who teach the Dharma, to those who copy it in writing, those who hold it, and those who read it. Those who make offerings to this enumeration of the Dharma and also make offerings to those who teach the Dharma — offering them garments, ornaments, parasols, and conveyances — by that act they make offerings to all the Tathāgatas. Blessed One, by that act they make the highest offering to me and to all bodhisattvas. I shall protect all kingdoms. I shall completely fulfill all wishes. I shall cause all kingdoms to be worshipped. Blessed One, I myself also wish to bestow the words of the dhāraṇī mantra upon those who hear the Dharma. I shall completely fulfill all wishes. I shall take them to heart."

The Blessed One declared: "Son of good family, speak it for the sake of sentient beings."

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi spoke these words of the dhāraṇī mantra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatānāṃ, namo amitābhāya tathāgatāya, namaḥ sarva buddha bodhisattvānāṃ, namaḥ sarva mahāradhikebhyaḥ — tadyathā — hu hu he he, mati mati, mahāmati, vajramati, dṛḍhavajramati — tathāgata anupārite, sara sara, ayomukhi bhṛkuṭi, bhṛkuṭamukhi, kṛpe kṛpāmukhi, satyavacana, manusmara, bhagavān vajrapāṇi, sarvakarma āvaraṇāni kṣāpaya, sarvāśaya paripūraya, dehi me varma, buddhasatyena, bodhisattvasatyena svāhā.

Blessed One, whoever seeks the bodhisattva grounds, whoever wishes to behold a Tathāgata, to be born in a buddha-field, to obtain a kingdom, to obtain enjoyments, to obtain a region, to obtain wealth, to obtain grain — let such a one pay great veneration to this enumeration of Dharma teachings and to the one who teaches the Dharma. And whoever copies, bears, or reads this text shall offer incense, flower garlands, perfumes, bedding, seats, garments, ornaments, parasols, and mounts as offerings. Blessed One, I myself shall protect such a one. I shall cause that one to receive the highest veneration in all kingdoms. I shall gladden the mind and heart in accordance with whatever is wished for. I shall guard such a one as an only child.

Whoever wishes to behold me, to become a wheel-turning monarch by the power of might, to attain meditative absorption, to retain what is heard, to bring about the ripening of constituents, to cause the body to become invisible, or to travel through the sky — let such a one perform a fast on the eighth day of the waxing moon, by day and by night, and receive an image. The image of the Vajra-holder, of the color of a bamboo arrow, adorned with all ornaments, serene in appearance, and possessed of a body relic — let that be granted. In the center, the Tathāgata Śākyamuni shall be seated. On the right side shall be placed the noble Avalokiteśvara, four-armed, adorned with all ornaments, and possessed of a body relic. And on both the right and left sides, the four great kings shall be placed making offerings.

That son of good family who performs the sādhanā shall be clean and pure, shall bathe three times daily, shall change garments three times daily, and shall cultivate a mind of loving-kindness toward all sentient beings. Beginning from the eighth day of the waxing moon and continuing through the fifteenth day of the following ninth month, the food shall be a gruel of barley grain, and one shall recite the mantra three times daily. The incense offerings shall be of agarwood, sandalwood, camphor, and bdellium resin. One shall recite the mantra up to three hundred thousand times; that constitutes the preliminary approach recitation.

At a stūpa housing a body relic or at a hermitage, offerings shall also be made with incense, burnt offerings, various flowers, and various banners. White flour offering-cakes shall also be presented. This enumeration of Dharma teachings shall also be written out and offerings made with garments, ornaments, fine silks, parasols, and various mounts.

Then, continuing through the fifteenth day of the ninth month, one shall be endowed with a mind of compassion toward all sentient beings, shall bathe three times daily, and shall change garments three times daily. A square maṇḍala shall be smeared with cow dung and covered with various flowers. Sixteen full vases and sixteen lamps shall be placed there. Parasols, victory banners, and various pennants shall also adorn that place. A great food offering combined with varied flavors shall be spread out, and that direction shall be sprinkled with perfumed water. Then one shall continue to recite until the image moves, the earth trembles, and one oneself is filled with joy. After that, one shall know with certainty that this will be accomplished without fail.

Then after that I shall appear to them in dreams and speak words of encouragement. I shall bring all their aspirations to complete fulfillment. I shall protect them as though they were my only child. I shall grant whatever sacred things they desire — with the sole exception of those who have no faith in this enumeration of the Dharma and who abandon it.

The Blessed One declared: "Vajrapāṇi, it is excellent, excellent, that you have spoken these words."

Then the noble bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara spoke to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi as follows: "Son of good family, this enumeration of the Dharma will not be encountered in the domain of sentient beings of meager merit. Sentient beings of meager merit will not be able to write it out, set it down in writing, bear it, or read it — for māra will create obstacles for them. Son of good family, these four are the works of māra with respect to writing out, reading, and causing others to hear this enumeration of the Dharma. What are the four? They are as follows: laziness, lack of faith, showing no respect to one's teacher, and an unstable mind with regard to expounding the Dharma. Son of good family, one should understand these to be the works of māra.

"Furthermore, there are four further works of māra. What are the four? They are: having no aspiration for a spiritual friend and paying no attention to one, speaking arrogant words, and thinking about this present world — thinking: 'In this present world there is nothing to fear; in the world beyond there is nothing to fear either; there is no ripening of the fruit of sinful actions; my speech is not unclear; my mind is not dull; I am beautiful; I am endowed with power' — and, harboring such thoughts, becoming attached to home and children. Those beings will experience suffering for many eons. One should regard these four as their unwholesome friends.

"Furthermore, there are four further works of māra. What are the four? They are: coveting wealth, whereby those beings will experience suffering for many eons; consorting and speaking with unwholesome friends; taking pleasure in one's wife; and turning away the aspiration of those who wish to hear the Dharma — namely, approaching ministers and their assembled retinues and saying such things as: 'There is no ripening of generosity. This Dharma-teacher is an evildoer drunk on the pride of power, one who indulges wrongly in desires and delights in slander. He wishes to create an obstacle to your very life. As for you, you dwell in the Dharma — you have accomplished much in the Dharma; you read and have entered into the sūtras' — and by such words preventing those people from copying out this sūtra or making offerings to it. For such persons, many obstacles will arise in this very life, and in the next life they will be boiled in the hells. Son of good family, one should recognize that this too is the work of māra, and one must not come under its power."

The Blessed One then declared: "Friends, I urge you two and three times with these words: be heedful! You may come to regret it when, in the future, you are being boiled in the hells."

Then at that time the Blessed One uttered these verses:

I have taught many kings among sūtras and established many sentient beings in awakening.
I have also taught the manner of the buddhas.
Having heard this, be heedful.

In the future, at the time of the great destruction, may you not fall into evil downfalls.
Whoever always has faith in this sūtra is assuredly also my own child.

Whoever always makes offerings to this sūtra — will be born in buddha realms as well. Wherever this king among sūtras abides, in that place spirits, yakṣas, rākṣasas, hungry ghosts, water-jar spirits, great serpents, slayers, and those who cast harmful spells will be utterly unable to harm. There all wishes will be completely fulfilled, and one will easily and blissfully attain awakening.

At that time, upon hearing these verses, the four Great Kings were moved to tears by the power of the Dharma. Trembling in body, they touched their heads to the feet of the Blessed One and addressed him thus: "Blessed One, we four Great Kings will make offerings to those who teach this Dharma, and we will also protect those who hear it. Blessed One, whoever writes down this category of Dharma, has it written down, holds it in memory, reads it, has it thoroughly mastered, and teaches it — to such a teacher as well, we will make offerings of robes and ornaments, and we will protect them. We will fully guard their land, bestow upon them all wealth and grain, cherish them as an only child, march before them in every battle, and cause them to be held in the highest esteem in every royal domain. In this way we will repay the kindness of the Tathāgata, and we will not fail to repay it. Blessed One, whoever hears this category of Dharma yet does not make offerings to it, and does not make offerings to the teachers of it — toward such persons we will feel displeased in our hearts."

Then the Blessed One said "Excellent!" to those four Great Kings: "Excellent, excellent, Great Kings! You have done well. Always continue to act in exactly this way."

Then the great lord of gandharvas (celestial musicians), Dhṛtarāṣṭra, touched his head to the feet of the Blessed One and said to him: "Blessed One, in future times and future ages, sentient beings who practice non-virtue, who have no faith in the Tathāgata and have not comprehended him, will arise.

Such beings will not hold, read, have written down, or give away a category of Dharma such as this. They will have no trust in the matured result of giving, and they will set their eyes only on the happiness of this present world. For the sake of such sentient beings, the Blessed One has proclaimed this great king among sūtras, equal to a Tathāgata."

The Blessed One declared: "Son of good family, two phenomena cause sentient beings to fall into the hells. What are those two? Attachment and aversion. Son of good family, these two phenomena cause sentient beings to fall into the hells. Son of good family, four phenomena lead sentient beings to the higher realms. What are those four? They are: an equanimous mind toward all sentient beings, completely pure intention, giving away all one's possessions, and abiding in the holy life of celibacy."

Then at that time the Blessed One uttered these verses:

This great giving of the Great Kings is of wondrous power;
it thoroughly liberates from all the lower realms and evil destinies.
Deluded sentient beings are ever attached to desire — they are intoxicated by attachment in its hundred varied forms.

They do not have faith in this sūtra, nor do they give gifts in the teaching of the buddhas.
Such sentient beings, born in the lower realms, will experience painful feelings there as well.

For the benefit of those sentient beings, this mighty sūtra has thus been well proclaimed.
Whoever always has faith in this sūtra —

For such a one there is no destroyer and no evil-doer, no elemental spirit, no kumbhāṇḍa, no great serpent.
No evil-doer shall prevail against that king.

The merit of one who asks and listens with care, makes offerings, and holds this teaching well — that merit praised by the wisdom of the buddhas could not be fully told by all sentient beings across many aeons.

Those who always revere and make offerings to the awakening of the buddhas, and any other person who writes out from this very sūtra even a single syllable well —

the merit of the former cannot approach even a hundredth, a thousandth part of the merit of the latter.

Then the bodhisattva, the great being, the noble Avalokiteśvara addressed the Blessed One with these words: Blessed One, whatever son of good family or daughter of good family has faith in this enumeration of Dharma and honors with manifest offerings of flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, ointments, parasols, victory banners, and pennants, and those who teach the Dharma, those who question it, and those who hold it — such persons will in this very life gain many qualities and benefits. No disease of the eyes, no disease of the ears, no disease of the nose, no disease of the tongue, no fever, no poison, no weapon, and no fire shall harm their bodies. Their fathers and mothers shall be gladdened, their sons and wives shall be gladdened, their households shall be gladdened. In every battle they shall be victorious. And at the time of death, the Tathāgata Akṣobhya (the Unshakeable) shall grant them true comfort, saying: Come here, good person! Go to the world-realm of Sukhāvatī. You, great being, are endowed with blazing roots of virtue, and you shall be born in whatever realm you desire.

Then the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara again addressed the Blessed One with these words: Excellent, Blessed One, excellent! That the Tathāgata has established this here in Jambudvīpa — this is the activity of the Tathāgata. Blessed One, this great vidyā-mantra purifies all actions.

The Blessed One declared: Son of good family, this shall not move about in the domain of sentient beings of meager merit. Sentient beings of meager merit shall not hear it; it shall not come into their hands. It is by the power of a buddha that it comes into someone's hands; when the Tathāgata has caused it to be heard, that person should, the very moment of hearing, write it down, have it copied in letters, and read it.

Son of good family, if one merely hears the name of this enumeration of Dharma, which is comparable to a Tathāgata, one will have no fear of the lower realms. If someone causes even a single syllable or a single name from this enumeration of Dharma to be heard, or recites it as scripture in some direction or in some region, that person should be regarded as comparable to a Tathāgata, should be venerated as nothing other than a Tathāgata, and should be regarded as comparable to one's own father and mother.

Son of good family, this enumeration of Dharma was taught by all seven Tathāgatas. All bodhisattvas rejoice in it. All the gods have taken it up and protected it fully. This enumeration of Dharma is like a father and mother to the bodhisattvas.

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi addressed the Blessed One with these words: Blessed One, in future times, in future ages, where shall this enumeration of Dharma continuously, without interruption, and in its entirety be practiced?

The Blessed One declared:

Son of good family, this enumeration of Dharma will be preserved in its entirety in the realm of the nāga kings of the ocean and in the realm of the gods of the Thirty-Three. It will also be practiced in the southern direction. In Jambudvīpa it will remain only to a small extent — in some places it will be practiced, and in others it will not.

Then the Blessed One spoke these words to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: Vajrapāṇi, I entrust this enumeration of Dharma to you, so that it may be upheld, recited, venerated, and caused to be heard. Were this enumeration of Dharma, which is comparable to a Tathāgata, to decline, that would be a loss indeed — for it performs the work of a Tathāgata.

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi addressed the Blessed One with these words: Blessed One, I accept this charge, so that this enumeration of Dharma may be upheld, recited, venerated, and caused to be heard. I shall also venerate and honor those who teach the Dharma. Whoever venerates this enumeration of Dharma and those who teach it venerates me as well. I shall protect it and preserve it fully, and I shall thereby repay my debt of gratitude to the Tathāgata.

Then the Blessed One praised the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi with the word "Excellent!" — Vajrapāṇi, excellent, excellent! Do accordingly.

Then the noble bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara addressed the Blessed One with these words: Blessed One, I bow down to this enumeration of Dharma. I shall also render homage to those who hear the Dharma, to those who write it down, to those who uphold it, to those who read it, and to those who cause others to hear it. Blessed One, if this enumeration of Dharma were to appear in a land of beings of little merit, or if it were to appear in a land ruled by a king without virtue — a king who, when it is being practiced, does not venerate or have faith in this enumeration of Dharma, and who does not venerate those who teach the Dharma, those who write it down, those who uphold it, those who read it, those who cause others to hear it, and those who recite scripture from memory, and who does not regard them with the perception of a teacher — then this enumeration of Dharma will decline. In that land, many evil phenomena and much mental distress will arise. Therefore, that king of noble warrior lineage should recognize that the Dharma has declined in his own land, and he should practice the Dharma himself.

The Blessed One declared: Son of good family, excellent, excellent! That is so indeed. Son of good family, consider this analogy: suppose some faithful son of good family or daughter of good family were to make the highest offering to Tathāgatas, arhats, perfectly and completely awakened buddhas as numerous as the grains of sand in the Gaṅgā for a hundred or a thousand years, were to fill this entire Jambudvīpa with precious things, were to give gifts to śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, were to give away even their own person, were to give away their spouse, sons, and daughters. And suppose someone were to venerate this enumeration of Dharma, or write it down, or cause it to be written down, or read it, or offer it flowers, incense, perfume, and garlands — and were to give in the service of this enumeration of Dharma even so much as one eighth of a measure of sour milk. That person would generate far more merit than the former. The earlier root of virtue would not come to even one hundredth part of it. And as for one who, generating the perception of a teacher, honors this enumeration of Dharma with a parasol and banners and victory standards, and who gives to those who teach the Dharma even so much as a garment, an ornament, a parasol, a mount, a village, a town, or a piece of land the size of a cow's hoofprint for the sake of this enumeration of Dharma — and who, knowing this body to be without essence, like a dream, like an illusion, like a water bubble, understands that this body has no essence, and understands that all phenomena are impermanent — that person has truly been prophesied by the Tathāgata. That person has truly been breathed upon by the Tathāgata. That person has truly made offering to all the Tathāgatas. And later, in due course, that person will fully and perfectly awaken to the unsurpassable, complete, and perfect awakening.

Then at that moment, all the bodhisattvas, the lords of gods, the lords of nāgas, the lords of yakṣas, the lords of asuras, the lords of garuḍas, and the lords of kinnaras spoke with one voice to the Blessed One, saying "Excellent!" — "Blessed One, excellent, excellent! This is the wheel of Dharma turned a second time. We too, in full accord, will make offering to this enumeration of Dharma. We will protect that place. We will also make offering to that teacher of Dharma, protect them, prophesy for them, and inspire them. Whoever teaches the Dharma, writes it down, holds it, or reads it — toward that person we, for our part, will generate the perception of a teacher, the perception of a father, and the perception of a son. If anyone were to treat this enumeration of Dharma badly, then in all their lands their sons, attendants, and parents would become displeased, and thereafter they would be reborn in hell. This enumeration of Dharma will bring benefit to many beings and happiness to many beings. You would later come to regret it."

When this enumeration of Dharma was thus taught, this great earth trembled and trembled violently. Six thousand living beings liberated their minds from the defilements without remainder.

Then the noble bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara addressed the Blessed One with these words: "Blessed One, whatever son or daughter of good family writes down this enumeration of Dharma, causes it to be written down, holds it, reads it, masters it fully, teaches it extensively and correctly to others, and venerates it with flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory standards, and banners — Blessed One, how much merit would that son or daughter of good family generate? And where would they be reborn?"

Then the Blessed One praised the noble bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, saying: "Excellent! Son of good family, excellent, excellent! It is excellent that you have asked the Tathāgata this. Therefore, son of good family, listen well and take it to heart."

"I shall explain it to you. Whatever son or daughter of good family writes down this teaching, causes it to be written down, holds it, reads it, masters it fully, teaches it extensively and correctly to others, and venerates it with flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory standards, and banners — that person, upon passing away from here, will be reborn in the world-realm of Sukhāvatī.

"Son of good family, if someone were to fill this great trichiliocosm with precious things and give them as gifts to śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, that would yield far less merit than what accrues to the son or daughter of good family who holds this teaching, venerates it, writes it down, causes it to be written down, proclaims the Dharma, and offers flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, ointments, and so forth to those who teach the Dharma. The former person would not have accumulated as much merit as that.

"Furthermore, son of good family, if someone were to practice the conduct of a bodhisattva and give away their sons, daughters, and wife, and give away their hands, feet, eyes, and head — even that would yield less merit than what accrues to one who writes down this teaching, causes it to be written down, reads it, or places faith in it. The former person would not have accumulated as much merit as that. The son of good family who teaches the Dharma in this way is to be regarded as nothing other than a Tathāgata. One should arrange to venerate him as one would a Tathāgata."

Then the noble bodhisattva, the great being Avalokiteśvara, addressed the Blessed One in these words: "Blessed One, this teaching is worthy of the homage of the world, including its gods, humans, and asuras. The one who teaches the Dharma is likewise worthy of homage and veneration. Blessed One, this teaching is of great miraculous power, and therefore sons and daughters of good family who have faith should listen to this teaching with reverence, should attend to it with reverence and take it to heart. Blessed One, whatever region of the earth this teaching is practiced in has been blessed by the Tathāgata. That region is to be regarded as a caitya. That region is a place worthy of the homage of the world, including its gods, humans, and asuras."

The Blessed One declared: "Son of good family, it is exactly so, exactly so. Son of good family, that region is a place worthy of the homage of the world, including its gods, humans, and asuras."

Then the noble bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara again addressed the Blessed One: "Blessed One, if anyone makes an offering to this teaching, and with a mind devoted to offering and reverence on its behalf gives even so much as a mustard seed, all five acts of immediate retribution they may have committed will be entirely exhausted, and for ninety thousand aeons they will be reborn in families of great wealth and prosperity. For eighty thousand aeons they will become wheel-turning kings. They will be reborn in the completely pure buddha-fields. They will not perish in an evil state of mind. They will not be reborn in the lower realms. And all their wishes will be perfectly fulfilled."

Then the Blessed One spoke these words to the bodhisattva, the great being, the noble Avalokiteśvara: "Son of good family, in a former age long past, beyond count of aeons, a Tathāgata arose whose name was Royal Crest of Dharma-Wisdom (the Dharmajñāna Rājacūḍa), boundless, free from attachment, stainless. At that time I, in the form of a brahmin, heard this enumeration of teachings. Having heard it, I then taught it to sentient beings. In the very moment that I received it, I attained patient acceptance of the Dharma, and the eye of Dharma regarding all phenomena was fully purified. All sentient beings who heard it were completely freed from every lower realm, and they would never again fall into a lower state; the eye of Dharma regarding all phenomena was fully purified in them, and all those sentient beings would, in due course, fully and perfectly awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

"Son of good family, for many years, for many hundreds of years, for many thousands of years, for many hundreds of thousands of years, for the sake of sentient beings bound by attachment, aversion, and delusion, I gave away wealth, grain, travelers' provisions, and gold. And in due course I gave away even hands, feet, eyes, head, beloved sons, wives, and daughters. I gave away legs and bones. I gave away houses, villages, towns, cities, surrounding districts, and royal palaces. For many hundreds of thousands of years I also practised the holy life of celibacy. I did not cultivate familiarity with householders. I took no delight in kingdoms, no delight in wealth, no delight in villages, palaces, and their retinues, no delight in sons and daughters, no delight in wives. I devoted myself solely and resolutely to the holy life. I gave generosity solely and resolutely. I made offerings and paid reverence solely and resolutely to the buddhas, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha. I honored, esteemed, pictured, and made offerings to those who teach the Dharma, with flowers, incense, fragrance, garlands, ointments, powders, robes, parasols, victory banners, and pennants. I paid homage to many spiritual friends as well. And yet, though I gave away bodies in this way, out of weariness with saṃsāra — giving away eyes, my own flesh, legs, bones, and my own skin — let alone other external things, even so not a single moment of regret arose in me.

"Then, upon hearing this account of the Tathāgata's former conduct, those bodhisattvas, the lords of gods, the lords of nāgas, the lords of yakṣas, the lords of asuras, the lords of humans, wanderers, wandering ascetics, and the naked ones — tears welled up in them through the power of the Dharma, and they all attained patient acceptance of the Dharma."

The Blessed One then declared: "Friends, uphold this enumeration of teachings. It performs the Tathāgata's work among sentient beings."

Then the bodhisattva noble Avalokiteśvara said this to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, those sentient beings who have faith in this enumeration of teachings, who make offerings to it, uphold it, read it, and bring it to complete fulfilment — they are rare indeed."

Those in whose hearts it dwells — let them be looked upon as equal to the arising of a buddha.

The Blessed One then declared: "Excellent, excellent, son of good family! It is just so, son of good family. Whatever son or daughter of good family makes offerings to this enumeration of teachings, copies it in writing, has it copied, upholds it, reads it, or teaches it — those who make offerings to them as well with flowers, incense, perfume, flower garlands, ointments, powder, garments, parasols, victory banners, and pennants are rare indeed. Let those people be regarded as nothing other than equal to a Tathāgata.

Son of good family, there will arise sentient beings who make no offerings to this enumeration of teachings, who do not uphold it, do not read it, and do not give it away. Those beings will wander in cyclic existence for many aeons, for hundreds of aeons, for thousands of aeons, experiencing many kinds of suffering, experiencing hundreds of sufferings.

Consider, for example, a pregnant woman. When the child she carries in her womb — whether it becomes a boy or a girl — reaches one month, two months, three months, five months, or the full complement of months, by that time the woman's body is weighed down, her joints begin to separate, her belly shrinks, and the sound of her breathing grows faint. Her body, utterly tormented by those sensations, sustains itself while experiencing feelings of pain, and until the time of giving birth she experiences the suffering of hell. She thinks to herself: 'When my child is born, if the birth goes well, then from that day forth I shall lead a life of brahmacarya.' But afterward, when she becomes attached again through desire and craving, she no longer remembers those sufferings and instead cultivates a perception of pleasure.

Just so, in a future time in a future age, sentient beings will arise who place no faith in this enumeration of teachings, make no offerings to it, do not uphold it, and do not read it. They will be reborn in hell, in the animal realm, and in the world of Yama. They too, intoxicated by desire, will endure those sufferings, thinking: 'We must maintain our household and support our children. We must care for our wives, sons, and daughters.' But when the time comes that they are born in hell, they will feel remorse. And when the time comes that they are freed from it, they will be seized once more by craving, will forget the suffering of hell, will practise no generosity, and will keep no moral discipline.

Consider the example of a person who is drunk on alcohol — thoroughly drunk, staggering and senseless. That person cannot even seek out his home with his mind, cannot find the road, has no conception of mother, father, wife, son, or daughter, does not remember the buddha, the Dharma, or the Saṅgha. Through the power of being drunk on alcohol, even if he is sitting in a charnel ground he feels no fear, thinking: 'Who is there — god, nāga, or yakṣa — capable of frightening me?' As he goes along other paths through donkeys, trees, grass, and thorns, cultivating a perception of ease, his body bruised and scraped and reeking, once he has sobered up and recovered his senses, he feels remorse, thinking: "I would rather lose my very life than drink alcohol again."

In just the same way, sentient beings who are intoxicated and maddened by the fever of attachment, who dwell in household life confused and whose minds are drunk on wealth, do not seek out the buddha, the Dharma, or the Saṅgha; they do not even think of generosity; they do not seek rebirth in the higher realms, or becoming a king, or birth in a buddha-field. Circling in that very saṃsāra, they come to experience the suffering of birth in the hells, in the animal realm, and in the world of Yama, the Lord of Death — all the while holding to the thought: "My body is at ease; there is no suffering here."

When at last they are freed from those states — from the hells, the animal realm, and the world of Yama — and after wandering for a hundred lifetimes upon the path, they finally obtain a human body, they find themselves dwelling in the womb: their body utterly squeezed and oppressed by the darkness, that body weighed down and afflicted by phlegm, bile, lymph, blood, and outer membranes. They reflect: "For a hundred years, or for an aeon, or for a hundred aeons, or a thousand aeons, or a hundred thousand aeons, we have circled in saṃsāra, experiencing feelings of suffering beyond endurance and beyond pleasure. And in all of that time we have had no refuge anywhere. These sufferings — whose karmic maturation are they? We ourselves committed much evil in the past." In this way, dwelling in the womb, they generate regret as intense as that of hell-beings. They think: "When we are freed from this hell of the womb, we will practise and seek out the buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha with unwavering faith, so that we may never again be made to dwell in the hell of the womb."

Yet later, when they have escaped from those states of the womb, they become heedless once more — and thus they come to experience suffering in the hells again. Therefore one must never be heedless, not even for a moment.

Then the venerable Ānanda spoke these words to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, what is the name of this Dharma discourse, and how are we to hold it?"

The Blessed One declared: "Ānanda, therefore hold this Dharma discourse by the name The Refuge of All Sentient Beings. Hold it also by the name Requested by the Bodhisattva. Hold it also by the name The King of Miracles of the Array of Kings. Hold it also by the name The Tathāgata's Perfect Complete Awakening. Hold it also by the name The King of the Array of the Qualities of All Phenomena."

When the Blessed One had spoken these words, those bodhisattvas, those great śrāvakas, Śakra (Indra, lord of the gods), Brahmā, all those world-protecting gods, together with all those assembled retinues, and the world with its gods, humans, asuras, and gandharvas, rejoiced and praised what the Blessed One had taught.

The noble Great Vehicle sūtra entitled The King of the Array of the Qualities of All Phenomena is complete.

Translated by the Indian masters Prajñāvarman and Surendrabodhi, together with the great editor-translator, the monk Ye shes sde and others; revised, edited, and established in final form.

Translator's Notes

- The sixfold enumeration of the earth's trembling in the passage follows a standard canonical formula found across Mahāyāna sūtras, typically listing motion in three intensifying degrees across six or more verbs. The Tibetan terms rendered as "trembled," "shook," "rocked," "quaked," "rumbled," and "roared" represent this conventional series; the exact boundaries between individual terms are a recognized philological uncertainty across Sanskrit-Tibetan canonical literature, but the overall sense and doctrinal import are clear.

The title "The King Who Arrays the Qualities of All Phenomena" corresponds to the Sanskrit Ārya Sarva Dharma Guṇa Vyūha Rāja; "vyūha" meaning an array or magnificent display, and "guṇa" meaning qualities or virtues.

- The term རྩོམ་པ་ལྟོག་པ་ in this context likely refers to wandering ascetics or non-Buddhist mendicants, rendered here as "wanderers," and རྩོམ་པ་ལྟོག་པ་ as "wayfarers," meaning those who wander or roam about, possibly referring to various classes of roaming spirits or itinerant beings. The distinction between the two terms is not entirely sharp in this context.

- The sūtra title rendered throughout as "The King Who Sets Forth the Qualities of All Phenomena" translates the Tibetan chos thams cad kyi yon tan bkod pa'i rgyal po; this is a known sūtra title and the rendering is consistent with prior context.

The name Vidyutprabhā (Tibetan glog snang ba, literally "lightning-light" or "lightning-radiance") is the Tathāgata mentioned as the source of the teaching Vajrapāṇi heard; this name was implicit in the prior context and is here made explicit for clarity.

The phrase rendered "the eight adversities" (brgyad bkag pa) refers to the eight inopportune conditions or adverse states that prevent Dharma practice; the translation renders it plainly for a listening audience.

- The phrase rendered "serves the Tathāgata as a preceptor" translates a compound meaning literally "makes the Tathāgata one's teacher or master by attending upon him." The sense is reverential service to a teacher one regards as the Tathāgata, which fits the context of honoring the Dharma teacher equated with the Tathāgata in the preceding lines.

The passage ends mid-sentence in the source, as the supplied Tibetan breaks off at that point.

- The Tibetan term rendered "ten expanses of vision" is འཕྲོ་ཆུང་བའི་ཆུང་བ་བཅུ་པ་, literally "ten vast ones" or "ten expanses." In the context of a bodhisattva receiving a dhāraṇī, this likely refers to ten vast fields of vision or ranges of perception, though the exact technical referent is not entirely transparent from the Tibetan alone and may depend on the Sanskrit original.

The phrase धर्माणां पितृमहोपासनात् is rendered "comparable to the mother and father," treating the compound as a simile for a supreme generative source. In some contexts this could be read as "like father and mother," emphasizing the dhāraṇī's foundational role for the Tathāgatas.

The mantra syllables are transliterated as closely as possible to the underlying Sanskrit phonology implied by the Tibetan transcription. Minor phonological variants between the Tibetan transcription and classical Sanskrit are expected and are not noted individually.

- The phrase rendered as "body relic" translates a term meaning a reliquary relic of the physical body, specifically applied both to the image of Vajrapāṇi described as "possessed of a body relic" and to the stūpa. The image description is somewhat unusual in applying this quality to a bodhisattva image, but the Tibetan is unambiguous and may reflect that the image is to be housed at or identified with a relic shrine.

The color "bamboo arrow" for the image of Vajrapāṇi reflects the Tibetan literally; this likely indicates a yellow-green or pale golden hue associated with bamboo or arrow-shaft wood.

The referent of "ninth month" in the phrase "fifteenth day of the following ninth month" follows the Tibetan literally. Some manuscript traditions may read "next month" rather than "ninth month," which would alter the duration of the retreat considerably; the Tibetan as given reads "the ninth month."

- The phrase rendered "kings among sūtras" reflects the Tibetan མཆོག་རྒྱལ་བའི་སྐད་ཀྱི་སྐུ་པ་ལྷན་ཅིག་ཤིང་།, literally "many king-sūtras," meaning sūtras of the highest or royal class. The translation follows the natural Tibetan idiom.

The verse section breaks off mid-sentence at the final line, consistent with the passage ending there in the source text provided.

- The term rendered "water-jar spirits" translates a compound meaning beings of that form; the exact identification within the classical demonological taxonomy is sometimes treated differently across commentaries, but the sense of malevolent non-human spirits is clear. The gandharva king's name is not explicitly stated in the Tibetan here as "Dhṛtarāṣṭra" but is identified from context as Yul 'khor srung, the standard Tibetan rendering of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, one of the four Great Kings.

- The term त्रैलोक्यमण्डितानामपि refers to three distinct classes of beings: elemental spirits (bhūtas), kumbhāṇḍas (a class of demon), and great serpents (nāgas). The

The Tathāgata 阿閼鞞王 is Akṣobhya, the buddha of the eastern realm, glossed once in parentheses for listeners unfamiliar with the name.

- The phrase "breathed upon by the Tathāgata" renders 如来所吹, a recognized expression of the Tathāgata's bestowal of approval and life-giving inspiration, akin to being "given the breath" of the buddha's blessing — a standard idiom in this sūtra genre.

- The term rendered "evil state of mind" for 邪心 (よこしまこころ) is slightly ambiguous: it could mean dying in a wretched or degenerate mental state, or dying in miserable circumstances more broadly. The reading adopted here follows the most common commentarial understanding.

- The phrase sbyod pa pa dang kun tu rgyu dang gcer bu pa, rendered "wanderers, wandering ascetics, and the naked ones," refers to categories of non-Buddhist renunciants; the naked ones are likely Nirgrantha Jains or similar groups.

- The passage ends mid-simile, as the source text continues beyond what was provided for translation.

- The closing colophon names three figures: Prajñāvarman and Surendrabodhi as the Indian paṇḍitas, and Ye shes sde (Yeshe De) as the chief Tibetan lo tsā ba, which is the historically attested translation team for a number of canonical texts of this period. The title The King of Miracles of the Array of Kings is a fairly literal rendering of bkod pa'i rgyal po'i rnam par 'phrul pa'i rgyal po; the layering of "king" and "array" reflects the sūtra's own thematic register and is preserved as such.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.