Toh 622 in the Kangyur is a dhāraṇī text known in Sanskrit as the Ārya-sarvarogaprasāmanī dhāraṇī and in Tibetan as Pakpa Né Tamché Rabtu Zhiwar Jedpé Zung, meaning "The Noble Dhāraṇī That Thoroughly Pacifies All Illness." It belongs to the dhāraṇī section of the Kangyur and presents a short but practical scripture in which the Buddha, while residing at Śrāvastī, instructs his monks to memorize and transmit a specific dhāraṇī formula endowed with healing power. The text applies this dhāraṇī to a range of physical ailments — including indigestion, bloating, imbalances of blood and bile, hemorrhoids, and disorders of digestion — reflecting the genre's characteristic concern with the protective and therapeutic efficacy of sacred speech. As is typical of dhāraṇī literature, it frames the recitation of the mantra within a brief narrative setting and directs its benefits toward the relief of suffering in a very concrete, bodily sense.

In the language of India: Ārya-sarvarogaprasāmanī nāma dhāraṇī. In the language of Tibet: the noble dhāraṇī called "That Which Thoroughly Pacifies All Illness."

Homage to all the buddhas and bodhisattvas.

Thus did I hear. At one time the Blessed One was dwelling at Śrāvastī, in the Jeta Grove, the garden of Anāthapiṇḍada, in the park of Prince Jeta.

Then the Blessed One spoke to the monks: "Monks, take up this enumeration of Dharma, bear it in mind, retain it thoroughly, and teach it fully and correctly to others as well.

Tadyathā: cile mi, cile mi, pana kokili, śrīmati, kuṇḍali, dundubhi, indranīmukhe svāhā.

These are the dhāraṇī foundations for indigestion, bloating, the intermixture of blood and bile, affliction by hemorrhoids, bowel disease, disorders of the digestive juices, phlegm disorders, epidemic illness, headache, pain in the side, and seizure by hungry ghosts. Ānanda, I have not seen, in all the world with its gods, anyone who can counter these dhāraṇī foundations — save only one whose lifespan is exhausted. These dhāraṇī foundations were spoken by the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly and completely awakened buddha. In this regard: the buddha is the highest of all sentient beings; freedom from attachment is the highest of all phenomena; and the Saṅgha is the highest of all assemblies. By these words of truth, by this speech of truth, may all that I have eaten, drunk, taken as food, and tasted be thoroughly and comfortably digested. Svāhā."

When the Blessed One had so declared, those monks rejoiced and praised the words of the Blessed One.

The noble dhāraṇī called "That Which Thoroughly Pacifies All Illness" is complete.

Translator's Notes

- The text addresses Ānanda by name mid-passage with "Ānanda" rendered from "Kun dga' bo," the standard Tibetan equivalent, though the surrounding text frames the speech as addressed to monks generally; the shift is in the original and reflects the sūtra convention of turning to a named interlocutor within a broader address.

The dhāraṇī syllables are transliterated from the Tibetan phonetic rendering of Sanskrit and are preserved as-is, as is standard practice for dhāraṇī passages.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.
