

Toh 709 in the Kangyur is a ritual or devotional text in verse, known in Tibetan

Toh 709 · Derge Kangyur

Toh 709 in the Kangyur is a ritual or devotional text in verse, known in Tibetan as beginning with homage to the seven fully and perfectly awakened buddhas, and its contents invoke those seven buddhas along with their śrāvaka Saṅghas, praising their qualities and seeking protection and well-being. The text names several of the seven buddhas of antiquity — including Kanakamuni, Kāśyapa, and Śākyamuni — celebrating their distinctive virtues such as vast vision, miraculous power, and diligence, and incorporates Sanskrit dhāraṇī-like phrases suggestive of a protective or apotropaic character. It belongs to the broader category of dhāraṇī or ritual literature within the Kangyur, a class of texts prized for their powers of blessing, protection, and liberation.

Translated, requested, and definitively established.

Homage to the seven fully and perfectly awakened buddhas together with their śrāvaka Saṅghas.

Victorious over all enemies and every fear,
whose vision is vast and whose majesty is great,
whose miraculous power is the very crown of his being,
with the wisdom that protects all,
with the power that dispels wrong faith,
with the training of Kanakamuni the Golden Sage,
with the qualities of Kāśyapa,
and with the diligence of Śākyamuni,
may I always dwell in well-being.

Thus: jayanti, vijayanti, jaye vijayan —

Translator's Notes

- This passage is the opening homage and dhāraṇī invocation of a text translated and edited into final form. The seven buddhas referenced are the Seven Buddhas of Antiquity (the six predecessors of Śākyamuni plus Śākyamuni himself), a standard grouping in such protective formulae. The names Kanakamuni and Kāśyapa are two of those seven: Kanakamuni is the Tibetan ཀའ་མཆོག་པོ་ (Golden Sage) and Kāśyapa is རྒྱལ་པོ་ (Protector of Light). The dhāraṇī at the close is fragmentary as given in the input and trails off mid-phrase; only what is present in the source has been rendered. The term རྒྱལ་པོ་ (uṣṇīṣa, the cranial protuberance, one of the major marks of a buddha) is here used metaphorically as the pinnacle or crown of miraculous power, rendered accordingly.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.