"The Tantra of the Ḍākinī's Blazing Fire-Tongue" (Sanskrit: Ḍākinī-agni-jihvā-jvāla-tantra; Tibetan: mKha' 'gro ma me lce 'bar ba'i rgyud) is a short tantric scripture belonging to the tantra section of the Kangyur, catalogued as Toh 842. Associated with the fierce deity known as the Terrifier of the Three Worlds, the text centers on a ḍākinī whose blazing, fire-like tongue embodies wrathful, purifying power, and it concludes with potent mantric syllables such as hūṃ and phaṭ meant for ritual recitation. As is typical of texts in this class, it combines invocation, mantra, and brief ritual instruction rather than extended doctrinal exposition, reflecting the esoteric and apotropaic concerns of tantric Buddhist practice. Its placement among the Kangyur's tantra collection situates it within the broader corpus of translated Indian tantric literature transmitted to Tibet.

It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
