Toh 626 in the Kangyur is a dhāraṇī text known in Tibetan as Phags pa rims nad rab tu zhi bar byed pa, and in English as "The Noble Dhāraṇī That Thoroughly Pacifies Epidemic Disease." As its name suggests, it belongs to the dhāraṇī genre of canonical literature, presenting a sacred formula intended to bring about the complete pacification of contagious or epidemic illness. The text sits within the broader dhāraṇī section of the Kangyur, reflecting the tradition of protective and healing incantations that form a significant part of Buddhist canonical scripture. It was translated into Tibetan by the Indian masters Jinamitra and Dānaśīla in collaboration with the renowned Tibetan editor-translator Ye shes sde, a team responsible for a great number of canonical translations during the early period of Tibetan Buddhist scriptural transmission.

Thus the praise is complete. The noble dhāraṇī called "That Which Thoroughly Pacifies Epidemic Disease" is finished.

This was translated, edited, and definitively established by the Indian masters Jinamitra and Dānaśīla together with the great editor-translator the venerable Ye shes sde.

Translator's Notes

- The colophon names three figures: Jinamitra and Dānaśīla are well-attested Indian paṇḍitas active during the imperial Tibetan translation period, and Ye shes sde is one of the most prominent Tibetan lotsāwas of the same era. The phrase "great editor-translator" renders the honorific title "Zhuchengi lotsāwa," referring to Ye shes sde's role as a senior revision editor as well as translator.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
