The Hundred and Eight Names of Noble Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta, together with the Dhāraṇī-Mantra, known in Tibetan as Pakpa Jampal Shönnur Gyurpé Tsen Gyatsa Gyepa Zungngak Dang Chepa and corresponding to a Sanskrit title along the lines of Ārya Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta Aṣṭottaraśātika Nāma Dhāraṇī Mantra Sahita, is a short devotional and ritual text centered on the bodhisattva of wisdom, Mañjuśrī, here called Kumārabhūta, "the Youthful," and Mañjughoṣa, "Gentle Voice." It opens with homages to the fully awakened buddhas of the ten directions, whose pure intelligence pervades all that can be known, and to Mañjuśrī himself, whose stainless mind and radiant qualities draw the reverence of gods, humans, asuras, nāgas, and vidyādharas, and who is praised as one who destroys rebirth in the lower realms. It then presents a Sanskrit dhāraṇī-mantra that invokes him through a long series of epithets, celebrating him as jewel-adorned, as a liberator of other beings, and as the holder of the great treasury of the Tathāgata's teaching. The work is Toh 879 in the Kangyur, where it belongs among the dhāraṇī texts, the collection of incantations and name-recitations prized for their protective and purifying power.

The Hundred and Eight Names of Noble Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta, together with the Dhāraṇī-Mantra.

Homage to the perfectly complete buddhas of the ten directions, who pervade all knowable things entirely and without remainder, and who possess a supremely wondrous and utterly pure intelligence.

Homage to Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta, whose mind is free from all stains and faults, whose body is adorned with the light rays of a mass of stainless qualities, and at whose lotus footrest the crowns of hair and the tips of the diadems of gods, humans, asuras, nāgas, and vidyādharas bow and touch.

Homage to the bodhisattva mahāsattva Mañjughoṣa, who destroys the many kinds of lower destinies.

When Mañjughoṣa proclaimed
This vidyā-mantra that accomplishes every aim,
At once, for sentient beings,
Birth and aging came to an end.
All the lower destinies were pacified,
The hosts of Māra trembled violently,
All the gods rejoiced exceedingly,
And the vināyakas were struck with terror.

The very moment this dhāraṇī
That pacifies evil was proclaimed,
Countless beings, in hundreds of millions,
Were freed from the prison of saṃsāra.

When Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta
Sent forth his gentle voice
And spoke the vidyā-mantra,
The earth, with its rocks, forests, and groves,
With its moving and unmoving beings,
Quaked at that very time.

The radiance of the Buddha's light
Spread across the face of the earth as well.
All the obstructors and vināyakas,
And the rākṣasas of hideous form,
Cried out and spoke with one voice:
"Homage to the one endowed with the ten powers!"
The gods of peaceful appearance,
All of them delighted in mind,
Came before the place where the great Vajra Sword was
And spoke these words:

"Homage to you, granter of boons, supreme vajra,
To Mañjughoṣa of great strength,
The Victor, endowed with a thousand forces,
Who utterly vanquishes the realms of obstructors,
Mantra-holder, holder of the great secret mantra,
Of manifold forms, lord of humankind,
Exceedingly mighty, beautiful in form, and terrifying,
Fierce one who utterly vanquishes the fierce,
Glorious one possessed of splendor upon splendor,
Glorious one, the incomparable exemplar,
Vajra-bearer who purifies the heart,
Who clears away the cataract of ignorance,
Possessed of the supreme graceful bearing,
Prajāpati, delighting in grace,
Long-armed one, mighty with the bow,
Who dispels the enemies, the afflictions,
Wearing various beautiful garments,
Adorned with various garlands of flowers,
With lovely eyes and beautiful head,
Joyful and beautifully clothed.
Mañjughoṣa laughs out broadly,
With eyes whose white and black are clearly set apart,
Proclaiming far and wide the sound of 'ha ha,'
Delighting in the teaching with clear faith,
Possessed of a vast golden hue,
Whose sphere of activity is the heart of the ocean,

Knowing the way, possessed of the way, terrifying,
Who makes the hearts of the hostile tremble with fear,
Blue in appearance, protector of the earth,
Who gladdens the lord of the gods,
God of desire who teaches the dispelling of desire,
Upholder of the earth, the world of kings,
Renowned as steadfast among the steadfast,
Whose qualities laugh out in every direction,
To whom those who bow pay homage with bowing,
Who is always worshipped and revered,
Mighty one of great force,
Long-armed one, master of the great battle,
Greatly graceful one, the sublime vajra,
Knowing restraint, guarding well, knowing shame,
Supreme heart of the great maṇḍala,
Teacher of the great maṇḍala,

Renowned in the great maṇḍala,
Creator of the great maṇḍala,
Master of the maṇḍala, possessor of the maṇḍala,
Attended at his feet by hosts of worshippers,
Great lord of ha ha svāhā,
Great offering equal to the earth,
Terrifying with hūṃ, the terrible one,
Blazing with a terrifying light,
To whom gods and asuras bow,
And whom they likewise worship and revere,
Possessed of long and mighty peals of laughter,
Fierce wind that dispels the darkness,
Famed and praised throughout the three worlds,
Served and honored by yakṣas and rākṣasas,
Fierce one who makes all white, source of bliss,
Sovereign who bears a crest jewel,
Showing himself everywhere smiling and graceful,
Steadfast in his conduct,
Jewel disk of beautiful light,
Bright sun, radiantly gleaming,

Like the light of the sun, like a rainbow,
Clearly present, laughing broadly,
Delightful to behold and bringing delight,
Giver of wealth, and likewise giver of secret mantras,
Giver of power and giver of kingship,
Giver of beauty, and likewise giver of strength,
Glorious one, maker of glory, mountain that subdues obstructors,
Dispeller of all bewilderment,
Who takes his seat within the assembly,
At whose feet heaps of offerings are gathered,
Wearing armlets, great earrings and bracelets,
Adorned with jeweled ornaments,
Lamp for beings moving and unmoving,
Remover of the dimness of sight,
Teacher who teaches and who protects,
Indra, sovereign, foremost of armies,
Dispeller of fear,
Giver of the abode of fearlessness,
White and blue, of excellent light,
Teacher of the Blue-Throated One (Śiva),
In whatever way those to be tamed are tamed,
In just that guise he shows himself,
Striking with the sword of wisdom,
Devoted to the Dharma of emptiness,
Loving one who knows the highest and the lowest,
Widely renowned, attentive listener,
Praised by the vidyādhara,
Mighty vidyādhara,
Utterly victorious wheel-turning monarch,
Fearless, of keen intelligence and wisdom,
Tathāgata, upholder of the Dharma,
Sweet-voiced, the tamer, the peaceful one,
Who teaches the path of peace,
Honored by gods together with asuras,
Who makes all sentient beings fearless,
Who teaches all sentient beings,
Steadfast one, supreme among all beings,

Skilled in the minds of sentient beings,
Nārāyaṇa, of fierce strength,
Resembling the light of fire,
Youth of supreme form, granter of the supreme,
Who displays play and music,
Who forms mudrās and fashions secret mantras,
Not grasping at "mine," stainless and steadfast,
Like space, beyond compare, skilled in speech,
Certain destroyer of Māra's armies,
Supreme among humans, of unshakable diligence,
Likewise invincible and completely victorious,
Steadfast one, Buddha, Tathāgata,
Free of sorrow and abiding nowhere,
Indestructible, of excellent words and excellent flow,
Hero who utterly destroys enemies,
Yogin who surely conquers great fervor,
Who goes everywhere, the bane of desire,
Protector, supreme among the Victors' heirs,
Vanquisher of Yama, guardian of creatures,
Who utterly burns away karma and afflictions,
The Teacher who dispels afflictions.

These excellent supreme names of yours,
The hundred and eight, so clear,
Which bring forth faith,
Have been fully proclaimed by the supreme gods.
Great obstructors and vināyakas,
Yakṣas, asuras and rākṣasas,
And the savage, fierce stealers of vital luster
Have today offered excellent praise.
When Mañjuśrī, the supreme vajra,
Gazed upon them majestically, they were set at ease.
And having looked upon them all,
He spoke these words:
"May all of you be ever free of obstacles,
Attain the definite good of liberation,
And be fearless and auspicious.

Do not think of me with fear!"
Then, laughing a great laugh
That resounded like mighty thunder,
The Tathāgata, with radiant face,
Looked to the east and declared:
"Oh! Domain of the supreme secret mantra,
For the dispelling of beings' delusion,
The accumulation of beings' merit
Has come to vast increase.
Oh! To thoroughly purify
Beings who have made great merit,
The dhāraṇī of accomplishment that bestows the sublime
Has been fully proclaimed in gentle recitation.
Whoever, in meditative equipoise,
Recites this dhāraṇī of accomplishment
That dispels all suffering,
Or else hears it, or even contemplates it,
All his aims will be accomplished,
And he will be freed from all suffering.
He will surely attain
The complete purification of all wrongdoing.
And the great ground of the tathāgatas, too,
He will attain before long.
The grounds of the bodhisattvas,
The Very Joyful, the Stainless,
The Luminous and the Radiant,
The Hard to Conquer, likewise the Manifest,
The Far Gone and the Immovable,
Excellent Intelligence and the Cloud of Dharma,
Those sublime great grounds, too,
The great being who longs for certainty
Will attain without hindrance
Once his life has run its course.
Fully purified of all wrongdoing,
Dear to all sentient beings,
He will attain unsurpassed awakening,
In which all elaborations are pacified.

These delightful hundred and eight names,
Which bring forth all vidyādhara
And pacify all wrongdoing,
Auspicious and supremely virtuous,
Whoever, rising at dawn,
Joins the ten fingers in reverence,
Sits before Mañjughoṣa,
And recites them with a mind of deep faith,
All the vidyādhara,
Likewise the lords of the gods,
And many yakṣas and rākṣasas
Will always protect him.
All the heirs of the tathāgatas,
The tathāgatas themselves,
And likewise the bearers of the vajra weapon
Will surely protect him.
He will appear as one abiding in a buddha's body,
Resting in meditative equipoise.
Yakṣas and lords of the gods,
Great obstructors and vināyakas,
Joyful and with excellent intent,
Will bow to him even from afar.
Therefore, since the obstructors are delighted,
They are unable even to harm him.
If one reads it a single time,
One gains merit equal to that of Mahābrahmā.
Whoever of great wisdom
Recites the supreme names every day
Will attain a delightful state,
Stainless and utterly pure,
Radiantly luminous, of pleasing sound,
Bringing joy to all sentient beings.
Peerless, generating strength, proceeding on the supreme path,
Praised by the gods who keep the samaya of luminosity,
Longed for by the hosts of captivating gods and asuras,
This dhāraṇī has been well spoken by the Victors."

The Noble One Hundred and Eight Names of Mañjuśrī, together with the dhāraṇī-mantra, is complete.

Translator's Notes

- The verse of praise continues into the next piece. "Prajāpati" ("Lord of Creatures") is an epithet applied here to Mañjughoṣa. The line rendered "Knowing restraint, guarding well, knowing shame" might alternatively be parsed as "knowing restraint, guarding wisdom, knowing shame."
- In the line rendered "Attended at his feet by hosts of worshippers," the Tibetan reads rjed pa ("forgetting"), which makes no sense here. It is translated as if it were a word for reverence or worship, matching the later line about offerings gathered at his feet. The phrase rendered "in gentle recitation" (Tibetan 'jam pa'i klog) may be a slip for 'jam pa'i dbyangs. The instrumental particle would support that reading, and the line would then say "proclaimed by Mañjughoṣa." The line "Yogin who surely conquers great fervor" renders an obscure compound (tshan chen), and its sense is uncertain.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.
