

The Dhāraṇī for Pacifying Tumors

Toh 783 · Derge Kangyur

This brief text is the Dhāraṇī for Pacifying Tumors, found in the Kangyur as Toh 783; its Sanskrit and Tibetan titles cannot be determined from the material at hand. It belongs to the dhāraṇī class of Buddhist literature, a genre of short ritual formulas believed to carry protective or healing power. After a homage to the Three Jewels, it gives a mantra invoking multiple faces, including that of the Tathāgata, with commands to cut and break apart. It then prescribes a simple procedure: the formula is recited twenty-one times over mustard seed, ash from a burnt offering, and a long nail, whereupon even a large tumor is said to subside. As a compact healing rite of this kind, it reflects the practical, this-worldly concerns that dhāraṇī texts address alongside more doctrinal material.

Homage to the Three Jewels.

Oṃ mo kha mukhi, trimukhi, trimukhi, sahasramukhi, tathāgatamukha stīhana, chinda chinda, bhinda bhinda, svāthānāṃ gaccha slāhe svāhā.

Recite this twenty-one times over mustard seed, over ash from a burnt offering, and over a long nail, and then the tumor will be pacified, even if it is large. There is no doubt.

This completes the dhāraṇī for pacifying tumors.

Translator's Notes

- The mantra syllables are given as the Tibetan transliteration of an Indic original, and they are clearly corrupt in places, as is typical for dhāraṇīs transmitted in Tibetan. I have rendered them in a plain reconstructed Sanskritic spelling without attempting to emend or translate them. The ingredients named in the ritual instructions are uncertain. "Mad se" most plausibly means mustard seed (a common ritual substance in pacifying rites), though the form is unusual. "Pa rta ka" is obscure; I have tentatively taken it as ash from a burnt offering, but it may be a transliterated Indic term or a corrupt reading. "Ga gon ring po" is read as a long nail, but this too is not secure. The phrase "gshegs nam cher pa'i" is likely a corruption and has been read as "even if it is large"; the sense of the sentence, that the tumor is pacified, is clear.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.