The Noble Great King of Dedications, together with Mantras (Sanskrit, Ārya Mahāpariṇāmarāja Samantraka) is a short devotional and liturgical work centered on the dedication of merit, the Buddhist practice of directing the benefit of one's virtuous actions toward the welfare and awakening of all beings. It opens with homage to all the buddhas and bodhisattvas and with verses of going for refuge, confession of non-virtue, rejoicing in the virtue of others, and requesting the buddhas to turn the wheel of Dharma, before turning to its dedications and accompanying mantras. The Tibetan text records that it was translated, revised, and finalized by the Indian preceptor Vidyākaraprabha and the great reviser-translator Palbrtsegs, who were active during the early Tibetan translation period. It appears as Toh 810 in the Kangyur, where it belongs to the tantra section, reflecting its combination of prayer with mantra recitation.

Translated, revised, and finalized by the Indian preceptor Vidyākaraprabha and the great reviser-translator, the venerable Palbrtsegs (Dpal-brtsegs).

In the Indian language: Ārya Mahāpariṇāmarāja Samantraka. In the Tibetan language: The Noble Great King of Dedications, together with Mantras. First volume.

Homage to all the buddhas and bodhisattvas.

I go for refuge, without exception, to the buddhas, ocean of boundless qualities,
to the noble and sacred Dharma,
and to the Saṅgha who abide throughout the three times.

I confess all non-virtue.

I rejoice in the virtue of beings.

I request the fully awakened ones to turn the wheel of Dharma.

Whatever small virtue I may have,
seen by the all-knowing eye,
by it may all those who are forever separated from happiness be completely pacified.

May the samādhi that knows emptiness, endowed with the supreme of all aspects,
be, throughout my lives until awakening, always accompanied by happiness.

May I abide constantly in equipoise, free of concepts and spontaneously accomplished, and, like the sun, the moon, and the wish-fulfilling jewel, may I engage in the benefit of sentient beings.

Just as the wise Victors dedicate through the perfection of wisdom and skillful means, so too do I dedicate all my virtues to awakening.

Whatever virtue of my body, speech, and mind is directed toward the Three Jewels, and whatever arises from generosity, moral discipline,
patience, diligence, meditative concentration, and wisdom,
by all of these, may I myself
be endowed with pure conduct, and in the teaching of the Protector of the World
may I be master of delight in going forth.

Having become skilled in the meaning and words of the scriptures spoken by all the buddhas, may I uphold the sacred Dharma and have no attachment to body or life.

When the time of my death comes,
with an undistorted and unconfused mind,
having seen the Buddha Amitāyus, may I go from here to Sukhāvatī, the Blissful Land.

When the realm of Māra becomes manifest, may the great sage Amitāyus constantly be my teacher, and having attained the ten grounds,
by their stages of complete purification,
may I attain supreme awakening.
Having attained the state of the buddha Samantabhadra, having uprooted all accumulated faults together with their habitual tendencies, endowed with unobscured wisdom and compassion,

may I bring healing and happiness to beings.

I pay homage to the Blessed Buddhas of the ten directions, whose minds pervade without exception all that is to be known throughout the boundless ten directions, and to the bodhisattvas, numerous as the ocean.

Having cleared away the stains of mind and the twofold mentation, first of all I bow my head to Śākyamuni, the sage, king of the Śākyas.
To the Victor Amitābha, who dwells in Sukhāvatī, and to my teachers as well, I long with joy and reverence.

To those buddhas who now appear in all directions,
who abide with certainty as loving protectors of beings,
and to all the Victors of the past and of the future,
I make perfect offerings with a joyful mind.

They are as follows. The perfectly awakened buddhas: Sun-and-Moon Lamp; Supreme Body of Golden Light; Voice of Truth; Excellent Meru; Great Meru; Source of Powers; Voice of the Lotus; Excellent Hand; Crest of Light; Source of the Supreme; Precious Moonlight; Host of Heroes; Universal Radiance; Pure Face; Jewel Crest; Source of Excellent Color; King of the Sāla Trees; Pure Light; Maker of Happiness, the King; Universal Radiance; Excellent Meru Illumined; Circle of Light; Heap of Jewels; Light Everywhere; Heap of Glory; Great Array; Purified, Radiant Vaiḍūrya; Banner of the Powers; Host of Attainment; and Utterly Serene.

Radiant Beauty; Cluster of Flowers; Excellent Eyes; Utterly Excellent; Excellent Light Lamp; Pure Intention; Light-Rays of the Dharma; Possessor of Great Diligence; Lotus Heart; Steadfast in Superior Intention; Vajra Host; Well-Born; Excellent Conduct; Melodious Voice; Glory and Light of Qualities; Crest of the World; Excellent and Radiant Color; Ever Diligent; Sandalwood Moonlight; Increasing Glory; Ocean; Great Lord; Lord of Victors; Array of Light; Trained in Diligence; Lamp Everywhere; Great Speaker; Utterly Crushing with the Vajra Heart; Divine Sage; Fire Light; Delightful; Complete Vanquisher; Great Crest; Gone Utterly High; Intent on Benefit; Great Sage; Seeing Completely; Possessor of the Crown Protuberance; Protector of All; Guardian of Light; Golden Color; Supreme Splendor; Lofty; Auspicious; Renowned Jewel; Splendor and Light; Vairocana; Amoghadarśin, Seeing Meaning; Crest of the Lord; Renowned; Maker of Light; Viṣṇu Intelligence; Victor Among the Stars; Pusya; Descending Light; Precious Stūpa; Blazing Crest; Compassionate Mind; Utterly Serene Lord; Pure Eyes; Supreme Moon; God of Truth; Hidden Sage; Sage (Muni); Voice of Brahmā; Face Turned Everywhere; Irreproachable; Vanquisher of Māra; King of the Gods; Well-Arrived; Excellent Splendor; Lord of Hosts; One Who Has Gone by Utterly Subduing; Immeasurable Light; Moon King; Attainer of Great Bliss; Become Radiance; Great Ocean; Unshakable; Supreme Lord; Flower Crest; Great Caravan Leader; Complete Conqueror; Excellent Flower; Excellent Spiritual Friend; Excellent Constellation; Heart of the Sun; Glory of Hosts; Glory of Wealth; Excellent Radiance; Amitābha, Immeasurable Light; Great Glory; Supreme Power; and Lamp.

These and all the other Victors, those who came before and those who will come after, who have become immeasurable rivers of qualities, who have fully crossed the mire of the river of saṃsāra, who are endowed with generosity and pure moral discipline, with the supreme excellence of great patience, who have trained in diligence, who possess great meditative concentration with a heart that never wavers, who possess keen and unobstructed knowledge, in whom compassion for beings and the intention to attain complete awakening, with its accumulations, has arisen fully, who care tenderly for all the world, who strive wholeheartedly for the benefit of others, who are the very heart of beings, who have loving-kindness toward all creatures, who are without agitation, without elation, without attachment, whose very nature is a loving mind, gods even among gods, honored by the supreme among humans, gods even among gods: to those Victors I bow down with my body, speech, and mind, in many ways full of reverence.

May those Victors protect me from evil in every way. May they, with great effort, lead out all beings tormented by many sufferings. Endowed with great compassion, may they draw me too out of the evil destinies, and likewise swiftly establish me in perfect awakening.

Whatever virtue I have accomplished by proclaiming the names of the great sages, by that, in all my lives, may I be in the company of that Lord of Sages.

I make offerings to the Sugatas, with offerings of Dharma and of material wealth, to those who are free from affliction. Having made these offerings, relying on the two paths,

May all beings become perfectly awakened buddhas. By hearing the names of those Tathāgatas, by having faith in them, by holding them, by bearing them in mind, and by proclaiming them aloud, all obscurations will be exhausted. One will be freed from every fear of the evil destinies, and one will certainly attain unsurpassed omniscience.

In all directions, as far as the Dharma realm pervades and the expanse of space extends, to all the buddhas of the three times, without remainder, without exception, the Blessed Ones, the Tathāgatas, who are encompassed by the five eyes, and to all the bodhisattvas, I bow down in homage.

May all those buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas turn their attention to me. I, called such-and-such, until I reach the essence of awakening, take refuge with my whole body in the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni, who is endowed with compassion, endowed with loving-kindness, who wishes only to benefit others, who is tender in heart, and who possesses the Dharma that has no birth and no cessation. With intention and with the highest intention, with joy that arises from the marrow of my bones and from the soles of my feet, with a mind wholly joyful, I go for refuge.

In the same way I take refuge in the Blessed Ones whose names follow. The Sorrowless; the One Ever Beyond Sorrow; the One Who Receives Burnt Offerings; the Supreme Joy; the Source of the Supreme; the Source of the Powers of Sense; the Lamp-Maker; the Lion's Roar; the Source of Beautiful Color; the Source of Jewels; the Supreme Jewel Lama; the Jewel Moon; the Jewel Arising; the Jewel Radiance; the Jewel Crest; the Jewel Luminosity; the Jewel Brilliance; the Jewel Abundance; the Jewel Circlet; the Jewel Lotus; the One Who Subdues with the Jewel Lotus; the Jewel Fire; the Jewel Fire Wheel; the One Adorned in Body with All Jewels; the Conqueror of Foes; the One Possessing the Force of the Earth's Power; the Supreme Lotus; the Supreme Body; the Supreme Moon; the Supreme Dharma; the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, Beyond Utterance; the Free from Conceptuality; the Immeasurable; the Infinite Jewel; the Infinite Stainless Jewel; the Infinite Hands; the Infinite Fame; the Great Fame; the Maker of Happiness, Great Attainment; the Great Power of Diligence, Sure Liberation; the One Reckoned Great in Qualities; the Immeasurable Melody; the Melody of Truth; the Melody of Complete Victory; the Melody of the Moon; the Melody of the Lotus; the Melody of the Lion; the Lion's Roar Proclaimer; the Vajra Roar Proclaimer; the One Who Utterly Crushes with the Vajra Heart; the Moonlight; the Sunlight; the Starlight; the Lotus Light; the Nectar Light; the Emanation Light; the Immeasurable Jewel Emanation Light; the Liberation Light; the Perfectly Pure Light; the Nonconceptual Starlight; the Star Lamp; the World Lamp; the Space Dharma Lamp; the Moon Lamp; the Moonlight; the Stainless Lama; the Stainless Radiance; the Golden Radiance; the Golden Luminance; the Golden Jewel Radiance; the Immeasurable Incense Radiance; the Incense Face; the All-Pervading Incense; the King of Brahmā's Melody; the Sovereign King of the Nāgas; the King of the Piled Glorious Essence, Proclaimer of Sound; the King of Lightning Lamps and Flowers; the King of the Treasure of Virtue Well Established; the King of Excellent Nectar Free of Flaws; the King of the Banner of Excellent Crests; the Sovereign King of the Fragrance of All Flowers; the King of the Drum Sound; the King of Sāla Trees.

And likewise the Blessed One Akṣobhya, and the Great Light, and the One Who Overwhelms with the Essence.

the One Who Overwhelms with the Splendor of Flowers; Meru; Great Meru; Utterly Meru; the One Like Excellent Meru; the One Who Completely Overwhelms with Excellent Meru; the Radiant Sky; the Radiant Moon and Sun; the Radiant Fire; the Radiant Jewel, Essence of Glory; the Radiance of Nectar's Outpouring; the Glory of the Supreme Moon; the Glory of Limitless Extent; the Glory of Gathered Jewels; the Glory Who Abides in the Power Never Turning Back from Jewels; the Glory of Purely Arising Jewels; the Glory of the Supreme Essence of Beryl; the Glory of Adorned Supreme Gold, Immeasurable in Conscientiousness; the Glory Exalted like the King of Palm Trees; the Glory of the Flourishing Tree; the Glory Who Abides Perfectly in Countless Deeds; the Glory of Meaningful Purpose; the Glory of the Accomplishment of All Aims; the Glory Manifested by the Supreme Lotus; the Glory of Pure and Clear Wisdom; Immeasurable Life; Immeasurable Melody; the Lotus Melody; the Lotus Host; the Host of Heroes; the Host of Firm Heroes with Weapons; the One Who Abandons Afflictions; the Utterly Purified Crest; the Crest Blazing Utterly Free of Stain; the One Who Cuts Through Doubt by Fully Awakened Resolve; the Vairocana Who Has Attained Complete Purity; the One Who Everywhere Overwhelms with Qualities; the Source of Qualities Everywhere.

And likewise the Blessed One, the Inconceivable One Who Overwhelms the Radiance of Jewels; the Radiant Jewel; the Many Jewels; and all the others of this kind. To all the fully awakened buddhas of the past, the future, and the present, who possess the nature that is without birth and without cessation, all sentient beings go for refuge, until they reach the essence of awakening.

Likewise, they go for refuge, until reaching the essence of awakening, to the Dharma of those Blessed Ones. That Dharma is free of conceptual elaboration and without letters; it is to be known individually, each by his own awareness, by the noble ones. In it there are no sentient beings, and it is free of the dust of sentient beings. It is without self, free of the dust of attachment, without life-force, free of birth and death. It has no person; it bears the mark of the perfect peace of the earlier extreme and the later extreme. It is free of attachment, of a manner without any object of focus. It is not a letter. All speech is cut off in it; it is inexpressible, free of all waves. It follows after all things and is like space. It is without color, free of sign and shape and all movement. It is without self, free of clinging to a self. It is without conscious intimation, free of mind, mentation, and consciousness. Because it has no equal, it has no likeness. It is free of the mark of a cause, without anything superimposed by conditions. It is equal to the dharmadhātu; it is the meditative equipoise of all phenomena. In the manner of going nowhere, it follows suchness. Because it is utterly unmoving, it abides in the true limit. Because it does not abide in the six sense objects, it is unshaken. Because it has no abode, it comes anywhere and yet there is no going. It is placed in equipoise upon emptiness, distinguished by the signless. It bears the mark of the wishless. It is free of conceptual thought and of refutation, without establishing and without disturbing. It is free of arising and perishing. It has no all-base. It has passed completely beyond eye, ear, nose, tongue, body, and mind. It is without height and without lowness; it has attained abiding without movement. It is free of all activity. In brief, it is without any producing, without arising, without cessation, without ceasing: that unconditioned Dharma. To it, with all their bodies they prostrate, and with every thought of intention and superior intention, with joy from the marrow of the bones and with joy rising from the soles of the feet, they go for refuge, until reaching the essence of awakening.

In the same way, I go for refuge to the Blessed One who possesses unobstructed and unfailing eloquence, who is renowned as the Stainless One. In the same way I prostrate with my whole body to the supreme assembly of irreversible bodhisattvas, such as Vajragarbha, Vajrasena, the one named Crown Ornament of the Gods, Gandhahastin, Satyapada, Jñānaketu, Dharmaketu, Candraketu, Sūryaketu, Anantaketu, the Wordless One, the Inexpressible One, the Objectless One, the Effortless One, the One Who Becomes a Woman, Tārādhvaja, Merudhvaja, Puṣpadhvaja, Aśaṅgadhvaja, and others like them. With every thought of intention and superior intention, with joy from the marrow of the bones and with joy rising from the soles of the feet, I go for refuge until reaching the essence of awakening.

I prostrate to the Tathāgata, the King of Peace.

Tadyathā: śānte śānte, rāgaḥṣayaṃ, śānte śānte, dveṣaḥṣayaṃ, śānte śānte, mohaḥṣayaṃ. Thus it is to be said twice and three times.

Tadyathā: muruluru, muruluru, āvaha, muruluru, vijayāya svāhā.

Having thus gone for refuge to the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha, I will generate the awakening mind, with every thought of intention and superior intention, making great compassion manifest, in order to become a physician and a source of happiness for all sentient beings, a protector of those without protectors, a refuge of those without refuge, an ally of those without allies, to bring light to those who have become darkness through attachment, aversion, and delusion, to show the way to those who dwell on evil paths, and so to liberate the sentient beings of the three realms.

Just as the buddhas, the Blessed Ones of the past, the future, and the present, and the bodhisattvas have generated it, are generating it, and will generate it, so I too will generate it. With a mental continuum of intention and superior intention, I will generate it in just that way.

I will generate it in such a way that nothing is obstructed, nothing is accumulated, and it is shown not to be accumulated; there is no accomplishing, no thought, and no conceptual construction.

Where there is no body and no designation of a body; no speech and no designation of speech; no mind, no mental consciousness, and no cognition; it is not suchness, not the dharmadhātu, not the true limit, not buddha, not awakening. Where there is no clinging to any of these, I will generate it in just that way.

Relying on the conventional, I confess all misdeeds. I rejoice in all merit. I request all the Tathāgatas to teach.

Having confessed all misdeeds, rejoiced in all merit, and made the request to all the Tathāgatas, I will now recite these dhāraṇīs.

I prostrate to all buddhas and bodhisattvas. I prostrate to the Tathāgata Candanagandha.

Tadyathā: cīrate, marīcike, durdame, űur anupraviṣṭe, candranāgandhe, viśuddhaśīye, caritravati, sarvatathāgatādhiṣṭhite svāhā.

May the perfectly complete buddhas and bodhisattvas gathered in the world systems of the ten directions give heed to me. Whatever I, covered by the cataract of ignorance and made dark, throughout this life or throughout other births, in beginningless and endless saṃsāra, wandering in saṃsāra, with regard to the buddhas and the Dharma, the Saṅgha, my parents, my teachers, the worthy recipients of offerings, my preceptors, my masters, and my companions in the pure life, whatever misdeeds I have committed through body, speech, and mind, or caused others to commit, or rejoiced in when others committed them; whatever I have plundered from the Buddha, the Dharma, or the Saṅgha, or from the great gateway of assembly of the Saṅgha of the four directions, or caused others to plunder, or rejoiced in when others plundered; and whatever small, middling, or great transgression has arisen against the vows of individual liberation or the moral discipline and vows of the bodhisattva, all that is to be confessed and is fit to be confessed.

Before those who are gathered in the world systems of the ten directions, who have entered the great ground and attained great wisdom, who are endowed with compassion and loving-kindness, who wish for the welfare of beings and are tender-hearted, the perfectly complete buddhas, Śākyamuni and the others, and likewise Vairocana, Rājaprabha, the Supreme Dharma of Real Nature, the Immaculate Source, the Jewel Lamp Radiance, the One Adorned with the Moon, the Splendor of Lightning, the Sovereign King of Melody, the King Sāla Blossoming Fully with Flowers, the Starlight of Flowers, the One Who Plays through Higher Knowledge, the Pure Moon Disc, the One Skilled in Perfect Peace, the Sovereign King of Moon Melody, the One of Countless Diligence, the Glory of Perfect Consecration, the One Who Gives Up Everything of Himself, the One Who Considers Great Compassion, the One with the Seal of Jewels in His Hand, the One with a Jewel in His Hand, the One Who Turned the Wheel of Dharma immediately upon generating the mind of awakening, the One Hard to Endure, the Water God, the Immaculate, the One Who Abandons the Lower Realms, and the others: before all of these I admit my faults, admit my faults. I confess. I break them down. I utterly destroy them. I censure them. Childish and foolish, entered upon wrong views, sunk in saṃsāra, I ask that my faults be received as faults.

I prostrate to the Tathāgata Satyabuddhi, King of the Crest. I prostrate to the bodhisattva, the great being, Dense Heap of Gold, the King of the Essence of Increasing Virtue.

Tadyathā: satye satye, satyaviśodhani, satyāmbuja, vilocani, sarvāvaraṇa nirvaraṇa viśodhani svāhā.

May those buddhas, blessed ones, and bodhisattvas, arousing great compassion, give heed to me. Whatever misdeeds I have committed through body, speech, and mind, or caused others to commit, or rejoiced in when others committed them, in this life or in other lives, in this or that existence, toward bodhisattvas who have generated the mind of awakening, and those who have not yet generated the mind of awakening, those who aspire to it, those newly entered into the Vehicle, those who have just generated the first thought of awakening, those joined to the practice, those who have attained forbearance toward the unborn nature of phenomena, those who are irreversible, those bound to only one more birth, those who have entered the ten grounds, those not yet empowered, those who have attained empowerment, those who are empowered, those striving on the side of virtue, and those striving in emptiness, the signless, the wishless, and the other factors that belong to awakening; and likewise toward the noble pratyekabuddhas, those established in their path, the noble stream-enterers, once-returners, non-returners, and arhats, those who have attained the five outer higher knowledges, others who are free from attachment, the seers, and others who are on the right path or those who have entered a wrong path, up to all who possess the essence of the Tathāgatas, and all who belong within the realm of the dharmadhātu: toward all of these I have committed wrongdoing through body, speech, and mind, in the ten ways; I have caused others to commit it; and I have rejoiced in its being committed. Before the eyes of those who have attained the great ground, who have gained great wisdom, and who gather in the world systems of the ten directions, before the hearers, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and perfectly awakened buddhas of the past, the future, and the present, I confess my faults as faults. I declare them. I lay them bare. I utterly dismantle them. I demolish them completely. I reproach them. Foolish and ignorant, having entered a wrong view, I have sunk into saṃsāra; may you accept these faults as faults.

I prostrate to the one who has become the Youthful Moonlight.

Tadyathā: prabhe prabhākare, prabhavati, dharma-viśuddhe, karma-viśuddhir bhavatu me, svāhā.

May those buddhas and bodhisattvas think of me. Whatever I have done, in this life or in other lives, over a hundred births, a thousand births, ten thousand births, or in the beginningless and endless wandering of saṃsāra: having made it impossible for a buddha to appear; having abandoned the sacred Dharma; having committed the five acts of immediate retribution, caused others to commit them, and rejoiced in their being committed; having taught what is Dharma as non-Dharma and what is non-Dharma as Dharma; having abandoned the awakening mind; having made a spiritual friend unfit; and from that up to having in any way, even for a moment, opposed the mind of any sentient being, even those born as animals, having done so, caused others to do so, and rejoiced in its being done; and whatever obscuration has covered me so that the causes of the grounds do not arise, the cause of meditative absorption, the cause of dhāraṇī, the cause of the higher knowledges, the cause of the discriminating awarenesses, the cause of the bases of miraculous power, the cause of the empowerments, the cause of the perfections, and likewise the causes of all the other factors that belong to awakening, up to the appearances of the buddhas, so that these causes do not arise: the karmic obscuration, the obscuration of ripening, the cognitive obscuration, and the afflictive obscuration, all of these I confess before the perfectly awakened buddhas, who gather in the world systems of the ten directions, who have attained the great ground, who have gained great wisdom, who are endowed with compassion and loving-kindness, who intend benefit and are tender-hearted, the Blessed One Śākyamuni and the others.

And likewise before Immaculate Radiant Clarity, Ornament of Eloquence and Intention, Immaculate Moon, Renowned as a Flower, Arrayed with Flowers, the Illuminator, the Radiant Maker, Supreme Jewel, Fearless Seeing, Fearful, Timid, the one without hair-raising, the one with the Power of the Lion's Roar, and the perfectly awakened buddha Golden Light, Splendid King, and the others.

And likewise before the bodhisattvas, the noble Radiance in All Directions, Immaculate Conqueror, Giver of Sound, the one who turns the wheel of Dharma without obstruction, the one who turns the wheel of Dharma immediately upon generating the mind, the one who turns the wheel of Dharma without obscuration, Immaculate and Pure, the Eye-Purifier, the one whose mind deceives no sentient being, Sweet Sound Proclaiming Melody, the Victor's Intelligence, the Good One Who Came Before, Cloud Sound, Supreme Joyful King, Festival of Joy, the Ever-Diligent, Meru-Summit-Holder, and the others, who possess the Dharma that is unborn and unceasing, of the past and...

Before those Buddhas of the future and of the present as well, I acknowledge my faults as faults. I confess them. I tear them down. I utterly demolish them. I censure them. Foolish and ignorant, entered upon wrong views, sunk in saṃsāra, I ask that you hold my faults as faults.

Tadyathā: samayoge, cittavivarte, akheme khe, madane, vibhagate, samantaguṇe, satyaramemukte, pramukte, hile, asili, acame came, aciṭe, maciṭe, hare, moce mayo, grahe, hemavate, caṃpade, dharmacitte, avikṣave svāhā.

May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas draw me out from sinking in the three realms. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas lift me up from falling into the great chasm. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas pull me out from where I lie in the great, deep well. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas protect me from having fallen into the great wilderness. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas rescue me when I am driven by the great ocean of the afflictions. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas free me from the bonds of saṃsāra that hold me fast. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas teach me as though I were an only child. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas train me as though I were a beloved disciple. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas, having brought to fulfillment their hundreds of thousands of hardships, keep me in their thought. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas, having brought to fulfillment their great aspirations, tens of tens of thousands, beyond number, bring them to fulfillment for me as well. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas, having realized the meditative absorptions of emptiness, of signlessness, and of wishlessness, cause them to arise in me. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas establish me in the supreme, undefiled Dharma and discipline. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas wash me with the water of great compassion. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas anoint me with the ten powers. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas cover me with the garment of modesty and a sense of shame. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas scatter over me the flowers of the limbs of awakening. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas empower me with the empowerment of the crown prince. May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas give me a prophecy with the great lion's roar.

I prostrate to the Tathāgata Moon Supreme. I prostrate to the bodhisattva, the great being Fearless Source.

Tadyathā: dhare dhare, dhāraṇi, nidhane, abhaya, kalpe kalpe, vikṣe, asmṛtakalpa, hutaśane, anantamukhe, anantacakṣuḥ, uṅgate, oṃ bhrūṃ svāhā.

May the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, the perfectly complete Buddhas, and those bodhisattvas turn their thought to me. Whatever I have done, in this life or in other births, in a hundred births or a thousand births, in saṃsāra without beginning or end, during the time I wandered in saṃsāra, toward the Buddha, the Dharma, the Saṅgha, my father and mother, my teachers, and...

...the worthy recipients of offerings, my preceptors, my masters, my fellow practitioners of the holy life, and others besides, from those who have entered the right path and the wrong path, up to all those who possess the essence of the Tathāgatas and who belong to the realm of the dharmadhātu: whether I gave them as little as a single morsel of food, or cultivated loving-kindness, or acted well outwardly and inwardly through body, speech, and mind, all of this I shall dedicate to unsurpassed, perfectly complete awakening. Just as the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas of the past, the future, and the present, having realized the nature of reality, have dedicated, will dedicate, and are dedicating, so too shall I dedicate. In whatever way that nature of reality is, in whatever way that suchness is, in whatever way that true limit is, in whatever way that dharmadhātu is, in whatever way that emptiness is, in whatever way that omniscience is, endowed with that, so shall I dedicate.

I prostrate to the Tathāgata Fragrance of the Mandārava Flower.

Tadyathā: viji rimbha, utpādayaya, viji rimbha, stambhahara, stambhahara, anūna, tathāgata, bhūtaḥ, vijirimbha svāhā.

Whoever the perfectly complete Buddhas and bodhisattvas of the past, the future, and the present are, who first generated the thought: "May I bring across the beings who have not crossed, liberate those not yet liberated, give breath to those who have not yet drawn breath, and lead to complete nirvāṇa those not yet fully passed beyond sorrow"; and others besides, who abide in the Perfection of Wisdom and have generated that rightly endowed thought: toward all of them I rejoice, with a rejoicing that is supreme, foremost, holy, excellent, highest, unsurpassed, with nothing above it, higher even than the highest, without equal, equal to the unequalled, without a fixed object, without conceptual thought, without sign, without elaboration, without letters, without affliction, without attachment, equal to space, liberated in body and mind, a rejoicing in emptiness endowed with the supreme of all aspects.

Whoever the perfectly complete Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, of the past, the future, and the present are, Śākyamuni, Inexhaustible Intellect, Jewel Banner Light, Stainless Essence, Small, Middling, and Great, Play of Higher Knowledge, Miraculous Display, Renowned Cloud-Hidden, Lion King of Playful Display, Noble King of the Manifest Mountain, King Crest-Bearer Protector of All the Sacred Dharma, and the others: from the time they first generated the thought of awakening, for as long as the sacred Dharma abides, until the noble Great King of Dedication together with its mantra, all the merit arising from generosity, the grounds of merit-making, that arising from moral discipline, that arising from meditation, whatever hundreds of thousands of billions of great aspirations, beyond number, they accomplished, whatever emptiness, signlessness, and aspirationlessness they rightly undertook, whatever afflictions, together with their habitual tendencies and their connecting links, they abandoned, whatever wisdom of omniscience they accumulated, up to whatever good conduct, outer and inner, they performed through body, speech, and mind: toward all of this I rejoice, as supreme, foremost, holy, excellent, highest, unsurpassed, with nothing above it, the highest of the high, without equal, unequal yet equal, without object, without conceptual thought, without signs, without elaboration, without letters, without affliction, without attachment, equal to space, with body and mind liberated, endowed with the supreme of all aspects: with the rejoicing that is rejoicing in emptiness, I rejoice.

Of all the noble bodhisattvas of the past, the future, and the present, such as Siṃhavikrīḍita, Siṃhaviṣṇubhita, Siṃhaketu, Ratnaketu, Siṃhanirmāṇaketu, Padmavyūha, Avikrāntacārin, and others, from the moment of their first generating the awakening mind, throughout the whole span of the ten times: whatever merit and basis for meritorious action arising from generosity, that arising from moral discipline, that arising from meditation, whatever hundreds of thousands of billions of great aspirations, beyond number, they accomplished, whatever six perfections they accomplished, whatever emptiness, signlessness, and aspirationlessness they rightly undertook, whatever great awakening they accumulated, up to whatever good conduct, outer and inner, they performed through body, speech, and mind: toward all of this I rejoice, as supreme, foremost, holy, excellent, highest, unsurpassed, with nothing above it, the highest of the high, without equal, unequal yet equal, without object, without conceptual thought, without signs, without elaboration, without letters, without affliction, without attachment, equal to space, with body and mind liberated, endowed with the supreme of all aspects: with the rejoicing that is rejoicing in emptiness, I rejoice.

Of all the noble solitary victors (pratyekabuddhas) of the past, the future, and the present, such as Kleśadamana, Kuśalāvatāraka, Gandhaśikhin, Bhūdhara, and others, from the moment of their first generating the mind of awakening, throughout the whole span until, by a single vehicle, they passed into the nirvāṇa without remainder of the aggregates: whatever merit and basis for meritorious action arising from generosity, that arising from moral discipline, that arising from meditation, whatever they rightly possessed and abided in of the perfection of wisdom in its later phase, whatever emptiness, signlessness, and aspirationlessness they rightly undertook, whatever awakening of the solitary kind they accumulated, up to whatever good conduct, outer and inner, they performed through body, speech, and mind: toward all of this I rejoice, as supreme, foremost, holy, excellent, highest, unsurpassed, with nothing above it, the highest of the high, without equal, unequal yet equal, without object, without conceptual thought, without signs, without elaboration, without letters, without affliction, without attachment, equal to space, with body and mind liberated, endowed with the supreme of all aspects: with the rejoicing that is rejoicing in emptiness, I rejoice.

Of all the noble ones of the past, the future, and the present, the stream-enterers, the once-returners, the non-returners, and the arhats, such as the noble Śāriputra, Maudgalyāyana, Kātyāyana, Prajñāpradīpa, Subhūti, and others, from the moment of their first generating the mind, throughout the whole span until, by a single vehicle, they passed into the nirvāṇa without remainder of the aggregates: whatever merit and basis for meritorious action arising from generosity, that arising from moral discipline, that arising from meditation, whatever they rightly possessed and abided in of the perfection of wisdom,

I rejoice with the rejoicing that is the rejoicing in emptiness, endowed with the supreme of all aspects, which is supreme, chief, sacred, excellent, surpassing, unsurpassed, without anything higher, higher even than the highest, without equal, equal to the unequalled, without object of focus, without conceptual thought, without sign, without aspiration, without letters, without affliction, without attachment, equal to space, liberated in body and mind. I rejoice in all of these: whatever is endowed with emptiness, the signless, and the wishless, whatever has been rightly undertaken, whatever has been accumulated toward the awakening of the hearers, and, up to and including whatever has been well practiced outwardly and inwardly through body, speech, and mind.

Likewise, whatever belongs to the realm of sentient beings born in the three realms: the merit and basis for meritorious action arising from generosity, that arising from moral discipline, that arising from meditation, whatever has been rightly undertaken of the paths of action of the ten virtues, and, up to and including whatever has been well practiced outwardly and inwardly through body, speech, and mind, and whatever in the future abides in and is rightly endowed with the perfection of wisdom. I rejoice in all of these with the rejoicing that is the rejoicing in emptiness, endowed with the supreme of all aspects, which is supreme, chief, sacred, excellent, surpassing, unsurpassed, without anything higher, higher even than the highest, without equal, equal to the unequalled, without object of focus, without conceptual thought, without sign, without aspiration, without letters, without affliction, without attachment, equal to space, liberated in body and mind.

I prostrate to the Tathāgata, the supreme word, the face.

Tadyathā: candane candane, candanaṅge, candane prabhāvare, candana-abhaye, candana-siddhe, candana-avalokite, candana-yaśa-udgate svāhā.

Gathering together all those roots of virtue endowed with rejoicing and endowed with dedication, and all that has been accumulated in saṃsāra, which has no beginning or end of births, and all that will be accumulated up to the limit of nirvāṇa in the future, I offer it to the gods who are devoted to virtue and who constantly follow it.

By that root of virtue, may I become endowed with radiance, endowed with strength, greatly powerful, and difficult to overcome. May I swiftly awaken fully into unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and turn the wheel of Dharma. May I conquer the four māras. May I bring sentient beings to full maturity. And may I, having manifested great compassion that strives toward the side of virtue, bring about close mindfulness. May I dispel laziness. May I show the path nearby. May I turn back non-virtuous actions. May I engage others in virtue. May I bring radiance into the body. May I rightly generate power and strength. May I be fully freed from this great and thick obscuration. For as long as the realm of sentient beings, the realm of karma, the realm of afflictions, and the realm of space endure, may I remain for the benefit of sentient beings.

By whatever virtue has arisen from that root of virtue, may the gods who dwell in this temple, the noble Vaiśravaṇa, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Ārya-Skyes-po, Ugly-Eyed, Pañcaśikha, Pañcalen, Excellent Jewel, Excellent Fullness, the great goddess Śrī together with her retinue of green sons, and the others; the leaders of the ground, such as Bodhivastra; the nāga lords such as Nanda and Upananda; the yakṣa lords such as Aṭavaka; and whatever other gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, mahoragas, humans, and non-human beings there may be, to all of these I offer that root of virtue.

By that root of virtue, may they become possessed of radiance, possessed of power, of great authority, and hard to overcome. May they quickly awaken fully to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, and turn the wheel of Dharma. May they utterly subdue the four māras. May they bring sentient beings to full maturity. And may I too, having manifested great compassion that strives for virtue, bring about close mindfulness. May I dispel laziness. May I show the path nearby. May I turn back non-virtuous actions. May I engage others in virtue. May I bring radiance into the body. May I rightly generate power and strength. May I be fully freed from this great and thick obscuration. For as long as the realm of sentient beings, the realm of karma, the realm of afflictions, and the realm of space endure, may I remain for the benefit of sentient beings.

By whatever virtue has arisen from that root of virtue, I dedicate that root of virtue to all sentient beings born in the hells, as animals, as hungry ghosts, and in the world of Yama; to those born in states without the leisure to practice; to those who are separated from the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha; to those outside this teaching of the Blessed One, and to the non-Buddhists (tīrthikas) other than that, all the way to those who are fixed in wrong views.

By that root of virtue, may they take birth, in these very aggregates, in completely pure buddha fields, and continue until they fully awaken to complete awakening and turn the wheel of Dharma. May they utterly subdue the four māras. May they bring sentient beings to full maturity. And may I too, having made directly manifest great compassion that strives wholeheartedly for the side of virtue, bring about close mindfulness. May I dispel laziness. May I show the path nearby. May I turn back non-virtuous actions. May I engage others in virtue. May I bring radiance into the body. May I rightly generate power and strength. May I be fully freed from this great and thick obscuration. For as long as the realm of sentient beings, the realm of karma, the realm of afflictions, and the realm of space endure, may I remain for the benefit of sentient beings.

By whatever virtue has arisen from that root of virtue, I offer that root of virtue to all those sentient beings who are devoted to the Hearers' Vehicle and wish to attain definite release through the Hearers' Vehicle.

By that root of virtue, may they, focusing on the four aspects of the path and making directly manifest what accords perfectly with the nature of the noble Four Truths, fully awaken to the awakening of the hearers. Having so awakened, may they, through the one vehicle, pass completely into nirvāṇa, the realm without remainder of the aggregates.

By whatever virtue has arisen from that root of virtue, I offer that root of virtue to all those sentient beings who are devoted to the Solitary Buddhas' Vehicle and wish to attain definite release through the Solitary Buddhas' Vehicle.

By that root of virtue, may they directly realize the nature of dependent origination, its arising and its ceasing, and fully awaken by themselves to their own awakening. Having so awakened, may they, through the one vehicle, pass completely into nirvāṇa, the realm without remainder of the aggregates.

By whatever virtue has arisen from that root of virtue, I offer that root of virtue to all those sentient beings who are devoted to the Great Vehicle, who wish to attain definite release through the Great Vehicle, and who wish to liberate all sentient beings.

By that root of virtue, may they, having thoroughly gathered the accumulations and fully amassed the root of virtue, directly realize the nature of reality, which is without arising and without cessation, and become fully awakened into great awakening.

By whatever virtue has arisen from that root of virtue, I offer that root of virtue to the realm of sentient beings born in the three realms. May all those sentient beings of the three realms fully awaken into great awakening and set the wheel of Dharma in motion. May they subdue the four māras. May they bring sentient beings to full maturity.

And may I too, directly manifesting great compassion that strives toward the side of virtue, establish mindfulness. May I dispel laziness. May I point out the path. May I turn beings back from non-virtue. May I engage them in virtue. May radiance dwell in my body. May I fully generate power and strength. May I be liberated from this great and heavy obscuration. For as long as the realm of sentient beings, the realm of karma, the realm of the afflictions, and the realm of space endure, for so long may I remain for the benefit of sentient beings.

I pay homage to the bodhisattva, the great being, the noble Avalokiteśvara, the Lord.

Tadyathā: avaloke, loka, viloke, lokaviloki, avalokaya hrīme, sarva karma āvaraṇebhyaḥ svāhā.

To the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, who dwell in the world-realms of the ten directions, whose compassion pervades all, who abide and sustain life by the blessing of their former aspirations, namely: Bhadraśrī, Candanaśrī, Ketuśrī, Aśokaśrī, Ketuśrī, Puṣpaśrī, Prabhāśrī, Dhanaśrī, Sāgaraśrī, Ratnapūjādhvaja Samantāvabhāsa, and others, I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with joy from the depths of my bones and joy from the soles of my feet, with all my mind and with my whole body, and pay homage.

To the stūpas of their bodies that have passed into complete nirvāṇa, to their shrines, to their fragrant chambers, to that very reality, and to that very nature of reality by which those Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, are distinguished, and to whatever relics have been fully perfumed by the meditative cultivation of the Perfection of Wisdom, to all of these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my mind and all my body, and pay homage.

And to those fully and perfectly awakened Buddhas of the past, to the stūpas of their bodies that have passed into complete nirvāṇa, to their shrines, to their fragrant chambers, to that very reality, and to that very nature of reality by which those Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, are distinguished, and to whatever relics have been fully perfumed by the meditative cultivation of the Perfection of Wisdom, to all of these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my mind and all my body, and pay homage.

And to those fully and perfectly awakened Buddhas of the future, to the stūpas of their bodies that will pass into complete nirvāṇa, to their shrines, to their fragrant chambers, to that very reality, and to that very nature of reality by which those Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, are distinguished, and to whatever relics have been fully perfumed by the meditative cultivation of the Perfection of Wisdom, to all of these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my mind and all my body, and pay homage.

And to the bodhisattvas who dwell in the world systems of the ten directions, those who are constantly diligent, utterly diligent, and who never abandon diligence, namely Varuṇamati, Prabhāmati, Gaganamati, Vidyunmati, Arthasiddhamati, Praśāntacāramati, Pratisaṃvit-prāpta, Nityodyukta, Pradhānaśūra, and all the others like them, to all of these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my mind and all my body, and pay homage.

And to the stūpas of their bodies that have passed into complete nirvāṇa, to their shrines, to their fragrant chambers, to that very reality, and to that very nature of reality by which those bodhisattvas are distinguished, and to whatever relics have been fully cultivated through the Perfection of Wisdom, to all of these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my mind and all my body, and pay homage.

And to those bodhisattvas of the past, to the stūpas of their bodies that have passed into complete nirvāṇa, to their shrines, to their fragrant chambers, to that very reality, and to that very nature of reality by which those bodhisattvas are distinguished, and to whatever relics have been fully perfumed by the meditative cultivation of the Perfection of Wisdom, to all of these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my mind and all my body, and pay homage.

And to those bodhisattvas of the future, to the stūpas of their bodies that will pass into complete nirvāṇa, to their shrines, to their fragrant chambers, to that very reality, and to that very nature of reality by which those bodhisattvas are distinguished, and to whatever relics have been fully perfumed by the meditative cultivation of the Perfection of Wisdom, to all of these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my mind and all my body, and pay homage.

And to the great bodhisattva's descent from the Tuṣita heaven into the womb, his dwelling there, his birth, his departure, his going to the heart of awakening, his perfect awakening, his subduing of Māra, and his turning of the wheel of Dharma, all the way to his great complete nirvāṇa, to whatever the Teacher displayed in these, to all of these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with my whole self, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

And to the stūpas of the bodies of those who, through skillful means, passed into complete nirvāṇa, to their shrines, to their fragrant chambers, to that very reality, and to that noble nature of reality by which those Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, are distinguished,

And to those relics of the body that have been fully cultivated through the Perfection of Wisdom, to these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

Those noble solitary buddhas (pratyekabuddhas) who abide in the world systems of the ten directions, who are skilled in the aggregates, the elements, and the sense sources, and who have realized arising and ceasing, among whose marks are conduct like that of the rhinoceros, and whatever their gatherings and their conduct may be, to all of these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

And to the stūpas of the bodies of those who have passed into complete nirvāṇa, to their shrines, to their fragrant chambers, to that very reality, and to that nature of reality by which those solitary buddhas are distinguished, and to those relics of the body that have been fully cultivated through the Perfection of Wisdom, to these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

Those solitary buddhas of the past, and the stūpas of the bodies of those who have passed into complete nirvāṇa, their shrines, their fragrant chambers, that very reality, and that nature of reality by which those solitary buddhas are distinguished, and those relics of the body that have been fully cultivated through the Perfection of Wisdom, to these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

Those solitary buddhas of the future, and the stūpas of the bodies of those who will pass into complete nirvāṇa, their shrines, their fragrant chambers, that very reality, and that nature of reality by which those bodhisattvas are distinguished, and those relics of the body that have been thoroughly cultivated through the Perfection of Wisdom, to these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

Those noble ones who abide in the world systems of the ten directions: the stream-enterers, the once-returners, the non-returners, and the arhats, and those who are entering upon these stages, and the stūpas of the relics of those who have passed into complete nirvāṇa, their shrines, their fragrant chambers, that very reality, and that nature of reality by which the stream-enterers, once-returners, non-returners, and arhats, and those entering upon these stages, are distinguished, and those relics of the body that have been fully cultivated through the Perfection of Wisdom, to these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

Those noble hearers (śrāvakas) of the past, and the stūpas of the bodies of those who have passed into complete nirvāṇa, their shrines, their fragrant chambers, that very reality, and that nature of reality by which those noble hearers are distinguished, and those relics of the body that have been fully cultivated through the Perfection of Wisdom, to these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

Those noble hearers of the future, and the stūpas of the bodies of those who will pass into nirvāṇa, their shrines, their fragrant chambers, that very reality, and that nature of reality by which those noble hearers are distinguished,

To those relics which have been fully cultivated through the Perfection of Wisdom, I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

Throughout the four continents of this world of the three realms, there are the noble hearers, the solitary buddhas, the bodhisattvas, and the bodies of the Tathāgatas. In short, in this world-system or in other world-systems, whatever has been prepared, is being prepared, or will be prepared, whatever has been made, is being made, or will be made as an offering to them: the stūpas of the relics of the noble hearers, the solitary buddhas, the bodhisattvas, and the Tathāgatas, their shrines, their fragrant chambers, that very reality, and that nature of reality by which these are distinguished, and those relics which have been fully cultivated through the Perfection of Wisdom, to these I bow with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, and pay homage.

I pay homage to all the buddhas and bodhisattvas.

Tadyathā: candra-prabhe, candana-cūrṇa-kaila-sabati, sarva-tathāgata-adhiṣṭhita-anumodite, svāhā.

Of all the immeasurable and varied offerings and acts of preparation that the buddhas, the Blessed Ones of the past, future, and present, and those bodhisattvas, have accomplished, are accomplishing, and will accomplish through the vast and profound six perfections, whatever portion may fall to my share, all of that I take as my own, and with my intention and my higher intention, with all my thought and all my body, I offer it to the hearers, the solitary buddhas, the bodhisattvas, and the perfectly complete buddhas, as numerous as the atoms in the world-systems of the ten directions. By this root of virtue, may all the perfections of all sentient beings, all the grounds, all the meditative absorptions, all the doors of dhāraṇī, and all the factors conducive to awakening become manifest. I pay homage to the Tathāgata King of the Drum Sound.

Tadyathā: ṭake ṭake, ṭake ṭake, ṭake svāhā.

Here ends the first section. The second section begins.

In these three realms, whatever fragrances of gods and humans, whatever forms of incense, flowers, fruits, and foods with their savors, whatever kinds of grain, gold, silver, jewels, pearls, beryl, and precious stones there may be, which have no owner and are not held as possessions, all these I make common to myself and all sentient beings, and I offer them to the perfectly complete buddhas, the bodhisattvas, the hearers, and the solitary victors of the past, future, and present, as numerous as the atoms in the world-systems of the ten directions. By this root of virtue, may emptiness, endowed with the supreme of all aspects, become manifest for all sentient beings. I pay homage to the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, King of the Proclamation of Vast and Profound Intelligence.

Tadyathā: vipula-svare, vipulayo-niśe, anale, anale, saṃbhave, anale, gatiṃ-gate, svāhā.

Whatever good conduct I have performed, outward and inward, through body, speech, and mind, whether declared or undeclared, by day and by night, in sleeping and waking, in coming, going, sitting, and standing, up to the time when my faculties cease,

Whatever root of virtue I have accumulated throughout beginningless and endless cyclic existence, from birth to birth, and whatever root of virtue exists up to the essence of awakening, all of this I make common to all sentient beings, and in the manner of non-duality I shall dedicate it fully to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Just as the buddhas, the Blessed Ones of the past, the future, and the present, and the bodhisattvas have dedicated, so too shall I dedicate.

I pay homage to the seven perfectly complete buddhas.

By the splendor of Vipasyin and the diligence of the Lion of the Śākyas, may attachment, aversion, and delusion never be stirred.

Tadyathā: jayanti, vijayanti, aparājite, māra-sainya-pramardaniye, svāhā.

By that root of virtue, whatever sentient beings rely upon the six classes of beings, all of these I shall entrust to the perfection of generosity. Likewise I shall entrust them to moral discipline, patience, diligence, meditative concentration, wisdom, skillful means, aspiration, power, and the perfection of primordial wisdom.

Likewise I shall entrust them to the grounds: the Very Joyful, the Stainless, the Luminous, the Radiant, the Difficult to Master, the Manifest, the Far-Going, the Immovable, the Excellent Intelligence, and the Cloud of Dharma.

Likewise I shall entrust them to the following absorptions: the vajra-like absorption; the absorption of striving manifestly toward the means of steadfast abiding; the absorption of complete accumulation; the absorption of definite emergence; the absorption of total illumination; the absorption of universal appearance; the absorption of the jewel crest; the absorption of the jewel moon; the absorption of the banner-top crest; the absorption of accumulated compassion; and the absorption of skill in knowing the teaching that distinguishes the words of all phenomena.

Likewise I shall entrust them to the dhāraṇīs: the dhāraṇī that accomplishes the inexhaustible seal of the ocean; the dhāraṇī of entering the conduct of sentient beings; the dhāraṇī of the sun's crest, the infinitely shining; the dhāraṇī of the stainless moon, of manifestly exalted splendor; the dhāraṇī that dispels all entanglements; the dhāraṇī that scatters limitless afflictions through the teaching of the vajra essence; the dhāraṇī that gathers together, in the ultimate sense, the teaching of the inexpressible meaning; the dhāraṇī that enters the sound of speech with intentional words; the dhāraṇī that accomplishes stainlessness like the expanse of the sky; the dhāraṇī sealed with the seal of the inexhaustible; and the dhāraṇī that accomplishes the full attainment of the limitless bodies of the buddhas.

Thus, having set them in the ten perfections and in the ten gateways of dhāraṇī, may I, together with all these beings, after passing from here, be born in the world-system of Sukhāvatī, the Blissful. There may I please the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Amitābha, and the Blessed One Avalokiteśvara, Lord of the World, and the Blessed One Mahāsthāmaprāpta, together with those bodhisattvas and their retinues. May I never displease the Blessed Ones and their retinues.

I pay homage to the Tathāgata Amitābha.

Tadyathā: padme padme ni, padma-locane, padma-saṃbhave, svāhā.

I pay homage to the Tathāgata Amitābha.

Tadyathā: amita, udbhave, amita-saṃbhave, amita-vikrānti, gagana-kīrti-kare, sarva-karma-kleśa-kṣayaṃ-kari, svāhā.

By that root of virtue, may I be prophesied by Noble Maitreya himself, immediately after he has become fully awakened. May the prophecy be given directly, in person; may it be a true prophecy, an open prophecy, not a hidden one; a prophecy in suchness, a prophecy in the true limit, a prophecy in the dharmadhātu, a prophecy extending even to the seeing of reality itself. Having received the prophecy, may I please that Blessed One, together with the bodhisattvas and the Saṅgha of hearers. May I make offerings of robes, food, bedding, and the requisites of medicines for the sick, and of other undefiled offerings to the Tathāgatas. In his presence may I receive the going forth, the going forth in youth, the going forth openly and not in secret, the going forth in suchness, the going forth in the true limit, even the going forth that culminates in the seeing of reality itself. And may that going forth be exalted above the worldly and the transworldly, faultless, unmixed, free of turbidity, a joy to gods and humans, praised by buddhas and bodhisattvas. May I go forth for the sake of healing sentient beings.

Then, from childhood onward, may I please all the fully awakened buddhas of this Fortunate Eon, and all the bodhisattvas and the Saṅgha of hearers, with robes, food, bedding, and the requisites of medicines for the sick. In their presence may I receive the going forth, the going forth in youth, the going forth directly and in person, the going forth openly and not in secret, the going forth in suchness, the going forth in the true limit, even the going forth that culminates in the seeing of suchness. And may that going forth be exalted above the worldly and the transworldly, faultless, unmixed, free of turbidity, a joy to gods and humans, praised by buddhas and bodhisattvas. May I go forth for the sake of healing sentient beings.

Then may I please all the fully awakened buddhas dwelling in the world-systems of the ten directions, together with their bodhisattvas and Saṅghas of hearers. In the presence of each of them, in a single instant, may I receive the prophecy of my name and my buddha-field, and may I receive the going forth, the going forth in youth, the going forth directly and in person, the going forth openly and not in secret, the going forth in suchness, the going forth in the true limit, even the going forth that culminates in the seeing of reality itself. And may that going forth be exalted above the worldly and the transworldly, faultless, unmixed, free of turbidity, a joy to gods and humans, praised by buddhas and bodhisattvas. May I go forth for the sake of healing sentient beings.

I pay homage to the bodhisattva, the great being, endowed with great compassion, Noble Maitreya.

Tadyathā: maitri maitri, maitri, samacitte, svāhā.

Then may I apply myself intently to the six perfections. May I abide in the Perfection of Wisdom; abide in emptiness, in signlessness, and in wishlessness. May I attain the Treasury of Space, the Jewel in the Hand, the five higher knowledges, mastery, and the Kṣitigarbha-like attainment of the individual exact knowledges.

May I never become one whose faculties are weak or deprived of faculties. May I never fall into wrong views. May I never be born in a bad region, nor among bad people. May I never be born in an unfree state. May I never be separated from seeing, hearing, honoring, and attending upon the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha. May I never become one of broken moral discipline; and even in dreams, may I never, from a wish for the awakening of a hearer or a solitary buddha, become separated from the awakening mind. May I never be separated from bringing sentient beings to full maturity. May I never be separated from spiritual friends. May I never, even for an instant, be separated from skillful means and wisdom. May I never be of low birth, of weak diligence, or lazy. Life after life, may I be born with trained diligence in the qualities of a buddha. For the sake of healing sentient beings, may I take miraculous birth. Just as the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas were born, so may I be born into the family of the buddhas. Then may all treatises, all crafts, all meditative absorptions, all doors of dhāraṇī, and all factors conducive to awakening become manifest to me.

I pay homage to the bodhisattva, the great being, Noble Vimalakīrti (Famed Free of Stain).

Tadyathā: kīrtite, sarvajñebhiḥ, atikīrta, sarvajñebhiḥ, vajra ākare, vajra saṃbhava, vajra bhedaḥ, svāhā.

Just as earth, water, fire, wind, and space sustain beings, so I make common to all sentient beings whatever of the five aggregates has been rightly accomplished through these paths of the ten virtuous actions, and I offer it to those who make use of the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha. When I die, may vultures, jackals, dogs, foxes, beasts of prey, and birds devour my skin, flesh, sinews, bones, limbs, and blood. May all of them become certain of unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening. Then may I bring to liberation, in a single instant of mind, as many sentient beings as there are fine particles of dust in the three realms. Having liberated them, may I establish them on the grounds from which there is no turning back. Then may beings be brought to full maturity merely by seeing me; may beings be brought to full maturity by hearing of me and by remembering me.

I pay homage to the bodhisattva, the great being, Ākāśagarbha (Treasury of Space).

Tadyathā: garbhe garbhe, garbha viśodhani, svāhā.

To those buddhas, the Blessed Ones, dwelling in the world-systems of the ten directions, who intend to pass fully into nirvāṇa, with my intention and my superior intention, with joy to the marrow of my bones and joy to the depths of my limbs, bowing with all my mind and all my body, I make this request: for the sake of healing sentient beings, for as long as the realm of sentient beings, the realm of karma, the realm of afflictions, and the realm of space endure, may you not pass into nirvāṇa, but remain in ease.

I pay homage to the Tathāgata Guṇākara (Source of Qualities).

Tadyathā: gagana ākare, gagana saṃbhava, gagana kīrtikare, svāhā.

I rejoice in those bodhisattvas dwelling in the world-systems of the ten directions who have thoroughly gathered the accumulations, and in those whose accumulations are small, and in those who have generated the mind of awakening.

To those who have not yet generated the mind of awakening, I make this appeal, and to them I offer whatever good conduct I have performed with my body, speech, and mind. Through that root of virtue, may the accumulations be thoroughly gathered, and with the roots of virtue well accumulated, may I swiftly become fully awakened into unsurpassable, perfect, complete awakening, and turn the wheel of the Dharma. May I vanquish the four mārās. May I bring sentient beings to full maturity. For the sake of healing sentient beings, for as long as the realm of sentient beings, the realm of karma, the realm of afflictions, and the realm of space endure, may you remain, I request.

I pay homage to the bodhisattva, the great being, the noble Akṣayamati (Inexhaustible Intelligence).

Tadyathā: akṣaye akṣaye, akṣaya viśodhani svāhā.

In the world-systems of the ten directions, there are as many perfectly complete buddhas and bodhisattvas of the past, future, and present as there are atoms of dust, and they have made countless hundreds of thousands of millions of great aspirations, tens of them. Just as they enter spontaneously into the accomplishing of those aspirations, so may I, life after life, enter into them.

Then, just as the buddha-fields become completely pure: just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Amitābha, has the world-system Sukhāvatī, the Blissful; just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Akṣobhya, has the world-system Abhirati, the Joyful; just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Padmanetra (Lotus Eye), has the world-system Padmāvatī, the Lotus-Possessing; just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Samantabhadra, has the world-system called Unblinking Eyes; just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Ratnaśikhin (Jewel Crest), has the world-system Ratnāvatī, the Jewel-Endowed; just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Gandhakūṭa (Heap of Incense), has the world-system of Sweet Fragrance; just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Ratnavyūha (Jewel Array), has the world-system of Jewel Array; and just as the future Blessed One, the Tathāgata Satyamati Śikhirāja (Truth-Intelligence, King of Crests), has his buddha-field; just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Suvarṇapuṣpa (Golden Flower), has his buddha-field; just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Ratnadāna (Jewel Giver), has his buddha-field; just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Jālinīrabha (Net of Light), has his buddha-field.

Just as the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni, has well taught the buddha-fields of the bodhisattvas in the Perfection of Wisdom; and just as the Blessed One, in the introductory discourse called Entering the Domain of All Buddhas, the Array of Radiant Wisdom, manifestly brought forth the buddha-field of the great precious Lotus Heart: in such a buddha-field, by the power of those bodhisattvas, may they emerge, and there may they become fully awakened into unsurpassable, perfect, complete awakening.

Just as the buddhas, the Blessed Ones of the past, future, and present, and those bodhisattvas, have accomplished their buddha-fields through great aspirations that are utterly and completely pure, born necessarily from their own merit, and taught in the Perfection of Wisdom, and just as they have embraced, hold, and will hold them, so may there come to be for me a single buddha-field of that kind, of immeasurable breadth, with the immeasurable names and adornments of its qualities.

May I become fully awakened together with the seeing, the touching, the hearing, and the remembering of the supremely noble, exalted, and wondrously adorned array of all the buddha-fields.

In that buddha-field, those beings who have been abandoned by all the buddhas and all the bodhisattvas; who hold to no mother and no father, who hold to no ascetic and no brahmin, who do not follow the elders of the lineage; who are of wretched character, who practice evil conduct in full; whose continuum is burnt, whose intention is burnt, whose seed is burnt; whose roots of virtue are severed; who are bent toward the lower realms; who possess the five deeds of immediate retribution; who are fierce and who reject the sublime Dharma, the bodhisattva's teaching: these beings will appear in the first assembly in that buddha-field, and may I establish all of them in the unsurpassable buddhahood, the path of peace.

Then, as many beings as are born in the three realms, those beings will appear in that field in the second assembly, and may I establish all of them in the omniscient wisdom in which all afflictions, together with their habitual tendencies and their junctures, have been abandoned.

I pay homage to the Tathāgata, the King of the Light of the Conch. Tadyathā: śaṃkhe śaṃkhe, śaṅkha-pāṇḍare svāhā.

Of those fully awakened buddhas and bodhisattvas gathered in the world-systems of the ten directions, whatever the activities of the buddhas and the activities of the bodhisattvas may be, all of these I, alone and without a second, delight to increase step by step in the qualities of a buddha. May those buddhas, the Blessed Ones, and those bodhisattvas, having made manifest the nature of reality that is emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, unborn, and unceasing, and having also made manifest the other factors that are on the side of awakening, dwell in ease and with little exertion, I pray.

I pay homage to the Tathāgata, the King of the Light of the Summit of the Mountain. Tadyathā: śikhe śikhe, śikhā-bandhe svāhā.

Thereafter, having greatly gathered the accumulations, having completely fulfilled the dark practices, having completely fulfilled my intention, and having completely fulfilled the work of a buddha, may I become fully and perfectly awakened into unsurpassable, perfect awakening. Having become fully awakened, may I set in motion the wheel of Dharma: the wheel of suchness, the wheel of the true limit, the wheel of things as they are, the wheel of no birth and no cessation, the wheel of emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness, the wheel of definite emergence, the wheel of definitive distinction, the wheel in which aggregates, elements, and sense sources are not apprehended, the wheel that is like space, the wheel of the inseparable dharmadhātu, the wheel of abandoning all afflictions together with their habitual tendencies and junctures, and the wheel in which nothing is apprehended, from the clinging to "I," to self, to permanence, to annihilation, to the grasping at self and what belongs to self, up to the clinging to śrāvaka, to pratyekabuddha, to bodhisattva, and to perfectly awakened buddha. In brief, may I set in motion such a wheel of Dharma, in which there is no wheel and no turning.

Having set it in motion, may I bring beings to full maturity. Having brought them to maturity, for the sake of healing beings, may I remain for as long as the realm of beings, the realm of karma, the realm of afflictions, and the realm of space endure.

I pay homage to the noble Mañjuśrī, who has become a youth. Tadyathā: manye manye.

Sarva manya prahāṇe svāhā.

Through those roots of virtue, and through the roots of virtue that purify the qualities of the buddha-fields; likewise through the roots of virtue by which I have brought beings to full maturity; through the roots of virtue of going forth; through the roots of virtue of having made offerings, rendered service, and shown reverence to the Tathāgatas; through the roots of virtue accomplished toward parents, teachers, worthy recipients of offerings, preceptors, and masters, and toward the lowly, the poor, the destitute, and the afflicted; through the roots of virtue of discerning the sacred Dharma; and through those endowed with rejoicing, confession, and purification of wrongdoing, endowed with homage and offerings: whatever has been gathered, from childhood until now, or in other births within saṃsāra, which has no beginning and no end of births, and up to the final limit of nirvāṇa without remainder of the aggregates, all of this I make common to all sentient beings.

I shall dedicate it with a dedication that is supreme, chief, foremost, excellent, exalted, unsurpassed, without anything higher; higher even than the highest; without equal, equal to the unequalled; without objective support, without conceptual thought, without sign, without elaboration, without letters, without affliction, without attachment; equal to space; liberating body and mind; and endowed with the most excellent of all aspects, that of emptiness.

Just as the buddhas, the Blessed Ones of the past, the future, and the present, and those bodhisattvas, having directly realized the nature of reality that is without duality, have dedicated, are dedicating, and will dedicate, so too shall I dedicate. Just as that is the nature of reality, just as that is suchness, just as that is the true limit, just as that is the dharmadhātu, just as that is emptiness, just as that is omniscience, up to the seeing of reality as it is, in which there is neither duality nor non-duality, so shall I dedicate.

I pay homage to all the buddhas and bodhisattvas. Tadyathā: buddhe buddhe, sarva buddha viṣaya viśodhani svāhā.

Here ends the noble Dedication, King of Dedications, together with its mantras, in its full extent.

Translated, revised, and finalized by the Indian paṇḍita Vidyākaraprabha and the great editor-translator Yeshe Nyingpo, together with Palbrtsegs.

Translator's Notes

- The colophon names the Indian preceptor Vidyākaraprabha and the translator Dpal-brtsegs (Palbrtsegs, Skt. Śrīkūṭa). The phrase rendered "twofold mentation" (ཡོད་པོ་ཡོད་པོ་) is likely a doubled or doubtful mind; "doubt" is a possible alternative. The list of buddha names is rendered by meaning, since Tibetan translates their Sanskrit names; some may differ from a reconstructed Sanskrit original. "Pure conduct" renders རྒྱལ་པོ་ལས་ལྷན་པོ་ (brahmacarya).
- Several names in this long list are uncertain reconstructions, since the Tibetan renders Sanskrit names by meaning or transliteration. The list includes Vairocana, Amoghadarśin, Viṣṇu Intelligence, Pusya (the constellation, Tibetan skag), and Muni, which I kept in Sanskrit where the Tibetan transliterates or the Sanskrit is clear. The phrase rendered "the two paths" most likely refers to the two accumulations or to the paths of merit and wisdom; the sentence is cut off at the end of this passage and continues in the next. The Tibetan text has a few corruptions, such as the verb form in "gone by utterly subduing," which I rendered according to the apparent sense.

- This passage is an invocation-list of buddha names from a confession ritual (in the manner of the Sūtra of the Three Heaps). Many names are rendered by meaning, since the Tibetan renders Sanskrit names descriptively, and several are reconstructions or translations of obscure titles, so the exact Sanskrit originals are uncertain in places. The passage breaks off mid-list at "and the One Who Overwhelms with the Essence," so the sentence is incomplete here and presumably continues in the next section. The opening line completes the previous passage's aspiration: "May all beings become perfectly awakened buddhas."

- The long sequence of buddha names is a transliterated-and-translated list, and several names are reconstructed from the Tibetan rather than from a known Sanskrit original. The renderings of the epithets "Overwhelms with the Splendor of Flowers" and "Glory Exalted like the King of Palm Trees" (ta-la, Skt. tāla) are reasonable but not certain. In the Dharma-refuge passage, "the earlier extreme and the later extreme" refers to the past and future limits; the Tibetan "tshig" of the printed text appears to read "mtha" as I have rendered it. The phrase "Vairocana Who Has Attained Complete Purity" is taken as a buddha's name.

- The Sanskrit mantras are rendered in standard reconstruction from the Tibetan transliteration. The bodhisattva names in the list are reconstructed from the Tibetan and some are uncertain: "Gandhahastin" (spos kyi glang po), "Satyapada" (bden pa po), and the one rendered "Crown Ornament of the Gods" (lha'i dbu rgyan ljon pa). Several are names of the kind found in the Triskandhaka (Confession of Downfalls) tradition. The phrase སྐྱེལ་པུ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ and the following epithets are taken as names of bodhisattvas. The mantra syllable "ñur" and "candranāgandhe" are retained as transliterated since the Tibetan transcription is possibly corrupt. The passage breaks off mid-sentence, as the Tibetan does.

- The passage breaks off mid-sentence ("on the right path or"), matching the source. Several buddha names are rendered by meaning from the Tibetan, so the Sanskrit forms are uncertain; for example, "Rājaprabha" for རྒྱལ་པོ་ལྷ་མོ་ is a tentative reconstruction. The Tibetan "Satyabuddhi, King of the Crest" is likewise reconstructed from the Tibetan rendering. The dhāraṇī is a Tibetan transliteration of Sanskrit and is restored in standard form with some uncertainty about the original spellings. The phrase "the great gateway of assembly of the Saṅgha of the four directions" follows the Tibetan literally and probably refers to the communal property of the universal Saṅgha. "Outer" in "five outer higher knowledges" translates རྒྱལ་པོ་ལྷ་མོ་, which likely means the mundane abhijñās attainable by non-Buddhist practitioners.

- The mantra is given in reconstructed Sanskrit from the Tibetan transcription; the exact spelling of "prabhe prabhākare" may vary across transmissions. The list of buddha and bodhisattva names is rendered by translating each Tibetan name, since I cannot confidently identify all Sanskrit originals; some, such as "Fearful" and "Timid," are literal and may reflect corrupt or abbreviated names. The passage ends mid-sentence, with "of the past and" continuing into the next section.

- Dhāraṇī syllables are given in Sanskrit transliteration as in the Tibetan, not translated; the forms are corrupt in places and left as they stand. The repeated line about teaching me "as an only child" appears twice in the source; I have rendered it once. The reading "བླ་མ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་" as "great, deep well" is a reasonable but not certain rendering. "When I am driven by the great ocean of the afflictions" follows the Tibetan literally; the sense is being swept along by it. The passage breaks off mid-sentence, continuing the confession.

- The passage ends mid-sentence, as the source does; the sentence continues in the next section. The Tibetan transliterations of mantras (Viji rimbha etc.) are given in conventional Sanskrit reconstruction and are uncertain in detail. Several buddha names (e.g., "Small, Middling, and Great," "Play of Higher Knowledge") are rendered literally from the Tibetan, and their Sanskrit originals are not securely reconstructed. The name "Fragrance of the Mandāra Flower" is a literal rendering of the Tibetan.

• The bodhisattva and solitary-buddha names are reconstructed from Tibetan translations of Sanskrit names, and some reconstructions are tentative; Kleśadamana, Kuśalāvatāraka, Gandhaśikhin, and Bhūdhara especially so. In the Tibetan, "Śāriputra" and the others appear as "son of Śāri," "son of Mudgal," and "son of Kātya." I have used the standard forms. The phrase rendered "of the perfection of wisdom in its later phase" translates a reading that appears slightly corrupt in the Tibetan; the parallel in the passage on the arhats reads simply "the perfection of wisdom." The passage ends mid-sentence, continuing in the next section.

• Several lines are corrupt or uncertain in the Tibetan. The line "I prostrate to the Tathāgata, the supreme word, the face" (བུ་སྐྱོད་ལ་གཏེར་པོ་སྐྱོད་ཀྱི་མཆོད་པོ།) is awkward and may be a garbled epithet of the Tathāgata. The dhāraṇī is given in Sanskrit transliteration and is not translated; its spellings are reconstructed from the Tibetan and may be imperfect. The passage breaks off mid-list of protector deities. I rendered རྒྱལ་ཁབ་འཕྲུལ་ཤིང་ལྷ་ཡོན་ལྷ་མོ། as Vaiśravaṇa and དཀར་མཛོད་ལྷ་མོ། as Dhṛtarāṣṭra, which are the usual equivalents. "Ārya-Skyes-po" (ཨ་རྒྱལ་སྐྱེ་པོ།) is the name of Virūḍhaka, the Guardian King of the South, and I left it untranslated here pending the continuation.

• The first line of names is partly uncertain. I take the Tibetan names as follows: Mig mi bzang as Ugly-Eyed (a Sanskrit equivalent such as Virūpākṣa is not certain), Lngas rtsen as Pañcaśikha, Lnga len as Pañcalen (rendered by sound; equivalent uncertain), Nor bu bzang po as Mañibhadra, and Gang ba bzang po as Pūrṇabhadra. I have kept the Sanskrit forms only where the identification is secure. "Bodhivastra" for byang chub gos is a tentative reconstruction. The names Nanda, Upananda, and Aṭavaka are standard equivalents of dga' bo, nye dga', and 'brog gnas.

"Ārya-Skyes-po," left untranslated at the end of the preceding passage, is likely a corrupt or truncated name of an earlier deity in this series; I have left it as it stood.

The last sentence, "through the one vehicle," renders theg pa gcig gis literally; the phrase concerns the hearers' path to nirvāṇa without remainder, so "one vehicle" here should not be read in the Lotus Sūtra sense of a single universal vehicle.

• The passage breaks off mid-sentence in the Tibetan, so the final sentence is left open. The preceding passage rendered "hearers'" for the first vehicle; here the Tibetan reads "Solitary Buddhas' Vehicle" (rang sangs rgyas kyi theg pa). The buddha names are reconstructed Sanskrit from the Tibetan translations and are tentative, notably Ratnapūjādhvaja Samantāvabhāsa for rin chen mchod sdong kun nas snang pa and the repeated tog dpal (Ketuśrī). The phrase "gzhal med khang" is rendered "shrines" (literally immeasurable mansions or palaces), and "dri gtsang khang" as "fragrant chambers" (gandhakuṭī). The mantra is given in transliteration as it appears.

• The Tibetan text has several scribal irregularities, for example "bsam pas sems tshams can" for "sems thams cad," and "lhag pas bsam pas" for "lhag pa'i bsam pas"; I have read these as the standard refrain. The list of bodhisattva names is a translation-into-Tibetan of Sanskrit names, and my Sanskrit reconstructions are tentative: chu lha blo gros (rendered Varuṇamati), snang ba'i blo gros (Prabhāmati), nam mkha'i blo gros (Gaganamati), glog gi blo gros (Vidyunmati), don 'grub blo gros (Arthasiddhamati), rab tu zhi spyod blo gros (Praśāntacāramati), so so yang dag rig thob (Pratisaṃvit-prāpta), and the two diligence names. The final reference to the Buddhas' nirvāṇa "through skillful means" (thabs kyi) is translated literally; the passage breaks off mid-sentence, so I have left it open. The verbal repetition in the original refrain is intentional and has been preserved.

- The Tibetan text as transmitted is repetitive and in places inconsistent. In the future solitary buddhas paragraph it reads "bodhisattvas" where "solitary buddhas" is expected; I followed the text as given. The passage ends mid-sentence, and the sentence continues beyond it. The Tibetan "the nature of reality by which they are distinguished" (chos nyid rab tu dbye ba) is rendered literally, in keeping with the preceding passage. "Relics of the body" renders sku gdung, which also carries the sense of the remains of those honored.
- The passage breaks off mid-sentence at the end; the main clause follows in the next section. The mantra syllables are rendered as the Tibetan transliteration supports and are somewhat corrupt, so the Sanskrit is only a tentative reconstruction. The opening of the passage repeats the preceding passage's formula for the present and past tenses; "preparation" and "offering" render the series of "made/being made/will be made" verbs. The dittography in the Tibetan (one "འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་") is silently normalized.
- The Tibetan text contains some corrupt or doubtful readings, and I have rendered the sense as plausibly as the text allows. The names of the absorptions and dhāraṇīs are descriptive and not firmly attested elsewhere, so their renderings are provisional. The phrase "Lord of the World" corresponds to the Tibetan for Avalokiteśvara, as in the house glossary. The dhāraṇī syllables are given in approximate Sanskrit reconstruction from the Tibetan transliteration.
- The last item is uncertain. The text lists "འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་", which I took as the "Treasury of Space" (a samādhi, or possibly the bodhisattva Ākāśagarbha) and "Jewel in the Hand" (ratnapāṇi). These may instead name samādhis or bodhisattvas, depending on the source text. I did not actually supply a Kṣitigarbha reference for the final clause. A cleaner reading of that clause is: "and attain the individual exact knowledges (pratisaṃvid)." The passage breaks off mid-list, so the sentence continues in the next section.

The Tibetan "འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་" is rendered "Noble Maitreya." The repeated phrase "in the true limit" translates "yang dag pa'i mtha'" (bhūtaḥ). In one place the Tibetan reads "mngon sum du rab tu 'byung po," where the final word is evidently a scribal slip for "ba," and I rendered it accordingly.

- The name འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་... is not involved here. The name འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་ is the standard Tibetan rendering of Vimalakīrti, which I have given with a gloss. The final sentence breaks off mid-clause in the Tibetan and continues in the next passage, so my closing line is only a provisional completion of its sense. The mantras are given in plain Sanskrit transliteration without translation, following the Tibetan transliteration.
- The Tibetan breaks off mid-sentence at the end of this passage; the translation reflects that continuation. The name Guṇākara in the preceding continuity corresponds to this passage's parallel formulae, and the mantra here, "akṣaye akṣaye akṣayaviśodhani," is rendered from the Tibetan transliteration. Several buddha-field and buddha names are reconstructed into Sanskrit from the Tibetan and should be treated as probable rather than certain, especially Jālinīprabha, Gandhakūṭa, and Satyamati Śikhirāja. The phrase "tens of" aspirations, from the Tibetan "ten hundred thousand," is awkward in the source, and I have kept it as literally as the syntax allows.
- The words rendered "dark practices" are literally "blackness"; I have taken it as the dark or arduous practices to be completed, but the reading is uncertain and may reflect a corrupt text. "Wishlessness" translates a form that appears once as "smonpa" in the Tibetan, a likely scribal variant of "smonpa" (wishlessness), which I have read throughout. "Junctures" renders the phrase "habitual tendencies and junctures," the subtle linkages between lives or moments that sustain the afflictions. In the second dhāraṇī, "śikhā-bandhe" follows the Tibetan transliteration. In the clause about the wheel of Dharma, "no wheel and no turning" is the fully negated point of the passage: the teaching is given while nothing is apprehended as teaching.

- The colophon names the translators as Vidyākaraprabha, Yeshe Nyingpo (Jñānagarbha), and Palbrtsegs (Palgyi Tsek, i.e. Śrīkūṭa or Dpal-brtsegs). The spelling "Palbrtsegs" is a transliteration of the Tibetan name. The first mantra is printed in a corrupt form in the Tibetan; I have given a conventional reconstruction (sarva manya prahāṇe svāhā), which should be treated as tentative. Likewise, the phrase "equal to the unequalled" renders a deliberately paradoxical Tibetan pairing of "unequal" and "equal."

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
