

The Aspiration Prayer Taught in the Sūtra

Toh 814 · Derge Kangyur

ལས་གསུངས་པའི་སྒྲོལ་མ།

This short text is an aspiration prayer that opens with homage to the buddhas, the Blessed Ones. The title is not given in the lines supplied here, so its full English, Sanskrit, and Tibetan titles cannot be stated with certainty, though the Tibetan colophon-style line indicates that it is an aspiration prayer taught within a sūtra. It praises the seven buddhas of the past, from Vipasyin through to Śākyamuni, naming the tree beneath which each is said to dwell or to have attained awakening, and then asks that the gods who sit there in devotion and faith may be gladdened and joyful. It is a brief devotional and dedicatory composition, belonging to the genre of prayers and aspirations rather than to extended doctrinal exposition. In the canon, it is Toh 814 in the Kangyur, found among the sūtras and dhāraṇī-style works that gather brief liturgical and protective texts.

This concludes the aspiration prayer taught in the sūtra.

Homage to the buddhas, the Blessed Ones.

The Victor Vipasyin dwells at the foot of the pāṭali tree. The Victor Śikhin dwells at the foot of the white lotus tree. Viśvabhū, protector of all, dwells at the foot of the sāla tree. The brahmin Krakucchanda, destroyer of saṃsāra, dwells at the foot of the śirīṣa tree. The buddha Kanakamuni, the golden sage, dwells at the foot of the udumbara tree. Kāśyapa, protector of light, dwells at the foot of the banyan tree. And Śākyamuni, the supreme sage, went to the most excellent place and there attained awakening, Gautama.

To all those buddhas of great miraculous power, whichever gods are seated there with devotion and faith, may those gods be gladdened and joyful, and may they always be virtuous and peaceful.

Homage to the buddhas.

May you who are two-footed be well. May you who are four-footed be well. May those who have set out upon the road be well, and may those who are returning be well. May the night be well, and the day be well. May the midday also be well. May you all be well in every way. May none of these become evil.

Every day is virtuous. Every star is auspicious. All the buddhas are of great miraculous power. All the arhats are free of defilement. By these words of truth, may all be well.

This is the aspiration prayer taught in the Great Peahen, Queen of Vidyā Mantras, together with its preceding material.

Translator's Notes

- The tree names are not in the Tibetan. The text lists only the trees by transliteration, and in places the transcription is corrupt or compressed. I have rendered the first six buddhas by their standard tree-associations: Vipāśyin (pāṭali), Śikhin (puṇḍarīka, here a white lotus tree), Viśvabhū (sāla), Krakucchanda (śirīṣa), Kanakamuni (udumbara), and Kāśyapa (nyagrodha). The Tibetan epithets do not all match these buddhas one to one: "destroyer of saṃsāra" is a descriptive epithet, and "protector of light" is a literal rendering of Kāśyapa. The Tibetan line says Śākyamuni "went to the most excellent place" (Bodh Gayā) and attained awakening, so the clause is as given. The final line is a colophon attributing the prayer to the Mahāmāyūrī, the Great Peahen, queen of vidyā mantras, and the opening line is a title or ending of a preceding text. The word "dēn-pa'i" in the last verse is read as "true" (bden-pa'i).

It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.
