

This short text is a benedictory verse composition that opens with homage to the

Toh 816 · Derge Kangyur

This short text is a benedictory verse composition that opens with homage to the Three Jewels and then praises the Buddha in a series of stanzas, each closing with the refrain "By him may well-being be wrought for you." Its verses describe the Buddha as a guide who leads beings onto the path of liberation, a teacher and refuge for the fearful, a protector who guards beings like a mother her only child, and an island and steadfast kinsman for those wandering in saṃsāra, so that the whole piece serves as an auspicious wish for the well-being of its hearer. It is catalogued as Toh 816 in the Kangyur, where it belongs to the Tantra division, which also gathers a number of brief auspicious and protective compositions of this kind. I am unable to determine its Sanskrit title or its precise Tibetan title from the lines provided, so these are not given here.

Homage to the Three Jewels.

He in whom the miserly are bound to clinging
Has been utterly conquered, made free of stain,
His mind at peace, with no capacity to harm:
By him may well-being be wrought for you.

The Guide who leads beings
Into the path of liberation,
And who reveals all phenomena:
By him may well-being be wrought for you.

The Teacher, refuge of those who run in fear,
For the sake of all sentient beings
Possessing happiness himself:
By him may well-being be wrought for you.

The Protector, who with a mind of loving-kindness
Always guards all these beings
As a mother her only child:
By him may well-being be wrought for you.

He who has become the support of all beings
Wandering in saṃsāra,
Who has become their island and their strong kinsman:

By him may well-being be wrought for you.

He for whom all phenomena are directly manifest,
Pure, with no capacity to deceive,
Whose speech is made perfectly pure:
By him may well-being be wrought for you.

The great hero, by whose birth
Every perfection and every aim was fulfilled,
And all accomplishments were brought to completion:
By him may well-being be wrought for you.

He at whose birth the earth,
With its forests, trembled greatly,
And all beings were filled with joy:
By him may well-being be wrought for you.

He at the heart of awakening, by whom
The earth was shaken in six ways
And the mind of Māra was made uneasy:
By him may well-being be wrought for you.

When he turned the wheel of Dharma
And declared the noble truths,
The renown of the Sage that arose:
By it may well-being be wrought for you.

He by whom the non-Buddhists, who captivate the mind,
Were all defeated through the Dharma,
And whose every assembly was brought under his sway:
By him may well-being be wrought for you.

Buddha, may well-being be wrought for you.
May the well-being of the gods, with Indra (Śakra),
And the well-being of all spirits and beings
Be bestowed upon you always.

By the power of the buddhas' merit
And by the thoughts of the gods,
Whatever aim you desire,
May that aim be accomplished today.

Two-legged ones, may you be well.
Four-legged ones, may you be well.
May you be well as you travel the road,
And may your returning also be happy.
May the day be well, and the night be well,
And may the midday also be well.
May you all be well always,
And may no harm befall you.

Surrounded by thousands of buddhas and gods,
He has come, going forth with them.
May those who harbor hatred be driven away,
And may those whose nature is compassion remain.

By the truthful words of the buddhas,
Solitary buddhas, arhats, and trainees,
May those who bring harm to the world
Be sent away from this city.

May all sentient beings and all living creatures,
All spirits, and all of you,
Be endowed with happiness alone.
May all be free of illness.
May all see what is good,
And may none fall into evil.

All spirits who have come here,
Who dwell on the earth and in the sky,
May you always have loving-kindness for living beings,
And practice the Dharma by day and by night.

The noble one of Vaiśālī...

Translator's Notes

- The passage is a benediction of well-being modeled on the Maṅgala-type verses, and breaks off mid-sentence at the end, so the final line is left unfinished. The refrain "may well-being be wrought for you" renders the honorific phrasing literally; the sense is that the Buddha's qualities grant blessing to the hearer. In the third stanza the phrase "rugs pa" is read as "those who run in fear" (those fleeing in terror). In the fourth stanza the Buddha is called Protector (skyob pa), and in the fifth the image of island and strong kinsman describes him as refuge for beings adrift in saṃsāra. The line about "the great hero" in the seventh stanza refers to the Buddha's birth.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.