

The Heart of Secrets: The Definitive Great Lama of Suchness

Guhyagarbhatattvaviniścaya · Toh 837 · Derge Kangyur

གསང་བའ་སྒྲི་པ་དེ་ཁོ་ན་ཉི་ངའི་པའ་བེ་སྒྲ་ཆེ་པོ།

This is a tantra in the Kangyur, Toh 837, belonging to the Nyingma-oriented collection of Mahāyoga tantras preserved in the Kangyur's tantra section. The surviving title lines point to a work known as "Dispelling Ignorance," described as a great magical display (mahāmāyā) of the Blessed One, and identified in the Tibetan colophon as the heart of secrets and the certainty of reality (tattva), a great teacher or lama of primordial wisdom. A Sanskrit title cannot be determined from the lines given, so none is offered here. The text is presented as the speech of the Blessed One, the glorious Samantabhadra, who is shown dwelling in a secret abode and revealing the nature of the lama as the embodiment of the body, speech, mind, qualities, and activities of all the tathāgatas. Its central claim is that all who accomplish this secret practice are Samantabhadra himself, so that it concerns the recognition of the teacher and of enlightened reality as the essence of the path.

All those who accomplish this secret practice are Samantabhadra himself. Thus ends the great magical display called "Dispelling Ignorance" of the Blessed One.

In Tibetan: this is the great lama, the very heart of secrets, the certainty of reality (tattva). Homage to the Blessed One, glorious Samantabhadra, the great lama of primordial wisdom.

At one time this was spoken. The great lama of magical display is the lama of all the buddhas, the supreme secret bliss of all yogis. Dwelling in the secret abode, the Heart-Essence, the lama, spoke thus.

The Tathāgata, the perfectly complete Buddha, the Blessed One, the great enjoyment of the secret lama, whose very nature is the vajra of body, speech, mind, qualities, and activities of all the tathāgatas of the ten directions and the four times. Everything without exception, whether remaining or not remaining, has the nature of being neither separate nor different, inseparable. In the dharmadhātu of the utterly secret great lama, in Akaniṣṭha, the abode without edge or center, there is a wheel of boundless primordial wisdom, luminous. In it stands a palace blazing with precious wisdom, boundless in all ten directions like the expanse of space. Because it is expanded by countless great qualities of the lama, it is square in form. It is adorned with four projecting balconies of supreme precious wisdom, the lama. At its peaks, all the maṇḍalas of the buddhas of the ten directions and four times, not separate and not different, are encircled entirely by one single essence, the wisdom lama. It is the inconceivable expanse of the wisdom lama, and it has distinctions and varieties such as different colors. It is adorned with immeasurable garlands of precious wisdom, the lama, with hanging tassels and with fringed ornaments. Forms, sounds, smells, tastes, and tactile sensations arise by themselves, clear and unobstructed. It is covered with special luminous ornaments, the lama. It has gateways entered through the four immeasurables, and is furnished with the staircases of the eight liberations. There is neither outside nor inside, for everything has become the interior of the great lama. In the pervasive and expansive palace of the great lama, the most secret, there are thrones of the five perfections: the throne of the lion, which is fearlessness; the throne of the elephant, which is power; the throne of the horse, which is miraculous power; the throne of the peacock, which is mastery; and the throne of the garuḍa soaring through space, which is unobstructedness. Upon these are stacked the sun and moon discs, which are naturally luminous, and the lotus seat of precious jewels, which is unstained.

Because from the beginning the secret is the lama,
the Mother's palace blazes in the ten directions.

Because from the beginning there are the perfections,
the throne's legs are firm and unobstructed.

Because by nature it is luminous from the beginning,
the seat of stacked sun and moon blazes.

Because it is stainless from the very first,
the lotus seat is utterly pure.

Because it fulfills wishes like a wish-granting jewel,
the seat is a treasure of wish-fulfilling jewels.

Because it is spontaneously complete without accumulation, it is the ornament of the great, varied maṇḍala.

Upon the seat of great qualities, with no front or back to the body, the lama's faces appear everywhere, vivid and clear, endowed with the major and minor marks, and everywhere there appear the inconceivable varied body, speech, mind, qualities, and activities. He sits in the full lotus posture of the ascetic discipline, with the two feet of skillful means and wisdom even. His hands are the six wisdoms, with the mudrā of blazing precious wisdom. He has three heads, inconceivable as body, speech, and mind.

He is the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the king of consciousness, the lama, together with the supreme consort, the lama of the expanse of solidity. The Tathāgata, the king of form, the lama, together with the supreme consort, the lama of the expanse of appearance. The Tathāgata, the king of feeling, the lama, together with the supreme consort, the lama of the expanse of softness.

The Tathāgata, the king of perception, the lama, together with the supreme consort, the lama of the expanse of warmth. The Tathāgata, the king of formations, the lama, together with the supreme consort, the lama of the expanse of motion. All these kings of wisdom, beginning with these, radiate as the lama in the colors of dark blue, white, yellow, red, and green. Since they are joined without duality, the expanse of phenomena is pervaded on every side, without limit, by the conduct of the great lama. It is like a lump of sesame or a casket of sweetness: they dwell pervaded everywhere by great bliss.

Then the great awakened one, Vajra Sight-Power, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of what is to be seen. The great awakened one, Vajra Hearing-Power, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of what is to be heard. The great awakened one, Vajra Smell-Power, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of what is to be smelled. The great awakened one, Vajra Taste-Power, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of what is to be tasted. The great awakened one, Vajra Knowing-of-Union, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of the lamp. The great awakened one, Vajra Knowing-of-Severing, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of the fierce. The great awakened one, Vajra Knowing-of-Entering, the lama, together with the consort, the lama who sends down rain. The great awakened one, Vajra Gathering, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of increase.

The great subduer, Vajra Right Touch, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of non-permanence. The great subduer, Vajra Left Touch, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of non-annihilation. The great subduer, Vajra Secret Touch, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of non-self. The great subduer, Vajra Gathered Touch, the lama, together with the consort, the lama of non-characteristic. Such a gathering cannot be spoken of in words. Without duality, they dwell in the lama, the expanse of the delight of secrecy.

Then the Tathāgata, the gathering of consorts, and the nondual maṇḍala, the lama himself, the secret lama: from his body, speech, mind, qualities, and activity, the vajra arose.

Emaho! The expanse of suchness itself, in the state of the lama, the maṇḍala of sovereign power.

That very state is perfectly pure, the secret expanse of supreme bliss.

That very expanse is the treasure of precious supreme bliss in equal union, the lama of the secret nectar, holder of the inexhaustible treasure.

The unsurpassed awakening, the drop, the maṇḍala of the name, appears.

Its own appearing, the reflection of meditative absorption, appears perfectly pure:

body, speech, mind, qualities, and activity, unobstructed, wish-fulfilling, possessing inexhaustible jewels, the wheel of ornaments, the lama, the very abode of the supreme vajra.

This is the definitive meaning of the secret vajra lama.

This is the first chapter, the chapter of the introduction, on the lama who is the definitive reality of the essence of the secret, the lama of the secret bliss of expanse and wisdom.

Then the Blessed One, the lama who attends to all, Vajra Samantabhadra, in the manner of all without remainder, entered through the vajra the lama of the consort, the one who acts, Samantabhadrī. He uttered these words of the secret lama.

Om! The expanse of the nature of phenomena, the expanse of action,

Samantabhadrī, the mother of bliss,

the unmoving natural maṇḍala,

is myself, and is my own domain.

The various mudrās shine forth, each distinct.

In the western direction, in the supreme abode of Akaniṣṭha, the unattached lotus seat is spread out,

the place where the victors of the three times dwell.

The four doors of liberation are perfectly joined with the four mudrās.

To remove the bad fortune of those without power,

the inner is firm and the outer is layered, endowed with iron.

The secret Dharma of all the victors is difficult for anyone to fathom.

Samantabhadra himself has seen it.

Hoḥ. Then the queen, Samantabhadrī, the one who acts, spoke these words of the secret guru on purpose.

Oṃ. Chief of all that acts as the very nature of mind, Samantabhadra, the vajra mind,
the nature of the eight wisdoms,
from the eastern direction, Abhirati, the realm of inconceivable splendor, you draw forth a treasure like a sapphire.
With the key of the Secret Assembly's magical display you open the door of complete liberation, and release what lies within supreme awakening.
You abide upon the unattached lotus seat.
For the benefit of beings you give rise to the awakening mind, and gather the five realms of beings and the four modes of birth under your power.
From body, speech, and mind you bestow empowerment.
So she declared.

Then the queen, Samantabhadrī, the one who acts, made this offering to the secret guru on purpose.

Oṃ. This precious lotus maṇḍala
I offer with the radiance of a smile.
It is the key of the unsurpassed magical display.
Having delighted the supreme vajra of joy,
I pray that you let fall a great rain of nectar.
So she declared on purpose.

Then again, the vajra Samantabhadra, the one who makes the mind, spoke these words of the secret guru on purpose, in order to satisfy the Jambudvīpa of vessel and contents with the rain of the guru's nectar.

Oṃ. This supreme delight of the vajra guru, having delighted him, that the rain of nectar may fall,
I delight him in the place of smiling and gathering.
This objectless bliss and rapture,
Samantabhadrī gathers into the basic space.
So she declared on purpose.

From the state of nonduality, the whole range of activity of karma arose as the secret maṇḍala of the guru, extraordinarily adorned, with as many particles as there are atoms, and performed great magical displays of illusion beyond all thought. Some dwelt in the maṇḍala of the secret guru and blessed all their limbs as vajras. Some, in order to tame the six classes of beings, dwelt as the six great sages, as follows.

In the realm of the gods, Indra, the protector.

Among the asuras, Thagzang Ri.

Among humans, Śākyamuni, tamer of Māra.

In the realm of hungry ghosts, Mouth-Aflame, the blissful.

Among animals, the one who speaks as a lion.

In the hells, Yama, the protector.

They show their bodies and manner of dress,
and some enter the womb and are born as bodies.

Some guard the discipline and go forth.

Some take full ordination and practice austerities.

Some take vows and liberate beings.

Some urge beings toward the sixteen teachings.

Some blaze in fire and thunder in water.

Some blaze as sound in the sky.

Some are firm as a vajra rock.

Some nourish and destroy, defeat and conquer.

Some bind and release, some summon and release.

Some tame the māras and purify the lower realms.

Some gather clouds of maṇḍala offerings.

All of them turn the wheel of Dharma.

The way they constantly turn the wheel of Dharma is as follows.

The first vehicle protects with the sixteen.

The second guards the view and conduct of the four.

The third teaches definitively the twelve.

The fourth trains in the view and conduct of the two.

If the fourth vehicle is gathered in brief,
it is led into the basic space of the unsurpassed vehicle.

For the definitive emergence through the four vehicles,
one vehicle abides as the fruit.

The arising maṇḍala is a great magical display.

Because it is connected with the many, it has the meaning of a net.

Because it is uncommon, it has the meaning of the secret.

The essence of the vehicles is the basic space of the heart essence.

So she declared on purpose.

The world of vessel and contents was transformed into the secret abode of the maṇḍala of the Victors. All the Tathāgatas of the ten directions and four times were pleased by the gaze of the secret guru's samādhi. Then, the whole world of vessel and contents, without remainder, became fully awakened in the maṇḍala of the secret guru, and uttered this solemn utterance.

Emaho. The limbs of the vajra aggregates are known as the five perfect buddhas.

The sense sources and elements, all the many, are themselves the maṇḍala of the bodhisattvas.

The earth-water one, and Māmakī, the one with the mirror, the white-robed one, and Tārā, the sovereign lady of the expanse of space: the three realms of existence are buddha fields from the very beginning. All phenomena, without remainder, are none other than buddhahood itself. A dharma other than buddhahood itself cannot be found even by a buddha. Through this declaration, all the Tathāgatas were pleased.

Then all the assemblies of the Tathāgata consorts spoke this solemn utterance.

Emaho. The realms of the ten directions are secluded from the very beginning. The three existences are themselves a pure field. The five degenerations are themselves an abode endowed with bliss. The five aggregates are themselves manifest buddhahood. Since all is the supreme essence, the Victors do not seek the Dharma elsewhere. Even if one sought a dharma called "other than this very nature," the Victors would not find it.

Through this declaration, the Tathāgata himself knew that all phenomena are buddhas from the very beginning.

Then, from the state in which expanse and wisdom are not two, this solemn utterance was spoken.

Emaho. The Dharma is secret from the very beginning. The various appearances are secret in their nature. The supreme secret, the essence, is unsurpassed. All is definitively ascertained as the secret expanse. From the supreme essence of the guru, buddhas and sentient beings are not two.

Through this declaration, he knew that everything is definitively the expanse.

Even so, in order to arouse great compassion and the vast wisdom of a buddha for the inconceivable classes of beings who are ripened through the conceptual thinking of beings, this word of the vajra guru was solemnly uttered.

Emaho. From the essence of the Sugata, through their own conceptual thought and karma, they emanate manifold bodies, enjoyments, abodes, sufferings, and the rest. They cling to each as "self" and "mine." Yet no one has bound them; there is no binding, and nothing that could be bound. Through conceptual clinging to a self, one forcibly ties knots in the sky. The buddha-dharma, spontaneously present from the beginning, without bondage and without liberation, is manifold in its play, displayed for the sake of teaching. Yet though it displays, the expanse neither increases nor diminishes.

Even so, for those who have not realized it so, in order to arouse the essential nature of mind in the conventional aggregates, in the maṇḍala of the guru who is the awakening mind, this vajra secret word was solemnly uttered.

The very nature of mind, empty and secluded, has no family, color, or shape. Though nothing at all, it appears as anything. Unmoving, it brings forth various miracles. The manifold maṇḍalas of the Victors too are the great magical display of mind. Not apprehended as one or many, it accomplishes everything through the six superknowledges. Through the great samādhi of the guru, the making of the great maṇḍala is taught. Gathered by the five causes and four conditions, one meditates on the great and small maṇḍalas of the Victors. One performs the four stages properly. All the ornaments and modes of the mudrās are made. Within a sesame seed, Mount Meru is generated. The maṇḍala of a thousand buddhas, and the mudrās of the two, the display and the cast-down, are adorned and arrayed with the minor marks and ornaments, just as with Meru in the sesame seed. Definitively, one meditates the forty-five. Expanse and wisdom, the display and the cast-down, are the doers of all maṇḍalas.

Hoḥ. Form is Vairocana; in the object, she is Samantabhadrī. Hoḥ. Feeling is Ratnasambhava; in the object, she is Maitreyī, she of the three realms. Hoḥ. Perception is Amitābha; in the object, she is the white-robed one. Hoḥ. Formations are Amoghasiddhi; in the object, she is Samaya Tārā. Hoḥ. Consciousness is Vajrasattva; in the object, she is Locanā, the broad-eyed one. Hoḥ. In the eye is Kṣitigarbha; in the object, she is the white one of great elegance. Hoḥ. In the nose is Ākāśagarbha; in the object, she is the one with the garland of flowers. Hoḥ. In the tongue is Avalokiteśvara; in the object, she is the one with the melody of Dharma. Hoḥ. In the ear is Vajrapāṇi; in the object, she is the dancer of action.

the one who clears away all obscurations in the object, she is the one who rains down flowers. Hoḥ. The all-knowing is Samantabhadra; in the object, she is the lamp of clarity. Hoḥ. The cutting consciousness is the very self of Maitreya; in the object, she is the one who sends forth clouds of the fierce. Hoḥ. The entering consciousness is Mañjuśrī, the youthful; in the object, she is the one who rains down sandalwood. The two on the right are the wrathful ones of great power; in the object, they are the terrifying-faced women. Hoḥ. The two on the left are the executioners of Yama, the Lord of Death; in the object, they are those who send forth swords and strike terror. Hoḥ. The secret place is the Horse-Necked hero, Hayagrīva; in the object, he is the mistress of the charnel ground. Hoḥ. At the navel is the swirling nectar; in the object, she is the fierce Caṇḍālī, inspiring dread. Hoḥ.

In the six continua, in the six places of cyclic existence, are the six Sages, the great seals. The body of all, the speech of all, and likewise the mind seal of all, abide thus in body, speech, and mind. Hoḥ.

The nature of mind is the net of magical illusion. From the great miraculous display of illusion arise the forty-five maṇḍalas of the net. From the certainty of the secret maṇḍala, the essence maṇḍala is the guru.

By this utterance, all sentient beings became fully and completely awakened buddhas, and in joy, inseparable from all the Tathāgatas, they dwelt in the expanse of equality.

This is the second chapter, "The Nature of Mind Accomplishes Whatever Appears," from the Guru of the Certainty of Reality, the Essence of the Secret, in the state where expanse and wisdom are not two.

Then all the Tathāgatas, whose nature is both one and many yet inseparable, desiring to draw forth this guru, the great maṇḍala of their own being, into all the ten directions of the six worlds, spoke this inspired utterance.

Oṃ. Through the play of the wisdom guru, if one envisions the four directions and the center as five, the maṇḍala, immeasurable and spontaneously accomplished, is the realm in which the yogin who realizes the Great Perfection engages the great maṇḍala of the origin of all. The wheel has four spokes with a rim, adorned with four cut corners, a vajra enclosure. It is square on every side with doors and encircling borders, like a mass of clouds of manifold play, adorned with forty-two maṇḍalas. Upon the great thrones of lion, elephant, horse, and garuda, in the sky, upon a seat of sun, moon, and precious lotus, they appear in the manner of the fully accomplished ones and the bodhisattvas. The king of the wheel with his queen, and from the right, the seeing and the hearing, the absorption, the experiencing, are accompanied by their company of consorts. On the cut corners dwell the cutting one, the illuminating one, and the other agents, the engaging ones, together with their companies of consorts. In the intermediate spaces dwell the six Sages, in the form of the seals that purify the six continua. Likewise the great drops, those who act before and behind, are shown to abide as the doers of action. At the four doorways dwell the subduers, together with their companies of consorts.

They bear the emblems of the vajra, the wheel, the jewel, the lotus, the sword, the blazing gem, the utpala, the kalpa-tree, and so forth, holding implements of beauty and delight. Their colors are manifold: dark blue, brilliant white, yellow, green, and others, with supple, slender, graceful forms, youthful in bearing, radiant, dense and luminous, blazing with splendor. A great host of rays of light streams forth, garlands of blazing fire densely massed, pervading without center or edge. The maṇḍala, immeasurable and spontaneously accomplished. Hoḥ.

By this utterance, throughout all the boundless, limitless ten directions of the six worlds, the great guru maṇḍala, beyond expression, became vividly present as many as the dust motes of the realms.

Then the Tathāgatas, inseparable from their companies of consorts, drew forth this secret guru of those very maṇḍalas, these qualities of body, speech, and mind and these enlightened activities.

A Hoḥ. Supreme bliss, wondrous great awakening mind.

The union of bindus, the magical display, the expanse of the guru.

The pure bindu plays as the awakening mind.

Wondrous, marvelous, the expanse of the great guru. Hoḥ.

The expanse of the secret, where object and subject of focus are not focused upon.

Wisdom, self-aware, the maṇḍala of the guru, beyond thought.

The expanse of the secret, pervading all, equal and unequal.

The wisdom luminous in all things, the maṇḍala free of elaboration, the state of the guru.

Hoḥ. In the vajra words of the secret.

This is the third chapter, "The Elaboration of the Maṇḍala," from the Great Definitive Guru, the Heart of the Secret.

Then the King of Wisdom became inseparable from the consort, the expanse of the guru. Mounting the summit of the intent called "the Great Bliss, the Awakening Mind Gradually Clarified," and wishing that the aspects of absorption be needed throughout the ten directions and the four times, he drew forth these from the expanse of the guru, the body, speech, and mind.

First, the guru's prophetic declaration:

The awakening mind that cannot be indicated,
the luminous essence of wisdom,
and the three kinds of meditation are completed at one time.
Since the bindu of the awakening mind is spontaneously complete, unobstructed, that is the meaning of the great bindu.
That is the expanse of suchness.
That is the all-appearing,
and it possesses the stages of the cause. Hoḥ.
These are the words of the secret guru.

From the definitive meaning of the secret guru,
the secret maṇḍala of speech is proclaimed.

Bhrūṃ viśva viśuddhe vajra svāhā. Hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ vajra citta oṃ. A a a vajra pata samaya oṃ. Hūṃ vajra dhṛk. Mūṃ dhātu īśvari. Oṃ jina jik. Lāṃ dveṣa rati. Sva ratna dhṛk. Māṃ moha rati. Aṃ aḥ rolik. Bāṃ rāga rati. Ha pra jha dhṛk. Tāṃ vajra rati. Kṣi hi rājāya. Hūṃ lāse samayastaṃ. Trāṃ agarbhaya. Trāṃ māle samaya hoḥ. Hrīḥ ha ho padma bandhama. Hrīḥ gīti ra hoḥ. Haṃ jiṃ kuru pana hrīḥ. Āḥ nṛtya rāgayāmi. Maidhāriṇi svāhā. Jaḥ dhūpa praveśa. Thlhīṃ nisara mabāya svāhā. Hūṃ puṣpa āveśa. Hūṃ sa rājāya svāhā. Bhaṃ dhūpi sukṣaṇi. Mūṃ śrī āraṃgāya svāhā. Hoḥ gandhe citta.

Oṃ mune kṛ svāhā. Oṃ mune hūṃ drūṃ svāhā. Oṃ mune praṃ svāhā. Oṃ mune sruṃ svāhā. Oṃ mune kṣaṃ svāhā. Oṃ mune ye svāhā.

Hūṃ yamāntakṛta phaṭ. Oṃ mahā vajra dhara mahā krodhīśvari jvalani hūṃ phaṭ. Hūṃ prajñāntakṛta phaṭ. Oṃ mahā ratna dhara mahā krodhīśvari jvalani hūṃ phaṭ. Hūṃ padmāntakṛta hūṃ phaṭ. Oṃ mahā padma dhara mahā krodhīśvari jvalani hūṃ phaṭ. Oṃ vighnāntakṛta hūṃ phaṭ. Oṃ mahā karma dhara mahā krodhīśvari jvalani hūṃ phaṭ.

Oṃ ehyehi bhagavān mahā kāruṇika dṛśya hoḥ. Samayastvaṃ. Jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ. Oṃ āḥ hūṃ svāhā. Vajra samaya. Vajra samaya. Vajra samaya. Vajra samaya. Vajra samaya. Oṃ āḥ hūṃ svāhā.

Oṃ, the King of Wisdom, body, speech, and mind,
the wondrous, great qualities and enlightened activities,
the faultless, great awakening mind:

in that very state, through union,

may I be joined with the guru as consort.

Oṃ vajra samaya hūṃ. Oṃ vajra samaya stvaṃ. Vajra samaya hoḥ. Jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ.

By this utterance, the maṇḍala of speech, the great guru, resounded throughout all the ten directions of the six worlds; it resounded supremely; it resounded everywhere. Through this resounding, the maṇḍala of all the worlds, vessel and contents, became pervaded by the great guru.

Then, once more, the King of Wisdom, playing in the inseparability of the two, the fierce and the gentle, dissolved into the guru. Then this, called "the withdrawal of the blessing," together with that same King of Wisdom, arose from the vajra of body, speech, and mind.

Oṃ. From the great equality of the dharmadhātu, pure and luminous wisdom arises. By the wisdom of the dharmadhātu, may I gain mastery over the unborn Dharma. Oṃ mahā guhya mahā śūnyatā dharma jñāna svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

Hūṃ. Pure and luminous in nature, the flawless mind itself is a precious jewel. By the mirror-like wisdom, may I gain mastery over the three realms of existence. Oṃ mahā guhya mahā ādarśa jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

Svāṃ. The king who fulfills the hopes of the three realms, the supreme treasure of wish-fulfilling jewels. By the wisdom of equality, may all beings have their hopes fulfilled by a king. Oṃ mahā guhya mahā samanta āveśa jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

Aṃ. Free of the fault of error, without stain, the accomplishment that is without arising or cessation. By the wisdom of discernment, may the faults of the three realms be dispelled. Oṃ mahā guhya mahā pratyaveśa jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

Hā. The maṇḍala of the dharmadhātu is brought to completion, and from the diverse kinds of accomplished activity, by the wisdom of all-accomplishing action, may beings be liberated into the dharmadhātu. Oṃ mahā guhya mahā kṛta anuṣṭhāna jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

Ani. Both emptiness and non-emptiness do not abide even in the middle. By the wisdom of great emptiness, may I gain mastery over the unchanging expanse. Oṃ mahā guhya mahā āveśa śūnyatā jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

Oṃ. From the essence of the body of the Sugatas, the indestructible vajra, chief of the Victors, endowed with mantra and mudrā, may I become the chief of the vajra body. Oṃ mahā guhya sarva tathāgata kāya vajra svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

Aṃ. From the essence of the speech of the Sugatas, the indestructible vajra, the dharmadhātu, endowed with mantra and mudrā, may I become the very essence of vajra speech. Oṃ mahā guhya sarva tathāgata vāk vajra svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

Hūṃ. From the chief of the minds of the Sugatas, the indestructible vajra of the vajra mind, endowed with mantra and mudrā, may the blessing of vajra mind be present. Oṃ mahā guhya sarva tathāgata citta vajra svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

Svaṃ. From the unchanging buddha-field comes the fruit that was not produced, and enjoyments that were not accumulated arise. By the wisdom that accomplishes whatever is wished, may all be transformed through the means of sovereign freedom. Svaṃ mahā guhya sarva tathāgata mahā pūja vajra svabhāva ātmako 'ham.

When this was spoken, all shone brilliantly and blazed, and then dissolved.

Emaho! Wonder of countless wonders, the marvelous, secret Dharma, beyond all sound, name, and word. The many kinds of sounds appear clearly in the expanse. The maṇḍala of the limbs of the one speech is the supreme pervader, inconceivable, the expanse that pervades all. All is the supreme mudrā of speech. Hoḥ.

This is the fourth chapter, on the gathering of the maṇḍala and the secret mantra, from the Essence of Secrets, the Definitive Great Guru.

Then the King of Wisdom himself, mounted upon the spontaneously accomplished intention of the guru-maṇḍala, the entirety of all the limbs of all the Tathāgatas, spoke these words of the vajra guru deliberately.

The net of illusion fully manifests; the all is the supreme seal of awakening. The essence of that very secret, the definitive reality, the mudrā, is hard to transcend.

The syllable of the sun-disc of Akṣobhya, the syllable of the moon-disc of Ratna, from the five and two displayed at the corners, arise the mudrās of union, the cause of arising. Joining the tips of hūṃ and muṃ, twist the eight syllables together and fix them at the heart. Joining equally with all the Victors is the seal that bestows great bliss. Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Hūṃ is raised, and at its tip a vajra blazes. The moon-disc, with a blunt syllable hidden within, rings with bells and chimes. In a coiling manner, it is established in the Dharma.

Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Mūṃ is raised, and at its tip a bell rings and blazes. The sun-disc of five syllables coils into action. Bowing down, they gaze with a radiant smile. In the blazing center of the wheel are the Teacher, Vajrasattva, and the supreme consort, Locanā, joined in the expanse of non-duality.

Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Oṃ is raised, and at its tip a wheel blazes. The moon-disc, with a blunt syllable hidden within, rings with bells and chimes. In a coiling manner, it is established in the Dharma.

Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Laṃ is raised, and at its tip a bell rings and blazes. The sun-disc of five syllables coils into action. Bowing down, they gaze with a radiant smile.

From the spokes of the wheel in the east, the Sugata Vairocana and the supreme consort Samantabhadri are joined in the expanse of non-duality.

Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Svā at its tip blazes as a jewel. The moon-disc, with a blunt syllable hidden within, rings with bells and chimes. In a coiling manner, it is established in the Dharma.

Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Maṃ is raised, and at its tip a bell rings and blazes. The sun-disc of five syllables coils into action. Bowing down, they gaze with a radiant smile.

From the spokes of the wheel in the south, the Sugata Ratnasambhava and the supreme consort Māmakī are joined in the expanse of non-duality.

Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Āṃ is raised, and at its tip a lotus blazes. The moon-disc, with a blunt syllable hidden within, rings with bells and chimes. In a coiling manner, it is established in the Dharma.

Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Paṃ is raised, and at its tip a bell rings and blazes. The sun-disc of five syllables coils into action.

Bowing down, they gaze with a radiant smile.

From the spokes of the wheel in the west, the Sugata Amitābha and the supreme consort Pāṇḍaravāsīnī, the white-robed one, are joined in the expanse of non-duality.

Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Ha is raised, and at its tip a sword blazes. The moon-disc, with a blunt syllable hidden within, rings with bells and chimes. In a coiling manner, it is established in the Dharma.

Conceal the four syllables and fix them at the heart. Trāṃ is raised, and at its tip a bell rings and blazes. The sun-disc of five syllables coils into action. Bowing down, they gaze with a radiant smile.

From the spokes of the wheel in the north, the Sugata Amoghasiddhi and the supreme consort Samayatārā are joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, a jewel sprout; on the left, one graceful and upright: the white Kṣitigarbha of the vajra family, and the supreme consort, the white Lāsyā of great allure, in the eastern space of the maṇḍala, joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, drawing forth a sword; on the left, counting a rosary: in the southern space of the maṇḍala, the yellow Ākāśagarbha of the ratna family, and the supreme consort, the Garland of Glory, joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, a white lotus; on the left, playing the lute: in the western space of the maṇḍala, Avalokiteśvara, the Lord of the Lotus Dance, of the padma family, and the supreme consort, the Singer of Dharma, joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, a five-pronged vajra; on the left, a crown at the center: in the northern space of the maṇḍala, Vajrapāṇi, the dark blue one, of the action family, and the supreme consort, the Crown of Dance, joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, a beautiful nāga tree; on the left, bearing incense: in the southeast space of the maṇḍala, Maitreya, white and yellow, of the Sugata family, and the supreme consort, the Billowing Clouds of Incense, joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, a golden wheel; on the left, scattering flowers: in the southwest space of the maṇḍala, Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin, red and yellow, of the ratna family, and the supreme consort, Showering Flowers, joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, a jewel bunch...

On the left, raising a lamp: in the northwest space of the maṇḍala, Samantabhadra, red and green, of the action family, and the supreme consort, the Radiant Lamp, joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, a blue utpala flower; on the left, scattering sandalwood: in the northeast space of the maṇḍala, Mañjuśrī, white and green, of the vajra family, and the supreme consort, Sandalwood Rain, joined in the expanse of non-duality.

The great mudrās of the Six Sages draw beings out from the dwelling places of the six lineages. With the mudrā of the lute, the yellow-bodied one draws out humans. With the mudrā of the vīṇā, the white-bodied one draws out the gods. With the mudrā of armor and short spear, the dark-blue, blackish one draws out the asuras. With the mudrā of blazing jewels, the blue-bodied one draws out the hungry ghosts. With the mudrā of a stack of books, the yellowish-black one draws out the animals. With the mudrā of blazing fire and falling water, the blue-bodied one draws out the hell-beings.

At the four gates stand the mudrā-holders. On the right, the Vajra Harmer; on the left, the Hurler of the Iron Hook. The great wrathful one of mighty power, Mahābala, together with the supreme consort, Vajra Iron Hook, is joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, raising a human head; on the left, hurling the noose: the great wrathful Yama, the Slayer, together with the supreme consort, Vajra Noose, is joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, raising a snake's head; on the left, binding with an iron chain: the great wrathful hero Hayagrīva, together with the supreme consort, Vajra Iron Chain, is joined in the expanse of non-duality.

On the right, pressing down a net; on the left, ringing a bell: the great wrathful Amṛtakunḍalin, together with the supreme consort, Vajra Bell-Ringer, through the northern gate is joined in the expanse.

Samantabhadra, in equipoise, radiates the light of wisdom. The consort, transformed, is the lotus maṇḍala of even, perfect balance. From the great secret of the expanse of non-duality there unfolds the wondrous, supreme bliss, the maṇḍala of the heart. By turning the vajra palms in emanation and withdrawal, one's own mind is made radiant as wisdom. That very thing is perfected as wisdom and skillful means.

This is the fifth chapter, the elaboration of the mudrās, from the great and definitive Guru of the Net of Magical Illusion.

Then the Wisdom King abided at once in the intent of the Vajra Arrangement, the adornment of the secret pledges in full elaboration, and spoke these vajra words of secret meaning.

The supreme absorption of utmost subtlety is not grasped through example or measure. The celestial mansion, the mudrās, and the rest: meditate on them as appearing, yet without anything by which they could be indicated.

Purified through utmost subtlety, awareness is boundless in its vastness. The celestial mansion, the mudrās, and the rest: meditate on them as appearing, yet without anything by which they could be indicated.

The outer, inner, and secret offerings, and the qualities of the five desirable objects accomplished through the two great gatherings, are perfected in equality with the limits of space. Whether coarse, subtle, or middling, do as you wish, freely. Since there is neither what is to be done nor what is not to be done in tsakalis and colored powders, no prohibition of them was spoken.

In the same way, whatever suits the benefit of beings, make extensive offerings with varied offerings. Through the offering of the great self, all the buddhas and maṇḍalas without exception are pleased, and all beings of the three realms of existence, without exception, are satisfied with great joy.

Through the intent of the Net of Magical Illusion, all the maṇḍalas of the Victors without remainder, and the beings of the six classes, become manifest. Body, speech, mind, and all phenomena exist nowhere at all. Through the union of utterly pure wisdom, through meditating on the expanse as the expanse itself, one enters by the power of the awareness of the all-creating sovereign.

Then, with faith and reverence, one enters. Then the supreme son of the family offers kingdom and rule, his own body, sons, wives, and wealth, whatever is most cherished and pleasing. Even the heart is the supreme of gifts.

To please the guru, offer with reverence. If one makes offerings of the five sovereign enjoyments, all the maṇḍalas are pleased, and need one even speak of the radiant maṇḍala? All faults, without remainder, will surely be purified.

If one, endowed with faith, gives rise to diligence, one is given the empowerment that benefits, and receives it in accordance with one's capacity for the vehicle. Therefore the sovereign king has taught the stages of empowerment. For the benefit of beings, the activities are bestowed. The one who has attained realization bestows the king of the holders. Unchanging, boundless, great bliss: whatever one wishes, bestow it in stages. One who has intelligence receives it in accordance with the capacity of the vehicle.

Or else, as the supreme son, one is given the complete empowerment without a single portion left out. The very aspect of the mind is poured in like a vase, the door is opened, and in bliss it is raised upward.

Then that great sovereign moves the body as an unchanging lamp, opens the door of the seminal nucleus of mind, and, intoning the melody of the Great Brahmā, extends the vajra tongue that opens the way, and confers empowerment on the person of faith. The empowerment of bliss of the Great Perfection has nothing higher or more supreme. Because it is the empowerment of the secret crown ornament, and because the blessing of skillful means is great, it is the empowerment of all activities. Because the three realms are gathered under its power, it is the empowerment of the master's water of the face.

Hūṃ. By the blessing of skillful means and compassion, in order to empower the supreme son of the family, this secret crown ornament is bound upon you. Supreme son of the family, from today onward, you are the lord of all the great ones of the world, surpassing and overpowering even the greatest of the great. You yourself, great yogin, are the supreme object of offering for the great buddhas.

Oṃ sarva tathāgata guhya vajra ratna makuṭa trāṃ trāṃ. Vajra guhya siddhi hūṃ.

Hūṃ. The great blessing of skillful means is the mind of all the buddhas. It is entrusted to you in order that the empowerment be bestowed, the four great blessings. Supreme son of the family, from today onward, out of compassion for all sentient beings, from the non-Buddhists' eternalism and annihilationism onward, there is not a single act of all the buddhas that you may not perform. By the conduct of Vajrasattva, fulfill the hopes of all sentient beings.

Oṃ samaya guhya evaṃ maya a.

The empowerment of the master's water of the face brings all the three realms under your sway, to be turned as you wish.

Hūṃ. I am the lord of all the Victors, the great seminal nucleus, the awakening mind. I am the sovereign of all wrathful kings, the treasury and source of the play of wisdom. I am the unsurpassed glory of all, the king of means free of fault. This water drawn from the center of the mind and poured upon your tongue, hold it in the center of your heart. Son of the family, from today onward, you are the supreme pair, the minds of Vajrasattva. You are the chief of all the buddhas. Because you are equal to the awakening mind, you are the object of offering for all the heroes.

Son of the family, from today onward, gather all the profound outer, inner, and secret teachings into the center of the mind, open the door with the vajra tongue, and satisfy the person of faith with this supreme, sacred medicinal nectar. In the maṇḍala of the seminal nucleus of mind, contemplate the treasury of boundless peaceful and wrathful deities, and gain mastery over the three realms of existence. Command all the powerful ones.

Out of compassion for all living beings, practice also this seal of taming. Cut the root of the three poisons. Outer and inner, the vessel and its contents are utterly pure. This is the path of great utter purity. With conduct, activity, and means, the two accumulations are completed. The benefit of beings is the expanse of the awakening mind. Drink this water of the mind. Hold it firmly, great yogin.

Hūṃ. Then, in order that the supreme son of the family might devote himself to the meaning of equality, the King of Wisdom spoke thus.

In the center of the heart, the one who purifies, with a long Hūṃ joins the boundaries together. All is the expanse of great bliss, not fabricated by virtue or sin, not refined by meditation or accomplishment: the utterly pure nature of mind itself, a treasury of jewels. Through the wisdom of the vajra heart, may you become the chief of all the wrathful kings. Śrī Mahā Sukha Vajra Bodhi Hūṃ Ho. Oṃ Aṃ.

The dwelling of changeless wisdom, the supreme bliss that is reached without seeking, the eye of wisdom that is clear without looking, the lord of all, none higher. In the relaxed, self-abiding wisdom, may you obtain the changeless, swastika-like ground. Oṃ Mahā Guhya Bhruṃ Jñāna Maṇḍala. Jñāna Guhya Siddhi Svabhāva Ātmakoham.

With dhāraṇī, the power of absorption, and fearlessness, the five drops, the supreme unchanging medicine, the body adorned with the supreme marks and the great perfection. Oṃ Sarva Tathāgata Guhya Ātma Abhiṣiṅga Ho Ha.

As a garuḍa, spreading its right and left wings, overpowers the nāgas, so the supreme crown ornament, beautiful to all buddhas who are perfect in the supreme qualities of the three realms of existence, through its supreme greatness overpowers the four māras. Oṃ Sarva Tathāgata Mahā Guhya Vajra Abhiṣiṅga Ho.

Hūṃ. In the self-abiding of great bliss, in the proud splendor of the King of Wisdom, enjoying without change, through the play and gathering of means and wisdom, may you take beings as your children. Oṃ Sarva Tathāgata Guhya Anurāgata Vajra Svabhāva Ātmakoham. From the expanse, like the sun rising in the sky, one becomes a perfected child.

This is the sixth chapter, the giving of the secret pledges and empowerment, from the Great Guru, the Net of Magical Display, the Vajra Array.

Then the Blessed One, the King of Wisdom, entered meditative equipoise in the pledge of great compassion, the tormenting pledge, the Lugu Tantra, and performed the activity of the great pledge. This was the supreme pledge of the great and sublime Stana.

Emaho, a wondrous and marvelous Dharma, the secret of all perfect buddhas. In the enjoyment of the ten realms, purify the play and gathering of speech, and the garland of five becomes truly clear. It is the supreme guide who draws forth the blessing of the five doors, a wonder, the path of liberation from the lower realms.

On the crown is the great being Vairocana. The generation of the body is a great and wondrous blessing. Through the play and gathering of many messengers, taking the wisdom from the dwellings of the ten realms, place it upon a sun and moon disc. Dissolve the three knowings into the expanse.

From the seed of one's own continuum, the saṃsāric seed, a green sprout rises and ascends; the green one is transformed into a Hūṃ. Those gathered from above and from below gather into the Hūṃ. The Hūṃ is white, the five wisdoms of the Sugatas, clearly generated as a body, radiant with rays of great bliss. A blue five-pronged vajra is the blessing of the ten, father and mother. Let the pillar-like Hūṃ be joined to the expanse.

Samantabhadrī, the sky of bliss, is the mother of both buddhas and sentient beings. Vajrasattva is the chief of buddhas. By becoming the child, there is supreme bliss. The supreme realms and the lesser supreme ones, their place is the sky of Samantabhadrī the mother; their ground is the ground of Vajrasattva. Upon the seat of an irreversible sun and moon, the skilled one moves with the seal of the body, fully endowed with the major and minor marks, always bestowing the supreme body, the swastika. Ho, in the vajra secret words.

Then the King of Wisdom, with clouds of secret and supreme blissful offerings, to as many buddha-fields as there are atoms in the ten directions, and to as many maṇḍalas of the Victors as there are minute particles, in order to please all those supreme secret ones, his own secret queen dissolved into the expanse with a radiant smile. Embracing, he enacted the secret intention. Thirty-six Hūṃs spread out and coil into one great Hūṃ in the vast expanse.

Endowed fully with the four colors, the goddesses of the four families issue forth in manifold display, and filling the realms of the great thousand they make offerings. Some coil into the supreme secret within the expanse. Some make offerings of the five objects of desire: jeweled mansions of every kind, canopies, victory banners, pennants and parasols, necklaces of precious jewels, strings of small bells, all adorned with well-formed heaps of precious gems. With wish-fulfilling jewel trees they make offerings to all the maṇḍalas of the Victors without exception. Some fulfill the hopes of beings. Some subdue the māras and purify the lower realms. All of them make offerings of the secret.

Then, embracing in non-duality with his own secret queen, he made offerings of great bliss. As the great thousand realms are made to enter a mustard seed, so by this great offering of bliss all were brought to great delight.

Then the King of Wisdom, embracing in non-duality with his own secret queen, uttered this spontaneous utterance:

Ema ho! Supreme conduct of the Sugatas, whose nature is secret within manifold conduct. From the essence of non-attachment arises the conduct of great attachment. Having realized the two kinds of great conduct, to act with attachment is true great attachment. This is the supreme Brahmā, the king. The conduct of mind is of two kinds. It is the work of pleasing the ten directions' buddha-fields.

Thus he spoke spontaneously. And so all that is gathered in the buddha-fields of the Tathāgatas of the ten directions and four times dissolved in great delight.

This is the seventh chapter, "Anguished Compassion," from the great Net of Illusion, the Guru.

Then the Tathāgata, the King of Wisdom, entered into the meditative absorption called Adornment Arrayed with Offerings to the Guru, and spoke these words:

The maṇḍala fully awakened through the Net of Illusion, the guru, the supreme intention, through the seal of the dance, of gathering and emanating, is certain to enter and to travel the sky-path. Through the seal of song, of words and sound, one receives the accomplishment of the Dharma hero. Through the seal of food and drink, one receives the accomplishment of the wish-fulfilling hero. Through the seal of ornaments and garments, one receives the accomplishment of the blazing guru. Through the seal of the vowels and consonants, all is accomplished and the vajra is certain. Knowing how to join cause and result in the expanse, whatever one joins to the guru's intention is certain to be the field of the Victor, the vidyādhara. Having purified the continuum of the four kinds of birth, one with the marks complete is not troubled by spirits on the earth.

As he said this, the two great accumulations were completed.

Then, greatly delighted by the deeds of his own guru, he sang this song:

Om! The wisdom maṇḍala that completes the ten directions and four times, the great bindu. The maṇḍala of merit, the gathering of bodies, the bindu of appearance and emptiness, perfect in everything. Ho!

Om! The great vajra bindu of merit, endowed with the vajra wisdom maṇḍala, the great vajra sound without limit, the vajra king, the great bindu. Ho!

Om! The expanse of illusion, equal and without fixation, boundless, issuing forth in all variety from everywhere, boundless, spontaneously dissolving everywhere: the great manifold body, speech, and mind. Ho!

Om! The great completeness of body, speech, and mind, with qualities and activities perfect everywhere, spontaneously complete from the beginning, Samantabhadra, the great bindu of the all-gathering great perfection. Ho!

Oṃ! In as many worlds as there are atoms in the ten directions, as many aims of the Victors as there are minute particles, inconceivable emanations as numerous as particles, spontaneously accomplished in an instant. Ho!

Oṃ! All without exception is body, speech, and mind, the great self-nature of body, speech, and mind, pervading everywhere as body, speech, and mind, the great bindu of body, speech, and mind. Ho!

Oṃ! All is the bindu, the meaning of the guru.

The guru of magical display is the expanse of the bindu. The expanse itself is the great awakening mind. The essence, the guru, is the definitive meaning; it does not stir from the two bindus. Ho!

This is the eighth chapter, "Pleasing the Two Great Assemblies," from the Net of Magical Display, the Great Guru.

Then the Tathāgata, the King of Wisdom, entered into samādhi in the manner of the great terror of the Great Guru of Magical Display. Why did he do so? Because beings, through the power of the view of a self and of bewilderment, did not realize the great secret that lies concealed, and clinging to the hidden secrets, they cast aside the meaning of the equality of all phenomena. They took the many evil mantras of the brahmins as the support of their intellect, and, naming a state devoid of the work of great compassion by a fine name, they continually performed deeds of aversion in the guise of liberating. They did not realize the meaning of method and wisdom as inseparable. They were not parted for even an instant from deeds of lustful conduct. The wisdom of self-awareness sank away in their minds. They were constantly shrouded in utter delusion about the ultimate. They did not realize the great qualities of the buddhas, and continually performed deeds of arrogance, swollen with pride. Devoid of the work of the four immeasurables, they were constantly led on by the turbulence of jealousy. Deluded about the self and fond of conceptual thought, cut off from the true limit, and bewildered about cause and result, they hurled harsh seeds of becoming, and beings of uninterrupted deeds were born in the vajra hell, the great hell, for sixty thousand great eons.

Freed from that, beings of the next ripening were born in the great hell for six great eons. Freed from that harsh obscuration of karma, linked by their former existence, they became great hungry ghost demons: some with one body and a hundred heads, with heads of many kinds; some with a hundred bodies and one head; some with many bodies and limbs, bearing weapons of many kinds and displaying many cruel miracles. Subjugating all, from the nāga class up to those of great result, they sowed harsh seeds in great numbers.

Then, seeing with the eye of wisdom, unmistaken, the one whose bodily form was beautifully adorned with the accumulations of merit and wisdom, the fruit of his excellent conduct in the past, perceived this. In order to purify the habitual tendencies of affliction in those demons of evil karma, and to establish the beings of the three realms in happiness, the wisdom of great compassion arose in him. And the lord of the body, speech, and mind of all the tathāgatas, the Great Joyful One, the King of Wisdom, the Great Terrifier himself, entered into the samādhi of the Guru of Magical Display, the Cloud of Emanation, the great guru, the maṇḍala of the Victors.

From the expanse of the Great Guru of suchness, he drew forth his own secret consort, the great queen of wrathful queens. With the radiance of joy, saying "Hi hi," he caused her lotus to open. Dissolving in great nondual bliss, from the cloud of the secret guru, he uttered: Hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ, vajra jvala viṣa krodha, vajra jvala maṇḍala phaṭ phaṭ, hala hala hūṃ.

Then, throughout all the ten directions of the six worlds, there arose in the midst of a great ocean of blood, whose nature is the vast charnel ground, its waves in turmoil, a great skeleton above Mount Meru. In the center of a mass of blazing vajra fire, below, a vajra grid was drawn with many compartments. Its four sides and four faces blazed, with three tiers beautifully adorned with projecting ledges of precious vajra. It had four gates, with porticos and surrounding rims. Walls were built in a lattice pattern, in blazing precious vajra of dark blue. Above blazed a wish-fulfilling jewel, and a vajra canopy was drawn with many blazing compartments.

At the summit, in the form of the supreme, in the realm of Akaniṣṭha, from the peak of existence downward, a vajra grid took shape in the manner of a vase, its many compartments coiled into a single whole. The magical display of the wisdom vajra grid, the blazing light of the supreme, spread out in the four directions and shook, so that all the three realms were shattered. The great victory banner of the supreme and the great spear-banner of the supreme were raised up from the four sides and four corners. The secret wall of the supreme encircled the outer tiers. The outer trees of precious vajra, the supreme, held the directions and intermediate directions firm. With neither outside nor inside, everything had become the interior of the great supreme. Within the palace, whose wall of the vajra enclosure encompassing all three realms could not be breached, there came forth as many worlds as there are fine dust particles, thousands upon thousands, of the playful mudrās of wrathful gods and wrathful goddesses.

Then in all ten directions of the six worlds there arose the sounds "Hur hur," "Chem chem," "Shig shig," "Thor thor," "Strike!," "Destroy!," "Crush!," "Shatter!," "Subdue!," and the like, and those in the world who were mighty, bold, and fierce, and those who kept fierce vows, fainted away.

Then, with great delight, that very king of wisdom delighted in the great supreme charnel ground. Above the great skeleton, Mount Meru, in the midst of the ocean of blood, in the expanse of blazing vajra fire, upon a four-spoked wheel of vajra wisdom, he made a great offering with his own secret queen, and from the expanse of non-duality he drew forth this mantra. As he uttered "Hūṃ vajra dūtrī nan sūrya candra padma maṇḍala deva tiṣṭhanaṃ," above the blazing four-spoked wheel of precious wisdom he set up the great throne of the supreme, formed of a gathering of fierce charnel-ground beasts such as lions, and spread beneath it a seat of the supreme with sun, moon, and lotus.

Then, subdued by the magical display of the great supreme, the great meditative absorption of the supreme, immeasurable in its vehemence, the great wisdom of the supreme, free of all fixation, subdued all the arrogant at once, and as a sign upon the great supreme support, there dwelt the blazing mudrā of the supreme, beyond every object of fixation: the Blessed One, the great wisdom king, whose body turns dark blue and every color. With his vajra tongue he sounded the voice of a thousand dragons, so that all the thousands of world systems were destroyed at once. With his wisdom fire mind he burned at once the fuel of all appearance and existence. Without above or below, he cried "Kyi bung!" everywhere. He had nine heads and eighteen arms, and his feet were set in eight postures. In his hands he held many kinds of weapons, and he was adorned with the ornaments of the charnel ground. He had twenty-seven blazing eyes and was adorned with the crowns of the five families. Like a dark blue vajra garuḍa, he covered the world systems with his wings. He dwelt in non-duality with the wrathful queen, blazing and dark blue.

From the expanse of non-duality, on the upper rim of the spokes of the wheel in the east, upon a throne with sun and moon, there was Mahādeva, and upon the desire-realm gods, laid out and subdued, was the very mass of his own form aggregate, the Blessed One Buddha Heruka. His body was dark yellow, with three heads, six arms, and four feet, adorned with the ornaments of the charnel ground. In his hands he held many kinds of weapons. The Sugata dwelt in a great embrace with the wrathful queen.

On the upper rim of the spokes of the wheel in the south, upon a throne with sun and moon, upon a seat where Yama was laid out and crushed, there arose from his own feeling aggregate the Blessed One Ratna Heruka, his body dark blue, with three heads, six arms, and four feet, holding many kinds of weapons and adorned with the ornaments of the charnel ground.

He dwelt in the manner of a great embrace with the wrathful queen. On the upper rim of the spokes of the wheel in the west, upon a throne with sun and moon, upon a seat where the Lord of Waters (Varuṇa) and the black wheel-wielder Viṣṇu were laid out and crushed, there arose from his own perception aggregate the Blessed One Padma Heruka, his body dark red, with three heads, six arms, and four feet, holding many kinds of weapons and adorned with the ornaments of the charnel ground. He dwelt in union with the wrathful queen Padma.

On the upper rim of the spokes of the wheel in the north, upon a throne with sun and moon, upon a seat where the yakṣa Kubera was laid out and crushed, there arose from his own formations aggregate the Blessed One Karma Heruka, his body dark green, with three heads, six arms, and four feet in a wide, striding stance, holding many kinds of weapons and adorned with the ornaments of the charnel ground. He dwelt in the manner of a great embrace with the wrathful queen Supreme Action.

Then the great arrogant ones and the rest, with malicious minds, displayed many kinds of fierce miraculous powers. With one voice, in a fierce roar, they cried out harsh words: "Look, look! Lord of compassion, why do you act like this?" And they bellowed most savagely.

Then the Blessed One, with great delight, became the very radiance of the Wisdom King, a body of immense majesty. With great compassion, by a means of taming, he released these great cries, the roaring tones of the supreme guru, the secret mantra of the net of illusion: Hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ. Ha ha ha. Khāhi khāhi khāhi.

By this utterance, he drew out the hearts and all the sense faculties of those malevolent hosts, the Great Lord and the others. He pulled out all their entrails, severed and cut all their limbs, ate their flesh, drank their blood, and made ornaments of all their bones.

Then that Great Terrifier himself uttered: Hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ, bhyo e a ra li jā jā. By this, he gathered the realms of the worlds of the ten directions, together with space, into the size of a single mustard seed.

Then he gathered in all the malevolent spirits, the lord of lords of them all, and the consorts of the great arrogant ones and the rest, the female spirits, queens of the queens of them all. He gathered the great ogresses, Mi Srun Mo, Brahmī, Krodhā, Īśvarī, Viṣṇuvī, Kumārī, the Red One, Amṛtā, Śāntā, the Great Pestilence Woman, the Ogress, the Eater, the Joyful One, the Corpse Blood-Drinker, the Solitary Wanderer, the Mind-Stealer, the Accomplished One, the Wind Woman, the Slayer, the Fire Woman, the Sow, the Aging One, the Great-Nosed One, the Water Goddess, the Great Black One, the Great Red-Yellow Goat-Headed One, the Great Blue-Black Jar-Nosed One, the Great Blue-Black Belly-Holder, and the rest, as well as servants, attendants, and attendants' attendants. Even the dust of the whole field of their retinue he gathered in.

Then once more the Wisdom King, the Great Delighted One himself, absorbed himself in the meditative absorption called Cloud Arising, the great secret of the delighted guru, and from his body, speech, and mind, the guru, he released these utterances: Oṃ āḥ hūṃ. Vajra Padma praveśa padma hūṃ a la la ho.

By this utterance, the minds of all the malevolent spirits were stirred with intense desire. Their secrets were laid open, and as iron filings cling to a magnet, eight, beginning with Mi Srun Mo, clung to the body of the Blessed One, the Wisdom King. Five, beginning with Brahmī, clung to the body of the Blessed One, the Great Yellow-Black One. Five, beginning with Amṛtā, clung to the body of the Blessed One, the Great Blue-Black One. Five, beginning with the Blood-Intoxicated One, clung to the body of the Blessed One, the Great Red-Black One.

Five, beginning with Me Mo, clung to the body of the Blessed One, the Great Green-Black One.

Then, filled with great delight, those deities uttered hūṃ, and the gathering of lotuses was drawn together and became utterly crushed. Then, delighted, they uttered ha ha, and from the eight consciousnesses of their own awareness there came forth eight, beginning with the White One, each wondrously arrayed with his own implements. Having come forth, they took their places on seats outside the blazing wheel, circling from the eastern direction, in wrathful form, with a compassionate yet terrifying bearing.

Then, delighted, they uttered he, and from the eight objects of their own awareness there came forth eight, beginning with the Great Lion-Faced One, each wondrously arrayed with his own implements. They too took their places on seats in the space within the blazing wheel, with a compassionate yet terrifying bearing and a fiercely valiant demeanor.

Then, delighted, they uttered phaṭ, proclaiming it to the buddha-fields of the ten directions without exception. Thereupon the six Great Sages, the six Blessed Ones, who accomplish the aims of all beings in the buddha-fields of the ten directions without remainder, worked for the benefit of beings and tamed the six classes of beings. Moreover, from the expanse of the dharmadhātu the mind took delight and became eight, beginning with the one who sends forth, the one with the rays of the sun, and the one with the noose. In the third blazing ring of space, upon seats that bring dryness and moisture to the fields, they took their places with their own implements and a fiercely valiant demeanor, circling from the eastern direction.

Then, delighted, they uttered phaṭ, and from the four inversions of their own awareness, four, beginning with Vajra Sringdrogma, each wondrously arrayed with her own implements, took their places at the four gates of the great blazing maṇḍala. They stood upon seats of compassionate yet terrifying bearing, in fiercely valiant form, in the manner of skillful means and wisdom.

Then, from the cloud of great delight, forty-two mudrās of the buddhas' play uttered phaṭ at one time. All became wrathful, and in an instant all the female spirits were sent off, each to her own abode.

Then the Blessed One, the Great Blood-Drinker himself, through great compassion entered at once into the contemplation called Arising of Nectar, and drew forth these from the vajra of body, speech, and mind. When he uttered oṃ vajra amṛta mahākrodhi aṃ aṃ, Maheśvara and all the others came forth from the underside of the Blessed One, the Great Blood-Drinker. He poured the mire-water over them, and they regained their memory.

Then all those great Blood-Drinkers were seen performing great and marvelous miracles. At that time, all the great arrogant ones dwelling in the six worlds were seen to be subdued at once. Utterly cowed and trembling, they spoke with one voice:

We come as subjects, we come as subjects.
If we do not serve as subjects with diligence,
may our heads and bodies split into a hundred pieces,
may our hearts burst and be hacked apart,
may we rot, burn, and be destroyed,
may we fall into hell and cry out.

Thus each took an oath of becoming subjects. Then all of them were set upon the seats of the maṇḍala. And again they all spoke with one voice, offering to the maṇḍala their own wives, daughters, mothers, and sisters:

Our consorts, our mothers,
our sisters, and our daughters,
we beg you to accept in the great maṇḍala.
O heroes, O divine lords, we beg you to accept them.
Who among all our retinues could merely hold the name of this great blazing maṇḍala?
Like a blazing wish-fulfilling jewel,
it fulfills every need.

Thus they swore. Then their mothers, sisters, wives, and daughters came in an instant, and the accomplishment of karmic activity was bestowed. Then the Great Blood-Drinker of Wisdom gave them names, placed a vajra in their hands, and conferred empowerment upon them as vajra servants and messengers.

Then, in order to make the meaning of the great blazing maṇḍala clear and radiant to the Tathāgatas of the ten directions and the four times, the Queen of Wisdom became nondual with her own secret consort, the Queen of Secrets, and these were drawn forth from the body, speech, and mind of the vajra guru.

Emaho! The secret Dharma, primordially pure, arises from the nonduality of space and the expanse.
In space the maṇḍala of the guru appears.
Set up a throne, a sun-disc seat,
and spread the assembly of deities as its cushion.

Hūṃ! In the center of the blazing wheel,
a throne is arranged, a sun-disc, subduing demons and spirits.
Upon it, visualize this:
a body arisen from awakening mind,

the glorious great Supreme Heruka,
with nine heads and eighteen arms,
and twenty-seven blazing eyes.
Upon the heads he wears the crowns of the five families.
His feet, too, are set in eight postures.
Dark blue, with the wings of the vajra garuḍa,
he covers the world-realms entirely.
Fearsome black serpents
and the ornaments of the charnel ground adorn him.

The three heads at the front:
right white, left red, the center dark blue.
These three heads of complete liberation are the faces that overturn the sorrow of the three realms.
The three heads in the middle, wrathful:
right blue, left green, the center dark blue.
These are the heads of means, wisdom, and mind,
the faces that perfect the three existences within the expanse.
The three heads at the edge, wrathful:
right dark blue, left dark blue, the center dark blue.
These are the heads of scriptural transmission and pith instruction, fulfilling the hopes of the three realms,
the unchanging dark blue faces whose fangs cut the root of birth and death.
From the blessing of the nine heads' play,
the three on the right emit a thousand lightning flashes,
the three on the left roar with a thousand thunders,
and the three above rain down great golden vajras.

The nine eyes gaze as follows.
The first set gaze unchangingly into the expanse of Dharma, of Samantabhadra and Samantabhadrī.
The middle set gaze with the wisdom of complete liberation, looking upon all beings of existence with eyes of loving-kindness, protection, and equanimity.
The outer set: the three on the right are eyes wrathful with aversion, whose gaze liberates māras and non-Buddhists;

the three on the left are eyes of loving-kindness, protection, and equanimity, whose gaze establishes beings in boundless bliss;
the three above are eyes playing with wisdom,
whose gaze empowers beings in their abodes.

The nine heads bear nine crowns of the five families,
five times nine, forty-five in all,
adorned with forty-five buddhas.
With the wisdom of great emptiness
he carries them as the sign of great pervasive expanse.
With eighteen hands at play
he joins the eighteen emptinesses to the expanse.
His eight feet crush pride and arrogance.
Endowed with means and wisdom,
he spreads the dark blue vajra wings.
In the eighteen hands he holds:

at right, the vajra, the lung-heart, the small vessel;
at left, the bhaṇḍa, the great vessel, the large vessel;
the inner noose and the sun, the great garuḍa at right;
the great vessel and the moon, the owl at left;
fire and ocean, the gau at right;
wind and jewel, Mount Meru at left.

The eighteen qualities are perfected in the expanse.

The first, the great vajra conch, gathers the three realms under his power and subdues all māras and non-Buddhists.
The second, the great vessel and lung-heart, liberates all beings of existence into the expanse of the samaya.
The third, the small vessel and pill,
is the sign of fully liberating the three poisons.
The fourth, the great vessel and inner noose, draws beings of the five lineages into the expanse.
The fifth holds sun and moon together,
unmoved from awakening mind.
The sixth, the garuḍa and the owl,
is the sign of subjugating all ḍākinīs.

The seventh, a mass of fire scattered by wind, reduces the habitual tendencies of existence to ash.
The eighth, Mount Meru and the oceans, set all things without exception in motion.

This is the attainment of mastery over the five elements. The ninth, the precious vessel, is the sign that accomplishments and emanations will arise. From the two nines joined as a pair, the eighteen thousand are completed in the expanse.

The adornment of the charnel ground, the garland of blazing dry skulls, is the pacified, one-sided sorrow, repeated: the attainment of the perfectly complete body. This garland of blazing fresh skulls, having gathered the three realms under its power, is the attainment of mastery over the emanation body. The garland of half-skull bowls transforms the five poisons into nectar: the attainment of mastery over the enjoyment body. The garment of the great moist field is the great equality of the dharmadhātu: the attainment of mastery over the truth body. The tiger-skin loincloth, a place of abyss and foundation, is the very nature of the four enlightened activities: the attainment of mastery over the vajra body. The many black snakes hanging down are the sign that all wisdoms will arise: the attainment of mastery over the body of the great sign. The trampling of the eight gods beneath the eight feet is the subjugation of the arrogant.

The Queen of the angry Buddhas is Krodhīśvarī, chief of the consorts. She has blazing dark-blue hair, and her ornaments and attire accord with the principal. In the manner of a great embrace, she is empowered upon the principal, the Bhaṇḍa Rakta. Contemplate her in the manner of a great embrace.

On the rim of the wheel in the eastern direction, upon a throne and a sun disc, a seat of sun and moon, one should visualize the following. The aggregate of form, transformed, is the blood-drinker Buddha Heruka. He has three heads, six arms, and stands with four legs spread. His right face is green, his left blue, and his central face yellow. Playing forth manifestly with six arms, he holds a wheel, a weapon, and a noose in the right hands; in the left, a Bhaṇḍa, a small hand-drum, and a khaṭvāṅga. Yellow-black, he is adorned with the ornaments of the charnel ground. Visualize him in the manner of a great embrace with the Sugata's angry queen.

On the rim of the wheel in the southern direction, upon a throne and a sun disc, the seat of Yama, one should visualize the following. The aggregate of feeling, transformed, is the blood-drinker Ratna Heruka. He has three heads, six arms, and stands with four legs spread. His right face is yellow, his left red, and his central face blue. Playing forth manifestly with six arms, he holds a jewel bowl and a pestle in the right hands, and in the left a Bhaṇḍa, a weapon, and a small hand-drum. Blue-black, he is adorned with the ornaments of the charnel ground. Visualize him in the manner of a great embrace with the angry queen of the Jewel.

On the rim of the wheel in the western direction, upon a throne and a sun disc, the seat of the nāgas, one should visualize the following. The aggregate of perception, transformed, is the blood-drinker Padma Heruka. He has three heads, six arms, and stands with four legs spread. His right face is blue, his left red, and his central face green. Playing forth manifestly with six arms, he holds a lotus, a small hand-drum, and a knife in the right hands, and in the left a Bhaṇḍa, a khaṭvāṅga, and a rosary of teeth. Red-black, he is adorned with the ornaments of the charnel ground. Visualize him in the manner of a great embrace with the angry queen of the Lotus.

On the rim of the wheel in the northern direction, upon a throne and a sun disc, the seat of the yakṣas, one should visualize the following. The aggregate of formations, transformed, is the blood-drinker Karma Heruka. He has three heads, six arms, and stands with four legs spread. His right face is red, his left yellow, and his central face green. Playing forth manifestly with six arms, he holds a sword, a noose, and a small hand-drum in the right hands, and in the left a Bhaṇḍa, a skull staff, and a khaṭvāṅga. Green-black, he is adorned with the ornaments of the charnel ground. He abides in the manner of a great embrace with the angry queen of Supreme Activity.

In the outer layer of the blazing wheel, in a palace of massed blazing fire, arisen from space, from the expanse of space in which there is no duality, one should visualize the Phra-men-ma in the eastern direction. Upon a seat of the subjugated earth-lord, the Phra-men-ma, the all-base transformed, is a yoginī, blue-black, Gauri-like. Her hair, dark as soot, coils upward. With bared fangs and gaping jaws she devours the abyss and foundation; she sings songs of exhortation and laughs with a "Ha ha!"

In her right hand she holds a great club; in her left, a skull-cup of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the corpse of one subjected to birth and death. One should visualize her in the southern direction.

Upon a seat of the subjugated lord of death, the Phra-men-ma, the transformed consciousness, is a yoginī, yellow-black, a Cauri-like woman. Her matted hair, black as soot, coils upward. With bared fangs and gaping jaws she drinks the abyss and foundation; she sings songs of exhortation and laughs with a "Ha ha!"

In her right hand she draws the arrow of skillful means; in her left she bends the bow of wisdom. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the corpse of Yama. One should visualize her in the western direction.

Upon a seat of the subjugated sun, the Phra-men-ma, the transformed affliction, is a yoginī, red-black, Pramohā. Her matted hair, black as soot, coils upward. With bared fangs and gaping jaws she wears the abyss and foundation as her garment; she sings songs of exhortation and laughs with a "Ha ha!"

In her right hand she holds the banner of the sea-monster; in her left, a skull-cup of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the corpse of Sūrya. One should visualize her in the northern direction.

Upon a seat of the subjugated moon, the Phra-men-ma, the transformed tangible, is a yoginī, dark blue-black, Petalī. Her matted hair, black as soot, coils upward. With bared fangs and gaping jaws she wears the abyss and foundation; she sings songs of exhortation and laughs with a "Ha ha!"

In her right hand she holds a five-pointed vajra; in her left, a small club and a severed head. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the corpse of Candra. One should visualize her in the southeast.

Upon a seat of the subjugated fire god, the Phra-men-ma, the transformed seer, is a yoginī, red-black, Pukkasī. Her hair blazes, her fangs are bared and her jaws gape; she wears the cloak of a charnel ground as the abyss and foundation. She sings songs of exhortation and laughs with a "Ha ha!"

In her right hand she holds a great club; in her left, an intestine-pulling hook. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the corpse of Agni. One should visualize her in the southwest.

Upon a seat of the subjugated lord of the truthless, the Phra-men-ma, the transformed hearer, is a yoginī, dark blue-black, Śmaśānī. Her hair blazes, her fangs are bared and her jaws gape; she wears the great living creature as the abyss and foundation. She sings songs of exhortation and laughs with a "Ha ha!"

In her left hand she holds a small club; in her right, a lifted skull-staff. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the corpse of Nirṛti. One should visualize her in the northwest.

Upon a seat of the subjugated wind god, the Phra-men-ma, the transformed smeller, is a yoginī, yellow-black, Caṇḍālī. Her hair blazes, her fangs are bared and her jaws gape; she wears a fearsome cloak. She sings songs of exhortation and laughs with a "Ha ha!"

In her right hand she holds a small club; in her left, a severed skull. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the corpse of Vāyu. One should visualize her in the northeast.

Upon a seat of the subjugated Powerful One, the Phra-men-ma, the transformed experiencer, is a yoginī, green-black, Ghasmarī. Her hair blazes, her fangs are bared and her jaws gape; she wears the hide of a great club as her garment. She sings songs of exhortation and laughs with a "Ha ha!"

In her right hand she holds a skull-cup of blood; in her left, a trident that sows turmoil. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the corpse of Īśvara.

In the outer layer of that maṇḍala, in the space of dark purple-black blazing, one should visualize beings arisen from the secret space, in the eastern direction.

Upon a seat of the subjugated gandharva, the all-base transformed from its object, is an unobstructed Phra-men with a lion's face, a yoginī, yellow-black, Siṃhamukhī. With bared fangs and gaping jaws she wears the abyss and foundation. Her two hands crossed, she stands very tall, brandishing and devouring the great club. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the corpse of Indra. One should visualize her in the southern direction.

Upon a seat of the subjugated Kumbhāṇḍa, the Phra-men, the consciousness transformed into its object, is a heroic one with a tiger's face, a yoginī, red-black, Vyāghrī. With bared fangs and gaping jaws she wears the abyss and foundation. With her two hands, in the manner of casting a sling, she hurls the small club as if sowing grain. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the seat of Ratri. One should visualize her in the western direction.

Upon a seat of the subdued pretas, with the afflictions transformed into their object, is the Phra-men Subduer of Conceptions, with the face of a fox. She is a yoginī, red-black, Śrīkāmā. With bared fangs and gaping jaws she wears the abyss and foundation. With her two hands she releases the great cudgel from within. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the seat of Hrī. One should visualize her in the northern direction.

Upon a seat of the subjugated yakṣas, with the object of touch transformed into its object, is the Phra-men Equanimity, with the face of a wolf. She is a yoginī, dark blue-black, Śvānamā. With bared fangs and gaping jaws she wears the abyss and foundation. With her two hands, in great play, she seeks out a half-cudgel and consumes it. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the seat of the yakṣa. One should visualize her in the south-east.

Upon a seat of the subjugated rākṣasas, with the seeing object transformed into its object, is the Phra-men of Majestic Splendor, with the face of a vulture. She is a yoginī, red-black, Kṛtamā. With beak extended and jaws gaping she wears the abyss and foundation. In her right hand is a sharp bronze knife; in her left, a drawn-out cord of entrails. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the rākṣasa. One should visualize her in the south-west.

Upon a seat of the subjugated rākṣasas, with the hearing object transformed into its object, is the Phra-men Illuminator, with the face of a corpse-bird. She is a yoginī, true and pure, Kaṅkamā. With beak extended and jaws gaping she devours the abyss and foundation. With a small cudgel, above and below, right and left, she hurls it in a fierce manner onto her shoulder. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the rākṣasa. One should visualize her in the north-west.

Upon a seat of the subjugated rākṣasas, with the object of smell transformed into its object, is the Phra-men with the face of a sparrow and a raven. She is a yoginī, red-black, Khakhvamā. With beak extended and jaws gaping she wears the abyss and foundation. In her right hand is a red bronze knife; in her left, a skull-bowl of blood (bhaṇḍa-rakta). She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the rākṣasa. One should visualize her in the north-east.

Upon a seat of the subjugated rākṣasas, with the object of experience transformed into its object, is the Phra-men Fulfiller, with the face of an owl. She is a yoginī, green-black, Hulumā. With beak extended and jaws gaping she devours the abyss and foundation. In her right hand is a vajra hook; in her left, a small all-destroying cudgel. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon the rākṣasa.

Within the blazing outer enclosure, in the final one, in a mansion of blazing dry skulls, upon a seat of the great fields and the coiled ones, one should visualize in the eastern direction her who has transformed into the object of agitation: the Great Rouser, the Inexhaustible One, of ever-changing bodily hue. She partakes of the great field's play and the entrails. Her matted hair, dark as soot, blazes upward. Singing with her cry, she sets the three existences ablaze. With her "ha ha" laughter she plays in wisdom. In her right hand is the sun-ray noose; in her left, a skull-bowl of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon a fresh corpse.

One should visualize in the southern direction her who has transformed into the one who subdues humans: the Great Rouser who hurls the short spear, a yoginī, yellow-black, the Great Agitator. Her matted hair, dark as soot, coils upward. She wears the abyss and foundation of humans as her garment. Singing with her cry, she purifies the three existences. With her "ha ha" laughter she stirs up humans. In her right hand is a vajra short spear; in her left, a skull-bowl of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon a fresh corpse.

One should visualize in the western direction her who has transformed out of the dharmadhātu: the Rouser, Vajra Bell-Sounder, a yoginī whose body is beyond any weapon. Her matted hair, dark as soot, blazes upward. She wears the garment of the basic space of the nature of reality. Singing with her cry, she rouses the realms of emptiness. With her "ha ha" laughter she unites all into the basic space. In her right hand is a bell that proclaims speech; in her left, a skull-bowl of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon a fresh corpse.

One should visualize in the northern direction her who has transformed into the subduer of the asuras: the Rouser with a face of a garland of skulls and arrows, a yoginī, blue-black, the Great Agitator. She wears the abyss and foundation of the great living beings. Her matted hair, dark as soot, blazes upward. Singing with her cry, she purifies the three realms. With her "ha ha" laughter she stirs the gods.

In her right hand is a vajra star-arrow; in her left, a skull-bowl of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon a fresh corpse.

One should visualize in the southeast direction her who has transformed into the subduer of the gods: the Rouser who holds the garuḍa, a yakṣī, a yoginī, blue-black, the Great Agitator. She wears the abyss and foundation of the terrifying one as her garment. Her matted hair, dark as soot, blazes upward. Singing with her cry, she makes the thousandfold world resound. With her "ha ha" laughter she stirs the gods.

In her right hand is the great vajra garuḍa; in her left, a skull-bowl of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon a fresh corpse.

One should visualize in the southwest direction her who has transformed into the subduer of the hungry ghosts: the Rouser who carries fire and holds a garland of lightning, a yoginī, red-black, the Great Agitator. She wears the abyss and foundation of the long-necked hungry ghost. Her matted hair, dark as soot, blazes upward. Singing with her cry, she purifies appearance and existence. With her "ha ha" laughter she stirs the hungry ghosts.

In her right hand is a vajra garland of lightning; in her left, a skull-bowl of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon a fresh corpse.

One should visualize in the northwest direction her who has transformed into the subduer of the animals: the Rouser, the great terror, who strikes with the gleam of lightning, a yoginī, dark purple-black, the Great Agitator. Her matted hair, dark as soot, blazes upward. She wears the abyss and foundation of the mighty, majestic great bear. Singing with her cry, she makes the thousandfold world resound. With her "ha ha" laughter she stirs the animals.

In her right hand is a vajra bear; in her left, a skull-bowl of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon a fresh corpse.

One should visualize in the northeast direction her who has transformed into the subduer of the hell-beings, the protector of the hells: the Rouser, Yama, wielding a sword, a yoginī, blue-black, the Great Agitator. Her matted hair, dark as soot, blazes upward. She wears the abyss and foundation of Yama as her garment. Singing with her cry, she purifies the three existences. With her "ha ha" laughter she stirs the hell-beings.

In her right hand is a vajra sword; in her left, a skull-bowl of blood. She sits with limbs stretched and bent upon a fresh corpse.

At the four gates of the blazing maṇḍala, one should visualize those who have transformed the four perversions. At the eastern gate: upon the seat of a great sow, wearing the abyss and foundation of the horse-faced rākṣasī, she holds in her right hand a vajra hook and in her left a skull-bowl of blood. Upon the seat of the great sow, together with the mighty great wrathful one, she sits in the manner of a great embrace, glancing backward with a fierce expression.

At the southern gate one should visualize: upon the seat of the great goat-faced one, wearing the abyss and foundation of the great sow-faced one, she holds in her right hand an iron bell-noose and in her left a moist skull-bowl. Upon the seat of the great goat-faced one, together with the great wrathful Yama, the Slayer, she sits in the manner of a great embrace, gazing with a fierce expression.

At the western gate one should visualize: upon the seat of the great one with jar-like ears, wearing the abyss and foundation of the great bear-faced one, she holds in her right hand a blazing iron chain and in her left a moist skull-bowl. Upon the seat of the rākṣasa with jar-like ears, together with the great wrathful Hayagrīva, she sits in the manner of a great embrace, glancing backward with a fierce expression.

At the northern gate one should visualize: upon the seat of the great-bellied one, wearing the abyss and foundation of the great wolf-faced one, she holds in her right hand a bell with ashes and in her left a moist skull-bowl. Upon the seat of the great-bellied one, together with the great wrathful Amṛtakunḍalin, she sits in the manner of a great embrace, glancing backward with a fierce expression.

Ho, vajra secret: this is the very word.

This is the ninth chapter, "The Subduing of Māras and the Radiance in the Ten Directions of the Great Qualities of Body, Speech, and Mind," from the Great Master Magical Display, the Definitive Reality of the Secret Essence.

Then the great joyous one, the king of wisdom, caused the great maṇḍala of speech to resound fully, and, mounting the intention that upholds the sacred commitments, drew forth these from the vajra of body, speech, and mind. Bhrūṃ viśva krodha vajra jvala maṇḍala cakṛa hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ. Hala hala duti cakṛa nān. Sūrya candra padma deva tiṣṭhanān.

Hūṃ hūṃ ha ha hūṃ hūṃ, vajra mahā-śrī-heruka, mahā-caṇḍa, destroy, burn, and cook all evil-doers, hūṃ phaṭ. Hūṃ, vajra-holder, mahā-krodheśvarī, blazing one, hūṃ phaṭ. Oṃ, all the Tathāgatas, mahā-śrī-heruka, mahā-caṇḍa, destroy, burn, and cook all evil-doers, hūṃ phaṭ. Oṃ, all the Tathāgatas, Buddha, mahā-krodheśvarī, blazing one, hūṃ phaṭ. Oṃ trāṃ, jewel, mahā-śrī-heruka, mahā-caṇḍa, destroy, burn, and cook all evil-doers, hūṃ phaṭ. Trāṃ, sun-jewel, mahā-krodheśvarī, blazing one, hūṃ phaṭ. Oṃ hrīḥ, lotus, mahā-śrī-heruka, mahā-caṇḍa, destroy, burn, and cook all evil-doers, hūṃ phaṭ. Hrīḥ, lotus, mahā-krodheśvarī, blazing one, hūṃ phaṭ. Ha, karma, mahā-śrī-heruka, mahā-caṇḍa, destroy, burn, and cook all evil-doers, hūṃ phaṭ. Karma, mahā-krodheśvarī, blazing one, hūṃ phaṭ.

Vajra Keurī, Vajra Ceurī, Vajra Pramohā, Vajra Petālī, Vajra Pukkasī, Vajra Ghasmarī, Vajra Śmaśānī, Vajra Caṇḍālī. Vajra lion-faced one, Vajra tiger-faced one, Vajra jackal-faced one, Vajra dog-faced one, Vajra vulture-faced one, Vajra heron-faced one, Vajra crow-faced one, Vajra owl-faced one.

Vajra Ārya Teca Teṇa Ca. Vajra Amogha Hūṃ. Vajra Āloka Baṃ. Vajra Bhasmi Pālaya Vato Ho. Ehyehi Prīta Ārya Nica Tura Vaya Phaṭ. Vajra Beyogi Prati Ārya Nica Turathāya Hūṃ Phaṭ. Vajra Mu A Ni A Prati Ārya Ni Pa Śi Kara Phaṭ. Vajra Muni A Prati Ārya Pa Ni Śi Kara Phaṭ. Vajra Muni A Suṃ Ba A Ni Ba Śi Kara Phaṭ. Vajra Muni A Prati Ārya Ni Pa Śi Kara Phaṭ. Vajra Muni A Dupriti A Ni Pa Śi Kara Phaṭ. Ehyehi, come hither! Oṃ rulu rulu hūṃ bhyo hūṃ. Jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ. Vajra krodha samaya hūṃ phaṭ.

By this maṇḍala of speech, the whole realm of the three thousand worlds was pervaded all at once, and it became renowned. The Sri-demonesses and the other hosts who had taken the sacred commitments and heeded the command each offered up the very heart of their own life-force.

Vajra Mānurākṣasī, Vajra Pramāṇī, Vajra Raudrī, Vajra Vaiṣṇavī, Vajra Piṅgalā, Vajra Kemaṛī, Vajra Indrāṇī, Vajra Surāyatra, Vajra Sohomyā, Vajra Amṛta, Vajra Danata, Vajra Rākṣasī, Vajra Bakṣasī, Vajra Ratim, Vajra Rutim, Vajra Ekacaram, Vajra Manoharam, Vajra Sandhim, Vajra Vayabya, Vajra Mahāmaraṇa, Vajra Āgneyī, Vajra Cāmuṇḍī, Vajra Putrana, Vajra Vāruṇī, Vajra Mahākāla, Vajra Tīkṣṇavaṃ, Vajra Lambodhara.

King of wisdom, turn your mind to us.
You who pacify the wrathful by wrath,
host of compassionate, glorious, fierce wrathful ones,
bestow upon me, right here,
that wondrous, blazing blessing.

Oṃ vajra samaya stvaṃ. Oṃ vajra samaya hoḥ. Vajra samaya phaṭ. Ali, uli, tali, tapali, daṃ, staṃ, kho, na, raudri, khara, yoga, nikharam, hūṃ, ha, he, phaṭ.

As this was spoken,
all the ten directions of the six worlds were pervaded and filled entirely with blazing, burning flame, by the great wrathful host of speech, spreading everywhere and filling all.

Then the Blessed One, the great joyous king of wisdom, in order to reveal the maṇḍalas of these very ones, uttered this solemn declaration.

A blazing wheel with four spokes, adorned with four corners and four expanses,
four-sided, possessing four gateways with their surrounding borders, beautiful with three blazing intervening expanses, splendid with a sun of varied skulls and serpents,
many garlands of fire swirling.

By the vigor of the supreme bull, the buffalo, the leopard and the tiger,
and the fierce bear,
the Lord, the Great God (Śiva), and the others,
the host of great arrogant and fierce ones, were crushed and made into a seat,
upon which the body is seated:
dark maroon, dark blue, dark yellow,
dark red, dark green, in terrifying forms,
with nine heads and eighteen arms,
or with three heads and six arms, standing on four feet, roaring a great and terrifying cry.

Tigers, sheep and serpents, and the adornment of a sun,
the great and small tridents, the inner noose,
the garuḍa and the wish-fulfilling jewel,
together with the thousandfold world-systems,
the great vajra conch brimming full,
the sword, the hostile-banner, the hide, and the rest,
with their own manifold implements,
together with hosts of fearsome consorts,
with the mudrās of place and region,
and the eight great spurring ones,
holding staffs and weapons of every kind,
beautiful with the mudrās of the four gates, beautiful with the iron hook and the rest, and with skulls,
with attendants, serving women and hosts of maidservants, beautiful as twelve and as eight,
equipped with their own seats and implements,
they stand ready, saying, "What shall we do?"

Thus it was spoken. And in all the ten directions of the six worlds, a maṇḍala of inconceivable body, speech and mind filled and pervaded everything.

Then the Blessed One, the King of Wisdom, being himself the great fruition of meaningful action, spoke this vajra pledge, hard to transgress, so that the great pledge would be held:

Do not abandon the unsurpassed; honor the master.

Do not break the continuity of mantra and mudrā.

Cherish those who have entered the true path.

Do not speak of secret matters for any reason.

As for the great root pledges,

even one who realizes the meaning of the ten great faces does not transgress the three roots.

The seven-and-five branch pledges are these:

do not give up delusion, desire, aversion, pride and jealousy.

Do not cast away the white substance, the red substance, the foul flesh and water,

the pure vessel and its essence.

Even one who has gained the sovereignty of the ten glorious ones does not cast away the ten branches.

Moreover, do not transgress the branch pledges, the vajra pledge.

Samaya is the great vajra;

the pledge of the Victors themselves is not transgressed.

Thought is perfected, spontaneously accomplished, brought to the great end.

The three realms of existence are purified and transformed into great sovereignty.

Fearless, one acts as Samantabhadra.

The boundless vehicles, the methods of taming,

all the vows, limitless in number,

are completely pure and spontaneously perfect.

Their decline and faults are not to be spoken of.

Short life and perverted thought,

great sorrow and suffering,

and hell itself the vajra brings about.

Nine are complete, ten are possessed, three purify;

fulfillment rites and the rest are boundless and supreme.

Thus it was spoken, and so the Tathāgata himself will be tamed by the Tathāgata himself.

This is the tenth chapter, on the maṇḍala of speech of the Great Wrathful One and the vajra pledges, from the Net of Illusion, the Great Master.

Then the Blessed One, the Great Joyful One, the King of Wisdom, in order to bring forth without residue, within the state of great bliss, the awakening mind, the heart essence of the Great Master's oral instruction on all phenomena, drew forth this heart essence of the Great Master's oral instruction from the maṇḍala of the great drop of the Great Master's body, speech and mind:

In the great bliss of the awakening mind,
from the flawless great drop,
complete with cause, condition, support and what is taken up,
there is non-realization and wrong realization,
partial realization, and failure to realize the truth itself.

The taming, the intention, the secret,
and the secret meanings of the intrinsic nature,
relying on letters and words,
bring forth the hidden meaning from within.

They abide in the heart of the Teacher, the Vajra.

By the maṇḍala that possesses the maṇḍala,
one meditates the maṇḍala on the maṇḍala.

The maṇḍala arisen from the maṇḍala,
the maṇḍala of mind, the supreme maṇḍala,
the maṇḍala of the secret drop, the expanse,
the origin is the mother of the families, wisdom;
the agent is the chief of the families.

The vajra assembly of the awakening mind,
the faculties, objects, times and knowledge,
the Great Self, perfected beyond all.

Seeing with the five wisdoms of mind,
by the union of the heart essence and the drop,
one plays in the great wisdom of bliss.

The joyful wisdom is offered supremely;
the inexhaustible, undefiled wisdom of merit plays as illusion.

The maṇḍala of play, boundless and supreme,
is the expanse of the secret drop itself,
the expanse perfected in the ten directions and four times,
body, speech, qualities, activity, and mind.
All the secret maṇḍalas, without exception,
I bring under my sovereign mastery.

Through the play of wisdom that holds sway,
the maṇḍala that abides in the maṇḍala is complete.
The complete maṇḍala is spontaneously present.
By the great realization of the Great Perfection,
all maṇḍalas without exception are taken up as adornment.
Through the union of the complete maṇḍalas,
all maṇḍalas of mind arise without exception.
The protector who tames the maṇḍalas of the ten directions liberates all illusory maṇḍalas without exception, and acts within the maṇḍala of non-doing.

In the maṇḍala of perfected wisdom,
through the union of hearing, reflecting, and meditating,
everything arises of itself and is spontaneously present.
This is the maṇḍala of the perfected intrinsic nature of all the buddhas.

Everything that possesses cause, condition, and support is the expanse of the awakening mind.
Through the great bliss of the awakening mind,
all maṇḍalas dissolve into the expanse.

From the Great Drop, the Supreme Teacher, illusion is shown as the path to awakening.
All faults and qualities as well abide in the very state of the drop of awakening.
All kinds of conduct too are certain to be the path of the Great Drop.
The maṇḍala of the play of illusion also is joined into the expanse of the Great Drop.
The thirteen kinds of vows and the boundless general pledges shine forth within the state of the Great Drop.

The world and its inhabitants, all without exception,
are the expanse of the play of the drop itself.
Even the two great accumulations are certain to be the expanse of the awakening mind.
The celestial palaces and their adornments dissolve, as miraculous display, into the awakening mind.
The play of the wrathful hosts who subdue the māras is likewise certain to be the awakening mind.
The six realms and the three kinds of sentient beings are the Great Drop, certain to be the six wisdoms and the three bodies.
The five supports and the four conditions as well are gathered into the state of the Great Drop,
the mother of the expanse and sister of time.
The earlier and later three times, and the realms of existence and nonexistence,
are shown to be body, speech, and mind,
and are certain to be the drop, the awakening mind.
The aggregates, constituents, and sense sources,
and the forty-two mudrās as well,
are not to be found apart from the drop itself.
The four activities and the one shine forth within the state of the drop of mind.
The nine and the one hundred fourteen thousand that arise for the sake of beings are not to be found apart from the awakening mind.
The many forms of happiness, comfort, and suffering are the meaning of the expanse of realized great bliss.
Wisdom and the play of wisdom are certain to be the expanse of the vajra heart.

Samantabhadra, Vajrasattva,
and the oceans of Victors of the three times
are fully and certainly one, a single father.
The supreme path of liberation, the mother of the expanse, Samantabhadrī and the others as well,
shine forth within the state of the Mother Drop.

The celestial palaces, the maṇḍalas, and the many distinct abodes
are gathered into the dwelling of great wisdom.
All the adornments of offering and all enjoyments are the great awakening mind of awareness, gathered into the state of great miracle.
Since the essence of cause and result alike,
and the intrinsic nature of every phenomenon,
are certain to be the awakening mind,
it is not taught in terms of white and black karma.

The great bliss of the awakening mind appears as anything, though it is nothing at all.
Unfabricated by anything, it is the unchanging body;
doing nothing at all, it liberates everyone.
Without any focus, it pervades all.
Unappointed, it is the true king.
Unstudied, it is the great heart of wisdom.
Unmeditated, it perfects the meaning at once.
Unaccomplished, it is the chief of all the Victors.
Unpracticed, it has neither fault nor quality.
It cannot be indicated by words or letters,
and is hard to find even for the buddhas.
Samantabhadra Vajrasattva
found it, and so engages in the perfected maṇḍala.

"By conduct, beings are liberated, and in this there is no fault or flaw."

So it was spoken, and all the Tathāgatas of the ten directions and the four times, delighted in non-duality, abide as the very adornment of the dense array.

This is the eleventh chapter, on the bliss of the awakening mind, the heart of the pith instructions, from the Great Guru, the Net of Illusion.

Then again, this same Wisdom King, for the sake of the Tathāgatas who have not yet come, drew forth from the vajra of body, speech, mind, qualities, and activity this great activity that accords with the true intent of the Tathāgatas.

In the supreme maṇḍala of the assembly of E, before the blazing, fierce, wrathful one,
make the offering with an angered mind.
Even the merit body of the buddhas is destroyed.
Upon the five nectars or the five foods,
set the signs together with names.
Summon, and then pin with the vajra dagger.
Reduce to dust and offer to the assembly.
In the maṇḍala of the assembly of E,
bind the effigy in a connected chain.
Bound, it is stirred, and shaken in the ten directions.
Maddened, it shatters and burns up.

In the supreme maṇḍala of the assembly of Paṃ,
before the blazing, majestic Mount Meru,
make the offering with a mind of desire.
Even the three vajras come under one's power.
Upon the five nectars or the five foods,
set the signs together with names.
Pin with the vajra dagger of attraction.
Offer it dissolving into the assembly of desire.
In the maṇḍala of the assembly of Baṃ,
bind the effigy in a connected chain,
and it will do exactly as one wishes.

In the supreme maṇḍala of the assembly of Ma, before the blazing, radiant splendor of gathering and emanating,
make the offering with a joyful mind.
Its qualities are equal to the limits of space.
Upon the five nectars or the five foods,
regard them as a wish-fulfilling treasury of qualities.
Pin with the dagger of pride and joyful emanation,
and regard the vajra splendor as increasing.
In the maṇḍala of the assembly of Ma,
bind the effigy in a connected chain,
and a great miracle of blazing splendor is displayed,
wish-fulfilling, equal to the limits of space.

In the supreme maṇḍala of the assembly of Ya,
before the clear and gleaming splendor,

make the offering with a serene mind.
Even the most fierce and wrathful becomes tranquil.
Upon the five nectars or the five foods,
regard them as the very nature of fierce turmoil.
Pin with the dagger of vivid clarity.
Offer to the assembly of the blazing tranquil ones.
In the maṇḍala of the assembly of Ya,
bind the effigy in a connected chain,
and it is pervaded by the blessing of the blazing tranquil ones.
Everything becomes without movement.

A. Everything is the great perfection.
Not one thing exists that has not become activity.
All that is gathered into the three existences, perfected in the distinctions of activity,
is not one that has not been blessed.
By the activity of the great perfection,
through training, the aims are perfectly and spontaneously accomplished.

Ho. The retinue of female servants and maidens, give the remainder that the mouth waters for, as desired.
Having well accomplished your own pledge, command them to do whatever action is wished.
The Great Blood-Drinker and the others,
by the great song-words of the dance,
do whatever is wished, all of it,
without exception.

The Great Treasure-Holder and the others,
by the great song-words of the dance,
gather if gathering is wished,
increase if increase is wished.

The Great Mistress of Plenty and the others,
by the great song-words of the dance,
bewilder if bewilderment is wished, intoxicate if intoxication is wished.

The Great Lion-Faced One and the others,
by the great song-words of the dance,
devour everything whatsoever,

leaving not even a particle of dust.
The Great Laughing-Faced One and the others,
by the great song-words of the dance,
draw out everything whatsoever,
and cause all of it to decline utterly.
A. The Great Hurler and the others,
the eight great Agitators,
by the great song-words of the dance,
cause everything whatsoever to be thrown into turmoil.

The whole of it is made to burst forth from its place.
The hosts of Slaves, Slave-women, and Servant-women,
by the great song-words of the dance,
are to bind and to cast out,
and so everything is brought to completion.
Trees and thickets of small shrubs,
a single trunk, and the touch of fire,
joy and delight and attachment,
and anger: let the Kali be made perfectly.

Because this was spoken, the four kinds of activity, together with the thunderous drum, subdued the world-realms of the ten directions.

Then the Blessed One, the great Wrathful One, the King of Wisdom himself, struck the drum of the sacred pledge, the thunderous drum, and let out this fierce radiance of sound:

In the vast hosts of the great assembly,
by sounding the great thunderous drum,
uttering the syllables Hūṃ, Ha, He, Phaṭ,
and by the blessing of the eight syllables,
proclaiming the words Ru Lu Hūṃ Bhya,
by the fierce voice of the wrathful lord,
the three realms of existence are shattered entire,
and the cry that liberates the thousand worlds goes forth.
By striking this great thunderous drum,
all yakṣas and rākṣasas are liberated,
and the hearts of all the non-Buddhists are drawn out.
By sounding this great thunderous drum,

the three upper realms are filled with hosts of wrathful ones.
Let all strike the drum, diri-ri!
By the great drumbeat the thousand worlds are shattered.
By the great drumbeat the host of Māras is liberated.
By the great drumbeat the three realms are purified.
By the great drumbeat foes and obstructors are subdued.
By the great drumbeat the lower realms are purified.
By the sound of the drum, the roar of the dragon,
the realms of the hell of Naraka are emptied.
The drumbeat, a crashing thunderclap, crushes Mount Meru.
When the great thunderous drum gives forth its sound,
the hearts of all who hold inverted views are drawn out.
The great drum sounds the dragon's roar,
the drumstick is like a thousand lightning bolts.
Thus the minds of the Tathāgatas are fulfilled,
the pledges of the mamos and ḍākinīs are fulfilled,
the pledges of the five families of yogins are roused.
By striking this great thunderous drum,
the sūtra collections of the hearers are kindled where they stand;
the view of the solitary victors is released into basic space.
By sounding this great thunderous drum,
the vehicles of gods and humans too are driven into the basic space of the unsurpassed vehicle.
By sounding this thunderous drum,
the thousand realms are filled with its sound.
Let all strike the drum, diri-ri!
The drumstick puts forth a thousand lightning tongues,
the drum's voice sounds a thousand dragon-roars,
and a great iron hail of blessing falls.
The thousand worlds are thrown into turmoil and the three realms of existence scattered.
When the drumstick is let fly in waving motion,
with weapons in every mouth and corner,
all is struck by the great meteoric iron.
The Great Kālas and the others,
those beneath the vajra-binding, the Ledpa ones,
at one and the same moment draw out the mind-essence.

By the sound of the great thunderous drum, existence is churned into an ocean of blood.
At one and the same moment the great empowerment is completed.
The drum's sound builds a house of jewels;
fulfilling every intention, one gains the majesty of power.
The drum's sound makes all unmoving,
and also sends forth the sound that leads into the Dharma.
By the drum's sound every wish and intention is fulfilled, instantly, like the awakening mind.

Because this was spoken, all the Tathāgatas became united in the union of the Tathāgata himself.

Then the Blessed One, the great Joyful One, the King of Wisdom himself, to his own maṇḍala, the great master with the essence of the oral instructions, sang this great song of joy with a most fierce radiance:

Hūṃ! Great fierceness, blazing like the fire at the end of time, the splendor of a hundred thousand sun-rays,
like a thousand lightning flashes of wrathful fury,
the great devourer who consumes utterly.

Ho!

Hūṃ! The fierce cry is the roar of a thousand dragons, the sound of a hundred thousand Mount Merus crushed in thunder.

A-la-la! The great echoing laughter,
the scattering winds of expulsion greatly stirred.

Ho!

Hūṃ! The wrathful lord's wisdom is a great light, shining clearly through every maṇḍala of wisdom.

It destroys all, a blazing wisdom,
the great drop of manifold wisdom.

Ho!

Hūṃ! The wrathful king is the great cloud, sending down a great rain upon the maṇḍala of wrath.

The maṇḍala is a wish-fulfilling treasury of arising,
the great drop of manifold wrath.

Ho!

Hūṃ! The great Māra of all māras,

the Māra of Māra, who subdues all māras.
Even the hosts of the terrifying he terrifies;
the great terrifier, the great subduer.
Hūṃ! The vajra is the great, solid rock;
the vajra is the great water that gathers all in.
The vajra is fire, blazing everywhere;
the vajra is wind, the great wind that scatters.
Ho!

Hūṃ! The assembly of the maṇḍala of wrathful ones of the thousandfold world system, the terrifying body that has no weapon, manifold speech and manifold mind,
a treasury of the wisdom of the fearsome and the fierce.

As he sang "Ho!" in this way, the great terrifying ones among the Tathāgatas of the thousandfold world system became pleased, in inseparable unity.

This is the twelfth chapter, on the activity spontaneously accomplished and the complete satisfaction, from the Great Guru, the Net of Magical Illusion.

The meaning spoken by Vajrasattva is the guru of all secrets,
the king of the Net of Magical Illusion.
From the definitive meaning, the heart of the Dharma,
the Vinaya, the sūtras, and the Abhidharma,
the tantras of pledge, of practice, of accomplishment, and of body, speech, and mind
all spring forth from the Net of Magical Illusion.

All the collections of scripture and all the tantras as well, having arisen from it, are definitively established.

The six classes of beings and the sentient beings of the three realms are shown to be in the expanse of Great Sthāna.

The liṅga together with the lotus are joined in the expanse of Great Gana.

The many colors of appearance and existence are shown as the path of Great Gana.

Whoever, having realized this secret essence of intrinsic nature, proclaims it,

that very one is I, and has completed the empowerment.

He constantly abides in the awakening mind;
in this very life he becomes manifestly a buddha.
Like a blazing, precious wish-fulfilling jewel,
all his intentions are accomplished as wished.

When this was spoken, all the Tathāgatas of the ten directions and three times were delighted in inseparable unity, and they remained as the very ornament of the dense and spontaneous array within the expanse of equality.

This is the thirteenth chapter, on the great assurance, from the Great Guru, the Magical Illusion that is the certainty of suchness, the secret essence.

From the chapter of the Great Guru, the certainty of suchness, the secret essence, the secret of all buddhas, the general scripture drawn from the hundred-thousand-chapter Net of Magical Illusion, the king of realization, all that has been extracted without remainder is complete: the supreme fruition of these.

Translator's Notes

- The passage is a colophon followed by the opening of a tantra. Here bla ma is rendered "lama" throughout, as the text uses it as a quasi-technical, near-synonym for "supreme" or "ultimate" (as in the Great Perfection tantras, where it functions adjectivally); "supreme" would also be defensible. "Heart-Essence" for snying po in the second verse is tentative. The passage breaks off mid-list of the aggregate buddhas and consorts. The "six wisdoms" of the hands is rendered literally.
- The lines on the lamas of sight, hearing, smell, and taste, and the vajra names beginning "Vajra Knowing-of-Union," rest on a corrupt or unusual text. I have rendered the names literally rather than guessing at emendations. The "lama" here functions as an epithet of the highest ground rather than as "teacher," and I have left it untranslated in sense throughout. The lines on the "inner firm and outer layered with iron" and the "four mudrās" are obscure, and the rendering is tentative. In the line "Vajra Left Touch," "non-annihilation" and "non-permanence" correspond to the two extremes of permanence and annihilation.
- The line "ཁྱད་རྒྱུ་སྤྲེལ་བའི་མཉམ་པོ་ཆེན་པོ་ཡི་ཕྱག་རྒྱ་ལྷན་ཅིང་།" is rendered "limbs of the aggregates." The six sages' names are mostly standard, but "ཐག་ཟང་རི་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷན་ཅིང་།" (Thagzang Ri, the weaver-asura in the Nyingma tradition) is kept in transliteration, as is "ཀློང་ལྷན་ཅིང་།" (rendered "Mouth-Aflame, the blissful"), because the sources vary. The lines on the four vehicles' numbers (sixteen, four, twelve, two) follow the text's schematic counts without further interpretation. "ཡ་མ་ལ་ལྷན་ཅིང་།" is rendered Yama. "ཀུན་གྱི་འཇིག་རྟེན་ལྷན་ཅིང་།" is rendered as the range of activity of karma, though it may be a scribal variant.
- The opening names the four elements-consorts: Locanā (earth), Māmākī (water), Pāṇḍaravāsini (white-robed), and Tārā; the first two terms are rendered descriptively and the line is somewhat compressed in the Tibetan. "Display and cast-down" for དཔྱད་ཅིང་སྦྱོང་བ་ལྷན་ཅིང་། is a tentative rendering of a technical pair, probably the stances of the paired father and mother deities. "Samaya Tārā" renders བཤེན་པོ་ཏཱ་ར་ལྷན་ཅིང་།; "Locanā, the broad-eyed one" renders

□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□. The consort names in the sense-object series are epithet-translations and I have kept them descriptive.

- The passage opens mid-verse, continuing the preceding sequence of Hoḥ verses. The terms "cutting consciousness" and "entering consciousness" (gcod shes, 'jug shes) follow the five-consciousness scheme of this text, with "all-knowing" (kun shes) as the all-pervading consciousness; their exact technical sense is not glossed in this passage. Several names of the retinue in the maṇḍala description (the seeing, hearing, absorption, experiencing; cutting, illuminating, engaging ones) are rendered by their functions as given, since the Tibetan does not name the deities. "Great drops" renders thig le chen po, retained literally. The chapter-title phrase is rendered closely and may belong to the colophon style of the Dzogchen tantras.
- The mantra syllables are given in Sanskrit transliteration and are corrupt in places in the Tibetan transcription; they are rendered as they stand, not emended. The line "stāṅs dpyal dag gnyis su med par" is taken as the fierce (stobs/stangs) and gentle pair in inseparability, which is uncertain. The phrase "the stages of the cause" is literal; its precise doctrinal sense in this system is not clear. The opening line "bla ma'i dbyings" is rendered "expanse of the guru" for consistency with the preceding passage.
- The mantra syllables are given in standard Sanskrit transcription, with the recurring ending rendered ātmako 'ham from the Tibetan འུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་. The five wisdoms are named implicitly (dharmadhātu, mirror-like, equality, discernment, all-accomplishing). The final instructional verses on seed-syllables, discs, and mudrā are cryptic and elliptical, and my rendering is tentative in details such as the "blunt syllable" and the "five and two displayed at the corners."
- The passage ends mid-sentence ("on the right, a jewel bunch") and continues in the next section. The verses are a visualization manual for a maṇḍala of the five Tathāgatas and their consorts, and the Tibetan names several figures only by epithet. I rendered the consorts and bodhisattvas by their standard Sanskrit equivalents: ལོ་ཁྱེན་པ་ as Locanā, སུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ as Samantabhadrī, མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ as Māmākī, རྩ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ as Pāṇḍaravāsini, སུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ as Samayatārā, མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ as Kṣitigarbha, འུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ as Ākāśagarbha, སུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ as Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin, འུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ as Avalokiteśvara in his lotus-dancer aspect, and རྩ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ as Vajrapāṇi in his dark-blue form. The names of the offering goddesses (Lāsyā, Garland of Glory, Singer of Dharma, Crown of Dance, Billowing Clouds of Incense, Showering Flowers) are translated from the Tibetan epithets. Several lines are short and elliptical; in the stanza naming Kṣitigarbha, the white Lāsyā-type consort is rendered from རྩ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་ ("great allure"), which is an interpretive choice. The line "འུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་" gives the syllable as Laṃ, kept as written, though the corresponding seed syllable for Locanā is conventionally Laṃ in this scheme.
- The unparsed phrase "bear a sage" is not present; the passage opens mid-verse with the lamp-raising consort of Samantabhadra. I have given the western and northwestern direction as "northwest" for "འུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་". The consort names of the four wrathful gatekeepers follow the Tibetan; the deity names Mahābala, Yama the Slayer, Hayagrīva, and Amṛtakuṇḍalin are reconstructed Sanskrit equivalents of the Tibetan epithets. "Tsakali" (འུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་) is left untranslated, as it is a ritual painted card used in empowerment practice. The final verse breaks off mid-passage, and the last lines may be an obscure or corrupt reading.
- The verse "Even the heart is the supreme of gifts" appears in the preceding passage. In this passage the phrase "empowerment of the master's water of the face" renders a compound of uncertain exact sense; "water of the face" (འུ་མཁོ་ཨོཾ་མུ་མུ་ཨོཾ་) may also suggest the water for washing or rinsing. "Seal of taming" is literal. The line about the "supreme pair, the minds of Vajrasattva" is somewhat obscure in the Tibetan. The mantra syllables are transliterated as given.
- This is a Nyingma tantric passage with heavily corrupt mantra syllables and some obscure lines, so renderings of mantras are transliterated and several lines are tentative. Particularly uncertain are "Luqu Tantra" (possibly a corrupted name or term), "Stana," the phrase

"swastika-like ground" (gyung drung sa thob), the "eighteen pairs" rendered here as thirty-six Hūṃs, and "pillar-like Hūṃ" (le brgan). The passage's line about "the three knowings" and "the garland of five" is rendered literally.

- The sentence "Some coil into the supreme secret within the expanse" follows the Tibetan as given; the verb ལྷོག་པ་ is the same one used for the embrace elsewhere in the passage. The line "all that is gathered in the buddha-fields of the Tathāgatas of the ten directions and four times dissolved in great delight" is rendered literally; the dissolution is into delight. I kept bindu (བུ་བྱ་) untranslated since the term carries tantric and Dzogchen sense that no single English word captures. The two vajra-guru phrases in the second song are retained as vajra epithets without expansion.

- The first four lines allude to "the guru is the bindu" in the preceding verse; "two bindus" is rendered literally. The mantra is given in plain transliteration and is not translated. The line about beings "of the next ripening" renders a difficult phrase about the "nyi tshe" class of beings; the sense is uncertain. The final architectural description is somewhat obscure in its technical terms, so the rendering is cautious.

- The passage is textually corrupt in places and the repeated "supreme" for bla ma is mechanical. Here bla ma appears to stand for a word like "great" or an epithet (perhaps a scribal or translational substitution for Skt. parama or a similar term), and I rendered it as "supreme" for consistency, though the sense remains uncertain. The mantra is given as transmitted, with Sanskrit evidently garbled. "Mahādeva" is left unglossed in the Tibetan as Mahādeva, a name for Śiva, and I kept the transliteration because the text here uses the Sanskrit form.

- The start of the passage continues the Ratna Heruka description from the preceding section; "Mi Srun Mo" is rendered as a transliteration since its Sanskrit original is uncertain, and several names in the list of ogresses are translations of Tibetan epithets whose Sanskrit forms are uncertain. In the western and northern gods' seats, Viṣṇu and Kubera are the identifications of "black wheel-wielder" and "yakṣa Stong-bzang" and are tentative. The final sentences read the "Great Yellow-Black, Blue-Black, and Red-Black Ones" as epithets of the Herukas, in keeping with the surrounding colors.

- The opening line reads "Me Mo" for the first name, though in the preceding passage the corresponding Green-Black family may parallel the Yellow-Black, Blue-Black, and Red-Black groups; the name is transliterated as given. Several names in this passage (Vajra Sringdrogma, "the one who sends forth," "the one with the noose") are obscure and rendered cautiously; "the one with the rays of the sun" is uncertain as a proper name. The "mire-water" (མེ་ཤིང་ལྷོག་པ་) is rendered literally and may denote a specific substance. The word translated "retinues" in the final verse and "diligence" in the oath are straightforward renderings of a corrupt-seeming but readable text.

- This is a ritual visualization passage, and several implement names are obscure or corrupt: "lung-heart" (glo snying), "small vessel" and "great vessel" (stir chung, stir chen), "bhandha," "pill" (ril mid), and "gau" are rendered tentatively and may reflect textual corruption. The numbers of the arms, feet, and eyes follow the Tibetan, though the lists are not wholly consistent. The opening phrase about the "Queen of Wisdom" and "Queen of Secrets" has been kept literal.

- This is a Nyingma Yamāntaka/Heruka-style maṇḍala text, and several lines are textually corrupt or obscure. The line "the pacified, one-sided sorrow, repeated" (ལྷོག་པ་ལྷོག་པ་ལྷོག་པ་ལྷོག་པ་ལྷོག་པ་) is uncertain; I translated it literally. "Abyss and foundation" (ལྷོག་པ་ལྷོག་པ་) is rendered literally, as its technical sense is unclear. I left Bhaṇḍa/Bhaṇḍa Rakta untranslated, as it appears to be a ritual implement or blood-vessel term. The identity of Phra-men-ma (a class of wrathful female attendants) is kept in Tibetan transliteration. "Gauri-like" renders ལྷོག་པ་ལྷོག་པ་, which is uncertain.

- The proper names of the Phra-men-ma yoginīs (Gauri, Cauri, Pramohā, Petalī, Pukkasī, Śmaśānī, Caṇḍālī, Ghasmarī, Siṃhamukhī, Vyāghrī) are given in Sanskritized forms as in the Tibetan. Some lines are obscure or textually corrupt: "Powerful One" (dbang ldan) is rendered as the epithet of Īśvara/Śiva; "Ratri" is left as transcribed; and "the hide of a great club" in the Ghasmarī verse is rendered literally and may be a corruption. The bhandha-rakta and similar implements are rendered as skull-cup of blood and small club on the most plausible reading.
- This passage is dense with transliterated and obscure terms. The names of the yoginīs (Śrīkāmā, Śvānamā, Kṛtamā, Kaṅkamā, Khakhvamā, Hulumā) are reconstructed from the Tibetan transcriptions and are tentative. "Phra-men" is left untranslated as the name of a class of animal-headed female deities. "Abyss and foundation" renders the recurring phrase gyang gzhi, whose exact sense (perhaps a garment or base) is uncertain. "Bhaṇḍa-rakta" is rendered as a skull-bowl of blood by inference. The mention of the "seat of Hrī" and the "fox" face reflect uncertain readings; the Tibetan words for the animal faces (wa, spyang mo, bya rgod, dur bya, bya rog, 'ug pa) are standard but the identification of "□" as fox is tentative. In the first section the phrase "Great Rouser/Agitator" renders several related terms (spor byed, nyul byed), which may reflect variant readings of a single title.
- The recurring term "bhandha" in the Tibetan (bhan dha) is a transcription of the Sanskrit for skull-bowl and is rendered so. The animal-realm figure's garment is given as "great bear" on the reading of the very rare word sla chen; this is the least certain reading. The closing mantra syllables are left in transliteration as given. The last line of the ninth chapter's colophon marks the opening of the next chapter in the source.
- The long string of syllables is transliterated mantra and dhāraṇī material, much of it corrupt in the Tibetan transmission, so I have kept it as sound and translated only where the meaning is reasonably clear. Rendering "king of wisdom" for ye shes rgyal po follows the preceding passage. "Sri-demonesses" renders srin mo; this identification is the plainest reading but not certain.
- This passage is extremely dense and cryptic, and the verse is syntactically elliptic. Several lines are difficult: the list of implements in the opening verse (the "hostile-banner" and "hide" are uncertain readings of □□□□□□ and □□□), the numerical line "nine are complete, ten are possessed, three purify," and the lines on non-realization, wrong realization and partial realization. I have kept these literal rather than smoothing them. The "three roots" and the "ten faces" are left unglossed because the passage does not identify them. The statement that the Tathāgata will be tamed by the Tathāgata is rendered as it stands.
- The numbers in the passage ("the nine and the one hundred fourteen thousand") are rendered literally; their referent is unclear without commentary. "The thirteen kinds of vows" and "the forty-two mudrās" are likewise rendered literally. The line "mother of the expanse and sister of time" (the Tibetan has "sister," sring) is kept as written. "The five supports" is rendered literally, and its referent is not identified here.
- The seed syllables E, Paṃ, Baṃ, Ma, and Ya are rendered as they stand; the passage links them to the four activities of subjugating, magnetizing, increasing, and pacifying, with Ya here identified with pacification, though the text does not name the activities. The final named goddesses are rendered by meaning, since their Sanskrit forms are not given in the text. The line "Even the merit body of the buddhas is destroyed" is taken as the tantra's own wrathful hyperbole.
- The opening lines are corrupt in transmission, and several terms are obscure: "Ledpa ones" is a tentative rendering of a phrase that may name a class of beings, "Kali" and "Kālas" are kept as in the text, and "mind-essence" for □□□□ (citta) follows the Sanskrit transliteration. The "Slaves, Slave-women, and Servant-women" are retained literally as a class of retinue figures, continuing the list of the preceding passage. The line about "ten thousand lightning drumsticks" and the iron hail are rendered closely, though the syntax is compressed.

- The Tibetan opens mid-verse, and its first line continues a sentence whose beginning lies in the preceding passage, so the opening is rendered as a continuation. The terms sthāna (ཐྱག་མཆོག་) and gana (གནམ་) are left as transliterated Sanskrit, since their intended sense is obscure; "liṅga with the lotus" is rendered literally. In the text, "Great Sthāna" is the expanse in which the six classes and three realms of beings are shown. Wrathful-deity epithets such as "terrifier" (འཁྱོད་ལྡན་པའི་ཆོས་ཀྱི་ལྷ་) are rendered descriptively and not identified with a particular named deity.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.