Toh 492 in the Kangyur is a tantric scripture known in English as The Tantra King Called the Ornamental Array of Secrets of Body, Speech, and Mind of All the Tathāgatas, and in Sanskrit as the Sarva-tathāgata-kāya-vāk-citta-guhyālaṃkāra-vyūha-tantra-rāja, with its Tibetan title rendered as De bzhin gshegs pa thams cad kyi sku dang gsung dang thugs kyi gsang ba rgyan gyi bkod pa zhes bya ba'i rgyud kyi rgyal po. It belongs to the class of tantra texts within the Kangyur and is concerned with the esoteric dimensions of the body, speech, and mind of all the buddhas, expounded through the rich symbolic language of vajra-wisdom, great mudrās, empowerments, and meditative absorptions. The text opens in the classic sūtra-style frame of "thus did I hear," situating the teaching with the Blessed One at its center, surrounded by an elaborate assembly invoked through the intertwined themes of vajra-wisdom and the three secrets common to Vajrayāna discourse. Its translator's homage to both the guru and Mañjuśrī at the outset reflects the standard Tibetan transmission conventions for tantric works of this kind.

In the Indian language: Sarva-tathāgata-kāya-vāk-citta-guhyālaṃkāra-vyūha-tantra-rāja-nāma. In the Tibetan language: The Tantra King Called the Ornamental Array of Secrets of Body, Speech, and Mind of All the Tathāgatas.

I bow with reverence at the lotus feet of the guru and Mañjuśrī.

Thus did I hear at one time. The Blessed One, together with the great lord of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the great vajra body blessed by the samaya of the great mudrā of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the empowerment obtained through the crest-jewel of the great precious crown of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the great meditative absorption of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the great diversity of activities of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the secret of the samaya of the great joyous offering of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the suchness of the samaya of the great maṇḍala of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the essence of the great secret of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the great sovereign lord of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with Samantabhadra, the vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas that is incomparable, unequalled-yet-equal, like the sky; together with the vajra family, essence, mudrā, secret mantra, and awareness become non-dual of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the delight in the essence of the perfections of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas; together with the beautiful essence of the supreme deity of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas — abiding together and at one with the sole great vajra-wisdom, equal to the finest dust-particles of all the dimensions of space, within the heart of the great maṇḍala of the array of the great ornament of vajra-wisdom of body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas.

And the assembly was as follows. There was the great vajra mother called Gateway of Boundless Doors; the great vajra mother called Gateway of Space; the great vajra mother called Gateway of Abhoja; the great vajra mother called Gateway of the Unchanging; the great vajra mother called Prajñāpāramitā. And furthermore, one hundred thousand vajra queens endowed with diligence equal to the dust-particles of all the world-systems without exception and without remainder — among whom were: the vajra queen called Hand of Arrow-Weapon; the vajra queen called Sequence of Looking upon the Lord; the vajra queen called Countenance of Nearby Peace; the vajra queen called Countenance of the Upward Gaze; the vajra queen called Vajra of the Sign of Desire; the vajra queen called Grammatical Mother; the vajra queen called Gateway of Writing; the vajra queen called Endowed with Play;

the vajra queen called Supreme of Desires; the vajra queen called Gateway of the Bliss of the Lord; the vajra queen called Gateway of Vision; and the vajra queen called Born from the Chest — together with all these and the other vajra queens who surrounded him on all sides and stood before him.

Furthermore, he dwelt together with immeasurable great vajra messengers, namely: the great vajra messenger called She Who Rouses the Heart; the great vajra messenger called She Who Hooks All that is Fierce; the great vajra messenger called Vajra of Ensuing Delight; the great vajra messenger called She Who Draws Blood; and the great vajra messenger called She Who Seizes All — and others of their kind.

Furthermore, he dwelt together with the great vajra gatekeepers who fill the vast expanse of world-systems, namely: the great vajra gatekeeper called She Who Casts Down the Vajra; the great vajra gatekeeper called She Who Possesses the Three Pledges; the great vajra gatekeeper called She Who Bears the Limbs of Destruction; the great vajra gatekeeper called She Who is Primordial; and the great vajra gatekeeper called She Who Tames the Difficult to Tame — and others of their kind.

Furthermore, he dwelt together with the great vajra handmaidens of the unequalled and the equal, namely: the great vajra handmaiden called She Who Binds with the Vajra All Body, Speech, and Mind; the great vajra handmaiden called She of the Terrifying Flaming Countenance; the great vajra handmaiden called She of the Gnashing and Utterly Contorting Countenance; the great vajra handmaiden called She Who Binds the Three Worlds; and the great vajra handmaiden called She Who Abides Throughout the Aeon — and others of their kind.

Furthermore, he dwelt together with the incomparable great vajra dalliance goddesses, namely: the great vajra dalliance goddess called Vajra Delight of the Body, Speech, and Mind of All Tathāgatas; the great vajra dalliance goddess called She Who Utterly Casts Down; the great vajra dalliance goddess called She Who Thoroughly Destroys the Three Worlds; the great vajra dalliance goddess called She Who Follows in Utter Joy; and the great vajra dalliance goddess called She Who Delights All — and others of their kind.

Furthermore, he dwelt together with vajra lords who fill the entirety of the space of the sky, namely: the great vajra lord called Lord of Desires; the Vajra Lord of Ḍākinīs; the Fragrance Lord; Dense Array; Moonlight; One Who Fulfills Intentions; One Who Abandons Beings Entirely; One Who is Thoroughly Purified; the Vajra of Desire; One Who Generates Longing; One Who Tames; One Who Dispels All that is Fierce; the Lord of Suchness; the Abider; the Affectionate One; the Dharma Bearer; the Mover; the One Who Expands; the One Who Binds; the One Who Encircles — and others among the vajra lords.

Furthermore, he dwelt together with the vajra host of limitless vajra messenger servants who seize, namely: the one called Vajra Wind; Vajra Fire; Vajra Immovable; Vajra Water. And furthermore there were four great vajra kings: the one who pacifies; the one who enriches; the one who subjugates; and the one who exhausts all ignorance — and others of their kind.

Furthermore, he was the supreme and utterly vast lord of the highest permanence, the Blessed One, the Teacher, endowed with offerings in whom the primordial wisdom of the buddhas supremely abides. In the body of Samantabhadra, he spread forth the maṇḍala of the three worlds. The Blessed One, Vajradhara, dwells perfectly, united with the adornment of the secret.

Then, having attained the secret vajra gathering — the mother who gives birth to all the Tathāgatas — the joy and bliss arising together with the father of all the Tathāgatas followed, and they came together with their retinues into the presence of the Blessed One. Praising him with this vajra song, they made a request:

To you, the aim of all buddhas, we bow.

To you, the source of the vajra, we prostrate.

To you, the supreme jewel of the mind, we prostrate.

To you, the wisdom of the Dharma, we prostrate.

To you, the supreme among all phenomena, we prostrate.

To you of variegated enlightened intent, we prostrate.

To you, the highest of the highest sacred pledges, we prostrate.

To Vajrasattva we bow and prostrate.

We of great renown

make this request of you, our Protector:

Mother who gives birth to all the buddhas, supreme maṇḍala of all maṇḍalas.

Then the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke thus to the vajra mothers of all the Tathāgatas: "Mothers of all the Tathāgatas, do not speak in that way. Toward this great maṇḍala king that pervades all worlds, future sentient beings will not come to have faith; they will utterly disparage their own minds, and through their lack of faith in the Dharma they have not seen, they will perfectly undermine their own minds, and will be born in the Avīci hells and for many thousands of aeons will be pursued by the suffering of Avīci. After a hundred such journeys they will be freed from the suffering of Avīci, but even if born among human beings they will be of a disfigured appearance. They will come to identify themselves with those of forgetful minds, those of little intelligence, dogs, crows, cats, pigs, tigers, elephants, and the likes of roaring lions. One must not associate with such persons, nor even look upon them."

Then those mothers who give birth to all the Tathāgatas said this to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, please declare how the suffering of Avīci of those sentient beings may be brought to an end." The Blessed One declared: "Whoever grasps hold of this name will be entirely exhausted of it. Through the merit thereby accrued, the karmic obscurations of that one will be exhausted, and they will become an heir to unsurpassable, perfect, complete awakening."

Then, with joy arising, they again said this to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, please teach: through the accumulation of merit and primordial wisdom, the great king of the great maṇḍala, for the benefit and happiness of all sentient beings — how may future sentient beings attain the awakening of a buddha by mere recollection?" Then the Blessed One entered into the meditative absorption called Samantabhadra the Great, Resplendent with Radiance, Luminous Vajra. From the vajras of his own body, speech, and mind, he proclaimed this sacred teaching of the body of all the Tathāgatas:

She who is the mother of all maṇḍalas is taught to be none other than emptiness-wisdom.

What shall I teach?

All conceptual thought is thoroughly abandoned.

Desiring to benefit all sentient beings, whatever little I shall teach —

all of it is illusion through illusion.

Know all beings to be like illusion.

Therefore, with what is like illusion, perform the maṇḍala that is like illusion.

All that is pervaded by the element of space is thoroughly stirred up by the universal mother.

The outer too is to be examined by the mothers of the secret maṇḍala.

In a secluded and joyful place,

well composed in the mind, draw the lines upon the space of sky —

first let it be consecrated by the sacred.

Then, by the great yogin, draw the lines of the maṇḍala of the mother of the secret.
Before the face of the borders and frames let it be entirely circumscribed.

In the central portion, the maṇḍala is to be drawn in the likeness of a wheel.
Altogether adorned with sixteen beauties — this is the center of the four maṇḍalas.

In the very hub of the wheel draw the lotus with its pollen whorl.
At each of the cardinal and intermediate points, the petals are to be drawn with their proper graceful curves.

Properly stirred with five threads, adorned near-by with four threads.
Fully furnished with four gates and graced with horse-portals and lions.

Parasols, victory banners, pennants and the like are spread and draped above the canopy.
The blue lotus adorned with precious vajras in front, pervaded by the spreading branches of the wish-fulfilling tree.

The best of fine vases adorned with jewels, garland ornaments furnished with elephants — these are placed outside and well depicted.

Abandoning both conceptuality and non-conceptuality, in the center of this sovereign maṇḍala place the vajra of secret ornament.
In meditative equipoise, with inspired joy, let it be drawn by the mind itself.

Then the four-faced goddess —
the virtue of the Perfection of Wisdom — with four arms and wide-open eyes:
with two hands she expounds the Dharma,
and in the right of the four a vajra, while the left is adorned with a lotus.

White, red, and intensely blue, of pale blue tinged with clear and supremely beautiful radiance, with a great precious crest-jewel at the crown, bearing a crown-jewel of excellence as her head-ornament.
She of great fortune, radiant with light, enveloped in all her ornaments,
her upper body well covered by a garment,
the maṇḍala of her face adorned with a smile, wearing her garment of many colors most excellently.

The face of the central countenance shines with golden light.
At the soles of both feet there are wheels,
and before her reside the seven precious things.
She is seated on a supreme lotus-adorned lion throne,
on a moon-seat held by a vajra, with the solar disc radiating light.

Behind her, a solar disc — let the hero depict it so.

What is to be drawn before her:
the face of the hero of boundless form,
she who has hands in the thousands upon thousands,
all her marks completely perfect, adorned in all her ornaments, holding vajra and lotus in her hands,
other hands pressed together in mudrās of many kinds.
She bears a crest, with a silk crown, her face bearing the image of a lotus as head-ornament, she abides upon the pure moon-discs.
Her radiance is like the light of the sun.
Let the hero who possesses the yoga of the hero draw her so.

Having visualized oneself as Vajrasattva, proceed there with graceful ceremony.

What the hero is to draw to the south:
upon the beautiful petal of Yama, Varadā of the sky, the virtuous one, excellently seated upon a jeweled throne.
Her face is blue with white eyes,

she bears a smiling expression and a jeweled bodice,
a neck-ornament of a supreme jeweled garland, anklets and bracelets of precious gems.
Her hands hold the wish-fulfilling gem.
She embodies the intention of the Perfection of Generosity.

Then, with wisdom gone forth, to the west in the same manner, let her be excellently drawn by the glorious one:
the mind-captivating one born from water,
she who holds the red garment, the pure one,
adorned with a crown at her crest,
her body bearing ornaments of many snakes, enveloped in silk and jewels.

Through the engagement of opening the lotus,
her hands bear the leaf-fingers thereof.
She is properly seated upon the moon-seat, appearing as the light of many suns.
Let her be depicted as is fitting.

Then proceeding to the north,
let the hero draw there:
she of the unmoving face, renowned and great,
her equal is emerald blazing bright, wholly enveloped in white silk, bearing a fine jeweled crown at her crest, adorned with many and varied head-ornaments,
her hands marked by vajra and bell, bearing various ornaments and garments, properly seated upon the moon-seat —
the supreme maṇḍala filled with light.

Then upon the petals of the intermediate directions, the one rich in fragrance of flower and incense, the pure one who is the vajra-illuminator — let the mantra-knower draw the offerings. Form, sound, scent, taste, and touch belong each to their own lord's direction. On every petal and in every petal-space, laughter, elegance, and great song — the renowned great mudrā of dance — let the mantra-practitioner draw these with care.

On the petal born of the lotus, draw the all-accomplisher in every place. Upon all the gates, without exception, draw the four gatekeepers, and outside also, the deities and the rest — let their names be written out correctly.

Then, having bathed and anointed the body, having perfumed it with flower, incense, and the like, having properly donned varied garments, and adorned it with flower garlands and silks, bearing a topknot with a crown, fully enveloped in beautiful silk, with vajra and bell in hand, in the arrangement of excellent preparation — then invite all to come.

The great vajra mother of great austerity: with the reversed and natural mudrā, reciting Vajrasattva, performing the vajra practice of dance, circumambulating three times to the right — all those of the samaya (sacred pledge) maṇḍalas of the vajra mother are to come. Urged by the king of melodious song, with the dance of the assembly of one's own disciples, let them bow and sway to right and to left with dignity.

"Come here, come here, you who strive for the benefit of sentient beings, you who are without miserliness, together with the supreme assembly of buddhas, you who are the noble mother of the Sugatas, the progenitor of existence — the time to act for the benefit of others has arrived this very day."

Then let them themselves arrive through the display of miraculous transformation. All the excellent signs are to be observed within the maṇḍalas. When signs such as descent upon oneself or another are seen, at that time the mother has surely arrived, in accordance with the intent of the Sugata's mind.

Then, having carefully examined the ritual of the offering-vessel and the foot-cooling water in proper order, one should question the fortunate sentient being upon whom descent has occurred. If that one does not speak, then let one fully rouse them with a song containing the syllable hūṃ.

Then introduce the wisdom-bearing lady. The chief disciple joins the palms, the eyes are covered with an eye-cloth, and proclaiming "I am the supremely joyful one, rejoice truly," one directs the attention to all the mothers, and there a flower is to be cast. Whichever mother the flower falls upon, it is by that one that the disciple will be accomplished.

Then in proper sequential order, beginning from the gatekeeper and proceeding up through the Perfection of Wisdom, all is to be explained to the disciple. Having received the samaya, the vows are to be taken up. The mantras and mudrās of the mothers are to be demonstrated in meditative equipoise.

Otherwise the master of poor understanding will assuredly go to hell. And the disciple as well will truly accomplish this, and will swiftly go to hell. Obstructors and misleaders, epidemics, spirits, poisons and the like, afflicted by these and by illness without interruption, they will even come to death. One who reviles a vajra-master goes perpetually to hell itself. The utterly bewildered disciple goes like a vajra fallen from the sky.

Therefore, son, hear well: the samaya you must always guard. The vow of all the mothers abides through the rites of the Great Vehicle.

Then again the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption and declared the samaya of all the mothers of the vajra-holders:

"By the samaya of the jewel mind,
the three aspects are to be purified.
Through the practice of beginning, end, and middle,
by the division of lesser, middling, and supreme — this perfectly pure samaya of such a kind has been declared by all the buddhas.
For so long as the mind is being purified, one should meditate with joyous effort.
Upon seeing any woman,
having circumambulated her three times,
having bowed one's head in salutation, let one three times offer supplication."

"I am your child, O Mother, until awakening is attained.
From the breast of awakening's limbs, may the mother nourish me with her own milk."

Thereupon, with the preparatory rites accomplished and all virtue complete, the empowerment is to be conferred. A vase of gold or other such material is filled entirely with fragrant water, wrapped in silk and fine cloth, adorned at the neck with a garland of flowers, and filled abundantly with precious medicinal substances. With this excellent vase — the one that is supreme, the sixteen that are good — by reciting the essence of the mothers one hundred and eight times, the knower of mantras confers the empowerment.

The disciple, being peaceful and virtuous, first makes a supplication, bows the head to both feet, and declares: "I am Vajra the Elder; I have thoroughly meditated upon the awakening mind. I request the lotus-born feet of the master for the purpose of empowerment. Bestow upon me great fortune. O most supremely wondrous master, empowered by all the Victors, accomplishing the awakening of a buddha — through that, I shall perform for all sentient beings the highest benefit. The grace of your excellent conduct is that all buddhas work their purpose."

Thereupon, through the joining of the empowerment rites, one abides in the rank of Vajrasattva. Having established the disciple in the rank of the wisdom vajra, one confers the empowerment within the maṇḍala with one excellent vase, or sixteen pure ones, or five, or ten.

In front of the maṇḍala, one draws a lotus maṇḍala: an eight-petalled lotus with filaments and a central whorl. In its center, draw a vajra — a many-hued vajra with a garland of rays. In front of it, draw a wheel surrounded by the seven great precious substances. To the south is the jewel; to the west is the lotus itself; to the north is the great sword, blazing and wreathed with rays of light. In all the corner directions: flowers, incense of sweet fragrance, radiant light, great fortune. The gates, all four of them at the entrances. On the outside too, the undying all-pervading ones, proclaiming victory one after another — the joyous ones in the manner of the naked form, endowed with the hearing of the name.

In the center of that maṇḍala, place the disciple with pride. Speak of the intrinsic nature of Dharma: "Today you are born into the family. You are a great wheel-turning king, the supreme lord of permanence, the glory endowed with skillful means and wisdom, the master of purity, lord of all. Into your hands are given vajra and lotus; excellent permission is bestowed in full. O child, perform the great deeds; abide in the rank of all the buddhas."

Then, when the preparatory rites have been performed, the secret vow is to be given. This is the supreme joy — the mothers are utterly wondrous. At the right time, act according to desire: this is the supreme samaya. With excellent conduct, offering whatever one has, present the fee; then bow at the feet of the master.

Mother, wife, daughter, sister, sister's daughter, sons, oneself, a king, wealth, treasury, riches, grain, village, trees, horses, elephants, horses, bulls and oxen, buffalo cows and buffalo bulls, and whatever else one desires — all of this one offers greatly to the guru. Every supreme thing, whether to be done or not to be done, all of it is to be offered.

Then, to the Blessed Mothers, with ornaments and garlands, with laughter, with elegance, play, and joy, with the great bliss of supreme delight, with food and drink and all manner of provisions — through all these many forms one makes offering and begs their departure, for the great benefit of all sentient beings and likewise greatly for oneself.

Wherever the Sugata goes, one begs all the Mothers to depart as well. Then, with wisdom in hand, one offers gifts; and together with the finest of disciples, one places hands made graceful with dance upon one's head, and gradually makes offerings of dispersal and prostration.

Then those auspicious ones, being delighted — the supreme accomplisher of all things — having bestowed good fortune upon oneself, depart to the abode of their own sons.

Here the maṇḍala of wisdom-seals of the great mothers of vajra wisdom — the body, speech, and mind vajra of all Tathāgatas — is utterly and completely fulfilled.

Then the Blessed Mothers, the secret consorts of all the Tathāgatas, requested the Blessed One in these words, petitioning him regarding the extensive method of their own individual accomplishment, as it arose from the Guhyasamāja:

O great bodhisattva who achieves supreme wisdom-gnosis, please speak.
The method by which all sentient beings obtain the fruit of buddhahood and awakening — that supreme vajra-gnosis, that vajra body, that supreme vajra, the bestower of bliss from all siddhis — let the Great Vajra speak.

The supreme one endowed with the jewel of mind, resplendent with vajra-radiance — please declare the source of qualities by which miraculous powers and accomplishment arise for sentient beings.

The great yoga of all buddhas, the great yoga, the mighty lord — abiding in heroic union, dancer of the hero's way — let the Great Hero expound.

Having obtained the fruit of all actions, mighty lord of variegated knowledge, great father of all sentient beings — please expound the supreme variety of teachings.

Then the Blessed One, the lord who is ever victorious, the holy sovereign who is all-knowing, proclaimed this profound Dharma teaching in his supreme speech, equal in scope to the sky:

Here there is no one who accomplishes, and there is no siddhi and no method of accomplishment — all arise from conceptual thought, and yet conceptual thought itself has no object of focus. There is no self, and there are no buddhas; phenomena do not exist, and the nature of reality does not exist; there is no union and there are no sentient beings; likewise, there is no father and no mother; there is no agent and no upholder; there is no fruit and there is no cause; there is no enjoyment and no one who enjoys; there is no knowing and no one who knows; there is no consciousness and no object of knowledge. It is neither false nor true. Therefore all appearances arise from the very nature of illusion.

When phenomena are thus known as mere appearance, once one is liberated one will not be stained; the great siddhi will be accomplished — the great bliss of buddhahood and awakening.

When these profound teachings are heard, whatever wise one develops faith — the heart essence, the seal, the mantra, and the awareness — all of these will without doubt be accomplished. This practice was taught by the Blessed One, the supreme purifier of all things; dwelling graciously in the ornament of secrets, he is the teacher to all sentient beings.

Then, the Mothers being satisfied, they made their petition to the Self-Arisen One. The perfect method of accomplishment, the supreme union of practice, was spoken by the master yogins.

Then the Blessed One once more entered into the meditative absorption called "Vajra-Arising Samaya of the Mothers of All Tathāgatas," and declared these words:

Visualize the maṇḍala of space. Above it, undiminished, spreading out in all directions, pervading the endless expanse of space, radiating brilliantly to every quarter —

Above that, of great resplendence, resembling the fire at the end of an age.
Above that, the great earth, likened to a golden mountain.
Above that, what is known as water, like a full moon, like snow.

The mantrin should contemplate this in accordance with the rite, beauteous in the nature of the four precious things.
Eighty-four thousand yojanas in measure, four-sided with four gates,
with four stairways at its peaks,
the great mountain with eight ledges,
and at the center the supreme vajra mountain.

Above it, visualize fully and completely the great vajra extending in all directions.

Blue-green, resembling emerald, stirred throughout by rays of variegated light.
Above that, visualize the great vajra with its five-pointed tip, white, resembling crystal, adorned with five rays of light.

Above that, a precious jewel resembling the blue petals of a water-born lotus, garlanded with a thousand rays of variegated light pervading the sky in all ten directions.

At its crown, a great lotus, supreme among those that fill the sky,
with many hundreds of thousands of petals, clustered with filaments and anthers.

Before it, a great sun
with many hundreds of thousands of rays of light.
Above that, a great moon, clustered with blazing white rays of light, radiating a white brilliance that fills the entire expanse of space.

At its center, draw the Māmakī.
She is utterly pure as space,
a dwelling-place of the buddhas of the three times,

she who radiates the lunar maṇḍala.
Two-armed, with a peaceful mind,
her eyes and mind in meditative concentration, bearing the mudrā of supreme meditative concentration,
the golden-hued maiden, exquisitely arrayed, beautiful, holding white garments, adorned with white ornaments,
with a fine crown of braided hair piled high,
the jewel at her head-crest radiant.
She is seated in equanimity upon a wisdom throne.
At the tips of her hair pores dwell the wrathful Victors, who bring beings to the far shore of awakening.

At her heart, contemplate
the supreme unchanging syllable, surrounded and densely filled by syllables, radiating excellently in all directions.

The buddhas stand before her,
joining their palms in reverence.
Likewise the bodhisattvas,
the assemblies of wrathful vidyāmantras, and those who listen to Dharma — all of these are to be placed in the maṇḍala.

At every direction of the gates,
the four guardians of the gates are set.
Generosity and the rest, each in its proper place —
the sixteen are also to be placed.

Flowers, incense, great lamps — these are to be arranged precisely as appropriate.
Gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas (scent-eaters), asuras, and those arisen from the hells — all of these are to be arranged on all sides around Sumeru.

Then one enters wearing a flower garland, fully provided with incense and flowers, holding white garments, resplendent,

adorned with all ornaments.
Together with the outpouring of wisdom,
with the recollection of Vajrasattva,
one is to be purified by one's own purity.
Abiding through the union with wisdom, one stands beautifully arranged before the gate and invites with this song:

Mother of the Buddhas, sovereign of Dharma, possessor of compassion, come together with your father's assembly and your children.
Come, come — you who are worshipped by gods and rākṣasas together, sovereign of the world, possessing the mind of true awakening.
Come, come — friend of the world, whose very nature is compassion, you who are entrusted by the Sugata with the syllables of Dharma.
Pure as sky, without stain — remember your pledge!
The Māmakīs will come, stirred by this supreme song.

Then, upon seeing the Blessed One arrive, one offers a handful of flowers, along with the water of offering and water for the feet:

Om — may you accept with ease this water of offering and this water for the feet that I present.

Then contemplate that one has become mingled and unified with her:

Oṃ sarva-tathāgata-prajñā-jñāna-samaye hūṃ samaya-stvaṃ.

Then with this, establish her firmly:

Oṃ sarva-tathāgata-cala-samaya-macala-stvaṃ.

Then with this, bring her delight:

Oṃ sarva-tathāgata-manasantu-sti-samaye hūṃ. Ehyehi jaḥ. Ehyehi jaḥ.

Then, for the sake of beholding the great and boundless wonder:

Oṃ sarvāṅga-puṇḍara-mahābhagavān smara smara sphara sphara sarvāṅgā-vāyu-piṭṭhu-mahābuddha-samudrān hūṃ hūṃ aṃ.

Having thus roused the Māmakī with these words:

The cloud of buddhas, of great radiance, is to be made to stream forth upon the maṇḍala.

Then, having praised with this mantra, flowers are to be scattered:

Oṃ sarvāṅga-puṇḍarīka-pratīccha-dhvaṃ kusumāñjaliṃ hūṃ aḥ.

Then, just as has been explained, the vases of the maṇḍala are to be consecrated well with this awareness mantra exactly as described, and one is to confer empowerment upon oneself and receive one's own essence oneself. Then one will be endowed with the power of all activities, and all accomplishments will be achieved.

Then, with flowers and the like,
with food and drink and pure flavors, make offering as in the sequence before,
and let the king of disciples be introduced.

With the ritual procedure of the wheel-turning sovereign, empowerment is to be conferred by means of this practice.
Vajra, jewel, lotus, and likewise karma-vajra are the same.

Lasso, hook, bell,
chains, fan, and parasol, sword, the two kinds of eye-ointment, the royal enjoyments —
after displaying these ornaments to him, empowerment is to be conferred in that maṇḍala.

Conferring the empowerment of the mother of the Victors is taught as accomplishing all activities.
The samaya or the vow as well — let one's own disciples receive and hold it.

The activities of pacification and enrichment, subjugation and wrathful action —
with a perfectly pure mind, perform whatever is desired.

The fruits of all activities as well will be accomplished through this practice.

Then the Blessed One, the great bodhisattva Vajrasattva, once again entered into meditative absorption known as "The Elaborate Arrangement of the Excellent Sacred Activities," and declared the following:

Whatever vessel of the appropriate form is made,
place it in the center of the maṇḍala.
Curds, fresh butter, and milk — mix these with red sandalwood, add camphor,
and accomplish it through recitation with mental engagement.

When the moon, the sun, or planets are seized by an eclipse, arrange the excellent configuration of the practice.

First, kindle a fire;
with effort, fan it with the breath;
gather it into a golden vessel;
combine it with the essence of varuṇa.

Once more dry that substance in the sun and moon.

Then pour in the blood and seed of the goddess.

By this, the substances will be swiftly accomplished — of this there is no doubt.

Once accomplished, first offer a small portion to the goddess.

Likewise, offer the ācārya a double share.

After that, give a share to the other accomplished ones and to one's own disciples.

Then, through the practice of consecration, together with mudrā, through the samādhi of Vajrasattva, consume the seed of the food substance. In that very instant one's form will be transformed and one will become like Vajrasattva.

Whatever forms the mantrin wishes to accomplish — in whatever form one wishes to achieve — with the meditative concentration of that form and with steady intelligence, one is to eat.
One will assuredly transform into that very form.

Other substances as well
are to be accomplished by this very means.

By anointing the eyes with eye-ointment,
one moves unseen throughout the surrounding world.

By smearing the heart with a decoction of the long-stalked plant, one moves into the domain of the mind.

By anointing the body with hair-paste,
one draws near to the sky.

Taking the black eye-ointment,
one is to eat it facing the black direction.
From the fat of that one's excrement, smoke is to be produced by a skilled one.
If one applies that to the eyes, even the buddhas will not perceive one,
and one's strength will become like the weapon of the glorious vajra:
one becomes free from old age and death.

Eye-ointment, cow's butter, buffalo, goat, and human eye-ointment — a skilled one is to take all these,
a mantrin is to hold them and heat them.
This supreme and excellent great eye-ointment —
if applied to the eyes with it — all attainments become pleasing.

Through all invisible accomplishments,
one of great intelligence becomes sovereign.
The vast ground of all buddhas is surely to be obtained — nowhere else.

This chapter on the occasion of material substances,
the peerless great explanation, is now set forth.

Garments, parasols, and the like, swords,
and supreme weapons are to be accomplished.
Having placed the essence at the heart center and meditated, swift accomplishment will follow.

In the manner of Vajrasattva, the supreme king, the finest cloth in the likeness of the Lotus Bodhisattva — having fashioned it as a face, one endowed with it should meditate.
Whatever sovereign one may seek, like a mighty lord,
in that instant one becomes that.

At the crown of the head of that same one, meditate in the finest supreme concentration.

In that very instant, through the great offering,
one becomes a buddha.

At the very crown of the head
one is to meditate on the Viśvavajra.
That one becomes the sovereign lord of all,
and the aim of performing all actions is accomplished.

One should contemplate the vajra at the heart.
Within it, behold the essence.
From that arises the vajra vidyādhara:
the sovereign master of the vajra is accomplished.

The great precious one with eight parts —
the skilled one is to meditate on it at the heart.
By contemplating the essence there,
one becomes the vidyādhara of the jewel.

The great lotus with eight petals — by meditating on it in the mind, in a single instant, the great-lotus-endowed sovereign becomes the vidyādhara of the lotus.

And so on, extending without limit — through the ritual procedures of whatever practice, the supreme siddhi of higher, lower, and middling kinds is to be accomplished.

Contemplate a lunar maṇḍala at the heart.
Meditate on the supreme syllable.
Through the maṇḍala of whatever ritual procedure, everything is to be meditated as oneself.

Rising from that, with oneself at peace, densely pervaded by a canopy of light rays, cool like the light of the moon, like snow — these are to be placed at the crown of the one to be accomplished.

In that instant, malevolent forces, planetary demons, poisons, and the like are thoroughly dispelled, and within one day or seven,
the one to be accomplished is pacified — not otherwise.

Abiding at the center of the jewel maṇḍala,
one is to meditate on the supreme essence.
A lovely garland of golden light rays —
by meditating on it, that one flourishes.

Abiding at the center of the lotus maṇḍala, through meditative equipoise, one is to contemplate the goddess, her nature red and blazing pure — let it radiate into the mind of the one to be accomplished.
Then, through the practice of withdrawal, draw it back into one's own body.
Even one resembling a wheel-turning king will come under one's power by this.

Abiding at the center of the karma maṇḍala,
one is to meditate on the Viśvavajra.
Within its center, a syllable like the color of raw gold is to be meditated.
Thoroughly stirred by a canopy of light rays —
the skilled one contemplates it at the heart.
The light of the essence, dissolving into the one to be accomplished:
in that instant it descends.

Performing the vajra dance,
the yoga of the mudrā practice, and the practice united with the Vajrayoginī — all mudrās will be demonstrated.

Whatever one desires concerning past and future,
by extending the tongue one speaks it.
Whether desired or undesired, virtuous or non-virtuous — one speaks with vajra speech.

Or else, through refined language, or the common speech of villages and towns:
whatever is desired or undesired, virtuous or non-virtuous, whether life or death,
decline or non-decline, by their very nature —
all of those one speaks by this means.
Apart from this, one does not speak of them.

This was spoken by the Blessed One Vajradhara, the lord of power, in the tones of vajra speech.

Wrathfully, having meditated at the tip of the tongue on the supreme essence of the goddess, manifesting it in the form of an iron hook, the mudrā and the mudrā's response — placed upon the wind, in a single instant all blood is to be drawn forth.

By the practice of a stream of rain flowing down, one should cause it to descend into one's own mouth.
By drinking it, the mantra is known,
and one becomes a sovereign holder of the vajra.
Glorious, moving through all of space,
one becomes like the radiance of the sun.

By this very yoga,
milk, yogurt, and good butter, ghee, water, and all flowers —
these are to be drawn in by the wind.
Having bound the throat with a noose,
from the heart-center with an iron hook, lifting up completely by means of the wind —
the goddess, and likewise the yakṣinī (female yakṣa), the human woman, and likewise the female asura:
by reciting eight hundred times alone,
one should draw them in the form of a woman.

Having spread the name of the thing to be accomplished and the means of accomplishing it,
upon pillars, walls, and likewise the house, upon bells and upon vases as well — by reciting the essence of the goddess one hundred times, it shall be brought down.

The supreme lady who has gone to the far shore of wisdom, possessed of wrath and of perfection:
having made clear by means of the illuminator,
all the rites are to be performed.

A fresh corpse from the charnel ground, gathered together on the eighth day of the waning moon, should be placed facing north.
Over its mouth, in meditative equipoise, having recited the secret mantra well, whatever supreme substance is appropriate — eyebright (an herbal eye medicine), mineral remedy, stone, water, long pepper, and frequently saffron-paste,
white chalk in powder form, saffron and bdellium,
costus, śuddha, camphor, sandalwood, and likewise aloeswood,
flesh and blood as well, and likewise a finger ring — having been placed there by one endowed with yoga, one should sit upon it and recite.

Taking that up after the sun has risen, one will become a holder of an accomplished vidyā (mantra-knowledge).
By the inferior, an inferior accomplishment is shown;
by the superior, the superior is fully demonstrated;
by the middling, the middling is to be understood.
If there are no marks, one brings it under control.

Thus it is said.

Over all men
and over all women,
one brings them under control by mere touch alone,
and also by anointing the eyes.
Anointing entirely with sandalwood,
and a drop with saffron.
One should fumigate with the camphor-plant.
With white chalk powder applied, writing the desired name in full — what has not been brought under control shall come under control, in accordance with the words of Vajrasattva.

When a name is written with mineral dye,
it is the supreme means of bringing under control.

Powder brings about full attraction.
White chalk (karśya) defeats poison.
With vernicia lacquer, in that very instant one becomes mad without doubt.
Fumigating with costus and aloeswood is the supreme means of bringing under control.
Powder performs full attraction.
Yakṣinīs are summoned with certainty.
Fumigation with flesh and blood is the supreme means for summoning a rākṣasī.
Fumigation with Sinhalese sandalwood is the supreme means for summoning a god.
By fumigating with camphor and sandalwood, one invites even the supreme buddhas.

Whoever eats camphor
also comes under one's control.
The great vidyā of four syllables,
through the practice of meditative equipoise, at a time of agitation and of spread — one should certainly accomplish death.

Whatever command is given by one possessed of discipline and observance, that word-instruction swiftly accomplishes it.
That maidservant, carrying it on her shoulder, will transport it to the top of Mount Meru.
Taking the supreme substance of the highest accomplishment, it will come to pass.

Taking the semen of the blazing sun of the wrathful one on the night of a royal victory-day, examining it with excellent observance and discipline,
the semen-fluid of the wrathful fire flower:
it is to be placed within the lotus.
That very night — one or three — taking from it and applying with practice:
the skilled one should cause it to melt into butter.

Thereafter, whether by a god, an accomplished one,
or even praised by a buddha, or the shadow of an accomplished vidyā-mantra — without fail one will be seen.

Among beings who go and who do not go, even those not yet brought under control will be brought under control.

Write the name in one's own blood, and fill it with that same powder.
For as long as it has not dried out, that person will keep coming.

By whichever sequence of the gods
one writes the name,
let the wrathful one recite it:
through this, in that very instant it is accomplished.

Acting in accordance with that one's command, that one will naturally come under control.

For the mantrin who wishes to slay one who harms the Three Jewels:
blazing garlands, light that shakes the earth, bearing a skull-cup, noose, and iron hook, terrifying to the four-faced one — one should swiftly visualize oneself as this.

By spreading the secret mantra, writing the name in charcoal, pressing down upon that malicious one,
and piercing with one's own malicious mind —
through the meditative absorption of this very practice, one brings what is certain to certainty.

Blending the seed of the element with its expansion, writing the name with that element, pressing that element down properly, and placing it continuously in the house —
that one will swiftly be bound with certainty, and will remain unmoved until then.

Taking a peacock feather or crest-tuft and applying it, one should accomplish the rite.
The skilled one should fully grasp the root of what is called "the peacock."

When the mantrin encircles an army,
the army will scatter and be destroyed,
and those in it will become stupefied or bewildered,
and in that very instant will fall into confusion.

Taking the eyes of a dog, pig, and crow and mixing them equally with eye-medicine, and praising with the goddess's mantra —
all the forms of the siddha will without doubt be destroyed.

By the application of the essence of the caṇḍī flower combined with a preparation wrapped in iron, placing it definitively in the mouth of that one,
one will wander about free from old age and death.

Painting a fine image of the epidemic-spreader, and inserting into its mouth a harmful preparation, pressing it down and reciting very intently — by means of that epidemic-spreader's form one will without fail be seized.

Whether by a planet, a genuine hungry ghost,
a yakṣa, a rākṣasa,
or by the diseases of others, seizure need not even be examined.

Draw an image of Yama and drive him away.
An enemy placed in that image's mouth —
if he does not depart in his deluded state, he will swiftly and certainly die.

For slaying as well, with this very method, press fully down and recite with certainty.

Wherever a treasure is thought to exist,
let the mantrin go there,

hold the tongue fully, and recite.

Through this, speak with clear words.

The measure of it, whether present or absent, and the obstructers and how they abide there — for as long as that one joyfully speaks, offer a torma to that one.

If the obstructer does not speak, examine the offering water carefully.
With both knees placed down, in reverence,
this is from the mother of the Treasure-Holder Buddha.

Strike the four directions with a kīla peg.
Then drive out the inhabitants of those places.
Then bind the boundaries.
Enter into equipoise and circumambulate.

The one who knows the applications should then project the substance with this mantra:

Oṃ vasu de sarvārtha sādahaya yu dhara rakṣa rakṣa sarvārtha ni ca yaṃ traṃ traṃ ca ca ṭa ṭa ha ha svāhā.

Or alternatively, with this very vidyā
all the rites may be performed:
binding the directions and likewise protecting, driving away with the kīla, and likewise.

First offer the three precious things:
one portion is for the Treasure-Holder, one portion for those who suffer,
and the same for friends and companions.
The remainder the mantrin should examine with discernment.
The Three Jewels are to be offered to excellently.
Otherwise one will come to suffer from fear of kings, thieves, and the like.

If the guru is residing there, offer him two portions of good fortune.

To the eyes of others,
the realization of the Vajrayāna will arise —

one portion is to be given.

Otherwise the samaya vow will torment one.

This was spoken by the Blessed One, the Yogi, by the vajra of the Secret Ornament.

Then the mothers of all the buddhas bowed down there and made a request to the Great Hero:

"Speak, speak, O Great Hero, of the extensive maṇḍala —
the maṇḍala of all the mothers, the sovereign lordship of kings,
from which all sentient beings here arise."

Then the Blessed One entered into the meditative absorption called "Glorious Sovereign Lord of all Tathāgatas," and from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind he brought forth:

The maṇḍala is as previously described,
yet furnished with a lion throne.
Upon that throne a great lotus,
and upon that a maṇḍala bearing the hare-marked moon.
Upon that a great sun,
and upon that sun the supreme maṇḍala.
At its center, which is one-eighth of the whole, a jewel, and above that the Mother of the Victors, blazing with tremendous golden and blue light, equal to a mountain of gold,
her two hands teaching the Dharma,
the right bestowing the supreme gift,
the left offering a jeweled garland, adorned with every ornament,
her garments flowing and varied,
with a crest-jewel and a pearl uṣṇīṣa.
Before her, draw a jewel vessel.
To her left place a fine vase.
To her right the wish-fulfilling tree.
Behind her, a jeweled garland.
At the corners place eight vases of golden nature to be set.

Stirred with the five jewels, fully endowed with the five fragrances, filled with the flavor of food and the like — sixteen vases on the outside, entirely wrapped with yellow cloth, adorned with yellow flowers and so forth.

In front of her, the wise one should draw the virtuous Perfection of Generosity (dānapāramitā):
red, yellow, and brilliant white,
her hand bestowing jewels, beautifully garlanded with golden radiance,
the daughter of all excellent jewels, surrounded on all sides
by the sun, moon, and stars of the sky.
With topknot crown, garments and so forth, adorned with a garland, she is joyful.

To the south of that maṇḍala, draw the virtuous Perfection of Moral Discipline (śīlapāramitā):
her body of jewel-nature, faintly golden,
adorned with varied ornaments,
fully clothed in varied garments, lovely, with a cluster of garland at her crown, clothed, with the supreme uṣṇīṣa at her crest,
a wish-fulfilling jewel of utmost excellence in her hand, in fine jeweled cross-legged posture on the left,
to be contemplated just as the rite prescribes.
Behind her is she called the "Mother of Patience," slightly smiling, beautifully golden, wearing red garments excellently,
adorned with jeweled ornaments,
inquiring of all supremely precious ones,
with flowing red garments, bearing the supreme jewel at her crown, seated upon an excellent lion throne.

To the north, the great Perfection of Diligence, adorned with vajra armor,
the heroic goddess with a jeweled staff in hand,
her right hand in the gesture of generosity's perfection, priyaṅku flowers, blue-washed and white, seated upon a vajra lion throne.

The remaining ones are to be placed forming a maṇḍala endowed with jewels.
At each gate and in each gateway, a gate-guardian goddess adorned with all jewels.

Then, further in the outer exterior, the supreme cupped-hand posture of jewels — all the direction-protectors are to be set in their proper order.

Beyond all of that on the outside,
the skilled one should draw nāgas and yakṣas.
Fine jeweled vases,
parasols, victory banners, and pennant streamers, torma-offerings of various kinds, divine food-offerings, excellent and wholesome,
the finest tastes of food and drink,
butter and molasses,
yogurt and raw sugar with grain,
milk, butter, honey,
the finest of royal pure foods —
these are the supreme among foods and so forth.

Then the mantrin should enter,
adorned with all ornaments,
holding pure yellow garments, wearing a garland and bearing fragrant scent,
the mantrin should enter through the doorway.
First, the deity is to be invited.
With mudrā sealed and with melodious chant,
with a mind of profound joy,
he should call to mind the aspiration of Samantabhadra for the benefit of the world together with its gods.

Seated upon a precious and sublime lion throne, the Tathāgatas and deities together with their retinues are to be invited.
Then, when they have arrived in welcome, they along with their sons and their retinues bestow attainments upon sentient beings, and in particular upon the practitioner.

Then, with palms joined well together and with flowers placed in a vessel filled with jewels, the secret mantra is to be recited and the tormā offered.
He should be requested to please accept it at his ease.

Then the empowerment is to be conferred by oneself,
with that deity's mantra and mudrā.
Touching the ground with the hand,
one is to arise with composed dignity.

Then the disciple is to be brought in.
The flowers are gathered with care and their scent collected.
The fine yellow robe is properly donned.
In the hand, precious and fragrant, that joyful handful of flowers —
with the earlier mantra it is to be cast.
Whichever deity it falls before,
that deity is the one through whom accomplishment will come.

Then, circumambulating to the right,
the disciple is to come forth.
He is to be seated upon an auspicious lion throne and the preparation for the empowerment is to be performed.
With parasol, victory banner, and pennant, and with beautiful fans waving, the empowerment is likewise to be conferred over eight or sixteen vases,
with that deity's mantra and mudrā,
in due sequence and proper order.

Then, proceeding to that preparation,
in the manner of the wheel-turning sovereign, with the wheel of precious excellence in hand,
by the virtuous sound of the victors' victory, and by the yoga of the secret practice,

the empowerment is conferred at the navel.

"This one is a treasure-holder, a bearer of jewels.
He shall become a bearer of the vajra-jewel.
By the sacred samaya,
which fulfills the purpose of all buddhas, having today received it with effort, he removes the defilement of poverty."

Then the hero who holds the deathless is to be worshipped with an assembly of jewels.
And many others as well
are empowered by the supreme sovereign lord.

Through these five empowerments in like manner, even one without fortune becomes without self-conceit, and the glorious sovereignty over the four continents is obtained without obstruction.

The oath of secrecy, most secret of all secrets, is sworn.
Thereafter the disciple is instructed in the methods for meditating upon and accomplishing that.

Saffron, sandalwood,
fragrant substances, and excellent butter-lamps —
these, sanctified by the samaya, are given three times to drink.

"Drink, O child, this great secret.
The samaya is supremely difficult to transgress.
If this is violated,
one will swiftly die,
and after death will dwell in the sufferings of hell, weeping abundantly.

If you wish to be born as a human,
or if someday you desire to attain accomplishment, then you must certainly protect yourself far from the suffering of such poverty and ruin."

Having listened well to all of this, the disciple is to be taught the secret method of accomplishment.

Taking a princess of whatever royal lineage, one performs the yoga of illumination.
Within seven days accomplishment will certainly be attained and the abundant excellence of a king will be obtained.

By means of the practice of the maṇḍala, meditative concentration on the supreme Perfection of Wisdom is to be done.
Taking a queen according to the rite,
the practitioner swiftly accomplishes it.
Within three days one will without fail attain the most excellent kingship.

With a brahmin daughter of great fortune,
the accomplishment is to be performed with great wealth.
By means of union with a woman of various noble lineages, the accomplishment is performed in like manner.
Through this the supreme attainment is found,
and the sovereign is honored by the three worlds.

With the union of a woman of the common people with a hero, when practised, the attainments of mantra will arise.
Union with the supreme king of yakṣas, the accomplished one, with the sovereign lord most excellent among yakṣas — these are spoken of as being of inferior intention,

The supreme attains the supreme and great accomplishment, the middling attains the middling accomplishment —
these are obtained in this very life.
Then one should train in the activities.
The activities of pacification and enrichment,
likewise subjugation and fierce rites, and the many varieties of others besides — these bring joy to sentient beings.

The virtuous lady who is the Perfection of Wisdom (prajñāpāramitā) should be meditated upon through the engagement of the maṇḍala.
White as the kunda flower, like the moon, radiant with white rays of light —
she should be caused to enter the body of a person who is sick and dying.

Then that one will become endowed with power, possessing the vigor of one who is sixteen years of age.
Freed entirely from all illnesses,
old age and death are utterly abandoned.
Understanding the meaning of all treatises, endowed with supreme wisdom and mindfulness, and likewise the yogin who has become his own master should meditate perfectly in the sky.

Raining everywhere with various precious and beautiful things —
by this, poverty is utterly dispelled.
One should carefully examine those who are in poverty.
Take the form of a flowing stream of wealth to the measure of a thumb's width, and place it in meditative equipoise upon the goddess.
Recite the secret mantra before her for a full hundred thousand recitations alone.
Then the accomplishment is to be achieved.

On the full moon day, the fourteenth, the eighth,
or on a day seized by a harmful asterism, having made a great offering,
the skilled one should recite throughout the night without interruption.
Then, through joy, that image will surely and unmistakably blaze forth.
From that point onward, to summarize briefly:
one will become a universal monarch over human beings.
If through recitation an auspicious sign arises,
the yogin will gain great wealth.
The middling will attain a continent,
and the last will obtain a surrounding island.
Everywhere, by recitation alone, enjoyments will not be exhausted.
All kings will be brought under one's power,
and all women will be delighted.

Having performed yoga at the heart, and holding a jewel in one's hand,
one should meditate while dwelling in the solar maṇḍala.

Swiftly one will become the sovereign of precious things.

Having performed this mudrā,
one should meditate upon it constantly and continuously.
Whatever attainment one desires will be found,
just as the Vajradhara has declared.

Thus did the Blessed One Vajrasattva (Skt. Vajrasattva) declare.

Then the mothers, entering perfectly in accordance with the practice, dwelling well in the action maṇḍala, addressed a request to the Teacher:

"Where all the Victors abide together and perform the unsurpassed purpose — for the happiness of all sentient beings, let the activities be swiftly and excellently accomplished."

Then the Blessed One entered into the meditative absorption called the Glorious Purity of All Activities, and from that state he declared the action maṇḍala to those supreme mothers of all the Tathāgatas.

Draw the wind maṇḍala.

In its center, draw a triangle.

Above that, place the goddess.

She blazes like a flaming fire.

Four-faced, she is greatly terrifying.

Her fangs she gnashes fiercely.

She is clad in a great hide as her robe.

The wrathful one, her eyes wildly bulging, her great mouth with lips pressed tight by her fangs —

To be drawn before her:

the last face, in summary,

with varied wrathful and fierce faces.

Perfectly roused with many arms, holding lasso, iron hook, skull and the like,

and bearing a sword adorned with vajra.

Her body is smeared with skulls.

She who terrifies, wearing a great crown —

To be drawn: Yama the hero, the supreme and foremost face at the border.
Dark blue, blazing in nature, wrathful.
Adorned with a garland of heads,
wearing a crown of a garland of skulls,
clad in a tiger-skin lower garment, holding a sword, a precious skull,
and bearing a precious club — the most excellent.

Then the goddess to be well depicted:
the lotus-faced one, immensely terrifying, red, holding sun and moon in her hands.

She who is equal to the fire at the end of an age.
On the left is the great wrathful goddess.
The unconquered one, with a girdle at her throat.
Supreme, bearing vajra of action and bell.
Her face with fangs bared and gnashing.
At her crown, a skull — terrifying.
Supremely fierce, brilliant and powerful.
She is to be painted by one with proper ritual knowledge.

On the outer portion, to be well painted:
wrathful, accompanied by terror, bearing a great topknot of matted locks, with skulls filled with blood, and marked with auspicious mudrā seals.

Beyond her, the gods are to be placed — the oath-bound ones with hands joined in homage — all fully arrayed in their stations.
The world-protectors are to be placed there.
At each of the gates, likewise,
the gate-guardians are to be placed there too.

Then the ritual of the torma offering: substances including meat, with a drink possessed of flavor.
Then, having donned armor, one enters with a great skull-crown filled with blood or with ale, or proceeds with a skull vessel.

By this, all the wish-fulfilling Mātṛkās are to be summoned.

To slay those who cause harm to the Three Jewels, let all the great terrible mothers come to this very maṇḍala, this very day.
With sounds of terror and great ferocity, and thousands of rays of light issuing from their mouths — upon seeing and hearing this,
one must recognize them even by their signs.

Then one presents the arghya offering to them:
"Please accept whatever pleases you, O Terrible Mothers.
Bestow the great fierce one.
With ferocity and terror and fierceness —"

Then let her confer empowerment upon me.
By means of the corpse resting in the skull, having eaten just a little flesh, a mere measure, all the Mātṛkās are to be accomplished.

Then all wrathful actions are to be performed through protection of samaya vows.
"Those who harm the Three Jewels and those who speak loosely against the lamas — let the goddesses always slay them.
Follow me in doing so."

Then by that same ritual,
the sacred commitment of the disciple is to be entered.
Having invoked the wrathful deity,
a red flower is to be cast.

"Please accept as you wish this excellent flower of mine."

Taking this incense,
let this supplication be made:
to whichever goddess the flower falls,
to her the supreme petition is made.

Then, having conferred the empowerment,
one is to be placed before the maṇḍala.

The empowerment is to be conferred with blood contained in a skull.

Then, calling at the gate and causing one to enter, holding firm through the samaya vow:
"Drink this excellent blood, the heart's blood of the supremely fierce.
Eat, eat the great flesh.
Drink the greatly terrifying drink.
Otherwise you shall die —
ḍākinīs and the planets, yakṣas and fierce rākṣasas will devour you swiftly, without delay."

Then the thousands of wrathful actions are to be trained in.
Through the yoga of their application, having taken oneself as a wrathful being,
slay all who cause harm,
devour all enemies,
dispatch all the fierce ones, destroy all rākṣasas.

Through the application of the limitless-faced one, slaying and capturing are accomplished by her.
Through the application of the four-faced one,
she is supreme for summoning all.
Through the sky-faced one,
in every direction a wealth of jewels arises.
Through the application of the lotus-faced one, supreme ale is to be drunk.
Through the application of the unconquered one,
she is the supreme means for summoning flesh.
The great sky-soarer —
she is supreme for bringing armies.
In all states of torpor and confusion,
no examination is to be made.

The actions previously explained and whatever is desired beyond what has been explained —

all may be accomplished by mantra recitation alone;
in every case there is no doubt.

In the ashes of the charnel ground, diligently make the image of the enemy.
Having inscribed the name upon it, cut it with the sword of the Mātṛkā.
Then on the seventh day —

it will undoubtedly be destroyed. However the body has been cut, those very limbs will be severed. Through the application of the four-faced Mother, the mantra-practitioner, having entered meditative equipoise, cuts it. A noose is then to be skillfully fashioned at its throat and bound. Having pierced it at the heart with an iron hook, it is to be roused and straightened by means of wind. Then, having invoked its name, one who possesses wisdom summons it. Through the distinction of lower and higher, I have explained the fruit of this. It is to be understood in summary: through the application of the king of mantra-practitioners — thus it is said.

Then that Blessed One, the Mother of all Tathāgatas, declared: One who does not seek spiritual attainments from her, who is struck by harm, fear, demons, yakṣas (Skt. yakṣa), and rākṣasas, and who is afflicted by unbearable disease — after dying, will go to the Avīci hell. Then likewise the Mothers dwelling in the empowerment maṇḍala shall confer the sacred pledges of empowerment, and shall be allowed to hear the secret means of accomplishment. Through the seeds of one's own Mother — not through conceptualization of one's own self as the Mother, but taking the Father as exemplar — if one accomplishes this, in seven days it is perfectly achieved.

The Teacher, Father of all buddhas,
the domain of omniscient primordial wisdom, supremely fierce in all respects, and of great bliss, the highest of the highest of all wisdoms — by wisdom all things are accomplished.
The supreme sacred commitment of expanding activity — having particularly invoked it, through all the qualities of awakening,
and through the luminosity that pervades all,
all spiritual attainments are to be accomplished.

Through the distinctions of the activities of wisdom, through form and shape themselves — mudrā and the mudrā's response, likewise the maṇḍala's sacred pledge,
food and provisions,
torma (ritual offering-cakes), the deity's offering-cakes, the seat of supreme comfort —
each of these is to be definitively applied.
Recitation, meditative concentration, and the seed syllable pervade one's own body.
Among all secret mantras,
this secret mantra is supremely praised.
In this very life, noble subsequent attainment is won,
and it is obtained without doubt.
This was spoken by the Blessed One, Kula-Vajra, the lord who is the source of primordial wisdom.
Through the application of all activities,
this abides in the world in the form of illusion.

Then the Mothers of all the Tathāgatas addressed the Blessed One with these words: Most excellent is the wisdom of mudrā. Please speak with great wisdom. All that has been fully revealed — may the lord accomplish it without long delay.

Then the Blessed One entered into the meditative absorption called Vajra Samādhi and declared: Mudrā has been correctly explained as a sign, designated as a mere conventional expression. All the Tathāgatas have correctly explained all mudrās in the language of outcastes. Yet the supreme Protector further considers: the very characteristic of the hand's configuration. Those fortunate ones who trust in it, the deities who know the sacred pledge — when earnestly invoked by the practitioners, the supreme of the accomplished bestows it excellently. Having come forth from time, all return once more. Let the hands be made as moon and sun; carefully discern wisdom and skillful means. Then let the mantra-practitioner fully apply them, marking with one's own seed syllables:

Oṃ prajñopāya samāyoga.

Then the palms are definitively joined. In great mutual recognition, the fists are to be placed very firmly. Binding them as though the fists are clenched, they are to be arranged separately. Hold firmly at the center of the heart; the right hand is placed above the left, with the fingers kept separate. Raising the right hand outward in all directions, let it expand through the wheel's application. Contracted like the bolt of a vajra-gate, let all fingers become spokes:

Oṃ sarva-dharma-cakra samāye.

Likewise expand the left fully. Through the application of the fingers as spokes

raise it upward over the wisdom hand. The right is to be done likewise. The fingertips are to be brought just slightly together. This performs the great action of the Dharma. Those same two contracted together are known as the karma mudrā. Likewise, making them without names, join the remainder facing forward. The great mudrā most supremely bestows all siddhis. Having sealed these mudrās, one's own self becomes the sovereign of wisdom. Samantabhadra, the great king, is worshipped by gods and asuras alike.

Then all those māmakī goddesses, praising the lord once more, made request for the mudrās of the four great wisdoms. "May the Blessed One grant the supreme excellence of the four mudrās. The supreme branch of the secret mudrā — beautiful body of wisdom and skillful means — through which one accomplishes the secret yoga, through which the yogin attains bliss, through which the growth of miraculous power and the arising of authentic miraculous power are found here: the secret mudrā, the very foundation of the Victors, as declared by the Blessed Teacher — through which all who swiftly accomplish are established in abiding in supreme bliss."

Then the Blessed One, Vajradhara, was pleased and declared the sacred secret. "Perfectly accomplish the perfections of the mudrā in great bliss. The vajra-joined palms are firmly sealed; they are to be placed at the vajra-center. This is proclaimed as the sacred secret pledge; perfectly accomplish the secret yoga. That itself is to be made like a vajra: by moving it, bliss is produced. This is the accomplishment of the secret mudrā called the Dharma-holder. With the left hand, having contracted the method, by moving it, bliss is drawn in. This is supremely known as the pure action; it bestows all bliss. Those two themselves, applied to the mouth and the legs, are said to constitute the great application. The vajras are perfectly joined to one another; the mouth of the hook is to be moved. The two mouths fully joined to each other are known as the secret lasso. Likewise, having contracted them and bound them firmly together — this is the seal of the bound secret; the binding of gnosis is perfectly accomplished. All as vajra — vajra upon vajra — likewise are to be moved and circulated. This is the perfect fulfillment of the secret, and it bestows the meaning of satisfaction. The remaining is the great mudrā; this is a condensed summary of all that is to be known about mudrās. That itself, as the supreme karma mudrā, is to be applied through the distinctions of action."

Then all those goddesses, with mind satisfied and gladdened, offered their extensive Excellent! to Vajrasattva:

"Excellent! Excellent! Great Secret!
Excellent! Excellent! Great Offering!
Excellent! Excellent! Great Yoga!
Excellent! Excellent! Supreme Fulfillment!"

Then the Blessed Ones and the vajra queens of all the Tathāgatas made request to the Blessed One for the maṇḍala of the circle of joy:

"We bow to you, one whose nature is buddhahood.
We bow to you, precious one of conduct.
We bow to you, one who has become the cause of what is sacred.
We bow to you, performer of manifold deeds.
We bow to you, hero and tamer.
We bow to you, possessor of the secret Dharma.
We bow and pay homage to the mind of peace.
We, your protector's own, make this request.
For the sake of my request for a maṇḍala — the sovereign lord, the king, and all sentient beings —"

Then the Blessed One, along with all the Tathāgatas, declared the maṇḍala of the vajra queens: "Having drawn such a maṇḍala, place the Perfection in the center — the dhīḥ, the bearer of wisdom, made luminous by its union with skillful means. By this, the mantrin will be made fearless; by the half-moon he will be made certain. By this vidyā, all of his actions are accomplished: dominion, magnetizing, separation, satisfaction, seizing, and great fruit. Through the peaceful, it is said to be peace; through the beloved, it is said to bring increase."

For dominion, magnetizing, and separation, she is the agent; for dominion, she is the fierce one.

At the border of flesh, the slayer of māras — slaying and multiplying shall be performed.
With the wandering beings, possessed of the perfect, ensnare them with the noose of fingers.
Everywhere, magnetize with fierceness;
the fierce one abides in the station of the fierce.
One who is endowed with this ritual shall accomplish all the supreme gatherings of activity.
Having well contemplated yoga in the mind,
by reciting exactly eight hundred times,
with empowerment itself, or with great empowerment, having pressed down upon the crown with power,
by this, enchain all the hosts of spirit-mothers.
It shall be accomplished before long.

With great majesty, according to the command, bowing with the head in homage nearby:
all the spirit-mothers herein, bearing the splendor of majesty —
by the radiant king of mantras, in the proper sequential order, they accomplish the matchless, peerless siddhi (Skt. siddhi, attainment) and rest supreme upon the path of accomplishment.

Through the miraculous display and transformations of the Buddha, the holder of the vajra, this was taught by the Great Teacher, who abides in the unborn, in the absence of birth,
the omnipresent Teacher of permanence, unstained as sky, sun, and moon.
All of those rejoice greatly.

The noble queen who has relinquished objects with dance, song, and the finest music, with the union of laughter and elegant grace, illusory emanations of women, flutes, lutes, clay drums, and the like,
the tingling of ankle-bells, the sound of conches, taste, touch, and great fragrance, form, sound, and such — all endowed with pleasure — having made offering to the Great Hero, she bows with pride and reverence.

Again, a petition was addressed to the Protector:

"The maṇḍalas of the vajra queens —
why does the Protector not speak of them?
The entirety of all the fathers, and the summary of all the mothers, and all the offerings likewise — with attendants, male messengers and female messengers, all lords of the worldly realms in their totality — may the Great Lord be pleased to speak."

Then the Blessed One, the lord of all Tathāgatas, entered into the meditative absorption known as the Non-Dual Miraculous Display of All Tathāgatas. Having drawn the vajra of body, speech, and mind of those very ones in, and magnetized, bound, and pleased them, he rested in equipoise, abiding in the non-dual gathering of the vajra of body, speech, and mind.

Then again, all the buddhas born of complete bliss and exceedingly delighted, set into motion together with their retinues, addressed him with these words:

O Protector, lord of the vajra mind, body beautiful with the radiance of vajra, the maṇḍala of the ornament of secrets — may the Great Hero please speak of it.
By whom all the victors are aroused, the greatly renowned bodhisattva —

Then the Blessed One, lord of all Tathāgatas, entered into the meditative absorption known as the Supreme Great Maṇḍala of the Ornamental Array of Secrets of All Tathāgatas, and spoke these words:

How wondrous! All the buddhas have asked this request most earnestly.
Although in me there is no object, hear all the requests that have been asked.
The aspiration of great secrecy, and likewise the Perfection of Compassion — even mindfulness arising from the absence of mindfulness, abiding like a straight-minded one who remembers —

the great secret of all buddhas,
the virtue of the Perfection of Wisdom:
having thoroughly abandoned what is Dharma and what is not,
the unspeakable shall be expressed.

Then the Buddha, the Blessed One, entered once more into the meditative absorption called the King of Maṇḍalas of the Ornamental Array of Secrets of All Tathāgatas, in order to proclaim it. Again, he made this petition in the melody of song:

O sacred mind, abiding in bliss, immovable in the dharmadhātu, worshipped at the feet by the boundless buddhas of the ten directions, supreme bliss, god of gods, lord of the earth, sovereign of the world —

Please be seated in the supreme bliss of the maṇḍala, O great bliss, worshipped at the crown by the two earths, O uṣṇīṣa of the blissful lotus, proclaim, we pray, the sacred maṇḍala of union that performs the dance in all its aspects.

Please be seated, intending benefit for all beings — O great offering!
O supreme one of all, who tames all beings through many forms and appearances!

Then the Blessed One held in mind the very words of petition and encouragement made by all the Tathāgatas, and entered into the meditative absorption called the Vajra of the Great Turning of the Maṇḍala by All Tathāgatas, Utterly Satisfied, Reveling in Bliss, Fully Arrayed. Having blessed all the Tathāgatas, dwelling in the state of the wheel-turning sovereign of great bliss, he brought it forth from the vajras of his own body, speech, and mind.

Draw the maṇḍala as before, and at its center place the following:
the great vajra meditator, endowed with lordship over desire,
father of all Tathāgatas, who arises supreme at the beginning and end of all —
by this sequence and so forth, let everything be fully contemplated.
On the petals and spokes of the lotus one's own dharmas are to be displayed.

The mātṛkās and all their offerings and so forth are to be fully set out.
At the gateways, the gatekeepers are to be fully placed.
Outside the gates the gate guardians, the queens together with their consorts — all these deities are to be arranged.

Then, from one's own seed syllables, nāgas and yakṣas, the vighnas, gandharvas and kinnāras, asuras, garuḍas likewise —
all the world-guardians are to be placed two by two at the gates.
Demons, poisons, epidemics, and disease, hungry ghosts, flesh-eaters, rākṣasas, and the eight hells in the eight directions — all these are to be placed outside the wheel.

Then draw the encircling rim of the wheel, its nature as the seven great precious things.
At its gates the following are to be drawn:
in the east, attachment — the birthplace with hand;
in the north, fierce aversion with a dark body — draw it well there.
In the west, delusion is to be drawn.
In the south is sovereignty itself.
Arrows, black garments, and likewise a great fearsome staff —
these are to be understood as the mudrās.

Then one proceeds exactly as it is.

With hands bound in the secret vajra-mudrā, recalling one's own samaya, one invites the entire maṇḍala through that very mudrā with the gesture of invitation, and urges it with this vajra-song:

Come here, come here — O face of the buddhas, O splendor of the buddhas!
O Sugata (Well-Gone One), surrounded by consorts, completely encircled, come here, come here — O lotus-eyed one, born from the lotus!

O hero of those with pure samayas, O hand of the sacred!

With this sovereign song of melody

the vajra-mind is surely stirred.

"Come, come forth, go forth!" —

"Be placed, be placed, take your seat!"

"Be satisfied, satisfied, fully satisfied!"

"Enter, enter, proceed to enter!"

Crying "kva kye!" as an urging,

all those dwelling on the ground are made to descend.

Then flowers are to be scattered.

One prays for the Blessed One to partake of bliss.

Whichever deity's domain the flower falls upon, the sādhana of that one is to be undertaken.

Or else, whatever one desires in mind,

the pure practitioner performs the accomplishing practice.

Right there the empowerment is conferred,

and the skilled yogin receives it.

Then the student is to be introduced.

Adorned with all ornaments,

the face covered with silk and the like,

with fine hands bound in the mudrā,

he likewise scatters flowers.

One recites: "Samaya stvam — you are the samaya."

Whichever deity the flower falls upon, the empowerment is conferred through union with that one.

Or else, through whatever yoga one desires, having cultivated the union, the empowerment is conferred.

Or else, through the yoga of the master —

if that one comes to possess the union —

Parasols, victory banners, yak-tail fans, and the like, the bhaṅgāra vessel,

fans of many kinds,

a fine lion throne,

staffs of gold and silver,

and many precious staffs —

these are arranged within the maṇḍala of delight.
With great joy in the conferral of empowerment,
they are set upon that throne,
and the skilled yogin confers the empowerment.
In whatever manner is fitting,
the empowerment is conferred through the secret union.

First, by one who holds the vows, that person is to be introduced to holding the samaya.
Here, receive my samaya:
the outer and the inner, in four aspects —
the vow of all the buddhas illuminates the primordial wisdom of the buddhas.
Slay every wicked being.
Plunder the wealth of cowards.
Speak falsely against wrong views.
With regard to slaying living beings, speak accordingly.
Go openly to the women of others;
seize them, son, as is pleasurable.
Those who seize the property of others, those who act in opposition to the Three Jewels — slay and destroy them,
and likewise drink their blood:
strive to do all these things.

With the three aspects of samaya thus given,
having offered the fee,
with reverence toward the master
one touches his feet with one's head, and offers one's own body along with royal enjoyments:
a wife or daughters,
sons and servants,
sisters and nieces,
one's mother and one's own daughter-in-law,
the produce of town and countryside, horses and carts, elephants, splendid horses of variegated hue, villages filled with wealth,

cattle, buffaloes,
wild sheep, and all the rest,
and beautiful female yaks —
and whatever else one desires:
all these are to be offered as is fitting.
Then, in due order, the assembly of one's own students makes offering to the lord protector and requests him to depart.
As for any other vajra-brothers as well, thereafter one trains in the supreme sādhana.

Through the yoga of the life-force and the downward-clearing winds, the mind is made stable.

Fill it like the orb of the full moon;
the sixteen parts in their entirety — contemplated at its center is the Great Lord (Śiva), the master of desire.

In brief, one should expand upon this.

The one who holds the conduct meditates on one's own body as the king, the Mighty Lord of Desire, and, having overpowered it with the splendor of desire,
I, the yogin, accomplish the glorious state.

With the gods and their lords bowing in worship, illness, sorrow, and fear are cleared away, aging and death are entirely abandoned.

Through recitation for the span of but a single month,
the hero will accomplish all activities.

Through the sequence of pacification, enrichment, and likewise magnetism, and through the stages of wrathful conduct, the activities of hooking and descending — by prompting them for a mere instant, the mantra-holder accomplishes all.

Through the yoga of mantra, through recitation of mantra — this the Blessed One declared as yogic speech.

One should grasp what is born from the five limbs.

The midnight sun of the spirits:
bound with three pieces of iron,
one places it in one's own mouth.

Recited by oneself, the skilled yogin — that one will not be seen by morning.
With that mind of an accomplished being, along with the gods, all is accomplished in every aspect.
Dwelling for an eon with great wisdom, supremely skilled in all treatises, endowed with excellent form and youthfulness, one becomes a sovereign holder of awareness.

On the fourteenth day, take the left rib-side of one who has died by bursting, grasp it through the yoga and it will not fly away —
make it into an image with four arms:
a lasso and a hook as its three-pointed mark, holding a skull in the left hand, abiding in the wind-maṇḍala, gazing with three eyes,
wearing a crown of a garland of skulls,
fierce, with great forehead-horns, in a great terrifying charnel ground —
the skilled yogin sets it there.

Offer worship according to the proper ritual procedure. Recite the king of secret mantras. With blood, flesh, and fat — she who wears a crown of a garland of skulls — through these the goddess will be accomplished. The signs are also to be examined. Through the signs, the attainments are great, and in no long time one obtains excellence. With lesser means one gains lesser attainments; with middling means, middling ones. If the signs are absent, only small results arise — there is no need to analyze it further.

To draw in a noble asura, one does so in that very instant through the incitement of humans and arrows. Drawn in writing with blood itself, this very rite is also used for bringing another under one's power. Likewise, all women are to be drawn in. The substances of attainment too — by name alone, by the application of the drawing-in rite, they are to be drawn in.

For the complete dispersal of an army, it is set at the tip of a victory banner. Making one swell with pride, making one groggy and stupefied, confounding, binding, shading and all forms of killing — all these are performed by one endowed with the proper ritual procedures.

Then the mothers and fathers of all the Tathāgatas presented this great maṇḍala petition to the Blessed One through the maṇḍala of the Ornament of Secrets:

Through whose abiding all the Victors arise,
the mothers and fathers likewise —
by that yoga make the lord of yoga a vessel for all sentient beings.
The great yoga division of the maṇḍala of the Ornament of Secrets — by which the people of the future are established in bliss in buddhahood itself.

Then the Blessed One Vajradhara, with eyes opened wide in a smile, the maṇḍala of the Ornament of Secrets — the great secret — declared:

Because I myself am the maṇḍala that has been taught,
I, the pure Vajra of sentient beings, am called by nature the Ornament of Secrets.
The essence, the mudrā, and the mantra itself —
I am also the awareness mantra and the pledge.
Because I myself am the vow,
I myself am the teaching and the teacher.
The mothers and fathers likewise:
the supreme of activities, accomplishing attainments — bliss and suffering, pertaining to the three realms.

Then the mothers and fathers of all the Tathāgatas addressed the Blessed One thus:

Therefore speak, O Blessed One!
We request the Sugata to speak — so that all buddhas and bodhisattvas may obtain benefit and bliss.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption in the samādhi called Vajraśrī, the intimate enjoyment of the mothers and fathers of all the Tathāgatas, and from his own body, speech, and mind vajra, this arose:

Following the ritual sequence explained before,
after correctly drawing the maṇḍala,

one should visualize oneself at its center — white and red with great radiance.

The body adorned with varied ornaments, with a red garland at the uṣṇīṣa, well wrapped in a garment of many colors, wearing a cloak of red light.

with a face bearing a proud and smiling expression.

In the other hand, a vajra, pressed firmly at the heart.

Endowed with eyes like a blooming lotus,
the face like a rising sun.

Seated on a throne of a vajra lion, with a red garment hanging down — draw it thus in brief.

To the left, draw wisdom fully.

To the form described before,
the right hand is raised.

To the south, Great Generosity — the excellent hand conferring jewels.

To the north, Great Patience, holding the emblem of loving-kindness.

In front, Great Diligence, with a most excellent hand holding a vajra.

At the juncture of east and south, draw the perfection of meditative concentration — she who holds meditative concentration, with wide eyes, the radiant light of a lunar maṇḍala.

At the station of non-deception, draw Increase — adorned with jeweled ornaments,

with a thousand wealth-ornaments,
she brings happiness to many sentient beings.

The aspiration prayer is to be drawn — of the wind —

At the juncture, the Sign is to be drawn truly — she who with melodious speech stirs all sentient beings, endowed with intelligence and possessed of power,

the student of the wisdom of skillful means,
who dances with both hands, stirred with elegance and joy — draw her so.

The hero is to be drawn at the eastern door:
the virtuous one of the Perfection of Wisdom, whose beautiful hand holds a wisdom-hook, adorned resplendently with red silk.

At the western door, draw the sovereign of binding, her nature like binding itself, exceedingly coral-hued —
she who holds a vajra iron-chain.

At the northern door, draw the supreme perfection of power, she who brings delight to all the Victors, sovereign of the sounding of a fine bell — draw the magical display of the Lord of Death, fully stirred by blazing clouds,
she who holds in hand a vajra-lasso, equal to a garland of vajra-lightning.

Before me, draw the one endowed with wisdom,
the adorned sovereign of desire, radiant with the light of ruby-red, supreme, holding bow and arrow.

Before that one, draw a white figure of great renown, like the light of the moon, beautiful with the brilliance of a rising lunar disc,
of youthful form with a gentle smile.
Deep-red Vajra Longing, holding five arrows and a bow —
the hero who conquers birth, supreme in splendor, holding a wheel in hand.

the great white and red radiance, Vajra Rattle-King (Vajra Jangdrak), accompanied by the tinkling of a bell.

Behind him, draw
one who resembles gold and saffron.

In the southern direction, draw the glorious sovereign of the ḍākinīs, blue like a rain-cloud,
holding in hand a precious jeweled sword.

Before him, draw the great hero,
the great sovereign of desire,
holding a bow and red rays of light, adorned brilliantly with blazing jewels.

To the south of him, draw the supreme Vajra Reproach, he of the solar maṇḍala in hand,
with a sharply blazing garland, glorious Vajra Supreme Tamer,
the excellent crest-jewel of the precious vajra, greatly radiant with a white complexion, trailing robes of blue.

The class of Vajra Ḍākinī Sovereign, holding in hand exceeding precious beauty.

Behind him, draw
the supreme face adorned with laughter.

Behind me, draw
the great sovereign of fragrances, great sovereign, who holds a lotus pressed to the heart — resembling the appearance of bandhu flowers.
Facing toward that one,
draw beautiful-eyed Vajra Liberator.
Of fine white-golden and varied hue, holding in hand an excellent blue utpala lotus.

To his left, draw in purity
a wheel of deepest white in hand.
One who has attained an excellent state through blueness, of supremely smiling countenance — draw behind him a crest of foliage.

Holding in hand a supreme wish-fulfilling jewel, of clear blue color, greatly heroic,
of great mind endowed with courage.

To his south, draw
the supreme Dharma-teacher, of brilliant white, holding an emblem of reason,
like the radiance of the rising sun.

To my north, draw
great-renowned Ghanavyūha, resembling an exceedingly green emerald, holding the supreme karma-vajra.

Before him, draw
the captivating splendor of the Vajra Guardian, holding a vajra with a laughing hand,
adorned with all ornaments.

To his south, draw
the excellent adornment of the summit of beings, dark as a black bee,
he who holds the vajra radiant torch.

Behind him, draw the Vajra Binder, with hands precisely folded and composed,
radiantly pure with the light of all jewels, supremely wondrous with a smile — to his left draw the one who revolves, holding a flaming wheel in hand, clothed in fine draping blue silk, face like a full-blown lotus.

Then in the sections of the doors draw the four gatekeepers.

At the east, the Immovable Vajra, holding in hand a great vajra-hook.

At the southern door, Vajra Fire, holding in hand a blazing vajra-lasso.

To the west, Wind, in blue — holding a vajra iron chain.

In a misshapen body, draw her in blue, holding a bell with a lasso attached.

Then, once the one endowed with union has come,
draw her to the east of the maṇḍala.

At the east, a weapon of arrows, blazing, burning like a lotus in full flame.

To the south, the great and mighty one — blue Vajra Īśvarī,

holding in hand a jeweled ear of grain, adorned with ornaments of precious jewels.

Vajra Pacifier, beautiful and white, is always to be drawn at the back, holding in hand a fine lotus, adorned all over with lotus garlands.

Vajra Upper Face, the beautiful one, blue-green, endowed with every excellence — in her misshapen body, draw her with discernment to the right: a single-pointed vajra.

At the northeast, draw the vajra goddess called Timely Season, the beautiful one, lovely as a summer cloud, holding in hand great fragrant incense of renown.

At the northwest, draw Rīritā, holding in hand a blazing garland of flowers, slightly red and white,
adorned with varied ornaments.

To the northwest, draw the one holding in hand varied written characters, holding in hand a lamp of deep red, clothed in garments of a slightly blue hue —
she who sways like a perfumed elephant:
let a skilled hand draw her, full of play,
blue-green and crimson like deep indigo, utterly radiant with beautiful eyes.

Vajra Hand of Beautiful Eyes she is.

To her east, draw

Vajra Sovereign of Bliss, radiant with the light of the supreme vajra.
Likewise, to the south, draw one resembling gold and deep indigo: Precious Lamp, with a precious jewel in hand,
the goddess endowed with supreme radiance.
In the western maṇḍala, draw her.
Luminous and beautiful, shining with light, holding in hand lovely radiant rays — Vajra Chest-Born, greatly resplendent,
adorned with varied ornaments,
holding in hand garments of every kind:
she is always to be drawn to the north.

Likewise, having drawn with the joining,
draw also the messenger goddesses well.
The beautiful Inciter of the Heart is to be drawn well at the east: Vajra Sprout, red with an arrow, with two eyes and with blue garments.
Close beside her, draw the heroine holding in hand a supreme iron hook and lasso — the goddess who summons the fierce — blue-green and red, of magnificent splendor.
The great messenger of delight is always to be drawn at the west:
she who pleases all the Victors,
her hand beautiful with a lasso of hide.
The messenger who draws forth blood is to be drawn dwelling at the north, dark of complexion and greatly devouring,
her hand made beautiful with a skull cup.
The messenger who seizes everything is to be drawn at the fire corner, holding a supreme vajra iron hook and lasso, dark red, a great ascetic woman.
To her north, by the hero,

draw the great powerful door-guardian:
Vajra Feller, handsome and red, holding a bell in her open palm, possessing the three pledges, with three eyes, holding a three-pointed vajra, her body terrifying and greatly blazing, stirred by red rays of blazing light,
with hands like tongues of burning fire, steadfastly abiding in the fire direction.

The great primordial goddess, holding in hand a vajra fire-drill,
red and blue — draw her accordingly, following the proper sequence.

The goddess who tames the hard to tame, dwelling in the place of the door-guardian:
the heroine with a vajra club in hand, equal to blazing lightning.

Then draw the servant goddesses.

Her hands marked with her own mudrā —
the servant goddess who binds the three worlds is to be accurately drawn at the west.

Holding the great bonds in hand, deep red, blazing with saffron-colored rays,
the servant goddess with a terrifying fire-face, her hand's tip adorned with a lamp held supreme — of deepest black with a great body:
always draw her in accord with the ritual.

The servant goddess with a fierce and wrathful countenance — utterly terrifying in her turbulent aspect, holding a moist skull-cup in hand, deep crimson and radiant with great light — the servant goddess who binds body, speech, and mind is to be accurately drawn at the east.

White and red, with a large body, her supreme hand holding a lasso and iron hook — then draw the musician goddesses

in their proper sequence accordingly.

The Tathāgata's delight goddess (Prīyā): beautiful, adorned lavishly with precious jewels, reddish in color, holding bow and arrow in hand, wearing red garments and holding a red garland — she is to be drawn at the north by the mantra-practitioner.

The supreme great Enticer (Ākarṣaṇī),
the one who holds the hand of loveliness, who dwells beautifully and brings down well-being — the wrathful goddess who crushes the three worlds is called Vajra Musician (Vajra-vilāsinī).
With great ferocity she makes the threatening gesture.
Draw her to the east in meditative equipoise.

Greatly Joyful, the Reflecting One (Vajra-anusmṛti) — draw her at the back with the mantra-practitioner's delight.
The one with attachment's mudrā in her hand, who brings pleasure to the chief of all beings, is called the Delighter (Nandakārī) — draw her.

All-Vajra Musician (Sarva-vajra-vilāsinī), resplendent, holding the tips of joy in her hands,
adorned with all manner of ornaments —
she is to be drawn by the mantra-practitioner who knows the ritual.

Vajra Hūṃ-Maker, dwelling excellently:
draw the outer vajra.
His own vidyā-consort stands to the left;
draw her with three eyes on the principal figure.
She holds the three-pointed vajra,
and with the right hand makes the gesture of homage, surrounded by his own consorts and the rest.

As the water deity draw Great Brahmā (Mahābrahmā), with four faces.

At the gateway stands the Great Gate Guardian:
the vajra-hook, mighty in power, entirely crimson and greatly fierce — this is the one who summons the supreme buddhas.

Dwelling splendidly at the south:
draw the one holding a noble lasso in hand, who causes the great bodhisattvas of renown
and the buddhas to enter.

The great powerful Binder (Vajra-bandha) — draw him accurately as the stable vajra.
Resembling the flower of the Nepalese silk-cotton tree, firm and unmoving from his seat.

Similar to the jujube and the bent horse — draw the supreme Pleaser (Toṣaṇī).
She pleases all the buddhas,
as well as the vidyā-mantras and the perfections.
Beautiful is the hand holding a vajra-club, surrounded by pacifying and other attendants.

The one with Yama's wheel in hand, marked with a most beautiful vajra, dark in color, holding yellow garments, surrounded by weapons and the rest — draw the master on this impure body.
The hand bearing the vajra is supremely beautiful.

Then draw the forms of the offering goddesses.

The great Vajra Flower (Vajra-puṣpā):
beautiful, holding a bouquet of flowers in hand, adorned all over with flower garlands — draw the mantra-practitioner's Vajra Incense (Vajra-dhūpā).

The noble one who enraptures the mind:
wide-eyed, holding incense in hand, slightly white with a tinge from her burden —
the goddess Vajra Light (Vajra-ālokā), resembling the color of refined and smelted gold, holding a lamp in hand — draw her with skill,
adorned with all manner of ornaments.

Wearing fine clothing, her body fragrant, beautiful, holding a vessel of perfume in hand,
her eyes like the petals of a blue lotus,

her lovely form captivating to the mind — draw this enchantress.

Vajra Form (Vajra-rūpā), beautiful of form,
adorned with all manner of ornaments,
holding a vajra-mirror in hand,
her maṇḍala-like face graced with a smile and laughter.

Vajra Sound (Vajra-śabdā), with a manifold body, possessing a body of white and blue —
the vīṇā, the flute, the bell, and so forth:
draw her playing these, possessed of wisdom.

Vajra Taste (Vajra-rasā), the greatly fortunate one, holding a vessel of taste in hand,
all her ornaments perfectly complete, endowed with all the defining marks.

Vajra Touch (Vajra-sparśā), vast and deeply blue, with eyes like the petals of a blue water-born lotus, perfectly luminous and greatly laughing, her own arms clasped together.

Vajra Laughter (Vajra-hāsyā), calling out — drawn concisely by the yogin:
holding variegated garments, white in color,
the holder of all ornaments.

Vajra Elegance (Vajra-lāsyā), great and white, graceful and delightful to behold, both fists placed at the hips,
a beautiful garland-bouquet inserted there.

Vajra Song (Vajra-gītā), beautiful and red of body, utterly devoted to singing,
her face like a fully opened red water-born lotus,
her singing hands most lovely.

Vajra Dance (Vajra-nṛtyā) — let the skilled one draw her:
with hands bearing the gesture of dance,
light blue and white, brilliantly white,
with large eyes, adorned with a smile most excellent.

Vajra Cymbal (Vajra-tāla), fierce and great, beautifully striking the ḍuru ḍura drum.

Vajra Great Drum (Vajra- Dundubhī), great goddess — draw her striking the great drum.

The clay-drum goddess — let the skilled one draw her:
she who strikes the clay drum.

The goddess who strikes the mukundā — her face as lovely as a mukundā drum.

She who strikes the paṭaha drum — called Vajra Paṭaha (Vajra-paṭahā).

She who strikes the great clay drum — draw Vajra Clay-Drum Beauty (Vajra-mṛdaṅgā).

She who joyfully strikes the guṇjā drum, laughing, with lotus eyes — let the hero draw Vajra Guṇjā (Vajra-guṇjā):
she who accomplishes the highest aims of all activities.

Vajra Tinkling Anklets (Vajra-kiṅkiṇī), with a vajra in hand — draw Vajra Tinkling Anklets.

Vajra Cymbals (Vajra-tālikā), with a vajra in hand, white in color, greatly radiant, with hands that strike the staff drum — draw Vajra Staff-Drum (Vajra-khaṇḍavādinī).

Draw one who strings a single-stringed vīṇā:
Vajra Vīṇā Single-String (Vajra-vīṇā-ekatantrikā).

Draw one who strums the three-stringed vīṇā:
the seal of one strumming three vīṇā strings.
Draw one strumming three vīṇā strings.

Vajra Bell Goddess (Vajra-ghaṇṭā), great goddess, clothed in red garments.

Vajra Flute (Vajra-vaṃśā) — let the yogin draw her holding a flute to her lips.

Vajra Vīṇā of Great Fortune (Vajra-vīṇā-mahābhāgā), greatly delighting in strumming the vīṇā.

Draw Vajra Blowing Conch (Vajra-śaṅkha) with care:
of the nature of one who blows a white conch.
The conch lady holds in her hand a copper conch,
she who holds the supreme form of desire.

With hands made lovely by the Victors' bells,
she is to be drawn playing properly.
Greatly splendid in her fine playfulness,
she is she who brings delight in complete victory.

Lotus Dancer Sovereign (Padma-nṛtyeśvarī), red, opener of the red lotus — draw her with a thousand hands, perfectly dwelling in the illusion of dance.

Jewel Dancer Goddess (Ratna-nṛtyā), great goddess — draw her beautifully as one whose very nature is dance, holding a jeweled ear of grain in hand,
with many arms and a hundred faces.

Vajra Dance with Pride (Vajra-nṛtyā-garvīṇī), her body adorned with fine ornaments — let the yogin draw her properly established through the vajra union, in accordance with the rite.

Variegated Dancer of Great Fortune (Nānā-nṛtyā-mahābhāgā) — place the vajra palms together at the crown of the head, with a smile and beautiful eyes.

Variegated Illusion of Good Mind (Nānā-māyā-sumatā), with beautiful eyes and arching brows,
her face bearing elaborate expression,
her countenance smiling so that all who see her rejoice.

Vajra Vision of Great Fortune (Vajra-darśanā-mahābhāgā), the maṇḍala of whose face is supremely light blue — greatly laughing, with wide-blooming eyes:
let the great yogin draw her.

She who is gazed upon with the yogin's eye, supremely radiant yet stirring,
she who acts as if spinning a wheel — placing hands at the heart, she destroys all evil without remainder.

Her two eyes adorned with collyrium, turned upward and downward by the noble ones,
she summons all who are seen through great bliss and brings all buddhas under sway.

At the gate as great guardian:
Vajra Hook (Vajra-aṅkuśā), greatly powerful, protecting all and greatly fierce,
she who invites the supreme buddhas.

Most excellent in properly abiding at the gate — draw her holding a noble lasso in hand:
she who ushers in the great bodhisattvas of great renown and the buddhas themselves.

The great binding fierce one — draw Stable Vajra (Vajra-sthirā) truly.
Her face like the flower of the Nepalese citrus tree, thick and swaying as it moves, resembling the curved neck of a bird — draw the most excellent delightful one.

She pleases the vidyā mantras (vidyā), the perfections, and all buddhas.

Draw Indra as a youth at the gate;
for Yama, draw Yama himself;
for the water deity, draw the water deity.
The ill-formed one is in the northern direction.
All these are to be drawn together.

The retinue is arrayed in front. On the outside, draw the eight hells. Hungry ghosts too are in every direction. The mantra-practitioner draws, according to the ritual, the one who dwells in the vajra-hūṃ; the outer vajra is to be drawn. His own wisdom-consort dwells on the left. First, draw the three eyes well. She holds the three-pointed vajra. With the right hand she makes obeisance, and she is surrounded by his wives and the rest. For the water deity, great Brahmā is to be drawn with four faces. His excellent hand holds a vajra staff. He is surrounded by the peaceful ones and the rest. For Yama, draw one who holds a wheel, adorned with the vajra mark and supremely beautiful, dark in color and holding yellow garments, surrounded by Śrī and the rest. For the ill-formed one, draw the sovereign — his hand supremely beautiful with the vajra, his body vast with a thousand eyes — with Bde and the rest arrayed before him. For the powerful one, draw the powerful one. In the direction of fire is the fire deity. The one known as the truth-less dwells in the truth-less direction. In the wind direction is the wind deity himself. At the eastern gate, draw the Beautiful-Shouldered One. Muṇḍata is in the west. For the ill-formed one, draw the Accomplished One. In the south is the coiled ambrosia.

By this ritual, the one who knows the mantras, having drawn the excellent maṇḍala, shall summon all the buddhas. The mantra-practitioner introduces the supreme holy ones, the chief father and mother deities, according to the ritual. In the maṇḍala, the lord of the maṇḍala, adorned according to the ritual with a hand holding a vajra hook, having taken pride in himself as Vajrasattva and then arising with that pride, bestows empowerment upon the bodhisattva of the secret, and by this quickly summons the eye. This song invites:

Come here, O father and mother together with the buddha-sons, with servants and kinsmen and relatives,
you gods and goddesses who perfectly encircle the supremely glorious Vajrasattva, fully pleased — come here!

Summoned by this song, all the Tathāgatas come. Having come, they bestow great spiritual attainment upon the practitioner. Or else they grant an auspicious sign — one should look for a descent of light or a vision. If one's merit is extremely meager, one will not see anything at all. Then offer the prayer once more; invoke again and again. By that very practice of the deity yoga, arouse pride again and again, and make extremely great offerings. Then, with the offering water and the foot-washing water as well, invoke with the very suchness of the secret, and present these with the knowledge of the very suchness of the mantra.

Vajrapāṇi, lord of all buddhas, united in embrace with wisdom of beauty, comes with father and mother, sons, retinue, messengers, servants, and surrounded by an assembly of beings. This song of invitation:

You who delight in benefiting all sentient beings,
I make this supplication to you:
this is your moment —
please perform the supreme benefit of sentient beings!

Even when the prayer and invocation are made, if an auspicious sign arises, the student should at that time earnestly meditate on the yoga of Vajrasattva.

Bind the vajra and lotus limbs together, and through this union introduce the student into the very maṇḍala. Then the skilled one stations him at the gate and has him hear the supreme sacred commitment. Mothers, sisters, and likewise daughters too — you should always rely upon them with a mind entirely free of doubt. Kill all sentient beings; maintain the conduct of ascetic observance. Seize the wealth of the fearful and give it to suffering people. When one does not engage in vajra yoga, one may practice on one's own. Make offerings to the Three Jewels and show reverence to the teacher. Speak no lying words. Do not drink alcohol. This is apart from the time of the sacred commitment — the consecrated sacred commitment, and also for the sake of benefit, for the sake of pleasing the master, and for the sake of serving the Three Jewels.

Always speak lying words. Go to the women of others. One who is endowed with the purpose of sacred commitment should perform all other acts as well, doing so out of diligence for the benefit of sentient beings. These secret sacred commitments must not be proclaimed by one of good intelligence, except to those who hold the commitment, to a mantra-practitioner authorized by the master's permission — the great secret of all buddhas, consecrated by Vajrapāṇi. If, through a nature characterized by dullness, one transgresses this supreme sacred commitment, then the great Vajra, the lord of vajras, the king, will surely slay that one. With a vajra blazing on all sides, the crown of the body will be split asunder.

Then this one must cast away the fine flower garland.

Oṃ sarva tathāgata māta pitṛṃ pati mahā sukha samanta bhadra pratīccha daṃ puṣpa añjaliṃ mṛdu jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ bhagavan mahā sukha samanta bhadra samaya stvaṃ samaya ham.

Having taken this up quickly, great compassion, Vajrasattva — take that and, with good intelligence, bind it to the crown of the head. Then the king of mantra-practitioners, with this mantra, should open the eyes wide.

Oṃ vajra jñāna mahā netra uddhāṭayati cakṣuṣi.

Look here, great protector, my child! Supreme sovereign of all buddhas, supreme of all great wisdom, Vajrasattva of great bliss — having taught in due order and sequence, offer the petition for the conferral of empowerment. The empowerment, which is delightful, I request be granted to me as great fortune. The Victors have previously declared it as "The Ornament of the Secret." I pray that all the Victors bestow upon me in person that secret union.

Likewise, with the maṇḍala vase, the empowerment is thus to be bestowed.

The five kinds of great disciples are there to be summoned through the yoga, and by means of what is called "The Ornament of the Secret," the empowerment is conferred by one who knows the siddhi. Through the magical transformations of secret yoga, having held it well with the lips, the skilled one applies it with the tip of the tongue. With a vajra, or else with a lotus, the seal and the response to the seal — then the holder is bestowed in full. The skilled one bestows that very thing as well. Through the yoga of the Secret Ornament, the secret bliss is to be accomplished.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, Samantabhadra.

Then a gift is to be offered. After bowing down to the master and making offerings, one makes offerings — of one's mother, daughter, sister, a sister's daughter, or a sister, or a wife; of the king's wealth, the mass of people, villages, outlying areas, cities, wealth, jewels, and the like, and whatever else one desires, all the enjoyments and necessities one has, with devotion — bowing at the feet of the master. For the sake of all accomplishments, one should also make excellent offerings to the maṇḍala-holder. One should make offerings to one's father and kindred as well, and likewise offer to the children of spiritual companions. With all the delicious food and drink, clothing, ornaments, flowers, fragrances, incense, and the like — with all that one possesses, having made the offering, one should give them away. To all the gods as well, one should make offerings in the same way. Request the king of secret mantras to depart. He departs at the utterance of Vajra muḥ.

Then the mantra-practitioner should cause that supreme disciple, who maintains the secret, to be well trained in all the secrets, clarified by the king of secrets, the secret lord of the Victors. The secret seal of wide eyes is to be accomplished through steadfast intelligence. Through the sequence of self-consecration, consecrate with wisdom. Having meditated well on oneself as a bodhisattva, through the yoga of the Secret Ornament, the accomplishment will be fully achieved within seven days. Of this, have no doubt.

That great goddess of wisdom — oneself is the supreme Vajradhara, the foremost hero of all the sky. One becomes free from aging and death. Through the great yoga of the lord of desire, by meditating on oneself as that very lord of desire, the enjoyments of desire will be accomplished. He is the supreme lord of desire, and through him one will be accomplished as the goddess who is the sovereign of desire. Of this, have no doubt. All the sovereigns of the desire realm will come to serve like attendants.

In the beautiful maṇḍala of the sky, one should meditate on the seed-syllable of the ḍākinī. Through the practice of union, one should project it outward and then draw it into one's own heart. Having brought it inside, one should meditate on the great jewel as the subduer of existence. Lovely in its nature as a wish-fulfilling jewel — within seven days this will be accomplished.

In the center of a red lotus born from the mud, fill it entirely with fragrance through earnest effort. Meditating with firm conviction on oneself as the bodhisattva who is the great sovereign king of fragrance — swiftly thereafter one becomes endowed with intelligence and becomes the master of the masters of the fragrance-eaters. Through fragrance, one swiftly draws forth the poison of the animate and inanimate.

In the maṇḍala of Amogha, one should contemplate the heart-practice that is the joining of the essence to the heart. The accomplishment will come from what is held in mind; its mudrā too is the same as that. Greater than jewels, the greatest jewel — the luminous eye of the jewel. Likewise, that which is endowed with fragrance will be accomplished by the practitioner.

Through distinctions such as these and others, one should come to know further deities as well. By meditating on the maṇḍala or on the sacred commitment, one will swiftly accomplish them. Through the practice of combining the essence mantra, the mudrā, and the knowledge mantra, by meditating on those very ones through all of these, one will swiftly and certainly accomplish.

This was spoken by the Blessed One, the master of yoga, the sacred lord of the Secret Ornament. The supreme of all four mudrās — all mudrās will be accomplished.

Then the fathers and mothers of all the Tathāgatas made this request: "Through the swift accomplishment of the supreme practice, how does the practitioner accomplish them all? Speak swiftly on all of these. O Blessed Vajradhara, our lord, excellently accomplish the essence mantra, the mudrā, and the knowledge mantra. O supreme great hero, sovereign of the abode of the supreme queen, please speak."

Then the Blessed One, great Samantabhadra, entered into the meditative absorption called "Ushnīsha Vijaya, the Thoroughly Victorious One," the crown protrusion of all Tathāgatas, and from the vajra-body, vajra-speech, and vajra-mind of that very Vajra he drew forth these words of request from the fathers and mothers of all Tathāgatas.

The essence mantra and the mudrā of the deities — just as the colors and so forth were set forth previously — these are well explained within the maṇḍala.

Then all the Tathāgatas once more spoke thus in petition: "O Blessed One, please speak! For the benefit and happiness of sentient beings, the mudrās of the yoginīs and the noble signs and so forth —"

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra, having sharpened the sacred vajra, declared the hand-signs that would symbolize the deities:

The hands as moon and sun —
let the skilled one contemplate them so.
The seed of wisdom and skillful means the yogin should always arouse.

Then again, through the practice of gathering, let one contemplate vajra and lotus.

Then the Perfection of Wisdom is to be placed upon the tips of the fingers.

Having drawn these together through that very union,
one should join them to each other with certainty.
Through the bliss experienced from the union of vajra and lotus, accomplishment will come.

Bound by the Great Binding, marked with the seed-syllable of the goddess,
the mantra-knower consecrates again and again the royal mantra of the secret mantra.

Having held it, the two luminous forms — extend them and join their tips together.

This is called the essence.

The second is called the Renowned.

Having marked it with the essence, gradually let it be revolved around the heart.
Having joined the two vajras together equally, introduce the binding into that.

This is to be understood as the samaya-bond, and it accomplishes all samaya-bonds without remainder.

By this, the Goddess of Boundless Faces will without fail be accomplished in every direction.

That very same, applied in the manner of a pointing gesture, becomes supreme among those that perform all activities.
The joining of the two vajras with the lotus — the supreme teaching of this is wondrous.

Contracting the outer part of that,
it becomes the third.
Contemplate the essence at the heart-center;
it is to be called "that which delights the heart."

Both vajras joined just so — oneself becomes the embodiment of the samaya.
That very one, clearly the source of all,
will perform the great activity.

That very same, applied at the topknot with magnificence, becomes the great seal of mahāmudrā.

That very same, in the form of a lotus, placed at the heart — the supreme essence.
Likewise, joining the two vajras evenly —
the embodiment of samaya becomes pure.

At the heart, applying the all-gathered joining — the supreme face of one who is fully blossomed.
All acts of making oneself splendid — by this, the performance of activity is accomplished.

That very same, applied at the mouth, fully accomplishes the great seal.

That very same, with its luminous tip pointed downward, is placed at the heart.
This accomplishes the Dharma of the essence of the essence, which is immutable.

Revolving that same at the heart,
take it as the maṇḍala of the heart.
This is the great siddhi of the samaya-bond;

it is to be trained in by the great self.

By delighting the karma-vajra, all activities are perfectly accomplished — descending, revolving,
and likewise the great dance.

Likewise, having joined the palms, placing them at the heart is said to be the essence.
Having revolved it at the crown,
it is the great self called "samaya."

Pointed upward, it becomes karmic activity;
it perfectly accomplishes all offerings without exception.

Taking the essence and so forth as held below, examine thoroughly the Dharma and so forth.
That very same, extended and placed at the heart, is excellently spoken of as "the essence."
The revolving is called "samaya," and likewise all activities are just so.

From that, the two vajra-palms — raised upward, in accordance with the essence and the rest, as with all the goddesses described before — the mantras are to be known by the mantra-knower.

Having made them two, taking the non-right one, grasp the throat of the one to be accomplished, face inward and establish it there.
This is the most supreme essence of form.

That very same, placed facing the mouth —
it is the essence of sound, stealing away the mind.

That very same, contracted slightly, placed at the mouth in the manner of a tongue.
With the application of the experience of taste,
that very one also has four aspects;
the mantra-practitioner should know them —
these are the activities of stealing away taste.

Having made that two,
by the right or the left, applied well at the heart — the practitioner's own self —
the mudrā of touch is most wondrous.

By this, Dharma and samaya-bond and activity are supremely born.
One who knows the rite applies the yoga;
it is supreme for bringing down through touch.

Likewise, making the application distinct:
the left is to be placed at the waist,
the right is to be grasped facing the mouth, in the manner of a wrathful one, just so.
This is called "that which has laughter" —
the mudrā that is supremely wondrous.

That, or loosened, as before,
is well placed at the waist.
Rising from that, once more, toward the mouth —
the skilled one should move it gently.
Those two are fully joined at the heart.
With a drawing motion, one gathers and releases.
As long as it touches the crown, all things such as Dharma and the rest come to be.
By one who knows the mantras such as the essence-mantra and the rest, if this mudrā is sealed,
all siddhis will be attained —
this is in accord with the word of Vajrasattva.

The palms are well and evenly joined.
Upon the left, likewise, the other is placed.
These are to be raised at the heart.
That is the mutual wisdom.
It is to be applied by the great mantra-holder.
The other, through application, is deployed in its various forms.
This is said to be supreme among the Dharmas that carry beings across to the far shore of Dharma.

Likewise, the palms are evenly joined,
placed to the left at the heart.

Together with the radiant vajra-face, assembled and then joined,
the right is let to hang downward.
Likewise, what is shown above bestows the supreme.

The flower-fist is properly joined.
The two vajras are placed in the center.
The two patience-fingers are applied there.
The giving-fingers are drawn back outward.
That is well placed above.
This bestows the fruit of the wish-granting king of all the buddhas.
That is to be performed distinctly through application.

The left is fully placed at the heart.
The right, through an application of joyous energy, circles and circles around,
and is then placed to the right.
The vajra-palms are extended,
and the radiant one is placed upon the vajra.
Through the application that summons from without,
the face is placed upon that.
This mudrā is the great mudrā —
the virtue of the perfection of diligence.

Likewise, the hands are joined above,
and it becomes the supreme precious spoke-holder.
By that very same remaining activity, likewise, one day is to be contemplated.
Through that application of binding, it is to be done by the principal mantra-knower, the mantra-holder.

The vajra-palms are evenly joined.
Through the wrathful vajra application,
it is held by the intelligent one at the heart.
In the form of a hook it gazes, and draws in embodied beings.
From that, the tips of the fingers are slightly crossed and extended.
The vajra-tusks are raised upward,

the mouths joined — a release most wondrous.
If one seals with these mudrās,
all activities will be accomplished.

From that, the palms are joined — the glorious vajra, just so.
Thus, the hook that draws — its outer face is the lasso.
The stacked-palm mudrā becomes here certainly the skull itself.
This is the second itself,
and it accomplishes the supreme of all activities.

Likewise, having bound with a good binding,
the giving-finger is to be extended.
Having made the right on top,
it is bound as though slaying.
This is the vajra short-spear, which grinds all rākṣasas to dust.

Here, likewise, the skull,
the lasso, the hook,
the stacked-palm, and the dagger —
these are performed by means of the vajra-palm rite.

The vajra-palms are performed individually.
The right hand on top
is held arranged like a jewel.
All the fingers are to be deployed with energy.
The left likewise is deployed with energy.
These are to be known as the sun and moon.

The palms are raised: wisdom and the tip of the karma-vajra are joined.
Here this accomplishes the supreme of all the many various activities.

Likewise, the hook, the lasso, and the skull are the vajra itself.
From that, in the center of the skull-mudrā of the joined palms, there is an aperture —

it is well explained as "she who possesses light."
This is the wondrous vajra.

The lasso and the hook likewise — the intelligent master should know them.

All the dhāraṇīs
and the mudrās previously taught — the vajra-skull too should be known.
One within the other, mutually —

all are proclaimed as dhāraṇī mudrās throughout the maṇḍala.

Just as these are to be joined together, the four maṇḍalas are to be established perpetually
by the vajra master,
in accordance with the command of Vajrapāṇi.

This is taught as the yoga of the Blessed One — Samantabhadra, great sovereign self, supreme among all sentient beings, supreme in karma, great lord, chief and sovereign among buddhas.

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra entered into meditative absorption called Noble Avalokiteśvara-Sovereign-Wisdom-Vajra, and surveying all of them again and again, beholding all sentient beings to be of weak diligence and feeble confidence, he addressed them with this command: Let the mātrkāś of the sense faculties speak, each proclaiming their various accomplishments.

Then, when those had been fully satisfied, they made this petition to the Vajra-Holder:

In the center of the solar maṇḍala,
one should meditate on the vajra maṇḍala.

Upon that, the great vajra — the foremost of vajras, first and supreme — shining like the gold of the sun:
one who knows the secret mantras should meditate on that.

Radiating forth from one's own body,
one should contemplate it in one's own form.
Then the lord of mantras will be accomplished —

the great sovereign of the very reality of mantra, vast, pervading all,
another who resembles Vajrasattva.

Meditating on the second reality:
the maṇḍala arisen from the lotus, clothed in red raiment, of great splendor, blazing, like fire itself —
one should radiate it forth from oneself into all directions;
it becomes like the Sovereign of the World (Lokeśvara).
The maṇḍala of great dominion is to be established.

Within the maṇḍala, the greatly auspicious one — the goddess of the first, endowed with warmth — pervades one's own body with certainty.
Gathered in, she becomes a sovereign identical to oneself, appearing as the radiance of a wish-fulfilling jewel.

Entering the center of the wind maṇḍala, the goddess who is the unobstructed gate for beings — throughout one's own body and all embodied beings, green and yellow-green —
by the supreme one who accomplishes all activities, the Vajra-Holder becomes glorious.
Perfectly united with the four mothers,
she abides as the supreme wisdom and gnosis.

As the supreme of all maṇḍalas, the wise one should meditate on her.
The glorious sovereign of all becomes the great lord Samantabhadra.
Through the joining of the meditation maṇḍala, everything itself is to be accomplished.
Correctly combining the Dharma syllables,
one becomes the sovereign lord even of the asuras.

Thus declared the Blessed One Samantabhadra.

This completes the maṇḍala of the supreme wisdom of the mudrā of the Mother of All Tathāgatas, from the Great King of Tantras, the Ornamental Array of the Secret.

Then all the Tathāgatas, together with the retinues of the fathers of all the Tathāgatas, assembled once more, and addressed this petition, this king of melodious songs, to the Great Blessed One Samantabhadra:

O vast wisdom that pervades all,
you who journey greatly through the sky like the wind — O good wisdom of the Father's mudrā, supreme and holy one, please teach us.

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra entered into meditative absorption called Supreme King of All Tathāgatas, Vajra-Glorious, and from the expansive vajra body, speech, and mind of this very wisdom-mudrā and maṇḍala of great wisdom, he drew forth with certainty:

In the center, one should contemplate
a great sun, joined with the syllable HŪṂ.
At the tips of all the fingers,
one should place the father of the five seeds.
Within all the joints, everywhere,
one should visualize all syllables.
Upon the pure solar maṇḍalas,
one should visualize all that is good.

The great wheel in the manner of a mudrā should be visualized in the left hand.
In its center, the great wisdom — and likewise the others are to be placed.
Then the reality of what radiates forth should be joined with this secret mantra:

Oṃ prajñopāyasamayoge hūṃ a.

Then, having joined them to one another —

The vajra rests most excellently in the joined palms.
Having made the vajra-clasp,
one should visualize it as the vajra-clasp.
Then the great wisdom finger is raised up,
and its tip is bent slightly inward.
This becomes the essence of the Sovereign of Desire.
When placed at the heart, the essence is accomplished.
Through the practice of binding that very thing,

it becomes supreme among all actions.
That same one, clasped at the heart, is renowned as the great mudrā (mahāmudrā).
By it, in brief, all activities and all deeds whatsoever are perfectly accomplished.

Likewise, one should bind them well.
The two perfections of generosity are curled inward at the outer back.
This is the heart-delight of the Sovereign of Ḍākinīs.
The wisdom fingers are applied in the same manner.
This is renowned as samaya.
The remaining ones are to be spread out.
This is known as the great station of activity.
The wisdom fingers, in a contracted manner —
this is the joyful Sovereign of Fragrance.
The two faces of patience and diligence are extended in the manner of leaves.
This is said to bestow the accomplishment of samaya.
The tip opened out from this is said to perform all activities and to fulfill every wish.
That very tip applied at the heart — this is the supreme mudrā of the great self.
In the manner of the supreme king among kings,
through this, accomplishment will come swiftly.

The wisdom head bound by the vajra-clasp,
the supreme essence of the sacred bell,
the faces of patience and diligence joined together —
this abides in the sameness of samaya.
The face is to be bent slightly inward.
This becomes supreme among the performers of action.
The face fully extended,
with a single wisdom tip above — this should be known as the great one,
the supreme that exercises all sovereignty,
the supreme of supremes in performing the manifold.

Through this, accomplishment will come swiftly.

The wisdom is raised from its own clasped position, endowed with the quality of vajra-hardness.

The face opened — a jewel.

This is the supreme one endowed with samaya.

Those two are set out in the same manner.

The pure and virtuous perfections of generosity — fully extended — of the four-fold bodhisattva, are said to perform all activities.

Likewise, the perfection of moral discipline —
this is the great and sacred one.

From the clasp, patience and diligence are fully extended and praised, bound like the moon of the essence.

This is the samaya that radiates rays of light.

The joining of their faces to one another — this is the sacred performer of activity.

The remaining ones made into fists:
this is accomplished as the great mudrā.

The vajra-clasp, well bound,
should be applied at the tip.

Wisdom alone is to be placed at the tip;
the rest are likewise.

The remaining ones, clasped, are to be inserted.
This is the supreme performer of the essence-Dharma.

The vajra is extended by the vajra-holder.

Having extended the right generosity-finger,
it is drawn in toward the base of the ear.

This should be known as the performer of action,
the accomplisher of buddha-awakening.

Having extended the vajra-clasp,
at the heart it is made in the manner of a wheel.

The tip of the right one is made into a hook.

The generosity finger proceeds to the perfection of generosity.

Likewise the binding is well clasped.
Both alike are hooks.
Then, having inserted the lower ones thus,
what is placed at the heart follows from the action.
That very application as a hook perfectly accomplishes the drawing-in of all.

Likewise, having contracted the generosity-finger and extended it again and again — this is said to be the turning at the heart.
That very one displayed below is renowned as the one possessed of samaya.
It is explained as the vajra-Dharma,
the supreme one that causes movement in the mouth.
This is called satisfaction from activity,
the sacred giver that performs all actions.

Released from the binding of the hands,
the treasury of wisdom is thoroughly examined.
This is the samaya of great beauty.
Therefore it is performed as Dharma in that very way.

When thoroughly pressed by the right hand,
it should be held unseen — thereby, for the action,
the face adorned with precious lotus,
placed at the heart, becomes the essence.

Having bound it and formed it as armor,
the turning is said to be the samaya.
The embrace is renowned as "possessed of Dharma."
The pressing is described as the performer of action.

From the binding, the sun is fully spread out.
The turning is the supreme samaya.
The last of the hand, the great Dharma, is the all-gathering one that performs all actions.

From the binding, the generosity-finger should be raised.
The three points — that is the beautiful abode.
Having turned upon that very thing,
the spreading accomplishes the Dharma.

Joining it to the vajra-flute accomplishes the supreme empowerment.
The spreading upon that very one is the supreme of all action-performers.

Well-grasped at the heart, it is the essence.
Placed with the thumb as the treasury — the supreme samaya.
Placed at the mouth is called "knowing the Dharma," thoroughly accomplishing all actions.

This was spoken by the Blessed One, the Vajra-bearer, the fulfiller of all hopes.
The bound vajra, properly fastened, should be made into the supreme lotus form.

The one who bestows should be like the eye.
Placed at the heart, all supreme [accomplishments] are achieved.
That very placing of the eye is the action.
Through the smile, this Dharma is the sacred Dharma.

It is the samaya's secret eye, supremely abiding in the lotus treasury.
The palms joined properly together are the essence, most wondrous.

The mouth opened ever so slightly is the supreme of the supreme samayas.
Opened brilliantly at the heart,
it thoroughly accomplishes all actions without exception.

The lotus within the vajra — that Dharma is utterly wondrous.
By means of these, swift accomplishment comes,
for the mantrin is urged on by mantra.

Likewise, well bound with the binding,
it should be made into a wheel at the heart itself.
It becomes itself the third wheel.
With spokes well adorned, regard it as Dharma.
The turning is the karma-vajra.

If these are applied just as they are,
the supreme of the accomplished ones will be accomplished.

The bound vajra, well raised, should be made into shoots of wisdom.

Generosity, made like a jewel, is properly applied to the seat of the bodhisattva.
This is the thorough accomplishing of all the actions of all buddhas.

At the heart, the Dharma-samaya and the essence-vidyā-mantra are well joined.
Likewise, both wisdoms are raised up, and the disturbance below is likewise done.

The little finger of excellence, joined at the mouth — everything above should be made to bear the vajra.
Through the joining of the four stations,
the four mudrās are thoroughly accomplished.

At the crown it is described as action.
At the heart the essence is to be examined.
The turning is the samaya.
Urging everything with speech is the Dharma.
So spoke the Blessed One, the Vajra-bearer.

Bound, the wisdoms are raised up.
The luminous ones are joined at the root.
This is to be known first:
from everything, everything proceeds.

From the binding, likewise one wisdom, its tip a fang, fierce, mind-stealing.
Joined in just this way,
it thoroughly accomplishes all actions.

The secret binding, well bound,
is likewise within the vajra.
Applied at the heart by the yogin, whatever excellent names of action there are —

The vajra, fully extended, should be held at the throat.
The complete turning should be fully performed.
By this, all actions

will be done — protection and the rest — noble status.

For the remainder, yoga according to the ritual, that very yoga should be fully applied.

Mudrās, signs, and persons should be applied to all the deities.

This was spoken by the Blessed One of Great Yoga, the glorious Vajrasattva, lord and bodhisattva.

Then, having been well satisfied by these,
they bowed in homage, joined their palms, and made this petition — supreme vajra-request — to the hero, the Vajra-bearer:

"Among those buddhas who have abandoned all conceptual elaboration, among the self-arisen ones, father and mother, unsurpassed —

"Why are these tantras to be examined?

How do buddhas excellently arise out of cyclic existence?

How is liberation perfectly accomplished through relying on the way of the town?

Where is the yogin liberated?

Where does death supremely dwell?

By what is the yogin perfectly accomplished?

From what is one called a yogin?

How is a secret mantra a secret mantra?

What is the essence called 'essence'?

Why does a mudrā become a mudrā?

How is a knowledge mantra a knowledge mantra?

How do yogins perform

the invocation and the entry of the gods?

The binding of the liberated ones, and likewise pleasing and arousing — how does non-duality come about,

and embracing and kissing,

and seeing with subsequent attachment, and by however many purposes of the hand —

how are mudrās accomplished?
How are dance, song, and loud laughter,
grace, and speech to be understood?
Form, sound, and likewise scent become principally taste and touch.
What are the finest flowers, incense, and perfume?
What is the finest brilliant lamp?
How are all offerings accomplished?
How does accomplishment come through offering?"

With these petitions the Victors made request to the vajra-bearing one with the garland.

Then the Blessed One, the Great Samantabhadra, entered into the meditative absorption called "vajra that thoroughly examines and enjoys all petitions," and drew forth these extensive petitions of all the Tathāgatas:

Wisdom is well spoken of as the mother, and the father is the one skilled in skillful means.
Through relying on this alone, liberation is perfectly accomplished from the town.
Both, being joined with habitual tendencies, are in truth invocations —
they are spoken of as "liberated" and "not liberated."
That is declared to be the yogin.

Secret mantras are what are pleasing to the mind, and the same holds for the essence.
When they are properly placed in the mind,
the wise one is accomplished through secret mantras.

Liberation is the ocean of Dharma.
Through this mudrā, on which the gods have been sealed, accomplishment arises —
the unsurpassed bliss of attainment.

Knowledge mantras are nothing other than gnosis;
knowledge mantras are spoken of as the perfection.
One who knows that becomes accomplished, and upon accomplishment, bliss in its three aspects.

As for wisdom, wisdom
is entry and invocation in the same way.
Knowing how to send the entreaty for departure is what makes the binding firm.

Pleasing is thorough satisfaction, and arousing is declared to be the dispersal.
Thought becoming singular is analyzed as non-duality.
The single taste, that suchness itself, is declared to be the god of the worldly.

Kissing is the vajra yoga,
and it is spoken of as vajra gnosis.
Through the equal union of the knowing and the not-knowing,
it is spoken of as vajra gnosis.
Through the equal union of the knowing and the not-knowing,
kissing is definitively declared.

Remaining is declared to be the sign,
and the sign is said to be the body.
Its embrace is to be understood as touch.
Attachment is the mudrā of seeing.

The rays of light from the hands are the goddesses, proceeding together as vajra and lotus.
From this mudrā comes the mudrā — through the application of the sport of the hands.

Dance, song, and the rest
please all the gods.
When the buddhas are honored by these,
they bestow all attainments.

Thus did the Blessed One Samantabhadra declare.

The chapter on the maṇḍala king called "The Display of the Secret Ornament," from the Great Tantra of the Display of the Secret Ornament, is fully complete.

Then the mothers of all the Tathāgatas made request to the Blessed One, the Great Samantabhadra, concerning the offerings of all the Tathāgatas and the responses to those offerings, the mudrās and the responses to those mudrās, the dances and the responses to those dances, songs and responses to songs, music and responses to music, gestures and responses to gestures, dispersals and summonings and their responses, signs and responses to signs, drawings and responses to drawings, gazes and responses to gazes, pledges (samaya) and responses to pledges, maṇḍalas and responses to maṇḍalas, secrets and responses to secrets, great secrets and responses to great secrets, suchness and responses to suchness, and so forth — concerning all of these, supplication was made by this king of songs:

A buddha acts for the benefit of all sentient beings, accomplishing through wisdom the aim of all.
All-pervading, acting for the sake of beings — to the one beyond duality and non-duality, I bow and offer praise.
Please speak on all of these,
so that, rejoicing to benefit the practitioner, the practitioner who delights in actual attainments —
by what means are those attainments accomplished?

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra entered into meditative absorption in the samādhi called "The Gaze that Surveys the Primordial Wisdom of Omniscience," and declared the following:

Flowers, incense, fragrant perfume, fine garments, ornaments, food, drink, taste, and bright lamps, and pleasing beds, thrones, and seats —
by these all buddhas are honored, and the mind is caused to abide in bliss.
This should be performed especially by the vajra master and the practitioner.

Laughter, playful grace, and likewise song, music and dance with great delight — these are the responses to offering, and by them the buddha-mudrās (Skt. mudrā) are accomplished.

Form, sound, and likewise scent, taste and touch that are pleasing — these are accomplished as responses to offering.
The buddhas, awakening, and great bliss:

A mudrā is in the form of a person.
The response to the mudrā is one's own form.

The second is the great seal, whose response to the mudrā possesses excellent action.
Know the mudrā as one's own sovereign.
The response to that mudrā is the practitioner.
However many thousands of distinctions there may be,
examine them as the basis of distinctions.

Dance through the application of dance — the response to dance is the dancing woman.
However many thousands of distinctions there may be,
examine them under four categories of distinction.

Relying on Samantabhadra, follow the stream of whatever actions arise.
Correctly apply yourself to the application of action, following the stream of whatever is wholesome.

By moving correctly above and below, the dance and the circling dance at the top — examine these through the application of conceptual investigation.
Through such investigation, they are thoroughly proclaimed.

Whatever instrument is played and employed, let it be unloosed by one who is of the nature of the one who strikes.
The response to the music that arises from that is said to be music itself, through the tinkling of bells.

Apply the ritual procedure of the syllables of mantra.
For as long as the supreme action remains within its domain,
then, emerging through the application,
one should go to Samantabhadra.

By proclaiming, one says "It is accomplished" — this arises excellently from the three leaders.
Know the melodic tones as sixfold.
This is established as the mudrā of song.

Then, emerging through the application, for as long as it reaches the head and the heart:
through the connection of the throat and nose,
and through the movement of the neck itself,

by transformation one transforms.
The sequential ritual of giving the response,
the taking up of all phenomena, and the repelling of the hosts of spirits — from expression arises, again here, the conceptual thought of mind.

For as long as the action follows and applies, follow after the buddhas.
By straightening and composing body and mind, repel all that is harmful.

The full sequence of hands and feet is the response to expression.
Know that dispersal is summoning:
sending forth is the response to dispersal.
Know dispersal as supremely important — it utterly subdues the abodes of obstructors.
The response to dispersal is complete repulsion;
know how to place the threatening foot.

A sign is for the purpose of recollection, through mutual and complete communication.
The applications of accomplishment and non-accomplishment — the master, disciples, and all the rest accomplish it. The response to a sign — the goddesses give incitement and individual incitement.

Questioning means speaking and inquiring; the response to inquiry is inquiring upon sight. Beholding a beautiful form is gazing — it is the domain of the deity's wisdom. The response to gazing is, from that, returning it: one joins with the supreme joining.

The gazing of the gods and goddesses, looking left and right, is gazing — and by as many joinings of gazing as there are, that is the response which accomplishes.

The samaya of all buddhas is regarded as the very seal of command. One must know that the accomplisher who holds what is heard is the response.

The maṇḍala is explained as the body: it is consecrated by the five wisdoms.
The response to the maṇḍala is the goddesses' sacred bond that makes all one.

The secret is explained as something hidden; the response to the secret is that which is well hidden. The perception of the great secret mind is conceptuality of bliss. The discernment of the goddesses and the bliss of the gods — great bliss — is what all buddhas and their offspring declare as the response to the great secret.

Thus did the Blessed One Samantabhadra declare.

Then they all gathered together once more, and again implored the Blessed One with these excellent words:

O Vajrasattva, supreme and utterly blissful, supreme wisdom, supremely liberated — please speak the great secret of the wisdom of worship that accomplishes excellently.

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra again entered into the meditative absorption called the Great Secret, the Great Secrecy of Worship, and spoke these words:

HŪṢ HŪṢ HŪṢ HŪṢ HŪṢ HŪṢ HŪṢ HŪṢ HŪṢ. GA GA RI GA GA RI GA GA GA
GA RI GA RI. RA RA RA. GA RI GA GA. TE TE TE TE. HE TE TE TE TE TE. NA TE TE TE ṆĀ TE TE. NA TE TE JĀ TE TTA. JĀ TE TATTA. JA TE. RI TI RĀ. TE TA TE JĀ TE TĪ RI RA TE. TA RI TA RI. TE TA RI HŪṢ. RI RI HŪṢ. TE JĀ TE TE HŪṢ.

Thus did the Blessed One Samantabhadra declare.

Supreme sovereign of all buddhas, Vajrasattva, lord of all — the mudrā of song shines forth in utter brilliance.

Then the great yogi who embodies compassion, with the mudrā of music, spoke:

Gods and goddesses, sovereign lords — whoever would swiftly become equal to them:

OM HŪṢ BHYO GHEṬA HŪṢ. OM HŪṢ BHYO GHEṬA HŪṢ. GHEṬA HŪṢ. GHEṬA
HŪṢ. RU LU RU LU. GHEṬU GHEṬUṢ. GHEṬU GHEṬUṢ. GHEṬA GHEṬA. HŪṢ ṬA
NĀ ḌA YO. HŪṢ ṬA NA ḌA YO. HŪṢ ṬA NĀ ḌA YO. ṬA RA ṆĀṢ. ṬA RA ṆĀṢ. ṬĀ ṆA ṬĀ ṆA ṬĀṢ ṬA. ṬĀṢ ṬA. ṬĀ ṆA ṬA ṆA ṬAṢ ṬĀ. ṬĀ ṬĀṢ. ṆIṬṬHAṢ ṆAṬṬHA.
ṆIṬĀṢ. OM DUḤ DUḤ DUḤ DUḤ. OM DUḤ DUḤ DŪḤ DŪḤ DŪḤ DŪḤ DUḤ
DUḤ DUḤ DUḤ ṬAṢ ṬAṢ. ḌA DHĀṢ DHĀṢ. DHA DHA DHA DHĀṢ. DHA DHA

DHA. JHA JHĀṂ. JHA JHĀṂ. JHI JHĀṂ. JHĀ JHĀ JYA JHĀ. JHI JHA. JHI. JHĀṂ JHĀṂ JHĀ. JHĪṂ JHĀṂ JHĀṂ JHĀṂ.

Drawing through the cavity of the nose, and with the palm of the hand and pure open space,
one is to be refreshed through the application of cymbals.
Certainly and swiftly one accomplishes completely.

Through the application of right and left,
and through the sequence of gazing in paired embrace — graceful and courageous, unpleasant, laughing, fierce and terrifying, compassionate, threatening, peaceful, and the rest —
by mastering well these essential qualities of feeling, one by whom this is done will become a yogi.

The great primary sovereign lord of dance — whose beauty is the moon and others as its essence — the maṇḍala of meats and other consumables, anointing with sandalwood and the like,
beautiful garlands of flowers and the like,
and through the application of consecrated samaya from the classes of excellent women — all substances are to be accomplished.
With the syllable PHAṬ together with HŪṂ —

Thus did the Blessed One Samantabhadra declare.

Abiding within all that is endowed with application —

From the dance application of the right hand, through the vajra-binding application, it is likewise to be raised at the heart.

Again, the second one itself — whatever is wisdom is to be made into a vajra.

The iron hook of the star is likewise here.

Here, with allure, one pursues with desire.

From that, the vajra application is applied,
and it is to be released again and again.

By this, all activities whatsoever will be accomplished — of this there is no doubt.

That very one, a fist at the heart,

the vajra face with the mouth of the star placed in its own position — this is the second empowerment.

That very one displayed with great allure, moved through again and again completely, that very one in the form of rays of light —
it is to be radiated everywhere.

That very one, when shown at the mouth,
the vajra is explained, explained fully.

Through all of these, all aims whatsoever are to be accomplished by the skilled.

That very one with the lotus application and the eye application is the second.

The star of wisdom, then raised, placed at the navel, bearing a wheel — the vajra speaker at the tip of the tongue steals all tastes without exception.

Through these, all activities whatsoever are to be perfected by the light of the lotus.

Likewise, the fist is well applied, and by wisdom, pressed at the heart.

From that, the second, greatly varied —
it is to be turned around and around at the heart.

The supreme form of the star-vajra, beautiful with patience and majesty at the teeth — that very one bound firmly is supreme for performing the activity of binding.
Through all of these, everything is accomplished.
The mudrā and the response to the mudrā,
through the application of right and left —
these are all the supreme activities, without remainder.

Thus did the Blessed One Samantabhadra declare.

Then the Blessed One of great variety,
the supreme holder of lotus, jewel, and vajra, made a request to the great Splendor of the maṇḍala adorned with secret ornament:

"For the sake of the buddha maṇḍala and the ultimate purpose of the Mātṛkās, having abandoned all conceptual elaboration,
by the supreme sacred secret of all buddhas adorned through all the maṇḍalas — beautified thus, we beseech the Blessed One to speak."

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra, to those who had made that request, declared the following:

"The first, and the second, and the sixth, the fifth, and likewise the tenth — these are to be condensed and then meditated upon.
From the vajra, the jewel, and the water-born lotus,
the holder of secret mantra is to place them at the five positions in their own maṇḍala in order.
White, yellow, deeply red, and born from lightning-like rays of blue —
the last becoming the first of all — the excellent rays of light are to be applied.
Abiding in the rite of vajra yoga,
one is to meditate and apply recitation.
This is the name of the maṇḍala —
the maṇḍala is the support of the Victors.
By relying on it, accomplishment is most swift:
upon the surface of the earth, achievement comes in no long time.

This was declared by the Blessed One Vajradhara, the all-applying, stainless sovereign —
the great king of all buddhas, who spoke this as the destroyer of birth and death."

Then all the Victors and the mothers and consorts of the application addressed Vajrasattva with excellent words:
"Excellent!" in regard to great bliss.

The master sovereign of all vajras was praised with the melody of the buddhas.

Through applying vajra song and so forth, the supreme sovereign endowed with all empowerments —

Glorious buddha, in the manner of the lord of buddhas, at the buddha ground the kings perfected their awakening as fully enlightened buddhas.

The definite sons of the buddhas are fully satisfied by all buddhas through application — well and completely satisfying those who give intelligence.

Glorious vajra, stainless vajra, wisdom vajra, illuminating the world brilliantly with the light of vajra — through the condensed vajra, endowed with application, excellence is drawn forth,
and the beautiful vajra that renders vajra-nature its very essence.

Glorious jewel, the source of jewels, cloud of jewels — gladdening with jewel the ones who are jewels, beautiful jewel —

With the beautiful and magnificent jewel-banner of victory, having overcome the poverty and wrongdoing of beings — glorious lotus, master of the supreme lotus, lotus-mind of splendor, supremely joyful through the lotus, born from the lotus, by the lotus-net decisively victorious over all lotuses, beautiful lotus that establishes beings in the lotus family —

Variously glorious, lord of all, knower of the manifold, lord of the manifold, unstained by the manifold mothers, the manifold one who excellently tames and establishes sentient beings — please grant supreme knowledge for whatever is wished and desired.

Thus ends that hymn.

Then they praised again with these words, for the sake of taming all sentient beings without exception:

We bow to you, the manner of a buddha.

We pay homage to you, the arising of a buddha.

We bow to you, the wisdom of a buddha.

We bow and pay homage to you, the splendor of a buddha.

We pay homage to you, the hero of a buddha.

Born from the mind of the wrathful vajra,

we bow to you who has overcome wrongdoing.
We bow and pay homage to you who dispels wrongdoing.
We bow to you, jewel in hand.
Possessed of splendor, jewel at the crown,
we pay homage to you who has overcome suffering.
We bow and pay homage to you in whom all is accomplished.
We pay homage to you, the purity of Dharma.
For the sake of realizing the pure lotus,
we pay homage to you who are attached through attachment, and bow in homage to you who are free from attachment.
We pay homage to you, the manifold vajra.
We bow to you, the manifold application.
We pay homage to you, the one possessed of manifold modes.
We bow and pay homage to you, the manifold bliss.

Whoever each day praises with this king of hymns in all that is endowed with Dharma shall attain the spiritual accomplishment of their aspiration.

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra entered into the meditative absorption called "Thoroughly Wielding the Dharma Wisdom and Primordial Wisdom of All Tathāgatas," and thereupon declared to the Vajra Lord King of All Tathāgatas these words:

Hold this well, great bodhisattva —
it is called "The Secret Ornament of All Tathāgatas."
The great bodhisattva rejoices.

Then the Blessed One, the Vajra Lord King of All Tathāgatas, addressed the Blessed One thus:

Whatever the great hero declares,
the self-arisen primordial wisdom gone to the other shore, glorious and sovereign over all phenomena, the destroyer of the wrongdoing of the three worlds —
just as it was declared, may it be well held in the heart, the stainless and excellent primordial wisdom.
Thus spoke Vajrasattva:
I myself have held the great bliss.

When the Blessed One, delighted, had so declared, all those who were well dwelling in the vajra — the assembly of the maṇḍala together with its retinue, the hosts of male and female buddhas and bodhisattvas — all of them came to recollect the secret mantra of Vajrasattva.

This concludes the great king of tantras called "The Ornament of the Secret of Body, Speech, and Mind of All Tathāgatas."

This was translated by the great Indian paṇḍita and grammarian, the one called Śrī Sugatapāla, together with the Tibetan translator learned in the traditions of grammar, Kun-dga' Rgyal-mtshan of pure intellect, at the sacred hermitage of glorious Sakya.

In order to completely tear asunder the net of arrogance — that staff of the mind, adorned with five arrows at its tip — this profound [teaching], like a sovereign king upon the ocean of tantric kings, was translated; whatever discrepancies there may be in it —

Translator's Notes

- The title as preserved gives a Sanskrit title followed by its Tibetan rendering. The Sanskrit title is reproduced as a transliteration in the text itself and has been preserved accordingly in the translation.

The term rendered "great lord" translates a compound meaning the great sovereign or master of vajra-wisdom, functioning as an epithet designating a principal tantric figure in the assembly, likely Vajradhara or the presiding deity of the maṇḍala.

"Abhoja" in the name of the third vajra mother is a transliteration of a Sanskrit term whose precise meaning in this context is uncertain. It may relate to the syllable "a" as a root of non-arising, a common tantric usage, but the reading here is left as a proper name following the text.

"Grammatical Mother" renders a term literally meaning "mother who bestows grammatical instruction," a somewhat unusual epithet in a tantric assembly list, likely indicating a figure associated with sacred language or mantra transmission.

- The term rendered "dalliance goddesses" translates a compound that in tantric context denotes goddesses of erotic-ritual play associated with the maṇḍala. The rendering "dalliance" is deliberately neutral for a general audience while preserving the sense.

The title "Vajra Lord of Ḍākinīs" renders a compound meaning one who has lordly power over ḍākinīs through the vajra; the exact delineation of some of the vajra lord names in this list is terse and context-dependent, but the renderings given reflect the most natural reading of each Tibetan compound.

- The phrase rendered "they will be of a disfigured appearance" translates a term suggesting physical transformation or distortion; the precise nuance could alternatively be "they will come to have a changed, altered form," but disfigurement fits the context of karmic consequence.

The list of animals — dogs, crows, cats, pigs, tigers, elephants, and roaring lions — describes the types of beings one will come to identify with or be reborn as; the grammar is slightly compressed in the Tibetan and the rendering here follows the most natural doctrinal reading.

- The passage is a ritual-manual description of maṇḍala construction and iconography from a tantric context, likely the Sarvabuddhasamāyoga or a related Yoginī-tantra cycle, consistent with the preceding passage's reference to the "mother of the secret maṇḍala." The iconographic details are highly technical and some epithets resist fully transparent rendering; the translation follows the most natural doctrinal and grammatical reading throughout.

The figure described as "the four-faced goddess, the virtue of the Perfection of Wisdom" is Prajñāpāramitā herself in her tantric four-faced, four-armed iconographic form.

The southern goddess described as "Varadā of the sky, the virtuous one" renders the Tibetan "mchog sbyin nam mkha' dge ma," which can be read as a name-compound or as descriptive epithets; the translation treats it as both a functional name and a descriptor. The western goddess "born from water" may allude to a lotus-born or a specifically aquatic manifestation standard to this cycle. The northern goddess described as "equal to blazing emerald" refers to a green or blue-green complexion standard in tantric iconography.

- The phrase rendered "the one rich in fragrance of flower and incense, the pure one who is the vajra-illuminator" identifies specific offering goddesses stationed at the intermediate-direction petals: these are standard maṇḍala offering deities associated with fragrance and light respectively. The list of five sense-offerings (form, sound, scent, taste, touch) is then assigned to the cardinal directions of the respective lords, following standard Vajrayāna maṇḍala iconographic convention.

The verse inviting the mothers is in a slightly irregular meter in the Tibetan; the translation preserves its general sense and register as a ritual invocation gāthā.

The phrase "the wisdom-bearing lady" refers to the initiated female consort or a female candidate for initiation who embodies the wisdom-mother principle; the precise ritual role in context is the introducing of a disciple to the maṇḍala through the flower-casting rite.

- The phrase rendered "I am Vajra the Elder" translates "bdag ni che ge mo rdo rje," where "che ge mo" is an honorific or title meaning something like "great elder" or "senior one." The exact identity or role implied here is somewhat contextually dependent; it may be a self-identification formula used by the empowerment candidate, adopting a ritual name or title.

The line "one excellent vase, or sixteen pure ones, or five, or ten" follows the enumeration in the Tibetan text listing different numbers of vases used in maṇḍala empowerment ceremonies; the doctrinal significance of each count belongs to the specific ritual tradition of this tantra.

The passage describing offering "mother, wife, daughter" and so forth to the guru is a standard tantric formula of total surrender and offering to the master; it is a ritual declaration of the disciple's complete dedication rather than a literal instruction.

- The passage is a section from a tantra related to the Guhyasamāja cycle. The phrase rendered "Vajra-Arising Samaya of the Mothers" translates a technical absorption name and its precise Sanskrit equivalent is not given in the text. The verse on cosmological visualization draws on the standard Abhidharma-style Mount Meru cosmology adapted to tantric maṇḍala practice; "eighty-four thousand yojanas" renders the Tibetan numeral literally. The term rendered "heart essence" in the siddhi verse refers to the tantric hṛdaya, a condensed essence-practice; it is listed alongside seal (mudrā), mantra, and awareness (vidyā). The line "placed hands made graceful with dance upon one's head" describes a gesture of reverence using choreographed hand movement, a standard tantric dismissal rite.

- The name Māmakī (Tib. ma mo bri / ma mo rnam) refers to the goddess Māmakī, the buddha-mother associated with Akṣobhya in the Vajrayāna maṇḍala system; the text oscillates between referring to a single principal figure and a plural "Māmakīs," which is reflected in the translation. The instruction "draw the Māmakī" (ma mo bri) may mean "paint" or "write" the figure, in keeping with maṇḍala-construction rites.

The phrase rendered "the supreme unchanging syllable" (yi ge mchog tu mi 'gyur ba) may refer to the seed syllable hūṃ or another primary mantra-syllable; the text does not specify, and this ambiguity is doctrinally significant in tantric context.

The Sanskrit mantras are rendered as they appear phonetically in the Tibetan; minor orthographic variants from standard Sanskrit are preserved rather than silently corrected, as these are liturgical forms.

- The phrase rendered "blood and seed of the goddess" refers to the red and white ritual substances associated with feminine and masculine tantric elements. The Tibetan reads literally "blood and seed of the goddess," and the doctrinal context is standard inner-tantric substance practice.

The "black direction" for consuming the black eye-ointment likely refers to the north or northwest in the maṇḍala directional system, associated with the activity of wrathful or dark rites; this is left implicit as the text does not specify further here.

The passage ends mid-sentence in the source text as supplied, and the translation preserves this accordingly.

- The term rendered "Viśvavajra" translates the Tibetan for "variegated vajra" (sna tshogs rdo rje), the cross-shaped double vajra, which is its standard tantric identification. This rendering is used consistently for both occurrences in the passage.

The phrase "the great precious one with eight parts" and the subsequent "great lotus with eight petals" refer to standard tantric visualization supports — an eight-faceted jewel and an eight-petaled lotus — associated with the ratna and padma families and their respective vidyādhara accomplishments.

The final verse describing drawing forth blood with an iron-hook form of the goddess is a tantric rite of subjugation (vaśīkaraṇa or ākarṣaṇa); the meaning is that the essence-mantra in hook form draws the vital energy of the target.

- The section on substances and ritual procedures is a dense, list-like tantric prescriptive passage with several obscure pharmacological and material terms. The identifications offered here follow standard Indo-Tibetan tantric pharmacopoeias: "ba bla mig sman" is rendered as "eyebright / mineral eye remedy"; "ldong ros" as "long pepper"; "dkar rtsi sol ba" as "white chalk in powder form"; "gu gum" as "saffron"; "rgya spos" as "bdellium"; "ru rta shu dag" as "costus and śuddha"; "ga pur" as "camphor"; "a ka ru" as "aloeswood." These identifications are generally conventional but individual terms sometimes vary across commentaries.

The phrase "gtum mo'i me tog khu ba" rendered as "the semen-fluid of the wrathful fire flower" is deliberately elliptical in the tantric register; it may refer to a ritual substance identified with the inner heat practice (caṇḍālī), and the rendering preserves the ambiguity.

"Li khri" is rendered tentatively as "vernica lacquer" (Chinese lacquer tree product); some witnesses read this as a type of dye or resin.

- The mantra passage is given in approximate Sanskrit phonetic transcription from Tibetan script and is standard in tantra commentarial literature; the rendering preserves it as a mantra string without normalization beyond what the Tibetan orthography permits.

The phrase rendered "the mother of the Treasure-Holder Buddha" translates nor 'dzin sangs rgyas yum las so, which could refer to a specific tantric deity's teaching-lineage attribution or simply mean "from the mother of the buddha Vasudhara." The exact referent is uncertain from context alone.

The final lines are syntactically incomplete as given, indicating this passage continues.

- The term rendered "bearing the hare-marked moon" refers to the lunar disk, identified in classical Indian cosmology by the image of a hare on the moon's surface.

The figure "priyaṅku" is a plant name (Skt. priyaṅgu, a type of millet or fragrant flowering plant) left in near-Sanskrit form as the Tibetan is a direct transliteration; it likely refers to flowers or blossoms used as an offering attribute of the deity described.

The phrase "one-eighth of the whole" for the center of the maṇḍala follows the standard maṇḍala measurement convention in which the central square occupies one-eighth of the total ground plan.

- The phrase rendered "without self-conceit" for མེད་པོ་མེད་པོ་མེད་པོ་ in the empowerment context is unusual. Grammatically མེད་པོ་མེད་པོ་ could mean either "without self" in the doctrinal sense (anātman) or simply "without pride or selfhood." In this ritual empowerment context it most likely means the recipient is freed from ego-identification and arrogance, rather than technically realizing anātman; this ambiguity is worth noting.

The final lines describing union with women of different social classes (princess, queen, brahmin daughter, commoner) as means of attaining accomplishment reflect the antinomian tantric register of the text. The passage ends mid-sentence; translation follows the Tibetan accordingly.

- The passage is a verse and prose section from a ritual tantric text, likely associated with a maṇḍala cycle concerning wrathful deity practice. The "mothers" (yum) who address the Teacher are tantric figures representing the prajñāpāramitā or consort deities of the Tathāgatas, consistent with standard Vajrayāna usage.

The figure of "Vajrasattva" as speaker is named through the compound "rdo rje sems dpa" — the bodhisattva Vajrasattva is the standard tantric preacher-figure in many such texts.

The phrase rendered "a full hundred thousand recitations alone" reflects the Tibetan "ji srid 'bum phrag kho na ste," literally "as long as it is just one hundred thousand" — specifying the prescribed number of recitations before the accomplishment is performed.

The closing iconographic description is fragmentary at the passage's end, breaking off mid-description of the red goddess holding sun and moon; this is clearly the beginning of a longer iconographic passage that continues beyond the excerpt.

- The passage is a prescriptive ritual text, likely from a Mahāyoga or early Vajrayāna tantra. The term "Mātṛkā" (Tib. ma mo) here refers to a class of fierce female deities associated with wrathful action rites, distinct from the more common usage of the term in grammar; I have retained "Mātṛkā" with "Terrible Mothers" as a contextual gloss on first substantive use, then alternated as the register shifts between invocation and instruction. The phrase rendered "the great sky-soarer" renders nam mkha' renga pa chen po, literally "the great stretcher of the sky," an epithet indicating a deity whose domain spans the entire sky; the rendering captures the sense without forcing an awkward literalism. The passage ends mid-sentence in the source, so the translation likewise ends mid-sentence.

- The passage describing the Avīci hell is compressed in the Tibetan; the syntactical subject shifts between the anonymous wrongdoer and the Blessed One's pronouncement. The reading adopted here takes the section as a general curse against those who misuse or disrespect the practice.

The phrase rendered "in the language of outcastes" reflects the Tibetan "kla klo'i skad," literally the speech of barbarians or outcaste peoples, a reference to the deliberate use of twilight or intentionally transgressive language common in tantric contexts, here applied to the conventional designation of mudrā signs.

The mantra "Om prajñopāya samāyoga" and "Om sarva-dharma-cakra samāye" are left in their Sanskritic forms as ritual formulae that would not be translated in the living tradition.

- The term rendered here as "māmakī goddesses" follows the tantra's usage of "māmā" or "māmakī" as a class of female tantric figures or wisdom consorts associated with Akṣobhya and the vajra family; in context they function as the interlocutors making requests to the presiding deity.

The phrase rendered "without names" in the karma mudrā section is literally "having made them nameless," likely referring to keeping the ring fingers or a specific finger-configuration unnamed or unmarked, a technical instruction whose precise referent belongs to the oral commentarial tradition.

The verse beginning the request for the maṇḍala of joy breaks off mid-sentence in the Tibetan, ending abruptly after "all sentient beings." This appears to be a deliberate textual ellipsis in the source, with the petition left syntactically incomplete before the Blessed One's response begins.

- The phrase rendered "the noble queen who has relinquished objects" translates "dngos po spangs pa'i btsun mo," which refers to a female figure who has abandoned substantialist fixation on objects; this carries a tantric sense of the consort who has transcended reification.

The term "ma mo" throughout refers to the spirit-mothers, a class of fierce female spirit beings associated with tantric rites; the Tibetan is left semantically transparent in this rendering.

The final verse is left incomplete as the source passage ends mid-sentence; this is not a translation gap but a feature of the input text.

- The passage contains several ritual-technical terms whose translation requires interpretive choices. The phrase rendered "the two earths" for sa gnyis in the verse likely refers to the earth goddess and the earth itself, or possibly to two classes of earth-deities; the precise referent is not entirely certain. The term "vighnas" is used for 'phrar ma, a class of obstacle-spirits, as a technical category alongside nāgas and yakṣas. The mudrā gesture described for attachment in the east as "the birthplace with hand" renders 'dod chags skye gnas lag, which is a compressed ritual gloss; the exact iconographic meaning of this gesture-description is a specialist matter left for commentary. The final sentence breaks off mid-construction in the source, as the passage ends at a conditional clause; no completion is supplied.

- The samaya instruction that begins "Slay every wicked being / Plunder the wealth of cowards" and continues through drinking blood is an antinomian list of transgressive samaya-points characteristic of certain Mahāyoga tantric contexts. These are not literal ethical injunctions in the conventional sense; they function as coded statements about the practitioner's relationship to obstacles, ordinary moral inhibition, and conceptual boundaries. The passage is rendered literally as it stands, consistent with scholarly translation practice for such material.

The term rendered "bhaṅgāra vessel" is a transliteration of the Tibetan rendering of Sanskrit bhaṅgāra, a royal water-vessel or pitcher used in empowerment rituals.

The phrase "the midnight sun of the spirits" is a compressed and somewhat cryptic image. The Tibetan reads literally "the sun of spirits, midnight," likely referring to a nocturnal spirit-substance used in the subsequent ritual procedure. Its precise referent is uncertain.

The final figure described as "the ill-formed one in the northern direction" is obscure; it may refer to a specific directional guardian deity whose identity is not made explicit in the passage alone.

- The passage "kill all sentient beings" and "seize the wealth of the fearful" represents the tantric antinomian or coded-conduct register common in certain Vajrayāna contexts. These instructions are understood in the commentarial tradition as either intentional language requiring initiation-based decoding, or as referring to inner yogic acts such as cutting through the mental grasping that perpetuates sentient existence, rather than literal instructions. This is a significant doctrinal point for listeners unfamiliar with tantric hermeneutics.

The phrase rendered "the one known as the truth-less" and "the truth-less direction" translates a directional deity whose name may indicate an iconographically specific figure; the identification is not entirely certain from this passage alone.

"Bde and the rest" renders a list apparently beginning with an abbreviated deity name; the full referent is unclear in context.

- The passage opens with an antinomian reversal that continues directly from the preceding section, where paradoxical transgressive instructions appear as esoteric samaya formulations. "Always speak lying words" and "go to the women of others" are among the deliberately inverted injunctions characteristic of certain Mahāyoga tantric samaya lists, where conventional prohibitions are ceremonially reversed to indicate transcendence of ordinary moral framing in specific ritual contexts; this is not an endorsement of ordinary misconduct but a formulaic antinomian list.

The phrase rendered "the great Vajra, the lord of vajras, the king" applies to Vajrapāṇi in his wrathful capacity as the guardian of tantric secrecy.

The syllable sequence "Vajra muḥ" is the standard tantric formula for dismissing a deity from the ritual space; muḥ is the standard ejection syllable in this tradition.

- The phrase rendered "Ushnīsha Vijaya, the Thoroughly Victorious One" (de bzhin gshegs pa thams cad kyi gtsug tor nam par rgyal ba nam par bsgyings pa) is a compound name for a specific samādhi; "nam par bsgyings pa" literally means something like "fully spread out" or "thoroughly arrayed," here rendered "Thoroughly Victorious One" contextually, though the precise nuance of bsgyings pa in this tantric technical context carries a sense of complete pervasion or display. This is a genuine doctrinal-terminological uncertainty worth flagging.

The phrase "fragrance-eaters" renders dri za, the Sanskrit Gandharva, a class of semi-divine beings known in Indian cosmology as subsisting on scent; the passage weaves a sustained siddhi-practice around fragrance and the Gandharvas without using the Sanskrit term explicitly.

- The passage is a technical tantric mudrā instruction text describing a sequence of hand-seal configurations, their placements (heart, crown, waist, mouth), their names (essence, samaya, karma-vajra, etc.), and their functions (accomplishing offerings, activities, touch-experience, and so forth). Several lines describe the "five sense-experience" mudrās (form, sound, taste, and touch are named; smell is likely to follow in the next section). The final line is incomplete as given and trails off mid-sequence.

The phrase rendered "Goddess of Boundless Faces" is a literal reading of lha mo mtha' yas zhal, referring to a multi-faced goddess whose identity is not further specified in this passage.

The term rendered "great seal of mahāmudrā" deliberately echoes both the ritual hand-seal (mudrā) and the mahāmudrā contemplative register, as is common in this genre of tantric literature; both senses are active simultaneously.

- The passage is a dense technical manual of tantric mudrā instructions, enumerating hand-gestures and their correspondences to ritual activities. Several finger-position descriptions use highly compressed terminology whose exact physical configurations cannot be determined from text alone without a living instructional tradition. The rendering follows the grammatical and doctrinal sense without inventing specifics. "Stacked-palm" renders རྒྱུ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་, a term for a specific palm-on-palm stacking mudrā; "giving-finger" and "patience-finger" follow the traditional system of finger names corresponding to the perfections. "She who possesses light" for རྒྱུ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་ is a kenning name for a specific mudrā form.

- The phrase rendered "the four mothers" reflects mātṛkā in a tantric sense, referring to female deity-principles presiding over the four maṇḍala-quadrants; listeners in the context of the surrounding material should understand this as such.

The colophon phrase "the Mother of All Tathāgatas" refers to the Prajñāpāramitā as the generative principle of all buddhas, a standard Mahāyāna designation.

The mantra "Om prajñopāyasamayoge hūṃ a" is transliterated from Tibetan phonetic rendering of Sanskrit; the form is consistent with other union-of-wisdom-and-means mantra formulas in this class of tantra.

- This passage is a dense technical mudrā manual describing specific hand gestures for tantric ritual practice. The terminology is highly specialized and the instructions are often deliberately cryptic, following the intentional obscurity of Vajrayāna instructional texts. The phrase rendered as "the wisdom finger" refers to the index finger in mudrā practice. "The Sovereign of Desire," "the Sovereign of Dākinīs," and "the Sovereign of Fragrance" are epithets referring to tantric deity categories associated with specific finger gestures; these have been rendered literally as they function as standard epithets in this context. The "four-fold bodhisattva" may refer to a grouping of four bodhisattva-mudrās; the exact referent is contextually dependent on the broader manual of which this is a part. Several passages involve finger positions whose precise physical description can only be fully clarified by a corresponding oral instruction or illustrated commentary.

- This passage belongs to a ritual-technical section of a Vajrayāna tantra describing mudrā (hand-gesture) practice in highly technical and allusive language. Many of the terms, such as "the face adorned with precious lotus," "the generosity-finger," "the vajra-flute," and "shoots of wisdom," are technical designations for specific finger positions, gestures, and their associated ritual functions. The passage ends mid-sentence with an incomplete petition, indicating it continues in the following section. The referents of several pronouns and elliptical phrases are ambiguous without an authoritative commentary; the translation preserves the ambiguity rather than over-determining the meaning.

- The phrase rendered "the way of the town" translates a term referring to ordinary worldly engagement or household life, used here in a tantric register to indicate the path of practice within conventional experience rather than renunciation. This is a recurring technical usage in the passage and is rendered consistently.

The "three aspects of bliss" in the line "bliss in its three aspects" likely refers to a tantric tripartite schema of bliss, but the text does not specify which schema is intended; the translation follows the plain sense.

The colophon marks the end of a distinct chapter, and the text continues without break into what appears to be a new section or chapter; this continuity is preserved in the translation.

- The passage is a highly technical tantric exposition mixing prose and verse, describing the correspondences between ritual actions and their "responses" in a liturgical-performative context. The term rendered "response" throughout is lan, meaning literally "answer" or "reply," functioning here as a technical term for the reciprocal or return action in each pair of ritual gestures, sounds, or offerings. The passage breaks off mid-sentence at the end, consistent with the source text being a continuous passage whose conclusion follows in the next section.

The verse phrase "gnyis dang gnyis med phyag 'tshal bstod" is rendered "to the one beyond duality and non-duality, I bow and offer praise," though it could also mean "I bow in praise of duality and non-duality" — the former reading is doctrinally more coherent in this context.

The phrase "三寶無量阿耨多羅三藐三菩提" rendered as "arises excellently from the three leaders" is technically uncertain; "leaders" or "guides" may refer to the three roots or three jewels, but the specific referent is not explicit in this passage.

- The passage contains extended mantra syllables rendered phonetically as they appear in the Tibetan; these are liturgical sound sequences rather than semantically translatable content, and their precise Sanskrit reconstruction varies across traditions. They are reproduced here in approximate romanized form consistent with their Tibetan orthography.

The phrase rendered "drawing through the cavity of the nose" refers to a specific yogic practice of breath or subtle-energy circulation through the nasal passage, likely connected to the preceding mudrā instructions.

The final line "Abiding within all that is endowed with application" is the opening of the next verse unit and is left as a lead-in consistent with the preceding passage's format.

- The passage is a tantric mudrā and ritual text describing the application of hand gestures, empowerments, and the arrangement of a maṇḍala. Several technical terms describing specific mudrā positions are opaque even in context. The expression rendered as "the star of wisdom" and "iron hook of the star" likely refers to specific mudrā forms in the underlying ritual tradition; the exact physical gestures cannot be fully recovered from the text alone. The final section transitions into a praise hymn in verse with a sequence of epithets built on vajra and jewel, which continue beyond this passage.
- The final lines are a colophon verse that breaks off mid-sentence in the source text as given; the translation renders what is present and leaves the incomplete sentence as it stands, since the remaining words were not supplied.

The phrase rendered "attached through attachment" in the lotus section reflects a deliberate paradox in the Tibetan: the honorand is simultaneously characterized by desire-attachment and freedom from it, a common tantric polarity where passion is taken as the path. This is a genuine doctrinal point worth noting rather than smoothing over.

The expression "manifold mothers" renders sna tshogs yum, referring to the wisdom-consorts or prajñā-forms in the tantric maṇḍala who represent insight; "unstained by" them indicates non-dual purity within the union.
