The Sādhana Called Blazing Jewel

རིན་ཆེན་འབར་བ་ཞེས་བྱ་བ་སྒྲུབ་ཐབས་ཤིག

The Sādhana Called Blazing Jewel, known in Sanskrit as the Ratnajvāla Sādhana and in Tibetan as Rinchen Barwa, is Toh 1251 in the Tengyur, where it belongs among the commentaries and ritual works on the tantras. It is a means of accomplishment, or sādhana, for the meditational deity Hevajra, opening with homage to the goddess Vajraḍākinī, and its author presents it as a guide of moderate length for practitioners daunted by works that are either too extensive or too condensed. Organized as a sequence of chapters on the stages of ritual activity, it describes the qualities of the qualified tantric master and leads the practitioner through the rites of Hevajra practice, including detailed instructions on the offerings made to the deities. It closes with verses insisting that conventional cause and effect be honored together with the realization of emptiness, and its colophon attributes it to the great Indian scholar Prajñendraruci, who translated it into Tibetan together with the monk Shākya Yeshé.

In the language of India: ratna jāla sādharna nāma. In the language of Tibet: The Sādhana Called Blazing Jewel.

Homage to glorious Vajraḍākinī.

Pervading all the places and objects that thought imagines, and gathering them in;
wisdom and method, the two; the four joys, the four drops;
through the emanation of the four bodies you act for the good of beings: to you I bow.
For myself and for others like me, daunted by what is too extensive or too condensed,
I compose the path of the stages of activity of Hevajra,
the sādhana called Blazing Jewel.

The yogin who is devoted in turn to the conduct of the śrāvakas, of awakening and of mantra, calm, profound and skilled in every science, who brings about bliss through the union of mantra and tantra,
and who knows the ten realities:
the wisdom of vajra and bell,

the deity, the maṇḍala, the fire offering,
the mantra, the colored powders, the torma,
and the empowerment,
in a charnel ground, on a riverbank, by a solitary tree, on a mountain, in a thicket, in a rock shelter and the like,
in a place adorned with flowers, fruit and so forth, having anointed it with the five nectars and with perfumes,
should perform the approach before the accomplishment.
Without it there will be no accomplishment.
Whatever ritual actions there may be,
they are accomplished through close approach.
On Hevajra and his retinue,
the essence of all, of entity and free of entity, meditate in four sessions, with offerings and torma.
Between sessions, recite a hundred thousand or ten thousand times, or until excellent signs are seen.
Then the accumulations increase, obstructors are pacified, and the aim is accomplished.

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, this was the first, the activity of approach.

In order to draw this supreme maṇḍala,
the wise one, in a village or a town,
on a mountain or in a delightful region,
in a flower garden or a solitary place, in the house of a child of the Victor, or on maṇḍala ground, should first examine the ground well.
Water flowing clockwise to the east and the north;
low-lying; white and so on; square and so on;
earth that, when dug out and put back, is left over;
dig a pit half a cubit deep and fill it with water,
then walk a hundred paces;
if on swift return it is just as before, the site is praised.
Ground with udumbara, nyagrodha, aśvattha and palāśa,
bakula and arjuna trees,
or shaped like a tortoise's back, is to be avoided.

Through union with one's own self as the deity, give torma.
Then the ground should be requested:
"In this place I, so-and-so,
shall raise the king of maṇḍalas, Hevajra.
Obstructors who dwell here,
go from here to somewhere else!"
Beginning with the winter months and so on,
for three months at a time the head of the mahoraga looks to the south, the west and the east, and it lies on its left side.
To the depth of knee, navel or waist,
in keeping with the accomplishment, dig at its belly.
Throw out husks, gravel, stones, sticks, charcoal and the like.
Place jewels, grains and medicines inside.
Then pound it very firm.
If one cannot do this,
imagine it as the sky, press it with the hand, and recite this mantra:
oṃ hana hana krodha hūṃ phaṭ oṃ bhukhaṃ hūṃ
This blesses the earth as the sky.
With offerings and torma,
meditate in due order and examine the signs.
If they are inauspicious, abandon the site, or else perform a wrathful fire offering, or a peaceful one.
Then, with the wheel of protection,
cut down obstructors and enemies and give protection.
A vajra fence, canopy and tent are to be clearly visualized arising from hūṃ.
Within them, a blazing yellow wheel with ten spokes is to be visualized from bhūṃ.
There, through the application of ten hūṃ syllables, place the ten wrathful ones in order:
Yamāntaka, Prajñāntaka, Padmāntaka, Vighnāntaka,
the wrathful Ṭakki, and likewise Daṇḍa, Mahābala, Acala the protector, Uṣṇīṣa of the white umbrella,

and the Vajra who dwells beneath the feet.
The vajra wrathful ones, great beings,
all have one face and two arms;
the left hand at the heart is a fist with the index finger raised,
and the right holds each one's own weapon.
The slayer of Yama has a club;
Aparājita, a vajra staff;
for Hayagrīva, red, the supreme power;
indestructible Amṛta has the joined palms.
Ṭakkirāja has a hook;
the one with the blue staff has what his name says;
the king of strength has a trident;
Acala the protector, a vajra.
Visualize the wheel of Dharma of the king with the white parasol.
The one beneath the feet has a pestle vajra.
They stand with the left leg extended.
Like the color of blue sapphire,
the Antaka is to be visualized.
Aparājita
is terrifying, like a moonstone.
The wrathful one of the lotus is a deep red;
Vajrāmṛta is black by nature.
The wrathful ones of the intermediate directions are very black,
and bear Vajradhara on the crown of the head.
Yama is sealed by Vairocana himself;
the one with the staff by Vajrasattva;
the lotus wrathful ones by the Seer;
the one with joined palms by Vajrasattva.
In the center of the vajra maṇḍala
one should visualize a vajra sun.
Imagining a lotus seat beneath, visualize the ten wrathful ones.
The wheel of protection, of great splendor, blazing like the fire at the end of an eon, spinning yet utterly unmoving, measures a full hundred leagues.

oṃ rakṣa rakṣa hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, this was the second, the activity of the ritual for the ground.

In the center of the ground of the wheel, the intelligent one,
beginning with the excellent preliminaries,
and applying himself to supreme praises,
should supplicate the buddhas:
"Protectors who dwell in all the ten directions without exception,
please consider me.
I, the great Vajradhara, so-and-so,

shall draw this supreme maṇḍala of Hevajra.
In order that I may accomplish what I am to accomplish, may you who possess great power bless the maṇḍala."
To the hero who holds vajra and bell,
the disciples, or an emanated retinue, should make this supplication:
"Peace of all the tathāgatas,
abode of all the tathāgatas, supreme selflessness of all phenomena,
please explain the sacred maṇḍala.
Perfectly complete in every characteristic,
having entirely abandoned all that is not a mark, Samantabhadra, supreme of body,
please explain the sacred maṇḍala.
Arisen from the peaceful supreme Dharma,
you who carry out the conduct of wisdom, Samantabhadra, supreme of speech,
please explain the sacred maṇḍala.
Great mind of all sentient beings,
pure by nature and free of stain, Samantabhadra, supreme of mind,
please explain the sacred maṇḍala."
Rising, pay homage to the Victors dwelling in space.
Through union with all the buddhas, generate the pride:
"I am the buddha Vajrasattva;
I am Vajrasūrya as well;

Amoghavajra, the Dharma, is myself;
I am the self of all the buddhas."
Then, gazing wrathfully as Hevajra, one should raise the wheel into the sky.
With the syllables ma ṭa, for eyes of sun and moon,
and setting all times ablaze,
the intelligent one, gazing upon beings, circles all around the ground of the wheel,
with blazing vajras beneath the feet,
striving hard as he brandishes the vajra, dancing with the playful vajra gait,
baring the fangs and proclaiming hūṃ.
The flower is done with the gesture of cupped palms,
the incense with the gesture of the branch,
the lamp with the thumb held firm,
and the ointment in its own manner too;
the hands to the eyes and likewise the ears,
and the feet to the right side of the corner,
done with the action of stamping.
Likewise, too, circle to the left.
Perform the continuous dance, after that perform the moving dance, and after that likewise perform the swift-spinning dance, and whirl about like a wheel.

The equal stance, the vajra stance, the maṇḍala, the all-various, the tortoise stance, the net of bees, the stirring of the ocean, the supreme mountain, the beautiful step and the wrathful step: this is the arrangement of the stances.

The manner of the sword, the manner of the wheel, the manner of the jewel, the lotus hand, the sword hand, the manner of the spear, the manner of the bow, the manner of the staff, the manner of the club, the manner of the pestle, the manner of the single-pointed vajra, the manner of the ten-mouthed one, the manner of the small sword, the manner of the variegated staff, the manner of the spear, the manner of guarding the ball, the double banner, the triple banner, the manner of the flower, the manner of the incense, the manner of the lamp, the manner of the perfume, the Lāsyā hand, the garland hand, the song hand, the dance hand, the flute hand, the lute hand, the clay drum hand and the kumuda hand: this is the arrangement of the hands.

The vajra posture, the sattva posture, the lotus seat, the excellent seat, the half-crossed posture and the auspicious seat: this is the arrangement of the seated postures.

The erotic sentiment, the heroic sentiment, the sentiment of disgust, the comic sentiment, the fierce sentiment, the terrifying sentiment, the peaceful sentiment, the majestic sentiment and the sentiment of compassion. The song that follows the note born of six, the song that follows the note of the sage, the song that follows the note of the gandharva, the song that follows the middle note, the song that follows the fifth note, the song that follows the clear-minded note, and the song the retinue listens to. The division of the few, the division of crossing over, the division of fear, the full, the half-division that comes after, the mixing, making the two passions equal, taking up the three lines, pressing the throat, pressing the palate, pressing the tongue and pressing the teeth: this is the arrangement of the song.

At the time of taking full possession of the ground too,
this commitment is to be strongly urged;
it is done by the one who holds the wisdom vajra.
This is the supreme stage of the commitment:
"Listen, all you hosts of obstructors who dwell in body, speech and mind!
I possess the glorious power of compassion;
I am the one who applies the wheel of protection.
My body made clear by the vajra,
born from the three bodies, I send forth emanations.
If you transgress this command,
there is no doubt that you will be destroyed here.
Whatever putrid bodies there may be, and some others,
the source of the wisdom of great bliss,
born of the nature of Vajrasattva:
step aside, you great obstructors!"
namaḥ smanta buddhebhyon mo vajra khrodhāya mahā daṃṣṭo taka ṭa bhairavā vajra sando ha darbāya amṛta kuṇḍali hūṃ phaṭ Or else one should recite:
namaḥ smanta kāya vāka citta vajra nama namo vajra krodhāya mahā daṃṣṭo taka ra bhairavāya asi musala paraśu śa gṛhita hastāya oṃ amṛta kuṇḍali kha

kha khāhi khāhi tiṣṭha tiṣṭha bandha bandha hana hana daha daha garja garja visphoṭaya visphoṭaya sarva vajra vighnaṃ vināyakāna mahā gaṇapati jipita antakarāya hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ

Having thus taken full possession of the ground, drive in the stakes so that there may be no obstructors.
Imagining the wrathful destroyers of obstructors above, and a single point below, drive them in.
oṃ sumbha ni sumbha hūṃ gṛhṇa gṛhṇa hūṃ gṛhṇāvaya gṛhṇāpaya hūṃ ānaya ho bhagavāna vidyārājā hūṃ phaṭ oṃ gha gha ghātaya ghātaya sarva duṣṭaṃ phaṭ kīlaya kīlaya sarva pāpaṃ phaṭ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ vajra kīlaya phaṭ vajra dharod ājñāpayati kāya vāka cittā vajranaṃ kīla hūṃ phaṭ Having bound the directions of the ground now free of obstructors, one should then perform the preparatory rite.
Having set out vast offerings and torma,
and anointed the center of the maṇḍala with perfume, generate the goddess and make offerings to her;
perform the preparatory rite and request her to depart:
"Mother, worshipped by wrathful Hevajra, holder of various jewels,
goddess, you have come under my power;
I, so-and-so, shall draw the maṇḍala."
There, on the places fixed for the deities, with the five products of the cow, sweet scents and the like,
anoint the ground and lay out heaps of flowers.
On those places of the deities, the wise one emanates the maṇḍala with the syllables of their own mantras, and invites them, makes offerings, praises them, and so on.
Then the one who has disciples, kneeling,
holding incense in his hands, makes supplication:
"Blessed One, supreme Hevajra, king of vajra holders, I pay homage.

Out of love for the disciples,
and in order to make offerings to you as well,
you whose nature is compassion,
I am drawing the maṇḍala.
Blessed One, it is fitting that you grant permission to me, who am devoted.

Buddhas, who grant the aims to be done for beings and their retinues, bodhisattvas, those who abide in the fruit, whatever other secret mantra deities there are,
the gods who protect the world,
whatever powerful bhūtas there are,
and all beings who have the divine eye and delight in the teaching,
please consider me.
I, who am named such-and-such,
for the purpose of purifying beings, am drawing the maṇḍala of Hevajra with whatever requisites I can afford.
Today, regarding me and my disciples with a loving heart,
please bless the whole assembly
in the maṇḍala."
Having supplicated thus three times,
one should perform the preparatory rite for the vase.
The vase should be black, without spots,
long in the neck and large in the belly, smeared with white and marked with the signs,
its mouths adorned with branches and cloth.
Sesame, wheat, lentils, barley and rice are the five grains.
ha sa de ba ka pi re kri ta jaṃ li bri ha pa la kani ka ni:
these are the five medicines.
Gold, silver, pearl, coral and gem are the five precious things.
Put in butter, milk, honey, sugar,
salt, incense and fine perfumes.
A white thread over which hūṃ has been recited seven times,
and a vajra tied with a flower garland and dipped in scented water, are placed on top.
Having generated the deities in the vase and made offerings, hold the end of the thread in the hand,
and every day, in three sessions,
give torma and recite.

Then set out the vases separately,
the vase that accomplishes all activities in the northeast.
As disciples, accept those who are complete in every limb,
well disciplined and peaceful in conduct,
who delight greatly in the three Dharmas, whose minds delight in the Great Vehicle,
who wish to apply themselves to mantra and tantra
and wish to examine crafts and all the rest, who delight in yoga and meditative concentration,
who are diligent in listening and reading,
who always wish to honor the guru,
who delight in virtues such as generosity,
who likewise take no delight in sense pleasures,
who do not dwell on possessions,
and who are without pride and anger.
Those who break moral discipline,
who revile the master, the gods of the elders,
and all sentient beings,
who are wicked in nature and malicious, whose minds are always set on evil,
and who speak coarse and harsh words:
such as these are to be rejected.
But if one is diligent and seeks the aim of practice in accord with the intention of the Sugata, even if ugly, without good qualities, or inferior, it is fitting to perform the preparatory rite for him.
The teacher says this to him:
"Do not desire the fruits of this life.
For one who has come to desire this life,
the aim of the world beyond will not come about.
When one comes to seek the aim of the world beyond,
the fruits of this world flourish.
Therefore desire the supreme fruit."
Having said this, the disciple, thinking of it constantly, should make supplication:
"Great joy, you are my teacher;
master, please consider me.

Great protector, who shows
the way of great awakening, I request this:
please grant that very commitment;
grant me the mind of awakening as well;
grant me as well the three refuges, Buddha, Dharma and Saṅgha.
Protector, I wish to enter the supreme city of great liberation."
This should be said three times.
Then the hero, focusing on the disciple's good qualities, speaks these words:
"You are a vessel for the great way.
Come here, my son: the ritual of the conduct of the secret mantra of the Great Vehicle I shall properly teach you.
The perfect buddhas who have passed, likewise those who have not yet come,
and the protectors of the present
who remain to benefit beings, having understood this excellent ritual of the secret mantra of them all,
the hero, at the foot of the tree of awakening, attained omniscience without signs.
The conduct of secret mantra is unequalled:
through it Śākyasiṃha, the protector, conquered the utterly unbearable hosts of Māra, great armies though they were.
Therefore, in order to attain omniscience, my son, form this resolve!"
Having thus advised the disciple, one should also have him say this:
"Since beginningless time,
I have done evil under the power of wrong views.
Before you, lords of compassion,
I confess it, and from now on I shall refrain.
In all the merit, without exception, of the Victors, their children and beings,

I truly rejoice,
and I dedicate it to sacred awakening.
To the perfect Buddha who appears in whatever body will tame whomever, in forms of every kind,
I go for refuge.
To the sacred Dharma, the very essence of innate joy,
in which all conceptual thought without exception is purified and genuine self-aware wisdom is born,
I also go for refuge.
To the supreme children who have received empowerment in due order and abide with certainty on this unerring path, the supreme assembly of the gathered retinue,
I always go for refuge.
In order to dispel the darkness of delusion with the great fire of genuine wisdom,
and to purify all obscurations without exception,
I generate the mind set on supreme awakening.
In the path of the heroic children of the Victors, whatever immeasurable conduct it holds,
and in the uncontrived path of abiding as things are,
I shall now properly abide."
Then the guru should generate the mind of awakening where it has not been generated, and have it recalled again where it has been.
Having protected them with the vase that accomplishes all activities, at the heart, the throat and the crown,
place a vajra, a lotus and a wheel,
arising from hūṃ āḥ oṃ.
With scented water and vajra fists, touch the heart, the throat and the crown, likewise saying hūṃ āḥ oṃ.
Say oṃ āḥ hūṃ.
Give the flowers and the rest in order:
the flower at the crown, incense in front,
and lamp and perfume at the heart.
Having recited over it the mantra of the one who accomplishes all,

give to the devoted disciples
a tooth stick of aśvattha or udumbara wood, twelve finger-widths long,
not crooked, not split, free of insects,
with flowers at its tip.
Facing east or north,
having chewed it, without looking,
throw it onto a smeared area the size of a cowhide;
it reveals the accomplishments, such as pacifying.
Pour scattering-and-drinking water and rinsing water three times. oṃ ā ji hva saṃ bardha ni hū phaṭ
This is the mantra recited over the tooth stick.
oṃ hrī viśuddha sarva dharmā sarva pāpaṃ niṣca sye śodhaya sarva vikalpana apanaya hūṃ
This is the mantra for pouring the scattering-and-drinking water.

A protection cord, over which the mantra of Amṛtakuṇḍalin has been recited, is tied on the right upper arm.
Stalks of kuśa grass with their tips unbroken should be imagined as arising from dhi.
First, one is to be held at the crown of the head;
the others are given out for pillow and mat.

In the world, the all-knowing ones,
like the udumbara flower, appear only rarely, once in a long while,
and at other times they do not appear at all.
The appearance of the way of secret mantra conduct is rarer even than that,
for through it one is able, without passing into nirvāṇa,
to bring about the incomparable benefit of sentient beings.
Whatever misdeeds have been committed over many tens of millions of eons, all of them are cleansed
by seeing a maṇḍala such as this;
what need, then, to speak of abiding in the way of mantra conduct, of boundless renown?
If one recites the secret mantra of the Protector,

one attains the unsurpassed state.
Those whose minds are utterly unwavering in this supreme conduct cut off the stream of the lower realms, suffering and its origin.
Great beings, today you have obtained an incomparable gain, because all the great-souled Victors together with their heirs have taken all of you into their care,
and you are being born into this teaching.
Therefore tomorrow you will come to rest wholly in the Great Vehicle.
This supreme path, from which the Great Vehicle arises in its greatness, is glorious.
Because you are setting out on it,
you of great fortune will become self-arisen Tathāgatas who know the whole world.

Having explained the meaning and performed the protection,
have them lie down on mats of kuśa grass, saying:
"Whatever dreams you have, whatever you see,
tell them all to me first."
Having asked about good and bad dreams, one should overcome the inauspicious ones with fire offerings.

From The Sequence of Rites of Glorious Hevajra, the third: performing the preparation.

On ground that is level and pleasing,
well smeared with the five products of the cow,
the five nectars, and fragrant water,
the wise one, with an outer extent of seven cubits and an inner one of three cubits and three thumb-widths, should lay out the lines of the maṇḍala.
A new and beautiful line-cord, arisen from the seeds of the five families and of their colors,
a thread endowed with the five wisdoms, divided into five groups of five,

is drawn in with hooks from the blazing eyes of sun and moon.
And the thread that performs all activities,
well spun by a pure maiden, steeped in fragrance and in nectar, with the three syllables, should be wound together with the companion who holds the line.
Sending it out with jja, and reciting oneself as well,
holding it at the center with the left fist,
from west and east the intelligent one should lay down the line of the sky and the line below.
oṃ vajra samaya sūtra mātikrama hūṃ
"Sugatas who fill the whole of space, the time has come for you to act for the benefit of beings.
Roused by the sound of the line,
please come here."
With bad omens there is no accomplishment.
If the line-cord breaks, the master dies.
If it is drawn too long or too short, one is struck by illness.
Through mistaking the directions, harm is declared for the disciple and for the master as well.
Master and disciple, facing east and west, should lay down the Brahmā line.
With a strip of bark or the like that neither stretches nor shrinks, divide it into half and half again;
at the half of the half, to the south and north,
find the crow's foot and lay down the Brahmā line.
Then, with half the measure of the maṇḍala,
make crossing marks to the right and left.
The lines of the east and west and of the south are laid down facing north and south and east and west.
Standing in the southeast and facing the northwest, and from Nairṛti's quarter facing Īśāna's, lay down the diagonal Brahmā lines.
Divide the half into half, and half, and half again;
on each side of the Brahmā line there are then eight parts each.
Of the first, the back half, and the inner half of that:
the door recess made earlier, its half, is the center.
Of the second, halving it, and in the first half halving it again: this is called the wall.

Behind that hang the flower garlands;
behind that are the pillars of the archways.
Of the third, the back half, and the inner half of that, is the vajra garland; the fourth is the ledge of the deities.
Of the fifth, halving it, and in the first half halving it again, is the place of the five colors.
The space of the two is for the sense pleasures, made fivefold at the edge;
the jeweled cornice at the sides of the doors is the same.
Of the sixth, the inner half is the pearl garlands;
behind that, the inner half is halved and halved again:
the parapet, and last the vajra beam.
The seventh becomes the archways.
The eighth is the lotus, the wheel, and the parasol.
Behind that is the disk of the sun;
the variegated lotus, the vajra fence,
and the blaze of fire should encircle it in sequence.
Then the wise one, with bhūṃ aṃ jr̄ṃ khaṃ hūṃ on the colors, transforms the colored powders into the form of deities.
Kindle the blazing objects of vision with wisdom, fully generate their splendor, recite the mantra and make offerings.
oṃ vajra citra samaya hūṃ
"This is the pure dharmadhātu;
it purifies the realm of sentient beings.
The sublime maṇḍala of Hevajra,
the great king, is to be erected."
The guru, with the left fist, beginning from Īśāna's quarter in the northeast, should spread the colored powders, white and yellow, and likewise red, green, and black,
evenly, clockwise, without a break,
and without wavering.
The lines should be spread evenly,
each a twentieth part of the door.
If they come out thick, one is struck by illness;
if thin, wealth is destroyed;
through crookedness, discord; through a break,

the guru and the disciple die.
If they are laid down other than clockwise,
the colors become struck by a ritual dagger.
White has the nature of a diamond point;
the second is conceived as gold;
one point has the nature of ruby;
likewise the other is emerald;
black is to be known as the innermost.
This is declared to be the sequence of the colors.
In the east is great white,
in the south is perfect yellow,
in the western part is red,
and in the north is perfect green.
The parts of the central ground are to be considered as clear with the light of sapphire.
Oneself as wisdom and skillful means,
in perfect meditative equipoise, should draw it well.
The lines should be drawn not touching,
a barleycorn's breadth apart.
With a single union, with four doors, completely pervaded by light of many kinds, perfectly endowed with four archways,
adorned with vajra lines,
and surely possessed of five lines,
there eight vases should be drawn,
using powder of the five precious substances,
or else rice and the like,
or bricks from a charnel ground,
or likewise charcoal from a charnel ground.
In its center draw a lotus with eight petals, furnished with anthers.
In its center draw a white skull cup, marked with a crossed vajra.
In the northeast, Īśāna's quarter, is a lion;
in the southeast, the quarter of fire, a monk;
in the southwest, Nairṛti's quarter, a wheel;
in the northwest, the quarter of wind, a vajra should be drawn.

At the eastern door draw a curved knife;
in the south a hand drum should be drawn;
in the west a tortoise should be drawn;
and likewise a snake in the north.

By the different colors of the goddesses,
they are well known as the eight hand emblems.
A canopy, victory banners, pennants, parasols and the like,
and upper and lower ornaments should be hung.
Having set out offerings and tormas in abundance,
with blazing eyes and so forth, as above,
taking on the pride of Vajrasattva,
with the right leg extended,
in the yoga of two-armed Hevajra,
the master should enter the maṇḍala,
his body washed, clean, and fragrant,
and adorned with ornaments of every kind.
With the sound hūṃ hūṃ he shows his pride;
with the sound hi hi he strikes terror.
Circling the maṇḍala three times in this way,
he removes the faults of impurity and incompleteness.
Then the master, as the very lord of the assembly in union with his own deity, settles the emanated maṇḍala there, nondual with the colored powders and the palace.
Having completed everything up to the blessing and the empowerment, he worships the maṇḍala fully with the rite that will be explained.
With his own tongue he tastes the vajra nectar.
He gives torma to the bhūtas outside, and early in the morning performs the fire offering for enrichment.
For faults such as impurity,
he asks the Victors for forbearance.

From The Path of the Sequence of Rites of Glorious Hevajra, the fourth: the sequence of the maṇḍala rites.

Then the master, contemplating well the maṇḍala,
the seat of union with his own deity,

should make offerings, praises and so forth.
Having worshiped the maṇḍala circle with outer and inner fire offerings as well, he himself takes the empowerment
in the manner of a disciple, and, in order to bring the disciples into the circle that is like a reflection, proclaims the truth:

"Because you possess the marks born of space, supreme one without beginning or end, of the nature of the great Vajrasattva,
Hevajra, bring me to accomplishment today!
Supreme over all, the great accomplishment,
Maheśvara, the Great Lord, god above the gods, Vajradhara, king of all,
accomplish me as the supreme, the unchanging!
You are without fault, and you are eternal, passionately attuned to every passion,
great passion and great joy:
Blessed One, by that very nature accomplish me!
Utterly pure, supreme over all,
Tathāgata liberated from the very beginning, Samantabhadra, the self of all,
bodhisattva, accomplish me!
Great accomplishment, supreme over all,
through Maheśvara, the supreme Victor, great teacher of the vajra of accomplishment,
lord of vajra pride, make me your own!
You who pervade the minds of all sentient beings,
who have entered the minds of all sentient beings,
who are the father of all sentient beings,
you are the supreme pledge of passion.
By the truths, the supreme wisdom;
wisdom and skillful means, the maṇḍala:
by that truth, Protector, fulfill my wishes completely!
Phenomena are like reflections,

pure, clear and unclouded, ungraspable and inexpressible, arising entirely from causes and actions,
truly born within suchness.
By this truth, may the disciples, all of them,
see the reflection clearly and without stain in the maṇḍala!"

Having praised and paid homage in this way,
one should make this supplication as well:
"Into the maṇḍala of the lord of the maṇḍala
I shall bring the disciples.
For the sake of sentient beings I make this supplication:
be patient, and keep me in your mind."

Then the disciple, touching the master's feet, speaks these words:
"Great Joy, since you are my teacher,
master, please keep me in your mind.
Great Protector, I long for the steadfast way of great awakening.
Please bestow the pledge itself;
bestow on me the mind of awakening as well;
bestow on me the three refuges too,
the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha.
Great Protector, I shall enter
the supreme city of great liberation."

The master instructs:
"Go for refuge to the Three Jewels,
to the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha.
This is the steadfast pledge of the pure buddha family.
The vajra, the bell and the mudrā
should be held by one of great mind.
The mind of awakening is the vajra;
wisdom is called the bell.
The master too should be upheld;
the guru is equal to all the buddhas.

This is declared to be the pledge and vow
of the pure vajra family.
In the great and supreme jewel family,
three times each day and three times each night,
always give the four kinds of giving:
material things, fearlessness, the Dharma, and love.
The outer and the secret, the three vehicles,
the true Dharma, you should uphold.
This is declared to be the pledge and vow
of the pure lotus family.
In the great and supreme karma family,
possessing all the vows,
one should hold to them truly, and perform the work of offering as far as one is able.
Besides these, these fourteen are declared to be grounds of defeat;
they are not to be abandoned or cast aside,
and are called the root downfalls.
Three times each day and three times each night,
every day, they should be recited.
When a yogin lets them lapse,
it becomes a grave misdeed.
You should not kill living beings,
nor take what is not given;
do not engage in sexual misconduct,
and do not speak falsehood.
Alcohol, the root of all ruin, should be entirely given up.
Except for the sake of taming beings,
give up everything that should not be done.
You should surely rely on the holy ones and honor all yogins.
The three kinds of bodily action,
the four kinds of speech,
and the three kinds of mind,
guard as far as you are able.
Do not long for the lesser vehicle;

do not turn your back on the welfare of beings;
do not abandon saṃsāra either;
never be attached to nirvāṇa.
You should not disdain
the secrets of the gods and asuras, and you should not step over mudrās, mounts, weapons, or emblems."

These are declared to be the pledges.
The ancillary ones are taught at length in the secret tantras.
You should always guard them.

The disciple says:
"I go for refuge to the Three Jewels.
I confess each and every misdeed.
I rejoice in the virtue of beings.
I hold the awakening of a buddha in my mind.
To the Buddha, the Dharma and the supreme assembly
I go for refuge until awakening.
In order fully to accomplish the aims of myself and others,
I shall give rise to the mind of awakening.
Having given rise to the mind of supreme awakening,
I invite all sentient beings as my guests.
I shall practice the delightful, supreme conduct of awakening.
May I attain buddhahood for the benefit of beings!"
This is recited three times. And again:
"All buddhas, together with their heirs,
and all the heroes and yoginīs,
please keep me in your minds.
I, who am called such-and-such,
from this time onward
until the very heart of awakening, just as the protectors of the three times have set their minds firmly on awakening, shall give rise to the unsurpassed
and holy mind of awakening.
The discipline of the precepts,

the gathering of virtuous qualities,
and the discipline of acting for the benefit of beings:
these three disciplines I shall each hold firmly.
The Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha,
the unsurpassed Three Jewels,
the vow of the buddha yoga,
I shall hold from this day forward.
In the great and supreme vajra family,
the vajra, the bell and the mudrā
I shall truly hold;
the master too I shall uphold.
For the delightful pledge of the great and supreme jewel family, every day at the six times
I shall always give the four kinds of giving.
In the pure and supreme lotus family,
which arises from great awakening,
the outer and the secret, the three vehicles,
the true Dharma, I shall hold without exception.
In the great and supreme karma family,
possessing all the vows,
I shall truly hold them, and perform the work of offering as far as I am able.
Having given rise to the unsurpassed
and holy mind of awakening,
for the sake of all sentient beings
I take up the vows without exception.
I shall carry across those not carried across;
I shall free those not freed;
I shall give relief to those without relief,
and establish sentient beings in nirvāṇa."
This is recited three times.

Then the disciple, his face covered with a red cloth, holds a garland of flowers.
He is protected with water from the vase of Amṛtakuṇḍalin,
and his body, speech and mind are purified.

"Dear child, who are you? What do you delight in?"
the master asks, in order to lead him in.
"Fortunate one, I delight in great bliss," the disciple of great mind replies.
Then, to give rise to the mind of awakening, having said oṃ sarva yoga citta upadayāmi,
one places a vajra at his heart and contemplates, saying:
surate samaya stvaṃ ho
siddhi vajra yathā sukhaṃ

One should say: "Today you will be blessed by all the Tathāgatas. Do not speak of this supreme secret of all the Tathāgatas to those who have not seen the maṇḍala, nor to those who lack faith."

With their own mantras, Gaurī and the others,
the holy one should summon and lead in.
Likewise, reciting the five syllables,
he leads in the holder of the supreme pledge.

"Today you have entered the family of all the Tathāgatas. I shall give rise in you to such wisdom that by it you will obtain even the accomplishments of all the Tathāgatas, so what need is there to mention other accomplishments? Do not speak of this to those who have not seen the great maṇḍala, lest your pledge be broken."

Placing a vajra at his heart:
"oṃ Glorious Heruka has today
truly entered your heart.
If you speak of this way,
he will at once split it open and depart."
Igniting the places of his body with the three syllables, one has him drink the fifth of the deathless substances:
"This is your water of hell.
If the pledge is broken, it will burn you;
if the pledge is kept, it grants accomplishment.
Drink the water of vajra nectar!"
oṃ vajrodadaka ṭha ṭha ṭha

To make the commitment firm, one says this: "From this day on I am your glorious Heruka. Whatever I command you, saying 'Do this,' that you must do.

Do not despise me, lest, without having escaped misery, you die and fall into hell." Then one says this to the disciple, commanding him: "Say: 'May all the Tathāgatas bless me, and may glorious Heruka descend upon me!'"

When he has said this, at his heart, within the square maṇḍala of Mahendra, marked with a vajra and yellow in color, arisen from laṃ, one should meditate on hūṃ.
Water arisen from vaṃ is white in color, marked with a vase and perfectly round.
Arisen from yaṃ is moving wind, marked with a blue banner, shaped like a bow.
On that one meditates on the three bodies, ha a.
Beneath the feet jñaiṃ blazes fiercely.
From the wind arises raṃ, triangular;
kindling it where it rests, one causes the descent upon the disciple.
Then one should perform the terrifying
vajra song and dance:
āveśaya stvaṃbhaya ra ra ra ra cālaya cālaya hūṃ a he jhaiṃḥ Imagining a red a on his tongue,
when the descent has occurred, one commands him again:
"Vajra of passion abiding there, speak, vajra, of virtue and nonvirtue!"
To make that intention firm,
one says to him tiṣṭha vajra.
He casts the flower garland onto the maṇḍala circle, saying praticcha vajra hoḥ.
If it does not fall auspiciously,
he should cast it up to two times more.
It should then be tied upon his crown:
pratigṛhṇa tvāṃ imaṃ satva mahābala
In both cases, whether it was received or not received, whether there were signs or near signs, whether the descent occurred or there is only faith, his practice is as follows.
Imagining a blazing oṃ in his eyes:
"Glorious Heruka today strives to open your eyes;
he opens the eyes completely;

the vajra eye is unsurpassed."
Then the guru says this to him:
"Now, right now, by the power of faith,
you should look upon this maṇḍala.
You too are born of the buddha family, blessed by mantra and mudrā.
You see what has never been seen before."
The disciple, together with an offering fee, bows at the guru's feet
and then should say this:
"oṃ Into the maṇḍala of the great vajra maṇḍala I have entered."

"oṃ Today I behold the maṇḍala of the great maṇḍala of yoga.
oṃ In the maṇḍala
of the great secret maṇḍala I am empowered."
Then, beginning from the principal deity, one shows him everything up to the edge of the maṇḍala.
Leaving two cubits to the east of the maṇḍala,
a maṇḍala about half the size of the inner maṇḍala,
a maṇḍala possessing the proper characteristics,
is made two cubits away from that maṇḍala.
In this second maṇḍala the disciple is placed.
One gives him offering water, water to cool the feet, and so forth, and performs the rite of purifying the habitual tendencies.
Wishing auspiciousness for the disciple,
the guru should sing the song of auspiciousness:

"Possessed of every perfection, with a color like a mountain of gold, protector of the three worlds, who has utterly abandoned the three stains, the Buddha, whose eyes are like the full-blown petals of a lotus:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
What he revealed, supreme, utterly unwavering, renowned throughout the three worlds, worshiped by gods and humans, the holy Dharma, most supreme, which brings peace to all creatures:
may this second auspiciousness of the world come to you here today.
Possessed of the holy Dharma, rich in the auspiciousness of learning, the Saṅgha, worshiped by gods, asuras and humans,

the abode of modesty and glory, most supreme among assemblies:
may this third auspiciousness of the world come to you here today.
The auspiciousness when, for the sake of beings, in former times he came from the midst of the gods' abode of Tuṣita, together with Śakra, the gods, and the hosts of his retinue:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
The auspiciousness when the Protector's body was born in the Lumbinī grove, and on the great one who brings existence to an end flowers with their anthers rained down, blazing, seen by many gods:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
The auspiciousness when, to vanquish faults of every kind, he went forth at midnight with great joy to the grove of austerities, followed by Śakra and others:
by that auspiciousness too may peace come to you here today.
The auspiciousness when, on the bank of the river, encircled by offering water and lamps, he who brings forth great wonder for the sake of peace and purifies existence was well praised by the king of the mahoragas:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
The auspiciousness of the Sugata, virtuous without beginning or end, in that most supreme city called Kapilavastu, praised by the Great God (Śiva), Viṣṇu and others:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
The auspiciousness of the increasing power to accomplish the aims of beings, which arose from the Sage, the precious treasury of Dharma, who awakened for the benefit of all sentient beings:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
The auspiciousness of him whose body blazes like the light of gold, who sat upon a spread of grass the color of beryl,
his body unmoving, well seated in the cross-legged posture:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
The Blessed One, source of all the varied things of earth and sky, who by the power of loving-kindness was victorious over the hosts of Māra, auspicious at the root of the king of trees:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
The auspiciousness when the Teacher, the Sugata, dwelling at Vārāṇasī, turned the holy wheel of Dharma, at which great wonders clearly appeared on earth and in the sky:

by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today.
The auspiciousness of the holy, excellent benefit relied upon by noble beings who do meritorious deeds, taught without remainder by the Blessed One Śākyasiṃha:
by that auspiciousness may peace come to you here today."

Ringing the bell and twirling the vajra, this is the auspiciousness with song.
He is seated on a seat of gold or the like,
and there he is to be empowered.
The disciple should duly be brought forward.
Empowering him in each successive way, whatever the deity's union may be,
its mudrā embraces him at the shoulder.
The first is the water empowerment;
the second is the crown empowerment;
the third is the vajra empowerment;
the fourth is the empowerment of the nature;
fifth, the name empowerment is conferred;
sixth, he is proclaimed a perfect buddha;
the seventh is the vase empowerment;
the eighth is the secret empowerment itself;
the ninth is through the wisdom empowerment,
through the perfect union of that very vajra.
The discipline and the prophecy:
these are to be given in sequence.
With the water of one's own consort and of the male,
from all eight vases,
imagining him as Vajradhara, one empowers him, meditating on the vajra at his heart.
oṃ vajra abhiśiñcami tvaṃ Imagining him as Vajrasūrya, one gives him the crown.
oṃ vajra ratnaka vajra śali ho Meditating on everything as before,

one fully applies the vajra verses.
A great nine-pronged vajra is placed at his heart with one's own hand.
The disciple, in the form of Lokeśvara, is empowered, being called Vajrasattva:
"Through the empowerment of the buddha vajra, today you are empowered.
This is indeed all the buddhas.
For perfect accomplishment, take the vajra."
oṃ śrī heruka adhivati tvāṃ abhiṣiñcami taṣṭhi vīra samaya stvaṃ Imagining the disciple as Paramāśva, the goddess Tārā embraces his body,
and the lord of the vajra empowers him;
with his hands he rings the vajra and bell.
oṃ vajradhivati stvaṃ aghiṣañcimi tiṣṭha vajra samaya stāṃ Imagining the disciple as Vairocana, one should confer the name empowerment.
oṃ vajrasatva abhiṣiñcami vajra nāma abhiṣekata
"O glorious so-and-so Vajra, whatever appears, all of it,
and your chosen deity and the rest,
are stainless phenomena, pure by nature;
they should be seen as the wisdom of the buddhas.
This is indeed all the buddhas,
held in the hand of Vajrasattva.
You too must always hold it, steadfast in the discipline of the vajra essence."
oṃ sarva tathāgata siddhi vajra samaya tiṣṭha samaya stvaṃ dharayāmi hi hi hi hi hūṃ
I shall now gather in sequence the verses of the Blessed One.
When the Blessed One himself taught the Dharma in Sukhāvatī, the Lord of Secrets then asked,
"How are humans to be empowered?"
The Blessed One declared:
"In laughter, the master empowerment;

likewise in gazing, the secret empowerment;
in touching with the hand, the wisdom empowerment;
and that very one, in the embrace of the two together,
is the empowerment yet to come.
It becomes clear from the mouth of the guru."
These are the six empowerments.

Having joined his palms and bowed, he sits before him, and with the verses that follow
the disciple supplicates the guru:
"Grant me the empowerment of the irreversible wheel.
The suchness of the deities of the maṇḍala and the activities of the master, Protector, please teach me.
The pledges of all the buddhas and the supreme secret vows,
for the sake of all sentient beings,
I shall always keep, as a master."
When the disciple has supplicated thus,
the guru rests for an instant in meditative absorption,
and in order to empower him,
emanates the supreme maṇḍala of the buddhas.
The attendants, with banners, victory banners and the like,
with songs, drums and so forth, on the ground,
having spread out a parasol and a canopy, sit down, and one should speak thus:
"This precious empowerment,
to which the three realms bow, which arises from the abode
of the three secrets of all the buddhas, I bestow.
The first is the vase empowerment;
the second is the secret empowerment;
the third is wisdom and gnosis;
the fourth is that of the Tathāgata." Everything is to be worshiped with the rites of skillful means and with unsurpassed offerings.

Then, from hand to hand,
one gives the disciple the vajra discipline:
"The sattva without beginning or end,
Vajrasattva, great joy,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
lord of Vajragarvā, the self."
One also gives him the bell, which arises from Prajñāpāramitā:
"For the sake of all sentient beings,
this is the very name of the vajra and bell.
This was taught by all the buddhas as following the melody of wisdom.
You too must always hold it;
the Victors intend it for supreme awakening."
oṃ supratiṣṭha vajra svāhā Its meaning is:
"The great vajra and the great bell,
the pair, the vajra, well established:
today you are a vajra master;
you should take on disciples." Endowed with the five ḍākas, completely filled with the five pledges,
and accompanied by the host of ḍākinīs,
one empowers the disciple as Vajradhara.

The maṇḍala is said to be a lotus.
The supreme maṇḍala of the mind is what is called the celestial palace:
the mind is the palace, tiered and lofty.
Its outside is square,
being the immeasurables, equal in measure.
The minds of loving-kindness and the rest are said to be the four line-cords.
What is rightly called the laying of the lines is the yoga of mindfulness of phenomena.
Liberation from all views is said to be the line-cords of wisdom.

What are rightly called the ornaments are the supreme vows of moral discipline and the rest.
The faculties of faith and the rest, twofold in the mind, arise as the five walls.
What are called the doors
are the divisions of the four liberations.
The four pillars of the archways are said to be the four right abandonments.
The four parapets
are the four applications of mindfulness.
The four door recesses
are called the four bases of miraculous power.
The adornment with flower garlands is the seven limbs of awakening.
The eight pillars
are the eight limbs of the noble path.
What are known as the chowries are said to be the wisdom that distinguishes the path.
What is rightly called a net
is so because it destroys the afflictions;
it has the nature of true cessation.
The turning of the wheel
is the yoga of the two accumulations.
Because it destroys what causes affliction,
it is called the half-net.
This is the suchness of the maṇḍala.

The five aggregates, in brief,
are well known as the five buddhas.
The vajra sense sources, assuredly,
are the supreme maṇḍala of the bodhisattvas.
Earth is everywhere called Locanā;
the water element is Māmakī; Pāṇḍaravāsinī and Tārā
are well known as heat and wind.
Through delusion enjoying delusion, delusion is exhausted: this is Yamāntaka;

he is therefore the ender of the aggregates,
and likewise the ender through wisdom.
Through hatred enjoying hatred, hatred is exhausted: this is Prajñāntaka;
he is therefore the ender of mind,
and therefore the ender of the afflictions.
Through passion enjoying passion, passion is exhausted: this is Padmāntaka;
he is therefore the ender of speech,
and likewise the ender of union.
The exhaustion of all afflictions, likewise the exhaustion of all karma,
and the exhaustion of all obscurations, the wisdom,
is called Vighnāntaka.
This is the suchness of the deities.
This is the irreversible master empowerment.

Then the disciple offers to the guru
a well-trained woman with a lovely face and long eyes, adorned with beauty and youth,
and should speak thus:
"O Blessed One, great peaceful one,
who intends the single vajra yoga,
who perfectly accomplishes the indivisible mudrā,
the true source of vajra yoga:
just as you are a great being,
so, Lord, make me also.
I am sinking, without refuge, in the mire of saṃsāra: protect me!" Having let go of the union of Akṣobhya, he should recollect with constant union.
The disciple is placed nearby;
after that, the guru
covers his eyes with a cloth or the like and places him on the seat that has been prepared.
The one endowed with wisdom enters.
Through the perfect union of the vajra seeds,

through the yoga of his own chosen deity,
he imagines the disciple constantly.
Then what is called the flowing family:
"Just as the buddhas of the past empowered the bodhisattvas, so I, by the secret empowerment, empower you with the stream."
If one fears that the inexhaustible will be exhausted, abandoning attachment to a mother-of-pearl vessel and the like,
with the tip of a pure tongue
one should take what arises from both.
This is the unsurpassed suchness,
the nondual wisdom that cannot be expressed.
Like the aspect of the dharmadhātu,
one savors it truly with the bliss of peace.
With the right hand in the fist of supreme giving,
he holds the corner of his Dharma robe at his heart;
with the hand the bell is bound at his neck.
The guru, as Vajradhara, fully gives all reassurance,
and, having become Śākyamuni himself,
makes the prophecy to the great disciple:
"You are a buddha, without any doubt.
You will not be born, grow old, or die;
fear, sorrow and sickness will not arise.
In this vehicle of great bliss,
son, I prophesy you;
thus I prophesy that you are Vajrasattva, the Tathāgata.
For the perfect accomplishment of existence,
you are drawn out of the very lower realms of existence.
O chosen deity, human Tathāgata, you will accomplish what is above the earth, beneath the earth, and upon the earth."
This is the prophecy from the secret empowerment.

"Just as the Buddha Bodhivajra gave it to the greatest of the great,
so too, for the sake of delivering me,
O Space Vajra, bestow it upon me."
The first consort, or else another,
by the procedure taught in other tantras,
one grants as the yoga of Amitāyus:
"This excellent, well-examined mudrā,
the goddess who liberates, the bestower of joy,
possessed of manifold form, the loving one:
take her, take her, great being!
Having taken her, make worship."
Then the Vajrī of the dharmadhātu teaches the samaya vow in these words:
"Are you able, O vajra-holder?
Excrement and urine are food and drink;
blood, flesh, camphor,
and women: can you have faith in them with devotion?
Will you kiss the bhaga without conceptual thought?
Behold, O vajra, this Sukhāvatī!"
Then that vajra-holder, laughing heartily, speaks thus:
"Goddess, why should I not be able?
Camphor and flesh I shall partake of,
and I shall have true faith in the wisdom consort."
Then the goddess, having stripped herself naked, presents herself as the lotus:
"Wondrous is this lotus of mine,
truly endowed with every bliss.
Always, in due order, practice in it;
these shall never be parted.
This dharmadhātu is utterly pure;
the realm of sentient beings is fully liberated.
This very king of great bliss stands before all natures;
in the inner wheel of the channels
he is said to dwell within the lotus.
Within the bhaga, like space,

he bears the five elements as ornaments.
The center, with its filaments,
is adorned with eight petals.
Abiding there, one should meditate in the form of the deathless deity.
Here there is constant vanquishing."
Thus the wisdom consort has spoken.
bajra mokṣa hoḥ
Then the mantrin, the vajra-holder,
at the potent place that is its source,
from the channel within the bhaga,
in what is found through effort,
by the training and the guru's samaya rubs it thoroughly with his finger and plays upon it again and again with his tongue.
By that it comes to swell greatly.
As soon as he plays thus,
it swells still more,
and everlasting bliss fully arises.
Through completing the ten perfections,
the powers and the masteries,
and through passing beyond the ten grounds,
that becomes the vajra sign.
By the union of the vajra binding
one rightly undertakes the vajra worship.
Having drawn forth Vajrasattva by that,
one should eat it with the vajra tongue.
By the rite of arising in union
one should draw the sublime maṇḍala, the fire offering born of meditative absorption;
then one should grant reassurance:
"Having fully entered the maṇḍala of the supreme secret,
by seeing the sublime,
definitively freed from all wrongdoing,
today you come truly to abide.
In this vehicle of great bliss
you will not die hereafter.

Being invincible and deathless, unassailable by anyone, rejoice!
Because existence is utterly purified,
you have passed beyond the suffering of existence.
Because existence is perfectly accomplished,
you have become the supreme Teacher.
This you must always guard:
it is the samaya vow of accomplishment,
taught alike by all the buddhas,
the sublime and everlasting command.
Do not disparage the master,
do not transgress the word of the Sugata, and never speak
disparagingly of vajra brothers.
Do not fall short in love for sentient beings;
do not speak of suchness to the unfit;
do not abandon fortunate beings;
do not disparage this body of yours;
do not take the measure of the sublime Dharma,
and do not despise the teachings of others either.
Until the culmination at the heart of awakening, do not forsake the Three Jewels.
Always guard the samaya.
Hold the vajra and bell,
always wear the crown ornament, always perform the fire offering,
always draw the maṇḍala,
always consecrate the sugatas, and give torma to the great bhūtas."
These and other reassurances are given in full.
This is to be recited at the wisdom empowerment.
"As the Teacher has said, great being,
having attained the truly sublime joy,
in the moment that is free of variety
you should seize great bliss.
It has no beginning, middle or end;
it is neither existence nor nirvāṇa.

This is the sublime great bliss:
there is no other, and no self either.
This primordial wisdom is most subtle,
a vajra essence like space,
stainless, peaceful, liberation;
and you yourself are its father.
This very thing is the great primordial wisdom, abiding in all bodies,
of nondual and dual form,
the lord whose nature is being and nonbeing.
Having reached the moving and the unmoving,
it appears like an illusory form.
By whatever means of the maṇḍala wheel,
it will always certainly come about."
This is recited after the empowerment of wisdom-gnosis.
The fourth is to be known from the mouth of the holy guru.
After the disciple's rites are complete,
having made offerings and praises to the maṇḍala well, recite: "oṃ You have accomplished all the aims of sentient beings;
grant the corresponding accomplishments.
Though you depart to the buddha realm,
please come back again."
With this, the circle of deities departs.
The remnants are cast into a great river.
oṃ gi li gi li hūṃ jaḥ svāhā
This is the mantra for gathering up and discarding the colored powders.

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, this is the fifth, the stage of conferring empowerment on the disciple.

Then the yogin endowed with the training,
in order to abide well in the generation stage,
in a delightful and pleasing place anoints it with fragrance and scatters flowers.
Seated on a comfortable seat,
from paṃ a lotus, and what is born of raṃ;
from the indestructible one, by light rays like hooks,

the Victors are invited and abide in the sky.
With outer, inner and secret offerings
one should worship the vajra guru.
Confession, rejoicing, dedication, refuge, the supreme mind, and abiding in the path one should perform.
Love and compassion, joy, and equanimity, the four abodes of Brahmā, one should cultivate.
Having burned the outcaste's house with fire,
one should abide as brahmin, kṣatriya and the rest.
oṃ śūnyatā jñāna bajra sva bhā ātma ko'haṃ
From paṃ a lotus, the letter ra makes the illuminator;
from that hūṃ a crossed vajra;
inside its fence, canopy and tent,
one should also protect by means of the ten wrathful ones.
oṃ rakṣa rakṣa hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā
In space, from yaṃ raṃ baṃ laṃ come the maṇḍalas of wind, fire, water and earth;
from bhūṃ a wheel, and upon it one imagines the habitual tendencies of the intermediate state of existence.
Transformed from these is a palace,
four-cornered, with four doors and four porticoes,
with nets and half-nets and eight pillars,
adorned with every ornament.
There, upon a lotus and a sun,
one imagines the seat of the four Māras.

oṃ sarba tathāgata anilaya bajra svabhāba ātmako'haṃ Āli is the moon and the mirror;
kāli is the sun, endowed with sameness;
oṃ and hūṃ, the vajra and the curved knife,
are the discriminating wisdom;
all becoming one is the wisdom that accomplishes activity;
the complete image is the dharmadhātu.
Arising from that, he is wholly excellent,
with eight faces, four legs and sixteen arms.
The main face is like the moon; the right and left are blue and red; the rest are black.

An elephant, a horse, an ass, an ox, a camel,
a man, a lion and a cat are on the right;
earth, water, wind, fire, moon, sun, Antaka and Dhanada are on the left.
The goddess has one face and two arms and is black,
with curved knife and skull cup in right and left.
oṃ padma sukha dharma hāra kha sukhaṃ dadha catura ānanda bhaga bisva hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ kāryaṃ kuru ṣṭame oṃ bajra mahā dveṣa catura ānanda dāya ka kha ga mukha eka raso nātha hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ karyaṃ kuru ṣva me oṃ sarba tathāgata anurāgana bajra svabhāba ātmako'haṃ
From the seeds roused by the sound of each pair, the eight goddesses, the nature of form, sound, smell and taste,
and earth, water, fire and wind, utterly pure,
are arranged in order.
In Indra's quarter, upon Brahmā, Gaurī, black, with two hands holding a curved knife and a rohita fish.
In Yama's quarter, upon Indra, Caurī, red, with a ḍamaru and a boar.
In Varuṇa's quarter, upon Upendra, Vetālī, reddish yellow, holding a tortoise and a skull cup.
In Kubera's quarter, upon Rudra, Ghasmarī, green, with a snake and a lotus vessel.
In Īśāna's quarter, upon Yama, Pukkasī, sapphire blue and yellow on the right, with an axe on the left.
In Agni's quarter, upon Dhanada, Śavarī, white, holding a monk and a ringing staff.
In Nairṛti's quarter, upon him, Caṇḍālī, blue, with a wheel on the right and a skull cup on the left.
In the quarter of the wind, Ḍombī, upon an asura, with vajra and threatening finger, of many colors.
Or else, with the sound of union, oṃ āḥ hūṃ hoḥ;
through the union of the two abiding in the center,
he melts together with his consort;
Pukkasī and the others rouse him with song,
and out of his compassionate heart the Lord arises.
"I, Pukkasī: protect me!

Abandon the nature of emptiness,
and practice with me the yoga of great bliss.
Parted from you, I shall die.
O Hevajra, arise!
Abandon the nature of emptiness,
and accomplish the aim of me, Śavarī.
Lord of desire, host who cares for the world,
why do you remain in emptiness?
I, Caṇḍālī, make this entreaty:
without you, I seek in every direction.
I seek your heart;
you who bear the lordly fragrance, arise!
I, Ḍombī, have lost my senses:
do not cut off the stream of your compassion!" Thus roused, recalling his aspiration,
he arises fully from hūṃ and o:
the liberations, the means of attraction and the emptinesses, purified, are his eight faces, four legs and sixteen arms.
The right face is white, the left red, the central dark blue,
each with three eyes; the rest are like bees.
On the sun, his right leg is extended and the left bent;
with the remaining legs he stands in the manner of dancing.
With the right hands, the elephant and the rest, he gathers the illnesses;
with the left, earth and the rest, the eight lords.
With skull cups, a necklace of dry and fresh heads, and a skull crown, adorned with the five mudrās, he tramples the four Māras.
Consciousness purified is Nairātmyā, black, with a curved knife on the right and a skull cup on the left,
with yellow hair and three eyes, complete with ornaments.
At the hearts of father and mother and the retinue,
from lotus, sun, seed and hand emblem,
one should generate the wisdom being.
Because the awakening of a buddha is to be accomplished,
one should invite the wisdom maṇḍala.
Gaurī and the other three goddesses summon, cause to enter, bind and delight.
oṃ bajra gaurī ākarṣaya jaḥoṃ bajra caurī prabeśa hūṃ oṃ bajra betālī sphoṭaya baṃ oṃ bajra ghasmarī baśiṃ kuru hoḥ

The sense sources of eye, ear, nose, tongue, body and mind, utterly pure,
the vajra ladies of delusion, aversion, avarice,
desire and jealousy,
the Nairātmyās, are set in their own places.
Body, speech and mind, utterly pure,
the sky-goers, earth-goers and those below the earth,
are in the places of body, speech and mind.
Roused by light rays, the host of heroes is offered worship and supplicated, and confers empowerment; at the end, the lord of the family adorns the head.
With the vajras of aversion, delusion, avarice and desire, Gaurī and the others, two by two in order, are sealed.
oṃ sarba tathāgata abhiṣekata bajra svabhāba ātmako'haṃ Upon wind and fire, in a skull cup, from bhuṃ aṃ jṛṃ khaṃ hūṃ
and from go ku da ha na,
the nectar is tasted with the vajra tongue.
oṃ sarba tathāgata amṛta svadana bajra svabhāba ātmako'haṃ
Then, emanating the host of ḍākinīs, with moon, sun, what is ripened by water, and the vajra taste,
with the sound of the ḍamaru and with embrace,
one worships in order, beginning with the chief.
oṃ sarba tathāgata pūja bajra svabhāba ātmako'haṃ
"Pervading beings stricken with unbearable poison, Heruka, by various means,
you transform it into nectar:
supreme medicine, hero, I bow to you."
oṃ sarba tāthāgata stuti bajra svabhāba ātmako'haṃ Thus, by means of the six Sugatas, one should practice meditative concentration with great effort.
Whatever yogin is unable to practice meditative concentration should recollect the purity.
Then the wise one recites the mantra, making it revolve from the mouths of father and mother like a wheel of a whirling firebrand, distinguishing the colors according to the types of rite.

oṃ aṣṭananāya piṃgora dhvakeśa vartmane caturbiṃśati naitrāya ṣoḍaśa bhujāya kṛṣṇa jīmuta vapuṣe kapāla mānekadhariṇe ādhmata krūra cittāya ardhandu daṃṣṭṛṇe oṃ māraya māraya kāraya kāraya garjaya garjaya tarjaya tarjaya śoṣaya śoṣaya sapta sāgarān bhandha bhandha nāga aṣṭakanā gṛhṇa gṛhṇa śatrūṃ ha hā hi hī hu hū he hai ho hau haṃ haḥ phaṭ svāhā
With vajra songs and aspirations, having risen, one conducts oneself imagining oneself as the deity of accomplishment.

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, this is the sixth, the activity of the generation stage.

The yogin whose mind has been trained by the generation stage should practice abiding in the completion stage.
By kindling Caṇḍālī at the navel,
the five Tathāgatas are burned,
and Locanā and the others are burned as well;
through the burning, the hare-marked moon drips from haṃ.
In the place of the egg-born there is a water-born lotus of eight petals with filaments; upon it
the five fathers and four mothers, the reality of all,
are worshipped all around by the stream of the deathless.
At the center of the heart, on a moon, is the indestructible, endowed with multicolored light: that is the vajra.
One should meditate on Vajra Nairātmyā, the ḍākinī, roused by the rite.
The ḍākinī at the tip of the nose, the size of a mustard seed:
in the manner of supreme joy, all is gathered in.
Having completed the stages of one's chosen deity, from the light rays of the seed at the heart
the maṇḍalas of the vowels and consonants are emanated, and the worlds of the ten directions are purified.
By the sound of each pair, in order,
they become the co-emergent sun and moon.
From hundreds of thousands of koṭis of light rays, abiding in their entirety, they bestow blessing.
Then, on the sun above, the sun itself;

its rays as the tip of a hair, and a hundred-thousandth part of that;
and even that hundred-thousandth part is not apprehended: in that very mode one should meditate on great joy.
With vajra and bell, pleasing and endowed with the marks,
one twirls with the right and rings with the left;
in the sixteenth part it is perfectly complete.
In all, in the very self of all,
like a river flowing in a stream,
and like a lamp burning steadily, the yogin should always abide in that very reality, day and night.
Through the yoga of vajra and lotus,
there earth comes into being;
the aspect of moisture, the awakening mind,
is the arising of the water element;
by churning, fire comes into being;
movement is renowned as wind;
bliss is the element of space.
Because the five are wholly encompassed
by the bliss of the great elements, bliss therefore is not reality itself.
The one deity born as two: whatever is so born is called the co-emergent.
The intrinsic nature is called co-emergent,
the single union of all aspects.
Compassion is the means; the yogin's mudrā is free of any cause.
Compassion and emptiness are not distinct:
this is called the awakening mind.
The one who performs mantra recitation, austerity and fire offering,
the one who possesses the maṇḍala, and that maṇḍala;
mantra recitation, austerity and fire offering,
the maṇḍala circle and that maṇḍala:
summed up in brief, they are mind itself,
the nature of meditative absorption.
The signs of having drawn near to the accomplishment of the Great Seal:

the first is like clouds;
the second is like smoke;
the third is like fireflies;
the fourth is a lamp blazing close by;
the fifth is constant luminosity,
like a cloudless sky.
Thereafter, like an illusion,
like a dream, it changes in an instant.
The three realms, the moving and the unmoving, are accomplished entirely, without remainder.

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, this is the seventh, the activity of the completion stage.

The wise one, perfected in mantra and fearless in all the treatises, following worldly convention,
should perform the rite of consecration.
Having washed the body, anointed with perfume, and put on clean clothes,
adorned with every ornament,
necklace, anklets, armlets,
earrings, bracelets, rings and the rest,
in a good month, on a good date,
under a good planet and star,
in a pleasing place, free of bustle
and other faults, beautiful and roofed,
smeared with the five products of the cow and fragrant,
with various loose flowers scattered,
with parasols, victory banners, pennants and the like,
and a supreme canopy stretched out,
with vases of jewels and other things, filled and adorned with auspicious objects, with lutes, flutes, gongs, drums and the like,
in order to hold a great feast of song and dance, one sets out offerings well, as far as one's means allow,
and should protect the place by the rite given above.
Then, having given the torma well,
whatever supports there are of body, speech and mind,

images, books, stūpas and the like,
first, in order to wash away impurities,
are washed with cow dung, cow's water, curd,
milk and butter; afterward
they should be anointed with sesame oil as well.
The sesame oil is to be removed with five barks:
udumbara, śirīṣa,
aśvattha and nyagrodha,
and the bark of barkata.
Then they are bathed with the five fragrances:
the two sandalwoods, saffron, lagu and drantika, these five.
In the evening the images are gathered,
and by the very procedure that follows below
the preliminary consecration is performed; the vase too is treated according to the earlier rite.
The bathing place, facing the deity's dwelling,
is four-cornered, four cubits square and two cubits high;
pleasing and beautiful, the image is set upon a seat
and bathed to auspicious music.
"Just as, at the very moment of his birth,
the gods offered him a bath with the pure water of the gods,
so too do I offer this bath.
You who, with the water whose nature is generosity,
cleanse the stain of avarice,
and are imbued with the fragrance of giving:
to you who are well bathed, I bow down in homage.
You who, with the water whose nature is moral discipline,
cleanse the stain of broken discipline,
and are well imbued with the fragrance of discipline:
to you who are well bathed, I bow down in homage.
You who, with the water whose nature is patience, cleanse the stain of aversion,
and are well imbued with the fragrance of loving-kindness:
to you who are well bathed, I bow down in homage.
You who, with the water whose nature is diligence, cleanse the stain of laziness,

and are well imbued with the fragrance of diligence:
to you who are well bathed, I bow down in homage.
You who, with the water whose nature is meditative concentration, cleanse the stain of distraction,
and are well imbued with the fragrance of meditative absorption:
to you who are well bathed, I bow down in homage.
You who, with the water whose nature is wisdom, cleanse the stain of corrupt understanding,
and are well imbued with the fragrance of primordial wisdom:
to you who are well bathed, I bow down in homage.
You who are bathed by six rivers,
who cleanse the six kinds of stain,
and possess six vast qualities:
to you who are well bathed, I bow down in homage.
To that Buddha in whom there is no fault and who is endowed with every quality, for the sake of liberation,
I offer a bath with faith."
oṃ sarba tathāgata kāya biśodhane svāhā
This is for the five products of the cow.
oṃ hūṃ trāṃ hrīḥmar
This is for the oil.
oṃ sarba tathāgata abhiśekate samaya śrīye āḥ hūṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for offering the bath to the image.

Then the wise one should also recite these verses of auspiciousness:
"Auspiciousness by day, auspiciousness by night,
auspiciousness abiding at midday,
auspiciousness always, by day and by night:
may the buddhas grant it here today.
Auspiciousness by day, auspiciousness by night,
auspiciousness abiding at midday,
auspiciousness always, by day and by night:
may the holy Dharma grant it here today."
Apply this to all in the same way:

"May the Saṅgha grant it here today.
May the heirs of the Victors grant it here today.
May the guardians of the directions grant it here today.
May the host of protectors grant it here today."
After bathing it in this way, one wipes it with a cloth and anoints it with the five fragrances.
The supports, the image and the rest,
should be protected by Amṛtakuṇḍalin.
Then, not apprehending the image and the rest,
with one's own mantra and mudrā,
into the image and the rest, now complete,
one performs the invitation, the offerings and so forth:
"Just as all the buddhas, dwelling in Tuṣita,
entered the womb of the goddess Māyā,
so please come here."
oṃ bajra gaurī ākarṣaya jaḥ oṃ bajro caurī prabeśaya hūṃ oṃ bajra betālī bandha baṃ oṃ bajra ghasmarī vaśaṃ kuru hoḥ "Abiding here always,
holding us in your love,
so that the awakening mind may greatly increase, please remain here steadfastly."
oṃ bajra dhara dhara dharaya dharaya mardha mardha bajra dhṛga adhaṃ tiṣṭha oṃ saśva parama saśvata ehyehi jina jik adhi tiṣṭha oṃ bajra sūrya tamo bidhamana samaya stvaṃ haṃ ratna dhṛka adhi tiṣṭha oṃ bajra dharmā samaya stvaṃ hulu hulu āro ḷka adhi tiṣṭha phuḥ phuḥ phuḥ hi hi hi prajñā ḍhṛka adhi tiṣṭha oṃ moha rati adhi tiṣṭha oṃ dveṣa rati adhi tiṣṭha oṃ rāga rati adhi tiṣṭha oṃ bajra rati adhi tiṣṭha
Then the eye and the rest, delusion and the rest, and the three vajras are set in the three places.
The empowerment is given by each one's own family,
and one imagines the primordial wisdom in its own place.
By the union of the nectar of primordial wisdom
one should present the sequence of offerings.
Having worshipped extensively

by the rite that will be explained,
the intelligent one should offer praise:
"Akṣobhya, vajra, great primordial wisdom,
vajra expanse, great space,
supreme of the three vajras, the three maṇḍalas:
to the vajra expanse I bow down and offer praise.
Vairocana, great purity,
vajra peace, great joy,
natural luminosity, supreme of the supreme:
to the Teacher, the Vajra, I bow down.
King of jewels, most profound,
vajra sky without stain,
untainted, through natural purity:
to the vajra body I bow down.
Vajra, great king of the deathless, nonconceptual space, vajra holder,
who has reached the far shore of desire:
to the vajra speech I bow down.
Amoghavajra, perfect Buddha, who fulfills every wish,
arisen from natural purity itself:
to Vajrasattva I bow down."
There one should also hold extensively a feast gathering,
a fire offering and torma offerings.
One will then obtain excellent results,
both seen and unseen.

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, this is the eighth, the activity of consecration.

The intelligent one, having bathed and put on ornaments, at the time of accomplishing the maṇḍala, inside the shrine, abiding in that very fire offering,
should perform the fire offering that accomplishes every rite.
Facing north, the mantrin should undertake the rite of pacifying;
facing east, enriching; facing south, the fierce rite;
subjugating and summoning, facing west.

Pacifying is to be done in the evening,
enriching is to be done in the morning, subjugating and summoning at midday,
and at midnight, killing and hostile rites.
Pacifying is by the one who benefits both;
enriching is by Vajrasūrya;
subjugating is said to be by Vajradharma;
killing is by Vajrasattva.
Pacifying is done with a peaceful mind:
one should pacify illness and the like.
Enriching is done with a mind intent on increase:
one should make clouds raining jewels swirl all around.
With a mind of attachment
one undertakes the rite of summoning.
Killing is done with a malicious mind:
one should bring down clouds raining fire.
The hearth for pacifying is round;
for enriching it is square;
for subjugating it is like a half-moon;
for summoning it has the shape of a hook;
for the rites of killing and hostility
it is like the element of space.
One cubit and half a cubit in width and depth is for pacifying;
two cubits and one cubit
in width and depth is for enriching;
for subjugating and summoning too, one cubit and half a cubit in width and depth are taught;
twenty finger-widths and half of that in width and depth are for killing and hostile rites.
The rim for pacifying is four finger-widths;
for enriching it is eight finger-widths;
for subjugating and summoning, four each;
for killing and hostility, three each.
The half-border is white for pacifying, likewise yellow for enriching;
for subjugating and summoning it is known as red;

for killing and hostility it is black.
A wheel, a jewel, a lotus,
a sword or a vajra is set out, as appropriate.
Through the yoga of one's chosen deity,
the fire offering for every rite has measure, shape and color in accord with pacifying, and faces east.
I shall explain the kinds of filling ladle.
It is of gold and the like, of nimba, or of sacrificial wood;
the handle is two cubits, the lip eight finger-widths,
its width and depth, and the vajra, four finger-widths.
The mouth is shaped like a lotus;
the waistband is square and beautiful,
and below it a lotus is well fashioned.
A jewel of two finger-widths at the head of the handle,
and at the end a vajra of six finger-widths:
these are the characteristics of the filling ladle.

The pouring ladle has a handle of one cubit;
at the lip it is six finger-widths in width and depth,
with a vajra of three finger-widths, like lotus petals,
a jewel of one finger-width, and a vajra of three.
Alternatively, the handles of the filling ladle and the pouring ladle are each made one cubit long,
with a vajra and a jewel fashioned below.
Its filling ladle is four finger-widths wide and four finger-widths deep, with a vajra inside;
at the end of the four finger-widths is a vajra,
and in between the shape of lotus petals.
The pouring ladle is lotus-shaped, two finger-widths,
one finger-width deep, with a vajra inside.
At the mouths of the filling ladle and the pouring ladle one imagines the seed syllable of one's own deity, blazing,
and the repha too should be placed at its mouth.
Alternatively, it is taught that one may also do it by taking pinches with five fingers or with three.
Flowers, incense, lamps, and likewise the conch of perfume and the rest are on the right;

on the left the vessel of mantra-charged offering water;
and in front the vessel should be placed.
From branches of sacrificial wood and the like,
with their fine tips undamaged,
good ones bearing two leaves,
the sticks are distinguished according to the kind of rite:
for enriching, fourteen finger-widths;
for pacifying, twelve finger-widths;
for subjugating, ten finger-widths; and for hostile rites and for killing, eight finger-widths.
With the five meats and the five nectars, grapes, mangoes, snake-fear,
mouth-drip, skyema and rtseba,
with these fruits one performs the fire offering.
Campaka, aśvaka and glu, katangpa and sidrup:
whatever can be found, having recited the mantra,
one performs the fire offering with these flowers.
Imagining melted butter with the mind, unbroken rice grains and rice,
grain and curd porridge,
sesame and likewise the fuel sticks,
and very young dūrvā grass:
with the vajra of meditative concentration one performs the fire offering.
The substances, the flowers and the rest,
are distinguished in color by the kind of rite.
White is said to bring about pacifying;
yellow is for the practice of enriching;
for subjugating and summoning, a deep red;
for the last kind of rite, black.
Pacifying is with sesame, enriching with curd;
likewise for killing, with thorns,
and for hostile rites and the like, thorns are also prescribed;
for subjugating and summoning, utpala lotuses.
One recites the mantra of Amṛtakuṇḍalin over white mustard seed.
With the two fists, around the chosen deity

one circles with one's own circling, joining them between the two.
At the same time, with both fists,
one also circles to the right.
As before, one puts white mustard seed into the fire vessel in order to purify it.
oṃ sarba pāpaṃ dahana bajraya bajra satvaṃ sya sarba pāpaṃ daha svāhā
This is for purifying.
Drawing in the consciousness of primordial wisdom,
one takes water in the palm of the hand, circles it, and, in order to purify, puts it into the fire as well, in the same way as the white mustard seed.
oṃ hūṃ taṭi phaṭ
This is for the sprinkling.
Then, in order to purify in secret
the fuel sticks and the other substances, one recites these mantras.
oṃ śrīṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for purifying the butter.
oṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for washing the substances.
oṃ bajra svāhā
This is the mantra for purifying the grain.
oṃ kuru kuru svāhā
This is the mantra for purifying the other substances.
oṃ a svāhā
This is the mantra for purifying the fuel sticks.
Arising from the limbs of the fire offering,
one sets a hearth smaller than the hearth.
One kindles the fire through meditative absorption,
and with the mind offers burnt offerings of butter.
That appears distinctly:
the five bodies arisen from meditative concentration.
To them one presents in order water for the feet, water for the mouth, offering water, water for sprinkling and water for drinking.
Kuśa grass, not too long and with tips undamaged, is spread clockwise starting from the east,
its tips turned in one direction,

and placed upon the platform.
With sandalwood or aloeswood,
or else with other fragrant woods,
in order to perform the fire offering, with a fan
one kindles the fire, makes it brilliant, and examines the signs.
Color, smell, the curling of the tips, form, sound and the like turn out to be auspicious or inauspicious.
For pacifying, a fire blazing white in color;
for enriching, one of yellow appearance;
for subjugating and for fierce rites,
red and black fires are praised.
Like the good bow of Śakra, the rainbow, swirling to the right, it is best.
Sounding sweetly like the cry of a goose,
the flames thrusting up with tips,
as the burnt offerings are mixed in, for the patron's sake, one examines whether the fire takes them in.
Sparks scattering, much smoke,
blazing by degrees and scattering fitfully,
at the end blazing by itself with splendor,
hot and radiating light rays,
like a fine trident,
and likewise like the gait of an ox:
these and other bad signs,
the inauspicious ones, should also be examined.
In the center of the fire one should meditate on a lotus and a sun maṇḍala, and upon it the deity with three eyes, four faces and four arms,
with a great belly and a topknot of matted hair,
his right hands in the gesture of supreme giving and holding a rosary, his left holding a staff and a water pot,
of a color in accord with the rite,
arisen from the source of ra: so one meditates.
"Come here, come here, great bhūta,
god of fire, sage, supreme brahmin!
In order to partake of the food of burnt offerings,

please remain right here.
God of fire of great splendor, accomplisher of every desire,
who in compassion acts for the good of sentient beings,
please remain right here."
oṃ ehyehi mahā bhūta deba ṛṣi dvija satva ma gṛhitva ahuti ahara asmiṃ sannihito bhaba Having made the hosts of offerings and fully holding the incense burner, in order to realize the desired accomplishment
one should correctly recite the samaya.
oṃ bajra anala mahā bhūta jvālaya sarba bhasmiṃ kuru sarba duṣṭa hūṃ phaṭ dṛṣya jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ smaya stvaṃ ahaṃ
This is the giving of the samaya.
On the good filling ladle and pouring ladle
one meditates on the seed syllable marked with a vajra.
Holding them with the right hand and keeping them between the knees,
one offers to the god of fire, as burnt offerings,
the substances blessed as the nectar of primordial wisdom.
oṃ aganye svāhā
This is for the butter.
oṃ sarba pāpaṃ dahana bajraya bajra sarba pāpaṃ daha svāhā
This is for the black sesame.
oṃ bajra puṣṭaye svāhā
This is for the unbroken rice.
oṃ sarba saṃpade svāhā
This is for the curd and the choice food.
oṃ bajra bijāya svāhā
This is for the rice grains.
oṃ mahā begāya svāhā
This is for the barley.
oṃ mahā balāya svāhā
This is for the peas and dreü pulses.
oṃ bajra ghasmari svāhā
This is for the wheat.
oṃ bajra āyuṣe svāhā

This is for the young dūrvā grass.
oṃ apratihata bajrāya svāhā
This is for the kuśa grass.
oṃ bajra bijāya svāhā
This is for the udumbara.
oṃ podhi bṛkṣaye svāhā
This is for the wood of the bodhi tree.
oṃ bajra latāya svāhā
This is for the plakṣa.
oṃ bajra kuberāya svāhā
This is for the nyagrodha.
oṃ sahakarāya svāhā
This is for the mango.

At the end, svāhā is for pacifying;
at the time of enriching, pauṣaṭa;
at the end, hūṃ phaṭ for killing;
for summoning and for subjugating, jaḥ and hriḥ.
Having worshipped with whatever is at hand,
the vajra holder should praise the god of fire:

Son of Lokeśvara, of Brahmā, of the supreme lord, king of the fire gods, empowered by Ṭakki,
who burns all the afflictions with supreme wisdom:
to the fire god, the upholder, I bow down.

Son of Brahmā, protector of the world,
king of the fire gods, supreme sage,
in order to protect all creatures
you emanated a body through the power of compassion,
in the guise of a sage accomplished in spells,
with the light of wisdom that burns the afflictions, blazing in splendor like the fire at the end of the eon.
You possess the higher perceptions and the bases of miraculous power, you ride a mount emanated through skillful means,
you speak spells and hold a rosary,
you bear a water pot filled with potent nectar,
and cool all beings with the nectar of the Dharma.
Free of faults and misdeeds, you live the pure life.

Though dwelling in the world, you have passed beyond sorrow;
though you have found peace, your compassion is great.
Therefore I praise you and bow down to you.

Then recite the hundred syllables, perform the purifying sprinkling,
and in the heart of the fire god generate one's own deity;
then perform the invitation, worship, praise and the rest:

Pervading purely like space, without any object of reference, the dharmakāya is like the sky, indivisible; yet you show yourself in a reflected form of method and wisdom.
Blessed One, together with your retinue, please come here.
For the sake of all sentient beings without exception you crush the hosts of Māra with all their armies, without remainder, and you know all things exactly as they are.
Blessed One, together with your retinue, please come here.

oṃ ehyehi bhagavān nibhabataṃ samayena ca arghaṃ taṃ saṃpratīccha pūjīcarya prasida me

Present the welcoming water and perform the summoning and the rest.
When the blessing and empowerment are well completed, offer worship, praise, the articles of offering and so forth as before, and so please the fire of wisdom.
Take the aim you desire,
and with the hundred syllables request it to depart.
With a full ladle of the remaining substances worship the fire god and request him to depart:
Agni, you have accomplished my aims and the aims of others; now depart.
Go back just as you came,
and accomplish all my accomplishments.

oṃ kṛtvāva sarbasatvārtha sidhirdatta yathānugācchatāṃ buddhabiṣaya punaya muḥsbyin

Through the fire offering the deities are satisfied, and once satisfied they bestow accomplishments.
Whatever excesses and omissions there are in the secret mantra,
all of them are made good by fire offerings.

For this reason Vajraḍāka has highly extolled the fire offering.
By this the vajra ones are pleased,
and the fire of wisdom is delighted of itself.
The Beneficent Victor is pleased,
the Lord of the Golden Arrow is pleased, Padmanarteśvara is pleased,
the King of Supreme Iron is pleased; Brahmā, Śakra, Mahendra, Viṣṇu, Vāyu and the Great Fire,
the Skull-Bearer and Kāmadeva,
the moon, the sun and the other planets,
the Earth, and the Noose-Holder (Varuṇa), Kubera, and likewise the guardians of the directions,
the King of Dharma (Yama) and the nāgas,
the gandharvas, asuras and kiṃnaras,
the gods dwelling in the Heaven of the Thirty-Three,
those dwelling in Akaniṣṭha,
those who dwell among the Great Kings,
the Paranirmitavaśavartin gods,
the Nirmāṇarati gods,
those who have reached the Pure Abodes,
those dwelling in the world realm of Radiance,
those dwelling in the Sahā world,
the sentient beings living on the four continents,
those who dwell in the three realms,
the world of beings together with its container,
the multitude of shoots, the grasses and the rest,
those who dwell on the ground Joyous,
those who have gone on to the Stainless,
those dwelling on the Radiant,
those who have made the Immovable their abode,
those who have reached the Cloud of Dharma,
those who have gone to the Difficult to Master,
those who have attained the Far Reaching,
and those dwelling on the Luminous:
the protectors, lords of the ten grounds,

the eight noble persons,
the perfect buddhas and the śrāvakas,
those like the rhinoceros horn and the sword, hell beings, pretas and animals,
gods, asuras and humans:
all of them are delighted by the rite of fire offering.

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, the ninth chapter: the activity of the fire offering.

The yogin who knows the way of mantra,
in a pleasing place free of living creatures,
well cleansed and smeared with fragrant water, should begin the cremation fire offering at the proper time.
First wash the body with fragrant water over which Amṛtakuṇḍalin has been recited.
Then, in the yoga of one's own deity, imagine it as Vairocana;
confer the vajra vow
and give the vase empowerment.
On the eyes and so forth set Delusion and the rest,
and place the three vajras at the three places.
By properly employing the vajra hearth, purify it through the stages of the fire offering.
On the third day
gather up the string of bones.
Having purified them by sprinkling milk and fine scents, properly build a stūpa for them.

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, the tenth chapter: the activity of the cremation fire offering.

The intelligent practitioner should turn the feast gathering for the maṇḍala of male and female yogins with special enjoyments.
The patron who desires merit should offer a maṇḍala with scents and flowers, and also offer a dot of scent.

Having bowed, he should make supplication, and with other requests concerning the commitments urge them to pacifying and the other rites.
Beforehand, the Dharma should be taught to the Saṅgha, and the guru, who is the Buddha, should also be pleased.
A fee should be offered to the guru,
and after that, to the whole assembly.

The yogins gathered at that place,
having made supplication to Nīladaṇḍa, will come to know who is fortunate and who is not;
so first come the indications and the verbal code.
Here it should be known by the indications,
by which brother and sister are recognized without any doubt.
When someone shows one finger,
it is the question, "Have you come?"
Two means, "You are welcome."
Holding the left thumb
should be known as the sign of well-being.
To one who shows the ring finger,
one should offer the little finger.
To one who shows the middle finger,
one should offer the index finger.
To one who shows the ring finger,
one should clearly show the throat.
To one who shows the garment,
one should clearly show the trident.
To one who shows the breast,
one should clearly show the junction.
To one who shows the ground,
one should clearly show the wheel.
To one who shows a frown,
one should signal, without making it evident, by loosening the topknot.
To one who shows the forehead,
one should clearly show the back.
To one who shows the sole of the foot,

one should frolic in play upon a rock.
These are the signs answering each sign,
and they should also be distinguished by the commitment.
Then the yoginī said,
"How wonderful! The son has great compassion!"
If she shows the hand of the garland, it is said to mean, "Let us assemble." Having come forward by the garland, one fully takes up the commitments and observances.

madana is liquor, bala is flesh,
and likewise malayaja.
Going is kheṭa; a corpse is śrapa;
the bone ornament is niraṅśu;
brekhana is declared to be "come!";
kṛbita is held to be the little drum;
dudur is said to be the unfortunate;
the fortunate is held to be kaliṃjaraṃ;
the untouchable is called dinanimaṃ;
the skull cup is padmabanjanam;
food is tripitrikaraṃ;
vegetables are malatidaṃnaṃ;
excrement is called catursamaṃ;
kasturi is held to be urine;
sihla should be known as the self-arisen;
kabura is known as semen;
great flesh is called śalija;
the union of the two organs is kunturu;
bola is explained as the vajra,
and kakkola is known as the lotus.

By the divisions of the division into families,
the families are taught to be of five kinds.
In this secret language
the five families are called "buddhas."
The Ḍombī is taught to be the vajra family;
the dancer is held to be the lotus family;
the jewel family is the cook woman;

the twice-born woman is known as the tathāgata family;
the karma family is the cook woman.
These consorts bestow accomplishments.
Their fluid is the vajra;
having worshipped it, the one who keeps the observance bows down.

O Vajragarbha, great being,
whatever marvelous words of the secret language
I have taught to you,
hold them all with faith.
O, whoever has received empowerment from the vajra and does not speak the secret language, his commitment will be broken:
of this there is no doubt.
Plague and harm, thieves,
grahas, fevers and poisons as well:
if one does not speak the secret language,
one dies even if one is a buddha.
If one does not speak these words to those who know one's own commitment, the yoginīs born in the four places become angry with him.

At times of practice, at auspicious festivals,
in rites for restoring the commitments and the like,
on the fourteenth of the fortnight of the pretas,
and at the times of the eighth day,
in a charnel ground or under a mountain overhang, likewise in a haunt of nonhuman beings,
or in a solitary place or on the shore of the ocean,
one should begin these feasts.
There one should always arrange things with care.
Upon nine great conches or the figure of a corpse,
or else upon a tiger skin,
or likewise in the middle of a charnel-ground cloth, visualize one's own special deity, richly adorned with fine ornaments.
With everything actually provided, or else visualized,

make the fire offering into the abode of matter.
In the east, south, north and west, delight those who dwell in the directions;
in the intermediate directions
worship the goddesses at the sacred time.
The five hooks and the five nectars,
the banner, the one struck by a weapon, the seven-born,
the king, śāli and the other substances:
with the stages of blessing them properly,
and with outer, inner and secret offerings, one should worship the deity together with the host of ḍākinīs.
There, mother and sister,
sister's daughter and mother-in-law:
when one has then worshipped them extensively,
the feast gathering will be accomplished.

A great skull cup of a single piece, filled with excellent liquor,
the fortunate woman should offer to the guru;
having prostrated, she should bow herself down.
He should take it with the lotus hand,
and with that same hand it should be offered.
Then the practitioner should bow again and again.
Since song and dance are taught to be causes of accomplishment,
one should worship with them as well:

The pola abides in the kakkola;
mummuni, O kakkola!
O, you who beat the kripita, compassion makes no clamor.
There bala is to be eaten,
and madana is drunk firmly.
O, kalija should be admitted,
and dudura should be shunned.
causama, kasthuri,
camphor and sihla are to be smeared on.
śāli and malatidaṃnaṃ:

there the legs are to be eaten.
With the garland, khan and kheta are performed;
pure and impure are not regarded.
The limbs are adorned with niraṃsu,
and there the śrapa is laid out.
malaja is kunduru,
and dindaṃmaṃ is not shunned there.

Dance in the form of Heruka,
and practice yoga with undistracted mindfulness.
Do it with a mind intent on meditation,
a mind filled with passion and well habituated.
As Vajradharma and the buddhas, and as the yoginī, these are the songs and dances of the human woman:
sing the songs and dance supremely.
By this very means one protects the circle,
and likewise protects oneself as well;
by this one brings the world under one's power;
this itself is the recitation of mantra.
Where songs are sung with faith and where dances are performed with faith, with Gaṇapati, the lord of the gathering, going first,
there the scents should be examined.
First the smell of garlic and the like,
then again the smell of vultures,
and after that camphor and malaja:
these are the signs of blessing through song.
The call of geese and the hum of bees come to be heard following the song, and the cries of jackals as well:
these should be watched for in the grove outside.
Wherever practitioners and yoginīs eat the feast of the feast gathering, it accomplishes every accomplishment that is desired.

When in this way the songs and dances, the auspicious verses,
the aspiration prayers and the whole rite have been completed,
one adorns the limbs with ornaments,
takes up the vajra and bell,
and, oneself well endowed with yoga, mixes together all the first portions and the remainders and casts the torma at a crossroads.
After that, endowed with union, one remains at ease.

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, the eleventh chapter: the activity of the feast offering.

The wise one, in all places and at all times,
in order to accomplish every desired aim and to exhaust and pacify the obstructors, should constantly give torma.
In a skull cup set upon wind and fire,
the five hooks and the five nectars
are processed by blazing, expelling and the rest.
Then give torma to the guardians of the directions and to the great bhūtas.
With the right hand wield the vajra,
with the left ring the bell,
and expel them with the touch of the changing mudrās;
with the gazes expel enemies and obstructors.
With stances accompanied by mantra press down the eastern quarter;
in this same sequence
press down the others too, door by door.
With the right and left hands,
with flourishes, send forth to the borders and so on.
With a slightly moving threatening glare,
make the eyebrows move.
The gestures that bring beings under control are:
the right extended and the left extended,
the right drawn in and the left drawn in.
The principal master, the vajra holder,
endowed with the yoga, performs the mantras and mudrās:
the kneeling stance, the principal foot stance,

the circling stance and the reversing stance;
oṃ hūṃ phaṭ
This is for the eastern door.
The knee-touching stance and the left-stamping stance,
the circling stance and the lion's-leap stance;
oṃ hūṃ ā phaṭ
This is for the southern door.
The right extended and the left extended,
and the round stance of the sa ga;
oṃ hūṃ aṃ aṃ aṃ phaṭ
This is for the western door.
The concordant stance and the discordant stance, and the supreme foot stance with one leg drawn in and the left held;
oṃ hana māra duṣṭaṃ ghātaya āḥ hūṃ hrīḥ hūṃ phaṭ
This is for the northern door.

On a square maṇḍala of scent,
make worship with white flowers and the like,
and at the eastern door give scent and rice,
butter, sugar, curd, and honey mixed with butter.
Bind two vajra fists,
join them back to back,
link the little fingers like a chain,
join them in the manner of a noose and interlock the two index fingers.
This mudrā of the King of Desire summons the gods.
oṃ batali mahābatali hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ jaḥ svāhā
oṃ ā The Wanderer and the Great Wanderer, Day and Moon, and likewise Accomplishment,
the Queen of Sight and the Queen of the Moon,
the goddesses Umā and Gaṅgā,
the lovely assembled stars,
all the hosts of planets and the lord of hosts, Kārttika and the Glorious Goddess,
the goddess who holds the hare-marked moon, Akala and Upagala,
the kings of the asuras and of the gods,

the Swollen One and the Great Swollen One:
please come to this place of offering.
hū he hoḥ ākarṣaya ākarṣaya samaya dhebe hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā
These are the summoning mantra and mudrā.
That same mudrā with the two index fingers flicked open
is the mudrā of satisfying.
Snap the fingers three times and offer with this mantra:
oṃ bhakṣa bhakṣa samaya tiṣṭha jruṃ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā
These make up the rite of the torma for the gods.

In the west, on a maṇḍala of scent,
make worship with yellow and white flowers,
and offer milk mixed with blood, the three sweet substances,
and a golden vessel filled with milk.
With the mudrā of the King of Desire and with this mantra, summon them:
oṃ batalamihātalaba hūṃ hūṃ jaḥ svāhā Nāga kings, Ananta and Vāsuki, Takṣaka and Balacāra, Padma and Mahāpadma, Śaṅkhapāla and Kulika,
the Goddess and the Great Goddess, Moon Crest and Great Crest,
the Staff Holder and the Great Staff Holder,
the Great Club and Huyin, Nanda and Upananda, Sāgara and Mahāsāgara,
Heat and Great Heat,
Glorious Light and Great Light, Following Light and the Beautiful One,
the Greatly Beautiful One and Good Serpent,
the Very Strong One, Chili,
and the Great Chili and the others:
please come to this place of offering.
oṃ āgacchaya āgacchaya mahānāgādhipati sarba bhurabhu phuphu svāhā Bind the vajra fist tightly and raise the thumb and the little finger;

open the right hand
and join it in the manner of a serpent's hood.
oṃ bhakṣaya bhakṣaya samaya tiṣṭha jrūṃ hūṃ svāhā
This is the mantra and mudrā that delight the nāgas.
Snap the fingers three times and cast the torma.
These make up the rite of the torma for the nāgas.

In the north, make a triangular maṇḍala
with red sandalwood and the like,
and adorn it with red flowers and the like.
Set out seven vessels holding sāli rice, honey and curd, together with the five nectars.
Summon with the mudrā of the King of Desire and with this mantra:
oṃ Maṇibhadra and Pūrṇabhadra, Good Bliss and Good Victor, Joyful Kīla and Great Kīla, Good Kīla and Lotus Crest, Conch Crest, the Dancer,
the Great Dancer and the Piercer,
the Cutter and the Completer, Wealth, All Wealth and Good Wealth, Fair Form, Play and Great Play,
Laughter, Sport and the Shaker, Glorious Good and the Lovely One:
by this command of Vajreśvara, come.
oṃ maṇibhadrāya svāhā
oṃ purṇabhadrāya svāhā
oṃ danabhadrāya svāhā
oṃ baiśrabaṇāya svāhā
oṃ bijikuṇḍaline svāhā
oṃ kilimiliniya svāhā
oṃ munaketraya svāhā
oṃ jalendrāye svāhā Maṇibhadra and Pūrṇabhadra, Lord Dhanada and Vaiśravaṇa, Good Victor, Garland of Music,
the Lord of the Face and the Lord of Beings:

these and the others, together with your retinues,
come to this place where torma is given.
Thus the yakṣas and yakṣiṇīs are invited.
hūṃ he hoḥ ākarṣaya ākarṣaya samaya tibe hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā Bind the vajra fist, circle it and place it at the heart;
please them with this mantra and send them off:
oṃ danatibatila phruṃ svāhā
That is the rite of the torma for the yakṣas.

Standing in the south in the vajra stance,
with red sandalwood and the like
make an outer triangular maṇḍala, and strew red flowers upon it.
Dried fish and dried meat, garlic paste, a vessel of blood, sesame, salt crystals and fluids,
and above all the five nectars,
foods of many kinds,
and vessels filled with the five pulses and with cooked pulses:
set these out in front.
Summon with the mudrā of the King of Desire and with this mantra:
oṃ batali mahābatali hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ jaḥ svāhā
oṃ You who dwell in lone trees and charnel grounds, in mountains, cliffs and caves,
at the edges of the land, on roads and in fields,
and above all in empty houses,
in vessels, on plains and on the face of the earth,
and above all in the houses of caṇḍālas:
the Black One, Rudra and the Great Rudra, and those who keep company with Devadatta,
the Black Terrifier and the Terrifying One, Beyond Joy and the King of Obstructors;
the Ager and the Fierce Woman, the Terrifying Woman and she who is praised as the Middle One; Jayā and Vijayā, Ajitā and Aparājitā;
the Black Woman, the Good Woman, the Great Black Woman,

the Stout Black Woman and the Yoginī, the Lady of Power and the Moon Lady,
the Fierce Woman, the Hostile One, Lambaki, the Robber Woman and the Lamp Woman,
the Terrifying Yoginī who dwells in the land,
the Fierce Woman of Great Form,
she who bares her fangs, the Woman of the Great Skull,
she of the skull garland and she of the khaṭvāṅga, she of the great serpent, she who bears the sword and the axe,
and likewise she who holds the vajra and the bow,
the goddesses who are sovereign ladies,
the very reality of the five ḍākinīs,
the great maṇḍala of union that accomplishes every activity, and likewise the chief, Vajreśvara,
the great body of the Tathāgata,
the stainless union, the Unborn Lady:
by the command of Vajreśvarī,
all of you, all of you, come!
oṃ kakkaḍhana bhandhana khakhādana sarba duṣṭaṃ hana hana śātaya so-and-so hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ jaḥ svāhā Bind the mudrā of Trailokyavijaya and make a chain of the two index fingers:
oṃ tiṣṭha hūṃ hūṃ bhakṣa phaṭ jaḥ svāhā
Do it with this mantra and mudrā, and send the torma off with three snaps of the fingers.
These make up the rite of the torma for the bhūtas.

The torma for the great bhūtas
I shall explain in order according to the scripture.
Within the element of space visualize an eight-petaled lotus.
On the eastern petal imagine Śakra;
in the south place Antaka; Varuṇa on the western petal,
and likewise in the north place Dhanada;
in the corner of fire, the Great Fire;

in the corner of Nairṛti, the lord of the rākṣasas;
in the northwestern corner, Vāyu;
in the corner of Īśāna, the lord of the bhūtas.
The moon, the sun, Brahmā and the rest,
the excellent gods of Brahmā's assembly,
those who stand before Brahmā,
the Tuṣita gods and the Harming Ones,
the Great Kings who have truly arisen,
the Paranirmitavaśavartin gods,
the Nirmāṇarati gods,
those who dwell in the Pure Abodes,
those who truly dwell in great bliss,
those who dwell in Not Small,
the world realm of Radiance, and those who dwell in the Heaven of the Thirty-Three:
place all of these above.
Within the source of phenomena:
Balacāra and Śaṅkhapāla, Ananta and likewise Vāsuki, Takṣaka and Kulika, Mahāpadma and the very Padma;
the asuras and the hell beings:
imagine these below the source of phenomena.
Brahmā and the rest arise from the syllable oṃ,
Śakra and the rest from the syllable hūṃ, Balacāra and the rest from the syllable a;
they have two arms and a single face.
The gods above are white, Indra and the rest are black in color,
and Balacāra and the rest are deep red.
Consorts of their own color embrace their limbs.
Holding vajra and bell in their hands,
they sit properly on their seats with the right leg extended.
Seal Brahmā and the rest with the mudrā of permanence, Śakra and the rest with the vajra,
and Balacāra and the rest with Narteśvara:
all of them are born from the three families.

Gaurī summons them,
Caurī binds them with the noose, Vetālī fetters them with chains,
and Ghasmarī brings them under control with the bell.
Then give welcoming water and water to cool the feet,
and accomplish the torma according to the rite.
On the maṇḍalas of wind and of fire imagine a lotus vessel arisen from a.
With blazing and with wrath accomplish the five nectars.
Having meditated on this as having the nature of water, bless it with oṃ and send it forth:
oṃ anda jama jala jakṣa bhūta bahni bau rakṣa canda sujja māda pappa tala bātāla aṣṭa sapa svāhā idaṃ baliṃ bhuja jigha phulla dhuppa māṃsa piṃgha ambha sappa kajja sādha khanti khuṇi pheḍa ghata oṃ akāro mukhaṃ sarba dharmāṇāṃ ādyanutpannatāta oṃ āḥ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā Having worshipped them fully and praised them, and requested all the aims one desires,
then, having pleased them, request them to depart, reciting the hundred syllables:
oṃ bajrasatva samaya manupālaya bajrasatva tvenopatiṣṭha dṛḍho me bhaba supoṣyo me bhaba sutoṣyo me bhaba śaśvato me bhaba anurakto me bhaba dhidaya me adhitiṣṭha sarba siddhi me prayaccha sarba karma su ca me cittaṃ śriyaḥ kuru hūṃ ha ha ha ha ho bhagavān mā me muñca bajri bhaba mahāsamaya satva āḥ muḥ
When the wise one has worshipped with torma, the gods are pleased and all the bhūtas do good;
saṃsāra becomes good, happy and free of turmoil, and the activities of pacifying, enriching, subjugating and the rest are accomplished.

From The Path of the Stages of Activity of Glorious Hevajra, the twelfth chapter: the activity of the torma.

At the times of the torma and the rest that were taught above, the wise one should worship the Victor together with his retinue
with outer, inner and secret offerings.

Flowers, incense and lamps,
conches of scent and the like, set on the right;
on the left the welcoming water, and in front the vessel.
Having set them out, bless them and offer them.
First, with pure water itself, offer the purifying sprinkling in full:
oṃ sarba saṃśodhani hūṃ Second, with scented water, offer water to cool the feet:
oṃ niriti hūṃ khaṃ
Third, sweet milk
should be offered as water to refresh the mouth:
oṃ bajra naibidye āḥ hūṃ svāhā Fourth, with the thumb and index finger, flowers should be offered:
oṃ bajra puṣpe āḥ hūṃ

These supreme offering waters of mantra, stainless, pure and pleasing,
I offer with faith:
accept them and be pleased with me.
oṃ mahā āmrita arghaṃ pratīcca svāhā
These flowers, fine and wholesome,
pure, from a pure place of origin,
I offer with faith:
accept them and be pleased with me.
oṃ sarba tathāgata puṣpa pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
These fragrant incenses from the groves, beneficial in their essence,
I offer with faith:
accept them and be pleased with me.
oṃ sarba tathāgata dhāpa pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
This lamp that destroys the rākṣasas and purifies, wholesome and dispelling darkness,
I offer with faith:
accept it and be pleased with me.
oṃ sarba tathāgata aloke pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ

This is a fine and wholesome scent,
pure, from a pure place of origin;
I offer it with faith:
accept it and be pleased with me.
oṃ sarba tathāgata gandhe pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
These foods to eat and to chew, in perfect measure, endowed with color, aroma and taste,
I offer with faith:
accept them and be pleased with me.
oṃ sarba tathāgata akāro mukhaṃ sarba dharmaṇāṃ ādyanutpannatvāta
This host of music, cymbals and the rest, endowed with the resonance of melody,
I offer with faith:
accept it and be pleased with me.
oṃ bajra ghaṇḍe raṇita praraṇita saṃpraraṇita sarba buddha kṣetra prajña pāramitā nāda svabhābe de bajra dharmā dṛdaya nisantoṣani phriṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ

A skull cup well filled with the substances, set upon the maṇḍalas of wind and fire,
is blessed with method and wisdom, the five wisdoms,
and body, speech and mind.
Having fully accomplished the nectar of wisdom,
join the tips of the thumb and the ring finger,
and to all the yogins and yoginīs offer it to each with a sprinkle from the thumb.
Then, taking from its center, taste the flavor of the nectar oneself.
oṃ āḥ hūṃ oṃ sarba tathāgata amṛta bajra svabhāba ātmako'haṃ

Bind two vajra fists
and place them at the waist.
Wrathful, graceful and laughing,
set the body as in the three gestures of summoning.
In the manner of scattering flowers;
with the gesture of a branch for incense;
worshipping with a lamp with its wick;
and following with a body anointed with perfume;

the graceful one, graceful with her hands;
the garland, the ḍākinī of the garland;
the hūṃ of song, the commitment hūṃ;
and dance itself, by bending the thighs;
strumming in the manner of a vīṇā, blowing in the manner of a flute, blowing in the manner of a horn, clashing in the manner of cymbals, beating in the manner of a drum,
moving the limbs in the manner of a dance;
waving in the manner of a fan,
raising in the manner of a victory banner, spreading in the manner of a canopy, fluttering in the manner of a pennant, covering in the manner of a parasol, rattling in the manner of a small hand drum,
striking in the manner of a gong;
smiling in the manner of laughter, raging in the manner of wrath, flirting in the manner of grace,
standing proud in the manner of pride, drawing close and embracing the breasts,
in the manner of wielding the vajra,
and bowing down in the manner of prostration:
Gaurī holds the hare-marked moon,
Caurī the vessel of the sun,
Vetālī has water in her hand,
Ghasmarī holds medicine,
Pukkasī holds the vajra, Śabarī the vessel of elixir,
and Caṇḍālī beats the small drum;
with great passion, passionately attached, Ḍombī embraces him from the shoulder.
With these the chief deity is worshipped.

Having thus worshipped extensively,
the intelligent one should offer praise.

Extolling the qualities of the Blessed One is also a limb of worship.
These offerings are unsurpassed;
they please all the buddhas.
The buddhas, worshipped with offerings,
will bring about the accomplishments one desires.

Having understood sound as threefold,
offer it to the deities:
that itself is the Blessed One, the vajra bearer, Vajrasattva of great renown.
Having understood form as threefold,
offer it to the deities:
that itself is the Blessed One, the king,
Vajra Vairocana, the sovereign himself.
Having understood scent as threefold,
offer it to the deities:
that itself is the Blessed One, the buddha renowned as the Great Jewel.
Having understood taste as threefold,
offer it to the deities:
that itself is the Blessed One, passion itself, Vajradharma, the Tathāgata.
Having understood touch as threefold,
offer it to the deities:
that itself is the Blessed One, the Manifold,
who bestows the unfailing fruit.

Offer song to the vajra bearer;
offer dance to the buddhas;
likewise scent to the supreme Hira, food to eat and to chew to the Supreme One of the World, and the offering of garments to Paramāśva.
These are the sacred offerings.
By making the vajra offerings
one pleases all the vajra bearers.
Black aloeswood to Hevajra, white sandalwood to the Beneficent One,

offer red to the Lord of the World,
saffron to Vajra Light,
and to the King of Seven, all of them:
hūṃ scents arisen from the vajra.
By applying these scents well one attains sacred buddhahood itself.

Offer the bitter and the pungent to Vajra;
offer the sweet to Vajra Eternal;
the sour to Vajra Sun;
likewise salt to the Lord of the World;
to the King of Horses, all of them;
and the astringent too should be carefully assigned.
For Hevajra, the vajra holder,
there are dark-colored flowers with short stems.
Jasmine, mālatī,
and kunda: always offer these to the Buddha.
The supreme lord of trees, the supreme Stainless, should be offered to the Illuminator.
The supreme lord's red lotus,
red bandhuka, and pāṭala:
offer these to Padma, Lord of Dance;
offer them to Paramāśva, the vajra holder.
Pleasing through the Vajra Vehicle:
this is the ultimate offering.
One who has wholly abandoned conceptual thought,
who has thoroughly cultivated the mind of awakening,
whose body and mind are fully purified:
that one's offering is unsurpassed.
The being who has not cultivated the vehicle of the Middle Way, being more devoted to the lesser vehicle:
that one's offering is conventional.
In accordance with the word of Vajraḍāka, delighting in recitation and meditation,
one always passes beyond the wheel.
By pleasing all the buddhas,

one will attain the accomplishment one desires.

From The Path of the Sequence of Activities of Glorious Hevajra, the activity of offering: the thirteenth chapter.

Since whatever belongs to the three realms is stained,
having set the mind firmly on the sacred that transcends them, there is the single path of the Victors, endowed with wisdom and means, profound and vast, not the domain of logicians.
Therefore, through the succession of the lineage of the guru's instructions, the Lord of Victors' treasury of the essence of nectar,
the path of the ocean of the mantra way, is here condensed:
the Path of the Sequence of Activities of Hevajra.
Those who see that these dependently arisen phenomena, distinct results from a gathering of causes and conditions, by their very nature have a capacity to produce beyond thought,
who do not let such conventional truth go to waste, and who realize that, since they arise thus from causes and conditions, in the ultimate sense they lack intrinsic nature:
for those, undefeated, rich in the wealth of wisdom, adornment with this Blazing Jewel becomes beautiful.
But those who let conventional cause and effect go to waste, who are unskilled in the ultimate way and have become deluded, paupers without the wealth of wisdom:
for them it does not become beautiful, like ornaments on a corpse.
The wise, having untied the knot of clinging to self-grasping,
in order to bring self and others across to unsurpassed awakening, wearing the armor of compassion, endowed with wisdom and means,
have nothing they may not do with body, speech, and mind.
Therefore, at the request of noble friends,
when the path of the learned had fallen into decline,
with the eye of wisdom and the feet of reasoning
I have examined it well and traversed it, free from fear of error.
By whatever merit I have gained in composing this,
through this path, the sādhana of the Blazing Jewel, may all beings swiftly cross the ocean of saṃsāra and swiftly attain the state of Hevajra.

The sādhana called The Blazing Jewel, the Path of the Sequence of Activities of Glorious Hevajra, is complete. It was composed by the master, the great scholar Prajñendraruci, and is complete. It was translated, edited, and finalized by that same Indian preceptor and the monk Shākya Yeshé.

Translator's Notes

• □□□ in the line on recitation is read as □□□, "ten thousand". The lines naming the attributes and crown seals of the ten wrathful ones are very terse. Here the "slayer of Yama" is Yamāntaka, Aparājita is Prajñāntaka, and Amṛta is Vighnāntaka (Amṛtakuṇḍalin). □□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□, "joined palms". □□□□□, "the Seer", probably refers to Avalokita, but this is uncertain. The trees listed in the site test are given under their Indian names as the Tibetan spells them.
• The lists of dance stances, hand gestures, sentiments and the parts of song are technical terms of Indian performance. They are translated literally and some are uncertain. The seven songs correspond to the seven notes of the Indian scale: ṣaḍja, ṛṣabha, gāndhāra, madhyama, pañcama, dhaivata and niṣāda. The line "With the syllables ma ṭa, for eyes of sun and moon" is terse, and its sense is uncertain.
• The five medicines are named in Sanskrit transliteration, and their spelling in the Tibetan is irregular. The line "Buddhas, who grant the aims to be done for beings and their retinues" is compressed, and its construction is uncertain. In "the master, the gods of the elders", the phrase □□□□□□□□□□ is taken literally. The stick-casting lines are terse: □□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□ "having chewed it", and □□□□ as "cowhide".
• Two evident copyists' slips are translated by sense: □□□□□□□□□ ("hold") is read as □□□ ("cut off") in "cut off the stream of the lower realms," and □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ ("five and a half jewels") as □□□□□□ ("powder of the five precious substances"). □□□□□□ is taken as the Great Vehicle (□□□□□□□), as the next verse confirms. The line-by-line instructions for the maṇḍala's eight subdivisions (door recess, wall, garlands, ledge, cornice, parapet, archways) are terse technical shorthand; they are rendered literally and the exact architectural reference of some phrases is uncertain.
• Some evident copyists' slips are translated by sense: □□□□□ ("own view") as □□□□□ ("own deity"); in the vajra family verse, □□□□□□ ("cultivation") as □□□□□□ ("vow"), matching the parallel lotus family line; □□□□□□□□□ ("do what one cannot") as □□□□□□□□□ ("as far as one is able"); and the instrumental in □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ as a dative ("to the bhūtas"). In the proclamation of truth, Maheśvara ("Great Lord") is used as an epithet of Hevajra, not of Śiva.
• The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is obscure; it is taken as referring to the ancillary (literally "concordant") pledges. The verse beginning "In both cases, whether it was received or not" is terse, and its sense (that the eye-opening proceeds whatever the outcome of the flower-casting and the descent) is a probable interpretation. "The fifth of the deathless substances" renders □□□□□□□□□□ literally; it refers to one of the five nectars.
• Some evident copyists' slips are translated by sense: □□□□□□□□□ ("empty") in the Kapilavastu verse as □□□□□□□□□□ ("praise"); □□□□□□□□□□□□ ("Māra's bliss") as □□□□□□□□□□□□ ("Māra's hosts"); and □□□□□ as □□□□□ ("the goddess"). □□□□□□□□ is the standard placeholder "so-and-so" for the initiate's name. The phrase □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ ("with the water of one's own consort and of the male") is terse, and its precise ritual reference is uncertain.
• Some terse lines are uncertain. □□□□□□□□□□□□ is rendered "hatred enjoying hatred," as the parallel with delusion and passion requires. □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken to mean giving up reliance on a mother-of-pearl vessel and the like, so that the substance is taken directly with the tongue. "Twofold in the mind" (□□□□□□□□□□) probably refers to the five faculties and the five powers together forming the five walls. The meaning of "the flowing family" (□□□□□□□□□□□□) introducing the empowerment verse is unclear.

• The opening verses and the dialogue that follows correspond to the wisdom-empowerment passages of the Hevajra Tantra. "Delivering" renders bsgral ba in its sense of rescuing (Skt. trāṇa), not the wrathful sense. In "why should I not be able?" the text reads mi thig, taken as a slip for mi thub. In "it appears like an illusory form" the text reads sdang, taken as a slip for snang. "The illuminator" (gsal byed / snang byed) is understood as the sun disk. The line "Here there is constant vanquishing" is terse and its exact sense uncertain.

• The deities' quarters are named after their guardians: Indra (east), Yama (south), Varuṇa (west), Kubera (north), Īśāna (northeast), Agni (southeast), Nairṛti (southwest) and the wind (northwest). The line on the colors of the faces is terse ("the main face is like the moon"), and its intended color scheme is uncertain. In Pukkasī's description, "sapphire blue and yellow on the right" follows the Tibetan, but the hand emblem on the right seems to be missing. "What is ripened by water" (chu smin) among the offerings, "you who bear the lordly fragrance" in Caṇḍālī's verse, and "he gathers the illnesses" for the right hands are literal renderings of obscure phrases. In the sequence of eight faces, four legs and sixteen arms, these are the eight liberations, the four means of attraction and the sixteen emptinesses.

• "In the place of the egg-born" renders sgong skyes literally; it seems to name a site in the body, but which one is unclear. The lines "Then, on the sun above, the sun itself; its rays as the tip of a hair" are compressed, and their sense is uncertain. In the inner-elements verses, "bliss therefore is not reality itself" follows the Tibetan de nyid min. Two items in the lists have not been identified: "barkata" among the five barks (perhaps the parkaṭī fig) and "lagu and drantika" among the five fragrances, so they are kept as spelled. In "cleanse the stain of aversion" the text reads spyod, taken as a slip for sbyong. In "for the five products of the cow" the text reads pha'i, taken as a slip for ba'i. "Cow's water" stands for the cow's urine of the five cow products.

• "By the one who benefits both" renders phan pa gnyis kyis literally; given the deity names in the lines that follow, it may stand for a deity presiding over pacifying, but it has not been identified. "The half-border" (phyed ma) for the colors of the hearth is uncertain. "Sacrificial wood" reads mchod sbyin zhing as mchod sbyin shing. In "the vajra expanse" verse, rdo rje dbyings may be meant as the name Vajradhātu.

• Several plant names could not be identified with confidence and are given literally or as spelled: among the fruits "snake-fear" (sbrul 'jigs), "mouth-drip" (kha 'dzag), skyema and rtseba; among the flowers aśvaka, glu, katangpa and sidrup; and the dreü pulses (dre lu). "Plakṣa" takes ba la kṣa as the Indian fig of that name. The line "one sets a hearth smaller than the hearth" is obscure in the Tibetan.

• The four deities "the Beneficent Victor," "the Lord of the Golden Arrow," "Padmanarteśvara" and "the King of Supreme Iron" appear to be lords of the deity families; apart from Padmanarteśvara I could not identify their Sanskrit names with confidence and have translated them literally. "Vajraḍāka has highly extolled" reads the request form mdzod as the past mdzad, which the context of a scriptural authority requires. In the list of grounds, "pha rol dri med gang phyir" is read as "gone on to the Stainless," and sbyang dkar as sbyang dka' ("Difficult to Master," Sudurjayā); the text names only eight of the ten grounds and they are given as listed. "Those like the rhinoceros horn and the sword" refers to the pratyekabuddhas (khaḍgaviṣāṇa). The vessel called gun dhe is taken as a kuṇḍikā, an ascetic's water pot.

• This section follows the secret-language (sandhyābhāṣā) chapter of the Hevajra Tantra; the coded words and the song are given as the Tibetan spells them. Where the Tibetan has ma la ya dza "likewise," its meaning is not stated. "Rab can" after "come!" is read as "declared." Both the jewel and the karma families are given here as rang 'tshed ma, "the cook woman"; parallel lists name two different women, but this text is translated as it stands. "Lung" in the opening (rendered "indications") may stand for lus, bodily signs. The "rock" for pho long and "the junction" for mtshams are uncertain. The "five hooks," "banner," "one struck by a weapon" and "seven-born" are coded names for sacramental flesh. "Abode of matter" (bem po'i gnas) is taken as the body as the site of the inner fire offering. In "with the garland, khan and kheta," phreng ba is a Tibetan rendering of the first part of the coded word for "coming." "The legs" renders rkang pa literally. Ga bur and ga pur are the ordinary Tibetan word for camphor and are translated. Tshogs kyi bdag po is rendered Gaṇapati as the house glossary directs, though here it may simply mean the leader of the feast.

• Many of the gods, nāgas and yakṣas invoked here are given only in Tibetan translation; where I could not identify the Sanskrit name with confidence (for example the Wanderer, the Queen of Sight, the Swollen One, Moon Crest, Good Bliss, the Kīlas, Garland of Music, the Lord of the Face), the name is translated literally. Balacāra for stobs kyi rgyu is a tentative reconstruction. Akala, Upagala, Huyin and Chili follow the Tibetan sound-spellings. "The round stance of the sa ga" is uncertain. "Day" (nyin) may stand for the sun (nyi). "The five hooks" is a coded name for sacramental flesh, as in the feast chapter.

• Several goddesses and spirits in the invocation of the bhūtas are given only in Tibetan translation; where I could not identify their Sanskrit names with confidence (the Black One, the Ager, the Middle One, the Lady of Power, the Hostile One and others) they are translated literally, and Lambaki follows the Tibetan sound-spelling. Lha sbyin is taken as the name Devadatta, which is uncertain. "Garlic paste" (bi khu) and "salt crystals" (tshwa mig) are tentative. Che ge mo in the mantra is the Tibetan placeholder for the name of the person concerned, rendered "so-and-so." Among the heavens, "the Harming Ones" ('tshe ma) and "those who truly dwell in great bliss" could not be matched with confidence to a standard heaven and are translated literally; "Not Small" corresponds to the Abṛha heaven.

• "The thumb and the ring finger" interprets sbom po and mtha' lhag, literally "the thick one" and "the one beyond the end"; the finger names are uncertain. "The vessel of elixir" takes ro as rasa rather than "corpse." In the list of scents, Hira, the Supreme One of the World, the Lord of the World, Vajra Light and the King of Seven are translated or spelled as the Tibetan gives them, since I could not identify them with confidence; "the King of Seven" (bdun gyi rgyal po) may be a slip, the next passage reading "the king of horses." "Sacred offerings" reads se as ste.

• "Vajra Eternal," "Vajra Sun," "the Illuminator" (possibly Vairocana) and "the supreme lord of trees" are rendered from the Tibetan epithets; their exact Sanskrit identifications in this offering scheme are uncertain. "Vajraḍāka" renders rdo rje mkha' 'gro (without the feminine ending), probably the deity or tantra of that name. The line rendered "when the path of the learned had fallen into decline" reads rnyil pa, taken as a variant of snyil ba, "to crumble, decline"; the sense is uncertain. The final verses are the author's speaking; "I" is supplied from context.
