The Means of Accomplishing Glorious Hevajra, Called The Precious Lamp

Śrīhevajraratnapralokesādhana-nāma · Toh 1268 · Derge Tengyur
དཔལ་དགྱེས་པ་རྡོ་རྗེའི་སྒྲུབ་ཐབས་རིན་པོ་ཆེའི་སྒྲོན་མ་ཞེས་བྱ་བ།

The Means of Accomplishing Glorious Hevajra, called The Precious Lamp, known in Tibetan as Dpal dgyes pa rdo rje'i sgrub thabs rin po che'i sgron ma, is a sādhana, a manual of deity practice, whose Sanskrit title survives in the Tibetan text in a somewhat irregular spelling naming it a Hevajra sādhana called the Precious Lamp. Written in verse, it guides the practitioner through the full meditation of Hevajra with his consort Nairātmyā and their circle of eight goddesses: the preliminary worship and confession, the protection circle and the generation of the maṇḍala palace, the empowerment and nectar offerings, the completion-stage practices of the inner channels and the fire of Caṇḍālī, mantra recitation, the torma offering to the world's gods and nāgas, and the symbolic meaning of each feature of the deity and palace. Its colophon attributes it to the great master Dīpaṃkaraśrījñāna, and says it was translated into Tibetan by the Indian paṇḍita Dānaśīla and the translator Gan Darma Lodrö. It is Toh 1268 in the Tengyur, where it belongs to the tantra commentaries, among the practice texts of the Hevajra cycle.

In the language of India: śri he bajra ratna pra lo ke sā ṅha naṃ nā m. In the language of Tibet: The Means of Accomplishing Glorious Hevajra, called The Precious Lamp.

Homage to glorious Vajrasattva.

Paying homage to Heruka together with Nairātmyā
And to their Dharma retinue,
For those who long for him, and for those who seek that aim,
I write this Lamp, the means of accomplishing him.

One free of attachment, endowed with the awakening mind,
Intelligent, having received empowerment and taken the scriptural transmission,
In a charnel ground or some other pleasant place,
Should practice, diligent in yoga.

At dawn, rise from bed with loving-kindness.
Having washed the face and so forth with this,

Sit on a seat marked with a vajra,
And place a nectar pill upon the tongue.

Having taken all mothers into one's care with compassion,
Meditate on oneself with the pride of the Eight-Faced One.
With rakṣa purify the ground and protect the place,
And meditate firmly on the mountain of fire, the net and the tent.

In the heart of Heruka,
From paṃ and raṃ, clearly,
Meditate on a lotus and a red sun.
On that, a black hūṃ, with five rays of light,
Radiates to the ten directions, invites and purifies;
Having done so, all abide in the sky.
Visualizing clearly the guru, the buddhas, oneself and the deities,
Emanate bodies and prostrate.

Moreover, the Blessed One,
With the body color, arms, ornaments
And hand emblems to be taught below,
Is seated united with the consort Nairātmyā.

Before him, black Gaurī
Offers the white awakening mind, the hare-marked moon.
On the right, red Caurī
Offers the red awakening mind, the light of the sun.
Behind, yellow Vetālī
Offers a begging bowl filled with fine water.
On the left, green Ghasmarī
Offers a skull cup filled with fine scent.
In the northeast, blue Pukkasī
Offers a skull cup filled with the five meats.
In the southeast, white Śavarī
Offers various flavorful drinks.
In the southwest, red Caṇḍālī
Offers the sounds of the resounding ḍamaru drum.
In the northwest, Ḍombī, of various forms,
Offers worship with her hands crossed in mudrā.
The guru Akṣobhya is seated on the crown of the head.

Having meditated well, clearly and steadily,
Through the radiating and gathering of the seed at the heart,
The outer goddesses, the host of offerings,
Offering water, flowers, incense and so forth,
Make offering with the mantras of the chapter on consecration.

Emanating the seed, the host of Gaurī and the others,
Arrayed, having come from their abodes,
In the order in which they stand before one,
Offer the five nectars and the five meats.
Urged by the seed of the principal deity,
Ḍombī offers the secret offering.
All the offering goddesses
That were emanated are gathered back from their places.

Then, before them once more,
Kneeling, palms joined, with a fearful mind:
"The evil accumulated in saṃsāra after saṃsāra
From beginningless time until this day,
What I have done, what I have caused to be done,
And what I have rejoiced in, I confess, and henceforth I shall refrain."

In the virtue of the buddhas and bodhisattvas,
Of pratyekabuddhas and śrāvakas,
And of individual beings, rejoice.
Go for refuge to the three and generate the two kinds of mind.
I too make requests and supplications,
And dedicate everything to great awakening.

Then meditate for a long time
On loving-kindness, compassion, joy and equanimity.
By the three suchnesses and by saying muḥ,
Those invited in front depart to their abodes.

Knowing all phenomena to be empty,
With the mind settled, recite this mantra:
oṃ sva bhā va śuddhaḥ sarba dharmā sva bhā va śuddho'haṃ.
By reciting it, all phenomena that are grasped
Are mere dreams, magical displays, mirages,
Moons in water, optical illusions and illusions;
They do not exist apart from mere appearances of mind.

oṃ śū nya tā jñā na bajra sva bhā va ātma ko'haṃ.
By reciting it, all those appearances of mind
Are as the center of the sky at midday in autumn,
Free of the faults of dust, smoke, mist and clouds; so settle the mind.

From the nature of reality, free of elaboration,
With aspiration and loving-kindness, remember beings.
In the center of the sky, from raṃ and hūṃ,
A sun disk blazes with the fire of the end of time.
Then, arising from hūṃ,
A ground of crossed vajras,
An enclosure, a tent and a canopy,
And a blazing vajra wall radiate forth.

Then from e, the sphere of phenomena,
A triangular source of phenomena, vast as space.
Within what is thus meditated, yaṃ raṃ baṃ
laṃ, the four, blue, red, white and yellow.
yaṃ melts into a blue, bow-shaped
Wind maṇḍala bearing a banner.
On that, from raṃ, a red triangle,
The fire maṇḍala, marked with raṃ.
On that, from baṃ, a white circle,
The water maṇḍala, marked with a vase.
On that, from laṃ, a yellow square,
The earth maṇḍala, marked with a vajra.

Through the light of mind these melt,
And as the light spreads the celestial palace is formed,
Made of precious substances,
With four corners, four doors and four walls,
Four porticoes and eight pillars,
Beautified with various offerings and ornaments;
A wheel of Dharma with deer, parasols,
Banners, bells, pennants and so forth;
Pervaded by the light of many buddhas;
Nets and half-nets, archways,
Vases and vajra garlands,
The door frames beautified with half-moons and vajras.

In the eight charnel grounds are eight lakes and nāgas,
Eight trees, field protectors, eight seats and heads,
The guardians of the directions with their wives, sons and eight retinues,
And above, the eight gods with the retinues of gods;
Eight stūpas and hosts of yogins,
Yogins who act as companions, vetālas and spirits,
Birds and various beasts of prey and snakes,
Piśācas, malevolent beings and hosts of corpses.

On the sides of the doors, from the east onward in order,
The goddesses of song and of dance, of offering water,
Of flowers, incense and lamps,
Of scented water, food and various sounds,
Of form, sound, smell, taste, touch and phenomena,
And of ornaments and garlands, of various colors.

Within, white, yellow, red and green;
The center of the palace blazes dark blue.
A vajra wall furnished with a lotus;
On its anthers, the four māras pressed down by a sun.
On the eight petals draw the eight deities,
Pressed down at the heart by a moon.

Within that beautiful celestial palace,
Upon the sun over the four māras at the center,
From hūṃ and aṃ, below and above,
From the doubled āli, a moon disk,
From the doubled kāli, a sun disk;
The skull cup and the curved knife, the hand emblems,
With the seeds resting on them, radiate and gather;
From all of these becoming one,
Meditate clearly, as the underlying basis,
On the Eight-Faced One in union with the consort.

To protect those caught in attachment, through compassion,
From the seed at one's own heart
Buddhas go forth to the ten directions and come to the crown,
And at the heart the seeds abide each in its place.

oṃ padma su khaṃ dha ra ma hā rā ga datta ca tur ā nanda bha ga bi śva hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ ka ryaṃ ku ru ṣva me.

With this lotus mantra bless the lotus.
Then bless the vajra:
oṃ bajra ma hā dve ṣa ca tur ā nanda dā ya ka kha ga mu kha e ka ra so nā tha hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ ka ryaṃ ku ru ṣva me.
oṃ sarba ta thā ga ta a nu rā ga ta bajra sva bhā va ā tma ko'haṃ.
That is the first union.

Then, through passion,
At the heart, toward the east and the rest, upon Brahmā and the rest,
gaṃ caṃ baṃ ghaṃ paṃ śaṃ laṃ ḍaṃ,
Which then descend into the directions and intermediate directions.

In the east, from the clear syllable gaṃ:
From the doubled āli, a moon
Disk, the mirror-like wisdom;
Above it, from the doubled kāli,
A sun disk, the wisdom of equality;
gaṃ transforms into a black curved knife;
The moon and the seed, each distinct, are discriminating wisdom;
The seed emanating, purifying and becoming one
Is the wisdom that accomplishes activities;
And the body of Gaurī arising
Is the wisdom of the sphere of phenomena.

The principal deity meditated on before
And the seven goddesses below
Are likewise bodies of the five wisdoms;
The yogin should meditate on them steadily.

In the east, arising from the curved knife,
Upon Brahmā, black Gaurī,
A curved knife in her right hand, a fish in her left;
Meditate on her as the nature of the aggregate of form.

In the south, upon Indra, red,
Caurī arises from a ḍamaru,
The ḍamaru in her right hand, a pig in her left;
Meditate on her as the nature of the aggregate of feeling.

In the west, from baṃ, Vetālī,
Golden in color, is seated upon Upendra,

A tortoise in her right hand, a skull cup in her left;
Meditate on her as the nature of the aggregate of perception.

In the north, from ghaṃ, Ghasmarī,
Upon Rudra, the color of emerald,
Holds a snake in her right hand and a skull cup in her left;
Meditate on her as the nature of the aggregate of formations.

In the northeast, from paṃ and a lion,
Pukkasī, blue, upon Yama,
A lion in her right hand, an axe in her left,
Is the nature of the earth element.

In the southeast, from śaṃ and a monk,
Śavarī, white, upon a yakṣa seat,
A monk in her right hand, a rattle in her left,
Is the nature of the water element.

In the southwest, from laṃ and a wheel,
Caṇḍālī, the color of the sky, pressing down a rākṣasa,
A wheel in her right hand, a plow in her left,
Is the nature of the fire element.

In the northwest, from ḍaṃ and a vajra,
Ḍombī, of various colors,
A vajra in her right hand, the threatening gesture in her left;
Meditate on her as the nature of the wind element.

These goddesses have three eyes,
Red and round, and bare their fangs;
Their tawny hair stands beautifully upswept.
Bone wheels, earrings,
Necklaces and the rest, the five mudrās,
A garland of fifteen dry human heads;
Naked, left leg extended, they stand in dancing pose,
In the attitude of bowing to the principal.

The body, speech and mind abiding in the intermediate state,
oṃ, āḥ and huṃ, white, red and black,
And the two hoḥ, relying on method and wisdom,
Are seen by the circle as an illusion;

They enter the crown of the principal, and the principal melts.
The consort too melts, and the two seeds huṃ and aṃ
Remain at the center of the maṇḍala,
Abiding in nonconceptual great bliss.

Because the lord has vanished, the goddesses,
Their minds tormented with intense desire,
The four goddesses, Pukkasī and the rest,
Sing the vajra songs:

"Venerable one, arise with a mind of compassion!
I am Pukkasī: protect me!
Abandon the very nature of emptiness
And grant me union in great bliss.
If you do not remain, I shall die;
Do not cut off the stream of your compassion: arise!"

"Blessed One, why do you remain in emptiness?
For Śavarī, bring the fruit to fulfillment!
Lord of joy, invited as the guest of the world,
Do you remain in emptiness?"

"When I, Caṇḍālī, make supplication,
Blessed Hevajra, arise!
I long for your heart;
Arise like a magical display!"

"I, Ḍombī, am losing my senses:
Blessed Hevajra, arise!
By the sweet sound of the vajra song,
Lord, arise as in a dream!"

From the wisdom of the five manifest awakenings,
The Blessed Hevajra himself
Abides at the center of the maṇḍala in the nine moods of dance.
The Eight-Faced One has sixteen arms.
The upper face is smoke-colored and bares its fangs,
With tawny hair and a bone wheel,
The hair adorned with a crossed vajra.
The first face matches the body in color;
The right face is white, the two other right faces match the body;

The left face is red, the two other left faces are as the body.
The hair blazes upward, with a crown of five skulls;
Three eyes, red and round; fangs bared;
Earrings, necklace and armlets,
Bracelets and anklets, and a girdle ornament;
A tiger-skin skirt bound on;
A garland of fresh heads; smeared with ashes.
Upon Brahmā, Śakra, Upendra and Rudra
He stands with four legs, the right extended.
The first right hand holds an elephant
In a skull cup, and embraces the consort.
Likewise a horse, a donkey, an ox, a camel,
A human, a lion and a cat are held,
The right hands holding skull cups in order.
The first left hand, within a skull cup,
Holds the earth goddess Pṛthivī, and embraces the consort.
Above and below in order, abiding in skull cups,
Are Water, Fire, Wind, the Sun,
The Moon, Yama and Dhanada.

His consort, one-faced and two-armed,
Black, embraces him with curved knife and skull cup;
Adorned with the five mudrās, with a garland of dry skulls,
Her yellow hair blazing upward, her three eyes red,
Savoring the lord, her left leg extended,
She abides with him in union upon the four māras.
Then meditate on oneself and that retinue
Clearly, well and steadily.

Bliss and clarity, the supreme king of maṇḍalas:
These are taught as the three samādhis.
To make them clear, at the heart of each
Meditate on its hand emblem upon a seat.
Its seed radiates to the ten directions;
Having invited and purified, the seeds dissolve each into its place.
With hūṃ summon the wisdom circle;
It abides in the eastern sky and is worshipped.
With jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ, by the four goddesses,

It is summoned, drawn in, made nondual and delighted.

Then bless the sense bases.
Of the principal and of the whole circle,
In the eyes, white Mohavajrā;
In the ears, black Dveṣavajrā;
In the nose, yellow Mātsaryavajrā;
On the tongue, red Rāgavajrā;
In the body, green Īrṣyāvajrā;
In the mind, dark blue Nairātmyayoginī.
They stand on Brahmā and the rest, upon lotus and moon,
With curved knife, skull cup and the five mudrās.

Body, speech and mind are blessed as well:
At the head, the mouth and the heart,
oṃ, āḥ and hūṃ, white, red and black;
Bhūcarī, Khecarī and Nairātmyā,
Holding curved knife and skull cup,
Meditate on them upon lotus, moon and Brahmā.

Again, by the seed at one's own heart,
Invite the gurus and the victors of the ten directions,
And the wrathful ones and goddesses of the circle;
Having worshipped them, make supplication:
oṃ sarba ta thā ga ta a bhi ṣiñca tu māṃ.
By this recitation they consent, and the five families
Confer empowerment with vases filled with nectar,
And the lord of the family marks the crown.
Oneself is marked by Akṣobhya Vajra.
For the four goddesses of the directions
Meditate on the four: Akṣobhya, Vairocana,
Ratnasambhava and Amitābha.
Likewise, by the four of aversion, delusion,
Avarice and desire,
Meditate on Pukkasī and the others in the four intermediate directions
As marked on the crown, in order.
oṃ sarba ta thā ga ta a bhi ṣe ka bajra sva bhā ba ātma ko'haṃ.

Now one should taste the nectar.
Meditate on yaṃ raṃ āḥ huṃ oṃ,
And bless with the three suchnesses:
Wind and fire, a hearth of skulls,
And the skull cup on which the seeds abide;
Purified by hūṃ, set ablaze by āḥ,
By oṃ it descends as wisdom nectar.
The five, bhrūṃ jrīṃ āṃ khaṃ hūṃ,
And the five, naṃ haṃ śaṃ ṣaṃ ghaṃ,
Having become nectar, are tasted with the vajra tongue,
And the circle is worshipped with bliss.
For that, make it steady with this mantra:
oṃ sarba ta thā ga ta a mṛ ta sva da bajra sva bhā ba ātma ko'haṃ.

Summoned by the seed hūṃ,
All the buddhas enter the mouth.
With the offering goddesses radiated outward,
They are worshipped in order, and the goddesses dissolve into their places.
oṃ sarba ta thā ga ta pū jā bajra sva bhā ba ā ko'haṃ.

Those goddesses, with the family consorts,
Praise in harmony with one voice:
"Blessed One, surrounded by eight goddesses,
With a heart of compassion you free beings.
The vessel of the world and its beings are the Blessed One's mind.
Blessed One, be pleased!
You who purify the aggregates, the elements, the sense bases
And the five poisons, we praise you."
oṃ sarba ta thā ga tastu ti bajra sva bhā ba ātma ko'haṃ.

With these steady and very clear,
The yogin should practice yoga.
The purity of the palace is Vairocana;
Passion is Vajrasattva;
The empowerment is the purity of Akṣobhya Vajra;
The tasting of nectar is Amitābha;
The worship is Amoghasiddhi;
And the praise is Ratnasambhava.
By meditating endowed with these six limbs,
Accomplishment will swiftly be attained.

First, it is like the sun among clouds;
Second, it appears like an illusion;
Attaining appearance, it is like a dream;
Luminosity has no equipoise and post-meditation.

When oneself has thus become stable,
Looking upon the suffering of beings,
The deities of the circle of loving-kindness and compassion
Radiate unceasingly in every direction;
Having purified their respective disciples,
They gather back, and one meditates on the circle within.
Arising from method and wisdom,
The awakening mind radiates and gathers.
All the colors, marks and attire
Meditate on clearly and steadily, just as they are.

Thus the generation is complete. In the completion stage,
Gather the goddesses in order into the faces.
The faces and arms, in order from the outermost,
Are gathered into the root face and arms;
The two legs dissolve into the consort,
And one seals with the seal of the four cakras.
At the navel, heart, throat and crown,
Meditate on the cakras of emanation, of Dharma, of enjoyment
And of great bliss;
These are the essence of the four bodies.

In the emanation cakra are sixty-four channel petals;
At its center aṃ blazes, and on the channel petals
The kāli, four and sixty, abide,
Blazing brilliantly with five rays of light.
At the heart are eight channel petals;
At the center a black hūṃ, and on the petals
bhrūṃ jrīṃ āṃ khaṃ e vaṃ ma
And yaṃ, the eight: meditate on them well.
At the throat, on sixteen petals,
At the center aṃ blazes, and the channel petals
Are adorned with the sixteen āli,
Abiding in the manner of blazing.

At the crown are thirty-two channel petals;
At the center a white haṃ, and on the petals
It is surrounded by the doubled āli;
White in color, nectar flows down.

By kindling Caṇḍālī at the navel,
The five tathāgatas are burned,
And Locanā and the others are burned as well;
Through the burning, a stream flows from the hare-marked haṃ.
When the letters have become clear,
Those letters radiate and gather;
Having invited and purified, they gather back,
And the letters enter each its own place.

Arising from life-force and exertion,
raṃ blazes from below the navel;
The cakras are well purified, and taking the nectar
Of Akaniṣṭha, imagine it at the crown.
From the purified cakras, all filled,
Everything dissolves completely into the heart.
Meditate on the undefiled nectar of the ultimate.
The hūṃ too, in stages, rests in the nāda.
Become accustomed for a very long time to non-abiding,
Free of stain like the center of the sky,
Without beginning, end or middle,
Neither saṃsāra nor nirvāṇa,
Where neither self nor other exists.
This is the king of great bliss,
Wholly free of grasped and grasper.

If one is weary of training the mind,
Generate the body stage by stage,
Father and mother both with faces and arms complete.
Around the seed letter at the heart
The mantra stands encircling it; from mouth to mouth,
Through the vajra path to the lotus,
And from the lotus to the mouth it circles.
Recite as much as one wishes.
By the distinctions of meditation and color,

Know the peaceful and the other rites.
oṃ aṣṭā na nā ya piṅ go rdho ke śa bartma ne ca tur biṅ śa ti ne trā ya ṣo ḍa śa bhu jā ya kṛ ṣṇa jī mū ta ba pu ṣe ka pā la mā la a ne kaṃ dha ri ṇi āndra ta krū ra cittā ya ardhandu daṃ ṣṭri ṇe oṃ mā ra ya mā ra ya kā ra ya kā ra ya garja ya garja ya tarja ya tarja ya śo ṣa ya śo ṣa ya sapta sā ga rān bandha bandha nā ga aṣṭa kā na kṛṇḍa kṛṇḍa sarba śa trūṃ sarba du ṣṭan ha hā hi hī hu hū he hai ho hau haṃ haḥ phaṭ svā hā.

This is the root mantra of the Blessed One.

oṃ de ba pi cu bajra hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svā hā.
This should be known as the heart mantra.

oṃ bajra karta ri he bajrā ya hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svā hā.
This is also the near-heart mantra.

oṃ a ka ca ṭa ta pha ya śa hūṃ svā hā.
This is the mantra for agitating a city.

oṃ tri lokyā kṣe pa hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svā hā.
This is the heart mantra of the two-armed one.

oṃ bajra jva la jva la bhyo hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svā hā.
This is the mantra of the four-armed one.

oṃ ki ṭi ki ṭi bajra hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svā hā.
This is the heart mantra of the six-armed one.

To gather the two accumulations, to bring others under one's power,
And to protect oneself and sentient beings,
To the gods, the Dharma protectors and sentient beings
Give nectar, offerings, gifts and torma.

In the sky over the charnel ground to the southeast,
Three stacked sources of phenomena, one above another.
At the center, a black eight-petaled lotus.
From the east, through the directions and intermediate directions in sequence,
Śakra, Yama and Varuṇa,
The lord of yakṣas, the lord of bhūtas,
Agni the god of fire, the rākṣasa and the god of wind,
In white, black, pale red, yellow,
White, red, smoke-gray and green,
Their colors clear in that same order.

They hold in their hands a vajra, a staff, a snake noose,
A bilva fruit, a trident, a triple staff,
A curved knife and a banner,
And ride an elephant, a buffalo, a makara,
A horse, a bull, a goat,
A corpse and a deer.
Meditate on them with charnel-ground ornaments, with their wives,
Their sons and their retinues.

On the upper source of phenomena, a white lotus;
From the east, in the same order as before,
Śakra, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra,
Kumāra, Gaṇapati, the Purifier
And the Black Good One abide in order,
White, yellow, red and the color of the sky,
Two white, yellow and black,
Their colors likewise clear in order.
They hold a vajra, a staff, a trident,
A wheel, a trident, bow and arrow,
A radish, a banner and a sword,
Seated on lotus seats, adorned with jewels,
With wives, sons, retinues and the retinues of the gods,
Abiding in order.

On the lower source of phenomena, a red lotus;
As before, Takṣaka, Śaṅkhapāla,
Ananta, Kulika, Mahāpadma,
Nanda, Vāsuki and Padma, the eight,
With hoods and snake nooses, on lotus and moon seats,
White, yellow, red, green, again white,
Blue, pale red and white in color,
With jewel ornaments and lotuses,
With their wives, sons and retinues,
And together with the three lower realms.

In the centers of the three lotuses
Meditate on oneself as Heruka.
With jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ summon them and draw them in.
The principal and retinue pervading space,

Akṣobhya, Vairocana and Amitābha,
In nature blue, white and red in color,
With vajra and bell and their own radiance,
And bone ornaments, principal and retinue alike.
With the three suchnesses and the seal of empowerment,
Meditate on their tongues as vajra tubes.
Before them, upon the tormas,
Bless them, and let them drink their essence.
The five nectars taught before
Have become the nine deities of Hevajra.

oṃ inda ja ma ja la jakkha bhūṃ ta ba hni bā yu rākṣa caṇḍra sūjja mā sa sa pta pā tā la pā tā la a stha sappa svā hā.
i daṃ ba li bhu ja jiṃ bha puṣpa dhū pa māṃ sa piṅga ambha sarba kajja khanti khu ṇi phe ṭa gā da svā hā.
oṃ a kā ro mu khaṃ sarbba dharmā ṇāṃ ādya nu tpanna tvā ta oṃ āḥ hūṃ phaṭ svā hā.

Recite each three times and send off the torma.
With the three syllables and muḥ they depart.
Obstacles are pacified, and excess and deficiency are pacified.
Sing this vajra song slowly:
ko la i ri ṭṭha a po lā muṃ mu ṇi kakko lā bha ṇe a kri ta niṣṭhatani ḍṭhi ha ka ru ṇi ke ā i na ro la ta hiṃ ba la kha li ma in bi ja ki la ka le jja rū ba ni a ī dhu ru dhu ru ṇajja a i ca a sa ma śaccha ri si hla ka pu ra la i a i ma khu la a in dha nas lijja ha hi bu ru i a o pre kha na khe ṭa ka ran ti śuddhā suddha ṇṇa ma ṇe a i ni raṃ su aṃ candra bī ta ijja sa ra sa ci pa ni ā ī ma sa sa la jir ru ra bā ṭa i dhi ṇi ma hā hiṣṭa bajja a i.

Having made offerings and sent off the torma,
Take up aspirations in the feast gathering.
Enjoying food and drink,
Through the union of nectar the body flourishes.
One endowed with the yoga of the four sessions,
If one practices, will succeed; not otherwise.

Having understood well what was taught before,
The two accumulations, the palace and the three maṇḍalas:
Three faces, the right white, the left red,

The middle one matching the body in color;
In the right hands he holds a vajra and a sword,
In the left hands a bell and a trident,
And he himself embraces the self-aware consort.
With four arms, he holds a vajra and a skull cup
In the right and left hands,
And with two he embraces the consort herself.
With two arms, a vajra in the right hand,
A skull cup and khaṭvāṅga in the left.
These three are seated upon Brahmā;
The rest is just as taught before.
Radiating and gathering, the circle,
Meditation on its meaning, the torma and the mantras,
The three faces, the four arms and the rest:
The yogin meditates on whichever he wishes.
In post-meditation too, by knowing
The distinctions of the purities, meditate constantly.

The mountain of fire, the net and the tent are victory over the māras;
The source of phenomena is liberation, the sphere of phenomena;
The eight charnel grounds are where Yama breathes out;
The four doors are the four close applications of mindfulness;
The four sides are the four right abandonments;
The door ornaments are the four bases of miraculous power;
The goddesses of the sense pleasures are the five faculties;
The five walls are purified as the five powers;
The four porticoes are the four dhyānas;
And through the purity of the twelve links of dependent origination
The twelve tiers blaze with light.

The ornaments are the seven limbs of awakening;
The eight beautiful pillars are the noble eightfold path;
The four wheels are the four truths;
Likewise, the parasols are the four immeasurables.
The mind of loving-kindness is the black color of the body;
Compassion is the red eyes gazing upon beings;
The hero's nine dances free beings;
Equanimity is the beauty of the crossed vajra.

The form of the wheel is Akṣobhya;
On the earrings is Amitābha;
The necklace is the Jewel Lord;
Arranged on all the limbs is Vairocana;
On the Amitābha ornament is Amoghasiddhi;
And all the limbs and the mind are Vajradhara.

The eight faces are the eight liberations;
The three bodies are the white, red and black faces;
The arms are the sixteen emptinesses;
Because they destroy diseases, the elephant and the rest;
Because accomplishment comes swiftly, the goddess and the rest.
The bone ornaments too are the four truths;
The tiger skin is the seven limbs of awakening;
The four means of attraction are the four legs;
Because birth and aging are destroyed, the four māras are trampled.
Nairātmyā is the dharmakāya, utter purity itself.
Through the purity of the aggregates, Gaurī and the rest;
Through the purity of the wisdoms, the four colors;
With the curved knife and the rest they act upon the four māras.
Through familiarity with the immeasurables, upon the four elements
Are the four goddesses, Pukkasī and the rest,
Their colors and hand emblems likewise.

By day the Blessed One abides as method;
By night, as wisdom, emptiness.
The movements of beings are dance and mudrā;
All that is spoken is mantra.
Bathing is empowerment and meditation;
Lying down, meditate on the dhyāna of sleep.
The yogin thus made steady,
Without suppressing the senses, protects beings.

The meaning of the king of tantras, come down through the succession of gurus,
The meaning made clear to my mind through meditation,
I have set down to benefit those devoted to Hevajra.
By the merit that arises from this,
May I and all beings without exception

Swiftly accomplish Hevajra.

The Means of Accomplishing Glorious Hevajra, called The Precious Lamp, composed by the great master Dīpaṃkaraśrījñāna, is complete. It was translated and edited by the Indian preceptor, the paṇḍita Dānaśīla, and the translator Gan Darma Lodrö.

Translator's Notes

• "Washed the face and so forth with this" renders the demonstrative instrumental as written; the referent (presumably water) is not named. The line read here as "with rakṣa purify the ground" takes the syllables as the rakṣā protection mantra followed by the instrumental. "Eight seats and heads" for the obscure phrase in the charnel-ground list is tentative. The verb in "draw the eight deities" literally means "write" or "draw"; in context it may mean placing them in visualization.
• The line on the faces with "tawny hair and a bone wheel" renders a phrase whose middle syllables appear corrupt; the general sense is clear. "Invited as the guest of the world" takes the verb in the Śavarī verse as a form of "invite"; the reading is uncertain. The deities in the left-hand skull cups (Water, Fire, Wind and so on) correspond to Varuṇa, Agni, Vāyu, Sūrya, Candra, Yama and Kubera; the Tibetan names Water, Fire and so on are kept here as the text gives them.
• The sense-base goddesses are given by their Sanskrit names (Mohavajrā and so on), the Tibetan naming them as the delusion vajra, aversion vajra and so forth. "Free of stain" renders a word that as written means "sweat," evidently a scribal slip for a similar word for turbidity or stain. "Thus the generation is complete. In the completion stage" interprets a compressed line that names both stages. The center of the throat cakra is given as aṃ as the text reads. Here Caṇḍālī is the inner fire at the navel rather than the goddess of the retinue.
• "To bring others under one's power" renders a phrase whose second element in philosophical contexts means "the dependent nature"; in this ritual setting it is read as subjugation. Two of the upper gods, rendered "the Purifier" and "the Black Good One," could not be identified with confidence and are translated by meaning. "Padma, the eight" reads the Tibetan as naming Padma as the eighth nāga king. "The eight charnel grounds are where Yama breathes out" is a literal rendering of an obscure correlation.
• "On the Amitābha ornament is Amoghasiddhi" renders the line as written; in the usual scheme of the six bone ornaments one would expect the girdle here, and the name Amitābha may be a scribal slip. "The Jewel Lord" is taken as Ratnasambhava. "The goddess and the rest" refers to the deities held in the left-hand skull cups, beginning with Pṛthivī.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.