The Great King of Yoginī Tantras called the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas

Śrīḍākārṇavamahāyoginītantrarājanāma · Toh 372 · Derge Kangyur

དཔལ་མཁའ་འགྲོ་རྒྱ་མཚོ་རྣལ་འབྱོར་མའི་རྒྱུད་ཀྱི་རྒྱལ་པོ་ཆེ་པོ་ཞེས་བྱ་བ།

The Great King of Yoginī Tantras called the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas, known in Sanskrit as the Śrī Ḍākārṇava Mahāyoginī Tantrarāja and in Tibetan as Pal Khandro Gyatso Naljorma'i Gyü kyi Gyalpo Chenpo, is Toh 372 in the Kangyur, where it belongs to the Tantra section among the yoginī tantras associated with the Cakrasaṃvara cycle. It opens in the manner of a sūtra, with the Blessed One, the Lord of Great Heroes, at play among the yoginīs of the body, speech and mind of all the tathāgatas, and goes on to teach in verse across some fifty-one chapters. Its subjects include the maṇḍala of the heroes and yoginīs, the twenty-four sacred sites and the accomplishments they bestow, the yogic correlation of breath, time and the inner elements, offerings, feasts and pledges, and the coemergent great bliss that unites emptiness and appearance. Its colophon records that it was translated in Nepal by the Indian paṇḍita Jayasena together with the Tibetan translator Dharma Yönten, and later revised.

In the language of India: śrī ḍākārṇṇaba mahā yoginī tantra rāja nāma. In the language of Tibet: The Great King of Yoginī Tantras called the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas (Ḍākārṇava).

oṃ Homage to the Buddha, the Hero!
Homage to the Blessed One, the Lord of Speech!

Thus did I hear at one time. The Blessed One, the Lord of Great Heroes, was engaged in play within the bhagas of the yoginīs of the body, speech, and mind of the heroes of all the tathāgatas. There the Lord of Great Heroes declared:

"Through the meditative absorption of great bliss,
I see the net of the senses.
Through saṃsāra and through renunciation,
Nirvāṇa is generated, each in turn.
In its center is the great body,
Known by my senses.
The very nature of the hero
I shall listen to in the ocean of wisdom.

In the center of the wheel of yoginīs,
I, Vārāhī, ask:
What is the net of the senses said to be?
Where am I to explain it?
What are seeing and the great sound,
And likewise what is the eating of bliss?
What is the name of the meditative absorption? And in it,
That which has arisen being made to wane,
And saṃsāra that has truly arisen,
Where do they come to dissolve?
Blessed One, how is that named nirvāṇa
Once more fully generated?
Please speak the account of the body.
What your own senses know,
O my lord, abiding in great bliss,
Please speak it."

The Lord of Great Heroes declared:

"Vārāhī, bearer of the lotus of divine substance,
Goddess, listen with one-pointed mind.
The defining marks of the prior practice
I shall explain in brief.
The senses, the world, the supreme Dharma are taught;
In that net the mind takes its play.
Through mere pride of self
The supreme pledge arose.
Therefore great wisdom is seen,
Because it abides in the bliss of great skillful means.
Where the senses eat,
By that my name went before.
Then, as mere meditative absorption,
It was spoken by the sages, the supreme among the born.
The wisdom of perfect higher realization
Was brought about by the lord of gods of the buddhas,
Through the union that arose in them,
By many supreme ḍākinīs.
From the waning of both pleasure and pain,
It arises here once again;

Arising and emerging from the form of sound,
It is the domain of the conduct of the pledge.
Through the division of the three minds,
You, accomplished one, should come to know it.
By this, the self-arisen Blessed One
Is the hero, the binding of the net of ḍākas.
At the time of having arisen and of arising,
It is fully clear, it is luminosity.
Therefore it makes the world revolve,
And so it is fully proclaimed as saṃsāra.
Here it is like an illusion that has arisen;
It has no entity at all that dissolves.
Nirvāṇa is a distinct substance that exists,
Gone beyond the bounds of saṃsāra;
That which holds the summit of existence,
Therefore it is called nirvāṇa.
Form is a body like an illusion;
It radiates throughout its abode.
The great self, the form of wisdom,
Is clearly known by the senses:
The form that moves in the sky,
Unseen by gods, dānavas, and the rest."

"O god, with the taste of the great wisdom
Of your words I am satisfied.
Today I have a doubt:
What is the nature of the heroes?"

The Blessed One declared:

"All the heroes are intrinsic nature,
And those natures possess the qualities of dharmas.
Here the time of desire is proclaimed:
Desire arises fully from the mind.
Arising from both desire and mind,
Form is the principal.
Hard to find in the three worlds,
It truly abides at beginning, middle, and end.
Whatever is the mind of the final ones,

That mind has become of one taste.
From the union of the great maṇḍala,
Therefore that ḍāka arose.
The great-souled Vajraḍāka
Should accomplish the three planes of existence.
When at first he truly arose,
The chief of beings was Brahmā.
The abodes, and likewise how they are empty:
The protector liberates sentient beings.
Then, by other world-realms,
The small one here was urged:
'Living one, living one, gone into the expanse of awakening,
Without the thought of delivering sentient beings,
You who abide as the nature of illusion,
Please deliver the three realms without remainder!'
Having heard of these qualities,
Meditate thus on the liberator of beings.
In all the aspects of the tathāgatas,
The chief of beings is Heruka.
By first proclaiming the Glorious One,
The supports and the rest are generated.
Songs and music, gandharvas,
And whatever others there may be,
The classes of beings and their karma,
All arise fully from his stream.
These and others, endless in number,
And thirty-three thousand besides.
In the delight of the supreme secret,
The self of all forever abides.
Suchness of sixteen kinds,
And the cause of birth and of dissolution,
The suchness of the yogin and the yoginī,
Moves through the divisions of the moon.
Having always come to know the joy,
Through the moon's waxing from the first day,
In the dark half and the rest, and at the end of the bright half,
Likewise the short is to be known here."

"'Thus have I heard': my speech
Grants every secret desire.
Likewise here I have a doubt:
What is the teaching on the secret and the rest?
O my lord, please speak it."

"Acting for the benefit of sentient beings,
Great Goddess, I am pleased.
As the cause of what all sentient beings need,
I shall explain in brief;
Listen with one-pointed mind.
The secret is the limit of all the elements;
The abode of the senses is supreme;
In those perfected consciousnesses,
Delight arises from space.
The self of all, of the three realms,
Has truly entered as the form of what is pervaded.
The ever-abiding nondual Dharma
Is supreme, like an illusion or a dream.
Or else it is the sixteen selflessnesses,
And in particular compassion.
Its aspect is great wisdom,
Which has fully entered suchness.
What is to be understood here as birth
Is yoga and subsequent yoga.
Dissolution and accomplishment, these two,
And likewise the two approaches.
Yoga is explained as the drop;
The subtle yoga is the yoginī.
Through time, the half month and the month,
The Kṛta age, the third, the second, and the Kali age have passed.
Its four vajra faces
Become twice eight joys;
Endowed with sixteen digits,
It moves through the division of the fortnights.
Through the course of the short sun,
Likewise the digits are consumed.
The illusion-net of all women

Is unsurpassed nondual wisdom.
Into the great light of the mind of awakening
The great yogin assuredly goes.
Emptiness and compassion are indivisible;
Things are like flowers in the sky.
Even upon waking they fade away;
That abode is no abode at all."

"A dream arises from no object;
Nothing arises from all the senses.
Through the power of falling asleep,
The three planes of existence are to be eaten.
Thus, at the time when deep sleep has arisen,
There is no waking, no sleep, no dream.
In the times of past bliss,
Even buddhahood itself abides all the more.
The hero who is the reality of all the ḍākas
Is Vajraḍāka, supremely blissful.
If one keeps company with the objects of karma,
One falls into the Heaven of the Thirty-Three.
Stirred up by ignorance, beings surely
Go to the hells and the rest, of great terror.
Therefore, to the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha,
And to this great miracle, one should be devoted."

"How, Blessed One, my lord,
Are the names of all the ḍākinīs?
Speak them, with your mind turned toward me."
Supreme among all the ḍākinīs,
Bowing down there to the secret,
Vārāhī, yoginī of divine substance,
Asked again and again,
"How is it, in nondual words?"

The lord of the ḍākinīs declared:

"The subtle aspects are the three channels,
The cause of the three consciousnesses.
Therefore they are to be known as subtle;

The arising of the channels is the great self.
The thirty-seven yoginīs:
Each one is fully endowed with it.
All the ḍākinīs are explained there,
And others too, thus greatly wondrous.
Here in this ocean, the summary of the names,
I shall explain them all just as they are.
Moon, Milk, Oily One,
Gentle One, Desirous One, All-Giving One,
Mother, Sister, Daughter,
Sister's Daughter, Aunt,
Kinswoman, Father's Mother,
And the Wife of the Maternal Uncle,
Padminī, Śaṅkhinī, Citriṇī,
Hastinī, She of Waves of Intoxication,
She of Form, She of Sound, She of Smell,
She of Taste, She of Touch, She of Mind,
She of the Dharmadhātu, She of the Host,
She of Sleep, She of Sloth, Subduer of Others,
The Proud One, the Graceful One,
Fair-Faced One, Fierce One,
Drinker, Eater, Terrifying One,
She Who Shouts Ha Ha, She of the Charnel Ground:
These are always declared to be the delight of the Blessed One,
The thirty-seven yoginīs.
Through taking up the ritual of the activities,
Their other names too should be known.
Whatever channel is designated by whatever name,
That channel is spoken of here.
They are heroes whose nature is bliss,
Final, and supremely at peace.
The reality of Vajraḍāka, too,
Is endowed with the supremely undefiled yoga.
In aspects of color, arms, and the rest,
It has truly arisen in the wheel of existence.
Here among the sites, the secondary sites, and the rest,
Pullīra and the others are in the center.

Whoever is the lord of whichever deity,
That one is to be sealed with that very one.
Playing with oneself as the self,
One is fully endowed with all bliss.
By this, the self-arisen Blessed One,
Alone, likewise the first god,
Who grants bliss to all the ḍākinīs,
The Blessed One Vajra, spoke this.

Space has no beginning and no end;
Just as one supremely conceives it,
Just so do I know it;
Even without appearance it is fully clear.
There is no arising in it at all;
It is the supreme worldly convention.
Just as fire arises from space,
So it is with this unsurpassed fire here.
Taste is in a single entity,
Yet within it are many entities.
Through this nature of one and many,
All is taste, the all-pervading lord of taste.
By the lord of the messengers
The three planes of existence are supremely eaten.
Skillful means, wisdom, and great compassion:
There is no other lord of the gods.
It is not desire, and not freedom from desire;
Nor is it apprehended in the middle.
The yogin who knows how to examine it thus
Should enjoy all that is desirable.
Having always made it inward,
The colors arise from the mouth.
Always giving with the body,
One should abandon what arises from the mind.
Thus, play within desire, illusion's limit,
Is the supreme state.
Freedom from desire and the three joys
Are abandoned: the undefiled middle.

It is not something to be grasped;
The nature of things is not desire.
The joy of freedom from desire wanes,
And one should not delight in that either.
By abiding in the middle of those two,
In that dharma, too, joy is without object.
In the dharma of nondifferentiation,
In the vajra, take delight.
Yogins of the aspect of the deity
Make it directly manifest in an instant.
Through the yoga of a cast image and the like,
It becomes a shape that has been fashioned.
The yoga of form whose nature is emptiness
Is the defining mark of self-blessing.
The yoga devoid of self-blessing
Should be known as like fragments of husk.
This kind of supreme defining mark
Is not known by cattle-like people.
Therefore, if one meditates on this magical display,
One attains unsurpassed awakening.
Even one who is dull in this birth
Becomes a person of wisdom and poetry.
One who has this assembly of qualities
Should regard things as equal to a dream.
One goes into the tantra of yogin and yoginī;
Therefore it is worldly.
Directly perceived, oneself is the mantra body;
The three wheels are doubled.
For one, three wheels are taught;
For the second, they are held to be doubled.
The three wheels are skillful means and wisdom,
Taught as entering into union.
That is to be known as doubled;
By that the doubled wheels are explained.
The great abode of the three realms
Is meditation on the maṇḍala wheel.
Joining all the heroes in union,

Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
The Tathāgata, great lord of heroes,
The Blessed One Vajra, spoke this.

Where Dharma and non-Dharma set,
There hold the mind in awakening.
Accomplished ones, gods and asuras,
The senses and the objects,
The elements and the sense sources, all of them,
Are arising and ceasing.
The deluded are bound, while the wise
Are liberated through full understanding.
This mind itself, directly,
Abides throughout the three realms.
From the nonduality of myself and you, supreme one,
The chief of the assembly has arisen.
The Vaibhāṣikas who hold to the modes of conduct and so forth,
The Sautrāntikas, the Vijñānavādins, and the Mādhyamikas:
It is explained to sentient beings according to their inclinations;
It is neither true nor false.
He is endowed with twelve arms,
And likewise has four faces.
His color is the blue of the sky;
He has three eyes and stands with legs outstretched and bent,
Pressing down Hara and Gaurī together.
Others, by hundreds of thousands and thousands,
Of whatever tantra it may be,
Outer, secret, and inner in nature,
Are definitely the form of that one and that one.
The deity is the very self of Heruka.
In tantra and supremely within tantra,
The divisions are by the power of inclination;
The names should be known accordingly,
But they are mixed with Heruka.

Their colors are to be known as similar to that.
The manner of abiding is the aspect of Heruka.
It is the cause of the twelve grounds;

Through it one is like Heruka.
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
Joining all the heroes in union,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the first chapter, Entering the Ocean of Wisdom, from the Great King of Yoginī Tantras, the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas.

Vārāhī, yoginī of divine substance,
Once again worshiped the Vajra:
"Blessed Lord, please teach:
From what did Vārāhī fully arise?
By what generator was she generated?
How is her nature held to be?
What is the reason for my arising?
And what is the purpose here?"

"The senses and all the objects
Fully enter the maṇḍala of the navel.
In the vajra tent at the crown of the head,
The wind descends, facing upward.
In the center of the sun of desire,
In an instant there is emanation and dissolution.
Vārāhī, who is born there,
Arose from the mind of bhaga and liṅga.
The elements whose nature is great bliss:
From them she was born first.
Her nature is the sole selflessness;
She has the form of yoga equal to space.
The reason is the deliverance of beings,
And she arose with the form of compassion as her nature.
Here two purposes are to be known:
Thoroughly accomplishing the union with the mudrā.
You are the lord of the goddesses,
Practicing all conduct, practicing much.
Having transposed the garland of mantras,
The letter ā and the rest are its pervading lords.
Or else it is endowed with the root mantra

And the armor mantras of Vārāhī;
The conduct of the mantra of each single letter
Has entered into the vow.
The birth of the supreme yoginī
Is in the supreme city of the channels:
Of the seventy-two thousand,
The central one is avadhūtī.
Thus this central channel
Abides as the pervader of all.
Therefore Vārāhī is to be known
As the supreme state of the chief lady.
At the beginning of the names, vajra and the rest:
a vajra and ka vajra,
And at the end of the mantra, those and the rest,
Or else separately, each distinct.
Whenever one recites the mantra,
At those times one is endowed with yoga.
Navel, crown, heart, and upward:
Thus there is no going and no coming.
The hero and the chief yoginī:
That self radiates outward.
The yoginīs, each with her own retinue,
Go into field after field.
Goddess, you are the lord,
In union together with me.
At the proper times and not at the proper times,
Remaining within the aperture of space,
And likewise emerging on the path of the womb,
The seed of deathlessness drips down.
There it is to be made wisdom without emission.
One should meditate with the half syllable hik.
At the time of woman and man as well,
One should make the supremely undefiled manifest.
The great vidyā that arose from it
Is written by one whose self is meditation.
First is Vairocana the protector,
Encircled by three lines, located below the navel;

Rising, it goes up as far as the throat,
And enters the three planes like a lamp.
The other mantra is like the letter that ends with sa;
From it the moon flows down from the left.
This mantra is adorned with a drop;
The mantra is the generation of the yoginī.
Again, the second seed is told:
The right, generating the sun,
Divided in two at the sides, with a drop on top.
The seed at the end of the ya class
Is the path by which the great mind of awakening descends.
This is the seed of Vārāhī,
Adorned at the end with the letter ā,
Adorned with the sixteen, the half moon, and the sun.
The seed first in the ya class,
Through union, the three planes, the quality of wind,
Is sealed with the thirteenth vowel,
Adorned on its head by the bright fortnight,
Blazing together with the drop:
It is the purity of the four joys.
The last of the pa class, the form of bliss,
Has the letter o mounted upon it,
Pressed on its head by the half moon and the sun.
Through the indestructible one beyond the earth,
It abides on a sun seat.
Taking the fourth vowel beside the ear,
Adorned on its head with the half moon and the drop,
It is the nature of the end of desire.
The wisdom seed is divided and doubled,
Born through emanation and gathering.
By abiding below and above,
The protector who holds complete enjoyment,
In the heart and in the water-born lotus,
Completes the rite of the meaning in full.
The seed of the Terrifying Lady:
Having taken the letter at the end of the pa class,
One should again recite it in the same way.

In Uḍḍiyāna, in the aperture of the city that holds the blaze,
Caṇḍālī is kindled.
With the mind of awakening the three planes are filled.
Whatever mantra has been explained thus,
Its letters do not accord in sequence.
Endowed with the names of the yoginīs,
The times of the activities are to be understood thus.
The great self of each one
Is by the number of its letters.
The great self radiates outward;
The portions of awakening are the cause of the portions.
First comes homage to Vairocana;
The dharmadhātu is the form of activity.
The fifth letter of the ta class
Is of the fifth group.
The yoginī's form rests upon space.
The seed at the end of the pa class, with the vowel o,
Is she who destroys delusion;
She emanates the host of yoginīs.
Its fourth is the seed;
She emanates the yoginī who pervades the three planes.
The third of the first class
Emanates the wheel of ḍākinīs
Who make the six destinies wane.
The seed last in the ya class
Is the nature of the mind of awakening.
The first of the fifth class
Is the seed of suchness,
Touched on its head by the vowel ī.
The fully praised letter of water
Is the nature that accomplishes everything.
Taking the one in the middle of the ca class,
Endowed with a sun seat,
It has special power at the time of the activities.
The seed of Vārāhī
Is the letter a touching the ear,
Equal in nature to the wisdom of the three planes.

The seed of fire, endowed with two vowels,
Is the nature of the karma of saṃsāra.
On the head of the letter that ends with sa, the vowel ī touches;
Always regard it as the nature of Brahmā.
Taking the second vowel,
Thus the form of the ḍākinī
Delivers sentient beings.
The letter ya stands with ra,
And again the vowel ī is joined to it;
It emanates the yoginīs of the three realms.
The first of the sixth class
Is the nature of all the yoginī mantras.
ra stands with the vowel a;
It becomes the slayer of hostile beings.
Taking up the letter ja,
Truly endowed with the vowel i,
It is fully endowed with the nature of illusion.

The seed of the teeth, at the ear,
Is distinguished by being touched by the vowel i.
Having joined the mantra of the nāgas,
The syllable tre is all the three planes.
It is the special mantra of wisdom.
The letter la endowed with o
Is the support of the worlds;
It is the dharma that brings about awakening.
The first, ka, has ya as its seat;
Death and the coemergent are without distinction.
To the last of the pa class
One should join the vowel of the letter ā;
It is the mother of the three planes by nature.
The letter ta, adorned with the letter e,
Is what holds bliss.
Again, the last of the pa class
Is the nature abiding in the center
Of the immeasurable coemergent.
The last of sa endowed with ā

Is the indestructible wisdom of Vajrasattva.
The last of the ya class with the vowel i
Is what destroys the nature of unknowing.
The mantra tye is the nature of the dharmadhātu;
It pervades as the nature of all.
Dripping from the apertures, ṣa;
The descending seed is endowed with the sun.
The mantra of the lord of sea monsters
Is the fourth seed of the ba class,
Endowed with the vowel ū and a seat;
It makes the terrors of saṃsāra wane.
With the mantra of ta one makes enemies wane.
Again, the fourth of the pa class
Proclaims the great sound.
The seed of wind touched by the letter ā:
The mantra is like a jewel raining down.
The seed of water held at the ear
Is the nature of illusion.
What is beyond sa, endowed with the letter e,
Is the cause that destroys the confusion of the three planes.
The last of the pa class has the nature of a foot;
What is beyond sa, endowed with ā,
Is the dharma of great wonder.
The last of the ya class
Is the supreme letter, the seed of the lotus.
The seed in the middle of ca,
With ra placed on its head,
And opened by the letter e,
Is the nature of gods and asuras.
Thus there are the six mantra phrases,
Emanating the host of yoginīs,
The wheel whose nature is all the activities.
The vast words of suchness,
Which have become the wish of compassion,
Thoroughly filling all yogas,
The Blessed Ḍāka spoke these.

I shall explain the yantra wheel.
Your yantra, small or vast,
Should be drawn completely round,
With thirteen lines.
O goddess, there will be twelve segments,
Adorned with thirty-six spokes.
On each spoke a letter
Should be placed clearly, in order.
The remaining twenty-four letters
All go in the hub at the center.
The channels generated by them
Are seventy-two thousand.
The retinue of each one individually
Is vasu, arrow, and moon;
What falls short of all by the remainder
Is the assembly of vasu and veda.
For one who abides there, the yantra is drawn up;
A single activity, according to one's inclination.
When the mount of consciousness
Arises in all the channels,
There, at the time of the activity,
The senses and the objects are to be slain.
What is called mentation is to be expelled,
And the mind is to be brought under control.
The elements and the sense sources, and likewise the others,
Are to be pacified and increased.
All the aggregates, and likewise the life force,
Are summoned and made hostile.
Body, speech, and likewise mind,
These are to be paralyzed.
Other activities, as is fitting,
Are one hundred and eight as well.
Or else, whatever the seed is like,
It is from one equal to its measure.
At that time, by the great self,
There is generation and destruction through the letters.

I shall explain the second yantra
Of Vārāhī, the chief lady of the vajra.
The seed at the end of the ya class
Is the nature of the seed of awakening.
The two-tongued letter endowed with the letter ra:
Fill the yoginī mantra with the letter ā.
That which abides in sa is the unmoving.
The letter na endowed with e
Is the reason for emanating all sentient beings.
The vowel abiding first is the first protector.
The two-tongued one touched on its head by the vowel e
Is the nature of the element of the three planes.
The letter ṭa endowed with e,
The first of the fifth,
Is the nature of the yoginī.
The seed abiding fourth in the ya class
Is the nature of the chief lady of all.
The seed first in the eighth class,
Adorned with the empty one,
Is the very essence of the element of semen.
The first abiding in the second
Is the skeleton that holds the drop.
The seed second in the ya class,
Endowed with the vowel i,
Is the protector abiding in the vajra heart.
The last of ta, adorned with the letter e,
Is ornamented upon the womb.
The letter ta endowed with the sun
Is the king who destroys fevers.
bha endowed with the sun, adorned with the letter a,
Abides in the hearth of the navel.
The last of the pa class is the nature of the sites.
The last of ṭa, adorned with i,
Is the nature of summoning.
bi śo ṣa ṣi are four mantras;
Through being the nature of the four joys,
They are the seed of the great treasure.
The letter ra, adorned with the letter o,

Is the nature of the fierce channel.
The second seed of śa
Is in the form of the essence.
Held by its nature, the letter ṇi
Is the very reality of the yoginī.
The letter ka endowed with the letters ra and o
Is the central channel, lalanā, and rasanā by nature.
One should take what abides between ta and pa;
Of the host of yoginīs
It is the eighth foot, the nature of accomplishment.
The last of the ta class, adorned with the letter i,
Is the nature of the channel in the middle of the skull.
One should take what is designated as ka;
By it activities are exhausted.
The letter ra is held by the letter a;
From the middle of the head the great sound drips.
The seed of sa endowed with the letter i
Is in the middle of the triangle.
The last of ta, adorned with i,
Is above and below the emanation.
Join the letters ta, ra, and ā;
The dharmadhātu is the triangle,
And therefore it generates the three planes.
Take sa, the seed together with the central one;
The letter na endowed with i is the nature.
The last of the pa class, adorned with a,
Is the essence of illusion, the channel of the lotus.
Wherever ra abides is the nature of the ear.
The last of the ṭa class endowed with i
Is the protector who holds the elements
Of all sentient beings without distinction.
Thus ten mantra phrases are proclaimed,
Having the measure of the four times.
The universal monarch of the activities
Of all the yoginīs, who enjoys them,
Whose nature is the form of time,
The Blessed God spoke this.

The gathering place of the ḍākinīs
Is known as wheel upon wheel.
From the wisdom of twenty-one thousand six hundred,
It acts in the same way.
Those who speak crookedly
Hold that it is born from the number of its atoms.
Having taken the name of the one to be accomplished,
The wise one then joins the mantra.
First, pa with ra as its seat;
It is the dharma form of the first.
On what abides fourth from it,
The ear is adorned with the letter e:
This is the mantra of the yoginīs.
What abides in the middle of the ta class grants whatever is desired.
The letter na endowed with the letter i
Makes manifold emanations.
The letter pa is together with elaboration.

The letter ra endowed with ā
Is the universal monarch of the yoginīs.
Take the seed abiding in the middle of the ca class;
Its nature is just as it is seen.
The gathering of wind, endowed with the letter e,
Is the nature of the letters a haṃ.
The last of the ya class
Is adorned on its head with the third vowel;
It is the nature of the mantra of manifold wisdom.
The seed of ja, without limit,
Is the form that comes to blaze.
The letter ya endowed with the letter e
Is the form of the view of all the vehicles.
The seed third in the ca class
Is called the form of the yoginī.
The end of pa is on its fourth;
It is the master of all mantras.
The last of the ta class, endowed with the third vowel,
Is the form that calls all sentient beings without exception.
The third of the sibilants, with ta as its seat,

Delivers beings, those that move and those that do not.
Likewise, take the letter mbha;
It is the form of the fourteenth ground.
The mantra ni enters
Into the signs of the yoginīs.
The last of the pa class touched by the letter o
Holds manifold unknowing.
The end of sa is the nature of Vajrasattva.
The letter ni refutes
Dharma and non-Dharma.
The last of the ya class
Is the yoginī, the form of space.
The letter ja with the letter ra as its seat
Is the dawning of the nature of semen.
Again, the last of wind,
Given splendor by the letter a,
Is the form of Brahmā and of the lotus.
The letter ra endowed with the letter a
Is the unchanging nature.
The end of sa, with the third vowel on its head,
Is the form of the yoginīs descending.
ma, the central one, is the form of suchness.
The end of sa, filled with a,
Is proclaimed at the mouth of the yoginī's form.
The letter ya, with the diadem of o,
Is the coemergent nature.
What abides in the middle of the ka class, adorned with the third vowel,
Is the nature without suchness.
The letter ni is without intrinsic nature.
On the first of the second,
The letter a makes it clear:
It is the nature of the desire realm.
The last of the pa class endowed with e
Is the nature of everything as illusion.
The seed of pa, with śa at the end,
And the last letter of the ya class as its seat,
Is semen and wind without distinction.

The seed of fire, adorned on its head with the vowel i,
Is accomplishment, the nature of illusion.
The seed second of ka
Is space, the form of the yoginī.
The letter at the end of that seed,
Adorned at the ear with the letter e,
Is the sole hero, Akṣobhya.
Thus the wheel is the nature of space.
Thus these nine lines
Are the letters of the host of yoginīs,
The nature of the mantra of the three realms.
Abiding in the pledge of the ḍākas,
Whose self is the union of the conduct of all mantras,
Thoroughly bestowing all accomplishments,
The Blessed God spoke this.

Through the power of the third wheel,
One performs whatever activity one wishes.
At the time of the yogins' activities,
One should bewilder everyone through illusion.
The selfless Vajrā, rising again,
Endowed with the yoga of the other wheel,
With the supremely unchanging chief,
The Selfless Lady embraces him tightly.
With the mantra of ta one joins the second.
dya abiding is the seed of fire and wind,
The great passion of great bliss.
Its second seed
Is filled with the letter ā;
It is the nature of the four great elements.
Join the letters pa, ra, and o;
The three are the nature of wind.
The letter ta endowed with the letter aṃ
Is again the seed of consciousness.
What abides in the middle of the ka class,
Fully adorned with the letter e,
Is the nature of the yoginī's mudrā.

It is to be recited again.
These words are the reality of the inseparability of means and wisdom.
The end of sa and the mantra of na
Are to be recited again;
It is the form that generates and gathers.
pa ra ā is a single seed,
The letter of the ultimate.
The end of ṭa endowed with the letter ā
Is born from the indestructible.
The last of ta destroys everything.
On ka ka and where ṇi abides,
Join the third vowel and add the drop;
It calls all the yoginīs.
Likewise kha kha,
And the third, i abiding on ṇa,
Is the cause that removes weariness.
The mantra words dhu na
Are to be recited twice;
They destroy all conceptions.
The mantra of the last of the ya class
Is adorned at the aperture of the vajra.
The seed abiding in the middle of the ca class
Abides fully on a seat of ra;
It devours delusion.
The end of sa is the indestructible, the central one.
The third of the śa class, with ha as its seat,
Adorned at the ear with the letter e,
Is the form of Citriṇī the ḍākinī.
It is the mantra that calls.
The mantra words śo ṣa ya
Are to be recited twice;
They destroy the conceit and pride of those who think themselves wise.
It is awakening, the very reality of no awakening.
Thus these twelve lines
Are the nature of the grounds and of the activities of yoga.
The pervading lord of the twelve grounds,
The Blessed God, spoke this.

Through the signs of the places and so forth of the letters,
One goes beyond to suchness.
From me all sentient beings are born,
And from sentient beings I too arise.
That self having become ever nonexistent,
The Tathāgata is like an illusion, a dream.
This yantra has great power;
The activities arise just as they are.
In the character of Vajraḍāka,
At this time everything is transformed.
In these, the fifth wheel,
Nirvāṇa too is to be proclaimed.
It continually slays the gods and all the rest,
And always liberates them all.

He declared:
The seed second of ka
Is the very host of yoginīs.
Take ṭa with the end of pa as its seat,
And adorn its diadem with aṃ;
Fill it with the letter a.
It is the nature of the six destinies.
The seed abiding in the middle of the ka class
Removes the touch of poison.
The seed of ka is the nature of emptiness.
The last of na endowed with the letter ā
Is powerful through blazing fire.
The seed of holding
Is the great pervading lord of movement.
The fourth of the ta class
Is adorned with the vowel ā;
It is the form free from existence.
The sun endowed with the letter e is the vetāla.
Take the seed of the end of ta,
Adorned on its head with the third vowel;
It slays all the three planes.
The seed of the last of the pa class
Makes the speech of the mind free of conception.

The end of sa endowed with the sound of ā
Is conception, the friend of liberation.
Two ma and two ha are to be recited;
They seize and seize the nature of delusion.
The seed of pa adorned with the letter i:
All the forests of pha wane; that itself is to be taken.
The letter śa endowed with i
Is the mantra of the lion's devouring.
The mantra of ta again gives birth to the deathless.
Fill the end of pa with the letter i,
And let the drop touch its diadem;
Death in the seal is conception.
The letter sa is adorned with two vowels for recitation;
It is what seizes first.
The seed abiding in śa is the charnel ground.
The end of ta endowed with i
Is everything without intrinsic nature.

The last of the pa class, endowed with the vowel ī,
Is the great seizer of the hateful mind.
The letter na with u as its seat dispels all thoughts.
The seed that is second of the śa class,
With the letter ā, and a drop abiding where it touches the head,
Is the mantra for accomplishing awakening,
Through the downward-clearing wind.
The two letters ta and ra,
With sa, are the mantra that causes terror.
The single seed of pa, ra and ā
Crushes the weariness of the Thirty-Three.
The last of the ya class, pressed by ri,
Is the purifier of wisdom.
The seed abiding beside ṇa,
Adorned at its ear with i,
Crushes the ignorance of the yogin.
Fill the letter sa with the letter e;
It makes the cutting off of breath decline.
The mantra na, adorned on its head with the third vowel,

Has the nature of abandoning Dharma and non-Dharma.
The letter dha joined with ya
Is the nature of the mantra of meditative concentration.
The last of the ta class is to be taken;
Appearing like a city, it is without real entity.
The seed that is second of the ya class
Is the blazing of the nature of delusion.
Divide the letter sa with the letter i:
It is the lion that crushes the buffalo.
That which also abides in the sun
Is the king of all yoginīs.
The last of the pa class, adorned with the vowel ā:
By it all sentient beings are held as an illusion.
The seed of holding, adorned with the letter a:
The wisdom of suchness is attained.
Thus, through these fourteen lines,
All sentient beings slay ignorance.
The very embodiment of the sublime mantra,
The one who emits and gathers in,
Who terrifies all the bhūtas,
The Blessed One, the deity, spoke this.
Embodying the form of a wheel,
It adorns the heart of Vārāhī;
Through the inseparability of emptiness and compassion
It is both killing and not killing.
In the middle of the ka class, the one with ra as its seat:
On the head of that third, place a drop.
It has the nature of the supreme vehicle.
The second letter of the ta class
Is endowed with the vowel i;
It makes the yoga of the non-Buddhists (tīrthikas) decline.
The letter ta brings about realization.
That which abides fourth in the ta class, endowed with ā,
Holds endless awakening.
Ra in its place, adorned with the third vowel,
Explains all the yoginīs.
The mantra na adorned with the letter i

Is the path of the yoginīs.
The line of sumbhana
Should be recited twice;
It is the reality of realizing the six words.
Likewise the mantra sumbha
Has the nature of the worship of the yoginīs.
The mantra hana is recited twice;
It makes the hostile vehicle decline.
The single letter of pa, ra and ā:
The essence of each sense faculty, its own, is other.
Fill ṇa with the letters a and aṃ;
This seed is the mantra of qualities.
The letter sa is the dripping of all the channels.
The letter ba, adorned with the letter ra, and ri,
Abiding in pa, enters into space.
The place of the letter sa is the form of all.
Fill the last of the ya class with ā;
Wind is the wisdom of life.
Fill the letter na with the letter ā;
It is not conceiving of awakening as anything at all.
One should gaze at the drop on its head.
The last of the ba class is the form of the great bee.
The end of sa should be filled with ā;
It is the life of the assembly of yoginīs.
To the end of pa endowed with a
A diadem of aṃ is added as adornment;
It has the nature of a cloud of all phenomena.
The letter sa slays ignorance of the true Dharma.
The mantra cche is the bodhisattva;
Having gone, there is no birth in saṃsāra.
The seed abiding in the middle of the ta class:
Nga is appearance without an object.
Na endowed with i
Is the very binding of the entire world.
The mantra kro, by suppressing, cuts off saṃsāra.
The seed dha crushes all beings;
It renders them free of conceptual elaboration.

The letter mū, the seed,
Is the karma of the whole deluded world.
Thus these fourteen and a half words
Are the end of the wheel of the channels.
Practices such as vase breath retention (kumbhaka):
The yogin does whatever he wishes.
Through the thorough application of the six wheels,
It is the nature of whatever action is desired;
The lord, able to accomplish the union,
The Blessed One, spoke this.
From the crown protuberance and so on down to the place of birth,
From body, speech, mind, consciousness and space,
By the forward order and by reversal of that order,
Reality and the awakenings should be known.
Here it is declared as the aspect of skillful means
And also as the aspect of wisdom.
Or else, in the intervals
Between each letter, and again,
The mantra dhi is of innate nature;
It performs the subsidiary rites
Of the particular wheel.
The mantra daṃṣṭrakarāli
Has the nature of the karma of beings.
The mantra ma, the mantra hā, and the mantra mudre
Are the nature of the ear.
The mantra words śrīherukadevasyagramahiṣi
Are the nature of the nose.
The mantra sahasraśire
Is the form of the lord of voice.
The mantra syllables sahasrabāhabe
Are the form of the body.
The mantra śatasa is a single wheel.
The mantra of the ḍākinī has the nature
Of death and of birth.
From the Dharma whose aspect is nondual,
Sentient beings grasp it as two;
The one who bestows bliss upon wisdom,

The Blessed Guru, spoke this.
The śrāvakas and others, and the non-Buddhists,
All the cattle of ignorance:
In order that they may attain wisdom,
This method has been taught.
The mantra hasrānane
Touches visible form as object.
The mantra jvalitatejase:
These mantra words are the object of the mind.
The words jvalamukhi are the object of the body.
The mantra piṅgalocana
Is eye consciousness.
The mantra words bajraśarī
Are body consciousness.
The mantra bajrāsane
Touches the object of the nose.
The mantra words milite
Are nose consciousness.
The mantra words cilite
Are the object of the lord of voice.
The mantra he, recited twice, is the object of sound,
The consciousness of both sound and voice.
Thus the seven and a half mantra words
Are the form of all death and birth.
The Blessed Lord, delighting in bliss with Vārāhī,
Spoke this:
Embodying the union of bola and kakkola,
It slays objects, sense faculties and the rest.
Whatever sentient beings there are,
Born from the lotus of the object,
Those very sentient beings
Are slain by their own respective karmas.
Because it destroys objects and the rest,
That is explained as the wheel of wisdom.
The actions of the tantra and of the tantras
Are the wisdom that is the heart of accomplishment.
The end of sa, seated on the sixth vowel,

Its head adorned with crescent moon and drop,
Should be recited twice;
It is the secret form of Vajrasattva.
kha twice, dhu twice, muru twice
Are the reality of the actions;
They abide together with the life breath.

advīte mahāyoginī,
The mantra words pathitasiddhe:
That, too, is the form of the end of the body.
dre ṅhaṃ, two words; graṃ, two words;
he, two words; ha, two words.
The letters of the ten wrathful ones
Are to be understood as Yamāntaka and the others.
On the seed that is fourth of the pa class
The letter ī touches the head.
The mantra mesa comprises all the words;
It is the nature of the ḍākinī.
Thus these twelve mantra words
Deceive the twelve links of dependent origination.
The Teacher, the chief of the great pledge,
The Blessed One, spoke this.
By the karma of the twelve limbs of dependent origination
It stupefies them all together.
The letters that generate the messengers
Have the nature of the form of a wheel.
Just as the wheel is not the letters,
So the messengers are without intrinsic nature.
What is variously born from that ripening
Is perceived under its separate name;
Through the reality of Mañjuvajra and the others
The characteristic of the avadhūtī is to be made.
hāsahā, the mantra words of the single hero,
Are the seed of the six tathāgatas;
They explain endless qualities.
The seed hā, four letters;
ho once and ho twice are to be recited.

The seven letters are the elements of skin and the rest.
The mantra trailokyabināśa
Is armor against the hostile.
śatasahasrakoṭi
tathāgataparibāre.
The end of sa, ornamented with the vowel ū,
Adorned with crescent moon and drop:
Thus it gathers in all mantras.
ha ū aṃ is the nature of the mantra.
Thus there are four mantra words.
Generating the yoginīs, accomplishment comes about.
Entering into the accomplishment granted by command,
The Blessed Hero spoke this.
What is taught in the Ḍākinīsaṃvara, in the Abhidhāna,
And also in the other yoginī tantras
And in the yoga tantras
Bestows the accomplishments of the whole range of rites.
Through the thorough application of the wheel granted by command
They are accomplished, and not by any other application.
Again, the end of sa, on a seat
Abiding beside the fifth vowel,
Is adorned with crescent moon and drop.
By the rite, it is the seed of reality itself.
That which abides beside pa
Generates the assembly of yoginīs.
The mantra that makes the letter ṭa blaze:
The mantra words siṅharupe khaḥ
Destroy the chief of the obstructors.
The mantra gajarūpe gaḥ
Acts upon the obstructors of all sentient beings.
The words trailokyodare
Generate all the most supreme messengers.
The words samudramekhale, with graha twice:
Adorned with a girdle like the ocean,
That is the girdle of the mantra, and so on.
The letters hūṃ and phaṭ
Are the all-pervading lord of the ḍākinīs.

The mantra words bīrādvīte hūṃ:
From the nonduality of skillful means and wisdom
The ordinary conditioned is born.
Thus the mantra of seven lines.
Of the nature of the ground of wisdom,
The Blessed Vajra spoke this:
At the end, when sentient beings are accomplished through karma,
They go to his supreme state,
The name of the Buddha Vajradhara;
Born again, they abide on the path.
The illusory aspect is illusion;
One's own self is known individually.
hūṃ hā twice, mahāpaśumohani:
These words are the delusion of saṃsāra.
The mantra yogīśvarī tvaṃ
Is in the form of peace.
The words ḍākinīlokānāṃ bandhā
Cause the world to enter awakening.
The mantra words satyame hūṃ phaṭ
Teach the four extremes.
The words bhūtatrāsani
Crush the wisdom of the non-Buddhists (tīrthikas).
Thus by these seven mantra words
The distinctions of the rites are made.
On each petal around the lotus hub
The letters of the mantra abide;
The form of the hero's mantra abides.
The Blessed One spoke this.
Those twelve great yantras
Were spoken by my beloved.
The yantras of all the rites
Are to be performed together with the twelve.
In each of the great wheels
One must perform its respective rite.
At the twelve junctions
One should accomplish it with the name of the one to be subdued.
The end of pa and the end of sa, endowed with ā;

The end of ya together with the vowel ī;
The letter re, the end of na, and the letter ra;
The end of pa and the word siddhe;
The word pidye, the mantra śvari, that which stands beside pa, and the seed ṭa;
hū adorned with crescent moon and drop:
Repeat it and recite it again.
That which abides beside pa, and the letter ṭa,
Together with hūṃ phaṭ and svāhā:
With this mantra, at the hub, according to the rite,
Recite it together with the name of the one to be subdued.
The twelve together with the hub:
The Tathāgata spoke this.
The seed letters, twenty-four,
Are mixed with Pullīra and the other sites.
Glorious Heruka-vajra and Vārāhī:
What has not arisen will not arise.
As for the might and power of this mantra,
From the endless scriptures taught
In thousands of koṭis, the hero
Has likewise gathered the essence.
The mantras taught in other tantras
Are the means of accomplishment of this mantra.
Without recitation, without count, without letters,
Without form, and likewise without meditative concentration,
By the wisdom that recollects the deity
All accomplishments are generated.
At the time the breath enters,
All the letters are to be slain.
With the exhalations one performs every application;
This is to be known at the time of outflow.
At the time of abiding, the lord of yogins
Should not desire a buddhafield.
Thus the movement of the breath is to be known;
Childish yogins do not realize it.
The disciple whom one empowers
With the four realities,

Once fully matured in the Great Vehicle,
Should afterwards be properly taught the mantra.
First the maṇḍala of Vārāhī
Is to be drawn, and then that of Heruka.
A vajra daughter, or else another,
Is there to be brought in as the wisdom consort.
When empowering in other tantras
This method is not to be taught.
Wisdom having the nature of the knowable:
The maṇḍala is to be made in the avadhūtī.
Vārāhī, the aspect of wisdom,
Embraces the knowable, glorious Heruka.
She has three eyes and a fierce form,
Four faces with bared fangs,
And is endowed with twelve arms.
She tramples Gaurī and Bhairava.
On her body are the five mudrās and the rest;
She is radiant like the fire at the time of destruction.
In her right hands are a vajra and a curved knife,
An axe, likewise a ḍamaru,
A trident, and the skin of the Bodiless One (Kāma);
And so too with her left hands:
On the left are a bell and a skull cup,
A noose, a khaṭvāṅga, and a head.
Her hair hangs loose; she is naked,
Holding a garland of heads,
Endowed with the ornaments of erotic charm,
With a garland of skulls on her head.
She is sealed with the vajra of passion,
Or else with Heruka.

Her limbs are anointed with divine fragrances;
She wears anklets and armlets
And is draped with garlands of divine flowers.
Upon her forehead she always holds
A vajra resting on the moon at the tip of her crest.
She stands with her right leg extended.

Before the assembly of yoginīs
She sends forth garlands blazing from her body.
Heruka is like black collyrium,
His crown of matted locks in front.
He wears a skirt of tiger skin
And is fully adorned with the five mudrās.
The hero has a garland of skulls
And bears a crossed vajra and a half moon.
He has three eyes and bared fangs;
With four faces he strikes terror.
He is to be known as twelve-armed,
Adorned with fifty heads.
For worship he bears ash as well;
He has a garland of flames and bares his fangs.
With two hands he forms the mudrā of the place of birth;
The rest are as for Vajravārāhī.
If Heruka is the principal,
Then they are in the two hands of Vārāhī.
He holds an elephant skin.
Embodying skillful means and wisdom,
Undefiled yoga, excellent great bliss,
The form of existence and of nirvāṇa:
The two are to be given as the heart mantra.
As for the remaining yoginīs,
Ḍākinī and the others, in their order,
The knower of mantra should give the skull fragments and the rest
To all the heroes as well.
For each one, too, its tantra
Follows the earlier pattern.
The lalanā and rasanā channels,
Where wisdom and skillful means meet,
Have as their support the avadhūtī;
There one arrives at equal taste.
The three wheels are to be known as becoming twofold,
With Ḍākinī and the others in their order.
Heruka and Vajravārāhī
Have hundreds of thousands and thousands of arms;

Beginning from two arms and so on,
Whatever others there are, they are those.
Not gazing at the objects of the senses,
Not with hands, postures and the like,
By meditating, all elaborations are seized;
Abandon that delusion.
The self of the yoga of momentary aspect,
Whose application is the moment and the rest:
Set out the seed in the heart
And perform emanation, absorption and the rest.
Invite the maṇḍala, worship it,
Confess wrongdoing, and so on;
Emptiness and so on, up to Mount Meru;
The fence, the tent, and the rest.
On the ground portion are the vajra lines;
It is drawn in six wheels.
Following the defining marks of the clear realization as it is,
Perform all the various aspects.
All the methods and instructions
I, the Beautiful One, have explained.
There the torma is to be given,
And worship made with the five, earth and the rest.
With the letters of the blazing syllables
The recitation of the mantra is also to be done.
With the blazing, doubly increasing letters
Kindle the caṇḍālī of the life breath.
Facing upward, it burns the channels;
Likewise the wisdom ḍāka is born.
All the ḍākinīs and the others, without exception,
And consciousness and the rest, dissolve;
Burned, the rabbit-bearing moon, haṃ, drips.
All the heroes in equal union,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

From the Great King of Yoginī Tantras, the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas: the nature of the generation of Vajravārāhī, of the chief goddess, of the wheel of yantras, of the meditation on the maṇḍala, and so on. This is the second chapter.

Next, the generation of Ḍākinī and the others,
How it is done, I shall fully explain.
Relying on union with the ḍākinī,
The Blessed One plays supremely.
The form of Vārāhī, though infinite,
Is the binding of the net of elaborations.
By the distinctions of bodily things
The ḍākinī has infinite forms.
Relying on the bliss of the body,
Desire becomes threefold.
There are three joys and three channels;
The fourth is held to be the innate.
The great experience of the buddha body:
From its nature the manifold radiates.
Relying on the abodes of the ḍākinīs,
It is the nature of the maṇḍala wheel.
In the center of the twelve sections
Of great Jambudvīpa,
In the eastern land, the goddess abides:
The union of time, Rohita, the makara,
Victory and the sun, the producer of joy,
And the life breath flowing as the substance of the channel.
The goddess, as the self of outer and inner,
Abides in the form of the Blessed Lady.
She has four arms and is black in color,
With three eyes and a single face.
She bares her fangs and is fierce,
Manifestly holding the five mudrās.
She rides a corpse, her hair hangs loose,
And she stands with her right leg extended.
The fierce one has a garland of skulls;
In her right hands are a ḍamaru and a curved knife,
In her left a skull cup and a khaṭvāṅga.
Her body emanates and gathers in.

She is to be placed in the center of the maṇḍala
That embodies the thirty-seven.
The heart mantra of twenty-two syllables,
Joined in union with the ḍākinīs:
oṃ śrī oṃ bajra bajra he ḍā he ki ru nī ru ye kaṃ hūṃ ḍā hūṃ ki pha nī ṭa jā pha la ṭa saṃ svā ba hā ra hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā.
The goddesses of the maṇḍala
Are held to be letters bearing the vajra.
From Ḍākinī to the end with the Crusher of Thunderbolts,
They are renowned as the root of the family.
Once the abode of the ḍākinī has been accomplished,
Vārāhī will abide there.
The thirty-seven deities
Are bliss nondual with a skillful means like themselves,
To be known through the application of their names:
An instruction serving many purposes.
The tantra of the thirty-seven
Is generated from great bliss.
Because the lord is the ḍākinī,
That tantra is of the ḍākinī family.
Lord, I am yours.
How you are to be generated by me,
Having pleased the Blessed One
Who gives bliss to the ḍākinī,
Listen, and I shall explain your generation.
One's own continuum, unimpaired;
The letter ḍā, the very self of the secret aperture;
In the form of a bow, endowed with the life breath;
Truly having the form of the body;
Embodying objects and sense faculties;
The great drop of the mind of awakening;
The continuum bearing the name i:
In the great lotus of going and coming
It pervades the wheel of channels.
The letter ka and the form of ka likewise:
Luminosity, what is emanated, and the emanation.

In all the realms of enlightened activity
She goes forth greatly in peaceful form.
Though without joy, her beauty does not change;
She is ripened by the hues of the ineffable innate.
In human form, always through great bliss,
Illusory displays surely radiate forth.
Ī shows itself as all the great elements,
And as Īśvara and the rest.
Through the Ram, the Tawny One and the Good-Minded
Its basis is generated.
This is the name of the ḍākinī;
It is to be indicated according to the time of the rite.
Summoning the nāgas properly,
Melting them so as to make them bring down rain,
The great magic over the gods, all the bhūtas
And kings as well,
Subjugation, fierce rites, paralysis,
Killing, expulsion and the rest:
These are to be known from the time of the fierce rites.
She is generated in each one's own continent.
Through the equipoise of wisdom and skillful means,
The lord of yogins, embodying emptiness and compassion,
With subtle mind, and by what is extremely subtle,
Enters therein.
For the sake of sentient beings, here and there,
He acts through union with his own self.
In the great thousandfold trichiliocosm,
Where the all-pervading lord enjoys everything,
There, in the twelve sections,
Each one's own chief goddess, a yoginī,
In dissolution and in the enjoyments of experience,
Enjoys all the great miraculous powers.
The movements of the breath, twenty-one thousand six hundred,
Are to be known.
By the eighteen hundred life breaths
The transference is here declared.
The twelve become the day and night,
In the sequence of the twelve junctures of time.

Having tripled the junctures of time,
The messengers of time enjoy everything.
By fifty times, each messenger
Is to be distinctly known.
By fifty-three, precisely,
They act within a single day and night.
They are properly explained as letters,
Beginning with a and ending with kṣa.
Taught as the surplus qualities,
Tripled, together with half a hundred,
These are definitively explained as the messengers.
This is the ḍākinī seal:
Sky-goers, earth-goers and others,
And those who abide below the earth as well.
The yoginīs are of three kinds:
Field-born, mantra-born, and innate by nature.
Whoever abides predominantly through whichever,
That one is clearly seen as hers.
Relying on the distinction of family,
They abide born from the union of desire.
In those eatings of the caru,
The great beast having the form of wisdom:
What is not to be eaten is to be eaten there as well,
And what is not indicated is to be clearly indicated.
Abandon both characteristic and non-characteristic;
That is the thorough abandonment of abandoning.
Even attachment to caring for and subduing,
Whoever, by whatever, in its own reality,
Having made the Buddha and the Dharma abide,
Through the application of manifest union:
When the life wind of the avadhūtī
Is stable, Vārāhī and the other yoginīs appear;
For those whose life winds are unstable
Accomplishment does not become clear.
The goddess is to be sealed by Vairocana,
And by Akṣobhya, lord who holds the vajra.
The thirty-six mantras of the messengers,

By time, each with its own family,
As with the family of the chief goddess,
Their hands and emblems in their order;
Or else, as definitively stated,
They are to be known from the characteristics of the clear realization.
Through the union of bolla and kakkola
The goddess herself enters into melting.
In that instant she beholds
All the maṇḍalas without exception as of equal taste.
The goddess, appearing within space,
Should rouse the lord with this:
Vajra of supreme great bliss, play, play!
Bring the intention of wisdom and skillful means to perfect fulfillment.
Through your compassion, meditated upon for the worlds,
Make all the gods and asuras, without exception, into buddhas.
Holder of the vajra of awakening, give delight with great bliss.
Have you entered the meditative absorption of emptiness?
Through the play of vajra and lotus, realize it with certainty today,
You who abide together with her in the absorption of emptiness.
Lord, let the seed of the four elements drip.
Caṇḍālī, the very nature of the avadhūtī, will arise;
She burns the three worlds, and is seen nowhere at all.
In the essence of nirvāṇa she blazes and goes on blazing.
Delight the ḍākinīs through the innate nature.
Joy and the appearance of death are not seen.
Protector, Victor of mind, awaken these beings.
Liberate the realm of illusory sentient beings.
Having heard this great song,
The yogin possessed of the wheel fully awoke.
All beings, like illusions,
Beings both stable and otherwise,
Just as he saw them, he with his own wheel
Dissolved into space and became the great body.
Possessing emanations through the innate and the rest,
The great body in which the two are one,
Having the nature of the Ādibuddha,
Is the Dharma body of all.

Having obtained the yoginī tantra,
One gains confidence in the yoga tantras.
The master Cittavajra, too,
Is the domain of the Madhyamaka way.
From obtaining that reality as outwardly taught
Comes the characteristic of the great Madhyamaka.
The domain of the instructions on tenets
Is not the domain even of the learned.
Tenets are to be known from direct perception;
The instructions, too, from inference.
All is to be known from the guru's mouth;
That wise one is the domain of the buddhas.
It is not the domain of the conceited
Vijñānavādins of the childish class.
From the equal union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

From the Great King of Yoginī Tantras, the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas, this is the rite that sets out the characteristics of the generation of the ḍākinīs and the reality of the action of fully enjoying bliss. This is the third chapter.

Next I shall rightly explain
How Lāmā abides.
As it was taught by the buddhas of old,
So I merely make it clear.
The Blessed One is Vajrasaṃvara;
Vārāhī is the yoga saṃvara;
Cakrasaṃvara is Ḍākinī;
And likewise the samaya saṃvara
Was rightly taught by Lāmā.
What is held to be the lotus saṃvara
Is she who has the form of Khaṇḍarohā,
The jewel saṃvara. To the all-pervading lord
Lāmā herself put the question:
"What is the vajra saṃvara and the others like?
O wondrous one, my lord,

How likewise is the union of the vajra samaya,
The lotus wheel, and likewise
The saṃvara of the jewel?"
Then, having worshiped the vajra holder,
Being pleased, he rightly spoke to me:
"Having realized the vajra cave, the wisdom without transference,
In the three vajras,
The saṃvara in the three vajras,
The generation, is the vajra saṃvara.
In all the root samayas,
To be known, the saṃvara that protects
The follower of the path; the worship of the wheel
Is held to be the samaya saṃvara.
The sixfold yoga,
The six unions in the aperture of space,
The saṃvara, all the true realities:
This is my yoga saṃvara.
The lotus is the channel of the avadhūtī;
Abiding in the four wheels,
It is the saṃvara; in those wheels
It is to be declared the lotus saṃvara.
The wheel is the path of the sugatas;
Through generation in the empowerments and the rest
It is the saṃvara; in those dharmas
It is explained to be the Cakrasaṃvara.
The jewel: by the coming that descends
Into the gem at the head of the vajra
It is the saṃvara; the drop of the life breath, too,
Is held to be the jewel saṃvara.
From what has not been explained, through these:
The seventh ḍāka is the supreme wisdom;
Kākāsyā and the others, eight,
And the guide, because of the characteristic of nonduality.
Thus, through the equal union of them all,
It is the ḍāka of the single saṃvara.
Caṇḍālī, the blazing one, as form:
The separate channels and the central one;

From that the wisdom ḍāka is generated.
From the instant that knows all aspects,
In the center of the mind of awakening,
Whatever has the secret form of nectar
Is explained to be Vajraḍāka.
The supreme of those who go in space,
The adventitious, the selfless,
Great magical display, the form of the water-born lotus:
Though the yogin's own mind is without mind,
It is the characteristic of the yoga ḍāka.
The form that embodies the inner wheel,
Through the drops being joined everywhere,
At the vital points and junctions of the characteristics,
Buddhas will be born everywhere.
The assembly embodying outer and inner
Comes from the very nature of the reality of wisdom.
The samaya being, knowing the three,
Is to be known from all the existences
Of birth, of death, and of the intermediate state.
Through abandoning, the samaya ḍāka is born.
Though it is not known by any self,
Beings come to it by the path of the wise.
Passion together with illusion, space:
The lotus ḍāka herself is chief.
The vowels likewise, and yoga,
And the mudrā, and the innate desires:
As they proceed, she is always born.
The blazing jewel empowerment ḍāka:
Likewise the elements, of seven kinds,
Are the characteristic of the seven consciousnesses.
Treasuries of water, mountains and continents too
Have fully entered that great ocean.
That reality embodying the twenty-five
Is the cause of the wisdom of the buddhas.
The encircling range and the rest, emptiness,
Nature, and likewise the person,
Luminosity and all names,

The dharmadhātu and the specific characteristic,
Liberation and buddha likewise,
Wisdom, Vajrasattva, the path, the self,
The source of phenomena and the Great Vehicle,
The way of secret mantra, the all-pervading lord,
The innate and union likewise,
Great compassion itself,
The Selfless Lady and all reality:
Possessed of a nature, empty, again and again.
Therefore, with the name of the ocean,
And by the form of the great ocean:
ā: sentient beings tormented by every fear
Are by nature endowed with the qualities of a buddha.
rṇṇa: they, in their longing for virtue,
Have no weariness and no fatigue.
va: from abandoning all thoughts,
What is attained is the specific characteristic of illusion.
ma: all that embodies the way of secret mantra.
hā: it has the form of generation.
sa: its dharmas are untrue,
mu: because things perish in an instant.
dra: substance, variety, and self-revealed dharmas
Are the characteristic of the great ocean."
The specific characteristic of Lāmā, the grounds,
Just as they are, in their order:
Generated from the intoxication of play,
All the yoginīs are to be known.
The mothers and the rest follow
From the channel paths of the wheel of all.
Or else she will hold illusion;
That is the nature of great illusion.
Through conduct in the sign of the vase,
The number of transferences is the second.
The goddess with Vajravārāhī,
All-enjoying, abides as Lāmā.
The goddess is green in color;
The rest is like Ḍākinī.

All the things of craving and of hatred
Abide upon her.
The color and form of Heruka,
The followers of the tathāgatas,
The remaining yoginīs of the six circles,
The heroes, and all, arise.
Place them in the center of the spokes of the wheel;
Mind and the rest are known as six colors.
The wheel is to be drawn in equal parts;
Likewise the vajra and lotus circles.
The garlands of swords, jewels and curved knives
Are always to be known in their order.
Outside is a garland of crossed vajras,
And garlands of heads all around.
Lāmā is generated from the mind of awakening;
She is the chief of the assembly of yoginīs.
In accord with the times, for the benefit of beings,
She is the characteristic of aspiration.
In the midst of the Fortunate Eon, too,
In the Kṛta age, Vipaśyin and the others
Are to be known at that time;
Likewise Vipaśyin in the northern continent.
In Jambudvīpa, too, in Chudün,
I follow the Śākya clan.
In the remaining five continents
The families of the tathāgatas follow in order.
Therefore Lāmā takes all beings
To the final abode of the supreme buddha.
The mother clearly performs
The deeds of courage of all the yogas.
On the day of the lord of the earth,
She is held to be with the lunar mansion Maghā.
The wind called downward-clearing,
And the channel called Going and Moon,
Until the very time of death,
Even while held, do not decline.
Thus the twelve yoginīs

Are the months, the days and nights, and the winds.
Flowing from channel to channel,
The yoginī generates human beings.
In the entire assembly of the channels
The life breath transfers within an instant.
Having understood that nature,
Through the qualities of hatred and the rest, in order,
She thereby embodies the various emanations,
And through karma the abodes are many.

The single entity of the yogin
Is Lāmā, the characteristic of nirvāṇa.
Even when nirvāṇa and what signifies it
Have both entered in, they are without name.
That which is not known as it is,
I perceive as the supreme.
Buddhas and bodhisattvas would come to be nonexistent;
The Dharma body and the rest are entities.
Through the kindness of the faculties
All who are subject to birth will attain.
Although the reality of the faculties is not true,
At that time one attains through the untrue.
What is the very nature of the two faculties?
It is like the person in a shadow.
Although the shadow as a thing is real,
The form of the person is not real.
Likewise, although the faculties are not true,
Their reality has the characteristic of truth.
The many other kinds of oral instruction
Should be known as supremely praised.
Drink and the like, all one's possessions:
To offer them to the guru is true.
That should be enjoyed as untrue;
One should not hold it in contempt.

Here I shall also explain the mantra.
In this ocean of all the goddesses,
The near-heart mantras

Are adorned with beautiful union.
Body, speech, and mind vajra:
The near-heart is held to be threefold,
By forward order and by its reversal,
And likewise, in the middle, not in forward order.
oṃ oṃ ba hrīḥ jra he lā he mā hūṃ yai hūṃ hūṃ pha hūṃ ṭa pha ṭa pha hūṃ ṭa hūṃ svā hā hā he hrīḥ oṃ oṃ hūṃ he hūṃ he hrīḥ phaṭ oṃ. Thus it is.

By means of the thirty-seven,
In the order of the mistresses of yoga,
The channels and the words are to be known.
Of the nature of the uttered syllables,
Generate the channels of two and of three,
And also of each single syllable.
Or else, by gathering them all together,
This is the time of the Great Self.
Therefore, as the embodiment of all buddhas,
The yoginīs are always born one by one.
If the great being becomes wrathful,
The yoginī is the wrathful one emanated.
Likewise delusion, attachment, and the rest:
The yoginīs are ever emanated.
Accomplishing rites with little effort,
One will attain even Lāmā, the supreme mother.
The Blessed Lord spoke this:
"Each syllable is a yoginī;
Her name is said to be equal to it.
For you it is blended with the supreme vajra."
Thus, constantly relying on that reality,
Together with the yogic consort (mudrā),
One should sport and play expansively.
In the midst of existence and nirvāṇa,
The union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata:
The Blessed Lord spoke this.

This was the fourth chapter of the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas, Great King of Yoginī Tantras, on the characteristics of generating Lāmā, the setting out of the mantras, the nature of the six wheel-turning monarchs and the rest, and the presentation of nirvāṇa and the rest.

Next, I shall explain the supreme.
Out of loving concern for beings,
Abiding in the abode of Khaṇḍarohā,
The lord Vajraḍāka:
In the lotuses of the four wheels
The channels are one hundred and twenty.
Their names, as is fitting,
Are explained to one who is a vessel for reality.
She of Madhyadeśa, she of Kaliṅga,
She of Oṭa, she of Karṇāṭa, she of Maru,
She of Saurāṣṭra, she of Malaya, she of Vaṅga,
She of Draviḍa and she of Taliṅgaka,
She of Mālava, she of Mahārāṣṭra,
She of Varendra, she of Kāmarūpa,
She of Ḍāhāla, she of the land of Aṭali,
She of Bhaḍari, she of central Lāḍā,
She of Tirahudati, she of Daddaranaṭa, and she of Nepal,
She of Śrāvastī, she of Rāḍha, and she of Ḍikakari,
She of Bhaṅgala, she of Khaḍa, and she of Harikela,
She of Suvarṇadvīpa and she of Siṅgala,
She of Ḍamaḍa, she of Kantoraka,
She of Sindhu, she of Himālaya, she of Cūṃḍi,
She of Kulūta, she of Jaḍara, she of Patha,
She of Jajjayuta and she of Varuṇa,
She of Oḍiyāna and she of Lampāka,
She of Jālandhara and she of Arbuda,
She of Kashmir, she of Kosala, she of Kāñcī,
She of Jayanta, she of Triśakta, she of Cambha,
She of Luhara and she of Purahorika,
She of Mummunam and she of Kāmboja,
She of Bhaṭṭo, she of Gṛhadevatā,
She of Pretapurī and she of Babbhara,
She of the Pīla and she of the Upapīla,

She of the charnel ground and she of the secondary charnel ground,
She of the shore of the great ocean, she of Khasa,
She of the barbarian lands, and she of all lands:
In order, these are the sixty-four goddesses.
The yoginīs of the navel wheel
Should be known as the channels of the families.
Likewise, in the heart wheel, there are eight,
Messengers who go everywhere:
She of Prayāga, she of Devīkoṭa,
She of Ujjayinī and the Great Glorious One,
She of Jvālāmukhī, she of Siddhaśrimbali,
She of Mahila, Kaumārī, she of Saura.
Thus all of them, in the abode of the heart,
Are field-born ones in the manner of illusion.
And the goddesses of the wheel in the throat,
The supreme chief ladies, I shall explain.
They are the sixteen great portions,
And likewise the sixteen elements:
Blood and semen and marrow,
Sweat and fat and skin,
Flesh and bone and sinew,
Pus and entrails and menstrual blood,
Feces, urine, bile, and saliva.
Rahasya and the rest, the element of fat:
They are the ones who flow with intoxicants.
In the head are the great goddesses,
The thirty-two channels of the wheel.
Throughout the whole sequence of the days,
At all the junctures, they are the great marvelous ones:
Kālī, She Who Bares Her Fangs, the Terrifying One,
Nandā, She Who Has Passed Beyond, Vināyakī,
Cāmuṇḍā and She of Fierce Form,
The goddess Durgā, Sarasvatī,
Bhadrakālī and Mahākālī,
Stout Kālī and Aparājitā,
Jayā and Vijayā,
Ajitā and the Victress,

Raudrī, the Hostile One, Aindrī,
She of the Moon, she of the crossroads,
She who dwells in villages, and the Fierce-Eyed One,
Kāmbojī, Ḍombī,
Caṇḍālī and the Outcaste Woman,
Brāhmaṇī and Śūdrī,
The Princess, She of Great Magic,
And She Who Fills with the Divine Substance, Liquor.
Thus, in the wheel of the channels,
Khaṇḍarohā is the one who moves within.
"Am I the one who moves here?
Let my own lord declare it!"
In all bodies the elements
Become a single entity, like space.
It should be known as with the portions of the earth:
Though divided into regions, the earth is one.
The element that has become piece by piece
Becomes, again, the regions and the days.
Because of this the syllable ḍa is taught.
From the characteristics of egg and womb,
Here consciousness comes to be generated.
In whatever elements, of whatever kind,
It should be known as fourfold.
In action, Khaṇḍarohā herself
Is she who snatches away great evil;
What is slain is all the elements.

Through her, Khaṇḍarohā, the dissolution of beings,
She who performs all actions completely,
The yoginī, the supreme chief lady,
The supreme one, arises from her own transference.
At the time of the rising of the Fish,
With Desire, the lunar mansion, and Supreme Throat,
In the western continent of Godānīya,
She whose nature is great passion,
The goddess who is neither nonentity nor agent,
She who rests on the state of nonduality,

In the center, embodying the thirty-seven,
Is generated, arising from her own mantra:
oṃ ba sa jra rba kha bu ṇḍa ddha ro ba hi jra kā ḍā yai ke hūṃ nī hūṃ ye phaṭ ba phaṭ rṇṇa svā nī hā ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā ha oṃ.
This mantra is to be fully applied.
In all the maṇḍalas one desires,
In the center of each of the goddesses
Is she who is born of the four wheels,
Embodying skillful means and wisdom.
All are in the middle of a source of phenomena,
Properly endowed with four gates,
And these are adorned with archways.
While eating the great flesh,
They proclaim a terrifying sound.
For the wheel of Lāmā, the flesh of cattle;
For Ḍākinī, the flesh of elephants;
For Vārāhī, every kind of flesh:
This is through the application of the pledge and the vow.
Having understood the secret mantra as truth,
It is not the uttering of the syllables of mantra.
Whatever is the speech of all sentient beings,
That is mantra, renowned as the yoginī.
If mantra were a matter of letters,
It would be like the letters of a Goḍi.
In each and every aperture of the channels
The breath is perceived as syllables.
Through the drink of mantra, in the mind,
For as long as there is cessation at the end of the feet,
It moves everywhere, from region to region,
And then, coming also to the central region,
In one's own machine, which is to be satisfied,
The drink flows down as from a vase.
Dwelling on the maṇḍala as one's own seat,
Turn it like the wheel of the life breath.
While it is being turned by the hero,
One should press it into the aperture of the jewel.
In the nine apertures also, the seeds

Should be meditated upon with the vajra and the rest.
Or else, in all the channels,
These syllables of mantra should be set out:
ma ka oṃ kā ma sau ma bi dra ta mā ma bha kā ḍā a bha lā ma ti da ne srā rā ḍi ba khā ha su si ḍā ka si hi cu ku ja pa ja ba au laṃ jā a kā ko kāṃ ja tri ca lu pu muṃ kāṃ bha gri pre ba pi u sma u kha mme: these are at the navel. pri de u ma jva su ma kau: these are at the heart. ra śu ma svā me ca māṃ a snā pū a sva bi mū pi śle: these are of the throat. kṛ ka bhī nā ti bi cā gau o sa bha ma bhru a ja bi a ja go du i ca ca grā rau kāṃ ḍau ca mā brā sū rā: these are at the wheel of the head. Or else they bear the names of Abhedyā and the rest; the first letters of these, too,
All are to be given to the wheel of the head.
This machine, O great-minded one:
The wind of life comes to be held.
In the shape of the petals of four lotuses,
Draw the lines of the wheel of squares in sequence.
All of them in circular form,
The five lines should be drawn.
Eight, sixteen, sixty-four,
And thirty-two squares are held to be.
Having reached the place of the navel,
It turns by the powers of the life force.
As long as there is the wind of the avadhūtī,
So long is this machine declared here.
If one does this by means of speech,
Sing the mantra softly and melodiously.
Having firmly nailed down the life force with sound,
One should block the nine channels.
Free of illness, unaging, free of leprosy,
Always without hunger and thirst:
Limitless benefits such as these,
And one does not end in illness and death.
In the five maṇḍalas, or else
In all that have the machine, one should make it flow down.
The elements, the sense bases, and the rest
Are to be eaten by one endowed with the yoga of nectar.
Red in color, she is perception; for the rest,

She has the arms and the form of Lāmā.
The union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata:
The Blessed Lord spoke this.

This was the fifth chapter of the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas, Great King of Yoginī Tantras, the rite on the characteristics and generation of Khaṇḍarohā, the brief teaching of the names in the presentation of the channels of the four wheels, the setting out of the mantras, and the rest.

Next, I shall explain another supreme matter,
In brief and not at length.
From the complete union of glorious Heruka,
The virtuous characteristics of Rūpiṇī.
Embodied beings, actions, and the joints
First of all rely on Rūpiṇī.
In a form that embodies outer and inner,
Abiding in bliss, she comes to move.
Here, in all the limbs,
There are twelve joints.
They should be known as five each:
In the twelve there are sixty channels.
She who flows in the maṇḍalas as well
Is held to have twelve transitions.
On the left and on the right as well,
First Aries and the rest, for the knower of mantra;
The remaining ones are the four apertures.
The navel, the groin, and the two flanks
Should likewise be known as the triangle.
Its gates are sixty channels;
The junctures are declared to be fivefold.
Whatever moves along the course of the sun
Moves in the moon and in the months,
In portions of six, five, and thirty;
Likewise it is declared to be renowned in the heart.
This is how the nine channels move:
In the openings of the eyes and the rest,

Relying on the gates, they come to abide.
In the throat, whatever kind of element there is,
Having become that, abides.
Abhedyā and the rest, thirty-two,
Are praised in many tantras.
The goddess abiding in that form:
Conceiving of that Rūpiṇī,
I ask the Blessed One:
"Why is she called by the name Rūpiṇī?"
"She renders all beings formless,
By names such as the bliss of the channels.
Beings, too, on the pathways of the faculties,
Whatever their form, she is Rūpiṇī of that form.
The bliss obtained from the father
Comes from the union of the two organs.
Whatever family belongs to whichever being,
That is explained as that one's destiny.
She leads out from all the truths;
One does not go other than by the way of mantra.
Therefore, through companionship with Rūpiṇī,
Seek the coemergent, perfect awakening."
The great goddess is yellow in color;
For the rest she is like Khaṇḍarohā.
The form of the aggregate of formations,
Name, woman, and the rest: Rūpiṇī.
Peerless, for the benefit of sentient beings,
She comes to be born in this continent.
Having the nature of Aries and the Bird, of Kula,
Of the month of Caitra, and of the signs,
Through the bliss of skillful means and wisdom also,
She dwells in the center of the maṇḍala.

Truly embodying the thirty-seven,
In due order, the yoga of the heroes,
In the application of secret mantra and color,
Should be known as that of Rūpiṇī, the chief lady:
oṃ bajra graṃ rū na pi maḥ nī hi yi oṃ ke svā hūṃ hā hūṃ hu pha oṃ ṭa bau pha ṣa ṭa ṭa he svā hā hūṃ hūṃ hoḥ oṃ phaṭ phaṭ haṃ.

Thus it should be known from its nature.
Through the action of the earlier rite,
Having reached the aperture of the central channel,
The breath, whose essence is consciousness,
Sees in that instant the countless buddha fields,
All of them without exception,
All having the essence of one's own self.
Even what is meditated upon, heard, and seen
Is not realized while one is traversing.
This is the very characteristic of illusion.
The form body, too, is threefold,
The characteristics of body, speech, and mind;
It is the desire, form, and formless realms.
Primordially complete, as in a mirror,
Abiding just as it is in the three realms,
Her own form and other forms: Rūpiṇī.
From form upon form come reflections:
Countless world systems.
Rūpiṇī, through illusion, is woman,
And skillful means has the action of man;
Nondual, woman and man are one.
Not one, and not not one, is Rūpiṇī.
In things such as the objects of form,
Rūpiṇī is without signifier or signified.
Hard to signify, she is the signified; in the signified,
The signified is formless: she is the characteristic.
That domain which cannot be signified
Is the domain of that signifier.
Just as someone sees in a dream,
And even when seeing himself dead,
Weeps while he is seeing it,
So is Rūpiṇī of one's own form and of others'.
Thus, as the nature of all:
Vajrasattva's own nature,
The nature of the great being,
The great pledge being,
The being in the manner of great awakening,

The stable and the moving in all their variety.
Such form, as before,
Is not known by the logicians;
It is not to be realized by the yoga of the childish.
By attaining the supreme state of the yoginī,
It comes to be known in this very life.
All people have the nature of awakening,
But deluded fools do not know it.
All sentient beings are the reality of the yoginī;
Whoever is a human being is Vajradhara.
When this song was sung, all
Were terrified and fell fainting to the ground.
The yoginīs too had fallen down:
Wondrous is the domain of the Dharma!
The chief heroes, Skull Fragment and the rest,
Roused them, saying:
"Live! Live! You rākṣasīs,
You who liberate the nature of the realm of beings!
Between you and sentient beings there is no difference,
You who liberate all the heroes!"
Then once again, into the body
Of the Blessed One, all of them entered.
Then again, through the application of emanation,
They were emanated from the mouth of the Lord.
The causes, Vairocana and the rest,
He again emanated from his mouth.
The Blessed One, having gathered them all,
Concerning the tantra of the yoginīs
Made an inspired utterance,
And concerning all the yoga tantras as well:
Vairocana and Ratneśa,
Here Passion, Amoghasiddhi,
Akṣobhya, and the line of Locanā,
Māmakī and Pāṇḍaravāsinī,
Tārā and Rūpavajrā,
Sound, smell, and taste likewise,
Touch, and the one renowned as Dharmadhātu,

Kṣitigarbha, Ākāśagarbha,
Vajrapāṇi, Lokeśvara,
Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin, and Samantabhadra,
Mañjuśrī and Maitreya,
Yamāri and Prajñāntaka,
Padmāntaka, Vighnāntaka,
Acala and Nīladaṇḍa,
Ṭakkirāja, Mahābala, Sumbha,
Uṣṇīṣacakravartin,
Bhṛkuṭī, and Parṇaśabarī;
The rest is Vajrasattva.
Thus these names of the tantra
Are the characteristic of the reality of skillful means.
The wisdom tantra is self-arisen;
It abides always as its own nature.
Among the factors of awakening
It follows the indestructible state.
At the time when the eon is burned,
It goes elsewhere and truly abides.
The heroes, Skull Fragment and the rest,
Bear names such as Akṣobhya.
By the enumeration of the divisions of entities,
Many families arise.
Relying on the abode of Rūpiṇī,
The heroes come to stand in proud display.
Form, the form that has become formless,
Is carried along equally with Saṃvara.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata:
The Blessed Lord spoke this.

This was the sixth chapter of the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas, Great King of Yoginī Tantras, the rite on the nature of the characteristics of Rūpiṇī, the nature of the wheel of channels, the presentation of the abodes, and the characteristics of the tantras.

Next, the ground of the supreme yoga,
Through the action of seeing the rite:
That from which Kākāsyā arose,
She who by her rite goes to liberation.
She dwells in a subcontinent,
With the transit of Taurus and the auspicious one;
She should be known as the month of Vaiśākha,
And is held to be the fifth ground.
The goddess dwells at the gate.
kā is perceived as the mother Dharmadhātu;
The second is the Dharma body,
And from it arises the enjoyment body;
syā is the emanation body.
From the navel, heart, throat, and head
The four apertures should be known.
She has a life-face like a crow.
For her there is always the fierce rite:
Living creatures are slain in an instant,
Nāgas are to be summoned,
Rain is brought down, and there is paralysis.
The dharmadhātu and great awakening,
She whose nature is all the yoginīs,
In the Dharma, enjoyment, and emanation bodies
Moves out of desire for bliss.
Embodying the action of true mantra,
Rely on her, the crow chief lady.
In Vajravārāhī
The crow lady reaches her abode.
The thirty-seven yoginīs
Arose from this mantra:
oṃ ba na jra mo kā bha kā ga syā ba ya te ke bī hūṃ re hūṃ śā pha ya ṭa hūṃ pha hūṃ ṭa pha svā ṭa hā pha oṃ ṭa svā hūṃ hā hūṃ.
Through the distinction of long and short,
This has the nature of wisdom and skillful means:
The short is declared to be the nature of skillful means,
And the long, wisdom.
Black in color, the great fierce one;
For the rest she is like Ḍākinī.

Because the awakening mind melts,
At that time she is the Victress among crows,
Circling in the sky like a crow,
Through the wind of Kākāsyā.
Because she flies, and flies upward,
Therefore she looks below and above.
Having flown far like a crow,
She comes back to the island of the crow.
Arriving there is great bliss,
Experienced with the body.
Through meritorious karma one comes to be born,
The yoga rising higher and higher.

Likewise here, one without merit
Goes to the hell of crows that tear one to pieces.
Among the modes of the perfections,
She is held to be the perfection of generosity.
Through taking what is not given, the hell-being
Is always hungry, like a crow.
Thus, at the time of her rite,
Whatever person dies a natural death,
Having meditated on that yoginī,
Comes to experience great bliss.
All the conduct of the yoginī as well
One comes to attain by oneself.
If no action is done, there is
No one possessed of karma and no agent of action.
The movement of one's own mind is karma,
And that karma is also the agent.
The shape of the body, embodying form,
Without mind, is the supreme being.
Whatever is done by all the hands and feet,
The agent of the action is oneself.
To treat all of that as of no account
Is the characteristic of right action.
In action, too, pursue virtue as the cause;
Nonvirtue should be abandoned by oneself.

The worship of the yoginīs,
And likewise the gatherings for feasting,
In villages, in towns, and in sacred sites,
And on the great peaks of mountains and the like,
Should be offered for the sake of the pledge.
The yoga grants the excellent fruit of accomplishment.
The reflections of Ḍākinī, too,
Bear the names of the pervading winds:
The life wind, the downward-clearing, the equal-abiding,
And the pervading, in a twofold order as is fitting.
Ḍākinī, likewise Lāmā,
Khaṇḍarohā and Rūpiṇī,
Ulūkāsyā, Śvānāsyā, and Śūkarāsyā;
In order, the nāga, tortoise, and lizard winds,
Devadatta and Dhanaṃjaya.
Yamadāḍhī and Yamadūtī, the two
That are called joy and sorrow,
Yamadaṃṣṭrī and the supreme Yamamathanī.
These words of brief teaching as well
I shall now explain at full length.
Vārāhī, having made offerings,
Asked Vajrasattva:
"As many as are the winds, the life wind and the rest,
The name perceived for each one of them:
O my Teacher, it is a great wonder!
They come to arise at all times."
The Blessed One declared:
"First, the one that holds the principal
Is liberated through the essence of emptiness.
The vajra-like wind is to be set in place;
Its support is the vessel world.
Because destruction comes to dissolve,
And it has no shape or form at all,
Therefore it is called downward-clearing,
And is taught as going and coming.
Having entered the family of the equal-abiding,
Whatever was formerly expressed by anyone

In speech comes to be spoken:
All the habitual tendencies of before.
The pervading, because it sets its seal
On all beings, is the wind of karma.
The nāga is the very essence of anger.
The pervading likewise has two terms.
The tortoise, whose essence is avarice,
Has the characteristic of speech.
The lizard is attachment and the equal-abiding.
The downward-clearing is jealousy and Devadatta.
Dhanaṃjaya embodies delusion.
Of the two counts of the life wind,
It should be known as possessing the wisdom of joy;
Sorrow is a designation of it.
Therefore the wise, discerning each one individually,
Should know: because the life wind arises as the self of all.
Just as, of the twelve grounds,
The first is itself the twelfth,
It should be known through the ten,
Because it is lord of the ten grounds.
Through the natures of a single ground
She is held to be the great Vajradharā.
Whatever perfections there are, generosity and the rest,
Are themselves coemergent perfect awakening.
Because she has entered within all,
She is the supreme Vajradhātvīśvarī.
Whatever is explained or not explained,
All of it has the mode of awakening.
Again, the goddess is in the shape of a crow;
Then she is Rūpiṇī of action.
The action is in the places of the directions,
The apertures of all the sites of the channels.
Dissolving, and rising from that, is meditative concentration;
It is perceived under the name Kākāsyā.
Thus all the treasures of yoga
Are clearly obtained from the mouth of the guru.
Whoever is the guru, do not despise him,

And hold that very teacher dear.
If one does not attain the state of the noble ones,
One is boiled in Avīci and the other hells.
Through devotion to the guru in every way
One will fully attain awakening."
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata:
The Blessed Lord spoke this.

This was the seventh chapter of the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas, Great King of Yoginī Tantras, the rite on the characteristics of generating the life force of Kākāsyā and the others.

Next, the supreme characteristics of the others,
Ulūkāsyā and the rest, which are clear,
The action, the true deed,
And all the junctures I shall explain.
Gemini, Scorpio, and Jyeṣṭhā
Abide always through union with the moon.
Ulūkāsyā, having attained wisdom,
Moves along the three paths of the channels.
u: the fierce, majestic one who bares her fangs,
From eating the power of the path of wisdom.
lū: delighting in desire, of great magical illusion,
Toward the births of the asuras and the rest,
At the twelve at the tip of the big toe of the foot.
ka: she comes to move with the force of an arrow.
In the name of Ulūkāsyā, too,
u is held to be the aperture of Oḍiyāna.
lā: it is renowned as Pullīramalaya.
ū is the field of Mummuni.
kā is Kāmarūpa.
Likewise sya here is held to be all the fields.
All the fields having become breath
Is the culmination of bliss in the form of a triangle,
Because it is the inexhaustible state of Heruka,
Embodying the five sites.

Or else, in my seat and the rest,
Glorious Heruka is the vajra itself.
The birthplace embodies the five sites:
Heart, navel, palate, and head,
And the secret place as well; it embodies
The five apertures, the birthplaces of all the channels.
The egg-born and the warmth-and-moisture-born,
The womb-born and the miraculously born:
These beings are the self of the qualities of the buddhas,
Fully displaying the five families.
She who dwells in a subcontinent, too,
Truly abides in the form of the chief lady.
Those born from the garland of mantra
Are born embodying the thirty-seven:
oṃ ba ma jra hā u ka lū lpa kā a syā gni ya saṃ ke ni hūṃ bhā hūṃ ya pha hūṃ ṭa hūṃ pha pha ṭa ṭa svā pha hā ṭa oṃ svā hūṃ hā.
Thus the self of the reality of the mantra
Has the nature of wisdom and skillful means.
Greenish yellow in color, the great fierce one;
For the rest she is like Lāmā.
Having meditated on her in the center of the maṇḍala,
Nondual with the site of the charnel ground,
She is the domain of the expansive joy
Of all the channels, the all-enjoying.
This is the concentration of livelihood
And the nature of reality in the form of luminosity.
The rite of expulsion and the yoginī,
The guide of the world:
The various rites taught
In the Dharma she herself taught are also to be done.
Having perfected the yoga of all,
This is the domain of this tantra.

Yet all these yogas as well,
In brief, are these words:
Withdrawal, and likewise
Meditative concentration, breath control, retention,

Recollection, and absorption:
The six characteristics of yoga.
Withdrawal is Kākāsyā;
Ulūkāsyā is held to be concentration;
Śvānāsyā abides as breath control;
For retention it is Śūkarāsyā;
Yamadūtī abides as recollection;
Absorption is held to be Yamadāḍhī;
Yamadaṃṣṭrī attains the extensive teaching;
Yamamathanī is the fruit, born as the self of all.
One who is liberated from saṃsāra
Has a body equal to an illusion.
This self-blessing, the subtle yoga,
And the very characteristic of vajra recitation,
The treasure of the mind of perfect awakening:
Beyond these, what remains is union.
This, too, is what is called nirvāṇa:
By all the paths one passes into nirvāṇa.
Fully entering the whole of the Great Vehicle,
It is practiced in the Vehicle of Mantra.
Deeds, treatises, and the various virtues
Are done with compassion, with pleasure and kindness.
Toward whatever entities and things there are,
Through the self-arisen in the form of wisdom,
From a mental continuum of that kind,
Yogins see their own selves.
The true characteristics of the body,
The tent of the channels, I shall explain.
From the crown of the head to the tip of the jewel,
The junctures and the throat are held to be twofold.
The big toes, the edge of the junctures,
Between the brows, and likewise the plume;
The root of the sexual organ, the forehead,
The eyes, and the two toes;
With the ring fingers, the knees should be known.
The calves and the two ears,
The soles of the feet and the heart,

The navel and the spine,
The anus and the palate should be known.
The ankles and the lips,
The cheeks and the hollows of the cheeks,
The groin and the two armpits,
The wrists and the feet,
The shoulder joints and the two breasts,
The nape and the shoulder blades: here these are the junctures.
The tailbone and the two jewels,
The joints of the waist and the throat,
The forehead and the two joints,
The ear holes and the root,
Are held to be the junctures of the two sides of the chest.
The buttocks and the hollows of the brows,
The tongue and the nose of a person,
And likewise the palate and the tongue,
The bolla and the kakkola, the two:
These and many others
Become the vital points of the channels and joints.
Each should be pressed in its own practice,
In the rite of applying the forceful method
Of the great-souled bodhisattvas;
This is to be known through the words of the guru.
On whatever lunar day of each month,
On that date there is the root of the channels,
From the first day of the bright half
Until the end of the dark half:
Know the channels where awakening flows down.
The Owl Lady acts at the gate.
Whatever her face resembles,
Such is the mudrā of the fingers,
And the breath should be made like that.
It is held to embody outer and inner.
Or else all the channels
Are to be pressed, and all the joints,
One hundred and twelve in all,
In order, according to the faces.

There and there the vowels blaze,
The fierce illusion, at all times.
Therefore the gate called ā
Is examined by conception in words.
For the consolation of the tathāgatas,
It is to be conceived as Vajradhara.
Whatever it is by which one is bound,
The channel becomes great delusion.
By that it becomes its very nature,
Like a jewel of various forms.
In both the deluded and the wise
The lord, great liberation, abides.
People take various ones to be the maker,
The Lord of all beings;
Therefore those whose karma ever declines,
Through evil deeds done before,
Come to ruin. But in this teaching
One will attain buddhahood, the goal to be reached.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata:
The Blessed Lord spoke this.

This was the eighth chapter of the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas, Great King of Yoginī Tantras, on the definitive mode of Ulūkāsyā, her generation through the true rite, and the characteristics of the life wind and the rest.

Next, I shall explain another matter of great meaning,
The divisions of the causes of Śvānāsyā,
By merely understanding which Yogins will accomplish the supreme.
śvā: the dog, the yoginī, breathes out;
By herself she comes to enter and come forth.
At all times, in sleeping
And in waking, bliss is a great quality.
na: having gone into the various places,
One comes to touch bliss by oneself.
The hundred and twenty

Are the characteristic of what the etymology teaches.
Thus, in the name of the dog,
She should be known as the bestower of bliss.
In those birthplaces of the lotus,
āsya: the mouth of the lotus fully opened.
A generous nature, enjoyments, great dance,
Song and music, and sleep,
Touch, garments, and ornaments,
Flowers and other fragrant things are desired.
Harmoniously, the mothers of the navel and the rest
Have the speech of beautiful women;
In all things, the worship of the buddhas and the rest,
In drinking the drink of liquor,
In pleasure groves and on the banks of ponds,
In going to places of rest and the like,
In satisfaction and in feasts as one wishes,
The words of the guru are great bliss.
The flirting of men and women,
And whatever acts of laughter and flirtation there are,
The holy mind of the wise
Becomes the very lordship of people.
Through worship and prostration and the like
To the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha,
Bliss comes from devotion to the guru,
And from offering the fee, and from women.
In deportment and the other dharmas
One does not engage in every action.
Defeating opponents,
Establishing the teachings of the buddhas,
The yoginīs, food and drink,
Meditation, and the generation of joy,
Born as the embodiment of the two organs;
Happiness is to be sought through the acts
Of the perfections, generosity and the rest;
Loving-kindness, compassion, joy,
And last of all, equanimity;
Speaking of wisdom and of consciousness,

And establishing the way of the Middle;
Giving consolation to all,
Refuting deprecation,
The acts of the ten virtues,
And the supreme acts of reading and recitation;
In order to behold the nondual hero
Who abides on the path of awakening,
Without regard for the body,
Dwelling in village after village:
Thus is the first stage.
The second I shall explain in turn.
Delighting in the tantras of the buddhas,
Being clear about the ultimate truths,
In the abodes of the yoginīs
Speaking the talk of accomplishment,
Perceiving the Dharma as of great meaning,
The meditator who perceives the right time:
The perception of abandoning the six destinies
Bears the name of the realization of reality.

Perceiving things as illusions,
Bliss through the rites of pacifying and the rest,
Not being one with father and son,
Delighting in going to the sacred sites and the rest,
Wholly giving up the heap of afflictions,
Generating the heap of wisdom,
Never coming back again to saṃsāra,
Endowed with the yoga of Cakrasaṃvara;
Holding to the words of the discerning,
One should reject the words of those without realization.
Not at odds with the senses,
Beautiful by its very nature,
The innate, and the enjoyment body,
The emanation body, and the dharmakāya too,
In waking perception and the rest:
Since in the ocean of existence all is to be abandoned.
The remaining four joys

Are aspiration, the Kṛta age and the rest.
In the Kṛta age the natural arises;
The joy that is buddha is the Kṛta age.
For beings in the Tretā age the subtle arises;
In that awareness the coarse arises.
In the Dvāpara age there is no bliss;
The Kali age is coarse in part.
All attain the qualities of a buddha;
Through aspiration comes one's own fruit.
Thus, through the phases of bliss,
There are thirty-two great marvels.
In the bliss of the third phase,
By constantly examining the sixteen joys,
They are to be known as sixteen elements.
The arising of the natural becomes clear.
It should be known to be like medicine:
By eating the nectar one goes to the far shore.
Padminī, Śaṅkhinī and Citriṇī,
Hastinī and the one named for the bee,
Cakrā, Vajrā, the pale-nosed one,
Dhūmā, and the one at the birth of a child,
The one adorned with ointment, Lajjā,
Lightning, Candana, Sun-born,
Red, and likewise Snake-eye:
These should be known as the supreme medicine.
At the time of joy through bliss,
From the instant of sewing with a needle and the like,
One remembers those tasks only in passing;
The instant of meditation goes to its end.
What is taught for the four phases
Is a count of eight for those with minds:
Going and transferring, likewise
Vomiting and drowsing, likewise
Falling and dripping, and here
Trembling and toppling over.
The eight yoginīs, Gaurī and the rest,
Are the phases through the cause of bliss.

Thus in the four kinds of phase
Perception comes about through the name Śvānāsyā.
In this state of right mindfulness,
In what and in whom does she abide?
Abiding in right effort,
Śvānāsyā is in another's village.
She is the very nature of the union of true mantra,
Meditated upon in the center of the maṇḍala.
oṃ ba ja jra ṭā śvā ma na ta ā ku syā ṭa ya u ke ta hūṃ ka hūṃ ṭā pha ya ṭa hūṃ pha hūṃ ṭa pha svā ṭa hā pha oṃ ṭa svā hā
This mantra made of thirty-seven
Is wisdom and means, and grants accomplishment.
Red in color, the great fierce one,
In the rest she is like Khaṇḍarohā.
In Āṣāḍha, in Karkaṭa, a widow,
She who abides firmly with her own lord,
She who dwells in the subsidiary island:
Beings are born each according to their own nature.
She is the goddess for the rites of subjugation;
Gods, asuras and the rest, the knowers of mantra,
The five nectars, and the great Tārā,
Are for all the acts of offering.
Having drawn it fully into the lotus at the base of the heart,
The nectar born from all the words,
Through the skilled use of the vajra tube,
Through kindling, heating and the like,
And by the mantras of body vajra and the rest,
It is applied to what has been consecrated.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the ninth chapter, the rite of the characteristics of Śvānāsyā and of the phases of bliss and the rest, from the Great King of Tantras of the Yoginīs, the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas.

Next, of Śūkarāsyā
I shall explain, in brief and at length:
Fully entering into all things,
And turning back from those things.
Vārāhī, in the rites of paralysis,
Is the crusher of the mountain of ignorance.
sū
The needle is the vajra point, and she Goes everywhere like a thread:
The great joy of the mind of awakening.
ka
The skeleton brings forth the nectar.
Its nature is desire and all the rest;
She is beyond the fourth and unchanging.
Then the eight great goddesses
Are the characteristics of producing the womb and the rest.
First the seed, like the crow,
Falls into the mother's lotus.
After one night it divides,
And later is like dwelling as the owl.
Having remained for one month,
From the increase of Śvānāsyā's breath,
As the sow too it comes to have limbs.
When Yamadāḍhī tears open the womb,
Yamadūtī is the child, and later death;
Yamadaṃṣṭrī, by destroying karma,
And Yamamathanī delight in the limbs of awakening,
She from whom the fruit of all accomplishments arises.
This right effort:
Through the views of others, the fish and the rest,
All engagements are true;
Non-engagement is the sphere of that reality.
Of bipeds, quadrupeds and the rest
She is the crusher of the limbs of effort.
Even through seeing and touching,
That very non-engagement is constant.
Yellow in color, the great fierce one,
In the rest she is like Rūpiṇī.

In the center of the vajra maṇḍala,
Having the nature of wisdom and means,
In Siṃha, in Śrāvaṇa, in Makara,
She dwells in the subsidiary island.
The goddesses arisen from mantra
Belong each to her own field and near field.
oṃ ba daṃ jra ṣṭra sū ka ka rā rā lo syā gra yai mu hūṃ kha hūṃ bhi pha ṣa ṭa ṇā pha ya ṭa hūṃ svā hūṃ hā pha oṃ ṭa phaṭ svā hā
The yoginī, the supreme chief lady
Made of thirty-seven:
The laying of the maṇḍala lines and the rest
Belong to the mother of the applied meditation.
Having laid the two great lines,
The eastern and the respective desired lines,
And having laid the two diagonal lines,
One should drive in the pegs.
From the sides of the brahmā line
Lay off two thirty-second parts.
The door is an eighth of the wheel,
And the central lotus is equal to it.
From the edge of the petals of the heart,
That too should be known in three parts.
One part of it is the three wheels;
The remainder is the colored ground.
A third of that is the garlands:
The vajra, the lotus and the wheel.
The spokes are less than the central wheel,
And made thick by binding two into one.
The pillars are set all around,
Eight times three in the three wheels.
The portals are three times the door;
The door frame measures one door unit.
The platforms are half of that,
And the edges and sides likewise.
And here, the dhāraṇī band
And the jewel garland band are half.
The garland of heads is half of that,

And the band of darkness likewise.
From the tops of the pillars tips protrude:
Crossed vajras of great light.
Small bells, nets and cloths,
Banners and bells resound.
Outside that, on all the lotuses,
Draw correctly the heart syllables and the rest.
And here, a garland of crossed vajras,
And beyond it a garland of flames.

Outside that, the surrounding enclosure
Should be drawn in the order of the grounds.
A garland of curved knives should be set there,
And likewise heads and hands.
Outside the lotus of the heart
Draw a jewel garland correctly.
The eight charnel grounds should be drawn,
All around, Caṇḍogra and the rest.
The seed syllables should be arranged;
All of them arise from the curved knife.
Or else, with the letters
Of body and the rest, the whole maṇḍala;
Likewise, in the manner of an instant,
Bring forth the maṇḍala from the seed syllables.
On the petals of the lotus at the intermediate directions,
Skull cups of the five nectars
Should be placed upon vases;
Thirty-seven others are to be made.
Free of blackness and of flaws at the base,
With drooping spout and lofty neck,
With a pair of cloths about the necks,
They should be filled with the five jewels, grains and medicines,
Scented water and the tips of leaves,
And the five nectars.
The torma is for all the rites,
And all around, meditation and the rest.
To the vajra goddesses,

To the field protectors and the wrathful ones,
Offer the substances, the five nectars and the rest.
By satisfying them with the outer offerings and the rest,
One will thrive fully, without obstructors.
Afterwards, properly undertake the rites.
The goddess with many animal faces,
The thirty-seven embodied ones,
Having done the crushing with the action vajra,
Are endowed with the yoga of the three samādhis.
She is the fierce one with seventy-two arms,
Endowed with eighteen legs.
Her root face is a sow's face;
On the two sides there are nine and nine;
Above them, seven and seven;
And after that, three should be placed.
On the right: dog and jackal,
Cat, tiger and lion,
The terrifying one, the fanged one, horse and donkey:
Thus, in their order.
On the left: ox, buffalo, wolf,
Tortoise, makara and hare,
Rhinoceros, yak and muñja:
They should be depicted in their order.
Snake, weasel and lizard,
Otter, mouse and bear,
Garuḍa, vulture and crow,
Owl, heron and hawk,
Bat and ruddy goose,
Peacock, the copper-crested cock,
And pigeon: for all of these,
Their natural colors are to be intended.
What the maṇḍala is certainly to do
Is in the element of whatever nature it may be.
The self of thirty-three qualities
Is held by its own nature.
The faces that are its images
Are the very nature of bringing awakening to beings.

With her feet she tramples the hosts of bhūtas
Who have entered into the midst of the fire.
With the right: Viṣṇu and Rudra,
Brahmā, Sūrya and Agni,
Indra, Vāyu and Nairṛti,
And Kubera, in their order.
With the left: Yama and Kāma,
Candra, Varuṇa and Vāsuki,
Pṛthivī and Gaṇapati,
Kārttikeya and the wheel-turning king.
Thus these eighteen forms
Gathered together are praised as marvelous.
Through one's own mind, which comes to hold them,
The goddess's feet are vajra holders.
In the right hands, the array of weapons:
Vajra, sword and bladed spear,
Axe, curved knife and arrow,
Impaling stake, shield and hammer,
Wheel, ḍamaru and short knife,
Club and single-pointed lance,
Conch, copper trumpet and staff,
And likewise a peacock's tail,
Crow's feather and brush,
Fire hearth and mountain,
Club, mirror and lute,
Foot, head, hand and lung,
Entrails, Rāhu and iron chain,
Fetter, shackle and fishing net,
Severed head, blaze and black oil,
And terrifying forms, in their order.
In the left: bell, long shield and fang,
Hammer, noose and skull cup,
Bow, khaṭvāṅga and book,
Small handled shield and threatening finger,
Garland of jingling bells and iron chain,
Rock and charnel-ground dust,
Bhokaṃḍaka and fresh hide,

A dangling rope of hair,
Goad and corpse stick,
Rock, shield and head,
Skeleton and likewise sickle,
Eye, kidney and marrow,
Tamarisk stick and ritual dagger,
A handful of seeds and a saw,
Needle and the skin of a body,
A cloud pouring rain, and a wooden sword.
When they are known thus, in order,
They are the seventy-two channels of the tantra.
With the two additional arms
She wears an elephant hide above.
Seated upon the elephant of the three realms,
Tearing, she destroys the obstructors.
The color of all is their natural one,
Or else like the color of the principal lady.
The garland of heads and all the rest,
The clothes and ornaments, arise from the body.
Thus she is to be known
As the image of right effort.
By the nature of right mindfulness,
The distinction of things is the nature of bipeds.
Having filled everything with the net of samādhi,
Dissolve everything into luminosity!
Having realized this, one will attain buddhahood itself.
Various animals and the rest are born,
And in their own languages the Dharma
Will be taught to those born of their own kind.
Sealing all beings with the syllable sū,
One should recall that very innate nature.
The suffering of saṃsāra will not come again;
Those people who are like cattle become buddhas.
Through the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the tenth chapter, on generating Śūkarāsyā, entering the maṇḍala and the rest, from the Great King of Tantras of the Yoginīs, the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas.

Next, here, the practice of Yamadāḍhī
I shall explain: meditators, listen!
In all, among the four seasons,
There are four of three months each.
The junctures bound by the solstices and the equinoxes
I shall explain fully.
The northern course and the rest:
Yamadāḍhī and the others dwell at the junctures,
She dwells in the subsidiary island.
The month of Mārgaśīrṣa and Dhanus,
And mohita, are always hers;
She is to be known in two rites.
She who with her fangs cuts off
The untimely death of meditators
Is therefore to be known as Yama's fang.
At first she has two syllables.
"Blessed One, how does untimely death
Come about for human beings?
By whose kindness shall I come to know it?
Who will appear for me as an emanation?"
The Blessed One declared:
"Yamadāḍhī, untimely death
Comes from beings' own individual karma."

Whatever evil of harming all people
One has done oneself,
Through that one dies an untimely death:
The elements and the breath are cut off.
Through being cut off by others,
Food and drink turn harmful.
If one gives gifts together with what one has gained,
One will not be ruined by an untimely death.
Giving is explained as twofold:
From the body and from the intention.
At the door of the left nostril,

Through the course of the moon's movement,
The moving life-breath is that of the sun;
Through the sequence of the wind of the avadhūtī,
By that the letter ya is explained.
The letter ma is she who flows in the center.
When the letter dā has gone to the right,
For a while the central one moves.
Through the letter a one attains abiding;
She who deceives is the one who goes in the sky.
The channels, which are the nature of all bliss,
Are known by the name of the letter ḍhi.
The letters in brief
Are said to be in the five maṇḍalas.
Moving them from their actual places,
You should know how to ransom untimely death.
Thus the single merit
Has a body that travels from place to place.
What is called death is conceptual thought;
This will lead to the state of a sky-goer.
Here the color becomes twofold,
And so too the meditation on the body.
According to the order of the ḍākinīs,
The signs, the weapons and the rest come about.
She is said to be known as the dharma of abandonment,
The principal lady at the center of the maṇḍala.
The yoga made of thirty-seven,
By the nature that arises from mantra:
oṃ āḥ s hūṃ ha ba sra jra bhu ya ja ma bhā dā su ḍhi rā kā ya yai hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ svā svā hā hā oṃ
This is the nature of wisdom and means,
The chief of yoginīs and heroes.
Through the application of Yama's fang,
One should devour Antaka, the ender of what is born.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the eleventh chapter, called the presentation of Yamadāḍhī and the characteristics of her generation, from the Great King of Tantras of the Yoginīs, the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas.

Next I shall explain Yamadūtī,
Through whom death is brought under control.
She arose truly in Vṛścika,
Together with Kārttika and Bhadrā.
At the time of the spring equinox
Is the characteristic of generating Yamadūtī.
For her, the slayer of Yama,
On the wheel for ransoming death,
On a great wheel of twelve spokes,
It should be turned around three times.
The fives into twenty-five,
Up to thirteen, should be drawn.
Again, in the thirty-twos,
Three, two and one are years.
The hours, fire, two, the moon,
The months, the lunar days, the directions and likewise the arrows;
In the case of three, two and one,
In order, and afterwards half a day and so on,
One day, a day and two,
Three and four, earth, and the directions of the sun,
Wealth, and the directions of the waters, in order:
It is clear as the nature of thirty-seven.
What is to be known as the power of life
Is nineteen in nature.
Here again the nineteen
Have the power whose nature is destroying.
When the seven have arrived together at the sun,
And the birth star and the moon
Constantly move together as one,
From that one truly attains the time of increase.
The intervening days themselves
Should be known to number sixteen,
And through the sequence of seventy-two
Apply them correctly in the sequence of years.

Therefore the goddess Yamadūtī too
Should be meditated upon as having the nature of the maṇḍala.
Where the channel has given up the life-breath,
There she should be made to descend.
Above the branches, above the root,
Breathing is done through the secret place.
That is the equal state, all the junctures;
She draws in the equal state with the letter ya.
Then what is impaired by binding the vital points
Is all explained through the letter ma.
Having moved it below and above,
Make the sharp fire blaze fiercely.
Illnesses and many evils
Will themselves be destroyed by this act.
Then gifts should be given:
Cattle, buffaloes, mounts and the rest.
On the path of the mind of awakening,
At that time drink that of the beautiful women.
Then too, nasal medicine
Arising from one's own limbs should be administered.
One should eat together with milk
Lungs and the rest, uncooked.
If one obtains the great blood
Of one who has himself fallen in battle,
Abandoning doubt, one should drink it,
And one should eat its flesh as well.
Or else, in whatever place one is,
Until the signs of death are exhausted and gone,
It is well if one takes one's food with milk,
Or else all kinds of meat.
Covering oneself completely with soft clothes,
At all times
One should keep one's dwelling warm,
And definitely stay close beside a fire.
There one should also drink warm water,
And eat small and light meals.
One should meditate on Yamadūtī,

Oneself having the nature of thirty-seven,
Having the nature of the union of secret mantra,
With the two colors of yellow and red.
With the yellow she paralyzes death;
With the red she draws it under control.
Through the actual innate perfect awakening,
Those that go below the navel, to the throat and to the palate,
Through profundity, the life-breath that goes elsewhere
Gathers into one another's cavities.
Therefore meditate on the khaṭvāṅga,
Through joining the limbs to the khaṭvāṅga.
In the center of the heart lotus, by the mind,
The maṇḍala has the proportions given before.
The goddess's color is blue;
Her shape and the rest are like Rūpiṇī's.
oṃ ba pa jra ra ya śu ma pā dū śva tī dya ye ta hūṃ śū hūṃ la phaṭ kha phaṭ ṭvāṃ sva ga hā dhā ri ṇe hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā oṃ hūṃ
Born as the nature of wisdom and means,
Having the nature of the Great Illusion,
All these yoginīs
Should be meditated upon in the form of nectar.
They are white at the heart;
All the wheels should be meditated upon.
Within them, their own names too,
White in color and radiant,
Should be meditated upon
Within each of the openings of the channels.
By drinking with the tip of the vajra
Fresh and boiled goat's milk,
The five nectars and the self-arisen,
Even timely death is overcome.
Since one attains that undefiled state itself,
What talk is there of untimely death for one?
Therefore the dharmatā of right abandonment
Is to be known as Yamadūtī.
The drinking with the vajra that has been explained
Is held to be twofold by its action:

One is explained as outer,
And the second is held to be inner in nature.
One should meditate on a three-pronged vajra;
She moves through the six channels at their times.
The life-breath held in the movement of the haṃsa
Drinks the lower water;
Whatever little of the five nectars and the rest
Enters fully into its center:
By drinking it, old age and death flee.
This is the instruction of Vajradhara.

You abide as the yoginī of Yamadūtī;
Through her one attains once more freedom from old age and death.
The unsurpassed yoginī is she who drives death away;
The yoginī is possessed of neither evil nor merit.
That is equality: from the equal life-breath,
From the unmoving state of the effort
Of the left, the right and the center,
Again the letters ya and ma are intended.
Yamadūtī is the state in which the haṃsa of the two sides
Is exhausted in the center.
Thus her many aspects
Should be indicated by one of steady intellect.
What need is there here for much explanation?
The perfection of generosity and the rest,
Virtuous deeds too, should be practiced;
One body has many bodies.
Offerings should be made to the yoginīs,
And honor should be shown to the heroes.
Whatever anyone rightly asks of anyone,
That one should therefore surely give them.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the twelfth chapter, a concise instruction on the characteristics of generating Yamadūtī and the rest, and on meditating on the wheel for cheating death, from the Great King of Tantras of the Yoginīs, the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas.

Next, Yamadaṃṣṭrī
I shall explain: now listen!
Through the faults of the habitual tendencies
Of beings, the tent of the body is pierced and burned.
According to the deeds anyone has done toward anyone,
Piercing is held to come at its proper time.
The eighty-four vital points,
And the places wherever they lie:
These are to be set in the center,
And the good and the poor are to be indicated.
Since the nonvirtuous is feared as death,
It is indicated by pain at the vital points.
If at a single time
Shooting pain arises in three places in the palate,
Then know that one will die in three days;
There is no doubt about this.
If there is shooting pain in the instep,
And if there is shooting pain in the navel,
O goddess, people
Will die in two days.
If in the insteps and soles of both feet,
And in the eyes, there is shooting pain,
Then within three months
One goes into the power of the Death-maker.
If there is shooting pain in the soles of the feet,
And if there is shooting pain in the nose,
One will die in three days;
About this too there is no doubt.
If at the time of defecating and urinating
A sneeze occurs,
Then by that measure of time
One will surely die within a year.
In the morning, five days;
At midday, likewise ten;
At the other noon, a half month;

And at midnight, a month.
If at these times of this life
A sneeze occurs as before,
One will surely die at that time;
There is no doubt about this.
If there is shooting pain in the māra hollow
Of the nape of the neck, in five years
One will die:
Know that there is no doubt about this.
O goddess, if one does not see the tip of the tongue,
One will therefore die in three days.
If there is shooting pain at the tip of the ear,
Death comes in four months.
If one does not see the pupil
Of the left eye in a mirror,
Then one will die in seven days;
So it was taught in former births.
If on the first day of the bright fortnight
The semen becomes other than white,
He will die in six months;
If red, it will surely be within that time.
If at the end of the full union
Of bhaga and liṅga
A sneeze occurs, in five months
He will then fall.
If at the time of union the sound of a bell
Arises in the ears, death is clear:
If Śakra has become balanced,
It is in five months, without doubt.
Likewise, if at a single time
The moon and the sun
Cause shooting pain to any being,
He has one month to live.
If in the four joints of the hands and feet
And in the little finger
Shooting pain comes at a single time,
He will surely die within a month.

When shooting pain comes as three stabs,
If its power and strength equal one's own,
Heroic from the big toes,
People in the three worlds
Are in the manner of a king of knots:
This is always explained by that example.
Then death comes in six months,
If Rudra too has become balanced.
The center of the heart, and likewise as before,
And here too the domain of the throat:
Death comes in two and a half months;
This domain allows no deliberation.
Again, if there is shooting pain at the crown of the head,
The ocean of the three cities is burned:
Know that death is immediate.
So it is explained in the tent of the body.
Likewise, shooting pain at the root of the ear
Is surely explained as immediate death.
Likewise, shooting pain between the eyebrows:
One will die in that very instant.
If the breath at the tip of the nose
Becomes cold, it is the time of completion.
All such deaths
Are cheated through the state of Yamadaṃṣṭrī.
Whenever this comes about,
The shooting pain arises at that very time.
Having clearly identified the place of the pain,
One should massage it with the ten roots.
The oil called Viṣṇu
Should always be kept on the head.
Through the nose, Vairocana oil,
Fully combined with butter and blood.
Not tormented by the light of the sun,
In a warm house away from people,
Holding to the great ocean of union,
One should meditate on that yoginī.
ya In whose great maṇḍala,

ma from the characteristic of the end of the central channel,
At the time of moving to the right,
The letter daṃ is at all the joints.
From the cavity of the opening that causes the pain,
At that very instant one strikes with the staff.
ṭa While it is becoming completely round,
ṣa the pool of the heart and the rest
Are to be known at all the junctures as well.
For cheating the death that comes with shooting pain,
i through the senses in all things,
The mind likewise surely abides.
The letter called ṣṭi
Is thus taught in two verses.
There, what is called samādhi:
Attain it by training the senses!
With a thread of lotus fiber, the jewel
And the crown of the head are to be made one.
Meditate that the eight consciousnesses abide there:
She is the one who flows, the intoxicating one.
By sending that thread everywhere,
She destroys the fangs of Yama.
By that the letter nī is explained.
She is the crusher of all shooting pains.
Her color is red and blue;
The crusher of death goes to awakening.
What become her weapons
Are those of the yoginī Khaṇḍarohā.
In the center of the vajra maṇḍala,
The supreme one, made of thirty-seven:
oṃ ba byā jra ghra ya ji ma na daṃ a ṣṭī mba ṇī ra ya dha ke rā hūṃ ya hūṃ hūṃ pha hūṃ ṭa pha pha ṭa ṭa phaṭ svā svā hā hā oṃ
As the nature of wisdom and means too,
She should be meditated upon in the center of the thread.
Likewise the month of Āśvina,
And the signs of Tulā and Vṛṣabha.

By doing this,
Cheating death is virtuous.
For others, one should do the same for them:
Yamadūtī has been clearly described.
For ransoming the death of others as well,
Hundreds of hundreds of thousands of ways are to be known;
But it is by abiding in total emptiness
And pleasing the supreme guru.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the thirteenth chapter, on engaging in the application of Yamadaṃṣṭrī, cheating death and the rest, from the Great King of Tantras of the Yoginīs, the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas.

Next, the entry of Yamamathanī,
By which one goes to the far shore, I shall explain.
The yoginīs, having assembled,
Asked about its basis:
"Why is it called entry?
All-pervading Lord, what is meant by the far shore?
Most wondrous Teacher, speak!
Vajradhara, grant us your kindness!"
"Listen! The entry of illusion:
The untrue is imputed as true.
O goddess, like the net of Indra,
So too is the entry of Yamamathanī:
Even when it is seen, it is not there.
Supreme, like the moon in water,
One enters into one's own nature.
This belongs to those who hold the yoga of reality.
And the reality of timely death:
Who can ransom it by deeds?
One goes from saṃsāra to the far shore;
For the deathless there is no ransom either.
At the time of the autumn equinox,
Holding the wind

In the space maṇḍala of the nose,
The time of death is ransomed.
The breaths, twenty-one thousand
Six hundred in number,
Entering fully into the avadhūtī:
That is what is called Yamamathanī.
The ransom taught by childish scholars
Who are deluded is not this.
The ransom taught as other than that:
This is my own characteristic."
Again the goddess was told:
"Since the meaning has been shown thus by ya and the rest,
Having focused on whatever samādhi,
The culmination of the gathering of space-equal and the rest,
The continuum, and likewise the great life-breath,
Is explained as being like a vajra.
Going slowly, slowly,
It dissolves into all the joints.
Through calm abiding and insight,
Awakening is not the domain of death.
It is renowned as leading to the vajra ground,
The supreme holding of the great state.
Through such exalted qualities,
The nonvirtue of people is exhausted.
Attaining the state of great wealth
Is the characteristic of right abandonment.
Having made the life-breath move properly,
Keep it close at all times;
Always cheat the death foretold by the signs of death.
For yogins together
To meet with yoginīs
Is obtained rarely, by the power of merit.
Tasting the great joy made with them
Is cheating death.
Therefore the yogin
Should make offerings to the yoginīs.
The state of the great Vajradhara

Is attained by pleasing them.
Whatever fool reviles them
Has no supreme accomplishment.
From reviling them,
One goes to the great hell Avīci.
What use is the merit he has made?
What use dwelling in fasts, or austerities?
Always be respectful to the yoginīs,
In every instant, moment and the rest.
The goddess has two colors,
Embodying existence and nirvāṇa.
In the center of the maṇḍala deities
She is to be meditated upon, her signs like those of Lāmā.
Through the application of the letters of the mantra,
With the thirty-seven yoginīs,
She is to be generated together with means;
Through innate union, the vajra holder.
oṃ ba ma jra hā ya dhū ma mrā mandha tha kā nī ra ye ba hūṃ pu hūṃ ṣā pha ya ṭa hūṃ pha hūṃ ṭa pha svā ṭa hā pha oṃ ṭa svā hā
Thus one should meditate on the center
Of a drop the size of a mustard seed,
In the heart and the other wheels,
Wherever it is: fully join the mind there!
Kanyā, the tortoise, and the month
Of Bhādrapada: she dwells in the subsidiary island.
Acting for the benefit of beings,
She dissolves into that very state, enjoys, and the rest.
Born as the nature of the emanation of Vārāhī,
She is the crusher of existence.
Through the great vajra yoga of the Blessed One,
All the deities abide;
From the essence of the great wheel-turning king
All are emanated;
And through perceiving oneself as buddhahood,
They are gathered into his very nature.
If that gathering does not exist in that way,
How could there be emanating?

All this is a net of magical illusion:
There is no illusion and no emptiness.
Its essence is mere total union,
Gathered as buddhahood and the rest.
The very reality of the Kṛta age, the Tretā age and the rest
Is the characteristic of their own nature.
What is taught as mere presentation
Is the unmistaken essential nature of things.
It should be examined by conceptual thought;
When it has become nonconceptual,
One should not examine it.
One will be freed from concept and nonconcept:
So the all-seeing ones have taught.
Whatever thing anyone sees for an instant,
That seeing is like a rabbit's horn.
Through this, without cessation,
Birth and the rest should be fully understood.
Concerning the various scriptures and tantras too,
The one who reasons here analyzes.
The reasoning that comes from having analyzed,
That reasoning is my greatness.
For realizing the ground of the mind,
It is spoken close to the ear.
For the sake of disciples, and out of respect
For the guru, hold to this!
Nowadays people are short-lived,
And I have no other reasoning.
In the deceitful age of strife,
Intellect is small and merit very small.
Therefore the wisdom of the buddhas
Is not the domain of those with such merit.
Compassion will be cultivated
Over a long time: do not engage in conceptual thought!
Without having made countless merit,
Why speak again of wisdom?
What is the mind of awakening? What is a buddha?
In this there will be no difference.

Because of realizing reality, one is a buddha,
And that reality is the bodhisattva himself.
Generate the senses as bodhisattvas!
Make the objects into buddhahood!
Hold the aggregates together with the buddhas!
Hold the elements as vajra holders!
One will not turn back again into existence.
Hold everything as the essence of deathlessness!
Abide through the union of compassion!
By whatever means, accomplish the needs of others!
Apply diligence to all that is inexpressible!
The ḍākinīs and the rest, at the end of crushing,
All the assemblies of crushers,
The gatherings of obstructors, bhūtas and the rest,
All who are hostile in the world,
Pretas and the rest, and hell beings too,
Yama and the other wrathful ones here:
She is the crusher of former habitual tendencies."
Through the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

Thus ends the fourteenth chapter of the Great King of Tantras, the Yoginī Tantra of the Glorious Ocean of Ḍākas, on generating the entry of Yamamathanī, the characteristics of the rite for cheating death when its time has come, and the nature of the states of a buddha.

Then, from this, the great secret is explained:
The characteristics of perfect meditative absorption.
That by which one abides as glorious Heruka
Is found in none but those who have devotion.
The terrifying and the rest, at the culmination of passion,
Are what is taught as the manifest emanation body.
The Dharma body, the body of complete enjoyment, and the rest
Are here all gathered into one.
First, one should prepare the place in every respect:
A place without people, a mountain, and so on,

Or else a charnel ground; there
Offer torma to the field protectors.
The yogin, after cleansing the mouth and the rest,
Having done the preliminaries, offers welcoming water and the rest.
Focusing on the body of the Blessed One,
As explained for meditation with a painted scroll and the like,
The great fierce one upon a seat of pretas:
Meditating on him brings the benefit of beings.
Wholly and completely, in a single instant,
One should focus on the meditative absorption.
The syllable śrī, the meaning of all that arises,
Is held to be the nature of outer and inner.
These are conventional form,
And whatever has the culmination of bliss that does not enter.
The nonduality of e vaṃ and the rest, too,
Is definitively expressed by the syllable called śrī.
From the syllable he in the heart, in all directions,
Heruka and the others go forth with their own retinues.
From the source of all meditation
Grasping and the rest are generated.
That is the nature of the emptiness of causes;
It is not conceiving them as the nature of a cause.
The intrinsic nature is the selflessness of phenomena;
That is the abiding of the yoga of emptiness.
The arrangement is the selflessness of persons.
The great net of conceptual thought
Is the syllable ru, whose nature is conditions;
That is freedom from the arrangement of a self.
Again, the syllable ka is spoken: whatever knows
That by the self of all without remainder nothing is to be made two;
Because it abides in nothing whatsoever,
Therefore it is called ka.
Things directly perceived are not empty;
They have the nature of mere things.
The goddess abiding in glorious Heruka
Is the one meditated earlier, who pervades all.
In the heart, on a lotus, in the center of a sun,

From the self-arisen seed of wisdom
One should send out light rays of various colors
To fill the whole of the sky.
Having invited the forms of the wisdom ḍākinīs,
The assembly of deities,
In the center of the expanse of the sky
One sets the lord of beings,
And with nectar and the rest, arisen as the nature of the rising moon and sun,
Makes offerings to him.
Having confessed one's misdeeds and the rest,
One should recollect compassion and the rest.
One should meditate on the pure yoga
Whose nature is the intrinsic nature of emptiness.
From the nature of the five seeds
One should emanate a multistoried palace.
Then the causal Vajradhara
Appears clearly upon Mount Meru and a lotus,
White in color, with four faces,
Three eyes, and twelve arms,
Of the nature of union, embracing Prajñā,
Adorned with the ornaments of a youth.
White, green, red,
And yellow, turning from the left.
On the crowns of matted locks of his faces
He bears a crossed vajra and a half moon.
Pressing down Hara and Gaurī together,
He stands firmly with his right leg extended.
Vajra, bell, the hide
Of an elephant, ḍamaru, curved knife,
Axe, and trident likewise,
Khaṭvāṅga, vessel, noose,
And head, in the left and right hands.
A lotus of various colors
With forty-eight petals,
Having the nature of twelve wheels,
With the nature of sixteen doors,
And in the thirty-two delightful charnel grounds.

Curved knife, jewel, vajra,
Lotus, wheel, sword,
Crossed vajra, skull cup,
Head, and skeleton, these,
And noose or hook are to be known:
Wheel within wheel in a garland.
Each one has thirty-six spokes,
With vajra, lotus, and sun.
The causal vajra transformed,
The maṇḍala wheel is complete
With five hundred and four.
Constantly, with the sound of the singing goddesses:

"Lord, when every day beings invite you as their guest,
Why have you entered into emptiness?
Arise, arise! I am the nature of compassion;
Vajradhara, great bliss, make love to me!
Live, live! The aims of others have sunk away;
The world becomes like cattle that have died.
Make love to my blossoming lotus;
In this way make the whole world blissful!
Vajradhara, sport with me, sport!
The inexpressible innate nature is attained.
Since sentient beings and the other worlds are deluded,
How your emptiness becomes meaningless!
You are the maker of all phenomena;
Why do you remain in the innate nature, not going forth?
Make love to me for the supreme aim;
In this way go forth in harmony with the worlds."

Urged on by this song,
Heruka himself fully awakens.
oṃ āḥ kāya vāka citta vajra hūṃ phaṭ hoḥ
When this secret mantra is recited,
One is endowed with the yoga of the instantaneous form:
Oneself, arisen in an instant from the mantra,
With all the heroes and the yoginīs.
Upon Bhairava and Kālarātri,

And upon the great supreme sun at the navel,
His body is in the posture of dancing,
Half black and half green.
With seventy-six arms,
And seventeen faces, each with three eyes,
He wears the hero's crown of matted locks,
With a crossed vajra and a half moon,
His faces baring great fangs.
On the right and the left, always,
Yellow and green are proclaimed;
The west is red, likewise,
And the remaining faces are like black bees,
Baring their fangs, terrifying.
The array of weapons, in due order,
Is to be known on the right and the left.
Two hands hold the elephant hide,
And the others, likewise, the mudrā of the womb.
Vajra, sword, long spear,
And trident, in due order on the right;
Axe, curved knife, arrow,
Stake, shield, hammer,
Wheel, ḍamaru, dagger,
Club, and single-pointed lance,
Conch, copper horn, lynx,
And likewise a peacock's tail,
A crow's feather, a brush,
A fire hearth, a mountain,
A staff, a mirror, a vīṇā,
A foot, a head, a hand, lungs,
Entrails, Rāhu, an iron chain,
A chain, a dubhusa, a fishing net,
A headless body, blazing black oil,
And a form of Bhairava, in due order.

In the left hands: a bell, a long shield, a fang,
A pestle, a noose, a skull cup,
A bow, a khaṭvāṅga, a book,

A small shield with a handle, the threatening finger,
A garland of small bells, an iron chain,
A rock, the dust of a charnel ground,
A bhokaṃ drum, a fresh hide,
A hanging rope of hair,
A stick for stirring the cremation fire,
A quiver, a long shield, a head,
A skeleton, and a hurled ritual weapon likewise,
An eye, a kidney, the nape of a neck,
A peg of tamarisk wood,
A vessel full of seed, a saw,
A needle, a flayed skin,
A cloud pouring rain, and a wooden hook.
The weapons in the hands are seventy-two;
They are to be known in this order.
He is adorned with five heads,
And clothed in the six mudrās;
Likewise a garland of a hundred heads,
Armlets and anklets that ring with sound,
And on his body a garland of hair.
Before him is the great goddess
Vajravārāhī, the same as before,
Moistened by the bliss of wisdom and means
In all the joints of the body.
One should meditate on him blazing with various Herukas,
Radiating out in all directions.
On all the heads a garland of hanging silk
Is to be placed by the one who keeps the observance.
On the lotus petals, in the east and the rest,
And in the spaces between, are the yoginīs,
Twenty-four in number:
Ḍākinī and the others, six by six.
From the east and so on to the northern edge,
Ḍākinī and the others, six likewise;
Beginning from the north to the western edge,
Again Lāmā and the others, six;
From the west and so on to the southern edge,

The family of Khaṇḍarohā and the others;
Beginning from the south to the eastern edge,
Then Rūpiṇī and the others, six.
Ḍākinī and the Embodied One herself,
She Who Nourishes and She Who Transforms Others,
She With a Child and She Who Follows:
These are half black and half blue.
Lāmā and Yogeśvarī,
Bhadrā, the black Kāpālinī,
Jayā and the Encircling One are half green
And half red, in due order.
Khaṇḍarohā and Śmaśānī,
She Who Melts and Kurukullā,
She Who Weeps and She Renowned as the Dancer
Are half red and half yellow.
Rūpiṇī, Bhairavī, She of the Crest,
She of the Topknot, She of Matted Locks, and Raudrī:
These goddesses are half yellow and half black.
Their hand emblems and the rest are like those of Vārāhī.
On the petals in the intermediate directions
Are vessels of the five nectars.
Likewise, with the right leg extended,
They hold garlands of skulls and the rest.
They are to be known as turning to the left:
The ones born in the region above Mount Meru.

Behind that, the vajra wheel,
Dark blue, and in its center:
Ḍākinī, likewise Lāmā,
Khaṇḍarohā and Rūpiṇī,
Pracaṇḍā and Caṇḍākṣī,
Prabhāvatī and Mahānāsā,
Vīramatī and Kharvarī,
Laṅkeśvarī, Drumacchāyā,
Airāvatī, and likewise here
Mahābhairavā is recalled;
Vāyuvegā and Surābhakṣī,

the goddess Śyāmā, Subhadrā,
Hayakarṇā and Khagānanā,
Cakravegā, Khaṇḍarohā,
Śauṇḍinī, Cakravarmiṇī,
Suvīrā, Mahābalā,
Cakravartinī, Mahāvīryā,
Yamī, the Unborn Yamī,
Likewise She Who Shakes, She Who Terrifies,
Caṇḍī and Sarasvatī,
She Who Fulfills Desires and the Great Blazing One.
Their colors are those of their wheel.
They have four arms and one face,
Holding a skull cup and a khaṭvāṅga,
A ḍamaru and a curved knife likewise.
Their hair is loose and they are clothed in the directions.
On their bodies are the five mudrās and the rest,
And they are adorned with garlands of vajras.
On seats of pretas, the great fierce ones,
The yoginīs of all the wheels,
Are endowed with various ornaments,
And likewise endowed with wisdom and means.
Thus the formless realm,
And that too is definitively declared to be a place,
Renowned as the ground Utterly Joyful.
Again the place, the near place, and the rest:
Thus, in the center of the ground as well,
Twelve grounds are held to be.
Thus it is to be known in every case.
Here, in this single element, are all:
The thirty-six that have been explained,
The chief, the nature of all qualities.
Thus the elements have the nature
Of the heroes and the yoginīs.
In the surroundings are the sentient beings,
In the order of the families of the miraculously born.
These, too, are divided among the thirty-six
Lands, land by land, in order.

This is the vajra wheel.

Then what lies outside it is explained.
Again, this heart wheel,
Red and yellow in color, likewise.
In the center of the spokes of the wheel:
Vajradharā, Akṣobhyā,
Vairocanī, Ratneśvarī,
Padmanarteśvarī, Amoghā,
Locanā and Māmakī,
Pāṇḍaravāsinī, Tārā, Rūpavajrā,
Śabdavajrā, likewise Gandhavajrā and Rasavajrā,
Sparśavajrā and Dharmadhātuvajrā,
Kṣitigarbhā and Ākāśagarbhā,
Vajrapāṇī, Lokanāthā,
Sarvanivaraṇaviṣkambhinī, Samantabhadrī,
Ratnapradīpā, Nairātmyā,
Bhṛkuṭī, Parṇaśabarī,
Yamāntakī, Prajñāntakī,
Padmāntakī, Vighnāntakī,
Acalā and Nīladaṇḍā,
Ṭakkirājñī and Mahābalā,
Uṣṇīṣā and Sumbhā.
Their colors are those of their wheel,
And all their characteristics, the faces and the rest,
And everything else, are as in the vajra wheel.
In the near place, the goddesses
Are to be imagined with means like themselves,
And with the right leg extended.
The form realm and the Stainless,
Are held to be the first continent.
The Guide is to be known;
The Lesser Heruka is held to be next;
Third, the Lotus Heruka;
Fourth is held to be the Sky Heruka;
Fifth, the Scattering Wind Heruka;
Sixth, the Earth Heruka;

Seventh, the Blazing Heruka;
Eighth, the Moist Heruka;
Ninth, the Wisdom Heruka;
Tenth, the Mind Heruka;
Eleventh, the Speech Heruka;
And twelfth is held to be the Body Heruka.
These twelve are the great vajra
Herukas; there is no other tantra.
They are the Heruka of the Saṃvara of the three wheels.
Whatever their shapes may be,
Their body colors, from their own wheels,
Are to be indicated by the wise.
This is the heart wheel, the second.

Then, behind that, the wheel called All Qualities,
White and red; in the center of its vajra spokes one places
The thirty-six supreme female messengers:
The brahmin woman, the kṣatriya woman, the vaiśya woman,
The śūdra woman, the caṇḍāla woman, the dog seller,
The ḍombī, the dancer, Kāpālinī,
The fisherwoman and the bamboo worker,
The conch worker and the weaver,
The porter and the carpenter,
The garland maker, the attendant, the dyer,
The cotton spinner, the female messenger,
The latrine sweeper and the painter,
Śauṇḍinī, the woman who tends the garden,
The woman beaten by the king, the butcher woman,
The woman who sells tooth powder,
The goldsmith and the blacksmith,
The jewel stringer, the forest woman,
The barbarian Oḍi woman, the merchant woman,
The stone carver and the field worker,
And the leather worker: these are the yoginīs.
They are the color of the wheel.
All the rest is to be known
As in the heart wheel.

Here it is to be known as the field,
The nature of all the families of the desire realm,
And it is explained as what is called the second continent.
It is the nature of one's own wisdom and means,
And likewise the ground Radiant.
One should worship the guru oneself.
In the mantra that states one's own name,
Homage comes first, as is well known,
And at the end the syllables hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ.
This is to be done in the same way for all the wheels.
Outside that, one places it round,
With two lines, black and blue,
Beautified by doors, porticoes, courtyards,
Nets and half nets.
In the center of the eastern door
Is Kākāsyā, like Ḍākinī;
In the north, Ulūkāsyā;
In the west, Śvānāsyā;
And in the south, Śūkarāsyā;
Their colors are like those of Lāmā and the others, supreme.
In the corners of Agni, Nairṛti, Vāyu,
And Īśāna abide
Yamadāḍhī, Yamadūtī,
Yamadaṃṣṭrī and Yamamathanī, in due order.
Their colors are to be made equal, two by two,
And their faces in corresponding order.
On the ground of the east, the north, the west,
And the south, always,
One makes them black, blue, green, red,
And yellow in color.
Likewise the innate maṇḍala,
Since there are four wheels in sequence:
The Dharma body, the enjoyment body, and the emanation body
Are to be placed at the end, in due order.
The second wheel has three lines,
The third has four lines,
And the fourth has the nature of five lines.

The charnel grounds lie all around in order,
And the ground outside and so on
Is held to be made in a round shape.
The wheel, with the nature of five lines,
Is four cornered and blazes all around.
There the charnel grounds of the innate wheel
Are to be explained: Caṇḍogra,
Gahvara, and likewise
Jvālākula and Karaṅkin, the terrible ones,
Abide in the directions of the east and the rest,
Turning to the left.
Aṭṭaṭṭahāsa is in Īśāna's quarter,
Śrīvana in Agni's,
Ghorāndhakāra in Nairṛti's,
And in Vāyu's, Kilikilārava, resounding.
The forms in the fierce charnel grounds
Are vetālas, bhūtas, and the cries of jackals;
They abide in this order.
In the eight charnel grounds as well
Are trees, guardians of the directions, and nāga lords.
The trees: Śirīṣa, Kaṅkali,
The Cūta tree and the Nyagrodha,
Likewise Karañjaka itself,
Latāparkaṭi and Pithava.
The guardians: Indra, Kubera likewise,
Varuṇa, and the Lord of Yama's realm,
Then Īśāna and Agni,
The lord of rākṣasas, and the lord of wind.
The nāgas: Vāsuki and Takṣaka likewise,
Balacara and Padma itself,
Mahāpadma and Huluhulu,
Kulika and Śaṅkhapāla.
The Thundering, the Rumbling,
The Fierce, the Swirling, the Dense likewise,
The Full, the Rain Pouring, and the Violent:
These are the lords of the clouds.
Here, in all the charnel grounds,

One places a vajra garland.
Everything here is likewise to be done;
It is held to be outer and inner.
This is the third, the wheel of qualities.

Then, outside, the wheel of space,
Like a blue lotus;
In the center of its thirty-six spokes
Are these sky-going yoginīs:
The kinnarī, the gandharvī,
Huṭukā, likewise Vāṭavā,
The vīṇā player, the flute player, Mukundā,
The clay drum player, and surely Gaggarī,
The cymbal player and Śelendrikā,
The singer, Karaḍā, and the supreme Tamaḍā,
The dancer, the coquette, and Ṭakkā,
Tālī, Śaraṇā, the great drum player,
Maudrī, the string player, and Marū,
Nalavā, and likewise Ḍhambakī,
Ḍamarū and likewise Ḍuṇḍūkī,
The copper horn player and likewise the horn trumpet player,
Bhukī, the bell player, and the small bell player,
The jingle player, and likewise Ḍakolikā,
The conch player, and likewise Svaravatī:
The supreme sovereign ladies of the retinue.
Their colors are various and bright,
Or else they are the color of the wheel.
They abide in the near field;
The continent is the third, supreme.
They have come in the family of the sky-goers
And abide perfectly in this continent.
The ground is Radiating Light,
And they are the women of the field, in their own places and the rest.
Or else, the ḍamaru and the khaṭvāṅga
Are here set aside once more,
And each, in her own way, bears her own sign
As she wishes.

On the crowns of all the wheels
Is placed their own lord.
Here, of the nature of wisdom and means,
Of the nature of Kulika, they are women of the family.
Their ornaments and the rest are many;
The rest is to be done as before.
In all the wheels they have three eyes,
And they are followers clothed in the directions.
This is the wheel of space, the first.

Then, outside, the wheel of wind,
Blue and of various colors.
In the center of the vajra spokes one places
The yoginīs in due order.
Their other names, from Ākāśagarbha,
Are to be known by the intelligent:
The garuḍī, the goose, the speckled one,
The crow, the bya gar bird, the partridge,
The peahen, She of the Copper Crest,
Guḍabulī, the gentle one,
The dove and the great raven,
Gaḍinī and the burning owl,
The parrot, the mynah, the laughing one,
The vulture, the owl, the sparrow,
The woodpecker and the ruddy duck,
Vṛkṣaraṇī, the kakkapa
Bird, the cat,
The willow throat and Sārī,
The hawk, She of the Saffron Tongue,
Vāṭirī, Kāṃjaṃghā,
Hormo, and Kaṃkā likewise,
Datnarī, and the Enemy of Deer.
Thus the wheel of the yoginīs.
Their color is like that of the ground of the wheel,
Or else it is to be known from their own activities.
Their hands and the rest are likewise as before.
All are of the nature of wisdom and means.

They are the supreme ones abiding in the meeting place,
To be known as on the ground Difficult to Purify,
And held to be of the fourth continent.
This wheel is of the egg-born,
With the divisions of the three qualities;
The third, with the nature of the three,
Is the wheel of the heat-and-moisture-born, the embodied;
The fourth is called the womb-born.
They are held to have the nature of the three wheels.
This is the wheel of wind, the second.

Then what lies outside is to be explained:
The supreme wheel that bears the name of earth,
Yellow in its nature,
Adorned with thirty-six spokes.
The yoginīs are thirty-six,
The earth-going ones, in due order:
The lioness, the tigress, Bhimbhā, the hare,
The elephant, the deer, the cat,
The cow, the buffalo, the mare,
The jackal, the rhinoceros, the female yak,
The mouse, the she-ass, Bhiḍī,
The she-goat and the ewe, in order,
The bitch, the sow, the black bear,
Ḍanaḍarī, Maujñākā,
The brown bear and the coquette,
The forest woman and the great hound,
The great raven, Khasgomā,
The snake, the monkey, the camel,
The weasel, the lizard, and the dove:
The supreme ones who dwell in the villages.
Thus they are the color of the wheel,
Or else each has her own color.
The goddesses, of the nature of wisdom and means,
Dwell in the near meeting place,
On the ground Manifest,
Which is the perfection of wisdom,

And they abide in the fifth continent.
Their weapons and the rest are as before.
Their bodies are in the form of women,
And their faces are held to be of their own kind.
At the doors of the east, the north, the west,
And the south are to be known
Brahmāṇī, Maheśvarī,
Kaumārī, and likewise Vaiṣṇavī;
Vārāhī, Indrāṇī, Caṇḍī,
And Mahālakṣmī are in the corners.
Those at the doors, in form and sign,
Are known to be like Ḍākinī and the others;
In the corners, like the four, Dāḍhī and the rest.
Here are to be known three lines:
The dharmas of body, speech and mind.
The wheel of Dharma is most beautiful.
The charnel grounds are to be described:
In the center of the fire wheel,
Killing, the Terrifier of All,
Great Fear, the Terrifier,
And likewise the fierce charnel ground,
Are to be arranged turning to the left;
The Expeller and the Hater,
The Muter, and again the Paralyzer,
Are in the corners of Īśāna and the rest.
The trees are to be placed in order:
The areca, the walnut, the coconut,
The pomegranate, the bilva tree, then
The myrobalan and the vijñārakṣa tree,
To be arranged in due order.
Indrāṇī, Yamī, Vāruṇī,
Yakṣiṇī, Bhūtī, the ṛṣi woman,
The rākṣasī, and the wife of Vāyu:
These world protectresses are to be placed.
All the nāginīs and rākṣasīs
Are to be placed here in every way.
Thus, having explained the retinue of the maṇḍala,

One places every excellence.
With a body color that accords with the activity,
One should meditate there on the chief.
This is the third wheel, the earth maṇḍala, with its two stages.

Then outside, here once again,
I shall explain the fire wheel,
Red in color, greatly blazing.
On its thirty-six supreme spokes
The yoginīs are again to be arranged,
Born from the families of the gods and the rest:
Goddesses, nāginīs, yakṣiṇīs,
And bhūtīs, in mere essence.
What is it that all this has spoken of?
I shall explain those born of the family of the gods:
The mother, the wife, the sister,
The daughter, the sister's daughter,
The father's sister,
The wife of the maternal uncle,
The wife's sister,
Her father's mother,
The wife's grandmother,
The mother's mother, the kinswoman,
The daughter of the mother's sibling,
The sibling of one's own grandmother,
The sibling's daughter and her daughter,
The father's mother and the grandmother,
The wife of the paternal uncle,
The wife of the daughter's son,
Again the wife's sibling,
The daughter of one's own father's sister,
Born of her own family,
The sibling's wife and daughter,
The son's own wife,
The mother of the daughter's husband,
The son's own mother-in-law,
And the daughter's daughter, as is rightly explained:

These are the thirty-six messengers.
They are rightly known to be red in color,
Their weapons and the rest as before.
The ground is Gone Far,
And they abide in the sixth continent.
They are always to be known as in the assembly,
With the essential nature of wisdom and means.
In the wheel of power, always,
They are to be known as lovely women like oneself.
Everywhere, with vajra garlands and the rest,
Reversing the order of arising,
With the left and the right hands
Offerings are made here.
All the flesh of livestock
Is to be offered everywhere as food.
Drinks of various kinds are offered,
And likewise various things to lick.
Rising each from her own seat,
They worship the guru Vajradhara;
Then, coming back again,
To the twelve offerings of the wheel.
This is the first, the fire wheel, the supplementary layer of the enjoyment body.

Then what lies outside that is explained:
The water wheel, of great miraculous power,
White in color; on its thirty-six spokes
One meditates on the yoginīs in order:
The makarī, the turtle, the fish,
The frog, the tortoise, the otter,
The black scorpion, Gaggarī, Śrīlī,
She of the water cave, She with an insect's face,
Chagapā, Kakarū, Susā,
The water rat, She with an ant's face,
The water woman and the wild one,
The elephant, the tigress, the jackal,
The water snake, the conch, the cowrie,

The mother of pearl, the jewel, Jiṅgurā,
Lisā, Dudurā, Karṇāṭā,
Phaṭakā, Dāvakā, Krimā,
Juṣā, Juṣī, the blowfly, and Kalā:
They are the supreme chief goddesses.
Thus their colors by nature
Are white, or each born of her own family.
Their faces are in their own forms,
In the order of the yoginīs.
This is the near assembly,
And the ground is Immovable, supreme.
They are to be known as abiding in the seventh continent;
Their weapons are as before.
Or else the people of Pūrṇagiri and the rest
Are the thirty-six deities.
In those places and the rest, in order,
Actual women are to be properly set.
By them this Jambudvīpa
Is adorned with twelve segments.
In the ocean called Salty,
The beings that belong there
Are to be thought of as born of heat and moisture,
Born from union, or born from the womb.
This wheel is of the heat-and-moisture-born;
The fire wheel is of the womb-born.
It is complete with all characteristics,
Itself the nature of wisdom and means.
This is the water wheel, the second.

Then what lies outside that is explained:
On every side, the wheel of wisdom.

It has thirty-six spokes of various colors,
With the family of asura women in order:
Tilottamā and Supreme Bliss,
The Daughter of the Gods, Great Joy,
Joy, and Renowned Joy, Padminī,
Śaṅkhinī, Citriṇī, Hastinī,

Great Form and Beautiful Form,
Lover of Light, the Graceful, the Blissful,
Lover of Flowers, White Lotus,
Blue Lotus and the Lovely,
Passion and Great Passion,
Renowned Play and Great Play,
Intoxicated and Delighting in Intoxication,
Desire and Great Desire,
Born of Bliss and Possessed of Bliss,
Supremely Agreeable and Loving,
Fortunate and Fair Fortune,
the Lowly and the Shrinking,
And she who is renowned as Born Form:
These are the supreme chief yoginīs.
All are of the nature of wisdom and means,
Of various kinds and colors likewise.
Their hands and weapons are to be known as before.
The ground is Good Intelligence, likewise,
And the charnel ground Appearing as Jewels,
The maker of self-arisen bliss.
Therefore the enjoyment body
And the third wheel of the maṇḍala,
Through the purity of the four joys,
Have four lines all around.
At the four doors, in the east and the rest,
The yoginīs in due order,
Gaurī, Caurī, Vetālī,
And Ghasmarī, are to be arranged.
The four goddesses dwelling in the corners,
Pukkasī, likewise Śavarī,
Caṇḍālī and Ḍombinī,
Are always to be known in order, as before.
The outer wheel of charnel grounds
Is in the center of the water maṇḍala:
Death of Children, Eater of Leftovers,
Fierce Battle, and All Fangs,
In the east and the rest, turning to the left;

Thus they are to be imagined with great love.
Smoke, black darkness, and fire,
The sound of hā hā, and the great sound.
The trees are sandalwood and camphor,
Nutmeg and cardamom,
Nāgakesara and campaka,
Kunduru and the deodar.
The guardians of the directions are to be shown:
The Sun, the Moon, the Son of the Earth,
The one born of the Hare-Marked, the Guru himself,
Śukra, likewise the Son of the Sun,
And the Asura Head are to be known;
They are to be given fierce faces.
Blazing swords, knives,
Long spears, razors, likewise rocks,
Lightning, and a rain of various weapons
Are to be made in the center of the charnel grounds.
The sword, the eye ointment, the pill,
The foot ointment, the elixir,
The sandals, mercury, and the underworld:
These accomplishments are to be achieved by the wise.
This is the wheel of wisdom, the nature of the three wheels of the maṇḍala of the enjoyment body.

Then what lies outside that is explained:
This clear wheel of mind,
Black in color, with thirty-six spokes,
All supreme ones born of their own nature:
The nāginī, the yakṣiṇī, the bhūtī,
The pretī, the hell woman, Avīcī,
She Who Falls and the Unremitting,
The Kumbhī, and likewise Yamī,
Black Thread and Burning Embers,
Heat and Intense Heat,
Wailing and Great Wailing,
She Who Boils in Black Oil, She Who Crushes Between Two Mountains, Hatred, Delusion, Jealousy,

Lustful Intoxication, Avarice, She of the Thread,
She of Counting, She of the Forest of Swords herself,
the Many, and Famine,
She of the Wilderness of Disease, She of Weapons,
She of the Wilderness of Water,
Sword Nails, Vaitaraṇī,
Razor Teeth, She of the Wheel,
And the kumbhāṇḍī: the great goddesses.
Their color is like that of the wheel.
Their hands and weapons are as before,
And they are to be known as having their own forms.
There is the near charnel ground,
And then the ground is Cloud of Dharma.
It is the pure nature of the mind,
Held to be the all-pervading, possessed of the wheel.
Free of inherent nature, selfless,
They dwell on the ground Possessed of the Wheel.
The wheels in due order
Are all to be known in this way.
The doorkeepers of them all
In the four places are twelve;
Thus sixteen are to be known.
Emptiness belongs to the wise;
Because wisdom is the essence of consciousness,
The charnel ground is the Blessed One himself.
In this emanation wheel
It is by the names of the nature of the three.
Outside, all of this other
Is to be explained as two wheels.
This is the first of the wheel of mind.

Then, outside, another:
The wheel of speech is to be explained,
Red, the color of madder,
Chief, with the nature of thirty-six spokes:
She Who Worships, She Who Eats, She Who Sleeps,
The Lazy One, She Who Meditates with a Mind on Dharma,

She Whose Mind Is on the Household, She Whose Mind Is on Women,
She Whose Mind Is on Wealth, She Parted from Union,
Those Whose Minds Are on Children, She Who Grieves,
She of Meditative Concentration, She Who Recites Mantras,
Shame, Pride, She Who Is Tormented,
She Who Strives to Benefit Sentient Beings,
She Whose Mind Is on Kings, She Who Harms Others,
She Who Has Attained Wisdom, the Ascetic,
The Old One, She Who Thinks of Death,
the Happy One, the Suffering One, the Nonvirtuous One,
She Who Exists and She Who Does Not Exist,
She Whose Mind Is on the Guru, She Who Goes,
The Patient One, the Impatient One, the Weary One,
the Rested One, and the Hungry One, supreme:
The goddesses who perform all actions.
This wheel of nature is great.
Its color is known to be that of its own wheel,
And the rest is as before.
The goddesses are of the nature of wisdom and means.
This maṇḍala of nature
Is explained in the Tantra of the Four Seats,
In its twelve thousand,
And they are held to be the offering goddesses
Of the wisdom ḍākinīs and the rest.
The place at the edge of the village is like this,
And it is the ground Universal Light.
Thus, at the end of the bodies of wisdom and the rest,
In what is called the wheel encircled
By water, fire, wind and space,
The supreme vajra lady is to be known.
This is the second of the wheel of speech, the wheel of emanation.

Then the wheel of body is explained,
With the colors of body, speech and mind.
In the center of its thirty-six spokes
Are the wheel-turning ladies of the yoginīs:
She of the realm of the Four Great Kings,

The wheel-turner of the Thirty-Three,
She of Yāma, the wheel-turner of Tuṣita,
She of Delight in Emanation, and likewise
She Who Controls Others' Emanations,
The wheel lady of the Brahmā Assembly,
Likewise She of the Ministers of Brahmā,
The wheel-turner of Great Brahmā,
She of Limited Light, She of Immeasurable Light,
She of Clear Light, She of Limited Virtue,
The wheel-turner of Immeasurable Virtue,
She of Vast Virtue, She of the Cloudless,
The wheel of She Born of Merit,
The wheel-turner of Great Fruit,
The wheel lady of the Not Great and the Untroubled,
She of Excellent Vision and She of Good Appearance,
The wheel-turner of Akaniṣṭha,
She of the sphere of infinite space,
She of the sphere of infinite consciousness,
She of the sphere of nothingness,
She of neither perception
Nor non-perception, the hell woman, the pretī,
The animal, the human woman, the asura woman,
Likewise She Who Moves in Celestial Palaces,
The Moon, the Sun, Yamī,
And Indrāṇī are to be known as the wheel-turners.
They are to be made the color of their own wheel,
Their hands and weapons as before.
They are of the nature of wisdom and means,
And dwell perfectly at the near edge of the village.
The ground is the Conduct of Aspiration.
These are the twelve wheels.

This wheel is square,
And is to be perceived as the emanation body (nirmāṇakāya).
Its five lines are the mirror and the rest,
All marked with the defining characteristics.
Made by the twice eight goddesses,

It holds the four offering maṇḍalas.
Outside are the eight charnel grounds.
The female door guardians, in their due order:
In the east meditate on Gaurī, the Water-Born;
In the north is Gāndhārī;
In the west is Vajra Dancer;
In the south, she with the face of a mare.
In the corners are four goddesses,
In order beginning with Īśāna's quarter:
The goddess Vajra Blazing Face,
Vajra Frowning Face,
Vajra Cleaver, and Caṇḍī;
Their colors and the rest are as before.
They are great fierce women with bared fangs,
Made beautiful by garlands of flame.
The color and form of the heroes
Are just like those of all the yoginīs.
All are adorned with garlands of heads;
The heroes wear garlands of silk.
Those heroes have crowns of matted locks,
And all their limbs are smeared with ash.
The yoginīs are tall and garlanded,
Adorned with bracelets and crest ornaments,
Perfectly complete in every characteristic,
Born from the family of Vārāhī.
The names of all the heroes,
Supreme, beginning with the first wheel, are:
Vajraḍāka, and likewise
Viśvaḍāka and Padmaḍāka,
Ratnaḍāka and Khaṇḍakapāla,
Mahākaṅkāla and Kaṅkāla,
Vikaṭadaṃṣṭra and Suravairin,
Amitābha and Vajraprabha,
Vajradeha and Aṅkurika,
Likewise Vajrajaṭila,
Mahāvīra and Vajrahūṃkāra,
Subhadra and Vajrabhadra,

Mahābhairava and Virūpākṣa,
Mahābala and Ratnavajra,
Hayagrīva and Ākāśagarbha,
Heruka and Padmanarteśvara,
Vairocana and Vajrasattva,
Mahābala and Jñānaḍāka,
The Steadfast-Minded, Liberation, and Wisdom,
Means, and the Vajra of Mind.
The remaining names are like those of the goddesses,
To be given masculine forms.
For the eleven wheels,
The doors and the rest are likewise.
For the goddesses of the central lotus,
The principal is to be made as the lord.
However, in the wheels of the lord and the rest,
Just as the Victors of the Fortunate Eon
Number one thousand less four,
All of them are to be visualized.
Their names are distinguished by the divisions of their qualities;
They are of the nature of emanation bodies.
Whichever yoginī arises first
In whichever wheel,
Through her the twelve are to be known:
They are the women of all conduct, of the sacred sites and the secondary sites.
The rest, of the thirteenth ground,
Are the women dwelling at the doors, the corners, and so on.
At the time of offering, praise, and the like,
One should first know the vajra name;
So too for the heroes.
The outer charnel grounds are to be explained:
The first is known as the Burned,
The second as the Unburned,
The third as the one become Fragments,
The fourth as the Untouched,
The fifth is called the Terrifying,
The sixth the Frightening,

The seventh the Bright and Hollowed,
And the eighth is so named from those hung from above.
In the eight charnel grounds there are always
The eight great hell guardians.
The trees are the śālmali, the aśoka,
The pārijāta, and likewise the udumbara,
The ḍombira and the gambhari,
The juniper and the myrobalan.
There are hosts of various vetālas,
Hosts of yoginīs and of heroes,
Sky-goers, and other earth-goers,
Whoever they may be, of great miraculous power;
Headless ones running, and others,
Headless ones dancing,
Ones lying down, ones without legs,
Ones with heads and bodies cut off;
Through the cause of great meditative absorption
They all dance with joy.
Thus, likewise, in the center
Various constellations are to be made,
Their various colors to be known
According to whatever mounts they have.
As the nature of the cause of perfect awakening,
The complete maṇḍala is to be meditated.
Whatever the causal vajra is like,
Just so it is to be emanated again.
The animal-faced goddesses
Come bearing all the rites.
Having summoned them together with the host of wrathful ones,
First the obstructors are to be dispelled.
Commanded by Sumbha, the vajra-holder,
The one bound by the vows is to drive in the kīlas.
oṃ sumbhani sumbha kāyikāṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ grīhṇa grīhṇa vācikāṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ grīhṇapaya gṛhṇapaya citasikāṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ ānaya hoḥ bhagavān vajrajñānikāṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ
They are to be placed in the directions beginning with the east.

In the center of the vajra tent,
Below, it becomes the vajra ground;
Above is the net of arrows,
The vajra fence, and the canopy.
Within the source of phenomena (dharmodaya), too,
It is to be meditated as three-, four-, five-,
And six-cornered.
In the order of the four tiers,
All are to be arranged here in sequence.
oṃ gha gha ghātaya ghātaya sarva du phaṭ kīlaya kīlaya sarva pāpaṃ phaṭ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ vajra kīlaya vajradharod ājñāpayati sarva vighnan kāya vāka citta vajra kīlaya hūṃ phaṭ
This is the mantra for driving in the kīla.
oṃ vajra muṅgara vajra kīlā koṭaya hūṃ phaṭ
This is the mantra for striking.
Thus the heroes of all the wheels
Arise from the family of the Blessed Vajra.
They are emanation bodies without exception;
The yoginīs are vessels of awakening.

This is the third chapter: the wheel of body, which is the nature of the three bodies, together with emanation.

Then the stages of the sacred sites, the secondary sites, and the rest
Were taught just as they are.
The sacred sites are Pūrṇagiri,
Jālandhara, Oḍḍiyāna,
And likewise Arbuda.
Godāvarī is a secondary site;
Rāmeśvara, Devīkoṭa,
And Mālava too are secondary sites.
Kāmarūpa, and likewise Oḍra,
Triśakuni, and Kosala are fields.
Kaliṅga and Lampāka,
Kāñcī, and Himālaya are secondary fields.
Pretapurī and Gṛhadevatā,
Saurāṣṭra and Suvarṇadvīpa
Are meeting places. The secondary meeting places

Are Nagara, Sindhu, Maru,
And Kulutā, which too is a secondary meeting place.
The gathering places are the bank of a river,
A garden, what is declared to be the ocean,
And the crossroads. The secondary gathering places
Are the mountain peak, the middle of a village,
The place of gatherings, the mountain of Kaumārī,
And the family field, which too is a secondary gathering place.
The charnel grounds are Mumuniya,
Conduct, Harikela,
And the City of Illusion.
The secondary charnel grounds are the mountain's edge,
The field of mantra, and the city of the gods.
Karṇāṭa and Paṭa
Are likewise declared to be village borders.
The village borders are Koṅkana itself
And the land of the Pervading Lord's deeds;
The Yoginī and the Dense City
Are likewise here the near village borders.

The forest of the fathers, the side of a house,
A pond, and a pool:
Whatever maidens are in these places,
Born from their own birthplace as the innate,
Are to be known in land after land,
Endowed with wisdom and abiding in nonduality.
Through the twelve wheels,
By the divisions of the arrow, the site-born ones,
The twelve sites and the rest, are fully declared,
Caused by the thirty-six elements.
In the elements of each one, too,
The sense sources beginning with the eye,
In the twelvefold meaning of the truths,
Are to be known as the innate yoginīs.

With the following verse
Empowerment is to be received:
"Just as, the moment he was born,

The tathāgatas gave him the bath,
So too I shall be bathed,
And purified with divine water."
Between the vajra and space
All the buddhas have arrived here.
They, arisen as rays of wisdom light,
Confer empowerment with streams of self-arisen nectar,
In order to fill one with the innate water
Of the vajra lord.
oṃ sarva tathāgatābhiṣekata samaya śriye huṃ
This is the mantra of empowerment.

Whatever wheel it may be,
In sealing it with its own,
The yoginīs are the lords;
It is not sealed by another pervading lord.
The wisdom being and the absorption being, too,
Are to be meditated in all the wheels.
With the mass of light arising from them,
The wisdom wheel is to be summoned
With the syllables jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ;
This is to be learned from the Guru's instructions.
The various heroes and yoginīs
Are to be made to offer to the principal.
The two yogas, of the drop
And of the great subtle one, are to be fully visualized.
The drops of the twelve wheels, too,
Are signified in the forms of vajras.
The channels below and above the navel,
A thousand of them, possess drops.
The drops of the ten tips
Are signified in their due order.
The hundred, smoke and the rest,
Are to be made to descend into the place of the drop.
Therefore, whatever the subtle one may be,
Contemplate that it is not the buddhas' sphere of activity.
By gazing at the vajra life winds,

That great seal is the buddha.
As for the recitation of the secret mantra:
With these, the root of more than eight feet,
The forty and the rest,
Complete in all the characteristics,
With great bliss and the rest, the excellent,
Wholly free of all duality,
And the offering, the nature of the three realms,
Is made with all the origins of things.

Gaurī and the rest, the wheel-turning women of the six classes of beings,
The goddesses of both the form and the formless realms,
Through all their own pure natures,
Will worship the wheel without remainder.
Meditate on the maṇḍala of great bliss!
The twelve yogas are merit without evil.
Have faith in all as undefiled by nature!
Know even that lowly maṇḍala to be bliss!
Have faith in the delusion of the senses as great bliss!
In that instant there is no essence of self or other.
With the great form of manifold aspects,
Emanate the maṇḍala wheel throughout the three worlds!

Adorned with mantra, mudrā, and the rest,
The great yogin gives the torma.
Following a recitation of a hundred thousand,
By reciting ten million there is great accomplishment.
Just as was declared,
When one enjoys the various pledge substances,
The yogin becomes accomplished; then
He may dwell wherever he pleases.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the fifteenth chapter of the great king of tantras, the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra, setting out the genuine meditative absorption of the Blessed One and teaching various instructions.

Then I shall explain the extraction
Of the root mantra: listen!
In the center of the source of phenomena,
Then draw this wheel.
In the center, the nature of five segments;
Outside it, draw twelve.
A circle is to be given, and again in it
Doors and corners, four of each.
In the eight-spoked and four-cornered figure
Are the compartments, the vowels, and the consonant classes.
The lord dwelling there is to be extracted,
From whom flow all desires and bliss.
The letters of the five classes and the rest
Are in the center; then the twelve vowels;
The neuters at the four doors;
In the corners, they are in pairs.
The mantrin should know the pervading lord
As at Agni's quarter and the rest.
ka in the center, ca in the east, ṭa in the south, ta in the west,
pa in the north, in their due order.
The last of the west is to be taken,
And likewise the last of the north.
The second letter of Agni's quarter
Is to be taken, and the water seed of Īśāna's.
The third letter of the east,
And likewise the third of the south.
The first of the middle is to be taken,
And the seed of the last of the north.
The second of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
And that, likewise, the first again.
The fire seed of Nairṛti's quarter,
And likewise the water of Īśāna's.
The letter ra of the rākṣasa's quarter is to be taken,
And the second letter of Agni's.
Take the fire seed of the spirit's quarter,
And likewise the wind of Agni's.
This is the first word of the mantra;

Its vowels are to be pronounced.
With the strong dot, and fully endowed,
The second letter is adorned.
Pressed by the fourth segment,
The third is adorned with fire.
The fifth letter is adorned
In its lower part with the letter ra.
The learned one adorns the sixth letter
With the second segment.
The ninth is pressed by that same one,
And the tenth too by the fourth.
The twelfth is pressed by that same one,
And the thirteenth too by that same one.
On the fourteenth, water
Is to be arranged in the lower part.
Pressed by the second segment
Is the supreme fifteenth letter.
Thus the mantrin, knowing it well,
Does this for all the feet.
The first of the west is to be taken,
And the fourth of the north.
The water of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
And again the last of the south;
The seed of the first of the middle,
And likewise the last of the north.
The first of the middle is to be taken,
The seed of the last of the north;
The water of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
The seed of the last of the south,
And the letter of Agni's wind:
This is declared to be the second foot.
It is pressed by the third segment;
The first is marked below with fire.
With the fifth segment the second
Letter is adorned below.
With the first of the north
The sixth is marked below.

The eighth letter too is the same as that,
Set apart by the second segment.
The tenth is pressed by that same one.
It destroys all that is harmful,
Turns the wheel of Dharma,
And brings every untroubled accomplishment.

The third of the west is to be taken,
The seed of the second of the spirit's quarter,
The seed of the first of the west,
And again the first of the south,
The fourth of the north,
The letter of the second of the spirit's quarter;
The last of the south is to be taken,
The fourth of the north;
Take the fire letter of the spirit's quarter,
And likewise the water of Īśāna's,
And the seed of Agni's wind:
This is the third foot of the mantra.
The learned one presses the first letter
With the eleventh segment.
With the ninth segment, too,
The head of the second letter is adorned,
And the very first of the south
Is adorned below with fire.
What is to be given to the third of the middle
Is to be arranged in the lower part.
Pressed by the fourth segment
Is the fifth letter, for the learned one.
The eighth segment is to be given
To the eighth letter.
The tenth is pressed by the second:
It is supreme for cutting down the hostile;
It cuts down the abodes and non-abodes
Of gods, asuras, and humans.
The seed of the second of Agni's quarter,
The letter of the first of the west,

The seed of the second of the wind's quarter,
Likewise the other of Īśāna's,
The letter of the second of the wind's quarter,
The letter of the last of the west,
And again the first of the west,
And Agni's wind are to be taken.
This is declared to be the fourth foot;
It fully reveals all things.
In the lower part of the fifth letter
The letter ra is to be arranged.
On the sixth, the seventh segment,
And again on the seventh, fire
Adorning it below; the second is to be given.
It is the inexhaustible state of omniscience.
The water of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
And again the letter dya, the self-arisen;
The seed of the first of the west,
The third of the east as well,
The other of Īśāna's is to be taken,
And again Agni's wind:
This is the fifth foot, with six;
It awakens the yoginīs.
The seed of the first of the middle,
And again that same letter,
The great power of wind is to be taken,
And again the last of the north,
The seed of the wind's ground,
The fourth of the north,
The fire seed of the rākṣasa's quarter,
And again the last of the south;
The third of the middle is to be taken,
And likewise Agni's wind.
To the fifth and the rest vowels are to be given;
It emits and gathers in.
The first letter, the all-going,
Is to be pressed by the third segment.
The fourth seed, too, pressed by that same one,

Is the most supreme in beauty.
The fifth is pressed by the second segment,
And is held to be set on a seat of water.
In that fifth foot
All purposes are joined.
The first letter, being pressed
By the eleventh, is beautiful.
Pressed by the second segment
Is to be pronounced the second letter.
The fourth and fifth letters
Are thoroughly pressed by that same one.
The eighth letter is fully adorned
With the segment of the ninth.
The tenth is pressed by the second segment
And set apart below with fire:
This is to be known as the sixth foot;
It fully accomplishes all desires.
The first of the middle is to be taken,
And likewise the first of the south,
The seed of the wind's ground;
The mantra declared as ka ṣa is to be extracted.
The fourth of the north is to be taken,
Likewise the third of the east,
And having extracted Agni's wind,
This is the seventh foot, the inexhaustible.
The first letter of the pervading lord
Is pressed by the ninth compartment.
Likewise by the third compartment
The second letter is adorned.
With the matrix of the fifth segment
The learned one makes the seat of the fifth.
Then the sixth letter
Is pressed by the second segment.
The third of the east is to be taken,
The seed of the wind's ground;
The water of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
And likewise the wind's ground;

The third of the south is to be taken,
And again the very wind's ground;
The third of the middle is to be taken,
And Agni's corner, the wind itself:
This is to be known as the eighth foot;
It utterly destroys all evil.
Pressed by the second segment
Is the first letter, with a seat of water.
The learned one's second letter
Is pressed by the second segment.
Pressing with the fourth segment
Is to be perceived on the fourth letter.
Pressing with the second segment
Is to be known on the seventh letter together with
The last of the west.
It brings all enemies to an end.
The first of the north is to be taken,
The fire seed of Nairṛti's quarter,
The seed of its second,
The letter of the first of the north;
The second of Nairṛti's is to be taken,
The letter dya, Vajrasattva;
The seed of the first of the west,
The letter of the second of Agni's quarter;
The wind's ground too is to be taken,
And the seed of Agni's wind:
This ninth foot of the mantra
Gladdens the heart of the ḍākinī.
The second letter, from among the segments,
Is adorned with the fifth as its seat.
The third letter too, with that same one;
The fourth is pressed by the second segment;
The fifth by the ninth segment;
The eighth by the sixth segment;
The ninth is pressed by the second segment,
To be known fully as its seat.
The seed of the first of the middle,

Likewise the great power of wind,
The seed of the first of the west,
The fourth of that same quarter;
The last of the north is to be taken,
And the third of the middle;
The water of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
The letter of the first of the north,
The seed of the second of Nairṛti's,
And again Agni's wind:
Likewise this foot of the mantra
Is called the tenth; it slays the hostile.
The first letter of the north,
Pressed by the second segment,
Is to be known as the seat of the second.
With the eleventh it is at the crown.
On the base of the sixth segment
The learned one sets the fourth letter.
The fifth letter, with a segment
Below the end of the fourth, is joined with fire.
To the sixth the letter ra is to be given as a seat;
To the eighth, the seat of the fifth;
The ninth is pressed by the second segment.
It terrifies the great terrors.
The water of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
The letter of the first of the middle;
The first of the south is to be taken,
And again the last of the north,
The seed of the second of the middle,
The letter of the second of Īśāna's,
And that same one again is to be taken;
The fire seed of Nairṛti's quarter,
The water letter of Īśāna's,
And the seed of Agni's wind are to be gathered:
The eleventh foot of the mantra
Utterly destroys the hosts of māras.
The first letter, pressed by
The third segment, is beautiful.

On the fourth letter, too,
The fifth segment is made its seat.
The sixth is pressed by the second,
And again so are the seventh and the ninth.

The last of the north is to be taken,
And again the first of the west;
The third of the middle is to be taken,
The letter of the last of the south;
The first of the north is to be taken,
The fire letter of Nairṛti's quarter,
The seed of the first of the north,
And likewise the fire of the spirit's quarter;
The first of the west is to be taken,
The letter of the last of the north,
And then the first of the west is taken,
And again it is Agni's wind:
This is the twelfth foot of the mantra;
It brings all the yoginīs under control.
The learned one presses the first letter
With the second segment.
Pressing with the eastern door woman,
It then becomes the seat of the second.
Again, the sixth letter
Is pressed by the third segment.
The seventh letter, as to its segment,
Is completed by the seat of the sixth.
The eighth letter, as to its segment,
Is to be adorned with the third.
The tenth is pressed by the eleventh segment,
And below the eleventh is the sun;
The second segment goes on that same one.
It is unwavering in the rite of subjugation.
The second of the wind's quarter is to be taken,
And again the second of Īśāna's,
The seed of the third of the east,
The letter of the second of the wind's quarter,

The seed of the third of the west,
The fire letter of Nairṛti's quarter;
The water of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
The seed of the wind's ground,
And that same one is given in the lower part;
The fourth of the north,
And the first of the middle are to be taken,
The fire letter of Nairṛti's quarter,
And Agni's wind is to be taken:
This is the thirteenth foot of the mantra.
It brings about all delight,
And is the path to awakening for those who follow and protect.
The wisdom seed is fully extracted,
And that same one is extracted again.
The first of the middle is to be taken,
The fire letter of Nairṛti's quarter;
The first of the east is to be taken,
And that is likewise made its seat.
Take the letter ra of the rākṣasa's quarter,
The seed of the last of the south,
And having extracted the last of the north,
The letter of the second of the middle,
Agni's wind too is to be taken:
The fourteenth foot is inexhaustible.
Again, the third letter
Is pressed by the second segment,
The fourth is pressed by the ninth,
And again the fifth by the second.
Endowed with the seat of the fifth segment
Is the eighth; likewise the ninth
Is pressed by the second segment.
The thirteenth is to be explained in reverse order.
The learned one's eleventh letter
Is pressed by the second compartment.
The sixth is pressed by the fourth,
And the seat of the fourth is the fifth.
The eleventh, as a crest,

Utterly bewilders all people.
The last of the north is to be taken,
Īśāna's, and likewise the other of Īśāna's,
The seed of the second of Agni's quarter,
And that same one is extracted again;
The last of the south is to be taken,
And again the first of the north;
Agni's wind is to be taken,
And again that same seed:
This is the fifteenth foot of the mantra,
Designed for driving away.
The mantra letter of the second
Is fully endowed with the second compartment.
As the seat of the third, the last
Of the north is to be given.
The fourth letter of the pervading lord
Is fully endowed with the second compartment.
The sixth is pressed by the third compartment
And made to blaze below with fire.
The seventh, pressed by the second,
Is the abiding truth of the yoginī.
The second of the wind's quarter is to be taken,
And again the water of Īśāna's,
The fourth of the north,
Likewise the first of the west,
The seed of the second of the wind's quarter,
And again the first of the west;
The second of the wind's quarter is to be taken,
And again the very last of the south,
The seed of the first of the middle,
The son of fire of Nairṛti's quarter,
And the seed of Agni's wind:
This is the sixteenth foot of the mantra.
The second is pressed by the letter ra;
The seat of the third is the sixth;
The crest of the fifth is the eleventh;
For the sixth, from the second segment,

Its seat is by the son of fire;
The tenth is by the second segment.
The last of the north is to be taken,
And likewise the later one of Īśāna's,
The seed of the first of the middle,
And again the very wind's ground;
The first of the north is to be made the seat,
Likewise the first of the west;
The third of the middle is to be taken,
The letter of the first of the west;
The third of the east is to be taken,
And again it is Agni's wind:
The mantra of the seventeenth foot
Destroys untimely death.
The second letter of the mantra
Is fully endowed with the second compartment;
The fourth too is fully endowed with that same one,
And the fifth as well with it.
The fourth is pressed by the eleventh;
The sixth is pressed by the third;
It presses the seat of the letter na.
The seventh is with the seventh compartment;
The eighth is the second compartment.
From this secret mantra all bliss arises.
The third of the east is to be taken,
And likewise the first of the south,
The seed of the first of the middle,
The ground from the wind's corner,
The first of the north,
The letter of the end of that same quarter,
The seed of the first of the middle,
Likewise the first of the south,
And Agni's wind is to be taken:
This is the eighteenth foot of the mantra.
The second letter, as to its compartment,
Is fully endowed with the second;
The fourth too, with that same one,

On the letters of the fifth and sixth;
The seventh letter too with that same one,
And likewise the eighth with the second segment.
This is the mantra word of the mantrin
That fully turns the wheel of Dharma for beings.
The second of the middle is to be taken,
And again the first of the south;
The third of the middle is to be taken,
Likewise the first of the middle,
The first of the north,
Then the very wind's ground,
The seed of the second of Agni's quarter,
The ground of the wind's corner,
The fourth of the north,
Likewise the last of the west,
The fourth of that same quarter,
And again the son of fire of the spirit's quarter;
The last of the south is to be taken:
This is the foot that falls one short of twenty.
The second letter has a water seat
And is fully endowed with the second compartment;
Its crest is the eleventh compartment.
The fifth is endowed with the second compartment.
The seventh, with the sixth compartment,
Is marked in the lower part.
The ninth, with the third compartment,
Is held to have the eleventh at its head.
With the second, on the eleventh;
With the third, the twelfth letter;
With the seventh, on the thirteenth:
This secret mantra has the nature of the innate.
The last of the north is to be taken,
The later one from Īśāna's compartment,
The seed of the second of the wind's quarter,
And again the last of the north,
The third of the west, the letter
Of the last of the north,

The second of the middle,
The letter of the wind's ground,
And Agni's wind is to be taken:
This is the twentieth foot of the mantra.

The learned one's second letter
Is fully endowed with the second compartment.
On the fourth is the seat of the fifth.
On the fifth letter, with the letter ra;
With the seventh, on the sixth;
On the eighth, with the second compartment.
It is the great one that terrifies all around;
It strikes fear into the nāgas.
The water of Īśāna's quarter, too, is to be taken,
The fourth letter of the middle;
The first of the east is to be taken,
The fire seed of Nairṛti's quarter,
And, as a seat, the last of the north,
The fourth letter of that same quarter;
Having extracted Nairṛti's fire,
The fourth of the west as well,
The fire seed of Nairṛti's quarter,
And likewise the last of the south:
This is the twenty-first foot;
It removes all terror.
The second compartment is fully joined,
And likewise the seat of wind;
This is called the first letter.
The second is thus placed above.
Placed at the head of the fourth,
The second compartment is joined.
Pressed by the eleventh as a crest,
The seventh is endowed with the second,
The eighth with the third,
And the ninth by pressing.
This is the mantra that is the basis of all accomplishments;
It bestows the accomplishment of the mudrā.

The water of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
Likewise the first of the west;
Having taken the great power of wind,
The second letter of that same quarter,
The seed of the fourth of the middle,
And again the last of the north;
The fourth of the west
Is to be endowed with the letter ra.
Having taken the last of the south,
Likewise the first of the middle,
The fire of the rākṣasa's quarter is to be taken,
And the seed of Agni's wind:
This is the twenty-second foot of the mantra;
It performs the rites that have been taught.
The first letter of the mantra
Is fully endowed with the seventh segment;
The second letter with the second,
The fourth letter with the eleventh,
The tenth with the second segment.
It makes mind and mental factors nondual.
The last of the north is to be taken,
The other of Īśāna's corner,
And the water of that same quarter is to be taken,
And again the fourth of the middle;
The letter na too is to be given as a seat;
Likewise the last of the west;
The water of Īśāna's quarter, too, is to be taken,
And again the fire of the spirit's quarter;
The last of the south is to be taken:
This is the twenty-third foot.
The second letter, as to its compartment,
Is beautiful, endowed with the second.
On the third, the third;
On the fifth, too, by that same one;
On the sixth, the second compartment;
Likewise the seventh on the third;
On the eighth, the seventh compartment.

It protects from fierce saṃsāra.
The seed of the second of Agni's quarter,
Likewise the first of the west,
And the letter ra too is given as a seat;
And again the last of the west;
The second of the wind's quarter is to be taken,
The fourth of the north,
The seed of the last of the south,
The letter of the first of the middle,
The fire seed of Nairṛti's quarter,
And again it is Agni's wind:
This is the twenty-fourth foot of the mantra;
It grinds the Lord of Death to dust.
The second letter, as to its compartment,
Is beautiful with the fifth as its seat.
The third, too, with the third;
The fourth with the fifth,
And at its head it is pressed by the empty one;
The eighth, too, with the second.
On the first of the west,
Again the sun is to be made the seat.
On the seed of the second of the wind's quarter, too,
Is the boundary of Īśāna's beyond the ground.
On the letter of the second of the wind's quarter
The letter ra adorns it as its seat;
The last of the north is to be taken;
Likewise Īśāna's ground's end;
The very letter of the second of the wind's quarter;
The later one of Īśāna's, beyond the ground;
And again the second of the wind's quarter
Is to be endowed with the letter ra.
The seed of the first of the middle,
The fire seed of Nairṛti's quarter;
The last of the north is to be taken;
Likewise Īśāna's water;
The great power of wind is to be taken;
The seat of wind is joined,

And just the letter of the first of the west
Is likewise to be taken again;
The water of Īśāna's quarter is to be taken,
And pressing with ra is to be joined;
The letter ra of Nairṛti's quarter is to be taken,
Likewise the seat of the first of the west;
And taking the last of the south
Is the twenty-fifth foot of the secret mantra.
The learned one's first letter
Is endowed with the matrix of the third compartment;
On the second, the second compartment;
On the sixth that same is to be joined;
On the ninth, with the seventh compartment,
Likewise on the ninth with the eleventh;
On the twelfth, with the second segment;
On the fourteenth, too, with that same one;
With the eleventh it is pressed at the head;
On the seventeenth, with the third segment;
On the eighteenth, with the seventh.
It is supreme in working the good of infinite beings,
Possesses the emanation body,
And fulfills every hope.
Take the seed of the second of Agni's quarter,
Likewise the first of the west;
The second of the wind's quarter is to be taken,
And again Īśāna's beyond the ground;
The second of the wind's quarter is to be taken,
The letter of the last of the north,
The seed of the second of the middle,
And the letter of Agni's wind:
This is the twenty-sixth foot of the mantra;
It brings about all the higher knowledges.
On the supreme fifth letter
It is fully endowed with the seat of ra.
As the seat of the sixth letter
The fifth of the compartments is made;
On the seventh, with the second segment.

It grants the bringing of rain and all desires.
Having extracted jñā, the self-arisen,
The letter of the last of the west,
The second of the wind's quarter is to be extracted,
Likewise the third of the middle,
The sun of the rākṣasa's quarter taken,
Then the first of the north,
Which is to be made equally endowed with the seat of ra,
The fourth of the north,
And Agni's wind is to be taken:
This is the twenty-seventh foot.
With the very segment of the second
The third letter is made beautiful,
And the seventh too is done with that same one.
It is supreme innate perfect awakening.
The last of the north is to be taken,
Beyond the ground of Īśāna's corner;
The first of the north is to be taken,
The letter of the second of Agni's quarter;
The first of the west is to be taken,
The sun of Nairṛti's corner,
The seed of the fourth of the west,
The seed of Nairṛti's sun;
The water of Īśāna's quarter, too, is to be taken,
The letter of the second of the wind's quarter,
The ground's end of Īśāna's corner,
The fire seed of Nairṛti's quarter,
And the last of the south is to be taken:
This is the twenty-eighth foot of the mantra.
On the second letter of the mantra
The second compartment is fully joined;
With the third, on the third;
On the fourth, too, with that same one;
On the sixth, with the fifth,
To be joined in the lower part;
On the seventh, the third is to be added;
With the second compartment, on the tenth;

On the eleventh, too, with that same one;
And again with the third, on the twelfth;
On the thirteenth, with the seventh segment.
It is great compassion itself, the desired.

The seed of Vāyu's second,
Īśāna's water joined with the letter ra,
And the last of the north are to be taken.
Then the fire of the spirit's quarter,
The third of the northern quarter,
And again the earth of Vāyu;
To the fourth of the western quarter
The seat of water is joined.
The seed of Vāyu's second,
Or else the last of the west:
This, likewise, is the twenty-ninth,
A mantra word that accomplishes all.
On the third letter of the mantra
It is fully joined with the second compartment;
At the place of the seventh letter
It is fully marked by the eleventh;
On the eighth, the third is added;
Likewise on the ninth, the seventh.
This secret mantra is proclaimed
As the accomplishment and compassion of Citriṇī.
Agni's second, too, is to be taken,
The great Pervading Lord, joined with the sun;
The second of Nairṛti's corner
Has the first of the south as its seat.
The seed of Vāyu's second,
The far earth of Īśāna's corner,
And Nairṛti's sun are to be taken;
The first of the central row, supreme;
The rākṣasa's fire is to be taken;
The first letter of the central row
And Agni's wind are to be taken:
This is the thirtieth foot of the mantra.

On the first letter, O wise one,
The third compartment is applied;
With that same one, on the second;
The sixth is marked by the eleventh;
Again, on the fourth, with the second;
On the sixth, too, with that same one;
And the eighth likewise with it.
This, too, is the abandoning of delusions.
The seed of Vāyu's second,
Īśāna's water joined with the sun,
The seed of the last of the west,
The third of the central row as well,
And once more the last of the west,
The second letter of Nairṛti,
And again that same one, extracted thus;
Likewise the last of the south.
Having taken Vāyu's second,
Then, with the seat of the first of the west,
The fourth of the northern quarter as well,
And likewise the last of the west,
Īśāna's water, too, is to be taken.
The fourth of the western quarter:
That is to be joined with the letter ra.
The seed of Īśāna's water
And the last of the south are to be taken;
And the seed of Agni's wind:
A mantra that brings accomplishment when recited,
Such as has not been, nor will come to be.
On the third letter of the mantra
It is marked by the second compartment;
The fourth, too, is joined with that same one
And adorned with the eleventh;
The fifth, with the second segment;
Likewise on the sixth, with the ninth;
The ninth is marked with the bindu;
Again, on the twelfth, with the third;
On the thirteenth, with the second;

On the fifteenth, too, with that same one.
The thirty-first foot of the mantra
Is the source of all bliss.
Having extracted from the first compartment,
Likewise the first of the west,
One should give it Vajrasattva's seat.
Again the last of the north
And the earth of Vāyu are to be taken;
The fourth letter of the west,
The fire seed of Nairṛti,
And likewise the last of the west.
The first is marked by the eleventh;
The third, by the second compartment;
The fourth and fifth, too, by that same one;
The sixth letter, by the third;
The seventh, by the seventh itself.
The thirty-second foot of the mantra
Is the terrifier of the terrifying goddesses
And that which perfects Vajrasattva.
The seed of Vāyu's second,
The supreme last of the northern quarter,
Nairṛti's Vajrasattva,
The first letter of the central row,
The first of the northern quarter as well,
Likewise the first of the west;
The last of that same one is taken,
And again its third;
Agni's wind, too, is to be taken:
The thirty-third foot.
On the first, the seat of the fifth;
On the second, with the seventh;
The seat of the third, of the fifth
Compartment, is also gathered in;
On the fourth, the seat of the eleventh;
On the fifth, too, with the third segment;
The seventh and eighth, with the second
Compartment, are ever blazing.

Abandoning the aspects of grasped and grasper as well,
It is the guide among mantras.
The first of the central row is to be taken;
Its seat is with Agni's son;
The fourth of the western quarter,
The seed of Īśāna's water,
And the fourth of the central row
Rest firmly on the seat of the sun;
The earth's edge of Īśāna's corner,
Again the fourth of the west,
The fire seed of the spirit's quarter,
Likewise the last of the south,
And Agni's wind are to be taken:
This is the thirty-fourth foot.
The wise one marks the first letter
With the ninth compartment,
The third with the third,
And the sixth and eighth letters with the second.
This secret mantra frees from the lower realms;
The self-arisen sound is proclaimed as well.
The last of the north is to be taken,
The earth's edge of Īśāna's corner;
The first of the central row is to be taken,
The seed of Agni's second,
Likewise the first of the west,
And likewise the great lord of Vāyu;
The first of the central row is to be taken;
To the first letter of the west
The seat of the last of the north is joined;
And again the last of the west:
The thirty-fifth foot,
The emptiness of all phenomena.
At the places of the second and third letters
The second compartment is joined;
On the fifth, with the third segment;
On the seventh and ninth, with the second and the seventh.
The third of the northern quarter,

Likewise the third of the west:
Give it the seat of its fourth;
Likewise the first of the central row,
The first of the southern quarter,
The seed of Vāyu's second,
The earth's edge of Īśāna's corner,
And again Vāyu's second:
That is to be joined with the letter ra.
The mantra known as ka ṣa is extracted.
The last of the south is to be taken,
Again the last of the west,
The seed of Nairṛti's second,
That which has the first of the north as its seat,
Whatever is the third of the west,
The final letter of that same one,
And Agni's wind are to be taken:
The thirty-sixth foot of the mantra.
On the first, the seat of the fifth;
The third is marked by the ninth;
The fourth, too, by the third;
With the second segment, on the ninth;
On the tenth, with the third;
On the eleventh, with the second segment;
On the thirteenth, too, with that same one:
These are the sounds of the wisdom of the bindu.
The form of jñā is fully extracted:
The last letter of the west
And the last of the north are to be taken;
The eastern gatekeeper goddess is held to be the seat.
The first of the western quarter,
Again Īśāna's water;
The second letter of Nairṛti
Is to be marked with the letter ra.
The seed of the first of the north,
Likewise the last of the south,
And Agni's wind are to be taken:
This is the thirty-seventh foot.

On the second, sixth and eighth letters
The second compartment is joined.

The secret mantra of the yoga of blazing nectar
Delights the minds of all people.
Vāyu's second is to be taken;
Īśāna's water is joined with ra;
The seed of the first of the central row,
Joined with its own letter, and the last of the north;
The first of the north, joined with that same one;
The letter of Īśāna's water;
The first of the west, joined with the letter ra;
Likewise the last of that same one;
Agni's wind is to be taken;
And likewise the last of the west:
The thirty-eighth foot of the secret mantra
Brings all afflictions to complete pacification.
On the eighth, it is to be joined
With the second segment; with the seventh, on the tenth.
The third of the northern quarter,
The third of the western quarter as well,
And the last of that same one are taken;
Likewise the first of the central row,
The seed of the rākṣasa's fire,
And the seed of Agni's wind.
The first letter of the mantra
Is marked by the eleventh,
And the wise one joins the fifth letter
With the second segment.
It is the summoning secret mantra that abandons
All habitual tendencies, the very nature of mind;
This foot of the secret mantra of the wise
Is forty less one.
The seed of Vāyu's second,
Īśāna's water joined with ra,
And, having extracted that same one again,
The first letter of the central row;

On the earth of Vāyu's corner,
Again the seat of the first of the north;
The fourth of the northern quarter,
The middle letter of the east,
And the last of the south are to be taken;
Likewise the first of the central row,
The seed of the rākṣasa's fire,
And the seed of Agni's wind:
The fortieth foot of the mantra,
Which through its letters accomplishes aims just as they are.
On the third letter of the mantra
The third compartment is joined,
And the wise one marks the sixth letter
With the eleventh compartment;
On the tenth, with the second compartment:
The lord who accomplishes manifold aims.
The last of the north is to be taken,
The third of the southern quarter,
And Īśāna's water is to be taken;
From Vāyu's corner, the earth;
And, having extracted that same one again,
On the third of the central row,
That which has the last of the west as its seat,
The second letter of Agni,
The fire seed of Nairṛti,
And again that same one is to be extracted;
Agni's wind is to be taken:
This is the forty-first foot of the mantra.
The first is marked with the seat
Of the fifth compartment and with the bindu;
The second, too, by the second compartment;
On the fourth, by the fourth;
On the eighth, too, by that same one;
On the ninth, by the second segment.
The first of the northern quarter,
The rākṣasa's lord of the sun,
And the first of the central row are taken;

Then that which has Indra's gate as its seat,
The first of the western quarter,
The seed of Agni's wind,
And the first of the west, once taken,
Mounted upon Vajrasattva.
The last of the north is to be taken;
The first letter of the west,
With ra as the seat upon that same one;
Likewise the last of the west,
The seed of Agni's second,
Again the last of the west,
And Agni's wind are to be taken:
This is the forty-second foot.
On the fifth, it is marked by the eleventh;
On the seventh, too, by that same one;
On the ninth, by the eleventh and the second segment.
This secret mantra is declared the great destroyer.
The last of the north is to be taken,
The earth's edge of Īśāna's corner,
And the sun of the spirit's corner;
That known as ka ṣa is itself extracted;
The seed of the first of the central row,
The rākṣasa's son of fire,
And Agni's wind, too, are to be taken:
This is the forty-third foot.
On the second, the fourth and the sixth
The second segment is joined.
As the essence of protecting the yogin
It is to be known from the letters.
The third of the western quarter;
And again, to Nairṛti's second
The first of the south is given as its seat;
Likewise the last of the west;
Īśāna's water is to be taken;
Again the third of the west,
The earth of Vāyu's corner,
And likewise the last of the west:

The forty-fourth foot,
For those who commit the five deeds of immediate retribution.
The Pervading Lord: the first is beautified
By the seat of the fifth segment;
The second is joined with the second segment;
And again on the third,
With the second segment and the bindu;
With the third, on the fourth letter;
Likewise on the fifth and seventh,
With the second and seventh compartments.
The fourth of the western quarter,
The fire seed of Nairṛti
That has the last of the north as its seat,
The fourth of the western quarter,
And Agni's wind are to be taken;
The first letter of the central row,
Nairṛti's son of fire,
And again Agni's wind.
The second letter of the mantra
Is marked by the ninth compartment,
And again the sixth letter
Is joined with the second compartment:
This mantra, the basis of all phenomena,
Is the forty-fifth foot.
Having taken the first of the central row,
It is illuminated by the seat of the sun.
The fourth of the western quarter;
On the letter of Vāyu's second,
That which has the second of the north as its seat;
Nairṛti's Vajrasattva;
Vāyu's second is taken,
Having the second of the north as its seat;
The spirit's son of fire,
Likewise the last of the south,
And Agni's wind are to be taken:
This is the forty-sixth foot.
The first letter is beautified

By being marked with the ninth compartment;
On the third, fifth and seventh
The second segment is joined.
Having extracted the third compartment,
On the third of the western quarter,
Joined with the seat of the sun;
The third of the eastern quarter,
The earth of Vāyu's corner,
The second letter of that same one,
Joined with the letter ra, and Īśāna's water;
The letter of Vāyu's second;
On the very first of the west,
That which has Īśāna's water as its seat;
On the first of the western quarter, too,
The seat is the last of the north;
And the last of the west, once taken,
Is the forty-seventh foot.
On the first, being marked by the eleventh
Is the supreme of beauty;
On the third, with the second;
On the eighth, too, with that same one;
On the tenth, with the seventh itself:
The mantra is the sameness of all grounds.
On the third of the central row
The letter ra is to be joined;
On the seed of Vāyu's second,
Then, with the seat of the first of the west,
Īśāna's water is to be taken;
The third of the western quarter
And the first of the north are taken,
To be illuminated by the seat of the sun;
Īśāna's water is to be taken;
The third of the western quarter
And the last of the north are to be taken;
The earth's edge of Īśāna's corner
And the last of the north are to be taken;
And the first letter of the west.

On the third letter of the mantra
It is joined with the second compartment;
On the sixth, too, that same one is joined;
On the ninth, too, with that same one;
On the eleventh the seventh is joined.
The perfection of wisdom itself,
The forty-eighth foot of the secret mantra,
Was spoken by the Hero.
All the bhūtas on the earth,
And gods, nāgas and the rest, become terrified.
The power of this secret mantra
Has never been, nor will it ever come to be, elsewhere.
Buddhas, bodhisattvas and the rest,
When the secret mantra is spoken with their names,
Are exceedingly pleased, as by a hundred thousand recitations,
And grant accomplishments.
With the syllable oṃ at the beginning of every mantra,
And likewise hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ at the end,
Joined to each of the feet,
They are recited short and long.
Gods and world protectors,
Yakṣas, Indra and universal monarchs,
And the beings born from the four modes of birth,
And the guide, gentle Vajrasattva,
Are accomplished by mere recitation;
They are also accomplished when the mantrin reads it aloud.
The yoginīs, in the order of their families,
Are to be known at the time of conduct.
In order at the beginning and end of the letters,
And on each and every foot as well:
In order to destroy all obstructors
It is to be recited ten thousand times.

This is the root mantra.

From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the sixteenth chapter, on the characteristics of the rite of extracting the root mantra, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then something further is to be explained with care:
The armor of embodied beings.
At the heart of Vajrasattva
The seal is to be set through union with the āli.
The wisdom of the vajra essence
And the being that is one with space:
The heart is subtle consciousness;
The āli is Caṇḍī, the consort,
And the union, too, is called unchanging.
In this way all the faculties are sealed.
Therefore the protection, too, is the letters oṃ ha,
The letter that is forever indestructible.
The rest, at the end of uttering Vairocana,
Is the sound that comes from the movement of the vajra.
Therefore, just as it is clearly
Uttered, the form arisen from that utterance
Is in the center of the heart of human beings:
The maṇḍala whose nature is thirty-seven.
Embraced by Vajravārāhī as well,
That protection in the wheel of the navel
Is the form of the mantra oṃ baṃ.
The beautiful central one and the vajra holder:
This union is the great protection,
Arisen perfectly at the very first, without precedent.
The secret mantra of all the wheels, too,
Which grants every accomplishment, I shall explain:
paṃ hā bāṃ hi bi hī bī hu bu hū bū he be hai bai ho bo hau bau haṃ baṃ haḥ baḥ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ svāhā svāhā
By the nature of short and long,
All is of the nature of wisdom and means.
When Vajravārāhī

Abides in the form of the chief goddess,
The letters of the mantra
Beginning with oṃ paṃ are to be bestowed.
The wheel of wisdom is the place of birth,
And the seat, too, is held to be secret.
All turns into the form of bliss:
Stable bliss and moving bliss,
White bliss and black bliss,
Likewise bliss born everywhere,
The bliss of wisdom and the bliss of means;
Vajrasattva is remembered as bliss.
Self-arisen bliss, for human beings,
Is in oneself as the maṇḍala in the Kṛta age.
This protection, in the tantra of the Kṛta age,
Is what brings forth the Kṛta age itself.
Know the various worlds as the Kṛta age,
And likewise the various realms as the Kṛta age;
In the various world realms
All the ages are to be known in this way.
At a single time the Kṛta and the other ages
Do not arise in the world realms.
By having served the Blessed One,
One lives pervaded everywhere by bliss.
Where it is the age of strife, there is the Kṛta age;
Where it is the Kṛta age, there is the age of strife;
There too are the Tretā and the Dvāpara,
Each one paired with a Dvāpara.
The yoga tantras are thirty-six,
And they arose from the gathering of all without remainder.
Through the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the seventeenth chapter, the rite characterizing the generation of the armor of Vajrasattva and Vārāhī, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then, once more, the protection of armor
Belonging to Vairocana:
The seal is set at the head, and its
Secret mantra is namaḥ hi itself.
At the time of going upward, the yogin
Should know, at each one's proper time,
The actions arising from whatever bliss.
The mantra that protects manifestly, with devotion,
Is to be applied to the stainless head:
This is the wheel of great bliss.
It is to be known as the seat of yoga,
Likewise embraced by Yamī.
The self born from the mantra oṃ yaṃ,
Through the cause that is wisdom and means:
yā ro, mī ca, nī ni:
In this way the elements are to be joined.
The body and all the rest dissolve,
And arise as pair upon pair.
Therefore the wisdom of the third
Arises as Yamī.
The means of bliss, which is like transference,
Comes from the single quarter of the Tretā age.
Wherever appearance is desired,
Vairocana himself goes there.
The form in the aspect of the chief
Is again among the thirty-seven.
Arisen from the letters of the mantras,
It is to be known in the center of the forehead.
Here, of the mantras explained before,
Whatever is the first letter of each,
All the mantras of this one, in order,
Are to be known as that one's and that one's.
All the rest are equal:
Meditation and recitation are supreme.
All is neither existent nor yet nonexistent;
It goes everywhere, yet it is not everything.
By illusion all are deluded;
By illusion itself the wise are freed.

Beneficial is illusion, beneficial is wisdom,
And the generation of the mind of awakening is beneficial too.
Such is the meaning of namaḥ hi.
O wise one, the rest is bliss:
Because Vairocana comes to blaze,
That bliss is Vairocana's.
The knowledge-woman who subdues Yama:
She is spoken of as Yamī.
Because, by keeping this protection in mind,
One carries out one's tasks at all times.
The wisdom of the heart and the forehead
Has the characteristic of nondual wisdom.
For the great purpose of the yoginīs
All the tantras were brought forth.
In all the tantras there is No other yoga that purifies;
The great yoga of this tantra
Is the purifier in all the tantras.
With Yamī, the chief goddess of the maṇḍala,
Then, again, the activity:
Liberation from entering the womb,
And the two, birth and transference:
These are Yamī and Vairocana.
There form and the formless come about;
Wisdom that has both pleasure and pain;
The divine substance is of one taste with the mudrā.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the eighteenth chapter, the rite of the armor protection of Vairocana and the others, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then the armor protection
Of Padmanarteśvara was declared:
The fire of desire, as though blazing,
Going to the crown of the head, is Mahābala;

With the mantra letters svāhā hūṃ,
And through the illusion of the deluding goddess, hriṃ moṃ,
The nature of wisdom and means
Is the lord of the wheel of space.

In the lotus of the mouth the deluding goddess, too,
Protects what has taste and what has none.
When tongue and tongue come together,
The yogin, tasting that drop,
When supreme joy has arisen,
Finds no one who has wisdom, and no one joined with it.
Through relying on men and women,
What is called discipline is one's own mind.
The assemblies of joyful speech
Come about through the cause of proclaiming the Dharma.
The aperture of the mind of awakening:
There the breath moves.
Various kinds of apertures are explained;
Through them the breath manifestly moves.
To all the apertures hriṃ is to be given:
Unchanging, supremely peaceful.
moṃ yaṃ is the field, at the head,
Gathering from the supreme unchanging.
Delusion, which binds one to existence,
Leads one fully onto the true path;
Therefore she is known as the Deluding Goddess,
The destroyer of the wheel of existence.
There is no existence, nor any supreme existence:
That is declared to be union.
Through the application of that very mantra,
The maṇḍala whose nature is thirty-seven,
The chief, hero or goddess,
At the crown of the head and in the center of the mouth,
Gives protection everywhere
And destroys mere conceptual thought.
The lotus is ultimate wisdom,
The form of the awakening of the buddhas;

The relative knower and known
Are what is called the Lord of Dance.
The form of the bodhisattvas:
Through awakening itself all is realized.
Because every emanation becomes deluded,
The goddess becomes the Deluding Goddess.
The lotus becomes the source of phenomena;
The Lord of Dance is the vajra;
The Lord is to be known as the innate;
The mind of awakening is movement.
Being without intrinsic nature, and permanent bliss:
That is declared to be union.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the nineteenth chapter, establishing the protective armor mantras of Padmanarteśvara and the others, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then the protection of Heruka,
The armor, will be explained once more.
It comes to the throat and the shoulders,
And the yoginī is at the head.
bau ṣa ṭa he, the peerless mantra,
Protects the elements and what arises from the elements.
hreṃ hriṃ is the mantra of the All-Moving Goddess;
Therefore it is of the nature of wisdom and means.
he is the yoga whose nature is mind;
Again, ru is of the nature of speech;
ka is the yoga of the very nature of body.
Beneath the earth, upon the earth, and the higher world:
At the beginning, end and middle of bliss,
bau ṣa ṭa he are the seeds;
hreṃ hriṃ are to be known as below and above.
The life wind is the movement.
Exhaling, growing familiar with joy,
And the time of practicing the vase breath:

At that time the wheel
Is to be known as having the nature of thirty-seven.
Thus, for the four times,
It is held to be in its proper order.
Through the yoga of that very mantra
Worship becomes supremely wondrous.
Thus, of the eight consciousnesses,
One, two, three and five
Are realized in their proper order
Through the yoga of the four chapters.
The conduct tantra arose
In the third chapter,
And the action tantra in the fourth chapter.
The tantra is self-movement,
And the seat of suchness, once arisen,
Is declared again in the third;
In the fourth, the seat of another
Having arisen, wisdom goes beyond.
The protection of the four classes of beings,
Gods, humans, spirits
And nāgas, is to be known by the wise
As belonging to those who range through all that can be known.
Their respective natures and times,
Contained within the Fortunate Eon:
The tathāgatas do not pass away,
And again, not passing away, they are not born.
Having come to know their own nature,
Beings become their own nature.
The seventy-two views
Arise through the action of the All-Moving Goddess:
The five views of the śrāvakas,
The two views of the pratyekabuddhas,
The seven of the Yogācāras,
The eight of the supreme Mādhyamikas,
The sixteen of the Perfections,
And the thirty-six of the Secret Mantra Vehicle,
Less two, those of the seventh and the eighth:

All of them, too, are the Mantra Vehicle.
The conduct of the channels, which has a root,
Is to be known through the kindness of the Guru.
The Heruka goddess serves as the root,
Abiding in the middle between existence and nirvāṇa.
Through the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the twentieth chapter, on the rite of the protective armor of Heruka and the others, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then the protection of Vajrasūrya
Is to be explained.
With this mantra, hūṃ hūṃ ho,
In the center of the eye faculty:
Through the application of the two syllables hūṃ
All the views come to be seen.
Through wisdom, consciousness and tears
Dissolving below and above,
The seventy-two views
Come to be seen at a single time.
In the aperture of the throat, five;
In the one who has the secret vajra, two;
Seven are declared to be at the heart;
Eight in the expanse of the brain;
Sixteen come to be at the crown protuberance;
Thirty-six in the maṇḍala of the navel.
All are generated by one's own karma;
Here one comes to see one's own view.
This is my seat;
It is seen as the three worlds.
Through the syllable ho, of all the sattva goddesses,
The infinite buddha fields
Become pervaded by Vajrasūrya;
Therefore it protects the eye.
Embraced by the All-Terrifying Goddess,

Who proclaims the sound of the secret mantra hūṃ hūṃ,
The terror, through the two letters,
Brings all evil deeds to an end.
In the center of the maṇḍala whose nature is thirty-seven
The two are to be meditated upon.
Formerly, through the form of the secret mantra,
All the views come to arise.
Through the view of each one,
Protection is given to it.
Space is filled with yoginīs,
And again there is innate perfect awakening.
The yoginī is the innate form;
The innate letter is the yoginī;
The yoginī devours the innate,
And again the yoginī comes to be devoured.
The form of the buddha is the yoginī,
She who has the form of the vajra holder;
The form of the sacred place is the yoginī;
The deed and the doer are that very one.
It grants the sight of what is to be accomplished
To one who meditates on the letters of the armor.

Whatever the practitioner desires,
That they will grant.
Those sentient beings who do not meditate on this method
Will become deluded.
Merely by arranging the letters,
One will perform all the supreme rites.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This was the twenty-first chapter, on the rite of armor protection of Vajrasūrya and the others, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next, the protection of Paramāśva,
Which accomplishes every task and is auspicious.
Through the yoga of the mantra phaṭ haṃ,

All around, at the limits of head and feet,
And in the center of the ūrṇā, they should be placed.
At the center of the crown is the yoginī;
On the head, knowing her as the All-Terrifying One,
Called "all words" and "space,"
The secret mantra of Caṇḍī is phaṭ phaṭ,
Held to be the sovereign lady of the wisdom seat.
Even in the absorptions of Paramāśva,
What need is there to speak of the accomplishments of yoga?
The yogin tears apart saṃsāra,
And again nirvāṇa too is rent asunder.
Even the concept called "wisdom"
The mantrin rends through nonduality.
If the omniscient syllable haṃ is not present,
What need is there to speak of all people?
There is the one who pays honor,
And there is the one who subdues the senses;
Endowed with the qualities of Caṇḍī's yoga,
That is proclaimed to be nectar.
It is blissful, without doubt,
Because all the senses have been devoured.
In the center of the maṇḍala taught before
Are the Hero and the yoginī.
All the mantras and the rest
Are to be done by all, everywhere.
One devours by oneself the habitual tendencies of karma,
Until even the subtle ones are wholly destroyed.
When all evil has been set ablaze,
It passes away, just like cotton.
She is to be known as the Fierce-Making One,
Arisen from the family of Vārāhī.
Through the stars reckoned by the moon,
The lord of the stars melts with compassion.
Again, to explain it in brief:
The six yoginīs
And the heroes are inseparable, nondual.
I shall explain the characteristics of the purpose.

The twelve yogins and yoginīs
Are to be known, each in its own place;
There one should make them dance.
The characteristic of innate perfect awakening,
The bliss of all embodied beings,
Is to be known from the time of the two empowerments.
By making the six openings into the vase,
One attains a bliss like that.
Three openings below the navel,
Likewise three above it,
Going and coming, two by two:
So too the twelve armors there.
Through the characteristics of the senses and their objects,
The very nature of things dances there.
The yogin comes to drink the nectar itself,
Eating the elements of material things;
By gazing at the sign above and below,
He sports as the innate self.
Through the practice of the six recollections,
This is what the practitioner is to do.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This was the twenty-second chapter, on the rite of armor protection of Paramāśva and the others, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next I shall explain the reality of the torma,
In due order, just as it is.
Within the center of the source of phenomena,
One should give the torma according to the rite.
The lord of yogins, in the form of a ḍāka,
Again protects with the armor and the rest.
Then too one should focus on the absorption.
The lotus vessel should be set down,
And made into the nature of outer and inner.
The place of birth is sought in the avadhūtīr;

The openings below and above the navel
Are to be imagined as the lotus vessel.
The nectars of the five spaces
Should all be made of one taste.
The aggregates are ge ku da ha na;
The sense sources are all the meats.
They are kindled by the mind of bliss
And heated by the fire of desire.
The supreme purification is in oneself;
Again they are made into nectar.
There, continually with the mudrā of meditation,
One should bless them as the three bodies.
Through the application of mantra and mudrā,
One should invite the ḍākinīs.
Knot the fingertips firmly together,
Join the tips of the middle fingers, the thumbs as a vajra;
Having pressed them firmly together,
Place them at the forehead,
And while reciting repeatedly, circle them.
Pressing down with the feet and looking upward:
When the mantrin does this, it is supreme.
With the sound of the syllable phe at the crown,
One should summon the heroes and yoginīs
Dwelling in the world systems of the ten directions.
Through the joining of left and right,
One should display the mudrā at the heart.
Circling with the two hands, left and right,
Is the bliss of the ḍākinīs.
oṃ āralli ho jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ bajraḍākaḍākinyā samayastvaṃ dṛśya heḥ
Open the vajra palms upward;
At midnight one should give the torma.
oṃ kha kha khāhi khāhi sarba yakṣa rākṣasa bhūta preta piśāconmādāpasmara ḍākaḍākinyādaya imaṃ bagrīhṇantu sarba siddhimme prayacchantu yathaibaṃ yatheṣṭaṃ bhuñjatha jighratha pībatha mātikramatha mama sarbakartāya saṅsukhaṃ biśuddhaye mama sāhāyika bhavantu hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svāhā
As long as the mantra is engaged,

Through holding the vase breath one remains unmoving.
One attains it without interruption;
What need even to wish for the bliss born of joy?
The torma feast of the heroes,
And likewise for the yoginīs:
Through the arrangement of the great maṇḍala,
One should make the Guru the principal.
Whatever the names of the yoginīs,
And likewise those of the heroes,
To each of them meat is offered,
And the intoxicant that grants great bliss.
The circle should be formally convened,
Or else in pairs with the mantrin.
The seat is a tiger skin;
The feast is held upon a human skin.
There is drinking from the great vessels,
By the mantrin with loosened hair.
The vessel is to be tended by a yoginī,
Or else by a young maiden.
Likewise the circle of the yoginīs
Is formed by the heroes;
At the places of the heroes,
The vessel is tended by a young maiden.
Silk streamers and crowns,
Likewise scents of many kinds,
Singing, dancing, cymbals,
The six-stringed instrument and the rest, and the lowly ones,
And all the torma vessels:
The mantrin should set them out there, beginning from the east,
Together with all the liquor
And the vessels of offering.
The object of worship, the worship, the cause of worship,
And the worshiper are mutual.
The circle is made of one's own disciples,
Or else of others in meditative equipoise.

The mantrin should exclude all those without good fortune,
And the non-Buddhists (tīrthikas) and the like.
All beings are by nature supreme joy;
Dwell in the nature of the circle of the yoginīs!
are re re re, deluded cattle do not know this.
Having taken the innate beautiful one, enjoy great bliss!
śambu. All beings of the three worlds without exception are of the nature of buddha;
Sport together with the maiden of compassion!
are. Whoever has not meditated on the ultimate
Will not attain buddhahood.
are. Know inner and outer to be without division!
Then one is able to liberate the whole world.
are. All these and the rest
Are to be sung here and there as fits.
In accordance with my tantra and realization,
With the mantrin's permission, songs should be sung.
Having paid homage to him,
One should also dance and sing.
The vessel is offered into the lotus hand
By the one who keeps the observance himself.
It is to be held in the lotus hand
And given by that very one.
The first portions of liquor for the yoginīs
Should be collected separately.
The leftovers of what has been eaten
Should be given to all the bhūtas.
According to one's true means,
A fee is offered to them.
This should be done each day,
Or else month by month.
In order to keep the commitment,
It should be done on one day each year.
There the verses of giving should be recited,
And words of auspiciousness spoken as well:

You have worshiped the assembled ḍākinīs,
And served food and drink to the heroes;

May you always have protection and supreme prosperity,
Or else the full achievement of your heart's desires.
In all your births, may you go
Into the midst of the accomplished world of the supreme Sugatas.
By worshiping the nondual heroes, in this very life
May your evil be exhausted and the accomplishment of mudrā arise.

From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This was the twenty-third chapter, on the rite of the torma and the worship of the circle, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next I shall fully explain something further:
Laying the lines of the maṇḍala,
The hearth for the fire offering, and likewise
The worship of the master himself.
On ground that is level,
The maṇḍala is eight cubits,
On a mountaintop or the like,
Or on the surface of pure ground.
There one should dig down to knee depth;
Then, having dug about a span further,
It should be filled with water,
And as long as it has not drained away,
For that long the wise one
Should recite the root mantra here.
It becomes the house of the yogin,
And all births will be burned away.
There the maṇḍala should be drawn,
And the two lines laid down.
On both sides of the brahmā line,
Thirty-two are laid on each.
Then, by laying its center line,
The lines come to sixty-four.
In their middle, equal to them,
They are laid out once again.

In short, for the four circles
There are two hundred fifty-six.
From the sixteen sections on all sides,
The drawing is made with colored pigments.
With what remains, by the measure of the door,
One makes the central lotus and the rest.
The central lotus, however,
Is to be made twelve finger-widths.
For three of the four circles,
Three sections each are made.
The wise should know that each section
Measures two cubits.
The cord of five colors
Is therefore twice the maṇḍala.
In its thickness, measured from the door,
It is twenty less one.
With sweet fragrances and incense,
One should perfume the wisdom cord.
Having given the great torma,
Afterward perform the work of the lines here, with recitation.
Vajra pegs are set in the ground
By the wise one with enthusiasm.
One's own disciple is made to hold the line;
The mantrin holds it
With the left fist at the navel,
And then it is snapped above.
In the same way, the laying of the lines
Should be done counterclockwise.
On entering and on going out,
One gives the torma and steps across.
While reciting the root mantra,
The drawing should be raised into the sky.
The mantrin who knows outer and inner
Should drink the nectar.
The earth is made to depart into the sky,
And then summoned back to that very place.
With flowers of every kind,

One dances with vajra steps.
One brandishes the vajra in the hand
And sports with the mother and the other yoginīs.
All of these, the curved knives and the emblems,
Are to be made by those of the maṇḍala.
Having made offerings of every kind,
The master, bathed in scented water,
Wearing garments stainless,
Washed and well perfumed,
Should loudly sound the bell,
While the yoginīs sing songs,
With cymbals and vessels of many kinds,
And a clamor of sound resounds.
Empowerment is to be bestowed
On one's own disciples, outer and secret,
In a place free of people,
Avoiding kings, thieves and the like.
Here, through the many faults of the rite,
One will fall into Avīci and the other hells.
Now the hearths of the fire offerings
For pacifying, enriching and the rest:
A round hearth is for pacifying;
A square one is for enriching;
A triangular one is for subjugating;
A six-cornered one is for fierce rites;
A seven-cornered one is for expelling;
An eight-cornered one is for causing enmity;
A nine-cornered one is for paralyzing;
A five-cornered one is for killing;
And a ten-cornered one is for all rites.
The color is according to its own lord;
The emblem that belongs to its own lord
Is placed at the center of the hearths:
Wheel, lotus, vajra and curved knife,
Sword, jewel, crossed vajra,
Arrow and bow; and likewise on the hearths
Garlands of these are made.

One cubit and two cubits,
Half a cubit and half of that,
Then again two cubits, three and four,
Five, six, seven, eight and nine,
And ten cubits are rightly taught
For all the hearths, in their proper order.
With the kindling sticks and the substances,
The burnt offerings and all the flowers,
And with the applications of outer, inner and self,
Each performs its own rite.
The rites explained in the Abhidhāna,
With the root mantra and all the rest,
And the rites of their procedures
Are made known throughout all the tantras.

I shall explain just a little;
I shall explain what is taught in all the tantras.
The round hearth arises at the navel;
At the heart is the square one;
At the opening of the jewel, the six-cornered;
At the throat, the seven-cornered;
The eight-cornered is at the head;
The nine-cornered is between the brows;
At the uṣṇīṣa is the five-cornered;
And the ten-cornered is at the forehead.
Having roots that arise from the wind,
All the elements, as the substances to be burned,
Are to be burned in the flowing of the wind.
At that very time the outer rite
Is, for one of intelligence, a lesser rite.
lalanā and rasanā
Are likewise the two ladles, the filling ladle and the pouring ladle;
The vessel of butter is the abadhūtī,
And the hearths lie at intervals along it.
The fire offering for all rites
Is performed in this world;
There all the substances

Should be burned without hesitation.
The filling ladle is one cubit long,
And four finger-widths across;
In it one hollows out two finger-widths.
The groove of the spout is half a finger-width.
In the middle are a vajra and a lotus,
And the groove of the spout bears a vajra.
At the base is a vajra of six finger-widths,
On top of the handle, for the filling ladle and the rest.
The pouring ladle too is of that measure,
And on top it is like a lotus petal.
As for the measure of the hearths,
They are one cubit or two cubits,
Dug downward to half of that;
This is taught for all ten.
At the beginning, in the middle and at the end,
The mantrin offers the full oblation.
The fire is to be summoned,
And it is placed on a bundle of kuśa grass.
Arghya water, water for the feet and water for the mouth,
Having been consecrated in their various ways, are offered.
There three bowls of mother-of-pearl
Are set upon leaves.
A vessel of milk is also set down,
And then a cloth is laid upon it.
On the ground dūrba grass is spread,
First with its tips turned to the front.
In every case on the right side,
There the substances are to be placed.
Three lines are drawn on the ground,
With a single door in the west.
All the things that are to be accomplished,
And people beginning with the king, are to be brought in.
In order to make all of them close,
Offerings are made to the vajra guru.
One should visualize the four-armed sage
With staff, hearth, water pot

And rosary, riding on a ram,
And red in color.
oṃ ehyehi agnaye raṃ sarba siddhimme prayaccha jvala jvala ho mahārīṣi sarba deba mukha pūri asmin sannihito bhava hūṃ
This is the mantra for inviting the fire god.
oṃ āḥ pādyaṃ hutāsanāya grihṇa hūṃ
This is the mantra of the water for the feet.
oṃ baṃ ācamanaṃ ṛṣaye prayaccha hūṃ
This is the mantra of the water for the mouth.
hūṃ ḍākaḍākini samayārghaṃ dadāmi hūṃ hūṃ raṃ raṃ svāhā
This is the mantra of the arghya water.
oṃ debaṛṣi parama saugata kāruṇikā jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ ha ha daha daha paca paca jvala jvala hana hana hūṃ hūṃ
This is the mantra for pleasing the fire.
For all the substances, one should offer them with the syllable oṃ and āḥ, with the name properly joined in the middle, and at the end the syllables hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ and svāhā. This is the mantra of all the substances.
One should meditate on the maṇḍala, together with its principal,
At the heart of the sage.
The commitment fire is completed from raṃ;
The wisdom fire god is equal to it.
Or else one meditates on it blazing,
In the colors for pacifying and the rest.
One imagines the fire dissolving into it.
The mantrin should know the distinctions of light
As the fire of each appearance.
Through the yoga of the nondual aspect,
Of the yogin who is one with the fire god,
The wise one should perform it.
Just as the inner wisdom of oneself is,
So too should the outer be made,
For the sake of the continuum of the accumulation of merit
And to complete the accumulation of wisdom.
There caru should be prepared,
And offered to the fire as food;
One partakes of a little oneself,
And gives some to the patrons as well.

Beautiful maidens dance,
And cymbals of many kinds are played.
With great persons adorned
With ornaments of many kinds, as if at play,
Joyfully with flowers, incense and the like,
It is done in the midst of the gathering.
tambula is given to everyone,
Things that delight them are given.
The remainder, clothing and tooth powder,
And the full oblation are to be given.
A measure of coin, seating in rows, tooth powder,
And water for the mouth come at the end.
The wisdom fire is requested to depart,
And food is offered with recitation of the mantra.
oṃ agnaye sarba santoṣaṇaṃ kuru me yathā kāle siddhi dā gacchatu hūṃ hūṃ svāhā
This is the mantra for requesting the fire to depart.
Whatever little was lacking, in liquor or the rest,
Please forgive all of it.
The grain left over from everything
Should all be burned in the hearth.
Thus the lines of the maṇḍala have been taught in brief,
And the hearth and the supreme rite of the fire offering.
The master who is to be worshiped,
Having been truly regarded as Vajradhara,
Is offered pearls, gold and jewels,
Elephants, horses, land and provinces,
Male and female servants and retinues,
A wife perfect in every way,
Many pairs of garments,
And whatever little pleases him, or land;
Free of the view of a self,
One should offer them and gratify the lord.
With oneself and all one's possessions,
Having prostrated, one should offer.
Flowers, incense and all the rest
Should be offered before the Teacher.

The maṇḍal made in front
Is then of this ninefold nature:
In the center is the vajra guru;
In front is the All-Beautiful Lady;
In the north, the Lady of Supreme Joy;
In the west, the Lady Most Playful;
In the south, the Vajra Lady of Delight;
And Compassion and the others are in the four corners.
oṃ bajrasatva gurupādebhyaḥ sarba satvopakāraṇāya svāhā
For the deities of the maṇḍala, their own names
Are spoken first, with svāhā at the end.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This was the twenty-fourth chapter, called the rite of the maṇḍala, the fire offering and the worship of the master, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next I shall explain the consecration
That delivers from the terrors of saṃsāra.
In this king of yoginī tantras,
All the requisites
Should always be kept by the master,
And likewise the other things fit to be done,
In order to guard against the censure of the world.
Again, the consecration arisen from intrinsic nature
Is to be understood as illusion.
A cast image or a painted scroll:
One projects one's own form outward.
Whatever deity arises at whatever time
As the deity specially abiding there,
Its form is the form of that time.

It is the outflowing of the nature of bliss:
The first letter of whatever seed
Arises in the nature of the moving breath,
From the union of wind and consciousness.

Then, at that time, whatever form it takes Accomplishes every perfection.
Without nondual wisdom inseparable from it,
A cast image is not consecrated.
From nondual wisdom
The consecration of those in saṃsāra is made.
For those who long for the bliss of liberation,
Here is the great bliss of bliss.
Abiding in the joy of the yoginī,
One should make it arise from that.
On a cast image or a painted image,
The one of true knowledge anoints the essences.
With the substances heated
Together with the five nectars, one bathes it.
The intelligent one sets down the vase.
The deity together with the maṇḍala's retinue,
The sacred Dharma and all the rest,
Are within the source of phenomena;
In whatever places they reside,
They are consecrated at all times.
Having accomplished the place of the syllable e,
The syllable baṃ is Vajrasattva;
There, where the syllable ma abides,
The fourth, without beginning, is known as yā.
"Heard" and "one" are the meaning of the mantra,
Which has the mantra of symbolic letters.
"At a time" is the Blessed One himself,
Dwelling, yet not abiding anywhere.
The words "all the tathāgatas"
Are equal to the expanse of phenomena.
By the words "body, speech and mind,"
He is the lord of the yoginīs and of no others.
"In the bhagas" means the five classes of tantra,
From Kriyā and the rest up to the Unsurpassed at the end.
"Was dwelling": how so?
Consecrated, or not consecrated.
Having delivered sentient beings,

Consecration is found in all the tantras.
When, through special devotion, nonduality
Is consecrated in the yoginī tantra,
Having made the two, the act and its object,
It is nonetheless self-aware:
The great wisdom of self-awareness,
The deity whose nature is self-awareness.
Consecration from the nature of self-awareness
Is highly praised.
Out of loving concern for people,
The rest too should be explained in the same way.
This is the purity of the deities
Of the maṇḍala of true wisdom.
The seventy-two arms
Are declared to be the purity of the tantras.
The four arms are held to be the purity
Of the four, laughing and the rest.
As for the purity of the faces,
Sixteen are innate perfect awakening;
The seventeenth face is explained as mentation.
Existence and nirvāṇa are the two feet.
The purity of all the ornaments
Is the Dharma and those born of the Dharma.
The rest are the purity of the world systems,
Both clear and unclear.
The purity of the root mantra and the rest
Reveals the meaning of all the vehicles.
The vajra, the lotus and all the rest
Here proclaim the womb-born.
All the purities of the maṇḍala
Teach the Dharma in summary.
The purity of the twelve links
Is the twelve wheel-turning kings.
The spaces between the sixteen parts
Should be known as the purity of the charnel grounds.
Whatever tantra has arisen from me
Should all be known as purity.

All who possess omniscient wisdom
Are declared to be its purity.
Substance, perception itself and wisdom:
The purity of naming
Those who speak of the individual wisdoms
Is the tantra of yogins and yoginīs.
All beings are like illusions;
The circle of the maṇḍala is in the manner of illusion;
What is taught is self-aware wisdom,
Declared in each and every case.
The characteristics of the tenet of illusion
Should all be learned from the guru's mouth.
Progressing by means of the oral instructions,
At each juncture there is great bliss.
Whatever purity there is at that time,
These come from the domain of the buddhas.
Therefore the root secret mantra too
Arises for one who desires bliss.
By being assigned to each letter,
They become the forms of things.
The secret mantra of Vārāhī has been explained:
All things are its purity.
The senses and their objects being untrue,
For those who apply the reality of one taste,
It becomes the purity of the dharmakāya.
Speech is the sambhogakāya;
Mind is the nirmāṇakāya;
And body is the innate kāya.
Again there, the four, the Stainless and the rest,
Are held to be pure.
The great purity of the armor mantra
Is the conduct of all yoga.
As the heart mantra and the near-heart mantra,
Yogin and yoginī are in union.
The elements and what has arisen from the elements, gathered together,
Become the purity of the torma mantra.
The purity of the mantra of Sumbha

Is driving the dagger into all concepts.
The purity of the various rites:
Its purity is ultimate.
The deities of all the elements
Become the purity of skin, flesh and the rest.
What need is there for what is not stated here?
All bliss is utterly pure.
Whatever appears in the pathways of the senses,
Each by its own nature,
Through the supremely beneficial yoga,
Experience all as the nature of buddha.
This is to be known as the supreme purity;
The purity of others is not spoken of.
In the views of Īśvara and the rest,
It should be known, in brief, as purity.
It is accomplished in the Buddha's yoginī tantra,
And nowhere else.
Whoever dwells on the path of awakening
While holding to the reality of grasped and grasper,
Through the manifest fault of his ignorance
Sees things as Īśvara and the rest.
Therefore this purity,
Whose nature is self-awareness, has been explained.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This was the twenty-fifth chapter, called the purity of "the Blessed One" and the rest, and likewise the characteristics of the rite of consecration, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next I shall explain the characteristics
Of those who make the innate mudrā.
As for the channels, Abhedyā and the rest,
They are taught with four more besides:
Abhedyā and Sūkṣmarūpā,
the Excellent One, Vāmā, Vāminī,

Kūrmajā, Bhāvakī,
the Empowering One, Doṣā, Viṣṭā,
Sāmānyā and Hetudāyikā,
the Real One, and likewise sumana,
lalanā and rasanā,
abadhūtī, the One of Joyful Speech,
Prabandromā, Siddhā,
the Old Woman, the One Agreeable to All People,
the Trembling One and the One of the Essence,
the Goose, Trivṛttā, Kāminī, the Nāga,
Caṇḍī and the Daughter of Māra,
the Moon, the Sun, Agni and rāhu.
Of the thirty-six channels,
Each one has twelve;
When all are divided by their distinctions,
The mudrās are again taught in brief.
One finger should be shown,
Then two of its fingers are shown,
Standing evenly below and above;
And then the thumb should be shown.
For all these channels,
Below and above are equally extended.

Through the omniscient one, the supreme way to proceed
Is to be known in its various stages.
One should show her little finger;
That brings about true abiding with her.
When someone shows the nameless finger,
One gives in answer the pointing finger:
Vajrasūrya, Heruka,
Extended into the lotus of the heart.
When someone shows the threatening forefinger,
One should show the middle finger.
Through the union of vajra and lotus,
Bliss is to be cast upward.
When someone points to her forehead,
One should show her a hanging silk streamer.

In that bliss of self-awareness
One becomes bound together with the mudrā.
When someone shows a wheel,
One should show her the ground.
Going to the crown and to the navel,
It is held stiff with both hands.
When someone points to her eye,
One should show her a mirror.
Through divine substances and the senses as cause,
Luminosity will be seen.
When someone strikes her belly,
One should point to her navel.
In the nature of the expanse of phenomena,
The eight consciousnesses appear.
When someone points to the sky,
One should show her the sun.
Emptiness and compassion are truly seen
Through the very yoga of the channels.
When someone shows a wrathful frown,
One should point to the edge of the space between the brows.
Sporting in true union with oneself,
One knows one's own experience.
When someone shows a river,
One should show her the ocean.
Through applying oneself to the one ground,
All are highly praised as that ground.
When someone points to her knee,
One should show her the foot.
At the time of going to the happy destinies,
That reality of the senses goes.
When someone points to her breast,
One should show her a seat.
Bliss arises as the very nature of enjoyment,
Until existence has dripped away entirely.
When someone points to her shoulder,
One should show her the hand.
Appearing like a blazing staff,

It burns the five nectars.
When someone points to her thigh,
One should point to her secret place.
The life breath, shaped like the staff of a bow,
Dissolves into the central channels.
When someone shows her tongue,
One should point to her palate.
All the fierce fire, gathered
Into the channel, remains there.
When someone points to her lip,
One should point to her throat.
All is the inexpressible nature of reality,
Free from the mindfulness of all the senses.
When someone shows her fingertip,
One should show her a fingernail.
The form of bliss at the peak of existence
Will surely be seen to be cut off.
When someone points to her hair,
One should show her a garland.
Moving sentient beings
Are seen as having the form of wisdom.
When someone points to the crown of her head,
One should show her the big toe.
Like a thread through a jewel, the life breath
Will be seen entering the central channel.
When someone points to her throat,
One should show her birth.
Just as nectar is in a water pot,
All beings are seen within the lotus.
When someone shows the sun,
One should show her the sky.
All the worlds arising from the heart
Come to be known as from the supreme undefiled.
When someone shows the earth,
One should show the sole of the foot.
Through water like a lotus petal,
The sprout of nectar drips down.

When someone points to her jaw,
One should point to her cheek.
Through the power of the channels of all beings,
It is in the abodes of space.
When someone shows the liṅga,
One should show the testicles.
The unchanging goes into change:
That is the mudrā born at the junction of the testicles.
When someone shows a water pot,
One should show her a mountain.
Like a river flowing down from a mountain,
A stream of nectar will drip down.
When a woman touches her ear,
One should point to the line of the back,
By which innate perfect awakening
Is attained within the domain of hearing.
When someone points to her clothing,
One should show her a dye.
As the nature of all phenomena,
Selflessness is seen in an instant.
When a woman holds her lip with her teeth,
One should show the teeth grinding.
All food is nonexistent,
Yet it increases by the power of habitual tendencies.
When someone moves her tongue,
One should show the hand that eats.
Satisfaction with every bliss
Is attained from what is meaningful.
When someone shows the wrist of her hand,
One should show her the hollow of the palm.
The life winds are struck
With the vase breath, the yogic exercises and the rest.
When someone points to her ribs,
One should point to her armpit.
Inwardly one knows the innate
And compassion too.
When someone touches the center of her hand,

One should show the back of the hand.
Self and other and one's own time:
O supreme lady, they are not known!
When someone shows laughter,
One should show her smoke.
From entering supreme nonduality,
Both desire and freedom from desire fade away.
When someone shows a dance,
One should show her a song.
All the three realms are seen as illusion,
Seen from the reality of the two.
When someone shows a skeleton,
One should show her its tip.
Through the blazing of the three channels,
One comes to ransom oneself from death.
Thus there are thirty-six signs,
And likewise the supreme answers to the signs.
Conduct as brothers and sisters
Should be known within the vajra circle.
Pracaṇḍā, as mistress of the family,
Should be known as the chief lady of the place.
The form at the limit of utter clarity
Arises in the ocean of existence.
As long as there is the nondual domain,
The moving phenomena too should be known.
The hosts of ḍākinīs without exception
Gather in the ocean of the innate.
The letters of Pracaṇḍā should be known:
All women are the forms of illusion.
The aspiration of all the mudrās
Is in the nature of the bases of miraculous power;
All that has likewise been taught
Is held to be the bases of miraculous power.
All the signs of the mudrās without exception
Are the characteristics of generating the yoginī.
As taught before in the brief Cakrasaṃvara,
In the center of the circle of the maṇḍala,

In the center, whose nature is thirty-seven,
All these mantras are yoginīs.
The twelve, Ḍākinī and the rest,
Are joined with the times, Makara and the rest,
And the twenty-four, Pracaṇḍā and the rest,
Arise at those times.
Through instants, moments and the rest,
There is one transit of them all.
Through the times of beings,
Very subtle and coarse,
By the measure that makes up a year,
One should always reckon the yoginīs.
Having fixed the times in khara and the rest,
They are marked by the two solstices.
Multiplied by two and by ten,
So are the hours of the year.

A hundred increased by eighty-five
Should be known in five hours.
The measure of a single day, too,
Is sky, eye, and hand, eye.
The measure of a single month, too,
Is sky, sky, taste, and the time taste.
The measure of a single year, too,
Is sky, void, eye, and orifice likewise,
Orifice, and mountain.
So should all the ḍākinīs be known.
The secret mantra has the nature of union;
And of the root mantras, too,
When the feet are equal, two by two,
That is a single foot of the yoginī.
Whatever is in excess of them,
hūṃ phaṭ and the rest, should be left out.
oṃ tri na bhu maḥ b śrī ṇa ba kaṃ jra pa ḍā kaṃ ka pā ma ba hā ṇā bī ya ra hūṃ bī hūṃ rī phaṭ śva phaṭ rā svā ya hā hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā oṃ pra caṇḍi hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
This is the mantra.

Black in color, with four arms,
Her hair let loose, she is terrifying;
The goddess has the nature of wisdom and means;
The rest is as characterized before.
All these goddesses
Are, again, always equal to the ocean.
When the supremely excellent bliss is attained,
One rightly knows many purposes.
In the nature of the moon of gnosis,
This rises and sets.
The form of light of Brahmā's egg
Is the rays, ḍāka and ḍākinī.
What is bound, called the rays,
Is fully able to bring down gnosis.
The lines, too, in the centers of the sky,
The course to be traversed, are born from one's own mother.
Thus the qualities of Pracaṇḍā
Are to be marked in the supremely excellent and the rest.
Moving everywhere at all times,
It should be known as arising from mantra.
Through the cause of the supreme accomplishment,
The gathering is proclaimed to be the yoginī.
She grants accomplishment in dreams;
If she grants it, it should be known through the times.
Whatever the action is like,
Such is its result;
Because of the very connection of cause and result,
The yogin himself comes to be born.
Without a cause there is no result;
So too with the perceptible and the imperceptible.
For those who speak such truth,
It should be learned from the treatises on valid cognition.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This concludes the twenty-sixth chapter, on the domain, called the rite of the characteristics of abiding by the sign language of the mudrās of the yoginīs and heroes in the maṇḍala of the Mistress Pracaṇḍā, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next, the mudrā of Caṇḍākṣī,
Not found in other tantras, I shall explain.
It is to be known by the signs of the eyes;
All of this is union.
Closed and not closed,
Right and left and moving to the right,
Moving upward and to the tip of the nose,
Looking at the ground, the eye fixed on things,
Angry and dejected and agreeable, women,
Sons and kin and brothers,
Delusion, aversion, desire, jealousy,
Fault and pride and great conceit,
Longing and compassion and dullness,
Looking at illusion and looking far,
Going and meditative concentration, half and half,
All open and joy,
Fever and illness and the battlefront,
And with the Dharma: these are the supreme gazes.
If the yoginī gives
These very thirty-six gazes,
The answer to them in mudrā
Is always given by the yogins:
Mirror, water and offering,
Sword, lamp and thumb,
Sky, lotus, white water lily,
Arrow and moon and sun,
Jewel, pearl, coral,
Molten gold and net,
Blazing, shadow, cotton,
Guru, horse, ox, śarabha,
Dance and fright and trembling,
Sexual union, dispute, nearness,
Torma, drawing, maṇḍala,

Pacifying and enriching and subjugating,
Killing and expelling:
These, explained as gazes,
The thirty-six signs,
Are to be given in their proper order.
This is the yogin's connection;
I shall explain their purposes.
The life wind that has entered the course of the moon,
The supreme one that moves on the left,
The thirty-six descents of mind:
These should be known as their essence.
In whatever way the mudrā of the eye is formed,
In that way the life wind is to be made to move.
In all the joints, the head and the rest,
Having established the places of the channels,
Above and below, Abhedyā and the rest,
There one performs the great gaze.
Thus the seventy-two are to be known,
And every excellence will be attained.
Caṇḍākṣī, mistress of yoginīs,
Is she who cuts down the hostile.
In the factors of awakening, too,
All the yoginīs come to know.
Caṇḍākṣī the yoginī is always
Diligence and the two bases of miraculous power.
Toward all the conceptual thoughts of Caṇḍī,
The gaze of the eye is devouring.
The nature of the wavering mind
Is to be bound into one-pointed mind.
Destroying the deceitful antics of the frivolous in the world,
The ḍākinī of mudrā is born.
In the conventional and the ultimate,
Without interval, she makes them nondual.
The nondual eye here is suchness itself,
Highly praised by all the buddhas.
Through miraculous power it makes appearance,
And reveals all the channels.

In the center of the circle of the maṇḍala,
This method is to be meditated upon.
Caṇḍākṣī, endowed with means,
Has the nature of thirty-seven.
By declaring her mode,
All have the nature of awakening.
Born from the syllables of the mantra,
Moving everywhere, having the nature of the channels,
Her color and form are just like
Those of the yoginī Pracaṇḍā.
oṃ śa dāṃ ta ṣṭro sa tka ha ṭa sra bhī ne ṣa trā ṇa ya bhai hūṃ ra hūṃ bā pha ya ṭa hūṃ pha hūṃ ṭa pha svā ṭa hā phaṭ svā hā oṃ caṇḍā kṣī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
In the place of Pūrṇagiri, too,
Pracaṇḍā arises at all times.
At the full moon, on the forehead,
The moon rises on the great mountain.
In Jālandhara, Caṇḍākṣī
Was made into food by Rāhu.
On the first lunar day it is rightly taught;
As following the sun it is definitively taught.
Thus each yoginī
Has a vast name in her own field;
For each of them, too, there are twenty-four,
And again the pīṭhas and upapīṭhas.

There is no meditative concentration, nor even mantra recitation;
It is free of what arises from syllables.
The self whose essence is time and non-time:
Make the wish with the syllables hūṃ phaṭ.
From the form that arises from syllables
Comes forth the nectar of Hevajra.
She who is fitting for the conduct of the brothers,
She who makes entering and turning back,
Is to be known in the wheel of the heart;
The heart has the nature of the eye.
Abiding in the heart is one's own yoginī;

Caṇḍī blazes up from above the navel.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This concludes the twenty-seventh chapter, called the rite of the mudrā of the characteristics of Caṇḍākṣī and of the nature of the Mistress, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next is to be rightly explained,
According to the rite, the letters of the signs.
Knowing them, the yogin is swiftly and surely Freed from the bonds of saṃsāra.
ḍā dā li ka, nā ma daṅ naṃ pi ṣi taṃ, rā ji kā, ba ṭabba ki pi ṭa ka, ḍī, kun tu ru, ka ra pū ra, silla kaṃ, sva yaṃ bhu, ka stu ri kā, ha hau sa ma, bolla, kakko baṃ, kā li ña ja raṃ, śā li śī raṃ a pya kaṃ, pi trī ba naṃ byañja naṃ, mā la tin dha naṃ, ratna sambha baṃ, go, ku, da, ha, na, bi, mū, śu, ra, ma.
Such are the signs of the yoginīs,
And likewise of the heroes, the brothers.
The intention of that yoginī
Comes to be expressed with the mouth:
Man; yoginī; woman; liquor; meat; tongue; pa ḍu ba; ḍamaru drum; of a woman; sexual union; semen; blood; born from flesh; blood; a woman's urine; feces; liṅga; lotus; gathered, or the fortunate one; the flesh of the twice-born; a corpse; a king's man; charnel ground; fish flesh; bird flesh; blood of the battlefield; cow; dog; elephant; horse; human; feces; urine; semen; blood; marrow.
Thus, too, the answers to the signs
Should always be known by the mantrin.
For those who know the reality of yoga,
Generation at all times
Is an emanation, a liberator of beings,
That will be born in field after field.
Bodhicitta is the melting element;
Its number, too, is thirty-six:
Earth and water and fire and wind,
Space and the element of gnosis;

Their elements in turn become sixfold each,
The form and the rest of the Abhidharma, ending with consciousness.
It should be known in the sign of the nature
Of the one who speaks the definitive meaning.
Between each of them, the goddess
Is Prabhāvatī, whose form is gnosis.
At the end of the time of rising
Of the thirty-six elements, the khecarī,
Having accomplished those rays of gnosis,
Abides in the abode of all bliss.
Taking hold of the edge of the garment,
One should play at vital point after vital point.
Apart from the gnosis that has abandoned the conventional,
Even meditation is of the nature of conceptual thought.
With the nature of the yoga of the vajra underworld,
All the channels are to be demolished.
With the nature of the yoga of fierce burning,
The wise one has the syllables of Prabhāvatī.
This is the basis of miraculous power that is investigation,
And likewise in the place Oḍiyāna.
In the center of the circle of the maṇḍala
One should meditate on the supreme mistress of the deities.
With the nature of the yoga of the truth of secret mantra,
The various syllables reach the center.
The thirty-seven deities
Have the very nature of wisdom and means.
oṃ kaṃ bi kā da la yu mā ta lā ji bha ha ra bā ṇa ya u hūṃ grā hūṃ ya phaṭ hūṃ pha hūṃ ṭa pha svā ṭa hā phaṭ svā hā oṃ pra bhā va tī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
Her color and form are as before.
By her own light the yoga is accomplished.
The syllable oṃ is the lord from whom the mother letters arise;
The life wind moves and moves.
The lords of the stars, the all-knowing ones,
Have abandoned even the senses and the rest.
The forms of the letter ya and the letter a,
Having the end of the foot and the head,

All rest upon the mere nā da;
This is the self-arisen expression of the Dharma.
Thus these four letters
Are also the dharmakāya and the rest.
The human is the gnosis of that portion of mind;
Because it is present, there is investigation.
In the middle of the world and upon the earth,
Through the bases of miraculous power one carries out one's conduct.
In the wheel of all qualities, too,
It comes to bestow as the cause of liberation.
The lord of all qualities is emptiness;
In saṃsāra there is no means other than this.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This concludes the twenty-eighth chapter, called the rite of the mudrā of the characteristics of Prabhāvatī, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next, of the supreme and principal yoginī,
The signs of the weapons are to be explained.
Through the intense yoga of Mahānāsā,
Which has the nature of life wind and exertion,
Here are bell, shield, fang,
Pestle, noose, skull cup,
Bow, khaṭvāṅga, book,
Small shield and threatening forefinger,
Garland of little bells and iron chain,
Rock and dust of the charnel ground,
Spear and drum and wet hide,
A rope of hair hanging down,
The stick for stirring the cremation fire,
Club, shield and head,
Skeleton and the ritual weapon,
Eye and kidney and nape of the neck,
The dagger of Saturn,
Seed, dance and saw,

Needle and flayed skin,
Clouds pouring rain, and the wooden hook.
If the yoginī gives these signs,
What is to be expressed as the answer in mudrā is:
Vajra, sword, long spear,
Trident, axe, curved knife, arrow,
Torch, shield and hammer,
Wheel, ḍamaru drum and dagger,
Staff and single-pointed weapon,
Conch, copper trumpet, triple staff,
And there the peacock's tail,
Crow feather and brush,
Fire hearth and mountain,
Short club, mirror, vīṇā,
The tips of the feet and the tips of the hands, lung,
Intestines, Rāhu, iron chain,
Earthen clay and husk and fishing net,
The headless one, blazing black butter,
And the one called "having the form of Bhairava":
These are the expressions in answer by mudrā.
The entire nature of wind,
Its family, is in the house of the yoginī.

Whatever the shape of whichever mudrā,
That is the body of the yoginī.
One either takes on her nature,
Or else she will cut down the hostile.
The eighteen emptinesses,
And above all compassion,
The unshared qualities of a buddha,
And likewise the eighteen elements:
This is the very ground of the yoginī,
And all people should know it.
In the intense yoga of Mahānāsā
Her own characteristics are taught.
She is the mother of all bhūtas,
Manifestly like a many-colored jewel.

The lord of the nā da set moving by the letter hā
Likewise hangs with its face turned downward.
The thread abiding in the nā da, too,
Bears a garland nondual with the form of bliss.
With the nature of the yoga of the instructions of the sādhana,
It arose before from the vowels and consonants.
Having the nature of Dharma, action, samaya,
And the Great Mudrā,
From the conception of the four letters
The four mudrās are themselves expressed.
The place is called Arbuda;
Likewise the basis of miraculous power that is mind.
The gathering of yoginīs of divine substance
Is renowned as the wheel of space.
Her mistress, whose nature is thirty-seven,
Is Mahānāsā.
The breath at the beginning and end of the nose
Has entering, abiding and rising.
In the center, what is to be marked is free of characteristics;
All the yoginīs come to play.
In the nu baṃ goes Sarasvatī,
She who descends into the center, whatever it may be.
By the yoga of drawing the bow
The life wind and the downward-clearing wind are held.
Having known consciousness as the sign,
That which is marked is also to be destroyed.
Wherever the mind is sent forth,
There one should gauge it by miraculous power.
This is the very womb of the lady of gnosis;
Examine it in every respect.
In the center of the circle of the maṇḍala,
Here one should meditate once again.
The nature of wisdom and means
Arises from the syllables of the secret mantra.
Her color and shape are as before:
Terrifying, black as night.
oṃ ja ko bā ṭi lā la bakṣa lī bhu ḍha jā la ya ga hūṃ nā hūṃ ya phaṭ hūṃ phaṭ hūṃ svā phaṭ hā phaṭ svā hā oṃ hoḥ m hā nā se hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā

Perfected through this secret mantra,
She has the nature of all desires.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This concludes the twenty-ninth chapter, called the ascertainment of the rite of the signs of the characteristics of Mahānāsā, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next, the secret signs of the body,
The conduct of beauty, I shall explain.
Through the yoga of Vīramatī
One will obtain a body born of divine substance.
Head and crown and forehead,
The left and the right ears,
The spine of the back and the two shoulders,
Nose and eyebrows, eyes and mouth,
Palate and heart and hands,
Armpits, breasts, flanks,
Navel, private parts and buttocks, liṅga,
Thighs and knees, calves, feet,
Toes, big toes and ankles,
And everywhere on the soles of the feet,
Testicles, hand, elephant hide,
Wrist and the side of the forehead,
And joints and belly are to be known.
When the yoginī always gives these,
The yogin, as the answer in mudrā,
Should give in their proper order:
Flute, vīṇā, staff drum,
Song and clay drum and music,
Garland, grace, dance, copper trumpet,
Incense and perfume and food offerings,
Fruit, unbroken rice and vessel,
Water for the feet, offering water, lamp, vase,

Cloth and mirror and parasol,
Canopy and yak-tail whisk likewise,
Pennant, flower garland,
Victory banner and perfumed chamber,
Short spear, garland, half garland,
And again small bells and net,
Lion throne and crest ornament,
And likewise various jewels.
Placed in the upapīṭha of Godāvarī,
Having the nature of the faculty of faith,
Through the intense yoga of Vīramatī
All the mudrās are fully explained.
In the language of the innate she is called bī,
Having the nature of thirty-six things:
Aggregates, elements and objects,
Faculties, actions and agents,
And here likewise the sounds of the objects,
Six each for all of them, in due order.
The gnosis that has gone within them
Is the innate, not a thing other than it.
Through the intense yoga of night and day
It has the nature of wisdom and means.
Those innate yoginīs
Are divided by thirty-six divisions.
The gathering of the great samaya
Is to be known in the center of the lotus.
One's own mudrā born from that
Is placed in object after object.
The bliss of the self-aware yoginī:
This is the domain of the buddhas.
That which is disintegrating is greatness itself;
The twelve humans enter within.
Where the vajra wind has fully entered,
There yoga is born everywhere.
Of the bliss that draws forth the rays,
Proceed by means of the non-emissions.
Thus, having known Godāvarī,

Possessing the vajra of the faculty of faith,
One knows the nature of Vīramatī;
She is the chief lady of the center of the maṇḍala.
The vajra whose nature is thirty-seven
Is endowed with the secret mantra of her own name.
She who feeds on various conceptual thoughts
Is so by the name of innate diligence.
oṃ ka pā la ra pāṃ śu ta pā dhū śo mru dya u ta gra śū ba lā pu ya ṣā hūṃ ya hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā phaṭ hā svā hā oṃ bī ra ma tī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
The color and shape are as before;
This is to be done for all the yoginīs.
Because diligence rightly transfers,
The Abhidhāna rightly arises.
Endowed with the yoga of the garuḍa,
Here one acts without doubt.
The chomaka taught before
Should be known as the supreme tongue.
There is no other answer in mudrā:
The tongue of the answer belongs to the two powers.
In the various tantras and scriptures
I have not explained this to you.
The intense practice of this tantra
Has not occurred before and will not occur again.
Ignorant and hostile-minded,
Deluded people who indulge in objects
Will not attain buddhahood
And will surely be cooked in hell.
Therefore, with a reverent mind,
One should rightly understand the practice with reverence.
Former delusion will cease,
And buddhahood will be attained before long.
By devoting oneself continually with faith,
Life and health increase.
The yoginī of the wheel of wind,
Powerful Vīramatī,
Fully endowed with the divisions of the vajra wind,

Dissolves into the great mind.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This concludes the thirtieth chapter, called the names of the characteristics of the rite of Vīramatī, the mudrās and the answers to the mudrās, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

"Blessed One, please teach
The chomaka of all the elements."
"The signs of stainless things
I shall explain; practitioner, listen!"
Taking the lip fully between the teeth,
With bliss she sucks the bolla.
Having gone, revealing gnosis,
She spoke these words:
"Through the application of the mother letters,
Three tens together with six,
By mudrā and by the answer to the mudrā,
From this the samaya is to be distinguished."
ka kha ga gha ṅa kaṃ ca cha ja jha ña caṃ ṭa ṭha ḍa ḍha ṇa ṭaṃ ta tha da dha na taṃ pa pha ba bha ma paṃ ya ra la va ha yaṃ
If the yoginī gives these,
The answer in mudrā is, in turn, this:
kā khā gā ghā ṅā kaḥ cā chā jā jhā ñā caḥ ṭā ṭhā ḍā ḍhā ṇā ṭaḥ tā thā dā dhā nā taḥ pā phā bā bhā mā paḥ yā rā lā vā hā yaḥ
Having thus known the distinctions of the mudrās,
This is the door panel of all embodied beings.
In the intense yoga of the two openings,
Everything is like the letters.
Having gathered below and above,
Yogin and yoginī are nondual.
Through the truths of the four moments,
Likewise those four joys,
The four classes and the four wheels,
And the bodies of e baṃ ma yā

Are taught in this tantra in brief;
The detailed explanation should be understood elsewhere.
Through the intense yoga of Kharvarī
The mantrin should know the rite.
A garland of door panels equal to space;
Conduct as a khecarī is one's own.
Speech, too, the self with the nature of language,
Is to be made to approach cessation.
The great secret, mind and mental factors:
Through clearly attaining the last,
The form of joy born of the jewel vajra
Will be seen at the boundary of the gaze.
All have the nature of the yoga of truth,
The four having the nature of four each.
In Rāmeśvara and in the faculty
It should be known as supremely wondrous.
Desire and freedom from desire are blended;
That does not arise from its moment.
Since it has the nature of the five elements,
Fire in the center is the abode of nectar.
The wheel of breath, always blissful:
The Tathāgata is to be eaten.
With the women of the gods and the nāgas
The wise one takes his pleasure.
Through them, at all times,
The transference of all embodied beings, too,
Into space, by way of the nine doors,
Is to be known as fourfold.
Thus the places of the door panels
Always come to be thirty-six.
"Not knowing the division of the doors,
How are the faults and the virtues?"
"Listen to the measure of the time of transference,
And to its right and full application.
By the good path, the beautiful abode;
By the bad path, the fault of existence.
The bindu, the navel and the upper ones,

The eyes and the nose and the ears,
The doors of feces and of urine:
These are the characteristics of the nine doors.
Through the navel, the heaven of desire;
Through the bindu, beings embodied in form;
Through the upper door, the going and coming
Of the higher abodes is renowned.
Existence as a yakṣa comes from the nose;
Through the ears, the gods of accomplishment.
If one does not remain, one proceeds to gnosis;
Humans become rulers of men.
Through the door of existence, the pretas;
Through the urine, animals likewise.
The embodied beings
Of the eight hells come from the feces.
The other doors are three each;
The wise one engages in the channels.
The twenty-seven, too,
Are the lunar mansions, Kṛttikā and the rest.
The three pure gnoses
Belong to each of the door goddesses.
Through the things of the faculty of diligence
Come the characteristics of all enjoyments.
In the center, the one whose nature is thirty-seven
Should be meditated upon with the color given before.
The seeds of the White Vajra Lady and the rest
Should be placed in the places of the door panels.
The goddess with the nature of wisdom and means
Is through the yoga of the wheel of earth.
Become the syllables of the mantra:
oṃ mā bi tri ka ga ṭa ṇa mu pa kha ri hā pū hā ri ra ta bā ma yantrā hūṃ ya hūṃ hūṃ pha hūṃ ṭa pha phaṭ ṭa pha svā ṭa hā svā hā oṃ kharba rī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
Thus she truly arises from mantra,
Born from the yoga of the ultimate.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,

Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this."

This concludes the thirty-first chapter, called the gnosis of the nature of the characteristics of the letter signs of Kharvarī, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Again, having made offerings,
She asked again and again:
"The mudrā through the gnosis of things,
Blessed Lord, how is it?"
"I shall explain its characteristics;
Listen with a one-pointed mind.
Innate bliss, and emptiness,
Self-awareness, and great bliss,
Dharmakāya and complete enjoyment,
Emanation, and great wonder,
Luminous mind, and thought,
Peace and nirvāṇa, the union-born,
Perfection, and nonduality,
Liberation, and the ultimate,
Gnosis, consciousness, awakening,
The city of the dharmadhātu likewise,
The lotus and the dharmodaya,
And again selflessness, heaven,
Peace and sound and the guru,
Awareness, the unerring, freedom from concepts,
Elixir, and speech and explanation:
For the wise, these are the synonyms of the chomā.
Just as they are, the first letter
Of each is the chomā of the answer.
As the letter is, so is the meaning;
Aversion to hell should be known.
In the yoga of Laṅkeśvarī
You, yogin, should practice.
In the seed that has come to hang down,
There are all the chomās.
Of the element of gnosis, the anther,

The characteristic lies in its own nature.
One's own being is equal to that, O yogin;
The mountain abides in the heart of the lotus.
The mountain is consciousness in motion,
In all the elements of mind.
In Laṅkā the self is born,
Arising through the gnoses of things.
The lord of all bhūtas:
All things that are not gnosis are born.
That is in the place Devīkoṭa,
And again the faculty of mindfulness of awakening.
Where gnosis is without thought,
There it will be heard through the teaching.
Through freedom from desire, for whomever,
bi is the all-pervading gnosis.

In the spaces of the winds,
And likewise the bliss of the faculties,
ṭi is renowned as the power of the vajra;
It travels to the town of the sense objects.
Mindfulness is innate gnosis.
Where the mind is fully proclaimed,
There, knowing the awakening of the faculties as well,
One has the nature of the vajra.
Having thus ascertained reality,
One should abide in one's own nature.
Abandon phenomena together with the world;
One should draw inward a little, without the eyes.
Either it is the self of all things,
Or else one completely abandons everything.
There is neither thing nor possessor of things;
The absence of things comes to be clearly seen.
Completely freed from thing and non-thing,
Look on all as born from what is untrue.
From the mouth of the Guru, Vajradhara,
Meet with it through the succession of the lineage.
The goddess is in the maṇḍala of fire;

Therefore her body is of that nature.
In the center of the thirty-sevenfold self
One should meditate on her with the former form.
All becomes endowed with skillful means;
It arises from the syllables of the mantra.
oṃ hūṃ sa hūṃ ha kā ja ro su cchanda ra rī ṇa pa mulla khā ba ya ka hūṃ rā hūṃ ya phaṭ hūṃ phaṭ hūṃ svā phaṭ hā phaṭ svā hā oṃ laṅke śva rī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
When it is known in this way, the great secret mantra
Brings about accomplishment with ease.
It is the very nature of all rites;
Not even once in a hundred is it otherwise.
The accomplishments that bear the names of mountains
Are as the twenty-eight remedies:
Kṛttikā and Rohiṇī,
Mṛgaśiras and Ārdrā likewise,
Punarvasu and Puṣya,
Aśleṣā and Maghā, and further,
Pūrvaphalgunī and Uttaraphalgunī,
Hasta, Citrā, Svāti,
Viśākhā and Anurādhā,
Jyeṣṭhā and Mūla and Pūrvāṣāḍhā,
Uttarāṣāḍhā and Abhijit,
Śravaṇā, and Dhaniṣṭhā likewise,
Śatabhiṣā and Pūrvabhādrapadā,
Uttarabhādrapadā and Revatī,
Aśvinī, and likewise Bharaṇī;
The Moon, the Sun, and Rāhu,
Mars and Saturn:
One should know the proper time of each,
Grasping it without doubt.
All have the nature of the lunar conjunction,
Abiding equally in the sky.
Through the application as it is being explained,
The mantra practitioner should know the rite.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,

Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This concludes the thirty-second chapter, the gnosis of the defining characteristics of the signs of the mudrā of Laṅkeśvarī, of the nature of the wheel of the maṇḍala, and of the rite of names, from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Furthermore, something else shall be explained:
The signs of purpose and of action,
By merely recognizing which
The practitioner will obtain accomplishment.
When the Moon and the Sun are seized by the planet,
The defining characteristics of the yoginīs' mantra speech:
po taṃ means speaking in secret;
pra ti po taṃ is the reply.
ga mu is going; lum pa
Means "he comes."
de hi is a city; ca ṭu kaṃ is called
"Hold!"; hrī da ya is a hero.
kau ra ba means "Go!";
karṇṇi ka is a bell; a li is doing.
śi ra is coiled hair;
sra ba is the ear; further,
man tha na is nectar;
na rā is meeting; and tā li ka
Is a ḍākinī; na ra kaṃ is a maṇḍala.
a mu kaṃ is a charnel ground;
kā khi la is a door; sva sa naṃ
Is a brahmin; ba ri is the royal caste;
bir ti is the merchant caste; kru ra
Is a commoner; an ta is an outcaste.
ā li ka is cattle; ḍā ki
Is a sister; mu da ka is fat.
Touching the teeth with the tongue, likewise,
Should be understood as hunger for food.
tre is the nose touched by a scent;
ā ga ma na means "From what place?"

And "such and such"; ki ra ṇa is a flower;
lam pa is the belly; dan ta is laughing;
ni ro dhe is rain; bi jña pa ti is being satisfied.
dhu mra is a cloud, likewise;
dhu mra pri ya is a mountain;
sā nu sā ri ta is a river;
aṅ gu lya is a portion;
ba da na rā ji ka is the tongue;
a dha ra is the teeth; paṃ ka ti
Is a banner, a necklace, and likewise a garland.
ca la is the wind; mrig pa ti is an animal;
maṇḍa la is level;
svā sa should be known as a crossroads.
Birth: phal gu is the lower garment; ma hā kṣa raṃ
Is a great beast; ccha is a goat; na is a human; ba is an ox;
ma is a buffalo; bha is eating;
si is a lion; byā likewise is a tiger;
sṭhā is abiding. Touching the mouth means "I have eaten";
Touching the teeth means "I am satisfied";
hri ka is shame; touching the hollow
Is sexual union; touching the thigh
Means "Do it thus, now."
So one should recognize the supremely suited consort.
Here the purpose is explained once more;
The wise should churn.
The action should be known as the yoginī;
The hero is the purpose throughout.
Through the nature of various things,
The self whose nature is gnosis and the knowable;
Generation, the union of becoming,
And the free of union, and likewise the conventional;
Illusion, the concordant, and saṃsāra,
Love, and the imagined nature,
The dependent and the thoroughly established,
tu ri yaṃ, and meditation on the wheel,
Delight of mind, deeds, and moral discipline,

Giving, austerity, and heroism likewise,
The astrologer and the physician,
Craft, the elements, and the speaker;
And the rest, the twelve links of dependent origination,
Ignorance and so on, should be known.
In the vicinity of Mālava,
Through the application of Drumacchāyā,
In the aspects of the faculty of concentration,
Not entering and entering are the same.
The faculties, with desire and free from desire,
Are the perfectly accomplished lord.
Māmakī, in the aperture of the vajra,
Should be placed at the crown of the head,
Hanging down, facing downward:
This is the manner of the mudrā of Kamboji.
ba is the continuum of perfect knowledge;
Its nature is illusion, its own defining mark.
Thus all that is made and unmade
Does not appear to the wise in the Middle Way.
Here, in the gnosis of the peaceful state,
The yogin has a body of nectar;
With a form resembling a mirage,
He comes to see himself as embodied.
Fully clothed in gnosis,
One should recollect oneself as the all-pervading deity.
Just as compassion cannot be made into two,
One should recollect arising as a being of that kind.
In the center of the thirty-sevenfold self
One should meditate on the renowned one of former form.
The secret mantra, the very self of the dhāraṇī of truth,
Is planted in the center of the maṇḍala of water.
oṃ sam rba hā bhū śma ta śā saṃ na trā pri sa yā na ya ka hūṃ rā hūṃ ya pha hūṃ ṭa hūṃ pha pha ṭa ṭa svā pha hā ṭa svā hā oṃ dru ma ccha ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
Thus, as the very self of the mantra's form,
She should be known as the one who goes everywhere.
In worship whose nature is the vajra,

The innate beautiful women assemble.

The gnosis Ḍākinī, real in her very self,
Is the yoginī who is chief of space.
Having made the breath hidden,
One again goes everywhere through Oḍḍiyāna.
In the regions of the three levels
One should meditate on the queen of form.
By drawing the mind inward
One should meditate on the accomplishment one desires.
Again, the yogin of Vajravārāhī
Should worship a woman of good family.
Than gathering together divine substances
And human bliss, that is supreme.
In the delightful city of the mātṛkās
One should meditate on the lord of beings.
At such a time as this, the wise
Place gnosis within the avadhūtī.
The yogin meditates on the very self of mind,
Which has emptiness as its form and object.
Having understood everything by that,
It is the very defining mark of the Net of Illusion.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the thirty-third chapter, called "The Ascertainment of the Rite of the Signs of the Mudrā of Drumacchāyā's Own Defining Characteristics," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then it was asked of the Blessed Lord:
"Great Vajraḍāka, all-pervading lord,
Please teach, in the proper way,
The mudrā, the form of perfect knowledge."
"Through the application of the four mudrās,
Each of them is ninefold:
The action, the Dharma, and the samaya,
And the great mudrā is the fourth.

Whatever woman is white like a lotus root
Gives off the scent of the lotus.
She with the scent of lotus and utpala
Has the color of the campaka.
She with the scent of jāti and campaka
Bears that same form and color.
She with the scent of camphor and sandalwood
Has the skin of a white lotus.
She with a scent like musk
Has the color of a blue utpala.
Blue utpala with green leaves:
Her scent is indicated by that itself.
She with the scent of mallikā and utpala
Resembles a sapphire.
Know her with the scent of ketaka:
She is red like the bandhūka.
She with the scent of pāṭali and mallikā
Is, again, the color of the sky.
Thus it becomes the action mudrā.
I shall explain the Dharma mudrā.
She who delights in the assembly of the sugatas,
Born of the outcastes, is the supreme yoginī.
She who ever delights in meditation and recitation
Is declared to be a brahmin woman.
She who ever delights in bathing and cleanliness
Is a woman of the merchant caste.
She whose very self is free of concepts,
Unyielding, and who sports with heroes,
Has the nature of the royal caste;
She is one who supremely delights in talk.
She who fully sports in work
Is the yoginī of the commoner caste.
She who is devoted to the assembly of the sugatas
Is the yoginī who is the supremely suited consort.
She inclines toward the side of the wise;
In the place of the Dharma she is without anger.
Born into the family of heroes,

She is one who always eats meat.
She guards the path of the Sugata
And holds the intention of a bodhisattva.
Not angry toward those who are angry,
She carries the burden of giving pleasure.
Thus is the Dharma mudrā.
The samaya mudrā shall be described.
She who delights in torma and worship
Is declared to be one who keeps the samaya.
She delights in consecration, the maṇḍala, the wheel,
And the ultimate meaning.
She who confers empowerment on beings
Is renowned as the yoginī who keeps the samaya.
She fully turns the wheel of Dharma
And always guards the samaya.
In the midst of the assembly of yoginīs
She is supremely wondrous and playful.
At all times she is full of joy
And makes a beaming face.
To her, yogins appear as sons;
Know her as Vajrayoginī.
She who is never weary at any time
Bears the name 'She Who Casts Down Weapons.'
A human woman, while ever going about,
Guards the signs of the samaya.
Thus is the samaya mudrā.
The great mudrā shall be fully explained.
The innate and the field-born goddess,
The mantra-born, the protector of the world,
The union-born and likewise the place-born,
The samaya yoginī of divine substance:
The lotus woman, at all times,
Is highly praised as the great mudrā.
Thus is the nature of the mudrās;
The manner in which it is shown is the answering mudrā.
Whoever has whatever color and scent,
One should recollect her manner accordingly.

Through the application of the Earth Guardian,
Kāmarūpa is the power of wisdom.
For the sake of what all sentient beings need,
This mudrā should be accomplished.
The syllable e and the winds of gnosis
Are well seated on the maṇḍala of the Moon.
The self whose nature is the fire of desire
Is the yoginī of the wheel of mind.
The channel arisen from the vajra secret
Is never without the unshifting of all the elements.
The buddhas of the past and those yet to come
Are the portions of sentient beings.
And in each single mind
She has thirty-six actions.
The embodied form, likewise, is by her;
In the field are forms such as kalā.
As the very manner of the great mantra,
She will now sport upon the earth.
Even in the family of all the buddhas,
Form and the formless will not be known.
The goddess who has taken the form of another
Is the one who knows the path of the Buddha.
The faculties are the all-pervading Buddha,
Because they are the perfection of wisdom.
Thus, by ascertaining reality,
One becomes equal to the form of the yoginī.
The goddesses in the wheel of gnosis,
The mistress who grants all desires,
In the center of the maṇḍala wheel
Have arisen in the form of the mantra.
oṃ ja ma ṭā hā ka ka lā la pa pā muntā ku ga ṭā ni ya te hūṃ jā hūṃ ya phaṭ hūṃ phaṭ hūṃ svā phaṭ hā phaṭ svā hā oṃ ai rā ba tī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
In the seed of the mantra so called
The granter of the supreme has arisen.
Her color and shape are as before,
Just so, in every way and in all things."

From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the thirty-fourth chapter, called "Endowed with the Rite of the Defining Characteristics of the Body Mudrā of the Earth Guardian," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then the goddess, having made offerings,
Spoke these words:
"The sign of all truth,
At the sight of which all bhūtas and the rest
Are terrified on every side..."
The Blessed Ḍāka himself spoke:
"Listen to the heart mudrā
That has entered within all mudrās,
Which is taught in no tantra at all.
You have urged it, and so,
Through the application of the vajra fire,
I proclaim all the mudrās.
The goddess who is in the wheel of the navel
Has as her domain the limit of the touch of wood.
The sequence of going and coming
Is through the sequence of the various channels.

The mudrā is the drop planted in the Sun;
Thought and mind are the vowels and consonants,
The thirty-six, long and short;
That mudrā is she who grants manifestly.
The mudrā and the answering mudrā
Have the nature of wisdom and skillful means.
The breath in which the awakening mind is planted:
All this dissolves into sentient beings.
Through the union of Mahābhairavī
The wise should accomplish it.
Having experienced that source,
From whichever and whatever it arises,
All those who laugh with "hā hā"

Should be placed at the root of a tree.
Those who gather there in joy
Are the elements and the sense sources as well.
Free from all habitual tendencies,
It is like holding Bhairava.
In the place of Oḍi, the power of faith
Has as its domain the corresponding number;
In the middle of the house of close measuring,
Therefore the stable and the moving,
Dissolving too, are the self of all things.
The wise moisten with the mudrās;
As though flying into the sky,
Gnosis is supreme above all beings.
Having known it through the force of faith,
One has the strength of all embodied beings.
As though eating the great flesh,
One drinks blood with the mind.
The consort who acts as the mother of Heruka
Properly enters at the foot of a tree.
In the center of the maṇḍala circle
One should meditate on Mahābhairavī.
In the center of the wheel of mind
The mantras arise from the syllables.
oṃ ma kha hā ṭa sa bāṃ mu ga dra ka me pā kha la lā śū ya la hūṃ pri hūṃ nna pha dhā ṭa ri phaṭ ṇe svā hūṃ hā hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā oṃ ma hā bhai ra bī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
From the great union of the secret mantra so called,
She who has the body and mind of the yoginī,
By drawing the mind inward,
Grants the accomplishment one desires.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the thirty-fifth chapter, called "The Rite of the Defining Characteristics That Explain the Rite of the Inner Mudrā of Mahābhairavī," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then the yoginī of Kāminī:
The tantra of the signs of the mudrā
Shall be explained out of compassion;
By the yogin's seeing it, accomplishment comes.
When things are among the appearances,
They are seen as the domain of the faculties.
They appear black and white and red,
Blue and orange and green,
Yellow and pale blue and multicolored;
Variegated, and the color of smoke;
Blue mixed with orange;
And again the color white and black;
Orange and pale green-blue;
Blue and the color red;
White-blue and red-green;
Cloud-colored and variegated;
Variegated and the color yellow;
Smoke and golden-colored;
Yellow-green and green-yellow;
Red and conch-colored;
Smoky, white, variegated, blue;
Mixed yellow and red;
Smoky and the color pale blue;
White and variegated in color;
Grey and the color of smoke;
Pale white and pale red;
Cloud-colored, grey, and pale green;
Variegated and the color grey.
In the hues of all the colors
Are the colors of the twelve elements:
Gold and silver, copper and iron,
Bell metal and brass.
By colors mixed with one another,
These are the twelve of great love.
All the elements of the yogins:
There appearances arise.

At the time when appearances arise through that,
Great magical display will come forth.
By fully knowing the two mudrās,
It is accomplished through seeing the colors.
From the gathering of the former and the later,
If it is the very self of innate union,
Through the application of Vāyuvegā,
In the place of Triśakuni,
The goddess is in the power of diligence.
So too the meanings of the syllables:
ba descends into the central channel;
By the power of habitual tendencies one dies.
In all the junctures of time, among phenomena,
Again it is the very self of the path of seeing.
be is endowed with objects:
It is the path of meditation of selves.
That very one, closely embraced by the mother,
Is the path of liberation of the protectors.
The heavens, the human world, and beneath the earth
Are called the three kinds of beings.
One who comes to see the bliss of sameness
Abides at the boundary of the blazing vajra.
Because the vase breath and the rest are practiced,
It is Caṇḍī with the subtle channel.
In the lotus are all the channels;
There is no gnosis like it.
Therefore diligence arises;
In power, gnosis possesses gnosis.
Knowing this, the constant yogin,
Enjoying desire with the woman of desire,
And the mistress of the maṇḍala
Has arisen perfectly in the syllables of the secret mantra.
In the supreme innate perfect awakening
The great goddess will be born.
oṃ be byā tā ghra la cā saṃ rmā ghamba ma ra rdha dhā ṇa ri ka ṇe rā hūṃ ya hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā phaṭ hā svā hā oṃ bā yu be ge hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā

Her color and form are just as before.
In the center of the thirty-seven,
Through the heart mudrā of the three realms,
Whatever that is, is renowned as perfect power.
In the great secret wheel of speech,
Whatever I teach in sequence,
All should be known as true.
Therefore Vajradhara is uplifted.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the thirty-sixth chapter, called "The Defining Characteristics of the Rite of the Color Mudrā of Vāyuvegā," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then, when Vajravārāhī
Had worshiped with the proper rite:
"Listen, goddess, I shall explain.
The deity mudrā of the Guru himself:
The Kisser, and likewise Lāmā,
Ḍākinī and Rūpiṇī,
She Who Transforms and She Who Follows;
The yoga, and likewise the six perfections.
The signs of the left hand
Are shown by the divisions of yoga;
Each one becomes threefold.
The three kinds of heroes, namely
The Tathāgata and the Vajra,
Ārolik and Paramāśva,
And the Herukas, are on the left hand.

The wise know the yoga of union in pairs:
Locanā and Māmakī,
Tārā, Pāṇḍaravāsinī, Nairātmyā,
And likewise Vajradhātvīśvarī
Should be known as the six perfections.
Thus the three kinds should be known.
The hero is the lord of all beings;

Kṣitigarbha and the others are there;
Likewise the ḍākas and the others are chief.
The goddess is placed on the back of the hand;
On the fingers are the tathāgatas;
Likewise the goddess is at the middle joints;
On the palm of the hand is the tathāgata;
The hero likewise is on the nails;
At the place of the bracelet is the yoginī.
One makes the sign with the tip of the hand;
The wise should perform the dismissal behind.
Whoever is the lord of whatever,
It should be indicated by that very one.
Through the application of Surābhakṣī,
Kosala, and the tip of the nose,
Through the very self of the power of mindfulness,
One should eat and hold a feast.
At the time of sleep, born from all,
Hold the great mudrā well.
At the time of Rāhu, fire in the Sun;
What is eaten is likewise at the tip of the nose.
From the subtle, nondual form,
Having made the objects too into food,
From the seed of the flower of mind,
kṣi drips a thread of nectar.
Thus the yogin who ascertains it
Proceeds from the liquor of the navel that has gone before.
The mind planted in the shaft of the bow
Is one's own form, mere perfect knowledge;
The experience of equal taste, too,
Will be brought about here without doubt.
Through the power of the bliss of lalanā,
The seed is planted without outflow.
At that very time the constant mudrā
Is obtained through the sign of the hero.
Into the wheel of awakening, with joy,
She of the supreme face will enter.
If one is separated from the signs,

There is no other means of liberation in saṃsāra.
The mistress of the assembly of yoginīs
Is Surābhakṣī, the greatly renowned.
In the great wheel of the thirty-seven
Is she of the supreme face, arisen from the secret mantra.
oṃ śa ma trū hā ni bi su gha mbha na na ni ka bā rā ri ya ṇe hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ svā svā hā hā oṃ su rā bha kṣī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
Thus the king of mantras, manifestly,
Has not arisen and will not arise.
Through emitting and withdrawing,
It is spoken in lines by pairs.
The goddess is the very self of wisdom and skillful means;
Her color and shape are as before.
The answering mudrā, the way of the omniscient:
Having recognized it, one should not give it away.
If one who does not know
Accomplishes this great mudrā of the yoginī,
Being killed by snakes, thieves, and the like,
He goes to the hells and other such places.
To heroes who hold the various scriptures
It is given so that they may have true confidence.
Where it exists through the kindness of the Guru,
The wise one gives the sign by that condition.
Accomplishment is brought about
By the very self of things, and not otherwise.
Through his kindness there is liberation;
The wise should dwell in the field.
The instruction of the Guru is the field;
That is the place and the side of awakening.
The abiding ones are the cchomakas;
Absence of intrinsic nature is the reply to the cchomā.
Or else all this is the Guru,
Or all gurus are all things.
With instruction, the great gnosis
Has a domain beyond the path of speech.
In the wheel of body is great accomplishment;

It abides in the bliss of all the vehicles.
There is no absence of bliss, and no absence of non-bliss;
There all is the great nondual.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the thirty-seventh chapter, called "The Rite of the Defining Characteristics of the Nature of the Signs of the Full Application of Surābhakṣī," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then the goddess, the lotus-holding Vārāhī,
Having made offerings, said:
"The great Vajra, lord of action and of the yoginīs,
Spoke to me:
'I shall explain the rite of divine substance
That accomplishes what all sentient beings need,
By which, in subjugation and the other rites,
The gods and all others likewise come.
First, the action of the root secret mantra
Of Vajravārāhī:
In Kaliṅga, of Śyāmadevī,
One makes the manifest command.
Those born into her families
Are granted as self and one's own.
In the center of the thirty-sevenfold self
One should meditate on the supreme mistress.
In the root mantra of two lines,
She is born from the seed syllables.
In this world and in the next,
Without her there is no accomplishment.'
oṃ śa tri ta sā sa ha ha sra sra ma mu hā khā sa ya ha hūṃ sre hūṃ ka phaṭ ro svā mā hā ba lyā nta barti ṇe hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ svā hā oṃ śyā ma de bī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
This, the supreme of the maṇḍala,
Is to be meditated upon, recited, and contemplated.
Vajravārāhī is not to be made two;

Strive in the root mantras.
A cloth moistened with the flower of menstruation
Is to be dried well;
With the dung of the gargaṭa,
One who desires accomplishment offers incense.
With this incense the mantra practitioner
Should draw near to the Blessed Lady.
Endowed with the union of Vārāhī,
She spoke these words:
'From the gathering of the concordant channels,
All beings arise from the left.
One's own continuum, as though beautiful,
Is the cloth of menstrual dust.
The dung too, mixed with the three worlds
And with gnosis, becomes incense.
The mind set down like a cat:
This word is in the syllable hyā.
The green, too, is the union with compassion;
The goddess likewise is the central channel.
What is bliss? What is knowledge?
What is the domain of the ultimate?
The one who is like a garment, in the great yoga,
Consciousness is held to be the goddess.
She is the very self of all people, the greatest,
Traveling in all directions.
Having bound skull cups mouth to mouth,
One declares the fire offering with hair.
This is renowned as the flower;
It guards each of the samayas.
One should always worship the yoginī,
With the peaceful drink every day.

One who knows the mantra that acts in this way
Is the one who bestows all accomplishments.
With beef pounded with liquor
One should perform the fire offering with the left hand.
If all the gods together with the lunar mansions,

The nāgas and others, those who dwell in the Thirty-Three,
And even the buddhas come under control,
What need is there to speak of petty humans?
Phlegm and a tooth stick,
And likewise the rubbings of one's own body,
Pounded with liquor, with the name:
By this fire offering one brings the target, together with the world, under control.
Menstrual blood
And the vomit of food that has been eaten,
Together with human hair,
Is supreme for summoning this very moment.
The vomit of butter from one's own body
And one's own hair the wise should burn;
By a blazing fire of neem wood,
It is supreme for causing enmity at once.
One performs the fire offering with crow feathers;
In equipoise, in a fire of datura,
With black butter and salt together,
It brings killing and expulsion at once.
Through nine thousand oblations
One will before long obtain a kingdom.
Of the oblations to be burned,
The wise offer a hundred with flesh;
Three months after that,
Poverty is destroyed in an instant.
Whoever constantly recollects this Becomes agreeable to people.
In twenty-one nights
It will be accomplished; there is no doubt of this.
Women, the supreme host of the Bodiless One,
With minds intoxicated, will be won.
The worlds intoxicated by desire
Grant fearlessness.
Surrounded by ten million women,
The accomplished one sports upon the earth.
Endowed with the union of Vajravārāhī,

Equal to the yoga of glorious Heruka,
Here the other vajra masters
And all the heroes pay homage to him;
To one gentle in the conduct of samaya
She grants accomplishment in the three worlds.
Through the application of yoga explained before,
The fire offering done in this way is accomplished.
There is no action other than yoga;
Without action there is no union.
The action of the twelve transitions:
The flowing of the winds plants them.
From the meeting at the junction of the two,
Look within the hearth of the fire offering.
The two navels are in meeting,
And again at all the junctions.
At that time it should be known:
The mantra too, a hundred thousand for each syllable;
Recited, urged on, and done in secret,
It brings accomplishment on every side.
Having properly made the vajra yantra,
Then one should set out on the ground
A grid of fifty less one squares.
The mantra practitioner places the mantra of Sumbharāja.
In it, first, is Vairocana;
In the seventh, again, that same one.
In the ninth one places the syllable su;
In the thirteenth, the syllable gri;
The seventeenth is the syllable bha;
Again, in the nineteenth, hṇa;
In the thirty-first one places the syllable gri;
In the thirty-third, the syllable ni;
What is to be placed in the thirty-seventh,
The wise apply to the syllable hṇa.
Here in the forty-first
Likewise one places the syllable su;
In the forty-third likewise
One should apply the seed of gnosis.

What is placed in the forty-ninth,
By the all-knowing, is the syllable sambha.
What is to be placed in the second section
Is the first vowel of the Vedas;
Likewise here in the sixth section,
The wind, at all times.
In the tenth one places the syllable gri;
In the twelfth, the syllable ba;
In the eighteenth, the syllable hṇa;
In the thirty-second, the syllable ya;
In the thirty-eighth, the syllable hṇa;
In the fortieth, the seed ya;
Likewise here in the forty-fourth
One should again place the syllable gri.
In the forty-eighth, the mantra practitioner
Always places the syllable hūṃ, the indestructible.
Likewise here in the eighth,
Again the lord of all syllables.
In the fortieth is the syllable ja;
In the sixteenth, the syllable bha;
In the twentieth, the syllable ā;
In the twenty-fourth, the syllable ga;
In the twenty-sixth one again places na;
In the thirtieth one should apply vān;
In the thirty-fourth one places ya;
The syllable rā likewise in the thirty-sixth;
In the forty-second one should place hūṃ.
This completes the vajra yantra.
In the twelve sections
One should insert the name of the one to be accomplished.
Write the syllable hūṃ in the center
Of the names of the targets in all the sections.
Surround it entirely with the root mantra,
And make a garland of vajras.
A pair of wheels should be drawn;
For subjugation, on the base of an earthen bowl.
The yantra arisen from the vajra

Should be properly drawn with the substances of subjugation.
Even the Buddha Vajradhara
Will then quickly come.
From the descent of the five nectars,
The samaya is to be performed there.
Through the fire offering of the inner self
One should know the chief lady of the mantra.
Through the union of the hero in nonduality,
I shall explain the supreme action that follows.
The secret worship of the yogins
Through constant embrace brings about the supreme.
Throughout all the nights the practitioner
Should then worship the messenger.
Having placed the root of the piśāca plant in the mouth,
For as long as one wishes,
For that long the liṅga will be fit for action;
I have not explained it otherwise.
Earth creeper cooked in sesame oil
Should be used to anoint the feet.
The sign of that, O wise one,
Is that it is rigid at all times, O wise one.
Pātha, kaṭuka, rohiṇī,
And horse scent: these
Should be made in equal parts;
The remainder of the rite of great love,
Pounded with the milk of arka:
With this one should rub the liṅga.
To whatever size one wishes,
It will become that size, it is said.
Quickly, if one washes it
With warm water, it returns to its former size.
The filaments of a white lotus,
Pounded with honey, and what comes from it:
If given, the liṅga becomes firm,
And one enjoys Kāminī.
The filaments of a white lotus,
White sesame, and likewise others,

Fresh butter, and the root of the sole-hero plant,
Pounded together with honey:
If one smears it on the navel,
For that long the liṅga will not fall.
The blood of a menstruating woman and the two kinds of turmeric,
With the buttermilk of one who has been taken as wife,
Two measures should be boiled down
Until it has become a single measure.
By drinking it thus for seven days,
One completes the elixir.
Thus the supreme and principal application
Was spoken by the true hero.
Having taken the liver of a monkey,
One should make it into a fine powder.
Fully endowed with one's own faculties,
It is the unsurpassed means of subjugation.

Wherever one may be staying,
Having recited Vajravārāhī,
With the threatening forefinger over which one has recited once,
One should circle to the left and to the right.
Whatever one wishes, all of it,
She bestows it all completely.
Grain, clothing, and gold,
Feasts, food, and drink:
All of these one obtains,
And the mantrin, having taken them, brings them to completion.
The unchanging substance and blood
The practitioner should mix into one;
By reciting the vidyā seven times over it,
And then by smearing it on a person,
At its touch men become crippled;
The word is not otherwise.
By water over which this vidyā
Has been recited once, they are released.
Likewise, by tying on a thread
Anointed with the blood of any being whatever,

Through recitation one seizes the form;
All of these are released by water,
And of this there is no doubt.
Women of beautiful form, kings,
And lords of the earth: if one looks toward them,
Even those the practitioner has not seen,
All of them are summoned.
If one consecrates it seven times,
She comes that very night;
Within seven nights, with the force of an arrow,
She comes, and of this there is no doubt.
Thus, for all rites, those to be done and not to be done,
Arriving at the vajra treasure,
The one whose nature is the application of self-known awareness
Accomplishes gnosis gone to the far shore.
In the grid of the yantra of the elements,
The channel is Rūpiṇī of subtle form;
The syllable is the great wind,
And the deity is the one who goes everywhere.
The green one, the great nondual Self,
The goddess, is the ocean of gnosis.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the thirty-eighth chapter of the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra, called "The Characteristics of the Rites of the Fire Offering for Magnetizing, the Yantra Wheel, and the Vajra Maṇḍala of Śyāmadevī, Nondual with Vajravārāhī."

Then the Lord, the Blessed Ḍāka,
Spoke once again:
Through being fully joined with Lampaka,
The application of the yoginī Subhadrā
Should be known as the power of wisdom.
Likewise the yantra, like the gait of a horse,
Abides through the application of supreme joy,

By the yogin of the root mantra.
Endowed with gnosis, lord of the moving breath,
He fully holds the conventional truth.
Through the all-pervading course of the channels,
Power is present in all the rites.
Entered fully through sleep,
All the life breath is within it.
As if eating at the great rite,
Having worked it with the root mantra,
And having melted the warm nectar,
In its center is the wheel made of the channels.
It has the nature of thirty-seven;
As it hangs down, awakening is born.
The goddess, ever in the form of fire,
Is by nature the heart of the chief goddesses.
Having reached the skeleton, the wind, and consciousness,
Those whose nature is the charnel grounds,
Having known their seed syllables,
The messengers ever generate them.
At the end of the seed syllable of each one
Is the root secret mantra:
oṃ ma jñā hā na pi sā śig ta ra ru pra dhi bhā ra ya ba hūṃ svā hūṃ hā pha ri ṭa ṇe pha hūṃ ṭa hūṃ svā phaṭ hā phaṭ svā hā oṃ su bha dre hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
Thus, having arisen fully from the mantra,
With color and form according to the rite,
The yogin, whose nature is nectar,
Should meditate in the center of the secret place.
One should offer torma and make fire offerings;
Afterward one should undertake these rites.
The mantrin, through the yoga of the deity,
Having done a hundred thousand recitations:
The yantra wheel that brings happiness
To all beings, I shall explain.
Having made the wheel in the form of the previous one,
One should set the secret mantra here.
Vairocana comes first;

Then in the second one should place it.
In the third one should give the syllable hūṃ;
In the fifth, the syllable oṃ.
In the sixth give the syllable gri;
The syllable hūṃ is in the seventh.
In the eighth give the syllable mbha;
In the tenth, the syllable su.
In the twelfth give the syllable hūṃ;
In the fourteenth, the syllable gri.
In the fifteenth, the syllable mbha;
In the sixteenth, likewise, the syllable hūṃ.
In the seventeenth, the syllable su;
In the nineteenth one should join hṇa.
In the twentieth one should give the syllable phaṭ;
The syllable hṇa in the twenty-first.
In the twenty-ninth, Vairocana;
In the thirtieth, two syllables ya;
In the thirty-first, that again.
The first Veda in the thirty-third;
In the thirty-fourth, the syllable ya;
The syllables rā ja in the thirty-fifth;
In the thirty-sixth give the syllable hṇa;
In the thirty-eighth, the syllable gri.
In the fortieth one should give van;
In the forty-second, likewise, ā;
In the forty-third, hṇa;
In the forty-fourth, hūṃ hūṃ;
In the forty-fifth, gri;
In the forty-seventh, na;
In the forty-eighth one should give
The two syllables hūṃ hūṃ.
The sound bha ga is given once more,
In the forty-ninth.
In the rest one should write the root mantra.
It should be accomplished in four wheels.
All around, encircling it,
The mantrin should draw Hayagrīva.

With the second turned to the left,
One should make the yantra, a yantra joined face to face.
As born from the secret syllables
It should be known by the yogin of the innate.
It serves for summoning nāgas, for subjugation,
And for slaying gods and the like.
The yogin whose nature is love
Should always slay his own mind.
Whatever hostility there is toward it,
By that, all are slain.
Otherwise, if one with a hateful mind
Slays, one will not obtain the accomplishments.
Whatever rites belong to the Later Saṃvara,
All of them will certainly be performed.
A little of the rites of each one
I shall explain here in brief.
Likewise the eight nāga kings
Should be meditated on in order, beginning with Ananta.
Vāsuki should be known as the life wind;
The downward-clearing wind is Śaṅkhapāla.
The evenly abiding wind is the nāga Padma;
Meditative concentration is Mahāpadma.
The pervading wind is the nāga Takṣaka;
The nāga wind, again, is Hulu.
The tortoise wind should be known as Ananta;
The lizard wind is the nāga Jaya;
Devadatta is Vijaya;
Dhanañjaya is Ananta.
By drawing the breath in, one summons;
By sending it out, one requests departure.
By the vase breath one brings down rain;
By the even wind it is dispelled.
Likewise the eight consciousnesses
Should here be known as the nāginīs.
Gnosis and space, the other two,
Are the cause of the ten consciousnesses.
One should give eight syllables phuḥ,

And likewise the various samādhis.

Entwined through being born from one another,
In the armpits of those nāginīs.
In the great form of Vajraḍāka
One should accomplish the maṇḍala of the nāgas,
With the colors in their due order,
And the eight watches with their two junctures.
The very utterance of the root mantra
Should be known as the nāgas and nāginīs.
Having made the senses dissolve,
One recites a hundred thousand for each syllable.
Whatever outer rites there are,
One should perform each in the manner of that rite.
One should make the form whatever one wishes,
Whether wrathful or peaceful forms.
Mind is rightly proclaimed to be form;
Therefore she bears the name Subhadrā.
The lord of yogins, the master of all,
By him the deity is made.
Moreover, no deity other
Than the self of outer and inner has been taught.
By his giving expression to all,
The yogin goes wherever he wishes.
Through the fault of the habitual tendencies of beings,
Clouds are seen outside as well;
At the time the tendencies are exhausted,
Clouds and nāgas are not seen.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the thirty-ninth chapter of the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra, called "The Characteristics of the Rites of the Nāga Activities of the Families: A Brief Teaching of the Root Mantra of the Blessed One and of the Horse Mantra, Whose Nature Is the Union Nondual with Subhadrā."

Then, once more, for that reason,
The goddess made offering here,
Endowed with the passion of Vārāhī.
Pleased, the deity gave this teaching:
Having fully joined with Aśvakarṇā,
At all times, in Kāñcī,
With samādhi and the limbs of awakening,
She truly abides in the heart.
The syllable ha and the nāda, throughout the body,
Arise from the very center of the heart.
The syllable yi is the life force of movement;
It is moved by the vajra wind.
However many there are, together with bliss,
Again there are three on each petal:
The qualities of body, speech, and mind,
Twenty-four on the eight petals,
And twelve in the lotus of the navel:
The yoginīs are always thirty-six.
Then, of each one of these here,
At the junctures are the horse and the rest.
The syllable ṇa is not that goddess;
Her nature is both manifest and unmanifest.
Though born in the desire realm, she is a woman
Whose activity takes the form of liberation.
The syllable cyā is the principle of transference;
All are freed from the bounds of awareness.
In the center of the self of thirty-seven,
One should apply oneself to the rite of slaying.
Whatever rites of slaying there are
Are to be performed against one who kills the Guru,
Or one who does harm to the teaching,
Or likewise one who commits the five acts of immediate retribution.
With poison, mustard seed, and salt,
Datura, charcoal from the charnel ground,
And blood from one's own forefinger,
One should carefully draw the wheel.
The yantra of Yama always Does its work; it is not otherwise.

Having understood the grid explained before,
One should set out this garland of secret mantra.
First is Vairocana;
In the second, su is pronounced;
In the third, the syllable mbha is pronounced;
The first Veda, likewise, in the fifth;
In the sixth, likewise, the syllable gri;
And in the seventh, the syllable hṇa.
In the eighth, two syllables hūṃ;
In the ninth, likewise, the syllable phaṭ;
In the tenth, likewise, that syllable;
And again in the twelfth, the syllable hūṃ.
In the thirteenth, the syllable phaṭ;
The syllable gri is in the fourteenth.
The syllable hūṃ in the fifteenth;
The syllable mbha in the sixteenth;
In the seventeenth, the syllable su;
The syllable hūṃ in the nineteenth.
In the twentieth give the syllable hūṃ;
The syllable hṇa in the twenty-first;
Vairocana in the twenty-ninth;
In the thirtieth, again, the syllable gri.
In the thirty-first, the syllable hṇa;
In the thirty-third, Vairocana;
In the thirty-fourth, the syllable ā,
And there one should join the syllable na.
In the thirty-fifth, the seed ya,
And there one should give the syllable ho.
In the thirty-sixth give two hūṃ;
In the thirty-seventh, the syllable phaṭ;
In the thirty-eighth, two pa ya;
In the fortieth, likewise, two hūṃ;
In the forty-first, phaṭ;
In the forty-second, two bha ga;
In the forty-third,
The two syllables pa ya;
In the forty-fourth, hṇa;

In the forty-fifth, the syllable gri;
In the forty-seventh
One should join the sound ra ja.
The sound bidyā, again, the mantrin places
In the forty-eighth segment.
The syllable vān is to be given once more,
In the forty-ninth.
In the rest is the armor mantra,
With the name of the target inserted within.
The faces of Yama in all the corners,
And the hands and feet are placed in the directions.
The heart is the ground of Yama;
One should meditate in its center.
With the nature of the union of gnosis and consciousness,
The wise one should engage in the conduct of mantra.
The one who despises the Guru and the sacred commitments
Is consciousness and the inferior intellect.
The one who does harm to the teaching
Is the sense sources, the eye and the rest.
The one who commits the five acts of immediate retribution
Is the aggregates, the elements, and likewise the rest.
The family that is one for all beings
Is the aggregates and so forth, and the elements.
For the lords of yogins,
Slaying is the slaying of the element of beings.
Having looked upon the face of whoever it may be,
The form having the nature of that one
Is slain by gnosis in its habitual tendencies;
It is not that other beings are slain.
Or else, by performing the rite of slaying them,
It is like that slaying.
The fire offering with poison and other substances
Should be performed by one in the form of true awareness.
One should call to mind the maṇḍala wheel there;
The burning is in Caṇḍī.
Born from the seed syllables
Is the maṇḍala of Aśvakarṇā,

With color and shape as before.
Great is the offering of wisdom and means.
oṃ śrī saṣṭi rba saṃ mā hā ra ra ba kā la ra ṅhāṃ kā si ya ne hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ svā svā hā hā oṃ ha yā ka hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
The assembly, filled with amazement
And terrified, fell to the ground.
Alas! The worlds that do not know this way
Are bewildered indeed.
Abiding in every bliss,
One subdues them here by their life breath.
As the beings fell to the ground in amazement,
Vajrapāṇi and the others rose,
Set their knees upon the ground,
And said, "Great Being, I ask:

By what are the self and whose very being,
Their slaying, or else the rite,
And the nature of result and cause,
O Blessed One, where are these established?
If you have said that, by its own results,
It is like that slaying,
Or else that the cause lies with the Blessed One
And the result is the slaying of a person,
My lord, please speak!
Please dispel this doubt."
He declared:
"With one-pointed mind, to these words
Listen, O Vajra!
The result accords with the action.
I am the abode of all bliss;
By the power of that action
You are buddhas and bodhisattvas.
The nature of cause and result,
Because it is nondual, has become one.
That is the cause of all things;
For the wise, action is the condition.

Armies and the like on the great earth:
By the seeing of the wise,
One should make all of them nondual in nature;
Therefore it is endowed with slaying.
By slaying the self there is buddhahood itself,
Not by slaying all other people.
By the power of time, within a kingdom,
It is accomplished with little effort.
Therefore, having examined former karma,
The wise should designate the elements,
In this place and that,
As having the nature of the heroes.
By slaying the self in that way,
The elements of beings are just that.
Having carefully generated love,
One must certainly slay.
In this world and in the world beyond,
One lacking in love will not succeed."
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the fortieth chapter of the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra, called "Slaying: The Characteristics of the Rite of the Armor Mantra and the Root Mantra through the Union Nondual of Aśvakarṇā and the Hero."

Next, the application for causing madness,
Hard to find anywhere,
Through full union with Khagānanā,
I shall explain in brief.
Diligence, the quality that is a limb of awakening,
Has truly entered Himālaya.
In the center of the maṇḍala of the navel
One should meditate on the chief lady of the wheel.
The messenger whose very nature is the form of space,
In the palate, and in the center of the vajra and the lotus:
Consciousness, together with the wind,

Is shot upward with the force of an arrow.
The body should be made to tremble;
This is done by applying fierce force.
The yogin who practices this constantly
Will accomplish the supreme undefiled state.
As long as the yogin does not wish it,
Wind and consciousness will not move.
The life wind that has reached the nostrils
Should be moved into the center of the navel.
By joining the navel and the two nostrils,
And holding it there, it will not move.
Wind and consciousness together:
That is wandering about in madness.
At that time, for one whose nature is this union,
Whatever things are seen
Turn into things resembling that.
With a fire offering in a fire of datura,
One should burn hair hung on a tree
And piśāca root.
Through the full application of this rite,
A buddha goes mad in an instant.
Therefore diligence, the limb of awakening,
Should be actualized from these.
Through diligence, by seeing perfect awakening,
One will always attain it swiftly.
The syllable hi, as the gnosis that hangs down,
Was explained by the Hero himself.
The syllable mā, too, is self-awareness;
Abiding in the state of the aspects of the self,
In dissolution and enjoyment, the form of the aspects,
One endowed with the body of a buddha will be born.
Those who are aware, whose nature is self-awareness,
Having worked for the benefit of beings, will pass on.
In the center of the self of thirty-seven
One should meditate on the yoginī of the rite,
With color and form as before,
Arisen from the application of secret mantra:

oṃ a sa ntra rba mā nā lā gā dhā nāṃ ri śo ṇe ṣa hūṃ ṇa hūṃ sta phaṭ mbha phaṭ na svā bi hā dhrā ba ṇā ya hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā oṃ kha gā na ne hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
The one whose nature is the application of this mantra
Has the nature of wisdom and means.
Just as before,
I shall explain the yantra wheel.
On the wheel of the pretas, always,
One should set out this garland of mantra.
First is Vairocana;
In the second one should join mbha;
In the third, give that same one likewise;
In the fifth, the first of the Vedas;
The syllable hṇa should be given in the sixth;
The syllable hūṃ is set in the seventh;
In the eighth, the syllable śu;
In the ninth, one should give that same one.
In the tenth one should give two hūṃ;
The syllable gri, again, in the twelfth;
In the thirteenth, the syllable hṇa;
In the fourteenth, the syllable hūṃ;
In the fifteenth, the syllable ni;
The syllable hūṃ is set in the sixteenth;
In the seventeenth, the syllable phaṭ;
The syllable gri in the nineteenth;
Give the syllable hūṃ in the twentieth;
The syllable phaṭ in the twenty-first;
Vairocana in the twenty-ninth;
In the thirtieth, set the syllable hṇa again;
In the thirty-first, give that same one;
In the thirty-third, Vairocana;
In the thirty-fourth, the two ya ho;
In the thirty-fifth, the two rā ja;
Give the syllable gri in the thirty-sixth;
In the thirty-seventh, that same one;
In the thirty-eighth, the two hūṃ hūṃ;
In the fortieth, the word ā na ya;

In the forty-first, van;
Two hūṃ in the forty-second;
In the forty-third, pa ya;
In the forty-fourth, that same one;
In the forty-fifth, hūṃ and phaṭ;
bha ga in the forty-seventh;
In the forty-eighth, hūṃ;
In the forty-ninth, phaṭ.
In the empty spaces, the heart mantra,
With the name of the target inserted within.
Everywhere around, one should draw pretas
Seizing the yantra with their mouths.
On cloth from the charnel ground
It is to be made face to face.
This wheel, in the place of the navel,
The wise one should meditate on.
The preta is the essential nature of the dharmadhātu;
Because it devours conceptual thought, it is Yama.
The horse, too, is in what is a place and what is not a place.
The vajra, through the awakening of the essence;
The gait of the nāga is the nature
Of all the people of the Great Vehicle.
Virtue and nonvirtue are the vetāla;
It proceeds by deceiving beings.
The others, the three vehicles,
Are taught to those with former karma.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the forty-first chapter of the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra, called "The Rite, together with the Heart Mantra, of the Ritual of the Characteristics of the Nature of the Yantra Wheel for Causing Madness, Nondual of Khagānanā and the Hero."

Then, through union with Cakravegā,
I shall explain the wheel of the serpents.

In Pretapurī, the limb of awakening
Called joy, in brief:
It paralyzes all forces,
Its activity reaching wheel-turning monarchs and the rest.
With turmeric mixed with lac
One should draw the yantra on a skull cup.
One practices it at all times,
At the navel and the other places, three with a half.
With the form of a vetāla as one's nature,
It paralyzes going and coming.
Together with a woman, an excellent mudrā,
One should gradually let out the breath.
Consciousness, the chief, the lord of all,
Dissolves into the blisses.
It does not move,
O wise one, at any time.
For it, all acts are absent;
The nature of what is done fully arises.
Through the rite, the buddha field
And its place should be measured.
Whatever thing the yogin calls to mind,
That very thing he paralyzes at once.
Engaging in it through that rite,
One should not again call to mind other rites.
In this place and that, all people
Will bring about great awakening.
Moreover, having passed into complete nirvāṇa,
They enter from great bliss.
rī here is the nature of passion;
It acts upon all people.
Born from joy, the limb of awakening,
The nature has arisen there.
Abiding in the state of Cakravegā,
One should thus perform the rite of paralysis.
Color and shape are as before;
One should meditate in the center of the wheel.
Mantra, shape, and the nature of the Dharma

Will arise in that place.
oṃ kro su dha me bi ru gra ka ha ma dhā pi ra ta ṇā nā ya dā hūṃ ya hūṃ hūṃ pha hūṃ ṭa pha pha ṭa ṭa pha svā ṭa hā svā hā oṃ cakra be ge hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
This secret mantra of the great goddess,
Supreme, has the nature of wisdom and means.
The wheel, too, is as explained before,
Made of fifty less one.
First is Vairocana;
The syllable su, again, in the second;
In the third segment one should give mbha;
The syllable ni likewise in the fourth.
In the fifth one should give the syllable su;
Again, in the sixth, the syllable mbha.
The syllable hūṃ should be given in the seventh;
The syllable of wind in the eighth.
The syllable gri should be given in the ninth;
In the tenth, likewise, the syllable hṇa.
In the eleventh give pa;
Then in the twelfth, the syllable ya.
The syllable hūṃ in the thirteenth;
In the fourteenth, the syllable hūṃ.
The syllable pa in the fifteenth;
The syllable baṃ should be set in the sixteenth.
The syllable bi in the seventeenth;
Again, the syllable dyā in the eighteenth.
In the twentieth less one, rā;
In the twentieth, set hūṃ again;
In the twenty-first, give that same one;
Set the syllable hṇa in the twenty-second.
The syllable ga in the twenty-third;
In the twenty-fourth, the syllable phaṭ.
In the twenty-sixth give the syllable ja;
The syllable hūṃ in the twenty-seventh.
In the twenty-eighth, the syllable phaṭ;
The syllable gri in the twenty-ninth.
In the thirtieth, the syllable bha;

In the thirty-first, the syllable hūṃ.
In the thirty-second, give that same one;
The syllable hūṃ in the thirty-third.
The syllable phaṭ in the thirty-fourth;
In the thirty-fifth one should set oṃ.
In the thirty-sixth, give that same one;
In the thirty-seventh, likewise, ho.
The ya in the thirty-eighth,
And in the thirty-ninth.
In the fortieth one should give ā;
In the forty-first, oṃ.
The syllable gri in the forty-second;
In the forty-third one should set phaṭ.
The syllable hūṃ in the forty-fourth;
In the forty-fifth, hūṃ;
In the forty-sixth one should give hūṃ;
In the forty-seventh, hṇa.
The syllable gri in the forty-eighth;
In the fiftieth less one, hṇa.
Thus the yantra wheel,
Born from the throat, should always be set out.
All paralysis comes from the great body;
The life force has the great nature of the vajra.
Whatever is applied in that way
Paralyzes beings who do harm.
Release, for all beings,
Is again by the mind of the yogin.
From practicing it for one year
It is accomplished; of this there is no doubt.
The near-heart mantra
Should be written properly in the central square.
Having inserted the name of the target within,
One should make wind and consciousness dissolve.
It is renowned as the coiled serpent;
The yantra, too, belongs to embodied beings.
The mountain goes to the heap;
The mind of awakening is the skull cup.

Upon it is the very giving,
By whichever yantra the wise one uses.
All the syllables are its nature,
And it should be known from the days and nights as well.
The waves of the great servant of the mind
Are what is to be paralyzed.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the forty-second chapter of the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra, the chapter of ritual called "The Nature of the Characteristics of the Union Nondual with the Hero: The Rite of Paralysis of Cakravegā."

Then, through union with Khaṇḍarohā,
I shall clearly explain the rite as it is.
Having made the hearth for all the rites,
And the fire offering according to the ritual,
By seeing the rituals of the rites,
One should accomplish the rite of expulsion.
In the place Gṛhadevatā,
As pliancy, the limb of awakening:
The mind of awakening at the aperture of space, too,
The great holder, is shot upward.
What is to be dried up, through the aspect of aḥ,
Should be held firmly in the head.
By the syllable ṇḍa it is made to go,
Circling all about with the force of an arrow.
Having meditated on it with the maṇḍala of wind,
A victory banner in the center of the head,
That consciousness will be generated.
Across hundreds of thousands and thousands of leagues,
One attains buddhahood without remainder.
That yogin, in the three worlds,
With hā hā he he in eight ways,
Laughs through the yoga of the ḍākas.
Through the act of going to Khecara,

The yoginī does so there.
From one's own small, constant going upward,
One should know that one dies at home.
It steals away all evil,
Having the ritual of the lord of hatred.
The whole of the Great Vehicle should be given,
Always without concealment.
The consolation of the vajra holder, too,
Should be extended to all beings.
For as long as one does not act toward the target,
For that long one is a great vajra yogin.
Pliancy, in all phenomena,
As the nature of gnosis and the knowable,
Should be viewed as the very limb of awakening;
That mind is everything that bears phenomena.

Thus, knowing the particular phenomena,
The awakening of the buddhas is fully taught.
It is expulsion into the Great Vehicle;
It should be completed with this fire offering.
Crow flesh, wings, and sinews,
And the perch of a vulture,
One should burn with one's mind fixed on that one.
If it drives out even the buddhas,
What need is there to speak of all the beings
Of the small world of the earth?
In the center of the self of thirty-seven
One should meditate on the one explained before,
Arisen from the syllables of the mantra,
Having the nature of wisdom and means:
oṃ bu ma dha hā ko kā ṭi śa sa ti ha ya sra kā kṣa tma ṇā ne ni hūṃ ṣpā hūṃ da phaṭ nā phaṭ ya svā hūṃ hā hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā oṃ khaṇḍa ro hi hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
Arisen fully from this mantra,
The yantra has the very nature of the previous one.
In the grid made of fifty less one,
In the places of the mantra beautiful in harming:

First is Vairocana;
In the second one should give that same one.
The syllable ā should be given in the third;
In the fourth, the syllable na;
In the fifth, the syllable ya;
In the sixth one should give the syllable ya;
In the seventh, the syllable su;
In the eighth, the syllable phaṭ;
In the ninth, likewise, the syllable su;
In the tenth, Vairocana;
The syllable gri should be set in the eleventh;
In the twelfth, the syllable hṇā;
In the thirteenth, the syllable mbha;
In the fourteenth, the seed na;
In the fifteenth, likewise, two hūṃ;
In the sixteenth, hūṃ phaṭ;
In the seventeenth, Vairocana;
In the eighteenth, the syllable hṇā;
In the nineteenth one should set gri;
In the twentieth give the syllable pa;
In the twenty-first one should join ya;
In the twenty-third, the syllable hūṃ;
In the twenty-fourth set hūṃ phaṭ;
Give the syllable hūṃ in the twenty-sixth;
In the twenty-seventh one should join ya;
The syllable hūṃ in the twenty-ninth;
The syllable ja should be given first;
In the thirtieth, give that same one;
The syllable gri in the thirty-first;
In the thirty-second, the syllable hūṃ;
The syllable hṇa in the thirty-third;
In the thirty-fourth one should give gri;
In the thirty-fifth one should set ho;
In the thirty-sixth, the syllable rā;
In the thirty-seventh, the two hūṃ phaṭ;
In the thirty-eighth, the seed ya;
In the fortieth less one, ya;

In the fortieth one should give hṇa;
In the forty-first, hūṃ;
The syllable bha in the forty-second;
In the forty-third, ni;
In the forty-fourth, dyā;
In the forty-fifth, bi;
In the forty-seventh, vān;
In the forty-eighth, ga;
The syllable mbha in the forty-ninth.
The yantra should be placed in a vetāla.
The target, in five sections,
Together with the armor of the six yoginīs,
Should be enclosed within the secret mantra,
And it should be placed in the mouth of the vetāla.
With the name of whoever it may be,
One should draw the yantra with great love.
It should be known as belonging to that one,
And the wise one expels them.
The great secret is not to be shown;
It is accomplished in this very life,
Even by a yogin who has not recited the secret mantra
And is without meditation.
By the permission of the Guru and the yoginīs,
The all-pervading lord acts as he wishes.
Therefore one should attend upon the Guru,
And those of great nature should please him.
Through his delight one attains it;
Through the rite, awakening arises.
At the time the yantra dawns,
One should meditate on it in the head.
By that it should be known as fully accomplished;
At other times it is not accomplished.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the forty-third chapter of the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra, called "The Characteristics of the Ritual of the Armor Mantra of the Six Yoginīs: The Rite of Expulsion with the Yantra Wheel, Meditating on the Full Union of Khaṇḍarohā."

Then, the yantra for causing enmity
Between a pair of vetālas, likewise,
Through full union with Śauṇḍinī,
I shall explain in brief.
Having accomplished the place Saurāṣṭra,
The limb that is the full discrimination of phenomena,
So that awakening is attained without doubt,
One should know the supreme Kāminī.
As joining with the great intoxicant,
It is explained by the syllable śau.
The sublime substance of the elixir, too,
Is held in the supreme lotus.
Whatever thread is in the center of the brows,
Having gone inside the vajra jewel,
As it is born from union,
The syllable ṇḍi is not to be drunk by touching it oneself.
There, without touching, through consciousness,
One should drink the supreme water.
It is within selflessness;
That is explained by the syllable nī.
By drinking gnosis such as this,
All the senses become fully intoxicated,
And then, being divided among themselves,
They are made to quarrel by the mind.
Sporting in great bliss:
I have explained it as the syllables sau yiṃ.
Through the application of binding the rasanā,
One should suck the lower lip.
In the yantra of the horse and the buffalo,
The division is into the life wind and the downward-clearing wind.
The syllable ṣṭa, in all the joints,
Brings knowledge, without doubt.
Through that limb of full discrimination

One realizes the awakening of the selflessness of phenomena.
The yogin endowed with this
Divides and slays
All the senses and their objects,
And enjoys the world of Akṣobhya.
By slaying them with love,
He himself possesses the cause of liberation.
In the center of the maṇḍala wheel
One meditates on the supreme chief lady.
In the region between the brows, forms,
White or red, and the weapons,
Arise fully at that very time.
In the thirty-seven syllables,
The form whose nature is wisdom and means
Should be known as the supreme chief.
oṃ sa jñā rba nā ka mṛ rma ta pra ba barṣā rta pa nā ṇā ya ya ne hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ svā svā hā hā oṃ śauṇḍi nī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
The great yogin whose nature is meditation
Should perform the rite as his mind desires.
With ink made from charcoal of the charnel ground,
One should write with a human bone.
The lunar mansion for all medicines
Is Puṣya and the rest, through the equality of the elements.
The wheel is as has been described;
Its segments, too, are fifty less one.
In the secret mantra of the mutual pair
The wise one should set out the syllables.
In the four corners is Vairocana;
The four doors are empty.

As for the rest, in the first row,
Filling the four segments in order,
One should set out hṇa sumbha gri.
Then in the seven segments of the second,
gri ya hoḥ gri bha ga pa ya
bā na bi phaṭ: write these in order.

In the third, on the sides of the middle,
One should place three on each side:
Place phaṭ hṇa hūṃ hūṃ hṇā.
In the fourth, from the center in every Direction leaving out one each,
And in the middle of the two doors,
The right and the left, two syllables each:
One should place pa ya dyā rā.
What is to be set out in the fifth row
Is three on each side of the middle:
Set out hūṃ pa ya hūṃ hūṃ gri su.
These, in their order just as here,
Are to be known for the sixth row:
hṇa an hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ, and likewise
phaṭ ja hūṃ phaṭ, in their proper order.
All the mantras are to be placed;
This is explained for the seventh segments.
Leaving out the doors, in order,
One should place hūṃ hūṃ mbha hūṃ.
This is the greatest of great yantras.
In the five central segments,
And likewise in the four doors,
The name of the one to be subdued is inserted,
Together with the mantra of a hundred feet.
The vetāla that comes to fight
Should be seized by the wise one.
The yantra goes into their belly;
It will succeed, of this there is no doubt.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
The Tathāgata Vajraḍāka,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the forty-fourth chapter, called "The Nature of the Yantra Wheel of the Rite of Characteristics Distinguished by the Application of Śauṇḍinī," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next, the samādhi of Cakravarmiṇī
I shall explain clearly:
Through the application of Cakravarmiṇī,
It is the rite of binding into muteness.
The site of Suvarṇadvīpa, the Golden Isle,
And then mindfulness, the limb of awakening;
The yantra in the form of a rākṣasa
Is employed in another rite.
On the ground of the crown and the soles
The wise one should perform it.
In the great battle of the gods and the asuras
They fell speechless; so it enters among humans.
At that time the great form
Was beheld through the samādhi of the wheel.
What is explained by the two syllables
Is the binding of the moving mind.
The suppressed phenomenon of consciousness:
Make it dissolve into the midst of form.
The sublime Dharma taught in the tantra
Is here explained by two mudrās.
Likewise, through the former conduct as well,
One will practice the mudrā of union.
In the chapter of all the instructions,
By meditating on what has that as its cause,
Gradually, all of this, profoundly,
One purifies by oneself.
Space, spaceless, great space,
Utter space, not of space:
It descends into the upward-facing channel.
As long as the line is not seen,
So long one obtains it without interruption.
How could the bliss born of joy not descend as well?
Through the mingling of entity and nonentity
Beings arise on every side.
Nonentity is not of the nature of form;
Bliss is born from all nonentities.
One is carried to abide on the path;
Whatever is there, just as it is, so it is.

Wisdom abides like one who is mute;
The binding is born of one's own mudrā.
Through this one goes into muteness,
And like an enemy it pierces all.
If even Vajradhara is struck mute,
What need is there to speak of petty beings?
Through awareness the agent does everything;
Another agent is not possible.
Sumanā and the person itself:
From the instant one comes to know selflessness,
One then abides in the Vajrayāna;
Intrinsic nature is held to be selfless.
Expression, and the expression of selflessness too,
Do not arise through yogic seeing.
The great yoga that rises from that
Is the syllable hṇa, not through other entities.
The churning and churning of the two
Is first from the crown to the end of the feet.
Through joining the two together,
The central arrow is born of mantra.
What is aimed at by the aiming of the target:
There is neither target nor one who aims.
The thread, like a fine fiber,
The yogin follows to the final place.
Arrow and bow are not seen;
Wherever it is released, let it go.
Then all living beings become mute;
Of this there is no doubt.
One meditates on the wheel of the maṇḍala,
And in its center sets this out:
The goddess Cakravarmiṇī,
With color and shape as before,
Arisen from the mantra syllables,
Supreme, whose nature is wisdom and skillful means.
oṃ sa ba rba ndha bi na ka ka la rā pa ya bha hūṃ ñja hūṃ na pha ka ṭa rā pha ya ṭa hūṃ svā hūṃ hā phaṭ phaṭ svā hā oṃ ca kra barmi ṇī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā

Thus, with the mantra as the very nature of the application,
One should accomplish the muteness of consciousness.
Having drawn the yantra described before,
One should set out this garland of secret mantra.
First is Vairocana;
In the second, place van;
The syllable bi should be placed in the third;
In the fourth, the syllable hūṃ;
In the fifth, the syllable bya;
In the sixth segment, place rā;
In the seventh, the syllable gri;
In the eighth, the syllable ga;
In the ninth, place the syllable mbha;
In the tenth, set out the syllable hṇa again;
The syllable gri is in the eleventh;
The syllable hūṃ should be set in the twelfth;
In the thirteenth, the syllable gri;
In the fourteenth, the syllable ja;
In the fifteenth, the syllable bha;
Set out the two pa ya in the sixteenth;
In the seventeenth, the syllable su;
Set out the syllable pha in the eighteenth;
In the one less than twenty, place hūṃ;
In the twentieth, the syllable ṭa;
In the twenty-first, the syllable hūṃ;
In the twenty-second there is hūṃ;
In the twenty-third, the syllable gri;
The syllable hūṃ is in the twenty-fourth;
In the twenty-sixth, place the syllable ṭa;
In the twenty-seventh, the syllable pha;
The syllable hūṃ is in the twenty-eighth;
The syllable hoḥ in the twenty-ninth;
In the thirtieth, place the syllable hṇā;
In the thirty-first, set out hṇa;
Place the syllable hūṃ in the thirty-second;
Here in the thirty-third, the syllable mbha;
In the thirty-fourth, the syllable hūṃ,

And that same one in the thirty-fifth;
In the thirty-sixth, place the syllable yi;
The syllable hṇā is in the thirty-seventh;
In the thirty-eighth, the two pa ya;
In the one less than forty, hūṃ;
In the fortieth, place hūṃ;
In the forty-first, the syllable bha;
Place the syllable hūṃ in the forty-second;
In the forty-third, oṃ;
The two syllables ya na are to be placed
In the forty-fourth segment;
In the forty-fifth, ā na;
In the forty-sixth, likewise phaṭ;
In the forty-seventh, oṃ;
In the forty-eighth, phaṭ;
In the forty-ninth, place su.
All are in the order just as given.

In the central segment, the name of the one to be subdued
Is inserted within ka ra ka ra and the rest.
Having gathered it all and understood it,
To bind someone into muteness,
At a doorway over which rats pass,
Hide the yantra together with an ox's hoof.
Having written the syllables in the avadhūtī,
Place the name firmly in its center.
Having made rākṣasas in all the directions,
One accomplishes the yantra.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
The Tathāgata Vajraḍāka,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the forty-fifth chapter, called "The Wheel of the Yantra in the Form of a Rākṣasa: The Characteristics of the Rite of Applying Cakravarmiṇī to Cause Muteness, the Meditation on the Wheel, and the Yoga Nondual with the Hero," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next I shall clearly explain the rite
Of Suvīrā, which brings pacification.
It is to be done through those applications.
She dwells perfectly in Nagara;
She is equanimity, the limb of awakening;
The wheel of the deities, of great miraculous power.
At the site of the forehead one should meditate
On the goddess, the mistress of beings.
From the perfect union of the two organs
The great channel is filled with bliss.
From its moving up to the end of the twelve,
Here the seed does not stir.
The senses and all the rest
Will attain freedom from attachment.
The great yoga is the bliss of sameness,
Yet again it has no intrinsic nature of bliss.
Free from the stains of attachment, aversion and darkness,
One attains the great far shore.
Through that joy
One plays with the male in nonduality.
There is nothing other than the three vehicles.
At all times they watch over them:
Walking, lying down and eating
Are given up by accomplishing yoga.
Through amorous delight, play and games,
And through singing songs, there is no defilement.
Therefore it is equanimity, the limb of awakening,
Because it has left behind every state.
When it is done in this way for pacification,
It is accomplished through an unfailing gaze.
Whatever sentient beings,
The sick and the rest, one looks upon,
For each and every one of those beings
It becomes a rite of pacification.
If even buddhahood comes swiftly,
What need is there to speak of minor rites?
In the center of the assembly of yoginīs
One should meditate on Suvīrā.

The goddess is always white in color;
The rest is supreme, as before.
Through the application of the garland of secret mantra
Wisdom and skillful means arise.
Through the rites of torma and fire offering
The intelligent one, with pacifying substances,
Curd, butter, milk and foods,
Should here make offerings of oblations.
With camphor, sandalwood and the like
One should draw the yantra as before.
oṃ pa mu ra ṇḍā kṝ ba ta lī ya la ntra ga ma na ntra śa nā rī śa rā nā ya ya hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ svā svā hā hā oṃ su bī rī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
These mantra syllables are the seeds,
The cause of arising and of abiding.
All the seeds of wisdom
The mantrin places at the forehead and the rest.
From the time of the yogins' play
They are generated and they cease.
In the forty-nine segments
One should set out this garland of mantra.
In the eight segments outside the central one,
In the order of the directions and the intermediate directions,
Are the four seeds of Vairocana
And the four syllables hūṃ.
Outside that, in sixteen segments,
In the order of the directions and the intermediate directions,
One should set out eight syllables hūṃ,
And then the words grihṇa grihṇa;
sumbha ni goes in the remaining segments.
Outside that, in the twenty-four,
mbha gri hṇā pa ya gri hṇā pa ya
Is to be written here;
The words ā na ya ā na ya hoḥ,
bha ga bān bidyā rā ja,
And then the syllable phaṭ should be written.
In the central segment, the one to be accomplished

Is inserted within the mantra of Sumbha.
One should write it on the mouth of the deity's image.
In this way the deity's yantra
Should be placed in the position of the effigy.
One should know all the conduct thoroughly;
At any other time it will not succeed.
At the time of the drop and the sound,
Through the stability of the shape of the wind,
If buddhas and the minds of awakening
Pass into peace, into nirvāṇa,
What need is there to speak again
Of pacifying works for those of the world upon the earth?
The lord of yogins who does this
Is worshiped by gods and asuras.
If he too attains buddhahood itself,
What need to speak of those who attend on him?
By the world and the great ones, the buddhas and the rest,
He is worthy of homage and worthy of offerings.
Through meditative concentration, mantra recitation,
Fire offering, sacrifice (yāga) and the rest, supremely,
Pacification and the mind of awakening
Will be accomplished; of this there is no doubt.
By reciting the root mantra
All the rites will be accomplished.
Through the forty-eight feet
Omniscience arises in this very life.
One will see Vajravārāhī,
Nondual with glorious Heruka.
She grants his supreme attainment:
Dissolving into one's own wheel-turning monarch.
Those who accomplish the mudrā
Become supremely marvelous.
Dwelling together with the ḍākinīs,
One attains it in site after site.
If one does not know Heruka's mantra and yantra
And all the rites,
That is pointless, utter weariness:

One will wander in the six destinies,
And for hundreds of koṭis of births
All the beings of the world are not freed.
Abiding in the state of glorious Heruka,
One is freed by the power of mantra.
With great love one should know how to approach
Vārāhī and the other yoginīs.
The aspect of the bliss of union
Is neither woman nor man nor neuter;
As a mere entity, to sentient beings,
The tathāgatas have taught it.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
The Tathāgata Vajraḍāka,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the forty-sixth chapter, called "The Collection of Rites of the Sumbha Mantra, and the Meditation on the Wheel of the Yantra: The Characteristics of the Rite of Applying Suvīrā's Pacifying Activity," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then the goddess, having made offerings,
Asked in these words:
"The great rite of protecting all,
O all-pervading Lord, I do not know."

"O Vārāhī, goddess who holds the lotus of divine substance,
Listen! I shall explain it fully.
Through the application of Mahābalā
The site of Sindhu is accomplished.
As the very nature of right view
One should know the supreme mātṛkā.
In this way one should ascertain that reality
And enter into the supreme meditation.
In the delightful town of the wheel of mātṛkās
One should meditate on the chief lady of the heroes.
Through the reasoning of innate awakening,
Whatever is indicated is of her nature.
First is hā, as in the progression:

This is the characteristic of the fierce application.
Having fully focused on all the yoga,
The youthful one rising from the root of the aggregates
Is held in the skull at the crown of the head.
Reaching the aperture of Oḍḍiyāna
And attaining the site of the navel,
It is held by the seeds of awakening.
So that it may be seized by the night,
It is made full with all the elements.
Having reached the path of the lalanā,
It is truly known in its former site.
With the element melted by the fire
One should fill all the hollows of the channels.
In all the world realms,
In a single instant, one looks and sees.
In the middle of the course of the moon
One should gaze at what hangs at the door.
Having understood and accomplished the supreme union,
One should contemplate oneself as having its nature.
Into the aperture that reaches the ūrṇā between the brows
One should insert the tongue of the wind.
Through the stages of meditation of the yogas
It is to be known as right view.
One should meditate on the wisdom yoginī,
Supreme, the embodiment of the thirty-seven,
Arisen from the syllables of the mantra,
Supreme, the embodiment of wisdom and skillful means.
oṃ du ma ṣa hā ṭā ra nāṃ kṣā bi ka dā rā la ya ne hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ pha pha ṭa ṭa pha pha ṭa ṭa svā svā hā hā jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ oṃ ma hā ba le hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
From this mantra the great goddess,
A body of wisdom, perfectly arises.
One should always draw the yantra of awakening,
Square, together with a circle.
In its forty-nine segments
The four secret mantras, properly,
Should be written, one in each segment.

In five segments is the practitioner,
Inserted within gha gha and the rest,
In the hand of the bodhisattva;
It is to be written with bezoar,
Or else with great bezoar.
All the yantras, on birch bark,
Are written according to the particular rite.
On cloth from a great battlefield
All the rites are to be performed."
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
The Tathāgata Vajraḍāka,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the forty-seventh chapter, called "The Characteristics of the Rite of the Instruction on Meditating on the Bodhisattva Yantra, the Rite of the Kīla Mantra, the Great Protection through the Application of Mahābalā," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next I shall explain all the supreme rites
As they arise for all sentient beings.
In the application of Cakravartinī
One should accomplish them at the site of Maru.
Right thought abides
As a factor of awakening.
Increase is to be accomplished; after that
The wise one performs the rite.
By kindling Caṇḍī at the navel
All the joints are burned;
Having burned the eyes and the rest,
Through the burning, drops drip from the palate.
It goes forth in every direction,
A net of lotus fiber threads.
Piercing as it goes, it tastes
The seventy-two thousand.
The wisdom of dullness and torpor,
Although it does not go, will come.
The yogin of this mudrā

Accomplishes it through a year's practice.
Fully endowed with that and with this,
He will perform all the rites.
"Joy in all the worlds":
So it is called; one goes forth as its very nature.
If one carries that conceptual thought along,
One will not go a single step.
Having become the essence of all the joints,
One will see that as one's own seat.
Because of this, unafraid of death,
One abides fully in another's seat.
Whatever rites they look to,
All of those they perform.
Knowing it from the time of death:
That is held to be the seat of yoga.
Omniscient and accomplishing all the rites,
Because it is the supreme secret seat.
The very application of right thought
Becomes a factor of awakening.
The flesh of cattle, horses, humans and dogs,
Elephants, buffaloes and donkeys,
Camels, mice and cats,
Pigs and monkeys,
Mixed with something sour:
One who desires accomplishments should make a fire offering with it.
If one attains the natural accomplishment,
Why not the eight accomplishments as well?
The sword, eye ointment and foot salve,
Pills, mercury and boots,
The elixir and the underworld,
And summoning too, are accomplished.
For the accomplishment of raising a vetāla,
With the milk of a black bitch
And a porridge of black māṣa beans,
On the night of the fourteenth, the pretas' night,
Or on the eighth day, the mantrin
Likewise makes a fire offering in the mouth of a corpse.

Having carefully taken mustard seed oil from the charnel ground
And melted butter,
With that one should anoint the hero,
And that same night make the full proclamation.
The great preta rises
And grinds to dust upon the ground of the great power.
One should never be afraid of it,
For it is produced through the application of one's own conditions.
Sesame or sesame oil, or anything else,
Whatever is suitable, having taken it,
The yogins give it for the sake of beings,
And so it goes everywhere.
Tārā, Cundā and Marīcī,
Bhṛkuṭī and Parṇaśabarī,
And the great wrathful ones, with Yamāntaka and the rest:
Meditation and mantra recitation
A hundred thousand times destroys wrongdoing,
And ten million times brings one to meet them.
They grant whatever accomplishment is desired,
And one enters the stream.
Or else one knows poetry
And expounds the meaning of scripture.
One knows everything, the languages of all,
And comes to know what is unseen.
Subduing and caring for all,
One does everything in accord with the Dharma.
Tārā and the other supreme yoginīs
Are to be known as other forms of oneself.
As the form that gathers all of these,
Meditate on Cakravartinī.
She holds manifold forms;
Through them she is the Cakravartinī.

oṃ tā re tuttva re tu re svā hā oṃ cunde svā hā
oṃ mā ri cyai svā hā oṃ bhrī ku ṭī svā hā

oṃ parṇṇa śa ba rī svā hā
In this way the yantras of all of them
Are also made with the syllables of the mantras.
As the cause of generation and of abiding
They should be accomplished by the appropriate method.
Enveloped all around by garlands of light rays,
They should be held in the wheel of the heart.
This destroys the fear of death
And brings the attainment of freedom from aging and death.
The goddess Cakravartinī,
Supreme embodiment of wisdom and skillful means,
With her own color and shape,
Arises perfectly from the mantra syllables.
oṃ kro dha dharmo sphā dha ra ya sphā ka ra rā ṇā ya ya hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ pha pha ṭa ṭa pha pha ṭa ṭa svā svā hā hā oṃ cakra bartti nī ye hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
Thus arisen perfectly from the mantra
Is she who turns the wheel of the ḍākinīs.
One should draw the asura yantra:
In its forty-nine segments
The mantras of the deities, as they are,
With the name of the one to be subdued inserted,
And the heart mantra of Vārāhī as well,
Are written in each of the segments.
On the outside, with all the mantras,
One should always encircle it here.
On cloth from a battlefield,
Having drawn it fully with all the substances,
The yantra for all the rites
Should be placed in the mouth of an asura.
Applying it through the days and nights of a year,
One should meditate at each of the junctures of the sessions.
One should draw the yantra of Yamāri:
In its seventeen segments,
Placing sixteen on the outside,
One should set out this mantra: hrīḥ ṣṭrī ya ma me da kṣe rā jā sa do ru ṇa yo ni rā ya ccha ni.

Having written the great mantra in this way,
One should accomplish all the rites.
Through the chief of each syllable
The rites too are seventeen.
Having inserted the name of the one to be subdued,
The wise should write the heart mantras of Yama
On the outside, with the syllables
In reverse order.
It utterly destroys fears, the royal clans,
And all enemies.
Further, for binding the clay drum,
The all-pervading Lord's own mantra is extracted.
On ground that is level and delightful,
Smeared with sandalwood and the like,
The practitioner also does this:
With nine lines, well rounded,
In the forty-nine segments,
At the heads of one, two, three and four,
In forward order and in reverse,
One should set down the syllables of the mantra.
Then the mantrin properly extracts
The mantra of Sumbharāja.
It is to be known as all the junctures;
It has not been taught in other tantras.
Its syllables are in the channels,
And the junctures of each one of them,
The junctures of the forty-nine,
Have the sum of space, time and fire.
Whatever is fully explained as a dharma,
Through meditative equipoise, those are its junctures.
Wherever a single syllable is taken,
There are all the syllables.
That they are extracted by the steps of calculation
Is taught in the Hundred Thousand Saṃvara.
The yantra whose nature is outer and inner Accomplishes everything for the yogins.

Secret mantra should be accomplished through bliss,
And the yantra above all.
That one will attain accomplishment through it,
Here there can be no doubt.
It has the form of support and supported,
Name and site in their respective order.
The site is in the form of the support;
The name of the supported is the yoginī.
Their equal absorption
Is declared to be for all the rites.
Therefore the yoginī tantra
Is the supported, the domain of skillful means.
Because the ground is the support,
Therefore skillful means is the yoginī.
Or else, everything is skillful means;
Or else, everything is wisdom.
By those who are free of wisdom and means
The body of a buddha passes beyond sorrow.
This supreme vehicle, when separated from wisdom,
Makes everything go into existence.
Whatever dharmas are existence and nirvāṇa,
Through abandoning them there is no dharma.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss,
The Tathāgata Vajraḍāka,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the forty-eighth chapter, called "The Characteristics of the Rite Summarizing the Mantra of the Clay Drum, and the Path of Meditation on the Yantra Wheels that Accomplish Various Rites, Beginning with the Application of Cakravartinī," from the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Next, the other supreme chief,
The increase of Cakravartinī and the rest,
The rite that grants every benefit,
I shall explain in brief.
Through the application of Mahāvīryā,
She dwells fully in Kulutā.

The factor of awakening is right speech;
The yantra has a human form.
Relying fully on the pendant,
One attains inconceivable awakening.
It is the chief of all the rites,
The self-arisen great seal.
It arises perfectly from all the elements;
It is called the pendant.
For the twenty-four heroes,
Each one has eight aspects.
In all the elements too it is to be known:
The eye, the aperture and the moon.
Each of all the heroes, individually,
Will also be named by his own name.
In the thirty-seven maṇḍalas
One should meditate on each of the heroes.
The eight elements in all of them
Are also to be marked as threefold.
Through the summary of the names of the applications,
Such as the skull fragment and the rest,
One should know the name of Mahāvīryā
As abiding in Vārāhī and the others.
By gently striking the elements
One should wake from sleep.
Just as the sword of a hero
Pierces one of great strength,
So the sword of the pendant
Pierces all the elements.
Having understood the summary of hā,
Abide at all the junctures.
The heroes generated from that Number tens of millions, hundreds of thousands and thousands.

Having the nature of the seed of awakening,
The yoginī is known as its family.
Sealing all the elements,
She arises perfectly at the time of emergence.

One should know it as the pendant;
It abandons true awareness of self and other.
The family is all the elements;
The yoginī is the one who has the family.
In the perfect union of the two
The pendant should fully enter the belly.
Up to the taste of all the elements,
It becomes cut off.
By accomplishing the elixir
There is increase for all people.
They abide nowhere at all;
They come close to Khecara itself.
The buddhas and the minds of awakening
Dwell without defilement in the center.
In this way all the treasuries of qualities
Abide in the state of right speech.
Holding the great mantra that is beyond expression,
One proclaims it to all people.
One should know it as indestructible.
The earth is Vajradhārī herself.
All the substances of the elements, without exception,
Abide perfectly as heroes by name.
The elements of the skull fragment
I shall explain each on its own.
Nails and teeth flowing,
Each divided into eight;
The four elements, earth and the rest,
And likewise the four substances.
Thus in sites of three each
One should join all the heroes.
Hair and body hair flowing,
Skin and dirt flowing,
Flesh and loose flesh flowing,
Sinews and channels flowing,
Bones and hide flowing,
Kidneys and strength flowing,
Heart and the net flowing,

Eyes and lymph flowing,
Bile and wind flowing,
Lungs and channels flowing;
The substances flowing there
Are the nape and the liver flowing,
Stomach and breath flowing,
Feces and urine flowing,
The edges of the junctures and dirt flowing,
Intestinal lining and spittle flowing,
Pus and lymph flowing,
Blood and the menstrual flower flowing,
Dust and vapor flowing,
Fat and belly fat flowing,
Tears and semen flowing,
Phlegm and the absence of fever flowing,
Snot and marrow flowing:
These are the characteristics of the heroes' elements.
In this way, segment by segment,
The elements enter into one another.
The nature of each one, too:
Through the wind of exhaustion, Kapālin;
To dissolve within all bliss,
Mahākaṅkāla goes.
Because of mind and intention,
Kaṅkāla is everywhere emptiness.
Through Vikaṭadaṃṣṭrin
All is nondual, innate and clear.
Surāri is the great form,
Consciousness, the deity and the one who has the deity.
Amitābha is beyond words;
Vajraprabha has the nature of vajra light rays.
The body whose nature is vajra
Is to be known there as Vajradeha.
Aṅkurika, by merely being seen,
Brings delight to all things.
To bind consciousness into matter,
Vajrajaṭila goes.

Making the three worlds into the supreme food
Is done through the progress of Mahāvīra.
To dwell together with the ḍākinīs,
Vajrahūṃkāra goes.
Subhadra, without attainment,
Has abandoned the world and the worldly.
Self-arisen in all beings,
He is known as Vajrabhadra.
Through the state of Mahābhairava
The imprints of karma are smeared with ash.
Though Virūpākṣa does not look,
He sees the characteristics of all.
Mahābala is all the mantras,
The embodiment of the three aspects.
Ratnavajra is great in silence;
The undefiled elements are everywhere.
Hayagrīva, upon the great earth,
Is to be applied to all that has life.
He is to fill all the life breaths;
Therefore he is called Ākāśagarbha.
Glorious Heruka is always empty,
Having the nature of the four bodies.
Padmanarteśvara, form
And formless, goes into yoga.
Because he illuminates through great bliss,
He is called Vairocana.
Vajrasattva, made to stand proudly,
Is declared to be supreme bliss.
The union of all the heroes
Is within all the elements.
In an instant, a moment, a brief while,
One should know the characteristic of tasting.
The exhaustion of all these elements
Is supremely and greatly wondrous.
The numbers of the natural elements
Are the hours, the nāgas and the arrows.
They are widely known as yoginīs,

Come down through the succession of the lineage.
When the elements too are analyzed,
None of them arises by itself.
It is not consciousness, it is not wisdom;
All is empty, it does not exist.
Through not knowing the gold-making elixir,
One does not know supreme bliss.
That which accomplishes its purpose by itself
Is the characteristic of the deity of the touchstone family.
Therefore one should meditate on the yoginī
Who is called Great Diligence.
Sealing all the elements,
She arises perfectly as the seat of yoga.
Whatever is all, everywhere,
That is seen as the Tathāgata.
In the Ḍāka and the Saṃvara tantras,
In the Later Abhidhāna,
And in the tantras of the Arising of All Conduct,
It is fully taught in terms of entities.
Therefore this great tantra
Was spoken by the Sage, the supreme person.
The great rites that abide
In segment after segment are to be drawn out there.
The minor acts that are named
Belong to the sites of the elements.
One should take up the elements in their order,
Up to the domain of complete gathering;
And with the first verse and the rest,
Up to the domain of completion.
This tantra is chiefly yoga;
Its rites are not extensive.
Or else all yoga
Is to be held as a collection of rites.
One's own reality is always the rite,
Whether it is done or not done.
The characteristics of the application of the yogas
Are perfectly explained as the natural rite.

In this way, in all the tantras,
The mantrin should know it supremely.
Or else, whatever yoga it resembles,
The elements abide in resemblance to it.
The substances of the elixir,
Compounded into the twenty-four great medicines
By the heroes themselves,
Are taught as the progress toward liberation.
When one delights in the supreme secret,
The self of all always dwells.
Those sixteen are the great substances,
Given in eight pairs of half verses.

Truly arisen as sound and form,
Hard to find in the three worlds,
The full union of the churner and the churned,
The unsurpassed form of the central one:
The pill should always be worshiped.
The messenger (dūtī), whose very self is the coemergent,
With the mind gone deep within,
The buddha drops of one's own fluid,
Together with honey, blood, and camphor,
Having fully entered the midst of the gathering,
With ring finger and thumb, into the mouth,
Taste the drink of the moon.
With these, which have become the five nectars,
Perform likewise the four offerings.
Gods and humans, through bliss,
The sixteen portions are precious.
Thus, by all these verses,
The five elements are explained.
By the syllable ra, the element of blood;
The syllable hā is held to be the mountain-born;
The syllable sya is the fragrant leaf;
The syllable pa is held to be bark;
The syllable ra is declared to be ghandha, sulfur;
The syllable me should be recalled as flower;

The syllable ra likewise is rābiṇa;
Again, the syllable me is flesh;
The syllable sa is born from frankincense;
The syllable rba is held to be grass;
The syllable tma is declared to be the hollow-born;
The syllable na is fragrant oil;
The syllable sa is the powder of teeth;
The syllable dā is the ocean-born;
The syllable sthi likewise is hoarfrost;
The syllable ta is the camphor of the essence.
Fully arisen as sound and form:
This is in the space between blood, semen, and the jewel.
Hard to find in the three worlds:
This is self-awareness reaching the lotus.
Through the unions of the churner and the churned:
This is the mingling by the self-arisen.
The breath of the supreme central one, too:
This is holding it for an instant in the central channel.
The pill that should always be worshiped:
This is the nectar, the secret water.
The messenger whose very self is the coemergent:
This is play through the union of the two organs.
The mind gone deep within:
This is the melting of the elements as well.
The buddhas, the drops of one's own fluid:
These arise from the union of what melts.
Honey, blood, and camphor together:
These arise from a sixteen-year-old Kāminī.
Those who fully dwell in the midst of the gathering:
They apply all this to the coemergent.
Placing it in the mouth with ring finger and thumb:
This is the blood that arises from union in absorption.
Tasting the drink of peace:
This is whatever comes, entire, at the time of emission.
These that become the five nectars:
This is the human oil arising from emission.
Performing likewise the four offerings:

This is the four in equal parts, together with camphor.
The bliss of gods and humans:
This is what arises from all the joys.
The sixteen precious portions:
All of them have the nature of bliss.
Thus all the heroes
Should apply these as the substances of the elements.
The elixir arises from that.
The chief, by the fire and wind of wisdom,
Having brought about exhaustion and killing,
Then likewise transference and descent:
Exhaustion is the trickling of awakening;
Through killing, too, there comes to be no transference;
Transference is throughout all the channels;
Descent is into the lotus of the navel.
By binding these,
One should make it descend into all the elements.
Killing is the destruction of entities;
Increase is in the world-realms.
Knowing there the rite of the fire offering,
Attain the state of a universal monarch.
The nectar should be burned in the hearth.
Mañjuvajra, in direct perception,
The one endowed with yoga will come to see.
It carries one across all the grounds.
The life of which the great one possesses the Dharma:
The Dharma will come to pervade everywhere.
Its very nature is Mahāvīryā,
Supreme as the self of the thirty-seven,
Perfected by her through the mantra of the maṇḍala,
Supreme self of wisdom and skillful means.
The great goddess, white in color,
She who is born of omniscient wisdom:
All sentient beings come under one's power,
And one attains the state of a universal monarch.
oṃ ga i ra ndra sa jā ta la bā sa da rba pra sa bā tvā da tma ma ne hā hūṃ ma hūṃ te phaṭ hūṃ phaṭ hūṃ svā phaṭ hā phaṭ svā hā

oṃ ma hā bi ryā yai hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svā hā
Thus is the very self of the reality of mantra,
Invoked by all the deities.
Then, for the wheel-shaped diagram of the yantra,
Forty-nine squares, fifty less one,
Having been drawn properly with saffron,
This garland of secret mantra should be set out.
The Sumbha mantra, in reversed order,
Should be set out in its proper sequence.
Then, having made the figure of a human,
One should again add a circle.
On it the root mantra is written,
And the name of the target placed inside.
The central segment is the target,
Placed inside its mantra.
The mantrin writes on birch bark and the like,
Marking it outwardly and secretly.
Applying such a yantra well,
One should meditate on the three grounds.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata:
The Blessed Lord spoke this.

This is the forty-ninth chapter, called "The Rite of the Root Mantra of Heruka, the Glorious True Meditative Absorption, the Characteristics of the Rite of the Full Application of Mahāvīryā, the Secret Elixir and So Forth, and the Rite of Increase," from the great king of tantras, the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then the heroes, Vajrapāṇi and the others,
All the mantrins, rising up,
With praise, offering, and prostration,
Roused Vārāhī fully:
"O goddess, my mother,
Fully worshiped by all the goddesses,
You are the mother of all of these;
Heart of wisdom, I pay homage and bow.

Out of compassion for all sentient beings
You emanate yourself in bodily form;
It is fitting that you show me, in every way,
The great kindness of your compassion.
I ask the Blessed Lord,
Who dwells fully in great bliss:
Of the hosts of rites of all the tantras
I do not know the means of accomplishment.
If, in tantra after tantra,
All the rites have been taught,
Why, then, is this taught here
For those who have attained pure wisdom?
For all people to enter
This very tantra is not fitting.
To explain it again is faulty.
I do not understand; I have doubts."
Vārāhī said nothing at all;
Entering the mouth of the Blessed One,
She became his wisdom,
And he gave the reply.
The Blessed One, the self of all phenomena,
Having set his mind in meditative absorption,
Uttered speech
Through all the families of Vārāhī:
"O, O, all you heroes,
In whom wisdom and the knowable are mingled,
Whatever wisdom you see
Dissolves into this and that.
Yet it operates separately
Because of the various dispositions of sentient beings.

In the great tantra of nonduality itself,
In Vajraḍāka and Saṃvara,
And in the other yoga tantras as well,
The Samāja and the rest, of great meaning,
By these the various meanings
Of this tantra are expressed.

All of them, possessing the host of rites,
Make it fully clear.
In the tantra, as the expressed and the expresser,
Through it one enters into the subtle.
Each has its own characteristic nature,
Endowed with the segments of the skull and so forth.
There the phenomenon of consciousness
Is explained as the segment of the skull.
The karma of all sentient beings
And their afflictions should be known with ease.
Otherwise, in the tantra of the Omniscient,
The letters would not arise.
Within the span of a single year
The twelve months should be known,
Turned by the wheel of the six seasons.
Sentient beings are supremely like a dream;
Imbued with the stain of ignorance,
They do not know bliss.
By the sequence of the hāradola,
Consciousness, with vigilance,
Is twenty thousand, and a thousand,
And six hundred more besides.
Sixty periods of the breath
Are well known as a single day.
Through the breaths of the hāradola,
By alternation, it is marked by the dola.
The breath of the two, for the wise,
Going out, coming in, comes to dissolve.
The yogin comes to contemplate it,
Yet does not draw near to omniscience.
Abiding in the yoga of the subtle and the subtler,
He practices everything fully.
Its numerals, outside,
Should be set as twelve upon the ground.
Just as the divisions of the sun are explained,
So too are the twelve limbs.
The rising of the lunar mansions and the planets

Takes place at all times.
The element of each, as well,
Comes to rise at its own time.
Death at its time, and likewise the rest,
Will be explained by this sequence.
For one who knows the application of dāttyā and the rest,
This application is to the mother letters.
Beginning with the month of Puṣya and so on,
In the sun's northern course,
The twelve months, in that way,
Should be set out in their order, one after another.
Beginning from the directions, east and the rest,
The wise one counts from the morning.
The third is likewise the thirteenth,
The fourth again the fourteenth,
The fifth as the fifteenth.
I shall explain it; listen now.
These, being equal and endowed with equality,
The practitioner should bring into accord.
Here there are ignorance and formations,
Consciousness, and name and form,
The six sense sources and contact,
Feeling, and likewise craving,
Grasping and existence,
Birth, and aging and death.
Likewise, with rohita and the rest,
The signs (rāsi), beginning with Makara,
Should be held to be twelve.
First, ignorance is Makara
And rohita, and likewise the rest.
Second, mohita and the Vase
Clearly go to formations.
Third, the Auspicious One and the Fish
Should be known as consciousness.
Fourth, the Bull and the Ram
Should be held to be name and form.
Fifth is the Tortoise

And briṣa: the six sense sources suffice.
Sixth, Makara and the Pair
Always go to contact.
Seventh is raṇḍaka,
And likewise feeling, the supreme.
Eighth, mikira and the Lion,
Supremely concordant, are craving.
Ninth, bidri and the Maiden
Are held to be grasping.
Tenth, distraction of mind and the Scales
Are declared to be existence.
Eleventh, the dream
And brika, and likewise birth.
Twelfth, the Lord of the Earth,
The Bow, and aging and dying.
Thus the Lord of the Earth and the rest,
The dream and so forth, and likewise the others,
Distraction and the rest, bhidrika and the rest,
Likewise mikira and the rest,
raṇḍa and the rest, Makara and the rest,
The Tortoise and the rest, the Bull and the rest,
The Auspicious One and the rest, and delusion and the rest:
Therefore these are the twelve months.
Whoever is born on these days
Is held to bear that characteristic.
In an instant, a moment, a brief while,
It should be marked on the measuring rod.
Even what passes in opening and closing the eyes
Comes from an extremely subtle time.
If the mind abides in meditative absorption,
One goes by stages to the twelfth ground.
Or else, if absorption does not abide,
One is held to go to the middling destiny.
The inferior, all such people,
Go to the hells and the like.
The pleasure and suffering of those who are led
Are fully experienced through karma.

Through that whose time is nondual,
All are born on the ground of intrinsic nature.
Even so, those born there
Eat the fruit through their own karma.
Thus, merely by apprehending it fully,
One is endowed with the yoga of the skull segments.
By the reasoning explained before,
It descends into the center of the elements.
At the time when wind is active,
The yogin will be born.
In nine days, months,
And years, the wise should know the death.
Then he will undertake kingship;
That it is so is beyond doubt.
One born on the day of rohita
Will die in the Lord of the Earth.
One born at the time when earth is active,
If he does not die in eight days, months,
Or in one year,
Is without doubt a bodhisattva.
At the time when dream is active,
One is brave and bold, and overcomes others;
Merit and evil are mingled,
And one dies at fifty-four.
In distraction of mind, one is killed by an enemy.
One born on its day,
If at sixty-four years and ten months
He has not died,
He who had little wealth will afterward
Come to be prosperous.
On the day of bhitri one dies.
One born on the day of that time,
If he does not die in the fifth, the second,
The third, or the first year,
For him all desired aims are diminished;
He kills father and mother,
And is mixed with austerity.

In mikira one dies in one's own house.
Whoever is born here on that day,
If he does not die
In the second, fifth, third, or ninth year,
Is equal to the Omniscient One.
In the Widow one dies in water.
Whoever is born on the day of that time,
If he does not die in the second or third year,
Is intelligent,
A doer of evil, afflicted with illness;
The men and women are fortunate.
In Makara one dies. One born in that very one,
If in fifteen, three, and five Days, months, and years
He does not die, then in short
He is complete in every good quality,
And becomes a king who guards the borders.
In the Tortoise and the Pair one dies.
One born on the day of that time
Dies in the second, eighth, or ninth year.
If he does not die then,
He should be known as an ordinary being,
Going to low and to high estate.

In the Bull one dies in one's own house.
One born on its day,
If, says the wise one, he does not die
In the second, eighth, or ninth year,
Is perfect in every kind of lordship,
Yet given to anger and the like, and to wrong views.
In the Auspicious One one dies by being killed.
One born on that very day,
If in the fifth, ninth, or tenth year
This person does not die,
Is poor yet perfect in Dharma,
Adorned by everything.
In delusion one passes away in water.

One born on its day,
If in the first month of the second or ninth year
He does not die at that time,
Is lowly in everything, bound for hell,
Of evil thoughts, his nature sinful;
Killed by thieves and the like,
He dies on the day of rohita.
Thus it should be known in summary,
If meditative absorption has not been attained.
The actions that make births manifest
Are obtained otherwise.
Whoever is close to that very thing
Should guard it well;
On the day in the sequence explained,
There is no doubt of release in this.
The segment of the skull itself:
These should be meditated on as bringing good fortune.
Whatever channel travels to the ḍākas,
In its center one practices oneself.
That should be known as the egg-born family.
It should be guarded by stirring the scattering.
The yogin will come to hold the body.
Here the little toe should be moved.
The soles of the feet and the gate of the crown,
All the junctures should be guarded.
Having made the vowels and consonants equal,
One should dissolve them into the elements.
Consciousness is unmoving;
Make everything its nature.
From the center of the head, without fail,
Facing downward, it comes to descend and go.
Perfect in its central region,
The yogin goes to the end of existence.
In the count of the time of the a ba dhū tī,
I shall explain it clearly, just as it is.
A fortnight and three years should be known:
This is death at the time of people.

Whatever the measure of a hundred years,
That should be examined in the center.
Of the two, the rasanā and the lalanā,
The month of birth should be marked.
Month by month it comes to be destroyed;
It has twenty-four parts.
The count of a single breath as well,
Therefore, from two years it becomes twofold;
By threefold and so forth, all of them,
And then twenty-four-fold.
It should be known as sky, hollow, and eye;
Afterward it goes into periods of the day.
Up to the twelfth year
There are periods of five by five.
From the sixtieth year the days increase;
Thirty-seven, and three fortnights.
Those that increase by five by five
Should be made the numerals of the periods of the day.
The death of all people
Is known in three fortnights and in years.
Through the years of twenty-four,
Because humans go endowed with discernment.
Having entered the house of earth,
One ransoms death by the mind.
Contemplate the segment of the skull
Where glorious Heruka has taken his abode.
By the yoga of the sequence of counting,
The periods of day and night should be marked.
Marked according to the time,
It is done step by step.
At the time of the northern course,
The sequence is the goddess Puṣya and the rest.
Ten multiplied by two, and four:
For the wise, the periods of the day.
What is to be known at the time of the equinox
Will be explained in its own junction of time.
The three tens and the six

Begin the periods of the night.
In a hundred, by the distinctions of time,
It should be known from its center.
Ten multiplied by two, and six:
Make these the numerals of the periods of the days.
Ten multiplied by three, and four:
Examine these as the periods of the night.
Ten multiplied by two, and eight:
So the periods of the days.
Ten multiplied by three, and just two:
Examine these as the periods of the night.
At the equinox, joining two in the center,
Examine it fully as just thirty.
By the two sets of thirty
The periods of each day are divided.
Three tens, and just two:
Examine these as the day of the days.
Two tens and eight:
Make these the numerals of the night.
For the numeral of three tens
It is fully joined with four.
Ten multiplied by two, and six:
Make these the numerals of the periods of the night.
Ten multiplied by three, and six:
The days, the day of those who have wisdom.
Ten multiplied by two, and four:
These are known as the periods of the dusty ones.
The southern course is well explained;
It is known by the time of the months.
Ten multiplied by three, and four:
These are fully explained as the periods of the daytime.
Ten multiplied by two, and six:
So too should the night be marked.
Ten multiplied by three, and just two:
So too the periods of the days.
Ten multiplied by two, and six:
These are known as the periods of the night.

Marked by ten multiplied by three,
So too the periods of the equinox and so forth.
Ten multiplied by three, for the nights;
In the center of the bi shu, two likewise.
Ten multiplied by two, and eight:
Consider these the daytime of the days.
Ten threefold, and just two:
These are examined as the periods of the dusty ones.
Ten twofold, and six:
The periods of the days, in sequence.
Ten threefold, and four:
So too the periods of the dusty ones.
Three hundred, and likewise sixty:
The breaths that fill the periods.
The number of the periods, sixty,
Is declared to be a single day.
Just as the months are in their sequence,
So they are marked by the sequences.
The periods, breaths and so forth, all complete,
Increase and decrease in sequence.
By the distinction of rite and non-rite,
The breaths are fully grasped in sequence.
Thus sky, sky, and taste, likewise
Moon and eye, and likewise the periods,
Should be known in a single year,
Marked by the days and the periods.
By doing so, the yogin
Will ransom death from time.
In the center of the navel is a great lotus,
Just as Vajravārāhī is.
On the lotus that reaches all the junctures,
One should let it trickle like hoarfrost.
From the center of the navel to the twelve ends,
It is what goes and comes.
The drop of life, as it travels,
Descends into all the junctures.
The wise one, by the practice of a single year,

Should dissolve it into that very thing.
Like the form of a burning
Lamp of sesame oil, facing downward,
Like the flower of the plantain,
The wise one holds it as if hanging down.
At the navel is the form shaped like a,
Short, long, and the self of the prolonged:
The form of the coemergent mudrā,
Where vowels and mother letters abide as nondual.
Meditation and the practitioner are explained
As dull, middling, and sharp,
Especially sharp, and exceedingly sharp:
All are examined in terms of these.

Because one accomplishes it by oneself,
Therefore it should be accomplished by others too.
With power and might in this very world,
One inspires confidence in all people,
And afterward they become disciples.
With the mind moistened by the aims of self and others,
Having obtained the twelve vowels,
One should explain virtue and nonvirtue.
In the twelve wheels
The lord of the vowels should be marked.
By the syllable ā the wise one obtains wisdom
And every aim of the Dharma.
By the syllable ā, oppression,
Aging and death are definitively declared;
The fears of existence, without exception,
Will be seen, and one falls from the path.
By fully obtaining the syllable ī,
One goes to lordship over the earth.
If the syllable ī is truly obtained,
One will die swiftly.
By obtaining the syllable ū,
One comes to remember one's births.
If the syllable ū is obtained,

One becomes attached to sense objects.
If the syllable i is truly obtained,
One attains the state of a bodhisattva.
With the syllable ai the mind is bewildered,
And the six destinies and the rest become a terror.
The syllable o is of the perfections;
By it one attains the grounds there, it shows.
By obtaining the numeral au,
One comes to break the sacred commitments.
The syllable aṃ: by seeing the bodhisattvas,
One is liberated in an instant.
By truly obtaining the syllable aḥ,
One doubts the aggregates and elements.
These and the rest, without exception,
Even if not spoken of, should be accomplished.
The Guru is the treatise itself;
Confidence should be placed in the threefold Dharma.

This is called the opening words, named the means of accomplishment of the characteristics of the yoga of the one with the segment of the skull, and the sādhana of the wheel of the maṇḍala. This is the first section.

Then I shall explain
The characteristics of Mahākaṅkāla.
By oneself, through the yoga like a donkey,
The force of the mind should be kept from entering.
The mountain of the equal elements
Is meditated on at the place of the crown.
The lotus-fiber thread, facing downward,
She who is lightning, going everywhere:
In its center the great heroine,
Having the shape of a donkey, should be meditated on.
All the maṇḍala is perfectly complete;
A great offering should be imagined.
In its center the great hero,
Through the union of Mahākaṅkāla.
By the threads, in the center of the navel,
Are the very unions of the churner and the churned.

The form shaped like the syllable hā,
A single thread from the head:
With a mind like a mirror,
One should rest in the center of the skull.
By the streams of nectar from the vase,
It comes to trickle into the center of the aperture.
By states such as dissolution and enjoyment,
The course of the mind should be shown.
In that aperture, by the yoga of the donkey,
One will see even seven births.
The three shapes that arise from the mother,
And likewise the three that arise from the father,
All the elements, and those seven,
Will be seen by meditating on the yoga.
From all the elements, whose nature is bliss,
Mahākaṅkāla truly arose.
By meditating on lā ma and the rest,
One will see the forms that dwell there.
In the yoga of the donkey's shape,
With a face of blood, bearing a trident,
One also knows when life is spent,
And will also see long life.
Earlier, the elephant and the rest:
The hero sees that by himself.
In all the great channels
The life of Kaṅkāla should be made to circulate fully.
When it moves, the donkey should be known;
One will see its various natures.
Foods such as sā lu rice:
All things are seen as resembling them,
Yet they do not exist there;
All the elements, too, are delusion.
Just as in a person, through the times,
It is to be known by the element of the elephant,
So by the great Kaṅkālas,
Through the conditions of the elements such as sā li rice,
By apprehending the worldly nature,

One sees that form of oneself.
Those families of many kinds
Should be known by those who hold to yoga.
On the separate days of ignorance and the rest,
By them they are known as illnesses.
By mere illnesses such as fever,
The great illnesses should be indicated.
There, the illness of the day of ignorance:
The good should guard against it.
At the fifteenth transference,
One dies, or the karma is virtuous or nonvirtuous.
Through one whose self is supremely the fire of wisdom,
One will be liberated in five nights.
At the time of aging and death,
One dies at the third transference;
Or else one will see the habitual tendencies
Of virtuous and nonvirtuous karma.
By grasping the bliss of self-awareness,
One will be liberated in seven nights.
The death on the day of birth
Is likewise at the third transference;
Karma goes to virtue or nonvirtue;
One will be liberated in seven nights.
At the three transferences of existence
One will die; in five nights
They will be liberated.
Or else one is not liberated;
In the times of the fourth that has passed,
Realize all of that bliss.
In those families that change in that way,
It should be known in its proper sequence.
The transference of death of grasping
Is at the third and at the fourth.
If the karma is virtuous or nonvirtuous,
One will be liberated in ten nights.
One who has every abundance of merit
And is endowed with intelligence accomplishes non-transference.

At the three transferences of craving one dies;
The karma is virtuous and nonvirtuous;
One should look to what has entered within the jewel.
In seven nights one is surely liberated;
There is no doubt about my words.
At the five transferences of feeling
One will die, and the karma is likewise;
One is liberated in nine or ten,
Through entering the center of the vajra and lotus.
The transference on the day of contact:
It should be known that one dies at the eighth.
Thus karma is virtuous or nonvirtuous;
It should be dissolved through the six limbs.
On the day of twenty less one,
One is liberated, or else one is not liberated.
The death of the six sense sources
Should be looked at in terms of virtuous and nonvirtuous karma;
The eight transferences should be known.
One will see the illnesses of the elements;
In ten nights one will be liberated;
It should be dissolved into the four wheels.
The karma of death in name and form:
The transferences of the third
Or of the fifth should be known;
In eight nights there is release.

The rite should be performed by which the mind
Comes to rest, having reached the place of the drop.
The karma of death of consciousness:
Again, at the transference of the eighth and the tenth,
It should be known on the ground.
Or else there is release in that very thing:
Having the form of sixteen halves of halves,
It should be seized by the wind of wisdom.
The karma of death of formations:
Likewise, of the third and the seventh,
Because it has been looked upon, it is transference;

By that view one will be liberated.
Having come to know the two drops,
One should dissolve them by going upward.
By this one becomes free of illness and death.
Therefore, the buddha Vajradhara,
The virtuous one whose self is the thirty-seven:
Again, the maṇḍala should be meditated on.
By the yogin of the chief, Mahākaṅkāla,
Everything is seen.

This is the second section, endowed with the reality of the instruction for one who meditates on Mahākaṅkāla in the yoga of the donkey.

Then, through the union of Kaṅkāla,
Born in their own birthplaces, land by land,
The yoginīs and the chief heroines
Should be known by one endowed with wisdom.
At Aṭṭahāsa is the goddess of dust,
The yoginī who is chief of all.
In her place dwells the goddess of the place.
At the ka dam tree is Mahāghaṇṭā,
The constant one of that goddess.
The kṣetrapāla is Great Face.
She is the illusion of the bliss of Kaṅkāla;
From the great self, renunciation comes about.
These are sealed by Kaṅkāla.
From the aperture of Oḍḍiyāna they reach upward;
Rising from one's own element, consciousness
Goes by stages into all the lands:
The mountain of Kolla and Vāruṇya,
Devīkoṭa and Birjakaṃ,
Eruṇya, and then the town,
The town of Aila, and Kashmir,
The town of Maru, and likewise
The field of Puṇḍavadhana,
Jayantī and the town of Pṛṣṭa,
Saupare, and likewise Caritra,
Oḍḍiyāna and Jālandhara,

Kṣereke and the town of Māyā,
Aṃbuke and Rājagṛha,
The land of Tibet, and likewise
Mālava, Pulira and the rest:
These are the twenty-four places.
The mountain peak and the tā la tree,
The pa ṭa, the ā mra, and likewise the golden tree,
The matted-locks tree and the overpowering one,
They truly abide on the mountain summit.
The great plain and the grassy hollow,
The a śvad tha and the many-storied house,
The u dum bā ra and the śal ma li,
The ka rañja, and the aśoka they abide in,
The golden tree and the sā la,
The cu ta, the dhā tu, the dil la ki,
The heaped rock and the honey tree:
Formerly they truly abode there.
The birthplace of dust, the body of the scattered,
Mahābalā and the place of yoga,
The skull, karma, and the dust exceedingly fierce,
The birthplace, the heroes, the body of the scattered,
The Mahābalās, and likewise blood;
The birthplace of heroes arises from power;
The birthplace arising from the moon,
That arising from the family of Mahābalā,
Bhairava arising from blood, likewise,
Born from fat and from the great battlefront,
The birthplace of flowers, and likewise the two:
Again, that very word should be recalled.
These goddesses arising from the families
Are maidens of coemergent form.
Mahāśrī and Agnimukhā,
And the kṣetrapāla with the Supreme Face,
Known as Agnimukha,
The knower of the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Holding its transference,
They emanate the two yoginīs.

Through his union with what she desires,
The heroes rely truly on nonduality.
For the sake of benefiting sentient beings,
Dwelling in the vajra maṇḍala,
With moving forms that act everywhere,
They go into all the lands.
Laṅkeśvarī and Ūrdhvakeśī,
And the kṣetrapāla Great Fang;
The one explained as Ūrdhvakeśa
Has the bliss of Kaṅkāla as cause.
The particulars of the supreme yoginīs
And the rest should be known as taught before.
Twisted Ear and the Fierce One,
And the kṣetrapāla Great Body;
Then, or else, the One with Cause
And the supreme sovereign lady, the Great Fierce One:
Through the emptiness of the bliss of Kaṅkāla
It should be known as the supreme state.
Peaceful Form and Fire,
And the kṣetrapāla Aṭṭahāsa;
Fire and Great Delusion,
And Great Sound also, should be known.
The Caṇḍī of Kaṅkāla:
Great bliss in the center of the blaze.
Agnimukhā and Mahāvīryā,
And the kṣetrapāla Sound of the Bell;
She who is known as Mahāvīryā
Is the source of the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Tawny Renown and Fearsome Eyes,
And the kṣetrapāla Great Shanks;
Bhairavī, or else Locanā,
Is the one who fills the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Great Terror and Mahābalā,
And the kṣetrapāla Great Elephant;
Or else Elephant Ear,
And the kṣetrapāla Elephant-Eared,
Riding upon the bliss of Kaṅkāla,

Its nature present in all the channels.
Cow Ear and the One of the Mountain Peak,
And the kṣetrapāla Mahābhairava;
Then again, the shanks of the hollow,
Dissolving into the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
The Traveler and Fearsome Face,
And the kṣetrapāla Fang;
The Deluder, Great Face,
Attached to the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Vetālī and the Fair-Faced One,
And the kṣetrapāla with Hairy Shanks;
Or else Great Upturned Fang,
Who devours the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Cāmuṇḍā and Mahādevī,
And the kṣetrapāla with testicles like pots;
Or else the Great Goddess,
And the kṣetrapāla with the potlike paunch;
Or else he is Mahādeva,
Who dances in the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
The Most Reverent One and Trijaṭā,
And the kṣetrapāla Great Fang;
Or else he should be known as Trijaṭa,
Gone beyond in the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Lightning Face and Bell Sound,
And the kṣetrapāla Owl-Faced;
Renowned indeed as Sound of the Bell,
Here he enjoys the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Fire Face and Mahādevī,
And the kṣetrapāla Terrifier;
Or else he should be known as Mahādeva,
Radiant with the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Likewise she who dwells at the ka rañja,
Known also as Mahāghaṇṭā,
And the kṣetrapāla Great Strength,
Beautified by the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Secret Renown and Mahādevī,
Fierce Form and Mahābalā,

And the kṣetrapāla Great Sound,
And Fierce Form and Great Strength,
Arisen wholly from the bliss of Kaṅkāla,
Endowed with supreme, unchanging yoga.
Caṇḍī and the Fierce One,
And the kṣetrapāla known as Blazing;
Then, or else, Fierce Form,
Garbed in the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Mother of the World and Upturned Hair,
And the kṣetrapāla Great Meru;
Then, or else, Ūrdhvakeśa,
The one who meditates on the bliss of Kaṅkāla.

The Terrifying One and Mahābalā,
And likewise the kṣetrapāla Terror;
Mahābala and Fierce Form,
Who has the essence of the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Pūtanā and Mahādevī,
And the kṣetrapāla Great Observance;
Through the power of the bliss of Kaṅkāla,
Therefore all the senses are bliss.
Vipanasamā and Bell Sound,
And the kṣetrapāla Great Ears;
Or else Bell Ringer,
The trickling of the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Coemergent Renown and Wealth Renown,
And likewise the supreme Mahāvīra,
And the kṣetrapāla Most Invincible,
The one who gauges the bliss of Kaṅkāla.
Equal to Empowerment and Born Sovereign,
And the kṣetrapāla Lord of Variety;
By abiding in the bliss of Kaṅkāla,
One becomes oneself the bliss of desire.

A vajra, a head, and a trident,
A silk banner, a vajra, and a short spear,
A pestle, and likewise a noose,
A vajra chain and a hook,

A noose, a plough, and a khaṭvāṅga,
One holding a vajra chain in hand,
A staff, a short spear, and a curved knife,
A short spear, and one with a vajra chain,
A curved knife, and likewise a sword,
A vajra, and a short spear, a plough,
A club, a vajra, and likewise a hook,
A makara banner, and a hammer.
They are to be known as having peaceful faces.

The Snarling One and the Most Terrifying,
She Who Grants Mastery of the Dharma,
The Sovereign of Yoga, Supreme of All,
She Who Grants Mastery of Desire,
She Who Grants the Field of Utter Delusion,
The Snarling One, Lady of the Field of Delusion,
The Greatly Terrifying, and likewise another,
Fierce Face and Crusher of Foes,
The Bhairavī of the Field of Delusion,
She Who Grants the Supreme to All Heroes,
Freed Enjoyment, Destroyer of Evil,
She Who Grants the Supreme of All Bliss,
She Who Fulfills All Wishes,
The Snarling, Wrathful, Terrifying One,
She of the Seat of Flesh, and another,
She Who Grants the Supreme Mastery of Bliss,
The Beautiful One, Needed by All,
She Who Grants Worldly Accomplishments,
The Snarling Goddess Who Terrifies,
The Most Wrathful, Beautiful of Form,
She Who Grants All Mastery,
She Who Grants All Accomplishments,
The Terrifying One, the Accomplisher, She Who Grants Renown,
Black Form and the Great Wrathful One,
She Who Rides the Terror of All Foes,
She Who Subjugates All,
She Who Terrifies All Sentient Beings,

She Who Is Victorious over All Wheels,
The Terrifier, and likewise another,
She of Peaceful Face, Beautiful of Form,
She Who Favors the Practitioners,
The Renowned One and the Highly Praised:
Thus are they all, each in order.

At Aṭṭahāsa she sits upon a wheel;
At Kolagiri she sits upon a corpse;
At Vāruṇya, at Siddhasiṃpaḍi;
At Devīkoṭa she dwells upon a preta;
At Viraja she sits upon a plank;
At Eranya she sits upon a pig;
Then in the town she sits upon a preta;
In the town of Ele she dwells upon a donkey;
In Kashmir she dwells upon a yakṣa;
In the land of Maru she dwells upon a buffalo;
In the town, upon the back of a head;
At Puṇḍravardhana she dwells upon a corpse;
At Jayantī she dwells upon a skeleton;
In the town of Priṣṭi she dwells upon a heap;
At Sopāra she dwells upon a palm;
In Caritra she dwells at Karañja;
In Oḍḍiyāna she sits upon a māra;
At Jālandhara she dwells upon a corpse;
At Kṣirika she dwells upon fire;
In the town of Māyā, upon coarse cloth;
At Aṃbuke she dwells upon a lion;
At Rājagṛha she dwells upon a wheel;
In the land of Tibet she dwells upon a preta;
And likewise at Mālava, dwelling on a corpse.
Through the thorough application of Kaṅkāla,
In such fields accomplishment comes about.

The bliss that arises from Kaṅkāla
Rises up fully from the root of the channels.
Pervading all the junctures,
That fluid of wisdom will be seen.

This speech, arisen from the Headless One,
Is the very eating of that element.
From the space where the two organs abide,
Through that, bliss will be seen.
All the heroes and yoginīs,
And the wise, become as nothing at all.
Its nature, in beings as illusion,
Will be seen as the drawing in of the belly.
Through hanging down, in every place
That nectar goes and comes.
As it trickles, the yoginīs
Emanate their own field-born ones.
To those outer, inner, and secret in nature,
One should make a great offering.
By cutting through the mountain of ignorance,
All accomplishments will be achieved.

Then, in the center of the maṇḍala explained before,
One should meditate on Kaṅkāla,
And also on the hero, lord of beings,
Whose nature is wisdom and skillful means.
In the places that were stated, the yoginīs,
Then those named Most Fierce and so on.
As a cause of accomplishment, the practitioner
Should also hold a gathering there.
Food, drink, and the like should be properly prepared,
Offerings such as the five enjoyments,
And the vessels of torma to be enjoyed,
Fresh meat, fish, and so on,
All the foods and substances,
The five nectars, and likewise others.
Having set the vessels on the left,
One should display the wrathful one on the right.
At a solitary tree or a charnel ground,
On a mountain, in a hermitage, or in a house,
In villages and on the outskirts of towns,
In an empty house, at a crossroads,

Those who move in water and those who roam the plains,
The ground, the houses of the mātṛkās, and the shores:

Kālī, Raudrī, and Mahāraudrī,
God-Given and Perfect Support,
Snarling Kālī and Bhairava,
Beyond Joy and the vināyaka,
Cāmuṇḍī and Wrathful Form,
The goddess Madhyamā and the Mother,
Jayā and Vijayā,
Ajitā and Aparājitā,
Bhadrakālī and Mahākālī,
Stout Kālī and the Yoginī,
Aindrī, Cāndrī, and Raudrī,
The Hostile One, the Pendant One, Mistress of the Thirty,
Kampo, Jamme, and the Suckling One,
The yoginī who dwells in the village,
Wrathful Form and Great Form,
The Fanged One, the Fierce One, the Snarling One,
The goddess with a garland of skulls,
She who holds the khaṭvāṅga,
The Dwarf and she with an axe in hand,
She with a vajra in hand, and likewise the bow:
These five ḍākinīs, great indeed,
Accomplish all actions.
The Queen of the Maṇḍala of Union,
And likewise the chief, Vajreśvarī,
The great body of the Tathāgata,
Stainless yoga, emptiness:
By the command of Vajreśvara,
They are invited here from every side.

oṃ kakka kaḍḍhana babba bandhana khakhkha khādana sarbaduṣṭāna hana hana ghātaya ghātaya accomplish the purpose of so-and-so! hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ jaḥ svāhā

Having filled the mouth completely with nectar,
One should please all the deities.
One should meditate on the yogis and yoginīs,

And all actions will be accomplished.
oṃ bhakṣa sarba yogiśvarī hūṃ hūṃ jaḥ svāhā

Just as the actions and the rest are fully applied,
So one should fully apply the torma rites and the rest.
Pacifying, enriching, subjugating,
Summoning, killing, sowing division,
And paralyzing: through the very essence of the torma,
All the actions of the yogis
Should be accomplished. With the hook of wisdom
One should satisfy one's chosen deity.

In a field, a sacred site, or likewise a village,
In a town, or upon a mountain,
One should gather many bhūtas together;
Their host then assembles.
Through the conduct of all the channels
Their life force too is gathered in.
Gathered in the place of one's own knots,
Then the navel and the heart are intended.
By bowing with reverence to the yoginīs,
The practitioner will attain the supreme.
Dwelling always in the pīṭhas and upapīṭhas,
The deity will grant the supreme.
One endowed with experience in that place
Should practice by the rite described before.

To be rid of ulcers, old age,
Scabies, leprosy, and the like,
One should take the day of the bhūtas
And so practice, well settled in equipoise.
Having bathed with the water of the gods,
And especially with the five nectars,
One should anoint the limbs with great black oil
And offer incense of that same substance.
Within a square and a triangle
One must, with diligence, do this at the center.
Just as before,
One should have all the buddhas listen.

One should laugh eight kinds of laughter,
hā hā hī hī hū hū he hai:
So it is done by the practitioner.

Mounted properly upon the seed syllable of fire,
Opened up by wind,
Joined at the crown of the head,
Having made offering at the base of the earth,
One should set it in the center of the womb
And with diligence watch the melting.
In the center of the womb, in due order,
The yogi should imagine himself.
The light rays of the messengers gather on every side like clouds;
Behold an ocean of blazing garlands.
By contemplating in this way,
The abode of bliss of all yogas,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This was the rite of Kaṅkāla, the third chapter.

Next I shall explain the abiding in union
Of the samādhi of Bared Fangs.
The stage of drawing the bow comes about
Through the vajra yogi.
Imagine the drop of life brought forth;
Passing it through all the junctures,
Imagine the bow staff as its sign.
By urging on all the sounds,
The arrow, as it is drawn to the full,
Meeting at the navel of the central channel,
Should shatter the target of consciousness.
This is the slaying of all the sources.
In the great bliss as it travels,
There, through awareness, one goes elsewhere.
Through the applications of Bared Fangs
Renunciation comes about.
Destroying the inexhaustible target,
One will enter into people.

From the sphere of nirvāṇa
One enters into the towns of others.
The habitual tendencies of former emanations
Are continually destroyed there.
The great self of melting
Is bestowed in a peaceful form.
ṣṭi travels down to the soles of the feet
Like the thread of a jewel.
If at that juncture, in the ultimate sense,
One looks upon the three realms,
Then for all people
The target is distinguished by its characteristics.
As for all those senses,
What need to mention piercing them oneself?
Entering fully into other beings,
One will go most wondrously.
Abiding perfectly in the net of illusion,
Look upon all births.
The consciousnesses of the eye and so on,
Make them move inward!
Know that as the form of the ḍāka.

The chief in the form of the ḍākinī:
In emanating the maṇḍala first,
One should meditate on Bared Fangs and the rest.
One's own element is the form of bliss;
Each is made the chief in its own place.
The great ḍāka born from that,
The forms together with the ḍākinīs,
All in the heart of the various sources of phenomena,
Indestructible and peaceful,
All phenomena gathered into one:
The mantra practitioner should draw these according to the rite.
Having made the vowels and consonants equal,
Interchanged by their groups,
Which accomplish all desired aims,
The hero dwelling there should properly extract them.

The four bodies, the wisdom deity and the rest,
So called, will be attained without doubt.
Above and below, they always grant accomplishment;
One goes everywhere oneself as a messenger.

Fifty letters in eight groups:
That itself is the supreme and wondrous ḍāka.
Or else the maṇḍala of the vow
Is supreme, like the lesser tantra.
The measure of all the letters
Is to be indicated in the vows and so on.
Letters and names
Are expressed as the vows.
Maṇḍalas and tantras,
And likewise chapters,
All the collections of rites:
Doubled, short, and long.
Therein all are definitely victorious;
The one who emits and gathers in
Is here explained as the family of beings.
Such is the characteristic of each one;
The meditation on each one
Is to be understood in due order.
The name and form of a letter
Are held to be the form of beings.
As that secret mantra is recited,
One should place it thoroughly in that very thing.

The letter ā without the drop
Is red, free of the mother letters.
The letter a with the drop
Is therefore of the vermilion family.
The letter ī is held to be adorned
Like the guñjā flower.
The letter ī is the color of sindūra;
Know it as the excellent fifth.
The letter ū has the light of the rainbow.
The letter ū, the sixth,

Is like a pair of lightning flashes.
The letter ṛ is the color of smoke,
Subtle, its body cast off.
The letter ṝ has the form of darkness.
ḷ is like a crow's wing.
The letter ḹ is the color of vermilion.
The letter i is pale red.
ai is red in color like sindūra.
The letter o is like the sun,
A thousand light rays blazing upward.
The letter au is ever blazing,
With light equal to ten million suns.
The half moon, and likewise the drop:
The letter aṃ, the one explained before.
Two moons and strong dots:
The letter aḥ, likewise the king.
Thus there are sixteen emptinesses,
The cause of the purification of actions.
Intoxication, possession, delusion,
And mindlessness are the first emptiness.

Delusion, agitation, and subjugation
Swiftly grant everything.
Thoughtlessness and intoxication
And possession by grahas are dispelled.
By meditating on the action of emptiness,
One comes to stupefy and to subjugate.
Utter delusion and bewilderment come about;
The body is moistened and bereft of thought.
Bringing under control and summoning,
Supreme is the one possessed of wisdom and the knowable.
The actions of expelling and of melting:
They are held to be sevenfold.
As if holding down the earth with overwhelming might,
The unpraised and the deluded mind:
Never in this life
Will it come back again.

There is hatred, and reviling
By the whole world;
At odds with all the world,
It forsakes abiding even for an instant.
All the actions of the mind:
Therefore the three worlds are filled.
Having drawn bliss in through the mouth,
Breathless, the trickling of the line sinks down.
It is done with the branches of the mother letters.
Through the abode of the Lady of the Samaya Vow,
The nature of the great seal (mahāmudrā)
Is empty of duality, supremely free of defilement.
The buddha line, above and below,
Abides as a lotus fiber.
The vowels and consonants, condensed,
Arise from the body of the elements of the elixir.
The deities, Vajrasattva and the rest,
Are wholly transformed into faces.
Beneath it, and wherever else,
All the letters surely abide.
"Until separate appearances arise,
Perform the protection," so I have taught.
Mind becomes the corresponding vowel;
Mind has the nature of emptiness.
The perfect union of the two moons
Is the supreme, unchanging mudrā.
Thus too, according to the nature of the elements,
One should perform whatever action one wishes.
Again, the emptinesses that perform all things
Should each be set in its place.
The first two are placed on the two feet;
The thighs, the secret place, the waist,
The navel, the heart, and above,
The throat, and likewise the palate,
The mouth, the nose, and the ears,
The forehead, the head, and the back.
Through perceiving the name of one's own element,

One performs subjugation and the other actions.
Again, for each one in turn,
The actions are twenty-five in nature.
One who knows that very emptiness
Should constantly meditate within.

From the letter kā to the letter ma,
Listen, great goddess!
By these, all the gods of the three realms,
The asuras and the humans,
Surely for the practitioner's good,
All come under his control.
The twenty-five principles
Are perceived as ka and the rest:
Self, maṇḍala, and body,
Deity, guru, and mantra,
Consciousness, wisdom, and essence,
Time, cause, and likewise result,
Breath, elixir, and action,
Torma, ground, and the other mudrā,
Sense faculty, central channel, illusion,
Junctures, and likewise lineage,
Scripture and inference,
Each like a magical display, in due order.
Thus what is beautiful in these principles
Should be known through great wisdom.
The action expressed by its nature
Has the color of the fire at the end of time.
Just as the actions of subjugation and the rest
Are made clear in sets of five,
Red, black, and likewise white,
Yellow, and likewise green:
The aims the practitioner wishes to accomplish
Come about through the transformation of these very things.
The nine letters beginning with ya,
By the rite that applies,
Are declared to be the families of the aggregates and elements

And the nine limbs.
In due order, the intelligent
Should know them in sets of nine.
These actions are to be known
In the Samāja, the Saṃvara, the Uttara,
The Saṃvara, the Vajraḍāka,
The Udaya, the Tattvasaṃgraha,
The Vajrabhairava, and the Saṃpuṭa,
And elsewhere too, by the rites that apply.
Thus, extracted from the Abhidhāna of three hundred thousand,
Is the Laghusaṃvara;
From the letter a to the letter kṣaḥ,
Its chapters, in due order,
Are joined so as to possess reality.

Saṃvara, born of the Ḍāka Ocean,
Fully taught within the Khasama,
I shall now explain its means of accomplishment.
On the central lotus
One should vividly meditate on the form of a buddha.
Body Ocean, Avarice Ocean,
Desire Ocean, and Envy Ocean:
One should meditate on these in the four directions.
On the lotus petals, the yoginīs,
Vajra Ocean, Jewel Ocean,
Lotus Ocean, and Variegated Ocean,
Should be meditated on counterclockwise.
On the four petals are skull cups,
The form of the four oceans,
In which all things are ripened into nectar.
Again, in the four corners,
One should set out in due order
Yoga, Wisdom, Suchness,
And Liberation Ocean, counterclockwise.
Form, sound, smell, and taste,
Touch, phenomena, mentation, and mind:
All are to be known as oceans,

And are to be placed on the left and the right.
Earth and sky, tongue,
And ears: all are oceans,
And the oceans of wisdom and the knowable
Are to be placed in the former order.
The great goddesses who guard the doors
Are to be placed counterclockwise:
Elephant Ocean, Horse Ocean,
Lion Ocean, and Buffalo Ocean.
The goddesses who dwell in the corners
Are Illusion Ocean, Dream Ocean,
Secret Appearance Ocean, and Appearance Ocean.
Their colors are as in the other wheels.
This should be known as the maṇḍala
Of the great-souled Lesser Awakening.
Following the order of the eight charnel grounds,
One should meditate in the sequence of the sādhana.

From the mouth of the buddha form
A lotus stalk surely emerges,
White in color, greatly blazing,
A lotus of a thousand petals.
In its center one should meditate
On Ḍākārṇava Cakrasaṃvara.
One should visualize him with a thousand arms;
His faces are thirty-seven;
He dances on eighteen legs.
He has three eyes, of various colors,
A form with a crown of matted locks,
With a crossed vajra and a half moon.
At his back he holds Maheśvara (Śiva).
For the rest, the heroes and heroines
Are in the wheel of twelvefold nature,
Just as I explained before.
Wisdom is said to be the left hand,
And the right is always skillful means.
Viṣṇu, Rudra, and likewise Brahmā,

Yama and the vināyaka,
Nairṛti and Vemacitrin,
Indra, Gaṇapati, Kārttikeya,
Rāhu, the moon, and the sun,
Bṛhaspati, the Protector, and likewise the Lofty One,
Vāsuki and Puruṣa, Agni:
Intoxicated, he presses them down with his feet.
Each is properly joined with his own consort;
Their colors and weapons are also to be made.
He is embraced by Vārāhī,
Who has her own form or is two-armed,
Very swift, holding various forms,
And again having a form like his own.

One should meditate on a thousand petals,
Which are by nature all the yoginīs.
Whatever the color of the Blessed One,
In that same way they are to be depicted.
Short and long, their qualities increased,
The eight groups beginning with the letter ā,
Divided by the twelve mother letters,
Are again the thousands of yoginīs.
They are to be known as ka-vajra and the rest,
Through the mind that is the condition of the elements.
Possessing the yoga of the lord of the six wheels,
All of them dance;
All of them press down upon a corpse.
Two-armed, or else the lord of the ḍākas,
She holds a skull cup and a khaṭvāṅga,
Having a form in the aspect of great bliss.
Emanating from the heart of the buddha,
The three wheels send forth garlands of light rays.
With the life breath looking below and above,
One should summon the Saṃvara Ocean.
Again, sending it out with the breath,
The Ḍāka Ocean is the nondual self.
In all the means of accomplishment of Saṃvara,

One should perform the other yogas as they are.
Simply by acting in this way,
The accomplishment of the mudrā will arise.
All the treatises should be studied,
But one should not focus on other yogas.
One who keeps the conduct of the samaya
Is fully taught in the Laghusaṃvara.
Cast away everything like chaff,
And take up everything as the vow.
Through the thorough application of Bared Fangs,
Let it come by the stages of drawing the bow.
Its maṇḍala and wheel too
Should be meditated on through the former application.
Below and above, the two fangs
Are Saṃvara and the Ḍāka Ocean.
To the secret mantra that speaks one's own name,
Join the syllables hūṃ phaṭ at the end.
For all the secret mantras
Of the vajra of perfect samādhi, this is to be done.
All the ornaments that were fully explained
Are, for the knower of mantra, as before.

"Since my Lord has taught this tantra,
I am truly delighted.
Having done the deed together with you,
How is the lower mudrā?"
"I shall fully explain to you
The lower and the upper mudrā: listen, goddess!
The Ḍāka Ocean is great wisdom;
Skillful means is the Saṃvara Ocean.
Through their union below and above,
That is what is called mudrā.
The stalk that surely emerges from the mouth
Is the self commanded by speech.
That is the conduct of the ḍāka;
Consciousness and all things come.
The form of melting at the heart:

With its light, bind everything.
That is the binding in the Great Vehicle,
The great self, the form of wisdom.
Thus the form in which there is no duality
Is what is called mudrā."
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the great ocean,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This was the rite of Bared Fangs, the fourth chapter.

Then the goddess, having made offerings
And bowed, said this:
"The arising of the vow of beings,
Blessed Lord, please tell of it yourself."
"Through the thorough application against the enemy of the gods,
I shall fully explain it: listen, goddess!
The channel through which bliss comes,
Possessing a portion of the awakening mind,
In that yoga of the vow that ripens beings,
It emanates outward.
Desire and freedom from desire intermingled:
The vow has the form of beings.
Because it binds by that very thing,
It is the vow of former conduct.
In the space of vai, in space,
The three bodies perfectly abide.
The Dharma body, the enjoyment body, and the emanation body
Will be attained in this, without doubt.
When the mind is moving,
Dissolve it into the center of form.
Self-aware in nature, endowed with awakening,
One will attain the coemergent body.
An instant of samādhi without cognition,
In which one dissolves into the three existences:
That is to be known as the arising;
It is not the vow of other embodied beings.

The secret vow of the yogis:
Thus that reality is to be known with certainty.
The inner self, of the days and nights too,
Will by that be explained as the vow.

Possessing all the characteristics,
The groups of the vowels and consonants and the rest,
The portion of the first letter and so on:
Wherever the name is surely seen,
There the family is to be known;
The numerals too are fully endowed with beings.
Ananta and whatever other nāgas there are,
And likewise the sun and the other planets:
Placing the names of the ḍākinīs first,
They are renowned as those mātṛkās.
Generated by all the gods,
Of the mantras and of the tantras themselves,
She is the mother of the whole world;
Therefore one relies fully on the mother.
From the stopping of the nine channels,
They are to be known as the courses of the life breath.
a ā ka ca ṭa ta pa and
The ya śa group are nine letters.
i ī kha cha ṭha tha pha
And ra ṣa are declared the second.
u ū ga ja ḍa da ba
And la sa are the third group.
e ai gha jha ḍha dha bha
And va ha are the fourth group.
o au aṃ aḥ ṅ ña ṇa
na ma: thus they are ninefold in nature.
The four are renowned throughout,
And likewise the five solar ones.
Thus for the whole world
They abide in gathering in and sending forth.
Through those twelve great illusions
One should call to mind the host of seed forms.

They are renowned as the zodiac signs,
Fully endowed with all the lunar mansions.
By the portions of the moon and the sun,
Likewise the faces below and above,
The two, the stable and the moving,
Are explained as lunar mansions and signs.
The pair of life breaths is likewise renowned.
Long and short, victory and defeat:
Above is explained as its victory;
Below is death, equal and unequal.
All that ripens in the sun's course,
The lunar mansions, the signs, and likewise the planets:
Because the signs move in three ways,
They rise while abiding in the sun.
Fully endowed with the rising of the life breath,
It is to be known through all the signs.
The Crab, the Lion, the Maiden,
And the Pot are fully endowed with six families.
Their rising and their having risen
Are in due order through all the planets.
The Scorpion, the Horse,
The Deer, and the Pot are fully endowed;
By the measure of five portions
They rise with the rising of the planets.
The Hare, and likewise the Ram,
And likewise ripening in Skanda,
Their portion is the fourth:
The rising comes, and they rise.
All the risings of the day as well
Are fully endowed with the names of the results.
From Kālī to the Suckling One,
Twenty-four in all, in due order:
Whatever they resemble, such is their name;
They are to be known as the results.
Doubled enjoyment is written,
Endowed with the portions of the senses;
What is attained is to be known as the day.

My day goddess is constant;
By oneself, all that is needed,
And likewise apply it to others.
Therefore, in the outer and the inner,
Virtuous and nonvirtuous actions are to be known.
At the time when the vow arises,
It is to be indicated by nonconceptuality.
Whatever are the planets, know them as the vowels;
Whatever are the vowels, they are the signs."

The vowels and the signs, and likewise the stars:
Their own forms too are to be observed.
The one who bestows the fruit of accomplishment
Does not exist apart from perfect union.
Through a moving rising there is moving action;
Through being firmly stable it becomes unmoving.
Through the guide one becomes a guide.
Because of the merit of beings,
And because it is the very cause of the liberation of the gods,
One should meditate on the Enemy of the Gods.
The wheel whose nature is thirty-seven
Is the chief that brings about the accomplishments of yoga.
Its colors, characteristics, and shapes
Should be meditated on in accordance with the action.
The Enemy of the gods, the asuras, and the bestowers
Is Cakrasaṃvara.
Through the union of all the heroes,
Vajraḍāka, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Enemy of the Gods,
The Blessed One, spoke this.

This was the rite of the Enemy of the Gods, the fifth chapter.

Then all the yoginīs
Assembled and asked:
"How is it that the gods and the bestowers
Are givers of suffering to beings?
If the Teacher shows that all is its own nature,
Then, as we ask about virtue and nonvirtue,

Blessed One, what is it that gives
To all beings, the gods and the rest?
In this I have doubt;
O Lord, please make it clear!"
"Listen, goddess, great Māyā,
Of the many, Vārāhī and the rest!
Following each one's own karma,
Gods, bestowers, and beings
Do not exist in my own nature;
They exist from melting into great awakening.
One's own nature, the qualities themselves,
Arise wholly through one's own karma.
Therefore look at virtue and nonvirtue;
It brings about all manner of conceptions.
Therefore the gods and the bestowers,
With the planets, the signs, and the lunar mansions,
Partaking of the fruits of their own actions,
Give; apart from that there is nothing at all."
How does the Teacher become liberated?
He brings delight with this song:
a mi tā bha ja ni tā ma sa mā dhya mā ga mā ga mā dhā ña ma pā ña rī sā mā ña ri ga mā sā ña mā rī gi ma bhū ya te sa rī re sā rī re sa rī rī sā nī sā ña śru ta ni sā mā ña sā nī śī rī bha ga mā dhā mmā dha mmā sā ña pā yā ma pā pā ma da mi te

Through the thorough application of Amitābha
One should accomplish such a liberation.
In the center of the Avadhūtī
One should mark the liberation of consciousness.
All the winds, the life wind and the rest,
Should be dissolved into the interval where they are transformed.
Consciousness, once mingled,
Is the elixir of all the elements;
By drinking it one will attain accomplishment.
From the characteristic of the passage of the senses,
The tongue resting toward the palate:
That is explained as the Avadhūtī.

From the last of the one with digits, the moon,
A stream of nectar will trickle down.
Filling all the channels,
It dissolves into the form of perfect awareness.
In brief, there are five elements;
Other things are not stated here.
The great Indra disk, earth, is burned by fire;
It dissolves fully into the midst of water.
Swiftly melting, it moves on
And abides in the space of wind.
When the mass of water has been dried up,
It dissolves into that very thing and moves on.
The mind should be brought into emptiness,
Emptiness into the element of space.
Space should be made to enter wisdom;
Wisdom's own characteristic is illusion.
The wise one is wisdom, the self of the knowable:
Thus one should meditate on Amitābha.

One should meditate on this wheel of the knowable,
Well adorned with eight spokes.
The Childless One: bri ba mi u ku;
dha si in the fire quarter; ro ma ga in the demon quarter;
In the wind quarter tu ka bi mi;
And in Īśāna's quarter are the signs.
These, in the order of the wheel,
Are likewise to be set out upon it.
The seeds a i u e o,
The five planets beginning with Maṅgala,
Are to be set in the east and the other directions;
The long ones are to be set there too.
aṃ aḥ are to be known as the sun and the moon;
Here the sun and the moon are liberated.
The sun is in Kulīra, the Crab;
Mercury abides here in the Lion.
Finally, whatever remains
Is consumed by its respective rite.

That wheel, adorned with the signs,
Is of benefit to all beings;
Thus it becomes the wheel of the dola.

The lunar mansions, the signs, the times, and the days,
The Rams, Rohiṇī, and the rest,
And the moons and the suns:
The indications of the signs of death
I shall explain in brief.
Fully endowed with the lunar mansions and the hours,
The planets, and likewise the diseases,
By the measure of the dola and the signs,
They are declared to be the workings of birth.
In Kārttika, at the time of a Bhadrā day,
With Mars, and likewise Kṛttikā,
Know that death will come then,
If there is no yogi.
Mṛgaśirṣa and the Head,
With Mercury and the Sun, bring madness;
Through a disease of the throat, on the fourth day,
In Taurus one surely dies.
With the lunar mansions Puṣya and Mṛga,
And Mercury in Gemini, one dies.
On the eighth day of Maghā in Kulīra,
On Venus at dawn, one dies.
With the lunar mansions Pūrvaphalgunī and Maghā,
On the tenth day, with Saturn in Leo,
Know that one dies in the evening.
Even if one were equal to Śakra,
With the Sun in Virgo, one dies of a tumor.
With Viśākhā and the fourteenth day,
With Sagittarius and Jupiter's turn,
Even if one were equal to a buddha,
Know that one dies in Libra.
With Anurādhā, the eleventh day, Citrā,
And Jupiter in Scorpio, one dies.
With Pūrvāṣāḍhā, Uttarāṣāḍhā, and the ninth day,

With Śravaṇa, Sagittarius, and Venus, one dies.
With Śravaṇa, the seventh day, and the Moon,
With Puṣya and Makara, wealth in hand is lost.
With Pūrvabhādrapadā, Uttarabhādrapadā, and the thirteenth day,
With the Moon, Uttaraphalgunī, and Aquarius, one is exhausted.
With Aśvinī, the eighth day, Revatī,
And Saturn in Pisces, one dies.

The reckoning of the births of all beings
Is to be known by the one who speaks of time.
The qualities born from a single seed,
And the second, by the time of birth:
Having understood them as two kinds,
One should undertake the reckoning of its time of birth.
Through the many kinds of former karma,
The wise one is born into that family.
Its result is to be known,
For it follows from the characteristics.
That circle and connection of the signs and the rest
Is the characteristic of all consciousness.
Through the thorough application of Amitābha
One should vividly meditate on the maṇḍala.
In the center is the protector Amitābha;
For the rest, the ḍākinīs and the others.
As consciousness arises clearly,
One should recall that result of karma.
From the union of all bliss,
Then, relying on nonduality,
Endowed with the union of Amitābha,
The Blessed One, the Teacher, spoke this.

This was the rite of Amitābha, the sixth chapter.

Through the thorough application of Vajra Light,
The reality of wisdom shall be explained.
The goddess, having once again made offerings,
Asked about the wisdom of reality.
"To bring sentient beings to certainty,
Whatever the characteristics of death are like,

Just so shall I explain them;
Listen with a one-pointed mind.
The signs of the channels in the body:
How they are clearly distinguished.
There are thirty-two great channels,
And of them the chief is supreme.
Likewise, O goddess, twelve
Have the characteristic of the passage of the vowels;
By the white and the dark fortnights
They are said to be twenty-four.
There the nine essences are supreme;
They are the characteristic of the body's signs.
By merely knowing them,
The time of death stands as if present.
Merely by the spreading forth of the breath,
When the embodied one's transits are twice six,
In the Rohita portion of the morning,
Its sign is to be marked.
At the nose and the region of the eyes,
At the cheeks and the root of the ears,
At the juncture of the tongue and the canine teeth,
At the throat, and likewise the flanks,
At the tent of the heart and the navel,
At the thighs and the calves, and likewise others,
At the private parts and the penis likewise,
At the head and the region of the crown:
At all these junctures
The breath is cut off, cut off.
These are the nine signs of the body;
They show the time of death.
The counts that measure the days,
O joyful one, are of the nature of the wheel of time.
When it rides upon six days,
The one that is declared is adorned;
There it has the course of three years,
And likewise three hundred and sixty.
The measure of the portions in this way

I shall explain in brief.
When the wind flows,
Having fully reached seven days,
Two years are declared,
With months to the number of the seasons,
And eighteen days:
That is declared to be the measure.
When the wind flows,
Fully emitted for eight days,
The count of his life
Is fully explained as two years.
Then death is certain:
His months are to the number of the Vedas,
And the days are declared to be twenty-four;
That is the count of the time of his life.
Goddess, if it flows for nine days,
He lives for two years,
Two months, and days to the measure of the suns:
So it is for the embodied one in this application.
Goddess, with ten days,
He lives for two years.
Likewise, when the channel
Operates for eleven days,
With the path of one year,
Months to the number of nine,
And eighteen days are declared;
This is declared without doubt.
When it flows for twelve days,
It is known as one year,
With months bearing the number of the years,
And days adorned by the seasons.
When for thirteen the channel
Flows, moving on the right,
It is declared to be a year,
With months to the number of the Vedas,
And days to the number of nine:
Thus the characteristic of death is declared.

Goddess, when for twice seven
The wind constantly flows,
The life is declared to be a year;
Its span in months is likewise proclaimed,
And the days are twelve:
That is the measure of his life.
When for fifteen days
The wind likewise flows,
Then one should know that death comes
In one year, without doubt.
When for twice eight
Of the supreme and beneficial days it flows,
Life is ten months,
And days of the supreme number:
As the measure of twenty-four days
I declare it.
When for seventeen days
The wind surely flows,
Then, by that measure,
The months are nine,
And likewise eighteen days;
Of the time of death there is no doubt.
By its moving for eighteen days,
The months are eight,
And the days, too, are to the number of the suns:
This count of time is declared.
When for twenty less one
The rider on scent, the wind, moves,
The days shall be declared:
Life is seven months,
And days to the number of the seasons, it is declared.
By these times, O fair-faced one,
When it moves for twenty,
At six months one parts from life.
When for twenty-one days
The solar channel flows,
One lives fully for five months,

And days to the number of the suns.
When it flows for twenty-two,
Life departs at the Vedas of months;
The days are twenty-four,
And the months are declared to be the Vedas.
Goddess, when for twenty-three
The wind flows continuously,
He lives for four months,
And the days should be recalled as the seasons.
When it flows for twenty-four,
Three months are declared,
And likewise eleven days
Are proclaimed as the time of death.
Because the count of time
Was explained above, earlier, in brief,
Whatever intervening days were not explained,
By the number twelve,
Once worked out through the sequence of the portions,
The intervals are made clear.
So that those of lesser intellect may understand,
These times are fully taught.
The very subtle and concordant times
Of the yoginīs I shall explain.
Through those goddesses one gains conviction,
And the elements come into balance.
When the flesh of the nose is cut off,
And the Upward-Gazing One likewise flows,
His life is to be known
As seven days, without doubt.
When the covering of the eye is cut off,
And likewise the supreme Upward-Facing One,
Mounted fully upon nine portions,
Likewise is cut off when exceeded by five.
Godāvarī, she who goes upward
Along the surface of the cheek,
Is to be known as ten days,
Likewise exceeded by one night.

Resting fully upon the right ear,
Bhadrā rests truly upward;
Mounted upon the eleventh portion,
Likewise it is cut off at eighteen.
Likewise the twelfth, O goddess:
When the tongue bears black lines,
The death of every embodied one
Is to be known within the nights of a lunar month.
The thirteenth, between the teeth:
Likewise the Black-Faced One touches;
By days to the number of a lunar month
Is the passing of creatures.
The channel through which tears constantly flow
Is renowned as the Upward-Gazing One;
Mounted upon the fourteenth vowel,
By half of ten days, without doubt.
When the cage of the heart is crushed,
And that supreme Upward-Looking One,
At three and five, O lovely goddess,
In half a month, without doubt.
Having reached the center of the navel, O goddess,
The sixteenth, lord of the portions, is complete;
When the nails are likewise without blood,
For ten days one is in doubt.
When the seventeenth channel
Dries upon the thigh,
It is declared to be twenty-four;
On the day after that day, without doubt.
The channel of the pair of calves,
Likewise the supreme Upward-Looking One,
Is to be known as the eighteenth;
The days, too, by the count of the suns,
Are taught as twenty less one.
It is death: when the supreme Upward-Facing One
Comes to be cut off evenly,
By this there is no doubt about the span of life.
She renowned in the signs as the Playful One,

Mistress of the supreme upward passage,
Is declared at twelve;
In the days and the hours one is in doubt.
Whatever intervening days are explained,
At twelve itself there is no doubt.
Having worked them out by the sequence of the year,
By the sequence of seventy-two:
Six and thirty, eighteen, and ten.
Just as this proceeds in sequence by months,
So should it be known, O great goddess:
It is divided step by step.
The remainder, when it is summed,
Is to be known as the span of life.
Through these true rites
One should meditate on Vajra Light.
When the life-breath is filled through thorough application,
What need is there to speak of death for a buddha body?
Relying on this thorough application,
It will be explained in brief.
The life-breath that has come by the vajra path
Extends out to the end of twelve threads.
Through the application of recollecting the Buddha,
One comes to partake of the five desirables.
Abiding in the light of the great secret mantra,
One should travel everywhere.
One whose nature is illusion becomes deathless,
Having the form of the gandharva class.
Like grass that fills everything,
It abides in all things.
The elements of all people
It causes to attain wisdom.
The selflessness of phenomena comes to flow,
And it comes to be established in persons.
Both are great Māyā,
Who abides through the power of compassion.
Through the application of the ultimate, the mind
Dies at all the junctures.

The great death, the form of the Buddha,
Bestows bliss upon yogins.
Having taken hold of all the maṇḍalas,
It becomes the nature of all bliss.
Through thorough application of the stages of the cakras,
One truly experiences supreme bliss.
One should meditate on Vajra Light,
Equal to the form of the Blessed One.
The deity has the form of full awakening,
Having the nature of wisdom and skillful means.
From the true union of all the life-breaths,
Abiding supremely undefiled,
The Tathāgata renowned as Kālacakra,
The Blessed One, spoke this.

This was the rite of Vajra Light, the seventh chapter.

Then Vajrapāṇi and the other bodhisattvas,
And the tathāgatas, made offerings,
And, having paid homage,
Addressed him in these words:
"Lord, tell me the means of accomplishing the deities,
And their own mantras:
By which all come under control,
By which thorough application it is done."
"Listen, O king of the vajra body,
To the means of accomplishing the deities and the rest,
By whose true rite
Accomplishment swiftly comes.
Having drawn the maṇḍala,
The meditation on the body is explained here.
There the mātṛkās and the gods,
The messengers, the bhūtas, and likewise the planets,
The great kaṭapūtanas,
And the secret mantras of knowledge shall be stated here.
Abiding within the central channel,
They are accomplished through the purity of existence.
Generated at all times,

They flow down into the maṇḍala.
The mātṛkās are to be accomplished in the great Indra disk,
The gods in the maṇḍala of water,
The bhūtas are to be accomplished in fire,
The planets in the maṇḍala of wind,
The kaṭapūtanas in space.
In the thorough application of the vajra body,
By the portion of the wisdom maṇḍala,
It flows into Avadhūtī.
The last of the five maṇḍalas
Is to be known at its own time.
Having observed that, outwardly
One should lay out the maṇḍala on cloth or the like.
On the eighth and fourteenth days of the dark fortnight
One should accomplish the maṇḍala of the bhūtas.
Then, through reciting a hundred thousand times,
They will grant it, directly present before one.
Brāhmī, and likewise Śivā,
Kaumārī and Vārāhī,
Aindrī herself and Cāmuṇḍī,
Gaṇeśvarī and She of the Fire Seat.
In the second section, Indra,
Yama, Varuṇa, Kubera,
The lord of the pretas and the one with a human seat,
Nairṛti, and likewise Vāyu.
To be placed in the third section:
The sun, the moon, Mars,
Mercury, Jupiter, Venus,
Saturn, and Rāhu.
In the fourth, Brahmā, likewise Viṣṇu,
Rudra and Kumāra are arrayed all around.
Earth and water, fire and wind,
The elements of the great elements,
The Ḍākinī, the Lamp, the Suckling One,
And Kamboji, likewise the all-pervading lord.
The bhūtas, in the form of bhūtas,
Are always to be accomplished according to the rite.

Through the application of the great maṇḍala,
One should draw the outer maṇḍala all around.
With three encircling lines and a center set within,
The one who keeps the observance should make it beautiful.
An eight-petaled lotus should be drawn,
Its hub the domain of the profound.
In its center, the vajra body,
With one face and four arms,
A face slightly baring its fangs,
A laughing face, yet wrathful,
Blue in color, greatly fierce,
Adorned with a garland of skulls,
Dancing upon a sun, abiding upon a corpse,
Terrifying the Thirty gods,
Wearing a garment of tiger skin,
Of excellent form, with three eyes,
Holding a skull cup and a khaṭvāṅga,
Adorned with a ḍamaru and a curved knife.
In the east, the south, the west,
And the north, in due order,
Are the Ḍākinī, Kamboji herself,
The Suckling One, and the Lamp Lady.

Thus the meaning of the vajra body
I shall state in brief.
At the navel it takes the form of the vajra.
Of the messenger who travels on six feet,
At the heart, the secret place, and the throat,
That very one is to be set out again.
Then, while holding the life-breath,
The mind is in meditative concentration, and not by any other means.
Divine substances and rays of light come to be generated;
The deities of the maṇḍala are born from one's own body.
Through the application of the beginner,
They come to be emanated into the ten directions.
The goddess arisen from the syllable hrīḥ
Is Vārāhī, with four arms,

Holding a bow and likewise an arrow,
A victory banner and a skull cup;
Blue in color, greatly fierce,
Boar-faced and terrifying.
Drawn with the syllable pheṃ is Śivā,
Red in color, of great radiance,
Holding a skull cup and a hook,
A khaṭvāṅga and likewise a ḍamaru.
By the syllable hrīḥ is Kaumārī,
Yellow in color, with four arms,
Holding a trident and a triple banner,
And likewise a bow and an arrow.
By the syllable hoḥ is Cāmuṇḍī,
Black in color, with four arms,
Holding a khaṭvāṅga and a skull cup,
A ḍamaru and likewise a vessel of liquor.
From the syllable oṃ is Brāhmī,
White in color, with four arms,
Holding a lotus and a skull cup,
And likewise, supreme, a bow and an arrow.
From the syllable gaṃ is Gaṇeśvarī,
Green in color, with four arms,
Holding a trident and a skull cup,
A rosary and a sweetmeat.
From the syllable bi is Vaiṣṇavī,
Blue in color, with four arms,
Holding a wheel and a skull cup,
And likewise, supreme, a noose and a sword.
Arisen from the syllable ī is Aindrī,
Yellow in color, with four arms,
Holding a vajra, a short spear and a skull cup,
And likewise a noose with the threatening gesture.
All of them are blazing, with hair standing upright,
Clad in various ornaments,
Riding upon corpses, with three eyes,
A tiger skin wound about the waist.
At the eastern gate, Brahmā should be drawn,

White in color, with four arms,
Holding a skull cup and a rosary,
And likewise a water flask and a lotus.
In the north, likewise, Viṣṇu,
Black in color, with four arms,
Holding a sword and likewise a wheel,
And likewise a skull cup and a club.
In the south, Rudra should be drawn,
Smoke-colored, with four arms,
Holding a trident and likewise a skull cup,
And likewise holding a noose and a garland.
In the west, Kumāra should be drawn,
Yellow in color, with four arms,
A hero holding a short spear and a club,
And likewise holding a skull cup and a rosary.
Īśāna, riding upon a bull,
White in color, with four arms,
Holds a skull cup and a trident;
His other hands are joined in homage.
Indra, riding upon an elephant,
Yellow in color, with four arms,
Holds a vajra and a skull cup,
And, supreme, makes the gesture of joined palms.
Agni, riding upon a ram,
Red in color, with four arms,
Holds a fire hearth and a skull cup,
And, terrified, likewise joins his palms.
Yama, riding upon a buffalo,
Black in color, with four arms,
Holds a club and likewise a skull cup,
And, utterly terrified, holds his palms joined.
Nairṛti, riding upon a man,
Blue-gray in color, with four arms,
Holds a sword and a skull cup;
Utterly terrified, supreme, his palms are joined.
Varuṇa, riding upon a makara,
White in color, with four arms,

Holds a noose and likewise a skull cup,
And likewise his other hands are joined.
Vāyu, riding upon a deer,
Smoke-colored, with four arms,
Holds a banner and a skull cup,
And likewise, supreme, holds his palms joined.
Kubera rides upon a treasure,
Yellow in color, with four arms,
Holding a jewel and a skull cup,
And likewise his other hands are joined.
All the constellations and planets
Should be meditated on as abiding in their own maṇḍalas.
Arisen from their own pledges,
They have miraculous powers and great strength.
The mātṛkās, the mothers of all,
The bhūtas, and likewise the vidyās and the others:
Through the performance of such a rite,
Each one should therefore be meditated on.
In places such as charnel grounds,
Together with the eaters of the various pledge substances,
For the enjoyment of the yogin, ever joyful,
One should truly undertake the activity of the messengers.
By the armor of the moon vajra,
It is as when Vajrasattva arises.
Urged on by the king of mantras,
All of them act like servants.
In the twenty-four sacred sites and the rest,
They should therefore be worshiped in sequence.
Then scents and the rest should be offered,
And the recitation of the mantras should also be done:
In the secret mantra that states one's own name,
oṃ hūṃ phaṭ and the rest are inserted.
Having exchanged the Blessed One in the center,
There one should accomplish everything.
Then, within the other exchange,
The Blessed One has another form:
A blazing triple banner,

A vajra, and a skull cup, supreme, with dust,
Holding a bow and an arrow,
Brandished by the right and left hands.
The rest has the earlier form;
The body, faces, and so forth are as before.
Surely through the yoga of the central channel
One will succeed; of this there is no doubt.
The lord of the vajra of body, speech, and mind,
Having the nature of every body,
Abiding within every form,
The Blessed One in form spoke this.

This was the rite of the vajra body, the eighth chapter.

Then here the yoginī, having awakened the King of Bliss,
Asked with these words:
"O great intelligence, what is time?"
"O yoginīs, you yourselves are time,
Born through the sprouting one.
The great mind, the seed of the manifold,
Is explained through the application of the sprouting one.
The planets, the constellations, and the lunar dates
Are declared to be the time of the mind.
The formless count is its time,
The cause of the bliss of yogins.
As merely the time of the world
It was spoken of by the sages, the supreme among beings.
Then, meditating on the sprouting one,
The seed is the characteristic of the seed.
The sprout has the form of the mind;
The sprouting one arises from the mind.
In whichever constellation, sign of the zodiac, planet, and so forth
The sprout is born,
By that the sprouting one is to be determined.
Nature is to be purified as nature.
All that is virtuous or nonvirtuous,
The lunar dates, the constellations, the rising of the planets:
In all these times,

Meditate on all as born with the nature of bliss.
ro kṛ ma brings gain.
ma bha ma is to be avoided, for it destroys through disease.
ku sva ā is in the form of the maker of time;
That lunar date is to be wholly avoided.
mo bu mo is excellent and auspicious.
ra bu ā brings destruction.
bhu bu bha is in the form of time.
bha pū gu brings gain.
mi gu dha exhausts wealth and the like.
tra gu a has the form of time.
bṛ śu pū brings about virtuous things.
bhi śu pū is disease and destruction.
bhu bha śu has the fangs of Yama.
kū ma kri attains fame and merit.
byā ma ā brings torment.
pū ra ma has the time of death.

In the one who has the seat of Agni, Mikira;
Again, in Yama, Raṇḍā is to be avoided;
In the rākṣasa, the fifteenth;
And Taurus is to be avoided in Varuṇa.
In Prabhañjana (the wind), Distraction;
In the Treasure, likewise, the Dreaming One;
In the Three-Eyed One (Śiva), Bhadrā;
And likewise in the east, the day of the bhūtas.
The lunar dates of the moon, the sun, and the rest:
Their turns shall be fully explained.
Bhadrā, and likewise the Widow,
And Distraction abide on the day of the bhūtas;
They are to be known as the movement
Of the portion of the sun for all people.
Taurus and Mikira,
The Dreaming One, and likewise the fifteenth,
Are renowned as the movement of the moon;
These sequences are thus proclaimed.
In the sun it abides truly as fire;

In emptiness, in the place of the wind.
Thus, abiding in the center,
The tormentor abides truly in the directions.
The line arising from the moon and the sun,
By looking evenly, moves evenly.
Having observed the peaceful and the harmful,
The wise one therefore avoids it.
By failing to watch for its meeting with the fang,
One is truly brought to death.
The speaking of time, in brief,
Is renowned as the movement of Rāhu.
Through the rite of the white fortnight and the other,
One of consummate intelligence comes to know it.
Whatever deluded one speaks
In discord with the constellations and the rest
Has not come to understand this karma
As what people have done themselves.
By that karma the times
Come to arise without doubt.
As long as the aggregation of the body lasts,
So long does time operate.
Yogins experience it,
And come to attain the state of perfect awakening.
That is renowned as the sprouting one,
Red in color, of great light.
The sprouting one, in the form of a sprout,
Should be meditated on as abiding at the root of the navel.
Having entered within a blazing wheel,
That form is the form of divine substance.
Through meditating on the sprout of wisdom,
All karmas will no longer be seen.
From the great union whose nature is all,
Destroying former karma,
Abiding always within the causes,
The Vajra Cause spoke this.

This was the rite of the vajra sprouting one, the ninth chapter.

Then, having performed the vajra dance,
The yoginī asked this:
"How, O Teacher, great being,
Does one come forth bound up with karma?
When former karma has deteriorated,
When the continuum has deteriorated, there is no coming.
About this I have doubt."
With compassion, pleased and gentle, he declared:
"The arising of the great being as well,
As the former buddhas taught it,
I shall explain in brief;
Listen with a single mind.
Through the application of Vajrajaṭila,
It will be accomplished within karma.
Through the application of each one,
It abides as self-arisen.
Abiding in exceeding faith,
One should gather all the faculties.
By its locks the world is always
Bound by the name of locks.
It is what distinguishes beyond all joys;
You will attain the vajra body.
Therefore all habitual tendencies
And virtuous karma come to be exhausted.
The arising of that great being
Is attained by the single path.
From the nonconceptual comes conception;
By conception it becomes nonconceptual.
Having obtained the sound of the bell,
I shall explain their characteristics.
Nine-pronged and single-pointed,
Five-pronged and three-pointed:
Thus and in other ways are the great bells,
Up to a thousand points.
By the thing that gives voice to sound,
Free of elaboration and without letters,
The yogin is the ocean of ḍākinīs;
From its sound true conception arose.

By that very sound, the nature of nonconceptuality
Surely enters into whatever places there are.
The pronged one explained before is the vajra;
Wherever the mind radiates,
Having a body of the class of Dharma and emanation,
There it should be restored.
The characteristic of the outer bell,
As the Hero taught it, I shall explain.
Its round body, always in three parts,
Should be truly adorned with deities.
The lord of the deities of each one,
Just as in the maṇḍala of meditative absorption,
Through the yogins' surpassing devotion,
Likewise all are to be made as faces.
The seats of those goddesses:
On that bell one should make lotuses and the like.
Just as they are adorned,
So is the girdle of the bell.
The deities at the gates and the corners
Are to be made in the eight directions.
Just as the emblems of the yogin are to be shown,
From their mouths the points emerge.
On the vase and the rest, and on the two faces as well,
Above are the marks of their own families.
Such is the great bell;
Its measure is explained elsewhere.
That has an inner form;
Therefore the sound is to be indicated.
The form of the bindu is the great all-pervading lord;
The vajra, too, should be made equal to it.
Thus, through the application of the locks,
All sentient beings should be accomplished.
The one with locks is renowned as the bell;
The vajra is called the vajra.
With oneself as Vajrajaṭila,
One should meditate in the maṇḍala as well.
The yoginīs and all the ḍākinīs

Should then be made to enter within.
From the full union of all dualities
Vajrajaṭila arose;
Relying truly on vajra and bell,
The Blessed One, the Hero, spoke this.

This was the rite of Vajrajaṭila, the tenth chapter.

Then the great application of another,
Through the thorough application of the great hero,
I shall explain directly;
All yoginīs, listen!
In the body of every embodied one
There abide a thousand vital points.
The placing of letters upon them:
From ka and the rest, likewise up to ha at the end,
The vowel letters, the guṇa vowels and the rest,
The letters upon each element.
Again, by the twelve mother letters,
The learned should divide them.
Caṇḍālī, whose nature is a thousand,
Abides blazing at all the junctures.
From the abode of bliss of all the elements,
One comes to attain the enjoyment of the hero.
Drawn in by those rays of light,
The great family of the bodhisattvas
Is set by selflessness as the self,
Within the nondual source of phenomena.
Thus the thousand tongues of flame
Abide in the state of the great hero.
It is close to all medicines;
This is taught as the hidden elixir.

The lord of the letters of the outer substances as well
Is to be known as its very name.
The first names of the groups,
Flowers, fruits, and the rest, number in the thousands.
With them one should accomplish the elixir;
Otherwise it will be without fruit.

In due order of class and the rest,
All of them, ka and the rest, are great medicines.
In another tantra that speaks of action,
There it should be clearly known for certain.
Having meditated on the Primordial Protector,
One is to obtain the signs.
Or else, whoever sees
The elixir of accomplished yogins,
By merely seeing it
Will attain the unsurpassed accomplishment.
From full union with the groups in their kinds,
In the form of the junctures of nectar,
Having the nature of accomplished medicines,
The Blessed One spoke this.

This was the rite of the Great Hero, the eleventh chapter.

Then the yoginīs and heroines,
Having made offerings together, said:
"O Teacher, great vajra,
Arisen within the three cities, what are you?
In what form have you come?
Where does the emanation go?
And at the time of listening to the Dharma,
By what is it made firm?
Gods, asuras, and humans:
By what speech do they go and come?
The characteristic of the manifest juncture,
Please explain it as before."
"The characteristic of the manifest juncture
I shall explain in due order; listen.
The great meaning, exceedingly profound,
Unknown to the buddhas and the world,
Which is the self-appearance of sentient beings,
I shall surely explain in brief.
The light of the vajra mind, as something other,
Not abiding in the elements and the signs,
Arises in the three cities

Of pure body, speech, and mind.
Carried as a former entity, it comes;
Surely it goes to where karma is slight.
Or else, at all times,
It is seen like a reflection in a mirror.
Having first obtained the hearing,
The mind too is in its abode.
By meditative absorptions such as the vajra,
The gods and the others are bewildered.
By that, through the thorough application
Of Vajrahūṃkāra, it always emanates.
At the tip of the vajra it emanates the world,
Radiating hooks of light rays;
By the sound of the syllable hūṃ
The Teacher made the supreme one who holds the wheel.
In the many-storied house of the source of phenomena,
On the seat of the twenty coemergent ones,
He causes them to hear through the conduct of speech;
Having gone there, they dissolve into it.
Thus the master, the lord of yogins,
The all-pervading lord, should be well known.
Vajra and the like are his very names;
I shall explain his characteristics.
His nature is benefit to all sentient beings;
He bestows fearlessness;
He knows the application of mantra and tantra,
The applications, the crafts, the arts, and the rest;
His speech is harmonious, and he is in harmony with all
As with an only son;
He always delights in giving and the rest;
He is intent on supreme meditative concentration and absorption;
He does just as he has said;
His speech is harmless and true;
He has loving care for all sentient beings,
And has perfected leading them onto the path;
He is equal to the qualities of the omniscient;
He has gone beyond all treatises;

He is the father and mother of the protectorless;
He is the maker of the signs of the mudrās.
Filled with these and other qualities,
In this very birth he is a tathāgata.
In the center of the wheel of yoginīs,
Vajrahūṃkāra is meditated upon.
The maṇḍala is that of the awakening mind;
The King of Bliss is the yoginī.
In sounds is the wisdom of sound;
Vajrahūṃkāra is the all-pervading lord.
The remainder of what has transferred becomes wisdom;
It is the cause of the Primordial Protector.
The experience of the mind
Therefore has a subtle nature;
It is renowned as the element of touch.
By that very thing it is carried and comes.
In the ocean of ḍākinīs, always and surely,
The three worlds are made its nature.
Thus the application is supreme and foremost;
Others are like woodworms in straw.
Not knowing its course,
The childish and ignorant are bound.
The speaker of the ultimate bliss,
The one to be taught and the Teacher, Vajradhara,
The teacher of the coemergent form,
The Blessed One, Wisdom, spoke this."

This was the rite of Vajrahūṃkāra, the twelfth chapter.

"Then I shall explain the application without thought of accomplishment
By which the practitioner is accomplished.
Through the thorough application of the Exceedingly Excellent One,
I shall explain the conduct and the observances.
His conduct becomes spontaneously accomplished;
Those who desire accomplishments should know it.
The nature of outer nondual union:
That conduct is highly praised.
For the good mind that is the nature of all,

One should rely truly on the city of the senses.
One should practice in those towns,
And display the observance with the mind.
In the forms of a sister and a peaceful one,
One should go oneself to wherever that is.
Oneself, having the nature of form,
Will be truly seen in a mirror.
Relying on the melting mind,
Dissolve the body into the body.
Having bound oneself by oneself in the vow,
It is renowned as the Great Seal.
The five mudrās and the rest abide on the body;
One holds a skull cup and a khaṭvāṅga;
One eats the five nectars and the rest;
Together with a playful yoginī,
One meditates with a mind of passion;
Even if unwilling, one therefore goes.
By the entities of grasped and grasper
This mind is not stained.
With a mind of fearless aspect,
One goes at night to charnel grounds and the like.
Where one practices on the four grounds,
They are to be known as the eight consciousnesses.
The fivefold conduct and observance:
He sports in Sukhāvatī.
Relying fully on the first application,
Afterward it is fully explained by the mind.
Through the equal union of all the life-breaths,
Holding the observance that purifies the wisdom
Of the bliss of the city of the senses,
The Blessed One spoke this."

This was the rite of the Exceedingly Excellent One, the thirteenth chapter.

"Then I shall explain the distinctions
Of the classes of people; listen.
Through the thorough application of Vajrabhadra,
That class here comes to be experienced.

There, first, the fifth and the seventh,
The eighth, the thirteenth, the fifteenth,
The seventeenth and the twenty-second,
And likewise, supreme, the twenty-seventh:
These, beginning with Aśvinī, are to be known;
They are to be remembered as the class of gods.
The fourth and the three eastern ones,
The second and likewise the sixth,
And likewise the three northern ones:
They are to be remembered as the class of humans.
The third and the tenth,
The ninth and the twenty-third,
The fourteenth and the sixteenth,
The eighteenth and the nineteenth,
And the renowned twenty-fourth:
They are to be remembered as the class of rākṣasas.
Of the class of the goat, the third and the eighth;
The nāgas are the fourth and the fifth.

The sixth and the twenty-ninth
Are said to be of the nature of the dog.
The tenth and the eleventh are the rat,
And likewise the cat is the ninth;
The fourteenth and the sixteenth
Are always declared to be the same.
The twelfth and the twenty-fifth
Obtain the class of the bull.
The first and the last are the donkey;
These are renowned as classes.
The thirteenth and the fifteenth
Are named the buffalo.
The first and the twenty-sixth
Are declared to be of the class of the horse.
The twentieth and the twenty-second
Are declared to be what is called the monkey.
The second, and likewise the last,
Go to the class of the elephant.

The twenty-third and the twenty-fourth
Are the human, which is great in strength.
The twenty-first is the mongoose.
This has been taught in brief.

The lunar mansions that bring about strength and the self
I shall explain: listen now!
For humans, life is the lunar mansion;
It is not obtained in any other way.
When the channel of time reaches the star,
The one who holds it will surely die.
Aries, Libra, Karkaṭa (Cancer),
And Makara are to be remembered as the lofty ones.
Kīṭa (Scorpio), Aquarius, Leo and Taurus
Are taught to be for stable activities.
Pisces and Gemini, and likewise here
Sagittarius and Virgo, belong to the ones that lead.
The Guru (Jupiter), the Sun, and the Earth-born (Mars) are male;
The Abandoner of Evil, Rāhu and the Moon are female;
Mercury and the Auspicious One are neuter:
Such are whatever planets there are in the circle of the sky.
Thus are the classes; but otherwise
The sons of awakening do not change.
That is taught to be Vajrabhadra.
Through the mind in the form of perfect union,
The mind that has reached the left channel
Is joined in union at the end of the central channel.
The seeds of awakening descend;
This is the family of the awakening minds.
Through the mind that has reached compassion,
The sun of karma trickles down.
Ever endowed with perfect giving,
There is no class, nor anyone who has a class.
Merely as play within existence,
A body in the form of meditative concentration appears.
Just as whatever form is seen
In the domain of a mirror does not exist,

So the bodhisattvas
Have forms of the union of meditative concentration.
The mind that melts within it:
There is nothing else equal to it.
Surely, in the center of the maṇḍalas,
One should meditate on Vajrabhadra.
By the rite of wisdom and skillful means,
Preceded by the worship of secret mantra,
He whose nature is the portions of time and non-time,
Who is not a non-entity, abides as the agent.
The great one whose nature is the form of awakening,
The Blessed One, the Being, proclaimed this.

This is the rite of Vajrabhadra, the fourteenth chapter.

Then I shall explain the secret union
By which one is born as the embodiment of all bliss.
Through the union of the ultimate,
One should fully enter into suchness.
Through the yoga of Mahābhairava (the Great Terrifier),
One comes forth oneself as the garland of mantras.
The forty-eight
Are taught upon the grounds.
A wheel-shaped diagram drawn in a hexagonal shape
Is to be made in the center of the ground.
Everywhere one should write
The forty-eight words of secret mantra.
Those forms of the mantra
Have life in the form of letters.
Having abandoned the fine portions of the letters,
They abide in the central channel.
Having made them dissolve completely into emptiness,
One should look below and above.
From the tips of the feet up to the head,
So far does the lord of yogins act.
When one has fully entered all the elements,
What need is there to speak of one whose conduct is of the mind?
Thus pressing the secret upward

Has the purpose of the Great Hero.
One who has fully entered the central channel
Abandons striking, accomplishing and the rest.
By holding the scattering wind,
The first sun becomes inexhaustible.
The mind that has risen on the vajra path:
This is because of the sequence of transmission.
Thus in this illusory mantra recitation,
The root mantra and the others, set in squares,
The squares of all the heroes,
Are to be laid out on the mantra wheel.
The heroes of the lords of samādhi,
The twelve as well, arrive in the wheel.
Whichever it is, preceded by its name,
One should write it in its respective place.
All the mantras of others
Will arise in these, here in this maṇḍala.
All the recitations of body and the rest,
Likewise those with recitations of speech and the rest,
All the recitations of mind and the rest,
And likewise those with recitations of wisdom and the rest:
Urged on by the king of mantras,
The heroes then arise.
In the centers, one should meditate on Mahābhairava
As having the form of fire.
By the power of the wisdom family,
One should put to use all those hosts of bhūtas.
The letters for pacifying, enriching, subjugating,
Wrathful rites and paralyzing:
Meditating on forms that accord with the rite,
One should set out the blazing forms and the rest.
Cheating death, by that very means
One comes to be endowed with yoga.
Nāda is to be united with nāda,
And bindu is to be dissolved into bindu.
Thus, by the action of the rite,
Having recited the secret mantra, one should drive in the ritual dagger.

These, through the chief of mantras,
Are the forty-eight lines,
With the syllables oṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ at the end,
In due order, for all of these.

namaḥ śrī vajraḍāka mahāvīra vīrīśvarāya tribhuvaṇakampakampāvaṇāya daṃṣṭrotkaṭabhīṣaṇabherebāya śatasahasranetrāya biṅyutajihvāya kaṃkālamālābharaṇograya koṭilakṣabūjāya jvālābalīḍhalagnāya parśupāśodyataśūlāya kalpāṃtaṅhūmrūgrapuṣāya bikaṭamukhahāhārabāya mātṛgaṇaparipūritamantrāya sahajasundharivallabhakarāya hūṃ hūṃ kāroccharaṇamukhāya mahāśmaśānapriyāya sarvabhūtasaṃtrāsanakarāya mahākalpāntāgnitejāya jaṭākalāpamukuṭāya khaṭvāṃgakapālaśūlabhinnadhāriṇe mahāsamudramekhalāya byāghracarmāṃbharadhāriṇe betālasaṃghamardhaṇakarāya mahābighnanibāriṇe śatrunisuṃbhanakarāya trisāhāsramahāsahasrekaromābalāntabartiṇe śatasahasramukhāya jñānasāgaraprabhāya mahāpiśitarudhirabasāhāriṇe sarvamārabaladhvaṃsine śriṣṭisaṃhārakārakāya sarvanāgānāṃ ṣoṣaṇastaṃbhanabidhrābaṇāya antramālādhārine sumerukaṃpitanādāya krodhabighrahadhāraṇāya mahākāśatilakātmane buddhakoṭisahasrakṣaṇāniṣbādanāya jñānāmṛtabarṣapaṇāya sarvakarmaprabarttanāyane baṃdanakarāya sarvabikalpabhaṃjaṇakarāya muṃḍābalilagnaśarīrāya parakṛtayaṃtramaṃtranāśanāya mahārakṣākarāya duṣṭānāṃ bidālane dharmodhayakarāya krodhasphārasphāraṇāya iṃdrajālasarvasatvātmane grastabādaprabādamahāmate

Whatever secret mantras there are, such as these,
Are exceedingly many and vast.
Their names, of many and various kinds,
Are to be known through the names of beings.
Through the union of all the mantras,
The chief of all the tathāgatas
Who dwell throughout the three realms,
The Blessed One, the Mantra Holder, proclaimed this.

This is the rite of Mahābhairava, the fifteenth chapter.

Then I shall explain the rite of the higher knowledges
Of all the faculties, the eye and the rest.

Through the perfect union of Virūpākṣa,
One should fully accomplish the three vajras.
Where the awakening mind abides,
There one should surely look with the eye.
The supreme undefiled state of the yogins,
The mind, is to be known as the eye.
Through the perfect union of the channels,
One should bring down the wind in each.
At the time when it arises in any place,
At that very time it dissolves and departs.
That belongs to the eyes of higher knowledge;
Through this mind one will go.
Forms that have entered among those who are born and move about,
And sounds, one will hear with the mind.
The rite of going and coming
Is to be indicated through the divine substance as smell.
Through the perfect union of the divine substance as taste,
The tongue, together with joy,
Relying on the higher knowledge of the tongue,
Gives birth to the messenger of the central channel.
Through the aspect of bodily touch,
One should accomplish that supreme undefiled state.
For the recollection of former habitual tendencies,
That very one comes to be endowed with yoga.
Having made day and night equal,
With sixty water-hours,
And a full sixty water-weights,
One should also apply it to the ghaṭikā.
Twelve finger-widths in breadth
And eight finger-widths in height,
With a measure of sixty guñjā,
Is the probe of twelve finger-widths.
The instant, the moment, the brief while,
The kāṣṭhā, the closing and opening of the eyes,
And the snap of the fingers are to be known as included,
Through the higher knowledge of the movement of the breath.
By way of the six perfections,

The sphere of reality (dharmadhātu) is to be indicated.
One should meditate on Virūpākṣa,
The dispeller of time and non-time.
What is to be indicated and its characteristic
Are made within the maṇḍala of the yoginī.
This mind has various forms;
It is the dance traversed by living beings.
It will attain the nature of selflessness.
It abides through the meeting of the knots.
Its very being comes to act as form,
Beginning with the supreme and ending with separation.
That which abides in the source of phenomena
Is to be known as Vajraḍāka.
Always relying on the path of the downward-clearing wind,
And again within each one,
Through the five winds, the life wind and the rest,
The eyes are to be known as five.
The seed that does not drip drips,
Endowed with union with the Wisdom Ḍākinī.
The five seeds of the bindu
Are the five, the agent of higher knowledge and the rest.
Such a supreme yoga, fully complete,
Is the supreme even among all yogas.
Every gnosis of entities without exception
Has been abandoned completely and far away.
From the union of all within the body,
The coemergent eye enters.
He who makes all entities free of entity,
The Blessed One, the Eye, proclaimed this.

This is the rite of Virūpākṣa, the sixteenth chapter.

Then the Goddess paid homage,
And likewise made great offerings,
And requested, "May the Great Lord please teach
The fire offering of Mahābala."
"I shall explain the inner fire offering of the self
That the wise perform continually: listen!

Through the perfect union of Mahābala,
With all the elements as the filling and the pouring,
Bliss is truly attained as the hearth.
Sun and moon are the filling ladle and the pouring ladle.
The master is nonduality; into that
One burns, in a fitting form.
The various ḍākinīs are this fire,
Whose defining mark is the nature of secret mantra.
The kindling sticks are truly renowned as the channels.
Because the rice is born from śāli grain,
The fat is always the curd-food.
Here the butter is the awakening mind.
The blood is to be known as honey.
The winds, the life wind and the rest, are the dūrvā grass.
Urine and feces, likewise,
Are sandalwood and musk.
Flowers are always renowned as blood.
Spittle and phlegm are the rice soup.
The firewood is the teeth, nails and bones.
In brief, the skin is the cloth.
In the center of the fire hearth,
The hair of the head and body become the deities.
The various other subtle elements
Are the various grains: burn them in it.
The ḍākinīs brought gradually to completion
Are to be known as the full oblation.
All the senses dance,
And their habitual tendencies sing songs.

The various great sounds are the music;
Compassion and the rest are the feast.
One should meditate on Mahābala,
Lord of all the life breaths.
The fire offering for all rites:
Through the delight it brings, accomplishment arises.
In all the elements of the supreme one of the world,
The mind truly sports there.

At whatever time bliss has arisen,
At that time it firmly abides.
By seeing the fire offering as one's own self,
One censures and one favors.
Worldly and transcendent wisdoms:
These are to be attained in the central channel.
Anger throughout all the quarters
The great mind will slay.
The buddhas emanated by conceptual thought,
Arising from that, are to be eaten.
By destroying the indicated and the indicator,
The two are fit to be known.
The defining mark whose nature is illusion
Will be made to dissolve into it.
From the perfect union of all the elements
Comes wisdom whose mark is that the two cannot be made.
The Blessed One, the Hearth,
Who always dwells in the form of fire, proclaimed this.

This is the rite of Mahābala, the seventeenth chapter.

Then I shall explain, just as it is,
The union of vajra and lotus: listen!
Through the perfect union of Ratnavajra
Comes the accomplishment that possesses Avadhūtī.
The yoginī truly sports;
She abides in the experience of the ultimate.
Liberation through union with her
Comes about through the causes of nonduality.
While it is being experienced in the body,
It is the light of awakening even for the childish.
The seed, the letter ha joined with the sixth,
Is to be set upon the vajra jewel.
It descends into the channel of Avadhūtī,
And the Upward-Facing One reaches the forehead.
At the time of guarding, the intelligent one
Should hold the vajra with his own hand.
For one who plays with the awakening mind,

Old age and death are far away.
By stepping beyond the faults of existence,
The three realms of existence become his very nature.
Through the perfect union of the action seal,
One should practice each and every day.
Whatever one sees at that time,
One should descend upon all things.
The very nature of the way of great passion
Will always arise in oneself.
For the sake of the cause of the yoga tantras,
The one to be taught becomes the teacher.
Through the yoginī tantras,
The benefit of beings is surely accomplished.
By the yoga of the four bodies,
I shall not speak what is untrue.
Having the nature of Ratnavajra,
The wisdom born of union travels upward.
One should make her the chief of the messengers,
And delight her with the fire of passion.
The awakening mind is always to be taken
With the tongue, not with the hand.
The mark of the coemergent having been transferred,
One should hold it with the garuḍa mudrā itself.
It is given into the very mouth of the consort,
And then it is to be drunk.
With all one's strength one should eat,
With diligence, what is grown from śāli and the rest.
All fire offerings, too, through that very thing:
Whatever one performs, subjugation and the rest,
Is to be done in its respective skull cup,
And then the seed is to be set.
With those substances one should perform the averting,
The torma offering, and the protection.
Merely by binding with it,
A dhāraṇī like that will enter.
A pill or a thread:
This the Hero himself proclaimed.

Meditated upon in the center of the bhaga,
That which has Ratnavajra is medicine.
It belongs to all the elements of the maṇḍala;
The averting has been fully taught.
For whatever rite it may be,
The mantra bears its respective name.
From the complete union of all the seeds,
These are always medicines.
He who always binds
The mudrā of the Blessed One proclaimed this.

This is the rite of Ratnavajra, the eighteenth chapter.

Then I shall explain the characteristics of the ḍākinīs
Who abide at the end of saṃsāra.
Through the perfect union of Hayagrīva,
One should accomplish the characteristics of the messenger.
The letter ha is in the center of the womb;
The letter ya abides on the head;
The letter bhyi is in the lotus of the central channel;
The letter ba is at the heart.
Holding to the great yoga,
One becomes like Sarasvatī.
It steals away all delusion,
Because the scriptures will follow after.
In the throat, the verses always
Abide purely in the throat.
Abiding in this living form of the horse
Is the remaining yoga.
Going through its union,
First it is upon the seat of the sun.
That sun is Vajrasattva;
It will circle through the three realms.
Having adorned the sky with the sun,
One will go with the mind of awakening.
One realizes the whole circle of the directions,
The supreme lotus of the yoginī.
For the delusion of all sentient beings,

And for all who see the path,
That very sun is ever illuminating,
And steals away the fierce darkness of night.
Arrived at the center of the yoginīs' circle,
The Lord of Horses is meditated upon.
That by which one goes to buddhahood,
The limbs of the sādhana, will dawn.
The obstructors will be utterly destroyed;
Clouds and the like will be dispersed.
It also steals away the evil of all.
Its defining mark is the dawning of one's own joy.
At the time of the sacrificial offering, in the world,
Everything will be accomplished in an instant.
By holding the seven elements,
Accomplishment will come after that day.
These selfless ones are those goddesses;
They sport as the limbs of a single one.
One should not perform mantra recitation,
Nor likewise the fire offering, the āga, and the rest.
One should realize it in whatever way is blissful,
And one will attain the state of Vajradhara.
By passion, the door of passion;
One burned by fire is to be treated with heat.
Likewise, relying on passion through passion,
One is not bound.
That itself is the means; the action of the mind
Is to be made to bear the mark of virtue.
It is not something done inwardly:
With a devoted mind one abides in the central channel.
The wisdom of those who have outer wisdom:
That itself is the buddhas, Vajradhara and the rest,
From which beings, the world and the rest arise.
By abandoning these, there is no buddha.
Between the tīrthikas (non-Buddhists) and the Buddhists
There is no distinction at all.
All the scriptures contradict one another;
The logicians are full of scorn.

Since all words are consciousness,
For that reason those who have wisdom know.
From the union of all the ḍākinīs,
He dwells throughout the skies.
The Blessed One, who always dwells
As worldly within the world, proclaimed this.

This is the rite of Hayagrīva, the nineteenth chapter.

Then I shall explain the qualities of Prabhañjana:
Listen, you practitioners!
Through the union of Ākāśagarbha,
This is the defining mark of the vajra wind.
In the formations and destructions of the world,
Whatever is empty, that is the living being.
The elements are to be known to be like that;
It abides truly in gentle union.
Renowned as being in the form of the moon,
It drips, born from its own nature.
The wisdom of the remaining yoga as well
Is spoken of as Prabhañjana.
At all times it is without movement;
Movement is not seen here.
That is the wind, the self of all,
That fully enters all thoughts.
Through applying dolāhāra and the rest,
It is the giver of liberation to yogins.
That is to be known as sound and bindu,
As luminosity and the three appearances.
Therefore Ākāśagarbha too
Is to be known through the unions of the ḍākinīs.
Through the union of the inner central channel,
That life is highly praised.
It is also to be known as the basis of all,
And it is also taught as the mirror.
The dharma body and the rest are also that,
And so too are the destinies, hell and the rest.
The abode of the buddhas and the awakening minds

Is the vajra maṇḍala.
When, on the path of the moon, the space
Of the yogins transfers without remainder,
Its time becomes beyond all designation;
It cannot be traversed by childish yogins.
Of all the elements of space,
It is taught to be their essence.
Those are the two, wisdom and skillful means;
The states, too, are just two.
The very radiating forth of existence
Is to be joined in the center of the faculties.
The infinite buddhas and worlds
Will play within the earth.
Thus suchness with aspects
And the state without aspects abide.
The continua of mind and consciousness,
The two themselves, become nondual.
It is accomplished by those whose view is the Middle Way;
In that wisdom this is complete.
If there is attachment to the Buddha,
And likewise to the supreme Dharma and Saṅgha;
If one desires the great way, that dharma
Of the learned tīrthikas (non-Buddhists);
If it is the yoga of wisdom and means,
Whose nature is emptiness and compassion;
If all is impermanent, or a self:
This way is to be meditated upon.
What use is there in saying much here?
Even if one desires the dharmadhātu,
One should meditate on the emanation of the Buddha
Who has the form of Ākāśagarbha.
Butchers, bamboo workers and the rest,
Wholly engaged in the business of killing,
All of them, in that delightful place,
Obtain liberation through the protectors who follow the path.
Surely, in the centers of the maṇḍalas,
One should meditate on Saṃvara in bodily form.

In this world and in the next,
Even one whose nature is delusion obtains accomplishment.
He whose nature is the union of all consciousnesses,
Whose sole essence is emptiness,
The Blessed One, dwelling in the yoga
Of the form of Prabhañjana, proclaimed this.

This is the rite of Ākāśagarbha, the twentieth chapter.

Then the Goddess made offerings,
And having paid homage, made this request:
"O Blessed Vajra, please speak
Of the defining marks of self-awareness."
What arises from self-aware wisdom
I shall explain in due order.
Through the perfect union of glorious Heruka,
The yogic course of the moon:
From the first day of the bright fortnight onward,
The ocean of wisdom will increase.
On the first, wisdom will arise.
On the second, it is the form going in the sky.
On the third, it resembles the shape of an arrow.
On the fourth, it has the form of a target.
On the fifth, its nature is that of five peaks.
On the sixth, the six elements arise.
On the seventh, it is the form of the ocean.
On the eighth, it is declared to be a lotus.
On the ninth, it is the elixir.
On the tenth, it is through the coemergent form.
On the eleventh, it is the peaceful form.
On the twelfth, it is the form of a wheel.
On the thirteenth, it is the sun;
On the fourteenth, likewise, the moon.
The fifteenth is Rāhu,
And the sixteenth is called the bindu.
The defining marks of the sixteen aspects
Are to be known as self-awareness.
Through the union of glorious Heruka,

One should accomplish it in the four wheels.
There is no aging and there is no death;
Illness, leprosy and the rest are left behind.
At the navel it becomes the letter śrī;
The letter he is to be set at the heart;
The letter ru is in the wheel of the throat;
And at the crown of the head is the letter ka.
Through the perfect union of the four bindus,
It will be accomplished as self-awareness.
That suchness of sixteen aspects
Is the supreme undefiled state of the yogins.
Transferring from place to place,
It is to be led fully into the central channel.
Having reached the petals of the four wheels,
It is self-awareness, infinite and supreme.
That family is to be known
As having arisen from the yoginīs.
The sentient being, while awake,
Will attain a vision that is meaningful.
It always becomes a dream,
And surely abides at all times.
As the defining mark of enjoyment and emanation,
One who has fallen asleep sees it then.
The fourth is selflessness, abundant;
Therefore those are the ultimate enjoyment.
Thus, abiding in the four wheels,
One will surely go upon the path.
Having realized the suchness of wisdom,
With the sun, which has the suchness of means,
The union of the menstrual blood arises;
And whatever here is in the dark fortnight,
Of the portions of the sixteen,
The sun itself is in between.
From the union of emptiness and compassion,
The vajra blazes, blazes and blazes.
In the centers of the wheel of the maṇḍala,
One should imagine glorious Heruka.

Fully endowed with all the defining marks,
One will go to vajra joy.
He who truly unites all states,
The chief, whose nature is self-awareness,
The Blessed One, ever dwelling
At the limit of the fourth, proclaimed this.

This is the rite of glorious Heruka, the twenty-first chapter.

Then I shall fully explain
The feast of the deities of the body and the rest.
It arose from the perfect union
Of Padmanarteśvara himself.
The channels are truly renowned as the lotus;
They dance with the life wind.

The lord, through the awakening mind,
Dwells within them.
Self-awareness is to be eaten;
With the mouth of compassion it is to be drunk.
Sport with the nondual yoginī;
Those who follow illusion are accomplished.
With everything as its very nature,
One should eat without eating.
One should meditate on Padmanarteśvara,
And indicate him in due order.
The letter pa goes to the town of others;
All that is stable is the letter tma;
The letter nā is the yoga of what moves;
The letter rte has the deity of bliss;
The letter śva is the strength of ta and the rest;
The letter ra has the cause of joyful play.
In all of existence and nirvāṇa,
One should apply its perfect union.
All these words of the junctures
Are to be known in the Later Saṃvara.
Relying upon these courses,
Padmanarteśvara himself,
Heruka and Saṃvara himself,

Vajrasattva and the other chiefs:
That Padmanarteśvara too
Is to be known in all the unions.
The lotus is truly renowned as wisdom;
The Lord of Dance possesses consciousness;
The two arise as truly nondual;
All the deities arise here.
All the knowers abide in him;
In the three realms he is the Lord of Dance.
Upon the great body that dances,
The signs are then to be indicated.
Through union devoted to the sky,
One goes to what is supremely marvelous.
In the center of the wheel of yoginīs,
Sport in the coemergent form!
Through this, the rites of subjugation always,
And through them, delight is brought about.
For whatever rites belong to whichever ones,
One should meditate on him accordingly.
At the root of awakening of the practitioners,
All the buddhas come under their power.
Then, having vanquished Māra,
Dancing, he holds the lotus.
Utterly destroying all evil,
He establishes those who have attained greatness.
All desires will be accomplished,
And he purifies within the existence of the yogins.
Through one's own mind one obtains accomplishment;
It is not to be done as conceptual thought.
Otherwise, he whose nature is union with existence,
Who fully enters all minds,
Should fully enter the teachings
Of the deluded and wasted tīrthikas;
Having completely abandoned bad habitual tendencies,
He should afterward teach the true nature.
From the union of all eating,
He ever abides without eating.

The Blessed One, the Tathāgata
Who performs the lotus dance, proclaimed this.

This is the rite of Padmanarteśvara, the twenty-second chapter.

Then I shall explain the defining marks
Of Vairocana: Goddess, listen!
Whatever wisdom transcends form,
That is called the great wisdom.
Likewise, that which is illuminating
Bears the name of the great being.
From all the tips of the pores
They emerge with great strength.
Having fully entered their openings,
They reach the lake-born lotus of the four wheels.
Just as butter poured into butter,
In the same way they enter the elements.
By stopping movement,
One will see everything to be like that.
What is seen is that very seeing;
Look at the face with the face!
The forms of men, women, gods and the rest
Are like water on a lotus petal.
That is to be known as the great life;
It surely emerges from the dead body.
Bring the letter oṃ to mind,
And indicate it through the movement of the breath.
By oneself, emanate the letter hūṃ,
Endowed with the yoga of reviving.
In the mind it becomes the letter oṃ;
Indicate it as abiding in the body.
Through the letter haṃ, the first of the supreme,
Emanate into the entities of wisdom.
In the center of the spheres of reality
Is the meditation of Vairocana.
Through the dripping streams of nectar,
The mantra practitioner is to be set ablaze.
Numbering thousands of koṭis,

The enjoyment of desires with the yoginī will come about.
Through the desires there is no emission;
If one wishes, one radiates bliss.
Then the yoginī, pleased,
Bestows all accomplishments.
Discriminating between the attractive and the unattractive
Is not to be done toward a yoginī.
Swiftly, the forms of thousands
Are to be accomplished as Vairocana.
The Dharma, in many various languages,
Is heard by those embodied beings.
Vairocana and Akṣobhya,
Ratneśa and Ārolik,
Amogha, Vajrasattva,
Vajradhara of the cause and the rest,
And the Perfection of Wisdom and the rest as well:
These are known from the yoginī.
He who liberates the six classes of beings
And leads them into the higher destinies,
The intelligent one, will bring about the benefit of each being
As the nondual entity.
For the sake of destroying ignorance and the afflictions,
This method too is to be meditated upon.
The sesame oil of all the elements
Is to be used without hesitation.
Through union with Vairocana it is to be drunk,
Or anointing is done with that very thing.
With it one should administer through the nose,
Always upon the vajra path.
One becomes the form of Vajradhara,
Delightful to the yoginīs.
From the complete union of all the consorts,
The yoginī grants the liberation one desires.
The Blessed One, the body purified of all,
Who fully liberates, proclaimed this.

This is the rite of Vairocana, the twenty-third chapter.

Then the great secret is to be explained,
In brief, not in detail.
Through the perfect union of Vajrasattva,
He truly abides in all places.
The indestructible vajra wisdom
Reveals the heart of the being.
Emptiness and compassion, inseparable,
Are renowned as Vajrasattva.
Through the perfect union of the moon vajra,
The course through the sacred sites is to be taught.
From Pullīra it descends to the navel.
At Jālandhara it truly abides.
At Oḍyana all conduct is accomplished.
At Arbuda there is eating and drinking.
At the site of Godāvarī there is play;
At Rāmeśvarī there are victory and defeat.
At Devīkoṭi there is favor;
At Mālava is the chief of the yoginīs.
At Kāmarūpa speech is accomplished.
At Oḍi direct accomplishment is bestowed;
At Triśakuna, for the faculties,
Accomplishment swiftly enters.
At Kosala is the accomplishment of yoga;
At Kaliṅga subtle accomplishment arises.
At Lampāka one will always be accomplished.
At Kāñcī is the accomplishment of killing.
At Himālaya there is accomplishment in harmony;
At Pretapurī, one's own view.
At Gṛhadevatā, permission is granted.
At Saurāṣṭra, the coemergent without emission.
At Suvarṇadvīpa one's own aim is accomplished.
At Nāgara the accomplishment of the site is bestowed.
At Sindhura, likewise, strength is accomplished;
At Maru, the accomplishment of deathlessness.
At Kulutā, as the accomplishment of the true nature,
That very thing arises in the yogins.

Having meditated constantly on Vajrasattva,
Bring forth all the accomplishments!
In the midst of the yoginīs of the sites and so on,
The great flavor that has become the elements
Should be known in the secret words.
The supreme is to be remembered as the coemergent;
Joy is to be known as wisdom,
The self of all, the abode of qualities,
Ever abiding, nondual in form.
For the work of sentient beings and the world,
And of those endowed with yoga as well,
Through the very nature of Vajrasattva
It arises truly from the midst of nāda,
And, dissolving into that very thing, it goes.
This is declared to be its abiding.
Thus all of this, according to the rite,
Should be known by the supreme heroes.
The nature of the twenty-four principles
Is explained to be power (śakti).
Through the full entry of all the powers
That have arisen and are arising,
In a form that is not nonexistent,
Free of the vowels and the three mothers,
The form of the bindu, the great being,
Is renowned as Vajrasattva.
From the union of all the heroes,
The lord of all the yoginīs,
The Blessed One who brings about the entry
Spoke this, the accomplishment of the site of illusion.

This is the twenty-fourth section, the one embodying all the sites.

Thus the hosts of rites of the chief hero
Should be known.
The delightful nature of the twenty-four,
In the site of the all-encompassing great secret,
Having the great secret explained at length:
I shall explain the rite of conduct.
The perception of the elements explained before

Is explained in sets of three.
The twenty-four, which have their triads,
Should be known as eights.
Of the twenty-four heroes,
Each one has twenty-four;
In the yoga of the circular form
The bindus themselves should be placed.
By circling them outside the maṇḍala,
Concentration becomes vajra.
In order, starting from the east,
They radiate to the vajra wheel and the rest.
In the maṇḍala all the deities
Should be known as all the yoginīs.
Five hundred and seventy-six
Transitions are to be made over the day and night.
The shift of breath for each one
Is thirty-seven and a half.
Twenty-one thousand six hundred
Should be known for a day and night.
The very thoughts of all embodied beings:
Their times proceed in this way.
For those who meditate on that yoga in truth,
The thought of the buddhas fully revolves.
All of these, the heroes,
In the twenty-four sites and so on,
Dissolving and enjoying as themselves,
Devour time and the hours.
Through performing such a rite,
What abides everywhere is not a self.
The hosts of yoginīs and the heroes
Are, in that order, "I" and "mine."
In all the buddha worlds
There is no domain of "I" and "mine."
Nirvāṇa as a mere matter of belief
Is taught to those who speak from treatises.
Through ignorance of suchness the world is deluded;
By abandoning suchness there is no accomplishment.

For yogins, in this king of tantras,
That, and its supreme wisdom,
Luminosity and illusion, I
Have explained to the world of illusion.

O! The coemergent nature is taught as one alone;
Homage to the one who conquers gods, asuras, and the three worlds!
Indra and worldly people do not know it;
Worship with the song of supreme great bliss!
Meditate on it in the form of all actions!
Why teach existence and nirvāṇa?
Through delusion, illusion abides like a painting.
Why do sentient beings still let the vehicle decline?

Thus the song of complete delight
Was sung by the Blessed One himself.
That very thing, together with the maṇḍalas,
Take up at the time of awakening.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the fiftieth chapter, called "Embodying the Twenty-Five Principles, Teacher of the Meaning of All Tantras, All the Great Secrets," from the Great King of Tantras, the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

Then the yoginīs and heroes,
The retinue of many kinds,
Praised Vajraḍāka, the all-pervading lord,
The Blessed Lord:
"You are the way of great passion,
Of the nature of entities and nonentities,
A form of pure nature;
By teaching the dharmas you bring satisfaction.
Form of Dharma and non-Dharma,
In you, Dharma and its bearer are not two.
Through the things you yourself emanate
You bring benefit to all the worlds as well.

Great being, bestower,
Who leads the world into buddhahood,
You have taught the pledge (samaya);
It arises from the pledge itself and from nothing else.
By my cultivating merit,
I have set my mind on supreme awakening.
The Teacher abides in supreme bliss,
And by that he works for the benefit of sentient beings.
By proclaiming the sound of the syllable hūṃ,
The proud obstructors grow afraid.
Through your close attendance
They have no birth or death.
They play as the King of Bliss itself,
They journey into the mind of awakening,
They become blended together with you,
And abide as one single mass, nondual."
When they had praised him thus, the Great Vajra
Taught the four offerings.
Being nondual with the lord of the maṇḍala,
One makes the offerings nondual.
Substances whose nature is outer and inner
Are held to be the second offering.
Delighting in food, drink and the like
Is the third, the nondual offering.
The fourth is the offering
Of upholding the Dharma and yoga.

Relying on such offerings,
By doing all of them one becomes
A king of actions. Vajraḍāka
Should be pleased in the triangle.
First having made the maṇḍala,
With the left hand, in every case,
The vessel, circled with the lotus,
Should be held by the mantrins.
First, to the yoginīs,
With hair unbound, give the torma.

All the yoginīs should take the water-born
By its mouth and stir it.
The glory that has come into that one's hand
No one whatsoever can steal away.
Just as bliss is grasped through bliss,
Please the supreme perfect Buddha.
Always keep the pledges,
And follow the conduct of the vajra siblings as well.
Come under the sway of supreme compassion,
And meditate on the senses as impermanent;
Abide having mastered
The nature that is without appearance.
Through the union of vajra and lotus,
The mudrā is the supreme inner self.
The yogin of nondual emptiness
Should abandon all entities.
Here one should practice that very ultimate;
Always recollect the mind of awakening.
By meditating on a single instruction
One should realize all the instructions.
Just as by attaining a single ground
One comes to attain all the grounds,
So too all the instructions
Are attained through a single instruction.
Toward the young and the old
And toward the yoginīs, in every case,
The wise should act
With the rite of equal offering.
Through inequality accomplishment is destroyed,
And one will fall into the hells and so on.
The elders are the abode of all qualities;
Pleasing them bestows awakening.
As a special offering here,
For the young and likewise,
Yogins together with their partners
Should do the circling of flowers and so on.
Never speak words of reproach;

Be free of engaging with the wanted and the unwanted.
Take even what is not given,
Always kill living beings,
Speak lies to sentient beings,
And go to the yoginīs, the mother and the rest.
Continually perform the circle worship,
And give the five foods and so on.
What is gained through that merit
Is freedom from obstructors at all times,
And, through seeing accomplished yoginīs,
A different state of mind fully arises.
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

This is the fifty-first chapter, called "Teaching the Nondual Pledge: the Praise, the Four Offerings and So On," from the Great King of Tantras, the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

This tantra that has come forth:
What never arose before will not arise again.
It is complete with all characteristics,
And free of all that lacks them.
The yoga embodying the thirty-seven,
The nondual Ḍākārṇava,
The nondual root tantra, the great tantra,
Has the form of all the aspects assembled.
At all times it abides
In the mouths of the buddhas and bodhisattvas.
It is the casket of all the letters.
First, in three million six hundred thousand,
The Ḍākārṇava was expounded;
The great one was then spoken as a short one.
It was spoken by all the ḍākas,
As many as the atoms of Mount Meru.
Infinite and boundless,
Within the earth in the age of strife,

The infinite Blessed One spoke this.
The tantra spoken by Śākyasiṃha
Has gone to the far shore of yoga.
The listener is the Teacher himself,
And the expounders are other persons too.
What has been well spoken and what will be expounded
Will also proceed into its very nature.
The compilers and the others
Obtained what proceeds from me.
All the mātṛkās, assembled,
Compiled it in the vajra sites.
What each wished of the other
They requested, making supplication.
In these words
Spoken by the Blessed One they rejoiced.
Go to liberation from evils;
Go forth from existence!
From the union of all the heroes,
Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
Vajraḍāka, the Tathāgata,
The Blessed Lord, spoke this.

Here ends the great king of tantras called "Yoga, Wisdom, Saṃvara, Action and Suchness Become an Ocean in the Six Oceans and So On, Unequaled by These, from the Ḍākārṇava," from the Great King of Tantras, the Glorious Ḍākārṇava Yoginī Tantra.

At the great supreme site of accomplishment in glorious Nepal, in the great temple Yutung Lhündrup, it was heard and translated from the lips of the great Indian paṇḍita and vajra master Jayasena, son of the Śākyas, crown jewel of logicians and unrivaled in the present day, whose heart is moistened with great compassion, who satisfies beings gathered from many directions with a rain of Dharma and material gifts, and who touches the pollen of the lotus feet of glorious Vajravārāhī, together with the Tibetan translator, the Śākya monk Dharma Yönten. Later, a person possessing the eye of Dharma revised it well, in conformity also with the manner of the vajra word of the Glorious Paramādya.

The bodies of the buddhas, equal to space, blissful, perfect, and emanated in various ways,
Speak what is stainless; by the force of the various dispositions of those to be trained,
Even a single utterance teaches many and various meanings, so it is hard to examine.
Even so, when a lord of men, mounted on a great chariot,
Enters the battlefront, do not the foot soldiers strive to fight?
Likewise, following the great scholars of the past,
Though I am not capable of benefiting others, I have translated with the wish to help.
Wherever here, through the fault not of the text or the guru but of my own understanding,
Word and meaning have come into conflict, may the Blessed One, the heroes and yoginīs,
The hosts of ḍākinīs, the gods who delight in the teaching, and the learned be patient.
By whatever small stainless virtue is gained from this,
May all beings attain the state of Vajradhara.
In this, which I have merely pioneered,
When those who know how word and meaning apply,
Speakers of both languages, look at it,
I ask them to correct whatever appears to be faulty.
Do not deride it out of jealousy,
But please rejoice in it as well.

It is complete.

Translator's Notes

• The opening speech is introduced as spoken by the Lord of Great Heroes, but from its second half (with the humble verb "I shall listen" and "I, Vārāhī, ask") the speaker is evidently Vārāhī; the translation follows the Tibetan as it stands. "Dānavas" renders sbyin byed, whose identification is not certain. "The three planes of existence" renders sa gsum, the three levels (below, upon, and above the earth). The line on the world ages (rdzogs ldan gsum gnyis rtsod dus) is read as Kṛta, Tretā ("the third"), Dvāpara ("the second"), and Kali.
• Most of the yoginīs' names are rendered by meaning, since their Sanskrit forms cannot be securely identified; only Padminī, Śaṅkhinī, Citriṇī, and Hastinī, the four classical types of women, are given in Sanskrit. The list as written yields more than thirty-seven items, so some adjacent words may form single names. "She of Taste" renders ro ma, which in this sense-object series is a name rather than the rasanā channel. "Hara and Gaurī" renders 'phrog byed dkar mo, read as the standard Tibetan forms of these two names; it could also be a single figure, "the white Haraṇī." "The Vaibhāṣikas who hold to the modes of conduct" renders spyod lam la sogs bye brag chos, read as a reference to the Vaibhāṣika school.

• This section encodes seed syllables by describing letters by their class in the alphabet and the vowels and marks added to them. The coded references are translated literally and not decoded. "The letter that ends with sa" (sa mtha') is read as the letter following sa, that is, ha. "The Terrifying Lady" renders yongs su skrag byed ma, whose Sanskrit form is uncertain.
• As in the preceding section, the seed syllables are encoded by describing letters, and these descriptions are translated literally without decoding. "Vasu, arrow, and moon" and "vasu and veda" are read as standard number words (vasu for eight, arrow for five, moon for one, veda for four), so they probably encode numbers; they are kept as words. "Those who speak crookedly" renders yon por smra ba, whose exact sense is unclear.
• The seed syllables are again encoded by describing letters, and these descriptions are translated literally. "The third of the sibilants" renders dro ba'i gsum pa, taking dro ba ("warm") as the Sanskrit grammatical class of sibilants (ūṣman). A few lines remain obscure as written, notably "All the forests of pha wane" and "Death in the seal is conception."
• The passage encodes mantra syllables by their place in the Tibetan-Sanskrit syllabary (for example "the last of the pa class" for ma); the encodings are rendered literally. The line read as "Nga is appearance without an object" is uncertain: nga may be the syllable ṅa or the first-person pronoun "I". "Lord of voice" renders dbyangs kyi bdag po, apparently the tongue. Bola and kakkola are the tantric code terms for the male and female organs.
• The ten wrathful ones are rendered as Yamāntaka and the others, taking gshin rje and mthar byed, split across two verse lines, as the single name. "Ḍākinīsaṃvara" and "Abhidhāna" render mkha' 'gro sdom pa and mngon brjod, taken as titles of related Saṃvara scriptures. The line rendered "What has not arisen will not arise" (ma byung 'byung bar mi 'gyur) is obscure in context.
• The list of the eastern land (dus sbyor, ro hi ta, chu srin, rgyal, nyi ma, dga' skyed) appears to be a coded set of correspondences (time, the rohita fish, the makara, and so on) whose exact reference is unclear; it is rendered literally. "Crusher of Thunderbolts" renders thog 'joms pa, apparently the name of the last goddess of the series, not securely identified. "The Beautiful One" (mdzes ma) is taken as the speaker's self-designation, presumably Vārāhī.
• "The Ram, the Tawny One and the Good-Minded" (lug, dmar ser, yid bzang) seem to be coded calendrical or astrological terms (cf. the sign Meṣa) and are rendered literally. "Taught as the surplus qualities" (yon tan 'phar ma) is obscure. Slob dpon sems kyi rdo rje is taken as the master Cittavajra; it could also be read as "the master, the vajra of mind."
• The verses headed by the syllables ā, rṇṇa, va, ma, hā, sa, mu, dra spell out the Sanskrit ārṇava mahāsamudra ("ocean, great sea") as an acrostic. "Chudün" (chu dun) is obscure; it may be a place in Jambudvīpa or a corrupt term for the present age, and is left as written. "The day of the lord of the earth" (sa yi dbang phyug zhag) is taken as a weekday name, and mchu as the lunar mansion Maghā.
• Many of the place names in the list of sixty-four goddesses are transliterations whose Sanskrit forms are uncertain (for example Tirahudati, Daddaranaṭa, Ḍikakari, Jajjayuta, Triśakta, Cambha, Luhara, Purahorika, Mummunam, Bhaṭṭo, Siddhaśrimbali); they are given as the Tibetan spells them. The syllable la before "gri ha de ba" has been taken as part of the transliteration of Gṛhadevatā. The heart-wheel list is said to contain eight but nine items appear as the text stands; it is rendered as written. "Great Glorious One" (dpal chen mo) is translated literally, its intended place or goddess being unidentified. "Field-born ones" renders the obscure □□□□□□□, read as zhing ma (kṣetrajā); the sense is uncertain. Among the thirty-two head goddesses, those not confidently identifiable with a Sanskrit name (She Who Bares Her Fangs, the Terrifying One, She Who Has Passed Beyond, She of Fierce Form, Stout Kālī, the Victress, the Hostile One, She of the Moon, the Fierce-Eyed One, the Outcaste Woman, the Princess, She of Great Magic) are translated by meaning. The "two faculties" may refer, in tantric usage, to the two sexual organs.

• The syllable pral in the first line is rendered as "dissolution" (reading pralaya); this is conjectural. The second couplet (the rising of the Fish, Desire, the lunar mansion, Supreme Throat) is obscure as astronomical terminology and is translated literally. "Goḍi" in the comparison about letters is unidentified and left as spelled. The line about Aries, the Bird and Kula is uncertain; Kula is left as spelled. The mantra syllables set in the four wheels appear to be the initial syllables of the names of the goddesses listed in the previous chapter. "Machine" renders 'khrul 'khor (yantra), here a yogic device of the channels and winds.

• "Skull Fragment" (thod pa'i dum bu) is the name of a hero not confidently identified with a Sanskrit form, so it is translated literally. In the list of deities, "Passion" ('dod chags) is translated literally, its referent (probably the buddha of the passion family) being unstated; bzang po is taken as Samantabhadra, and 'dod among the wrathful kings as Ṭakkirāja. "The causes" (rgyu) before Vairocana and the rest may be an error for rgyud, "lines" or "tantras". The syllables kā, kā and syā in the seventh chapter spell out the name Kākāsyā.

• The five secondary winds are named in the Tibetan as nāga, tortoise, lizard, Devadatta, and Dhanaṃjaya (Skt. nāga, kūrma, kṛkara, devadatta, dhanaṃjaya). The four goddesses brtan ma, pho nya, mche ma and 'joms ma are taken as Yamadāḍhī, Yamadūtī, Yamadaṃṣṭrī and Yamamathanī, the four corner goddesses of the Saṃvara maṇḍala, though the Tibetan omits the element "Yama". "Right action" renders yang dag las mtha', the factor of the noble eightfold path (samyakkarmānta). The syllables u, lū, ka and u, la, ū, kā, sya spell out the name Ulūkāsyā.

• In the list of the six yogas, □□□□□ is taken here as Śūkarāsyā, the sow-faced gate goddess of this group (with the crow-, owl- and dog-faced ones), rather than Vārāhī. "Plume" renders the obscure sgro ba in the list of bodily sites; its intended location is uncertain. Bolla and kakkola are coded tantric terms for the male and female sexual organs. The syllables śvā, na and āsya spell out the name Śvānāsyā.

• The list of "supreme medicines" (Padminī, Śaṅkhinī, Citriṇī, Hastinī and the rest) appears to name classes of women or consorts; several items (rendered "the pale-nosed one," "the one adorned with ointment," "Sun-born," "Snake-eye") could not be identified with confidence and are translated by meaning. The Tibetan chu stong is read as chu stod, the month Āṣāḍha, parallel to the other month and zodiac names (Karkaṭa, Siṃha, Śrāvaṇa, Makara). "Near field" reads nyid zhing as nye zhing (upakṣetra). The crow and owl in the account of gestation evidently allude to the goddesses Kākāsyā and Ulūkāsyā.

• Several items in the lists of animal faces and hand implements are uncertain in identification (for example muñja, the "heron," "marrow" for gnye ma, and bhokaṃḍaka, left as given); they are rendered by their most likely sense. "Mohita" (bewilderment) is taken as a ritual function associated with the goddess.

• The calendrical verses on the wheel for ransoming death use number symbols (fire, moon, directions, arrows, earth, wealth, waters and so on) whose exact values in this system are uncertain; they are translated literally. The letters ya, ma, dā, a and ḍhi in the first section spell out the name Yamadāḍhī.

• The letters ya, ma, daṃ, ṭa, ṣa, i, ṣṭi and nī given in the meditation spell out the goddess's name, Yamadaṃṣṭrī (and in the first section ya and ma begin the name of Yamadūtī). "Śakra has become balanced" and "Rudra too has become balanced" are literal; these names appear to stand for particular winds or maṇḍalas of the body, and the exact sense is uncertain. "Honor should be shown to the heroes" reads rjed as an honoring verb; as written it could mean "forget." "The ten roots" is probably the medicinal compound daśamūla.

• The line rendered "Again the goddess was told" (slar yang lha mo des gsungs pa) could also be read "Again the goddess said"; what follows reads as continued instruction, so it is taken as addressed to her. "Those with such merit" translates bsod nams ldan rnams literally; the sense is evidently that buddha wisdom lies beyond those of the meager merit of the Kali age.

• The verses on the syllables śrī, he, ru, and ka give a syllable-by-syllable explanation of the name Heruka; several lines are terse and their exact construal is uncertain. The deity pressed down with Gaurī, rendered Hara, is literally "the Ravisher," taken here as an epithet of Śiva. Several items in the final list of attributes are uncertain: "lynx" renders dbyi gu, "chain" renders gdos (a word of unclear meaning), and "dubhusa" is a transliterated term left as it stands; "fishing net" may also be read as part of the preceding item.
• Several names in the six-by-six lists of yoginīs are not securely identifiable and have been translated by meaning (She Who Nourishes, She Who Transforms Others, She With a Child, She Who Follows, the Encircling One, She Who Melts, She Who Weeps, She Renowned as the Dancer, She of the Crest, She of the Topknot, She of Matted Locks, and in the vajra wheel the Unborn Yamī, She Who Shakes, She Who Terrifies, She Who Fulfills Desires, and the Great Blazing One); the grouping of words into names in these lists is also uncertain in places. The lines on the first continent and the Guide preceding the list of twelve Herukas are terse and their construal is uncertain. "Tamarisk wood" renders spen pa, which could also mean the planet Saturn.
• Many names in the lists of the thirty-six messengers, the sky-going musicians and the bird-faced yoginīs are not securely identifiable; where the Tibetan transliterates a Sanskrit form it is given as spelled, and where it translates one that cannot be identified it is rendered by meaning. Particularly uncertain are "the attendant" (kha ma), "the woman beaten by the king," the bird names "bya gar," "burning owl," "willow throat," "Hormo," and "Enemy of Deer," and the nāga "Balacara" (stobs kyi rgyu), possibly a rendering of another nāga name. The grounds named are Radiant (here probably Prabhākarī), Radiating Light for the sky wheel (likely Arciṣmatī), and Difficult to Purify (likely Sudurjayā).
• Many of the animal names in the lists of the earth and water wheels are uncertain; transliterated forms are kept as spelled, and several Tibetan names (Khasgomā, the wild one, She of the water cave) are rendered by meaning or by sound because they could not be identified. The list of kinswomen in the fire wheel is compressed and several of the kinship terms could be construed differently. The phrase rendered "the supplementary layer of the enjoyment body" ('phar ma) is uncertain.
• Most of the yoginīs in these lists bear names that are translated into Tibetan from Sanskrit forms that cannot be securely identified, so they are rendered by meaning; known names (Tilottamā, Padminī, Śaṅkhinī, Citriṇī, Hastinī, Gaurī and her companions, Vaitaraṇī, and the heavens of the three realms) are given in their Sanskrit or standard forms. The directional guardians of the charnel grounds here are the planets: Sun, Moon, Mars (Son of the Earth), Mercury (born of the Moon, the Hare-Marked), Jupiter (the Guru), Venus (Śukra), Saturn (Son of the Sun), and Rāhu (the Asura Head). Here □□□□□□□, among the four corner goddesses with Pukkasī, Śavarī and Ḍombinī, is rendered Caṇḍālī as that set requires, though it was rendered Caṇḍī elsewhere. The lines on the ground "Possessed of the Wheel" in the wheel of mind are terse and uncertain.
• The names of the door guardians (the Water-Born, Vajra Dancer, the mare-faced one) and of three corner goddesses (Vajra Blazing Face, Vajra Frowning Face, Vajra Cleaver) are rendered from the Tibetan meanings, since their Sanskrit forms cannot be identified with confidence; "Gāndhārī" reflects the Tibetan transcription. In the list of heroes, the line read here as Viśvaḍāka and Padmaḍāka could also be a single name, and "Ratna" is taken as Ratnaḍāka; the last several heroes (the Steadfast-Minded, Liberation, Wisdom, Means, the Vajra of Mind) are translated by meaning. Among the sites, Mumuniya, "Conduct," the place of gatherings, the family field, the mountain's edge, the field of mantra, the city of the gods, the land of the Pervading Lord's deeds, the Yoginī, and the Dense City are rendered literally or as transcribed because their Sanskrit identifications are uncertain; the division of the last lines between village borders and near village borders follows the Tibetan word order.

• The mantra-extraction section is a coded letter grid: directions name the compartments of the diagram (Agni southeast, Nairṛti southwest, Īśāna northeast, the rākṣasa's quarter southwest), "segments" appear to denote vowel marks or diacritic elements, and "fire," "water," and "wind" denote the seed letters associated with those elements. The quarter called "the spirit's quarter" (Tibetan 'dre) and the sense of "pervading lord" in this section are uncertain and are rendered literally. "As was declared" may instead refer to a text called the Abhidhāna.
• This section continues a coded extraction of the root mantra from a lettered diagram. Directions name compartments of the grid, "fire," "water," "wind," and "the great power" denote element seed letters, and "segments" appear to be vowel signs or diacritics; the precise referents of "the spirit's quarter," "the wind's ground," "the all-going," and "the matrix" are uncertain and are rendered literally.
• This continues the coded extraction of the root mantra. Compartments of the diagram are named by direction, "segments" and "compartments" appear to designate vowel signs and other diacritics, and terms such as "the sun," "the son of fire," "the spirit's quarter," and "the wind's ground" are rendered literally because their exact referents in the letter grid are uncertain.
• This continues the coded extraction of the root mantra from the lettered diagram. Directional compartments, element seeds ("fire," "water," "wind," "the great power"), "segments," "the sun," "the empty one," and the expressions "beyond the ground" and "the ground's end" are rendered literally, since their exact referents in the grid are uncertain.
• This is a coded mantra-extraction (mantroddhāra) passage referring to positions in a letter grid arranged by the directions and the corners of the world protectors; the references (for example "the earth of Vāyu", "the spirit's quarter", "Agni's son") are rendered literally, since their exact letter values depend on the grid, which is not given here. "Compartment" renders both □□□□□□□ and □□□□□□□□, and "segment" renders □□□ (□□), as in the preceding piece. The line "This secret mantra is proclaimed as the accomplishment and compassion of Citriṇī" could also be read as "the compassion of manifold accomplishments."
• As in the preceding pieces, this is a coded mantra-extraction passage in which letters are identified by their positions in a directional grid; the positional references are rendered literally. "Forty less one" is the text's way of numbering the thirty-ninth foot. Indra's gate (□□□□□□□□□□□□) refers to the eastern position. In "the lord who accomplishes manifold aims," □□□□□□□ is read as the adjective "manifold" rather than as the name Citriṇī.
• The phrase □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is unclear; it is taken here as "the bhūtas on the earth," reading □ as "earth," but it could also mean the bhūtas who come to know the place. The final sentence about the mantra's power reads literally "has not occurred and will not occur," meaning that nothing equal to it has been or will be.
• □□□□□□□□□, □□□□□□□□, □□□□□□□□ and □□□□□□□□ are the four world ages, rendered as the Kṛta age, the Tretā, the Dvāpara and the age of strife (Kali). The verses on them are terse and their exact sense is uncertain; they seem to teach that every age is present in every other. "The single quarter of the Tretā age" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, which is obscure. The goddess □□□□□□□□□□ is rendered Yamī.
• The count of views adds up to seventy-four (five, two, seven, eight, sixteen and thirty-six); the line "less two, those of the seventh and the eighth" evidently reduces this to the stated seventy-two, though which items are meant is unclear. □□□□□□□□□ is taken as a feminine form, "the Heruka goddess." In chapter nineteen, □□□□□□□□□□ is rendered "the Lord of Dance" where it is explained as a term, and the deity's name as Padmanarteśvara in the colophon. The verses on the third and fourth chapters and the action and conduct tantras are terse and their reference is uncertain.

• Here □□□□□□ is "the senses," not the god Indra. "All-Terrifying One" (□□□□□□□□□□) and "Fierce-Making One" (□□□□□□□□□□□) are rendered literally; I could not identify their Sanskrit names with confidence. "Two empowerments" (□□□□□□□□) could also mean the two organs in union. "Sign" (□□□□) and "sought" (□□□□) are tentative readings of terse lines. ge ku da ha na are the code syllables for the five meats. The "six-stringed instrument" (□□□□□□□□, "having six") is a guess. "Circle" (□□□□□□□) in the feast section means the gathering of participants (gaṇacakra), not a drawn diagram. □□□□□□□□□ here is an ordinary young maiden (kumārī), not the goddess Kaumārī.
• are is a vernacular Indic exclamation used as a refrain in the songs, and śambu seems to be a refrain or invocation; both are left as written. Here the "circle" (□□□□□□□) in the feast chapter is the gathering of participants (gaṇacakra). "Liberate" (□□□□□) in the song means to free beings, not the wrathful sense. The line on the cord's thickness ("twenty less one") is terse and its exact measure is unclear. "Abhidhāna" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is taken to refer to the explanatory tantra of that name; it could also simply mean "explicitly stated."
• The list of hearths in the body gives no triangular hearth; it is translated as it stands. "Hearth" among the sage's emblems (□□) is odd as an attribute, but it is kept as written. "A measure of coin" renders the obscure □□□□□□, apparently a weighed payment, and "seating in rows" renders the bare word □□□; both are tentative. The four goddesses of the ninefold maṇḍala (All-Beautiful Lady, Lady of Supreme Joy, Lady Most Playful, Vajra Lady of Delight) are translated literally; I could not securely identify their Sanskrit names.
• In the consecration chapter the text reads the opening words of a tantra, "Thus have I heard at one time, the Blessed One...", as syllables of purity: e, baṃ, ma, yā spell evaṃ mayā. "Wind" (□□□□) here is the breath, not the god Vāyu. "The four, laughing and the rest" refers to the four classes of tantra, characterized as laughing, gazing, holding hands and union. Sumbha (□□□□□□□□□) is the wrathful king whose mantra is used to drive the dagger. Only the channel names that clearly match the standard list are given in Sanskrit. The Excellent One, the Empowering One, the Real One, the One of Joyful Speech, the Old Woman, the One Agreeable to All People, the Trembling One, the One of the Essence and the Goose are literal renderings, and Prabandromā is a partly transliterated name I could not identify. The list names fewer than thirty-six channels.
• This chapter gives the secret sign language (chommā) by which yogins and yoginīs recognize one another: a gesture is shown and the proper counter-sign is given, followed by its inner yogic meaning. Several body-part terms are tentative. The "nameless finger" is the ring finger; "pointing finger" renders □□□□□□, read as the forefinger. "Birth" (□□□□□□) as the answer to the throat is kept as written, though a body part may be meant. "Fierce fire" renders □□□□□□□ here as the inner heat (caṇḍālī), not the goddess Caṇḍī. Pracaṇḍā (□□□□□□□) is taken as the first of the twenty-four goddesses of the Cakrasaṃvara maṇḍala. Makara is the zodiac sign (Capricorn). khara is the name of a year in the sixty-year cycle.
• The measures of the day, month and year are given in the Indian system of numerical code words (bhūtasaṃkhyā), in which sky and void stand for zero, eye and hand for two, taste for six, orifice for nine and mountain for seven; they are rendered here as the words themselves. The place names □□□□□□□□□ and □□□□□□□□□□□□ are taken as the pīṭhas Pūrṇagiri and Jālandhara, in keeping with the closing reference to pīṭhas and upapīṭhas. The line "born from one's own mother" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is obscure in this context and is rendered literally.
• The words in the list of signs are left in their Sanskrit or Apabhraṃśa form, as the text gives them as coded sign words; the list that follows gives their meanings in sequence. The item pa ḍu ba in that second list is likewise left as written. The syllable read as "fitting" (□□□□□) is taken as □□□□, "suitable", which the context seems to require. "The dagger of Saturn" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) may instead mean "Saturn and Jupiter" or a peg of a particular wood; the sense is uncertain.

• The "secret signs" (□□□□□, chomā) are the coded gestures and words by which yoginīs and yogins recognize one another. The terms nu baṃ and "the twelve humans" are obscure in context and are rendered as written.
• "The White Vajra Lady" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) has not been identified with a Sanskrit name with confidence and is translated by meaning. The couplet "If one does not remain, one proceeds to gnosis; humans become rulers of men" appears to describe the door of the eyes, which the list implies but the line does not name; the sense is uncertain.
• The code-language glosses in the new chapter (thirty-third) are given as the Tibetan states them, even where the Sanskrit word ordinarily means something else; the line beginning "Birth: phalgu" is obscure and its division is uncertain. "The accomplishments that bear the names of mountains are as the twenty-eight remedies" is literal; the sense seems to be a link between the rites and the twenty-eight lunar mansions that follow. In the list of planets, "Mars" reads the evident "son of the earth" (Bhauma) for the written "mother of the earth." "Drumacchāyā" renders the Tibetan "tree shade," the goddess whose mantra closes the passage. "The Middle Way" may also refer here to the central channel.
• The opening of the thirty-fourth chapter reads literally "Then by the Blessed Lord," followed by a request ("please teach"); it is rendered as a request addressed to him. "Earth Guardian" translates a goddess's name that could not be identified with confidence in Sanskrit; the mantra that closes her chapter is addressed to Airāvatī. The lines "In the field are forms such as kalā" and "the limit of the touch of wood" are literal renderings of obscure phrases.
• "Central channel" renders the term that elsewhere means the Middle Way; here it plainly names the channel into which the drop descends. The goddesses "the Kisser," "She Who Transforms," and "She Who Follows" are translated from the Tibetan, as their Sanskrit names could not be identified with confidence. Oḍi is given as the Tibetan spells it; it may stand for Oḍra or Oḍḍiyāna.
• "Central channel" again renders the term elsewhere meaning the Middle Way, as the context is the channels. The "gargaṭa" whose dung is used for incense is given as the Tibetan spells it and could not be identified with confidence; "cchomaka" and "cchomā" are the secret signs of the yoginīs. The goddess Śyāmadevī ("the Green Goddess") is identified from her mantra.
• In this sexual context "liṅga" is the male organ, not the effigy of a wrathful rite. The "piśāca plant," the "earth creeper," "horse scent" and the "sole-hero plant" are literal renderings of plant names that could not be identified with confidence; "the remainder of the rite of great love" is also literal. The syllables placed in the forty-nine squares spell out the mantra of Sumbharāja; Vairocana stands for oṃ, and the text gives the fortieth square twice, as it stands.
• "The unchanging substance" renders rnam 'gyur med pa literally; in this ritual context it is probably a coded term for a bodily substance. "Become crippled" reads phye ba as phye bo, "lame," as the release by water in the next lines requires an immobilizing rite. The eight nāga kings are correlated with the ten winds (prāṇa, apāna, samāna, vyāna, and the secondary winds nāga, kūrma, kṛkara, devadatta, dhanañjaya); "meditative concentration" (bsam gtan) stands where udāna would be expected, and is kept as written. "The nāga Jaya" and "Vijaya" render rgyal ba and rnam par rgyal ba as nāga names. "The Later Saṃvara" (bde mchog phyi ma) is taken as a reference to the Saṃvara explanatory or later tantra. "The first Veda" in the yantra list is kept literally; it presumably codes a syllable.
• Aśvakarṇā is taken as the Sanskrit name behind rta rna ma, "the Horse-Eared Goddess." In the line about the tenth position (bcu par ni yig de bzhin), ni is read as a particle, giving "likewise, that syllable"; it could also be read as the syllable ni. The closing words bdag 'dri, "I ask," are taken to open the question continued in the next piece.
• Khagānanā, "the Bird-Faced One," is taken as the Sanskrit name behind bya gdong ma, supported by the vocative khagānane in the mantra. In the fifteenth position of the preta yantra, the Tibetan names no syllable other than ni, so ni is taken as the syllable itself. "Piśāca root" renders sha za'i rtsa ba, apparently a plant so called.

• Cakravegā renders 'khor shugs ma, confirmed by cakra bege in the mantra; Khaṇḍarohā renders dum skyes ma. "Three with a half" renders phyed bcas gsum literally; it may mean two and a half. "The syllable of wind" in the eighth position is kept as the text names it, without supplying the syllable.

• "The perch of a vulture" renders bya rgod tshad stan, whose second element is unclear. "Beautiful in harming" renders gnod mdzes literally; it may be an epithet whose identity is uncertain. "The target, in five sections" renders le'u tshe lnga ru bsgrub bya, also unclear. In "draw the yantra," bre bya is read as bri bya, "should be drawn." Śauṇḍinī, "the Wine-Seller," is supported by śauṇḍinīye in the mantra.

• The "mantra of a hundred feet" renders rkang pa brgya pa literally; it may instead mean a mantra of a hundred lines or syllable units, and its identity is uncertain. The line rendered "so it enters among humans" (mi'i 'jug pa) is obscure. Yid bzang ma is taken as the name Sumanā; it may simply mean "the good-minded woman." The "fine fiber" renders bad snal, a word of uncertain sense. In the closing list of forty-nine segments, the Tibetan as it stands passes from the twenty-fourth to the twenty-sixth, giving no syllable for the twenty-fifth; the translation follows the text. The new chapter correlates the site Suvarṇadvīpa with mindfulness as a limb of awakening, following this tantra's pattern of matching sacred sites with the factors of awakening.

• The "forty-eight feet" (rkang pa bzhi bcu rtsa brgyad pa) probably refers to the lines or units of the root mantra; the exact sense is uncertain. The line "dissolving into one's own wheel-turning monarch" (rang gi 'khor los sgyur thim pa) is obscure. "The end of the twelve" renders bcu gnyis mtha', the yogic term dvādaśānta. In the line on the gaze, don yod mthong ba is taken as "an unfailing gaze" rather than as a name. The goddess's name Suvīrā is confirmed by her mantra; gnod mdzes is taken as Sumbha, as in the title Sumbharāja.

• The line "grinds to dust upon the ground of the great power" (dbang chen mthil la phye mar byed) is obscure; dbang chen may refer to the earth maṇḍala (Mahendra). "The night of the fourteenth, the pretas' night" renders yi dags bcu bzhi, apparently the fourteenth of the dark fortnight. The list said to be the eight accomplishments names nine items in the Tibetan, given here as they stand. The lines about the "youthful one" and being "seized by the night" are obscure yogic descriptions of the movement of the drop through the channels, translated literally.

• "The sum of space, time and fire" (mkha' dus me) appears to use the Indian convention of number words (space for zero, time for six, fire for three), read in reverse as 360, the traditional number of the body's joints. "The pendant" renders 'phyang ba, apparently a yogic term for something hanging within the body (perhaps the uvula, Skt. lambikā); its exact reference is uncertain. Gshin dgra is taken as Yamāri. The lines on support and supported, and on wisdom and means, are translated literally; their argument is compressed.

• The verses from Kapālin to Vajrasattva play on the names of the twenty-four heroes of the Cakrasaṃvara maṇḍala, which are given here in their Sanskrit forms. "The numbers of the natural elements are the hours, the nāgas and the arrows" seems to use number words (nāgas for eight, arrows for five), but the number intended is uncertain. In the list of bodily constituents, several pairs are obscure; "the absence of fever" renders rims med as it stands. "The Later Abhidhāna" is taken as the Abhidhānottara Tantra; "the Arising of All Conduct" (kun spyod 'byung ba) may refer to the Saṃvarodaya, but this is uncertain. "Touchstone" renders spar sha (Skt. sparśa).

• The sixteen syllables in the code verses (ra, hā, sya, pa, ra, me, ra, me, sa, rbā, tma, na, sa, dā, sthi, ta) spell out the Sanskrit of the preceding line "When one delights in the supreme secret, the self of all always dwells" (rahasye parame ramye sarvātmani sadā sthitaḥ), each assigned a substance. Several substance names are uncertain: "mountain-born" probably means mineral pitch (śilājatu), "hollow-born" is literal, rābiṇa is left unidentified, and "flesh" reads the bare syllable □ as the Tibetan word for flesh. The commentary on the twelfth verse line reads "drink of peace" (□□□□) where the root verse has "drink of the moon" (□□□□); I have translated each as written. □□□□ is taken as Kashmiri saffron and □□□□□ as birch bark. □□□ in "invoked by all the deities" is unclear.

• The passage correlates the twelve links of dependent origination with the twelve zodiacal signs and months, partly under transliterated, nonstandard Sanskrit names (rohita, mohita, briṣa, raṇḍaka, mikira, bidri, brika, bhidrika, bhitri), which are left as written; "the Auspicious One" renders □□□□□□, and "the Widow" (□□□□□□□□□) seems to correspond to raṇḍa. In "born on the day of rohita" I take □□□ as a slip for □□□□, "day." "Those who are led" (□□□□□□□) is uncertain.

• The numerical verses give the lengths of day and night in periods (nāḍikās) of a sixty-period day, through the northern and southern courses of the sun and the equinox (viṣu). "Sky, hollow, eye" and "sky, sky, taste, moon, eye" are coded numerals (sky 0, hollow 9, eye 2, taste 6, moon 1); the latter read in reverse gives 21,600, the daily count of breaths stated earlier. "The dusty ones" (□□□□□□□) stands where night would be expected and may reflect Sanskrit rajanī, "night," read as rajas, "dust." "By the time of the months" for □□□□□ is uncertain.

• The vowel series repeats the syllable i where e would be expected; it is translated as written. The "transferences" (□□□□□) appear to be shifts of the breath or vital wind correlated with the links of dependent origination as the days of illness and death.

• Many of the yoginīs and kṣetrapālas (field protectors) here are named by Tibetan renderings whose Sanskrit originals I could not identify with confidence; these are translated by meaning (for example Great Face, Twisted Ear, Fearsome Eyes, Great Shanks). Several sacred places and trees appear in irregular transliteration and are given as written, apart from established names such as Jālandhara (□□□□□□□□□□), Kashmir, Rājagṛha and Tibet. The lines on the birthplaces ("the body of the scattered," □□□□□□□□□□) are obscure.

• Most goddess and kṣetrapāla names in this list are rendered by meaning, as in the preceding pieces, because no secure Sanskrit form could be identified. "Vipanasamā," "Siddhasiṃpaḍi," "Eranya," "Kampo" and "Jamme" are transcribed from the Tibetan letters and are uncertain; the line "At Vāruṇya, at Siddhasiṃpaḍi" gives no seat in the Tibetan. "Puṇḍravardhana" is the evident place behind the Tibetan spelling Puṇḍavadha. "Upon coarse cloth" takes □□ as □□□□, which is uncertain. The line "And the wise, become as nothing at all" is obscure in the Tibetan.

• "The day of the bhūtas" is taken as the fourteenth lunar day (bhūtacaturdaśī). "Pīṭhas and upapīṭhas" renders the paired sacred-site terms □□□ and □□□□□. "Possession" for □□□□□□□□ is tentative. The lone syllable □ in "If at that juncture" is read as the conditional particle; the line is obscure. "Bared Fangs" translates □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, the name of the samādhi and deity, by meaning.

• "Bringing under control" reads □□□□□□□□□ as □□□□□□□□□, an evident slip; "placed" likewise reads □□□□□ as □□□□. The titles in the list of tantras (Samāja, Saṃvara, Uttara, Udaya, Tattvasaṃgraha) are identified from their standard Tibetan short forms; "the Abhidhāna of three hundred thousand" refers to the root Saṃvara explanatory tantra said to be the source of the Laghusaṃvara, and "Khasama" to the tantra "Equal to Space." In the list of gods, □□□□□□□ ("the Protector") and the following □□ ("the Lofty One") could not be identified and are translated literally. □□□□□□□ is taken in its usual sense of "consort, spouse."

• The dialogue after the fourth chapter's colophon is uncertain in its division: the goddess's request is read with □□□□□ as an honorific request, and "the enemy of the gods" (□□□□□□) is taken as opening the Lord's reply, though its sense here is obscure. The zodiac and timing verses are terse; "the Deer," "the Hare" and "Skanda" are translated literally, since their correspondence to standard sign names is unclear, as is "the five solar ones" (□□□□□□□□).

• □□□□□□□□□□, rendered "the bestowers," names a class paired with the gods and linked to the planets and signs; its Sanskrit equivalent is uncertain. The eight-spoke wheel verse assigning abbreviated sign syllables to the quarters is obscure; "the Childless One" (□□□□□□) is translated literally and its function is unclear. The lunar mansions and planets are identified from their standard Tibetan astrological names; "the Head" (□□□) beside Mṛgaśirṣa, the meaning of □□□□ ("dola"), and "wealth in hand is lost" (□□□□□□□□□□) are uncertain.
• "Vajra Light" translates rdo rje 'od literally; it may stand for a deity name such as Vajraprabha, parallel to Amitābha in the preceding chapter, but this cannot be confirmed. Rohita is a division (muhūrta) of the day. Several counts use the Indian system of number words: "the seasons" stands for six, "the Vedas" for four, and "the suns" for twelve; "twice six," "twice seven," and "twice eight" stand for twelve, fourteen, and sixteen. The text reads "fifty days" (lnga bcu) where the sequence from fourteen to sixteen requires fifteen; this is translated as the evident reading bco lnga. "The rider on scent" is a standard epithet of the wind. "The Upward-Gazing One" and "the Upward-Facing One" render channel names whose Sanskrit forms cannot be identified with confidence. Several lines in this passage, such as "the one that is declared is adorned," are terse and their exact sense is uncertain.
• Here □□□□ in "the eighth and fourteenth" is taken as the dark fortnight (nag pa'i phyogs), the usual days for such rites, rather than the lunar mansion Citrā. "She of the Fire Seat" (me gdan mo), "the one with a human seat" (mi stan can), and "the Lamp" or "Lamp Lady" (mar me, mar me ma) are literal renderings of names I cannot identify with confidence; mar me ma may stand for a goddess elsewhere called Lāmā, and mi stan can may be an epithet of Kubera or another guardian. "The Playful One" (rol ldan ma) and "the Black-Faced One" (gdong nag mo) are likewise literal renderings of channel names. "Twelve threads" may refer to the measure of the breath's outward extent in finger-breadths. The phrase rendered "one is in doubt" (the tshom za) appears twice where the pattern elsewhere has "without doubt"; it is translated as written.
• The final list consists of syllable codes, apparently abbreviations combining lunar mansions, weekdays (for example bu for Budha, gu for Guru, śu for Śukra, ma for Maṅgala), and lunar dates, followed by their omens; they are kept as written. In mo bu mo the syllables bu mo could also be read as the Tibetan for Virgo, but the pattern of three-syllable codes suggests they belong to the code. "The messenger who travels on six feet" may refer to a bee, an image for the moving breath. "The sprouting one" translates myu gu can, a term whose Sanskrit source I cannot identify with confidence. "Triple banner" and "with dust" (rdul can) are literal renderings of uncertain attributes.
• The opening lines assign named days or periods to the eight directions, apparently: the southeast (seat of Agni), the south (Yama), the southwest (the rākṣasa), the west (Varuṇa), the northwest (Prabhañjana, the wind), the north (the Treasure, Kubera's direction), the northeast (the Three-Eyed One), and the east. Mikira and Raṇḍā are given as the Tibetan spells them; "the Widow" (yugs sa mo) is evidently the Tibetan for the same name Raṇḍā. Distraction, the Dreaming One, and the fang are literal renderings of period names I cannot identify with confidence. Vajrajaṭila ("Vajra with Matted Locks") is reconstructed from rdo rje ral pa can. "The Vajra Cause" translates rdo rje rgyu as an epithet of the speaker.
• The numbers in the last section count the lunar mansions beginning with Aśvinī. "The three eastern ones" and "the three northern ones" evidently correspond to the three Pūrva and the three Uttara mansions. "The manifest juncture" renders mngon par tshigs mtshams, apparently the linking of rebirth. "The city of the senses" (dbang po'i grong khyer) could also be read as "the city of Indra." "The Exceedingly Excellent One" (shin tu bzang po) and Vajrabhadra name the presiding forms of these chapters; the Sanskrit of the first (perhaps Atibhadra or Subhadra) cannot be confirmed. The sense of "comes to be experienced" (nyams par 'gyur) is uncertain.

"The element of touch" renders the transliterated Sanskrit sparśa.

• The opening list assigns the lunar mansions to animal classes (yoni); it is rendered as the text gives it, including the apparent overlap of "the first" with both the donkey and the horse. Here □□□□□□□□ is the animal "bull," whereas in the list of signs below it is the zodiac sign Taurus. Aries, Libra, Cancer and Makara correspond to the movable signs, the second group to the fixed, and the third to the dual signs; "lofty" and "the ones that lead" are literal renderings. □□□□□□□ ("Abandoner of Evil") and □□□□□□□ ("the Auspicious One") are planetary epithets I cannot identify with confidence (by Indian convention the female and neuter planets would include Venus and Saturn), so they are translated literally. □□□□□ / □□□□□□ is taken here as the central channel (avadhūtī), not the Madhyamaka school.

• □□□□□□□□□□ (Virūpākṣa) here names the tantric deity presiding over the sixteenth chapter, not the guardian king of the west. □□□□□□ here means the sense faculties, not Indra; □□□□ is the wind, not the god Vāyu; □□ is fire, not Agni; and □□□□□□□□ is a unit of water-clock time (pala), not Libra. □□□□□□ ("water-hour") renders the nāḍikā. □□□□□ in "the messenger of the central channel" is taken as the avadhūtī. The opening line of the Goddess's request uses an instrumental (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□), read as "May the Great Lord teach"; the following lines are taken as the Lord's reply.

• "The letter ha joined with the sixth" is read as a seed syllable formed from ha and the sixth vowel (presumably hūṃ), but the text gives only this description. In "subjugation and the rest," □□□ is the subjugating rite, not empowerment. □□□□ in the list of practices not to be performed is unclear; it is kept as "āga," possibly a short form of a rite such as invocation (āgamana). Here □□□□□ / □□□□□□ is taken as the central channel. □□□□□ in the rites with substances is taken as averting or expelling. Here □□□□□□ means "fierce" (darkness) and is not the name Rudra; □□ is fire, not Agni.

• □□□□□□□□□□ ("dolāhāra") is kept as written; it seems to name a yogic technique, perhaps of "swinging" the breath, but cannot be identified with confidence. In "Saṃvara in bodily form" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□), □□□□□□ is taken as the deity Saṃvara rather than "vow." Here □□□□□□ is read as "the faculties," not Indra, and □□□□ as wind, not Vāyu. □□□□ is taken in its tantric sense of the female generative fluid (rajas). The chapter's closing epithet ("at the limit of the fourth") is obscure in the Tibetan and is translated literally.

• The six letters given for Padmanarteśvara spell out his name syllable by syllable. The letter ta in the line on śva is uncertain in sense. "Words of the junctures" (□□□□□□□□□□□□) seems to mean a coded or intentional language; □□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is read as the title of the "Later Saṃvara" (an uttaratantra of the Saṃvara cycle). Here □□□□□□□□□ means the rite of subjugation, not empowerment; □□□□□□ is "the faculties," not Indra. □□□□□□□□□□□□ ("the moon vajra") may be a deity's name (Candravajra), but is translated by meaning. The sites in the final list are the standard pīṭhas and related places, given in their Indian forms.

• The numbers in the breath passage are consistent: 576 transitions of 37.5 breaths each give the 21,600 breaths of a day and night stated in the next lines. The "three mothers" (□□□□□□□□□□□) are probably letter-sets (mātṛkā) alongside the vowels; rendered literally. "Twenty-five principles" in the chapter title versus "twenty-four" in the verses follows the Tibetan as it stands.

• "The water-born" (□□□□□□□□) is a standard word for the lotus, but it can also mean the conch; which object the yoginīs stir is unclear, so it is kept literal. The verses telling one to take what is not given, kill, lie and go to "the mother" are the antinomian injunctions of yoginī tantra, which the tradition reads in a coded, non-literal sense; they are translated as written. The Indian paṇḍita □□□□□□□□□□□□ is given as Jayasena, the known collaborator of the translator Dharma Yönten; Yutung Lhündrup, the temple's name, is given in phonetics. The reviser "possessing the eye of Dharma" may be a description or a veiled name; it is translated as a description.

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
