The Explanatory Tantra of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the Analysis of the Secret Essence of All Tantras, known in Sanskrit as the Śrī Vajramālābhidhāna Mahāyoga Tantra Sarvatantrahṛdayarahasyavibhaṅga and in Tibetan as the Palden Dorjé Trengwa, or Vajra Garland, is a great yoga tantra in which the Blessed One, the essence of the body, speech, and mind of all the tathāgatas, answers the questions of an assembly of bodhisattvas. Revered as an explanatory tantra of the Guhyasamāja cycle, it unfolds over sixty-eight chapters the practice of the generation and completion stages, including vajra recitation, the subtle winds and channels, the three appearances, the stages of manifest awakening, and the union of the two truths, along with the qualities of master and disciple, the maṇḍalas of body, speech, and mind, and rites for pacifying, increasing, subjugating, and fierce activity. It is Toh 445 in the Kangyur, where it belongs to the Tantra section among the tantras of the highest yoga class. According to its colophon, it was translated into Tibetan at the temple of Tholing by the Indian preceptor Sujanaśrījñāna and the royal monk-translator Zhiwa Ö.

In the language of India: śrī vajra māla abhidhāna mahā yoga tantra sarva tantra hṛdaya rahasya vibhadakaṃ iti. In the language of Tibet: The Great Yoga Tantra, the Explanatory Tantra of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the Analysis of the Secret Essence of All Tantras.

Homage to the noble Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta, the Ever-Youthful. Homage to the Blessed One, the great Vairocana. Homage to the glorious Vajraḍāka. Homage to the Three Jewels.

Thus did I hear at one time. The Blessed One, the essence of the body, speech and mind of all the tathāgatas, was dwelling in the bhagas of the vajra queens, through full realization by means of the immeasurable great seal. He was dwelling together with many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas connected with the immeasurable vajra family, engaged in making manifest the realization of the great seal of all. He was supremely delighted in the lotus, joyful through experiencing the great bliss that is nondual. Because he saw all phenomena as experienced just as they are, he was turned directly toward the reality of nonconceptual wisdom.

He was supremely skilled in what has come under the power of the unsurpassed samaya of the great Vajradhara. Namely, there were the bodhisattva great being Samayavajra, the bodhisattva great being Dveṣavajra, the bodhisattva great being Rāgavajra, the bodhisattva great being Vajrakarma, the bodhisattva great being Vajrajñāna, the bodhisattva great being Pṛthivīvajra, the bodhisattva great being Jalavajra, the bodhisattva great being Agnivajra, and the bodhisattva great being Vāyuvajra. With these as their leaders, there were seventy-two thousand bodhisattvas connected with the family of the great samaya.

There were also hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas connected with the great family, namely: the bodhisattva great being Sky Goer, the bodhisattva great being Sky Expanse, the bodhisattva great being Sky Moon, the bodhisattva great being Sky Crown, the bodhisattva great being Wholly Liberated by the Boundaries, the bodhisattva great being Vajrasattva, the bodhisattva great being Vajragarbha, the bodhisattva great being Vajramati, the bodhisattva great being Vajrapāṇi, the bodhisattva great being Vajrarāja, the bodhisattva great being Vajrasamaya, the bodhisattva great being Vajradharma, the bodhisattva great being Vajrabhoga, the bodhisattva great being Vajra Crown, the bodhisattva great being Suvikrāntavikrāmin, the bodhisattva great being Nonconceptual Crown, the bodhisattva great being Nonconceptual Sound, the bodhisattva great being Nonconceptual Dharma, the bodhisattva great being Nonconceptual Samaya, the bodhisattva great being Ānandavajra, the bodhisattva great being Paramānandavajra, the bodhisattva great being Vicitrānandavajra, and the bodhisattva great being Sahajavajra. He was dwelling together with these and with other immeasurable bodhisattva great beings, who were especially liberated through the Vajra Vehicle.

That Blessed One had thoroughly turned the wheel of Dharma, had thoroughly brought the deeds of a buddha to completion, and had thoroughly perfected the accumulations of merit and wisdom. He was dwelling with his face smiling broadly at the assembly.

Then the Blessed One looked upon the vast assembly of bodhisattva great beings, and in order to make them into suitable vessels he entered into the samādhi called the Vajra Vehicle of the Full Awakening of the Vajra Garland. From all the pores of his body he spread forth a great net of light rays, and so he dwelt. When that great net of light rays touched those bodhisattva great beings, they attained supreme joy, just like the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, who is endowed with nondual union.

Then joy, bliss and supreme satisfaction arose in those very bodhisattva great beings, and they fainted.

Then, at that time, the great net of light rays was gathered back into the ūrṇā of the Blessed One. Once gathered, a great light ray in the form of a hook was drawn forth from the vajra path. It touched those who had fainted, and like a vajra garland it entered the wheel of the crown by way of the vajra path and remained there. Once again those bodhisattva great beings came to experience great bliss. By uttering the vajra syllable hūṃ, which is itself the experience of that very great bliss, they sent forth a great light ray from the channel at the center of the heart, and each came to be seated on his own seat.

Then, like those emerging from the depths of the water, joy arose in their minds. Seeing the great and wondrous miracle of the Blessed One, their eyes opened wide, and with one voice they praised the Blessed One perfectly.

"Blessed One, you who have become one taste,
Flourishing with innate joy,
O Blessed One, supremely at rest,
Beyond the range of the path of speech!
Just like the Blessed One's own delight,
The three realms of beings are truly blissful.
How wonderful! Tasting the nectar of the innate,
Great compassion is born.
Blessed One, you make clear
All the aims of all sentient beings.
One taste of the three realities,
The great seal, fully discerned:
The Blessed One delights in the great yoga,
And cuts through every bond.
The Blessed One rejoices greatly,
And surely makes beings fortunate.
How wonderful! The blissful Vajra Vehicle

Grants great joy and satisfaction.
How wonderful! The mantra, fully unfolded,
Accomplishes the self-arisen state.
How wonderful! You teach the most profound Dharma
Free of any object of reference.
How wonderful! Great Vajradhara, the chief,
Lord of Secrets, utterly secret!
How wonderful, the supremely awakened one!
How wonderful! Free of all elaboration,
You make clear the meaning of truth,
And illuminate with the lamp of the vehicle.
Protector, through your kindness
We attain the state of Vajrasattva.
Protector, we had entered wrong paths;
You set us on the true path.
Protector, we were lost in darkness;
You let us gain the light of wisdom.
O Samayavajra, sun
Who teaches the meaning of the great seal,
Blessed One, I bow to you and praise you,
The very self of the great seal of compassion.
Homage to you, sky of nondual joy;
To you, moon of joy, I bow."

When they had praised the Blessed One with these and other verses, they gathered together once more. Wishing to ask about the nature, just as it is, of the very subtle ground called the Explanation of the Vajra Garland, they were of a single attention. Wishing to hear the speech that gives joy to the one-pointed mind, with their hair standing on end and their breath trembling, they bowed to the Blessed One again and again. Then they sat down on their own seats and remained there, their minds full of hope and apprehension.

The Blessed One knew in his heart these thoughts in their minds, and again he entered the samādhi called the Full Awakening of the Vajra Garland. From the secret vajra he brought forth his own consort. Endowed with the moods of grace and the rest, they themselves cast off forms free of passion and took on forms endowed with the moods of grace and the rest. Each embraced his own consort and entered into the yoga of the great seal. Then, seeing themselves once again in such forms, they were filled with wonder. Their eyes opened wide, and since they saw it as if it were the arrangement of a painting, they said nothing at all. So the assembly remained properly seated there.

Then the Blessed One urged on his own consort, and setting aside the yoga of the great seal, from his own vajra of body, speech and mind he spoke this heart mantra of the vajra queen, the vajra family:

oṃ āḥ hūṃ

As soon as he had said this, all the tathāgatas, the consorts, the bodhisattvas and the wrathful kings emerged from the pores of the Blessed One. Having emerged, they took their places on their own seats in the east and the other directions around the Blessed One: some in the form of Vairocana, some in the form of Ratnasambhava, some in the form of Amitābha, and so on up to the forms of King Sumbha and the king Uṣṇīṣacakravartin. Then the Blessed One remained for a little while without saying anything.

At that time all those bodhisattvas spoke out with one voice and said:

"How wonderful, great vajra family,
You teach the meaning of the vajra garland!
How wonderful, clear Vajra Vehicle,
You teach the meaning of the dharmadhātu!"

Having said this three times, they bowed to the great Vajradhara and sat down.

Then at that time, in that instant, that moment, that very second, Vajrapāṇi saw the vast assembly of bodhisattva great beings gathered there, bowed to the Blessed One, and addressed him with these words:

"Blessed One, lord of the wisdom vajra,
Dwelling within the secret lotus,
Lord of the yoga of the great pledge,
In your compassion, hear my words!
The buddhas of the Fortunate Eon,
Who long for the Vajra Vehicle,
And the bodhisattva great beings,
All these sit here, having bowed with their bodies.

"In the time of the five degenerations,
Sentient beings of the future
Will have little diligence and little merit,

Many wrong views,
And short lives.
I ask so that they may attain the supreme state.
These children of the victors
And the sentient beings of the future,
By what will they be swiftly liberated
To the far shore beyond saṃsāra?

"To the lord, the great Vajradhara,
I make this request:
Lord of beings, through your kindness,
I seek the supreme reality.
The secret of all the buddhas,
The condensed meaning of all the tantras,
The two unsurpassed stages,
The full realization of the Vajra Garland:
I wish to ask a little about these.
The yoga of the completion stage,
Please teach it to me.
What was given only as a hint in the Glorious Guhyasamāja,
The unsurpassed yoga tantra,
Among the Great Sage's eighty-four thousand
Heaps of Dharma."

Having said this, he sat before him,
And, having bowed with his body, he said:
"Great wisdom, Blessed One,
Vajrasattva, guru of beings,
You who teach the meaning of the single taste of the three vajras,
And the state of the three realities,
Please teach me
The hidden meaning of the yoga tantras.

"Why is it named the Vajra Garland?
What is union, and what is empty?
The divisions of the drop, and sound,
The secret, and the pledge,
The vow, and mere sound,
The reality of wind: what is great bliss?

The union of vajra and lotus,
The reality of mantra, the yogin,
The winds and the wheels:
How many are there, and where do they abide?
What channels are in the yogin's body?
The moments, such as variety,
The four joys, and the substances,
Mantra, wind, and drop,
What are the three syllables and the three realities,
And likewise the three tips of the nose?
The emptiness of the body, and wisdom,
And how do the deities abide?
What are their names?
What are rising and setting?
Protector, how the joys
Truly arise, please explain clearly.

"The channels explained before,
How do they always flow in the vajra body?
Those three channels of the junctures,
How are they said to be the principal ones?
How do the winds rise,
And, Lord, how do they dissolve?
Their gathering into the ḍākinī,
Lord, how is it truly attained?
Having cut off the winds of conceptual thought,
How does nonconceptuality dawn?
How do the channels set,
And how does one undertake the six yogas?
What are the characteristics of time?
And what is the fruit of the secret?

"The vajra of the dharmadhātu,
What are the divisions of the families?
How many are the divisions of the mudrās?
The aggregates and the rest, the sense sources,
And why the name Great Seal (mahāmudrā)?
The divisions of the tastes,

And in what does the word 'I' abide?
The condensed divisions of emptiness,
And where does emptiness arise?
What are day and night?
The code of the vowels and consonants,
And what is the dawning at the junctures?

"Approach and the rest, taught before the tantra,
The activities of the twenty rites:
What is their reason, and what their result?
How is the rite of offering taught?
Likewise the nature of the goddesses,
And how are the goddesses' names taught?
What is meant by 'Thus I' and the rest,
Spoken at the beginning of the tantra?
The opening words, 'Thus' and so on,
How is their meaning to be elaborated?
What is the inner fire offering of oneself?
Eating the five nectars,
The gathering of the assembly of yoginīs,
And likewise the secret signs:
The maṇḍalas of the vajra
Of body, speech, and mind, how are they taught?
The Buddha, the true Dharma, and the Saṅgha,
How are their names explained?
Guru, teacher, master,
And Vajradhara, what is their explanation?

"Possessing what qualities
Does a disciple become a vessel for the yoga tantra?
How many divisions are there of their conduct,
And what is its result?
Pacifying, enriching, subjugating,
And likewise killing, expelling,
And immobilizing:
How are they applied in accomplishment?
The fierce rite against the target,
And what are the words of the mantra?

Protector, what is the recitation of the wrathful one?
Attaining the eight accomplishments,
And how are the five superknowledges attained?
How do yogins see reality,
And attain full awakening in a single instant,
With a stable body free of aging?
The practice of essence extraction (rasāyana),
The practices of turning metals into gold and the rest,
And the great accomplishment of the vajra mudrā:
Guru of beings, how are they attained?
The body's nature as a celestial palace,
What is its nature?
How do the sacred sites and the rest abide in it?
Dissolution, and the lord of enjoyment,
What is wind, and what is its characteristic?
And how do these come to perish?"

When the questions had thus been completed,
Vajrapāṇi joined his palms,
Sat before the guru of beings,
And bowed with his body. Then
The Lord gave Vajrasattva
His approval, saying "Excellent!",
And with a deep and melodious voice like Brahmā's,
The protector of beings spoke.

This concludes the first chapter of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Full Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the chapter on the setting of the tantra, comprising the request, the questions, the activity of the disciple, and so on.

Then the Blessed Vajra spoke.
With the speech of reality, the protector of beings
Called out to Vajrapāṇi:
"The definitive explanation of what you have rightly asked,
The meaning of the essence, the condensed meaning,
All the matters hard to distinguish
That you have asked about,
Vajra Lord, master of the great secret:
In the action and performance tantras,

And in the yoga tantras, nowhere
Has the supreme secret been taught.
Vajra Lord, the supreme reality,
The answers to what was asked,
I shall definitely explain, and clearly."
In an instant he opened his eyes,
And, displaying the supremely marvelous,
Pervaded by compassion, he said this:
"Therefore listen well."

Then, Vajrapāṇi having made his request to the Blessed One, whose heart was moistened with compassion and who cuts off all doubts, the Blessed One gave his explanation in words of the supreme secret:

"Empowerment is foremost;
In it all accomplishments always abide.
I shall explain its meaning just as it is,
So first listen properly.
When first the intelligent disciple
Has been properly empowered,
Then he becomes a vessel
For the yoga of the completion stage.
If one lacks proper empowerment,
Even though the practitioner knows the meaning of the tantra,
Master and disciple alike
Go to the unbearable great hell.
Therefore the true guru
Should be served with deep reverence.

"One who has received empowerment and knows reality,
Intelligent, compassionate by nature,
Profound, vast, and stainless,
Who has given up harm and violence,
Fortunate, with a body complete,
Adorned with the major and minor marks,
Delighting solely in great passion,
Free of jealousy over sense objects,
Conscientious, and always joyful,
Born from the womb of a yoginī,

Devoted solely to the Vajra Vehicle,
Turning his back on the lesser vehicle:
A guru endowed with these and other qualities
The disciple should serve.
Having found a true guru,
The stains of the disciple's nature
Are purified, and realization and ripening are brought about;
Then one possesses excellent wisdom, just as it is.

"Just as a jewel is tested by rubbing,
And gold by burning and cutting,
So too the disciple
Should be examined for as long as twelve years.
Therefore, each examining the other in this way,
Examine thus at all times.
Otherwise obstructors will arise,
Destroying accomplishments and bringing suffering.
Just as poison is overcome by mantra,
And, purified by mantra, becomes an elixir,
So, with every effort,
Having brought the mantra disciple to understanding
Through the guru's empowerment and the rest,
The meaning as it is serves accomplishment.
Thus through empowerment the disciple
Who is impure becomes pure."

Then Vajrapāṇi asked
Vajrasattva, the great bliss:
"How is it that empowerment
Is declared foremost in the tantra?"
Vajrasattva, the omniscient,
Who cuts off all doubts,
Knowing reality,
Said to Vajrapāṇi:
"That meaning, just as it is,
I shall properly explain. Listen!

"As for the divisions of empowerment,
The first empowerment is the principal one;

The second bears the name secret;
The third is complete union;
The meaning of the fourth is the sublime.
The principal one has eleven divisions;
The twelfth is the secret;
The thirteenth is perfect union;
The fourteenth is the ultimate:
One for each empowerment.
The three are the causal empowerments;
The fourth should be known as the result.
Through the sequence of joy and the rest,
I pervade them all.

"On the third day of the waning fortnight,
And likewise on the tenth and the fourteenth,
The guru empowers, according to the rite,
The disciple endowed with good qualities.
One slender of body, sixteen years of age,
Adorned with beauty and good fortune,
With wide, dark blue eyes,
Of compassionate intent and true devotion,
Sweet of speech, who has received empowerment,
And is especially devoted to the yoga tantras;
Or else one twenty years of age,
Delightful and bestowing bliss.
Older than that, she becomes unsuitable,
And makes accomplishment distant.
Above all a gentle maiden,
One's wife, or one's sister,
Or one's daughter, should with faith
Be offered to the guru.
Having made offerings with gold, jewels, and clothing,
And with various garlands of pearls,
And sitting before the guru,
The disciple should say this:
'From this day on I am your servant.
Lord, accept my offering.'

Having pleased him in this way,
One should honor the guru with one's whole being.
The guru's essence is Vajradhara;
Therefore honor the true guru.

"Then the blessed mother, the consort,
Should be properly honored and then united with.
Whatever arises from that union,
That which has fallen, into the mouth of the fortunate one,
Applying the thumb and ring finger,
Should be properly enjoyed.
The wisdom born from that
Is great bliss, self-aware.
Exhalation and inhalation are of a single taste;
Honor it with supreme joy.
With the mantra hūṃ phaṭ, at the door of the jewel,
Having placed it, one should stir the vajra.
Just as the joys are,
Arising in that moment,
The bliss, with a joyful mind,
Is spoken from the mouth of the vajra lady.
She too, being entrusted
Into the disciple's hand, clearly says this:
'Worship the lotus as it should be done:
Do it, at the supreme face of e vaṃ,
Because the Lord of the Vajradhātu
Has himself entered her heart.'
By any other means
The yogin will not attain buddhahood.
That most subtle thing
Is realized by the yogin of great bliss.
It should be relied upon with great effort.
As for the characteristic of innate joy,
Since empowerment is foremost,
Through it everything is attained just as it is."

This concludes the second chapter of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Full Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the chapter on examining master and disciple and on empowerment.

"Next, listen to further reality,
The clarification of the meaning of the Vajra Garland.
What is hidden in all the tantras
Should not be told to others who ask.
The name called Vajra Garland:
It is the thirteenth ground,
The abode of the meaning of the four joys.
The all-empty is joy,
Beyond the range of speech,
Free of all duality,
The culmination of all the yogas of the fortunate,
The domain of the yoginī's speech,
Emptiness, wisdom, and vajra:
This is explained as the Vajra Garland."

"Emptiness is the vajra, the secret lotus;
The channel is the Lord of the Vajradhātu;
Wisdom is the supreme great bliss,
The marvelous innate joy.
That vajra, moreover,
Is renowned as what pierces conceptual thoughts.
Garland, in turn, is their continuity.
The vajras of the mind of awakening,
Being indivisible, are called vajra.
What is hidden in all the tantras
Should not be told to just anyone.
It is renowned as the breath.
Garland: its continuity unbroken,
Through the nature of descending joy
It pierces all the winds of conceptual thought.
Otherwise one cannot pierce the wind.

"Always, day and night,
Clearly one hundred and eight
Winds whose nature is conceptual thought
Arise and are destroyed.
Distinguishing them precisely,
Listen to the names of the winds!

Release-and-Hold and Hundred Million,
Intoxicated and Evil Mind,
Cooler and Itch,
Mucus and Axe,
Fragment, Makara, and Jaśa,
Bared Fangs and Time of Intoxication,
Lust-Drunk, Sinew, and Makara,
Producer of Variety and Bowing,
Haughty, Drum, and Proclaimer of Sound,
Vāyu and Piercer of Vital Points,
Fire, Time, and What Shall I Do,
Vajra, Supreme Giver, and Cuta,
Tent and Moonlight,
Kamboja and Matted-Haired,
Black Mustard, Spread Out, and Summoner of Time,
Scorpion and Left-Leaning,
Steadfast and Throat,
Winter-Dispeller, Supreme Bestower, and Maddener,
Arrogance, Lake, and Gaṇapati,
Lizard and Earth Mind,
Excellent Vehicle and Supremely Born,
Stainless, Child, and Sun,
Illuminator and Sun-Subduer,
Powerful, Roar, and Time,
Vow and Leaping Goer,
Bee, Dog, and Sign,
Skull, Hunchback, and Upright,
Earth and She Who Goes on Earth,
Brahmin and Dweller in the Turning Nose,
Mātṛkā Family and Tongue-Mover,
Silent and Drum-Sound Cloud,
Delighter and Wide-Eyed,
Stainless, Kāśyapa, and Parrot,
Variegated Beak and Even-Eyed,
Beautiful and Staff of Dharma,
All-Going and Steadfast Courage,
Bold Eater, Donkey, and Equalizer,

Open Mouth, Great Sound, and Playing with Strength,
Channel Servant, Controller, and Deceitful,
Great Lord and Ever Joyful,
Lightning Garland and Joy-Maker,
Exhaler, Raga, and Tongue,
Saṃvara, Udumbara, and Bewildered,
Lotus Net and Lotus-Encircled,
Enemy Axe, Peacock, and Wind,
And Vajra Lord: these are the names of the winds,
As I have taught them."

"Blessed One, of the winds I asked about,
Distinguishing their locations,
I ask from where they rise
And how they spread."

The Blessed Vajrin spoke:
"As for the characteristic of the wind element,
The wind that pervades the six wheels
Always abides in the wheel of Dharma.
As what is called the life force, it pervades beings.
At midnight, free of conceptual thought,
Rising from the supreme space,
It destroys the nature of wind.
That wind moves in nine modes,
Abiding in the region of the wheel of Dharma.
Beginning from the time of midnight,
Ninefold in the six wheels,
Until midday comes to its end,
The winds rise.
Beginning from midday,
Ninefold from the six wheels,
Until the end of the time of midnight,
When the winds move distinctly,
Through the divisions of their very locations
They turn into the various kinds of thought.

"Distinguishing the conceptual thoughts,
I shall explain their names:

Attachment, aversion, and delusion,
Vanity, pride, and clinging,
Jealousy, anger, and avarice,
Dishonesty, deceit, and bad demeanor,
Wild mind, craving, and sleep,
Doubt and ego-grasping,
Joy, detachment, and arrogance,
Concealment, thirst, and habitual tendencies,
Pretense, confusion, and great desire,
Quarreling, flirtation, and audacity,
Hypocrisy, haughtiness, and torment,
Agitated demeanor and lack of vigilance,
Dullness and wrong pride,
Regret and lack of conscience,
Irreverence and lack of trust,
Low mind, shamelessness, and bondage,
Sense of shame and embarrassment,
Ungenerosity and grief,
Indecision and lack of conceit,
Tension, doubt, and weariness,
Power and deluded courage,
Supposing and fainting,
Dissolving and unruliness,
Crookedness, levelling, and intoxication,
Non-cognition and conscientiousness,
Dysfunction and timidity,
Unhappiness and overthinking,
Fear, torpor, and sleep,
Craving, amusement, and the crane,
Harmfulness, laziness, and deviousness,
Thinking, conduct, and discouragement,
The reality of the conventional and meaningfulness,
Giving and the desire for joy,
Fear, trembling, and subtlety,
Clarity, distinct clarity, and adulteration,
Connection and the reality of permanence,
The tortoise, insatiability, and harm,

Unclarity and attractiveness,
Restlessness and talkativeness,
Selfhood and personhood,
Wonder, joy, and vile people,
The reality of the inferior, the three sufferings,
And attachment to saṃsāra:
Always one hundred and eight,
Always, by day and by night,
They move with the nature of wind."

This concludes the third chapter of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Full Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the chapter on the analysis of the words "Vajra Garland."

Then the sun of the three vajras,
Who opens the secret lotus,
Abiding in the state of great bliss,
Proclaimed the supreme meaning of union:
"Union is explained as blending.
Blending I shall explain to you.
Inseparable from the four wheels,
With mantra, according to the rite,
The hero and the yoginī join in union.
When the two secret channels
Touch in perfect union,
Then space itself expands.
The wind born from space
Makes the fire blaze up.
The seventy-two thousand channels,
The channels fully awakened by its splendor,
The supreme state of all bliss
Pervades the wheel of great bliss.
The mind of awakening of great bliss
Melts and comes to abide in the channels.
Because the three vajras become one in nature,
The elements become of one taste,
The aggregates are utterly exhausted,
And the winds come to rest,

The joys truly arise.
Then the mind of awakening too
Melts from all its locations
And becomes one in essence,
And the fruit of the single channel
Becomes of one taste:
This is what is called blending.
What is concealed in the aggregates, the elements,
The faculties, and the objects:
From the complete exhaustion of conceptual thought
Great bliss truly arises.
The single taste is repose.
That is union as blending,
The supreme secret reality,
Declared to be the state of Vajrasattva."

This concludes the fourth chapter of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Full Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the chapter on the further explanation of the word "union."

"Next, listen further to reality,
The fully elaborated meaning of emptiness.
Emptiness is all phenomena;
Pervading within, it is also the nature of reality.
To know that reality truly
Is suchness and nonconceptuality.
Self, person, and phenomena
Are one in nature, selflessness.
Emptiness and self-awareness,
Always abiding as the self of all,
Are realized by the yogin alone;
They are not the domain of logicians.
All phenomena, in brief,
Are described as the six wheels.
Then, what pervades within as well
Is the well-expanded wheel of channels.
It is pervasive like space and subtle,
The pervader, characterized by peace,

Without reference point and without support,
Formless and without afflictions,
Nonconceptual and supremely peaceful,
Without intrinsic nature and stainless,
Nondual and without activity,
Free of grasped and grasper,
Beyond time and example,
Beyond the range of the path of speech.
The nature of all phenomena
Is expressed just as it is.
Free of entity and non-entity,
Released from the existence of virtue and nonvirtue,
It is not obscured at all;
Like space, it is supremely pervasive.
Phenomena arise just as they are;
That is called suchness.
It has come from nowhere,
And it goes nowhere.
Solely from delusion and error
It appears to proliferate.
Free of pleasure and pain,
Unstained by attachment, aversion, and the rest,
Free of error and confusion,
Free of thought and stainless.
Self, life, one who is born,
Man, and likewise person,
Son of Manu and child of Manu,
Agent and feeler,
Knower and seer:
It is free of these as superimpositions.
By the aggregates, sense sources, elements, and the rest,
By consciousness and the grasped,
It is unobscured, supremely subtle,
Truly abiding in supreme space.

"Thus the whole meaning of emptiness
Is free of expression and the expressed.

Though it is only a mere name,
It is self-arisen and supremely marvelous.
In the conventional terms of expression
I have properly explained it.
Because self-awareness is extremely subtle,
Reality is not seen.
It is known by oneself as one's own essence,
And is not the domain of others.
That is explained as self-awareness.
The abiding of all phenomena is peace.
Those logicians deluded by conceptual thought,
The confused who do not know,
Do not know the ultimate,
And hold the treasury of the enemy, the conventional.
Not knowing supreme wisdom,
The logicians talk about emptiness.
The yogin of yoga and meditative concentration
Engages with it as supremely subtle.
True emptiness, the great space,
Free of knower and known,
Free of all the aspects of thought,
Is called the wheel of emptiness.

"The body, whose nature is the five aggregates:
Within the hollow of the six wheels,
Like a sliver of the half moon,
Emptiness abides in the wheel of wind.
Neither half nor full,
Like habitual tendencies, like the moon in water,
The wheel of wind is explained as the life force.
It dawns in the instant of midnight.
To meditate properly in this way
Is to meditate on emptiness.
Through the yoga of ultimate nonduality,
Or else in order to join cause and result,
Meditate on it as accomplished by nature.
Meditating on the ultimate as its own essence,

And likewise on the conventional,
One destroys saṃsāra.
Just as sesame oil within sesame,
Though present, is not seen,
So emptiness within the body,
Though present, is not seen, because it is obscured.
Knowing this from the guru's mouth,
Through true awareness the conventional is abandoned."

This concludes the fifth chapter of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Full Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the chapter teaching the meaning of emptiness.

"Next I shall explain more. Listen!
The unsurpassed divisions of the drop:
The world, lacking the divisions of the drop,
Circles again and again in saṃsāra.
That which abides in the center of the ūrṇā
Is properly explained as the drop, as wind.
It is opened by the reality of mantra.
The yogin, having untied the knots,
Knows the reality of wind
Through the practice of supreme opening.
Not knowing that practice,
The yoga of wind and mantra,
Beyond expression, the expressed, and example,
Those with clear eyes who see wrongly
Find it hard to attain the buddhas,
Who are free of meditative concentration and of anything to meditate on.
Through the kindness of the yoginī,
It abides, transmitted from mouth to mouth."

Vajrasattva again asked
The Blessed One, the great bliss:
"Protector of beings, please teach:
The divisions of the drop, together with their knowledge,
By what does the supreme yogin know them?
How does he open the knots through practice,
So that these beings of the three realms
Swiftly go to the supreme accomplishment?"

When this had been asked, Vajrin
Said to the Vajra Lord:
"This supreme secret
Has nowhere been taught clearly.
Those divisions of the drop
I shall explain. Listen to reality!
In the space within the hollow of the heart lotus
The wisdom vajra always abides.
Resting on what is above and below
Abide the great winds, the life wind and the downward-clearing wind.
That which is hard to divide
Is bound in the middle by three knots.
Because by these the supreme one is overcome,
It cannot go upward.
Overcome by them, it moves back in five ways:
The life wind, the downward-clearing wind, the upward-moving wind,
The pervading wind, and the evenly abiding wind.
From the five tips, continuously,
They rest upon five channels.
Vigor and Expansion,
Intoxication, Drink, and Friend:
These should be known as the five channels.
They clearly pervade below the vajra.
In the center of the upper life wind, too,
It goes to the expanse of space at the vajra navel.
The great wind called the life wind,
Meeting the knot at the navel,
Is overcome and moves in five ways,
At the tips, into five channels.
Moon Portion and Nose,
Service, Dewlap, and Liver:
These are the names of the five channels.
The winds that move from the five channels
Are the nāga, the tortoise, the lizard,
Devadatta, and Dhanañjaya.

"Thus, together with those channels,
Since they go downward in the body,

The channels of the wheel of emanation
Are stimulated again and again,
And when they expand through that stimulation,
Great delusion holds sway.
Above that, in the wheel of Dharma,
The channels there are stimulated,
And together with those, those channels
Are ruled by aversion.
Being stimulated, above that,
In the wheel of enjoyment, supreme wonder arises;
Together with those channels,
Being ruled by great passion
And stimulated, above that,
In the great bliss of the crown wheel,
Together with those channels,
It is filled with the mind of awakening.
Conceptual thoughts move about,
And from all their various divisions
The upper ones too go downward.
Overpowered by the life wind,
All of them enter the tip of the vajra
And face downward.

"Yet it does not go downward.
The wheel of the knot of ignorance,
The wind that is the chariot of consciousness,
Is mixed with habitual tendencies.
Eye and ear, and likewise nose
And tongue, the four consciousnesses,
Emerging from the four tips,
Habitual tendencies mixing with consciousness,
Consciousness together with the faculties
Fully develops the objects.
Then again, by that same path,
It enters in the corresponding sequence.
By joining with its very substance,
In the moment that consciousness engages,

It increases together with its habitual tendencies.
From the deluded wheel of saṃsāra,
Consciousness, thus corrupted by habitual tendencies,
Becomes the very essence of karma.
That itself, joined with the life wind,
Is the delusion of the three realms.
The agent experiences the fruit of karma;
There is no saṃsāra other than this.
Therefore, in order to destroy saṃsāra,
The state of the drop is clearly distinguished.
One should strive in meditation.
Ignorance is nothing other than not knowing.
That knot in the center,
When it is opened, brings accomplishment.
The yogin is accomplished in yoga;
Having attained the five wisdoms,
And attained the five superknowledges,
Having attained the supreme secret,
The one of excellent mind abides just as things are.

"There is no need of a rosary, no need of meditation,
No need of activity, no need of prohibition:
Through the reality of mantra alone
Perfect and complete buddhahood is attained.
The divisions of the action, Dharma, and pledge seals
Are not taught here.
Not through the divisions of the wheels,
Nor likewise through the joys and the rest,
But through the reality of mantra
Is the clear state of the Great Seal attained.
Emptiness, wisdom, and vajra,
The reality of nondual bliss,
The divisions of the secret drop,
The great bliss of the accomplished yogin,
Breaks open the eggshell of ignorance
And destroys the mountain of the view of the perishable collection.
The accomplishment of the Great Seal

And its bringing about are explained as supreme.
Through definitely applying the reality of mantra,
Whatever is fitting, with its branches made clear,
Through the kindness of the yoginī
And from the guru's mouth, comes to be definitively realized.

"Recitation without pith instructions
Makes the king of mantras confuse the mind.
It brings nothing but hardship.
Just as churning water does not yield butter,
So with mantra lacking pith instructions:
Though a person recite it
For as long as he lives,
He will not gain even a fraction of its fruit.
Some ignorant person,
Wishing very much to go to the land
On the far shore of the four oceans,
Who does not ask which way is the road,
Sets off thus on his own.
Likewise the practitioner lacking pith instructions,
Who undertakes great hardship,

Is without fruit; and even one who is learned,
That practitioner, grows angry.
In the very instant anger arises,
Fruitless, he goes off weeping and wailing.
Therefore, with every effort,
And with faith, from the lineage of gurus
One should learn the pith instructions.
Because it is pervaded by the scripture of the lineage,
It endures through the succession of the lineage.
From the mouth of the yoginī
And from the mouth of the guru, with effort,
One should learn that supreme reality.

When he had heard this pith instruction of mantra, the scripture of the lineage,
Vajrapāṇi in turn
Bowed to Vajrasattva, the great bliss,
Who cuts through every doubt, and asked:

"This very teaching you have given is supreme.
Blessed One, the king,
The unsurpassed accomplishment of mantra,
By learning which accomplishment comes in an instant!"

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The reality of mantra, perfectly clear,
That reality, supremely secret,
I have not explained anywhere.
Out of regard for those without the fortune,
I have kept it hidden throughout all the tantras.
Listen, and I shall explain it:
The unsurpassed king of mantras,
Through which, by engaging in the conduct of mantra,
Accomplishment swiftly comes.

First write the last of the ūṣman letters,
Adorned with the sixth vowel,
Joined with the end of the last class,
Together with the vowelless part.
To the end of the ūṣman letters, this vowel,
The ninth, is properly joined;
At the end, the visarga, the supreme sound.
Thus one should extract the chief of mantras.

Thus the name of two syllables,
The marvelous code of mantra,
In order to abandon all grasping,
Has been given the name of sound and drop.
Opened by the two winds,
It undoes the knot of ignorance.
The cause of the supreme Mahāmudrā
Are these two supremely peaceful syllables.
The aim desired by one who has received the pith instructions:
Whoever recites them for six months,
For him the state of the sound of the drop becomes clear,
And he accomplishes every aim he desires.

In a place of the gods, secluded from people,
Free from the thorns of noise,
Without obstructors, auspicious and delightful,
A pleasure garden of great comfort,
By enjoying the five sense pleasures,
The chief of mantras will be accomplished.

Listen further, and I shall explain this:
Remaining at home with the mudrā of ease,
By which accomplishment becomes supreme.
The practitioner, sitting on a comfortable seat,
Fixes both eyes on the tip of the nose,
Sets the nose in line with the tongue,
Keeps the shoulders level, joins the tongue to the palate,
And lets the teeth and lips rest at ease.
Relaxing the outflow and inflow of breath,
Little by little, free of effort,
Breathing out and in just as it naturally goes,
Well settled in the vajra posture,
Thus endowed with the mudrā,
One should constantly recite the two syllables.
Through the division of the drop comes great bliss;
In six months the supreme yoga
Will be attained; of this there is no doubt.

This is the first, the root tantra:
The stainless abode of the avadhūtī,
The reality of wind, the great wisdom,
The cause of Vajrasattva.
The pill, the sword, the vetāla,
Kingship, the eye ointment, the extraction of essences,
Paralyzing armies and piercing walls,
The supreme state of a vidyādhara,
Invisibility and seeing treasures,
Transforming at will and seeing forms,
Turning things to gold and victory over poison,
Entering into fire,
The state of the five superknowledges,
And the five wisdoms will be attained.

Thus, in a single instant,
Is the state that bears the characteristics of awakening.
Abandoning austere practices,
Fully endowed with wisdom and compassion,
It bestows the great bliss that has been explained.
No vows are needed, nor fire offerings;
No rosary is needed, no counting is needed;
Here the divisions of the generation stage are not needed,
Nor are the prescribed austerities and the rest.
By the yoga of mantra alone,
Transmitted from the guru's mouth,
And by applying oneself to it for six months,
The supreme state will be attained."

This concludes the sixth chapter, on the division of the drop and the attainment of the supreme yoga, from the Manifest Awakening of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Glorious Vajra Garland.

"Then, further, listen to that reality:
The unsurpassed meaning of nāda,
By merely knowing which
Accomplishment comes in this very life.
The sound too is declared indestructible,
By nature luminous and stainless,
Utterly free from all aspects.
It truly abides in the emanation wheel at the navel,
Subtle as a serpent's tongue,
The marvelous nondual wisdom.
Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra,
Īśvara, and Sadāśiva:
Thus that precious one
Is the father and mother of these creators.
Without syllable and with nothing above it,
Wholly free of the great elements,
Released from time and from concepts,
Unborn, unending, marvelous;
Having abandoned clinging to all grasping and the rest,
Without remainder,

Supreme among the supreme, without even peace,
It abides at the center of all things,
Free of conceptual thought and without support.
What is called the foundation consciousness
Is awakened by the afflicted mentation
By way of inert things.
Through the supremely nondual yoga
The unsurpassed state is attained.
Nondual and supremely clear,
It rests truly on the reality of wind.
Roused by the syllable hoḥ,
It awakens the wheel of fire.
The meaning of such a state of nāda
Truly abides in the guru's mouth."

This concludes the seventh chapter, explaining the words on nāda, from the Manifest Awakening of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Glorious Vajra Garland.

"Then, further, listen, and I shall explain
The unsurpassed meaning of the secret.
The secret is said to be the bhaga.
The bhaga, likewise, is the source of phenomena,
The support of the state of great bliss,
The cause that gives rise to joy,
The abode of Vajrasattva,
Clearly the very nature of the five wisdoms,
The great wisdom free of elaboration,
Which has abandoned all conceptual thought.
It is the culmination of the joy of cessation, supremely subtle;
The coemergent joy abides as lord of all.
The joy of cessation and the others abide for an instant.
Subtle, it is the genuine bodhicitta,
Which sustains life, benefiting it,
And abides like the mechanism of a balance beam.
Free of time, without conceptual thought,
It is emptiness, unborn and deathless.
As it dissolves into the emanation wheel,
The wheel of great bliss arises.

Inconceivable and peaceful,
Free of attachment, for all beings it is unborn.
Through the union of vajra and lotus
It bestows every bliss.
By knowing the reality of wind,
One holds it in the middle of the channel.
The experience of its arising
Is known as the secret.
That very reality, supreme among secrets,
Abides above all in the guru's mouth.
Through the succession of transmission from one to another,
It is known from the mouth of an excellent guru."

This concludes the eighth chapter, called the Teaching of the Entire Collection of the Great Secret, from the Manifest Awakening of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Glorious Vajra Garland.

"Then, further, listen, and I shall explain
The reality that is the meaning of the vow.
That which guards the vow
Is said to be bodhicitta.
Holding the mind at the tip of the vajra
Is known as guarding.
While the senses engage their objects,
That which constantly abides
Is explained as guarding the vow
And guarding the samaya.

The hard to tame, the hypocritical and deceitful,
The deluded, the angry-minded and the fickle,
Together with the faithless and the sophists,
Those who live by outward emblems,
Śrāvakas, those greedy for wealth,
Those who disparage reality,
Who do not know the ultimate,
Who hold nihilist views and have broken their discipline:
With them do not converse, chat, question, or the like,
And not even for the space of a finger snap
Should one stay together with them.

A delightful action seal:
If she is with childish people,
With her one should not perform the samaya;
The yoga would be ruined.
Entering the midst of the samaya when aroused,
Relying on the lotus vessel, the mudrā, and the rest,
Or entering out of a bond of greed:
One should not enter into the samaya in this way.
The vessel, the small drum, the curved knife,
The book and the rosary
Should never be shown anywhere
To others who lack the samaya.
To a monk who abides in his vows
One should not teach yogic conduct and the like,
Nor the pith instructions,
Nor show him paintings and the like.
With one who shares the samaya,
One practices together, properly, as is fitting.
If one does not speak of it even to the guru,
What need is there to mention others?

The senses' engagement with objects:
Having restrained it from wherever it goes,
If one further engages the conventional
Through emptiness, nonduality, illusion and the like,
Then through the bliss experienced
In the wisdom-gnosis empowerment and the others,
And through mindfulness of great bliss,
The senses turn back from their objects.
Praising oneself and disparaging others,
Pride in one's knowledge and the like, being utterly abandoned:
This is explained as the true vow
Of the intelligent Vajra Lord.
Samayas such as these
The yogin must always guard;
Otherwise the yoga will be ruined.
The yogin, the Vajrin,
Should keep hidden, even from the guru,

The rosary and the crown ornament,
The ornaments made of bone,
The book, the painting for meditation,
The skull cup and the rest, and the yoginī,
In every circumstance, for the sake of accomplishment.
The mantra should not be spoken aloud in words;
Without even a visible movement of the lips,
Uttering it softly in the throat,
Thus one should recite the king of mantras.
No accomplishment equals that which comes from secrecy;
For this reason it is explained as the vow.

One who is not a fit vessel, even if possessed
Of great wealth, is declared in the tantras to be a fault.
For the sake of unsurpassed accomplishment
The guru should strive to avoid him.
Whoever, attached to food, drink, clothing and the like,
And to great wealth,
Tells the supreme and marvelous pith instructions
To a disciple who is not a fit vessel,
Though he knows yoga, in this life
Goes to hell, weeping and wailing."

This concludes the ninth chapter, determining the words on the vow, from the Manifest Awakening of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Glorious Vajra Garland.

"Then, further, listen to that reality,
The unsurpassed meaning of samaya.
Whatever is the samaya of eating,
Its meaning I shall explain.
What is explained as eating
Is declared to be the five nectars.
Through applying the reality of wind,
They melt into one taste, and once again
Rise upward by the vajra path;
Their becoming one is eating.
Samaya by body, speech and mind,
The three realities and whatever arises,
And in the four wheels as well:

Whatever bliss is experienced,
Being of one taste with it, the yogin
Constantly practices; that is eating.
The supreme reality of bodhicitta
Dissolves into the state of great bliss;
Melted through the reality of wind,
Eating is excellent meditative concentration.
From the skull at the crown of the head,
Just that, by the yogin, constantly;
The drink of compassion there
Is the bodhisattva, the great bliss.
It is poured into the supreme vessel, the secret lotus;
The support fully realizes the eating.
When the mind drinks the nectar,
It drinks the substance of the taste of the five nectars.
The one who eats it is Vajradhara.
Elephant, horse, dog, cow and human,
And blood together with bodhicitta,
Mixed and eaten in that instant:
These are declared to be the five nectars.

In the vessel clear as the emptiness
Of conceptual thought and imagination,
The Vajrin constantly eats,
And goes to the far shore of the wisdom of emptiness.
The bliss of the third joy,
In the vessel together with the coemergent,
The Vajrin constantly eats,
And abides in the state of great bliss.
All the winds of conceptual thought,
In the excellent vessel of the reality of peace,
The one who knows the reality of wind eats,
And abides in the state free of conceptual thought.
Properly united with the three mudrās,
In the vessel declared to be the Mahāmudrā,
The one who knows the reality of yoga eats,
And abides in the state of breath control (prāṇāyāma).

The delusions of meditation, nonmeditation and the like,
Produced by conceptual thought and imagination,
In the vessel of the great life force;
The seeds of the net of concepts and the rest,
The fuel of the aggregates, in the excellent vessel,
Cooked by the fire of great wisdom,
The one who realizes the reality of mantra eats.
By the knowledge of the power
Of the great wrathful one of the four māras, the practitioner

Having settled well in meditative equipoise,
Constantly eats in the vessel of yoga.
The three drops of wind, of mantra and of substances,
Unsurpassed:
When they are eaten in the vessel of the indestructible state,
The yogin goes to the far shore.
The incomparable wisdom of emptiness,
Supremely, by means of the vessel of compassion,
Settling in equipoise in the great wisdom,
One drinks, and constantly drinks; this is drinking.
It is explained as the samaya of the mudrā:
Vajra and lotus perfectly united,
Whatever supreme reality arises,
That, in the fortunate vessel,
Is drunk by the yogin, delightful.
The supreme reality to be accomplished,
Coemergent and free of afflictions:
The aim of the Mahāmudrā should be accomplished.
Samayas such as these, and others,
I have explained nowhere else.
The supreme state of Vajrasattva
Is clearly realized from the guru's mouth."

This concludes the tenth chapter, determining the meaning of samaya, from the Manifest Awakening of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Glorious Vajra Garland.

"Then, further, listen, and I shall explain;
I shall explain the meaning of mere sound,
By merely knowing which

One attains the unchanging state.
In the lotus hollow of the wheel of Dharma
Mere sound truly abides:
Without attachment and without appearance,
Nondual and stainless,
Beyond example and unmoving,
Without basis and without covering,
The lord of the gods, the supreme wisdom,
Free of outbreath and inbreath.
The lord of the gods of yogins,
Such as this, is hard to find:
Supremely peaceful, great bliss,
Supreme form, supreme among the deathless.
Through the nature of dependent origination,
As one is intoxicated by the taste of grape wine,
Having gone supremely within,
It is likewise the abode of all aspects,
The support of the knowledge of the reality of mantra,
The place where one's own experience is understood."

Then Vajrasattva asked
The unsurpassed Teacher:
"Blessed One, who knows the peaceful reality,
The full analysis of the reality of mantra,
By merely understanding which Reality will be accomplished!"

Then the Vajrin spoke:
"The unsurpassed reality of mantra,
Supreme, most supreme, and subtle,
The great wisdom, the great supreme,
The supreme essence of essences,
I shall truly explain; listen.
That which is hidden throughout all the tantras
Is the secret state without change.
The wheel of the navel is that supreme reality;
It truly abides as mere sound.
It dissolves into the center of the great emptiness,

And the state of great bliss becomes clear:
Nondual, free of fear and peaceful,
Without appearance and without the conventional.
Through the practice of nondual samādhi,
The reality of mantra is fully clear:
Beginningless and peaceful,
Chief, the very nature of entity and nonentity,
Emptiness and compassion indivisible,
The intrinsic nature of bodhicitta.
At that time, first meditate on emptiness:
The peaceful state without appearance,
The delightful abode without intrinsic nature,
Relying supremely on the nonconceptual.
The incomparable wisdom of emptiness
And the continuum of bodhicitta
Truly arise from the syllable hūṃ.
The great and marvelous knowledge of yoga:
The three realities, whose meaning is one taste,
Abide in the state of the avadhūtī.
Again, through the practice of joy,
Entering and the rest are utterly abandoned.
The state of great bliss
Is bodhicitta, stainless,
The variegated instant, indivisible,
The very nature of expression, free of vowels.
Even through the stream that constantly abides,
The descent of bodhicitta
Is attained through the yoga of mantra.
It is merely the drop, unborn and peaceful.
When one practices through the conduct of mantra,
The supreme wisdom is self-awareness."

This concludes the eleventh chapter, determining the meaning of mere sound, from the Manifest Awakening of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Glorious Vajra Garland.

"Then listen, and I shall explain
The supreme reality of wind, the ultimate.

If the yogin meditates on wind,
He will swiftly gain accomplishment.
The drop of wind is the great wisdom,
Subtle, the state of that reality, clear,
Accomplishing all things, delightful,
Nondual yoga, inexhaustible,
Unborn, all-pervading and peaceful,
Pervading all bodies,
Unconquered, empty, inconceivable,
The nature of all, ever abiding.
Through meditation, concentration and yoga,
One knows the drop's own essence:
The abode where phenomena become one,
The cause of the reality of mantra,
Utterly free from all habitual tendencies,
Omniscient, blissful, illuminating all.
At the tip of the nose, that supreme reality,
One should imagine a drop of light rays.
Properly practicing breath and its control,
Which gives the count of thoughts,
The fortunate one, the nature of the five wisdoms,
The rite of the five buddhas,
The form of union of the five jewels,
Simply the nature of the five elements.
First, the actuality of the body's mudrā;
The defining mark of the counted recitation of speech;
Devotion to the great yoga of mind:
The inexhaustible state of meditation.
Counting the units of breath,
Examining the winds,
The division by location of the channels,
Understanding the division by time,
Reversing the winds,
And abandoning them together with thought:
Thus, in brief, these six aspects
Are what is called outbreath and inbreath.

First, the outbreaths and inbreaths
Are twenty thousand and one thousand
And likewise six hundred in number,
Fixed for a day and a night.
Until the point where the count is reached,
For twenty-seven days,
By following the count,
Examine the count again and again.
Through the full division of the junctures of time,
It will then be repeated.
In each watch, the breaths
And their control should be examined:
By the count of two thousand seven hundred,
Without fixing it rigidly.
Having clearly determined them,
For twenty-seven days,
Through the division of the four wheels,
Definitely by day and by night,
Then, through effort in the locations,
Examine them thoroughly as distinct.
Through the movement in the wheel of channels,
The outbreath and inbreath, definitely,
From the practice of fixing them definitely,
One should practice with the wheel of channels.
Through the division of the channels of its wheels,
Out of the twenty-seven days,
After that, the stage of alternating the locations
Should be examined through the division of locations.
By examining each location individually,
One hundred and eight move in excess.
The supreme practice free of conceptual thought,
Bearing the mark of having abandoned thought,
The self that is the intrinsic nature of all things:
One hundred and eight move in excess.
This is the true and supreme yoga.
For twenty-seven days,
The yogin meditating on the defining marks

Their own essence, just as it abides,
Is the yogin with conceptual thought.
Then, when the yoga has turned back,
Free of thought, the great wind
Moves through the wheel of channels.
Having attained that, there is the turning back,
And, for the yogin who is wholly afflicted,
The ultimate in certainty.
After twenty-seven days,
Through the practice of the beginner,
From the turning back of the one endowed with intelligence,
Then, those negations too,
Through the power of genuine yoga,
Having utterly abandoned
The conceptions of breath and its control,
The reality of wind moves;
One should meditate on the supreme yoga.
Through the supreme nondual yoga,
For twenty-seven days,
Rely on the reality of wind.
The purification of the yoga of delusion:
With a mind one-pointed upon it,
Through the nonconceptual reality,
The supreme yoga of the reality of wind,
Applied properly to the exertion, becomes clear.

Just as in building a mansion,
One first thoroughly clears the ground,
Then frees it of obstructors
And thoroughly purifies the site,
And the intelligent one builds as he wishes
A fortunate and delightful mansion,
So the practitioner of yoga
Should meditate on the supreme reality of wind.
Settling in equipoise as before,
With the practice of breath and its control,
The great wisdom of the supreme yoga,
One should meditate on the knowledge of yoga.

First the reality of wind,
And then the reality of mantra becomes clear.
There, the supreme light rays of wind,
The five colors of great clarity,
The nature of the five tathāgatas,
The very essence of the five aggregates:
That, the pure five wisdoms,
Moves as the five winds.
The supreme state that bears the defining mark
Of the reality of the fivefold manifest awakening:
The tip of the nose is that supreme reality.
The five winds and their own essence
Are explained as the drop of wind.
The clarifying of the true reality, too,
Is that mustard seed at the tip of the nose.
What is taught in other tantras,
That mustard seed at the tip of the nose,
Is the examination of breath and its control.
Abiding in breath and its control,
Meditate on the five lights as the buddhas.

What definitely emerges from the nose above,
From the right, from the left, and from both,
And moving gently, becomes fourfold;
This is explained as the inner time.
It shows its going and coming
At the throat, the heart, the navel, and the secret lotus;
In periods of half a watch
It is shown abiding in due sequence.
The element that emerges from the right
Is the fire maṇḍala,
Red in color and clear:
It is the movement of the Lotus Protector.
The element that emerges from the left,
Called the wind maṇḍala,
Appears greenish yellow:
It is the movement of the Karma Protector.

The element that emerges from both
Appears golden in color;
It is the maṇḍala of Mahendra:
The movement of the Jewel Protector.
The element that is gentle and does not move,
Which appears like pure crystal,
Is the water maṇḍala:
The movement of the Vajra Protector.
The wind that abides in the whole body
Engages in every activity.
This is the essence of Vairocana;
It emerges in the body at death.
This clarifying of the reality of wind,
Which has the nature of the five wisdoms,
Is not the domain of childish yogins,
And sophists do not know it.
It illuminates every accomplishment,
The accomplishment of all yogas;
It illuminates the state of every reality,
The meaning of all yogas gathered together;
It illuminates the state of Vajrasattva,
The nature of all, ever abiding.
That supreme reality, extremely subtle,
Will be realized from the guru's mouth."

This concludes the twelfth chapter, explaining the reality of wind, from the Manifest Awakening of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Glorious Vajra Garland.

"Then, further, listen, and I shall explain
The words that illuminate great bliss.
The indivisible state of Vajrasattva,
Through self-awareness, is the supreme of the supreme.
Empty of what is imagined by conceptualization:
This is called great bliss.
At the time of the coemergent,
Apprehended and apprehender are utterly abandoned,
Pleasure and pain are utterly abandoned;
Peaceful, nondual, wholly free,

The self that is the intrinsic nature of all things:
This is what is called great bliss.
The actuality of the five vajra wisdoms,
Having the nature of the five buddhas,
The five, the stream that flows down from the channels:
The state of the vajra of emptiness is clear.
Without intrinsic nature and without support,
Nondual and free of entities,
Partless, with parts utterly abandoned,
Ever free from all thought,
Without change and peaceful,
Inexhaustible, illuminating every bliss,
Utterly freed from all afflictions,
Entering into every bliss.
The empty, the greatly empty,
The extremely empty, the supreme of the supreme,
The abode of the empty and of the other empties,
The essential nature of the five spaces,
Of an essential nature uncuttable and unchanging,
Unburnable, and supremely piercing:
The supreme wisdom of the five buddhas
Is called the vajra nature.
Compassion and yoga perfectly mingled,
This bliss that supremely arises,
The three realities of one taste,
Free of expression and the expressed,
Abides in the wheel called great bliss;
It is not the domain of the senses.
Through supremely nondual yoga,
The single mark of peaceful joy
Is attained through the sequence of the four wheels;
The state of the four yogas becomes clear.
Filled entirely by the five emptinesses,
Blocked off by the four parts,
Holding in the vajrī
Is determined to be what is called sattva.
Filled by the parts of the five spaces,

This is declared to be Vajrasattva.
That very state of great bliss,
The fourth joy, pervades all.
Born of the union of hero and yoginī,
Indivisible and free of division,
Its essence is that very reality:
It is the awareness of one's own feeling.
Not the domain of others,
Beyond example, hard to indicate,
Abiding truly in one's own mind,
It is explained as self-awareness.

Like the intense joy of a young woman,
It is experienced with supreme clarity.
That reality, supreme, goes to the far shore.
The supreme, the sages, all of them and the rest,
The state in which thought becomes clear:
That is supreme, and great bliss.
In the three realities it has a single defining mark.
Freed from entity and nonentity, the very nature of bliss, it is realized as freedom from the suffering of saṃsāra.
Free of the discerning nature of duality and nonduality, the mind has the very nature of peace.
It is said to cut through the afflictions that are taught and to be free of worldly imagination.
It has abandoned the isolation of the concepts of knower and known, and has the nature of truth;
Final, all-pervading, peaceful, supreme and most supreme, that reality bestows bliss upon beings.

The time is called the end of time,
And is called the union of the fourth time.
It abandons the thoughts of deluded saṃsāra,
And abandons the attainment of nirvāṇa;
It is greatly intoxicated with the experience of sameness,
And has the defining mark of the wisdom of equality.
The objects of the apprehended
Are form and all the rest;

The apprehenders are the sense consciousnesses,
By nature the eye and the rest.
Free of these and supremely subtle,
Wisdom is the self of every bliss,
Utterly free of all suffering,
With apprehended and apprehender abandoned;
Blissful mind is peace itself.
Through that defining mark of the suffering of saṃsāra,
Freed from it and without fear,
Is the one in nonabiding nirvāṇa,
The self of the great wisdom of emptiness.
The suffering of saṃsāra does not arise,
And because his compassion works to bring peace,
He does not abide in the bliss of nirvāṇa.
The wisdom of the śrāvakas is peace itself;
The nondual, the supreme, and the rhinoceros.
Of those who realize that bliss,
The great bliss free of it,
In order to fill it, the supremely difficult time
Is called the wisdom of the śrāvakas.
The joy free of that limit
Is the nirvāṇa of the solitary buddhas,
And that is nondual wisdom, peace,
Distinguished by bliss.
The great wisdom that knows things
Also holds the bodhicitta.
The bliss in all the channels
Abides in the state of great bliss.
That reality which is its very nature
Is called great bliss.
That reality comes by yoga alone;
It is not of the nature of thought and conceptuality.
It is not by approach and recitation, nor by fire offerings,
Nor by stopping the winds in meditative concentration,
Nor by ritual action, nor by the rosary,
Nor by meditating on the generation stage.
Through the fourth empowerment, in some measure,

It is obtained from the mouth of the holy guru.
All the yoginīs and all conduct
Are the supreme wisdom, great bliss."

This concludes the thirteenth chapter, explaining the words on great bliss, from the Manifest Awakening of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Glorious Vajra Garland.

"Then, further, listen, and I shall explain
The union of vajra and lotus,
Through which true accomplishment comes
To the yogin in this very life.
It is called the indivisible vajra,
And is well known as wind.
Through the opening of the syllable a,
The one who knows yoga is ever granted the supreme.
Its support is the lotus of the heart,
Adorned with eight petals,
The wheel of Dharma, of good fortune,
The nature of all, ever abiding.
Born on its petals,
The eight consciousnesses are conventional;
Relying on the eye and the rest,
They operate in the three destinies.
Vāyuvajra, who destroys them,
Is called Vighnāntaka, the Ender of Obstructors.
The consciousnesses, and whatever is in them,
Are declared to be the world protectors.
Pervading the three worlds entirely
Dwell the worldly gods,
And through all the protectors as well
The fruits, the objects and the rest, abide.
The union with them through wind
Is called vajra and lotus.
The vajra should be known as compassion;
The lotus, moreover, is emptiness.
Know their union as supreme.
The union of vajra and lotus

Is called the Vajra Sun,
Having the nature of a mass of light rays.
Whatever is opened by them
Is called the lotus.
Know its yoga as supreme.
In the union of vajra and lotus,
Bodhicitta too becomes the vajra,
And the wheel of great bliss is the lotus.
Whatever union of it there is in that as well,
The union is supremely marvelous.
The guru's speech is the vajra;
The good disciple, the vessel for hearing,
Is the lotus; in that place of it,
Its union too is supremely clear.
Calm abiding is called the lotus,
And insight within it is the vajra.
The yoga in which the two become one:
By meditating on it one sees reality.
The yoginī's mouth abides as the lotus;
The vajra is unsurpassed great bliss.
The lotus is the mouth of the good disciple,
The vessel for the meaning of the pith instructions.
Those two, the nature of all yogas,
Make one see the meaning of true reality.
By the intelligent one free of concepts
It is called the vajra liṅga;
By the intelligent one free of concepts
It is called the bhaga, the lotus.
The yoginī moistened by the samaya:
Those two, truly united as one entity,
Make one see nondual wisdom.
The channels, seventy-two thousand,
Are called the vajra;
The channel down which bodhicitta flows
Is well known as the lotus.
That, through thorough union,
By giving rise to joy,

Is the delightful seat even of the vajra.
Self-awareness, Vajradhara, is the lotus.
Their union within it
Illuminates the state of buddha wisdom.
The supreme empowerment is the vajra;
Guru and disciple, the excellent vessel:
Those two are supremely united,
And are truly the cause of the two.
e is called the lotus,
The syllable vaṃ is the vajra itself,
And that drop is indestructible.
The wonder of the union of those two:
Thus know the union as supreme.
The vow of vajra and lotus vessel
Is fully known through the pith instructions of the yoginī
And through the kindness of the guru."

This concludes the fourteenth chapter, explaining the perfect union of vajra and lotus, from the Manifest Awakening of the Great Yoga Tantra, the Glorious Vajra Garland.

"The reality of mantra, the supreme wisdom,
I shall explain; Vajrin, listen:
By practicing the conduct of mantra,
Through which accomplishment is swiftly achieved.
The vajras of body, speech and mind:
The mantra should be recited like a dhāraṇī,
And through that accomplishment swiftly comes.
Having perfected the reality of wind,
The peaceful state of the vajra mudrā,
The meaning of the vow of the Mahāmudrā,
The supreme reality, the great wisdom:
This is the teaching of the reality of mantra.
The state free of objectification becomes clear,
The definite cause of Vajrasattva.
Mantra is illuminated by every quality;
It is the vow of body, speech and mind.

That reality, the supreme wisdom born of it,
That reality, the condensed meaning of all,
Is supremely clear in the lotus of the heart.
That reality is unsurpassed wisdom.
Through six months of recitation accomplishment
Will come, and not otherwise.
The method of the supreme yoga
Is well known to yogins.
What has been called "free of objectification"
Is declared to be the ultimate.
Through the distinctions of the snake and the rest,
Non-recitation of mantra is nondual.
And yet the three indivisible realities
Are the condensed ultimate of mantra.
The accomplishment of recitation is incomparable.
If one recites in perfect meditative equipoise,
One goes to incomparable accomplishment.
The pure and excellent state becomes clear.
Whoever knows this is the guru of beings.
The meaning of mantra, the reality of mantra,
The oral lineage of the instructions of mantra,
The hidden instructions of mantra:
Whoever knows these is the guru of beings.

Then Vajrasattva,
To the omniscient guru of beings,
Vajrasattva, again and again
Bowing down, made this request:
"What are the characteristics of mantra?
What name and meaning has the Blessed One given,
What intrinsic nature is made fully clear?
What is the instruction on the reality of mantra,
And what is the meaning of the mantra vow?"

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The very self of the fruit of the three yogas,
The meaning of mantra and its supreme name,
Having the characteristic of nondual wisdom:
I shall explain this reality; listen!

The condensed meaning of the essence of essences,
Without beginning and at peace,
The chief, the self of entity and nonentity,
Emptiness and compassion inseparable:
This is the characteristic of knowing the meaning of mantra.
Free of afflictions and unmanifest,
Without intrinsic nature, the supreme of the supreme,
Nameless and without intrinsic nature,
Without aspect, the great and supreme,
Wholly free of all duality,
It makes bliss truly increase;
It makes the bliss of the fortunate increase.
Knowing all and free of parts,
It is born of the yoga of nondual wisdom.
That reality is also the ultimate;
That reality is suchness and nothing else.
That reality is the very being of Vajradhara,
The very nature of the five wisdoms,
Pervasive, all-reaching emptiness;
It utterly destroys all afflictions.
Stainless, free of stain, it is joy
And the supreme state of self-awareness,
The primordial deity, delightful and excellent,
Which makes the hosts of digits increase.

By the particulars of the places taught in the instructions,
One should extract the mantra through the divisions of the wheel diagram.
The root, the throat, the heart and the palate:
According to the effort with which the sounds are uttered,
So too should the rites be performed,
Pacifying and the rest, in their sequence.
Accomplishment and wisdom just as they are,
The characteristics of experience just as they are,
What the perfection of intrinsic nature is like,
What the divisions of the continuum are like,
Awareness as it is, application as it is,
And the fruit, abiding just as it is;

The stages of perfect meditative concentration and of mudrā,
The perfection of form and the rest:
These truly abide through the lineage of gurus.
One should train in them with great effort.

With gold and necklaces and garments,
Various jewels and supreme fine things,
Countless servants and laborers,
With faith, reverence and the rest,
To the Teacher, whatever he wishes,
With things hard to obtain,
One should completely fulfill the wishes
Of the guru who teaches the meaning of mantra.
Having bowed, thereafter the mantrin,
Having properly received it, for the sake of the fruit,
With a pen of human bone,
On a ground of blazing jewels,
Or else on charnel-ground ash
Spread out, which grants accomplishment,
Having first received empowerment,
Should make the maṇḍala and the rest before him.
To Vighnāntaka, the destroyer of obstructors, a torma
Should be offered, a great one, in the temple.
One should extract the incomparable mantra
That accomplishes body, speech and mind.
First write the first letter,
Properly joined with the fifth vowel
And with the final part of the last class:
This is declared to be the seed of body.
The first letter doubled,
Joined with the part of uṣma ṣa:
One should extract the incomparable mantra,
The supreme vajra essence of speech.
With the part of uṣma ṣa,
Properly joined with the sixth vowel,
And with the final part of the end of the classes:
The vajra state of mind becomes clear.

The three pledges of body, speech and mind
Will accomplish even the three worlds.
The supreme reality of the yogin,
The extraction of mantra, is unsurpassed.
That reality brings about all accomplishments.
It is the condensed meaning of all mantras;
It is the whole of the mantra vehicle.
For the moving and unmoving upon the earth,
It is the supreme yoga of the accomplishments,
The unsurpassed wisdom of yoga.
The heart of Vajrasattva
Is the supreme of unsurpassed wisdom.
One who recites mantra according to the instructions,
For accomplishment, in accordance with scripture,
Goes to vast accomplishment.
By knowing mantra in this very life,
The great yoga of body, speech and mind,
Which is called the great wisdom,
The brilliant mantra, is incomparable;
One enjoys all that one desires.
Whoever always wears the mantra
At the neck knows reality
And accomplishes all ritual procedures.
He has entered all the maṇḍalas
And knows all the pledges;
That one of excellent mind accomplishes even the three worlds."

From the Great Yoga Tantra, the Clear Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, this is the fifteenth chapter, teaching the reality of mantra.

Then further, I shall explain; listen:
The unsurpassed order of reckoning.
How the winds abide,
In their order just as it is,
The fortunate one by whom it is obtained:
The life force abides as the self of all.
Whoever knows it perfectly
Attains the supreme yoga.

Not knowing the characteristics of the wind,
One circles through the three worlds.
That attainment of familiarity, too,
Comes through the lineage of gurus who know that yoga.
What are the characteristics of the wind?
The characteristics of the seasons
I shall explain in brief.
What is made clear by the glory of the clouds:
In brief, the six periods
Are well known as the seasons.
Two junctures make one season,
And that season is sixty days.
What is fixed as day and night
Is known as one full day.
A day and night is sixty water-clock periods (nāḍikā),
And likewise daṇḍa and caṣa.
The six periods of exhalation and inhalation
Are known as a caṣa.
Six instants make a breath;
That is the measure of a finger snap.
Three tatkṣaṇas make an instant;
That is as long as turning a white mustard seed.
Three breaths make a tatkṣaṇa;
That tatkṣaṇa is a fleeting moment.
Three tatkṣaṇas make a blink of the eye;
That is, three measures of closing the eye make a blink,
And a measure is a clap of the palms.
The dawning of bliss is three measures;
That is the movement of the drop.

The mantrin abides in bliss in the three.
That is declared the dreadful collapse;
In the three times it is taught to be dreadful.
Time is subtle, the very self of instants,
With the characteristics of the past,
The present and the future.
The past is said to be three instants;

The present, too, is three instants;
The future is explained as three instants.
From that, once again, three instants;
Thus the part of three instants,
From that three parts, and from that a part.
For as long as the counting goes on,
Conception and emptiness are nondual,
And the supreme yoga is attained.
The place of the life force is unsurpassed,
Free of conceptions of direction and time,
Having abandoned the characteristics of reasoning;
Its life force arises and then dissolves.
That nonduality is the summary.

Further, I shall explain; listen.
Of the dissolving and arising of the life force:
When the instants and the rest are understood,
Yet are not completely pacified,
For so long the life force is the abode of wind,
And the abode of liberation is not known.
It dwells in the middle between the anus and the secret place.
Its name is the Unborn, the Great Digit.
It too is free of consciousness;
The wisdom body is selfless.
Birth there is the supreme of the supreme,
Declared supreme among living beings.
It shows the nature of consciousness.
At first, toward the four elements,
It acts as the nature that gives rise to superimposition;
At that time it dissolves into its own place.
From consciousness wind is born;
From that, fire is born;
From fire, water arises;
From that, earth is truly born.
From these the aggregates arise;
Therefore the sense sources,
And from them, consciousness, have no intrinsic nature.

In a sequence of a hundred plus eight,
Just as beings have their places,
Having dissolved, into the nature of migration,
Comes the great wind that produces nourishment.
Having passed beyond the afflicted mind,
Having obtained mantra, it expands
And gathers in the sense sources.
From that comes nourishment, the wind of earth and water;
In order to consume the nourishment produced,
It also gathers in the aggregates.
Gradually the great body sends forth sound.
From that the portion of nourishment arises,
And it gathers in the water of nourishment.
Having been gathered in by the elements,
In their sequence just as it is,
Wind arises there as release and retention,
And it consumes the portion of nourishment.
Then the wind, too, is gathered in;
Pervasive and subtle, it obscures.
From that, the unceasing release and retention
Obscure the instant of consciousness.
Once obscured, consciousness too
Becomes inert and falls into a swoon.
It obscures the portion of the sense sources.
Pure wisdom, supreme of the supreme:
The life force that has dissolved from that
Is concomitant with consciousness.
Thus the supreme reality has been explained.
The dissolving and arising of the life force,
Fully understood just as it is,
Comes through the succession of the guru lineage.

I shall explain yet another method.
In order to accomplish the vajra body,
There is the practice of deathlessness,
By which the supreme deathless body,
The support of all qualities, is attained.

Because sentient beings are short lived,
They cannot accomplish the deathless state.
Therefore, with every effort,
One should fully accomplish deathlessness.

To the Blessed Lord, supreme wisdom,
Who has gone beyond to the reality of yoga,
Vajrasattva bowed and asked:
"In the method of deathlessness itself,
How does one truly dissolve?"
Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The state that accomplishes every activity
Is the great yoga of deathlessness,
The definitive ascertainment of true reality.
Because the lives of sentient beings are short,
No accomplishment whatever is achieved.
Therefore, for excellent yogins,
Long life is a virtue.
There, first, the supreme yoga:
One of excellent mind should accomplish the inner self.
Having joined the tongue to the center of the palate,
One should recite the words of reality.
Seated in the cross-legged posture of the sattva,
One should recollect the perfect yoga.
One should let the breath move at the tip of the nose,
And clearly keep the mouth closed.
The moon dwelling at the place of the palate
Is melted by the yoga of mantra;
What has melted, through the yoga of wind,
Is always drunk by the foremost yogin.
At the end of the time of midnight,
For as long as one session, without interruption,
For so long the yogin should recite the mantra.
It will produce the vajra body.
The third letter of the second class,
Properly joined with its vowel,
One should always recite with its limbs intact;

It summons the life force of the practitioner.
One should also always rely on the substance;
It is produced by the sequence of the five realities.
When the recitation is complete, then always
There is no stain of the elements in the body.

Place it in a vessel made of the five metals
And leave it until the sun
Is about to rise; then into it
Pour the blissful yoṣirak.
This is always the supreme of substances,
Bearing the name of the seventh nectar.
If one drinks it again at bedtime,
The substance makes one's life increase.
The king of mantras, oṃ āḥ hūṃ:
Then one should recite it seven times.
With the right hand marked with the banner gesture,
Having covered that fine vessel,
With the mantra of a hundred syllables
One should purify it three times.
Therefore a young woman
Should always carry it, filled, and bow.
She is to be given food as well:
Rice prepared in butter,
Black gram and nyiga,
Goat's milk and white sugar,
And sesame, in equal parts;
With devotion one should perform the fire offering.
At bedtime one gives her the food,
She who partakes of the unsurpassed.
Thus the knowledgeable one, once satisfied,
Should not speak of it to anyone.
Everything, peaceful as before,
Quickly grants accomplishment.
Whoever relies on it even for six months
Will attain a vajra body.
Essence extraction, alchemical transmutation into gold and the like,

And the summoning of life, which is unsurpassed,
Should be relied on with great effort
By the practitioner of the great aim of the Mahāmudrā.
There is no old age and no parasitic disease,
No sloth and no muteness,
No consumption, no diseases of wind and bile, and the rest,
No illness, no tumors, no pox,
No ringworm, itch or rashes,
No leprosy breaking out in marks.
One has a glorious body like conch and white lotus,
Blazing like gold of the Jambū River.
The supreme maidens of the vidyādharas
One will always summon.
The gods are one's great friends,
And the yoginīs think of one.
The very nature of one's body is always Bowed to and worshipped."

From the Great Yoga Tantra, the Clear Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, this is the sixteenth chapter, teaching the place of the order of reckoning of the winds.

Then, further, listen to the summary
Of the channels, their number and their places.
Through the divisions of the number of the wheels,
The supreme marvel just as it is:
Six wheels with sixteen supports,
The celestial palace of the deities in the body.
As the yoga is and as the places are,
I shall explain them in brief.

The channels dwelling in the wheel of wind
Are six petals; the wind moves in space.
Three petals are taught for the wheel of fire;
The places of the three channels arise in sequence.
Likewise for the wheel of enjoyment
Sixteen channels are truly proclaimed.
The channels dwelling in the wheel of Dharma
Are eight, and they pervade everything.

Likewise the wheel of emanation
Is taught to arise as sixty-four.
In the great wheel of great bliss
The channels are taught to be thirty-two.
Thus, in brief, the sequence
Is truly taught as channels
Numbering a hundred and thirty-one.
Elsewhere, in extensive form,
The channels are seventy-two thousand,
Divided by the divisions of their places,
As is definitively stated in the collection of a hundred thousand.
The smaller tantra, too, here
Teaches it as the essence drawn from the essence.

The wheel of wind dwells between the eyebrows:
Opened, Coiled, Unbearable,
Not Good, Stable and Marked:
These are the characteristics of the six short channels.
Grasping, nonconceptual and full
Are the three channels, the triangular maṇḍala of fire,
Which is taught to be below the throat:
Free of Stain, Clear
And Rudra, these are the three.

Truly Entered and Well Entered,
Very Excellent and Going to Excellence,
Great Strength and Great Unbearable,
Great Beauty and Great Born in Front,
Constant Pride and Portion of Pride,
Water of Pride and Maddening with Pride,
Pride and Concordant Cause of Pride,
Moisture of Pride and Holder of Pride,
Rough and Space and Coarse Element,
Uneasy Breath and Slate Sky Goer,
Bird Limb and Crow Face,
Bold Eater, Unbearable and Roarer,
Fragrant, Striker and Sweating,
Melody, Born of Melody and Cloud,

Seen in Water and Blue as a Stream,
Moment, Chief and Moment Unborn,
Facing Backward and Staff,
Proud Staff and Old,
Belly of the Joints and Word of the Joints,
Measure of the Joints and Bending,
Place of the Joints and Face of the Joints,
Light of the Joints and Chain of the Joints,
Tamer, Animal and Splendor,
Stainless and Pride of the Tamed,
Belly of Hanging Water and Clinging to Hanging Water,
Hanging Braid, Half Hanging Braid and Bee,
Child, Giver of Children and Questioner,
Leaf and Throat of the Leaf,
Most Supreme and Most Clear:
Thus they are taught as sixty-four.
At the navel dwells the wheel of emanation,
Completely filled with supreme nectar.

Great Jewel and Lotus,
Great Vajra and Great Strong One,
Great Head and Great Sound,
Great Delight and Great Intoxication:
These eight, at the center of the wheel of Dharma,
Truly dwell in the lotus of the heart.
Enjoyment and Bestower of Enjoyment,
Sun Goer, Clear and Fortune,
Meditation and Ash Face,
Food Giver, Food and Hunger,
Elixir and Sour in Taste,
Terrifying Taste and Taste,
And Crane dwell in the wheel of enjoyment;
Their number is stated to be sixteen.
Above that, in order: Desirous,
Desirous Woman and Life Body,
Short Moon, Moon Giver and Beautiful,
Speaker of Non-Attachment and Kuśa,

Śabi, Shifting and Pure,
Human, Human Corpse and Parrot,
Possessor of Two Tastes,
Kisring, Liquor Giver and Nectar,
Conch Bearer and Conch Ear,
Poison Eye and Poison Nose,
Power of Pride and Greedy for Pride,
Swooning with Pride and Wondrous Pride,
Arrogance and Support of the Assembly:
These are said to be thirty-two.

The great wheel of great bliss
Grants supreme joy.
Subtle and tangible, supremely subtle,
Wholly free of grasped and grasper,
Itself of the nature of great bliss,
It bestows it on others as well.
Thus the true sequence of the channels
Should be learned from the mouth of the guru.
Without the sequence of the channels, certainly
The aggregates and the rest do not arise.
Without the aggregates, the great wisdom
Will not be attained by the yogin.
The body, the very self of the five aggregates,
Is well known as the five ḍākinīs.
That very body, through the five elements,
Abides as the five wisdoms.
Therefore, with every effort,
One should come to know the wheel of the channels.
Just as a tree in the midst of water
Quickly grows and spreads,
And then bears fruit and the rest,
Of this there is no doubt,
Likewise what is called the tree of the aggregates,
Growing through the water of the channels,
Through its growth bestows the true fruit,
Omniscience itself.

In the nature of the deity's form
One should meditate on the channels as they are.

From the meeting of the two come two tangibles.
If the vajra becomes predominant,
Then the fire truly blazes.
After that, in the midst of the wheel of fire,
The lotuses that bear the name of wheels
Gradually, gradually open.
This flows down from the channels; from it,
The awakening mind, great bliss,
The essence of emanation, is truly obtained.
Gathered into a single nature,
It is the sun and moon that flow down.
In the midst of the maṇḍala of the lord of men, too,
Because it abides in the form of a thread,
Though it is known as a single cause,
It has two kinds of result:
The right arises in the form of the sun,
The left in the form of the moon.
When it is the sun on the right,
Then it becomes blood, and bliss.
When the moon on the left is clear,
All bliss is likewise.
The fire contained within those two
Truly abides as the seven constituents.

Earlier, when the consciousness borne by wind
Wanders on the hundred paths,
It abides equally in the father's space,
And then comes under the power of passion.
When, in the channel at the secret place that bears the moon's mark,
Fire and sun arise,
Then one is overcome by surpassing passion,
And passion becomes supremely desired.
At the opening where vajra and lotus mingle,
The wind entering through the father's mouth
Then becomes the seed,

And from the seed sentient beings arise.
Therefore it truly arises from the channels,
And a wondrous fruit is born.
That very awakening mind, too,
Is the gathering of the holding life force.
Supreme wisdom and supreme reality,
Supreme bliss, the great marvel:
Through attaining the yoga of wisdom,
There is supreme, unsurpassed bliss.

From the Great Yoga Tantra, the Clear Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, this is the seventeenth chapter, teaching the stages of the places of the wheels of the channels.

Then, further, this is to be explained:
In the yogin's body, in their due order,
The channels always truly
Arise through the family of the lineage.
What has not been taught openly,
And has nowhere been clearly taught
For the sake of unfortunate people
Wholly devoid of faithful intention,
In the time called that of the five degenerations,
Wishing to make sentient beings vessels
For the sake of swift accomplishment,
The marvelous self-arisen wisdom,
The thirty-two channels of the wheel
Of great bliss in the yogin's body,
The channels through which the awakening mind clearly flows,
I shall now truly explain.
That is the place of great bliss;
I shall explain its characteristics.
The classes of ka ca ṭa ta pa,
And ya ral va ṣa śa sa:
These should be known in their order.
When these are gathered together again,
The classes alone become one.
That, too, the supreme wisdom of peace,

Dissolves into the awakening mind.
Having abandoned all conceptuality,
The supreme ground of all bliss,
Wholly free of knower and known,
Abides always as the self of all.
From that, through the division into three wheels,
And from the division of the eight channels,
Through the mantras of body, speech and mind,
Divided threefold, seventy-two become clear.
When these are further divided into thousands,
Each having the nature of radiating separately,
Seventy-two thousand
Is said to be the number of the channels.
Wind, bile and phlegm,
Through the division of the three constituents,
Make twenty-four thousand,
Through the division of each wheel.
Following the definitive instruction
Of the Great Yoga Tantra,
The supreme reality of the yoga of mudrā,
The characteristics of the stages of the deities,
Through the individual division of the channels,
Should be learned from the mouth of the guru.
From that, again, entering into the union of binding,
They rely upon one another on every side,
And again they become seventy-two.
The wheel of great bliss is the place of the channels;
From the thirty-two channels,
It too becomes Cakrasaṃvara.
The chief channels of each wheel
Are clearly eight apiece.
The supreme channels of the yogin's body,
The marvelous thirty-two,
Through the division of the thirty-two letters,
Are always attained by the foremost yogin.
The aggregates, the elements and the objects
Guard the doors of the senses.

The very self of the thirty-two divisions
Is the supreme maṇḍala of clarity.
In the celestial palace of the body,
Within it there dwell
The tathāgatas and the goddesses,
Form and the rest, and the bodhisattvas,
Those called the ten wrathful ones:
That supreme reality truly dwells there.
Then the wrathful ones go invisibly
Into the bodhisattvas;
The bodhisattvas, into form and the rest,
Being gathered into the goddesses;
They in turn go into earth and the rest;
Those go into the five tathāgatas,
Into the vajras of body, speech and mind,
And are gathered into them as well.
Into reality, the sole bliss,
They too dissolve.
Freed from grasped and grasper,
The supreme support of all bliss.
That too, from mere experience, then
Dissolves into the mere letter;
The mere letter dissolves into the drop;
The drop, too, dissolves into the sound;
The sound dissolves into mere sound;
Mere sound dissolves into luminosity.
Truly in the state of luminosity
Is the characteristic of emanation and withdrawal.
Consciousness and the dharmadhātu,
The ultimate and great bliss,
Freed from grasped and grasper,
The stainless awakening mind,
The great peace of Vajrasattva,
The marvelous nondual wisdom,
The fourth empowerment, bliss,
The fourth joy, the supreme state:
By these and other particular names

The supreme state is taught.
Through the division of emanation and withdrawal,
In their sequence just as it is,
Thus the meaning of the stages of generation and completion
Is learned from the guru lineage,
Having the characteristic of peaceful nonduality.

From the Great Yoga Tantra, the Clear Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, this is the eighteenth chapter, the summary of the channels of the yogin's body.

Then, further, this is to be explained:
The self of the moments, the variegated and the rest,
The characteristics of the true system:
Listen to that reality just as it is.
Variegated, ripening,
Crushing and free of characteristics:
These are taught as the four moments.
Having distinguished them, I shall explain again.
The variegated is held to be manifest;
Its moments are to be distinguished:
Embracing, a lid ga na; kissing, cumba na; cu ma śa na; ku ca gra ha; bu la tra tra ha na; da śa na; kha da na; do la; pu ci ci; and the ka ra na of kur pa and the rest:
These are the variegated moment.
The seventy-two thousand channels, na li:
When the body is filled with bliss,
What reaches the throat
Is called the moment of ripening.
Coemergent wisdom,
Having the characteristic of the Vajra Garland,
Of the complete awakening of all,
Is the moment without aspect.
The śu kra that has come from the channels and passed beyond
Is the moment free of aspect.
The four wisdoms and the four emptinesses
Are realized from the four moments.

From the Great Yoga Tantra, the Clear Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, this is the nineteenth chapter, the extensive explanation of the characteristics of the moments.

Then, further, this is to be explained:
The characteristics of the four joys,
In the forward order and in the order reversed from it,
In their sequence just as they are.
The bliss of joy is the first;
Supreme joy is the second;
What is called the joy of separation is the third;
The fourth is taught as the coemergent.
Joy is in the wheel of emanation;
Supreme joy dwells in the wheel of Dharma;
The joy of separation is in the wheel of enjoyment,
And the coemergent is great bliss:
This is called the reversed order.
After that, the forward order is to be explained:
The wheel of great bliss at the crown of the head
Is taught as joy;
Supreme joy is in the wheel of enjoyment;
The joy of separation dwells in the wheel of Dharma;
The coemergent is in the wheel of emanation.
Thus one experiences joy.
Gazing, beckoning, and likewise signals,
And kissing on the mouth:
Know these as the experience of joy;
This is the characteristic of the variegated.
The yogin with the supreme yoginī,
Likewise taking hold of the hair,
And placing the vajra in the lotus:
The ground of experience is the supreme moment;
It is called the moment of ripening itself.
Know that very thing as the cause.
Dwelling brightly in the middle of the channel,
Caṇḍālī, too, destroys conceptuality.
The great wheel of great bliss
Melts the supreme digit.

What is experienced in the place of the joy of separation
Is the characteristic of the moment of crushing.

There, the nature of a single taste
Relies on the stream of a single channel:
The peaceful state of great bliss.
The characteristic of the coemergent
Is taught as the variegated moment.
Emptiness, supreme ground of all:
The wheel of Dharma above that
Is what the yogin must accomplish.
Its experience is supreme joy;
This is the characteristic of the moment of ripening.
Above that, in the wheel of enjoyment,
At the moment of action,
The experience of the joy of separation
Is the moment characterized by crushing.
The great wheel of great bliss:
The moment characterized by attaining it,
The experience of coemergent joy,
Is the moment free of characteristics.
The great space of all three channels
Is the true form of the host of yoginīs.
From that comes the experience of full awakening,
Equal in taste, of a single characteristic,
Experienced by the great yogin,
Which again passes into characteristiclessness.
One experiences full awakening,
The very self of sixteen thousand.
The indivisible state of great bliss
Is the nondual abode of Vajrasattva.
Thus this division of joy
Has not been taught clearly elsewhere.
Through the kindness of the yoginīs
It is to be learned from the guru lineage.

From the Great Yoga Tantra, the Clear Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, this is the twentieth chapter, distinguishing the characteristics of joy.

Then, further, I shall explain; listen.
The three drops are unsurpassed;
Merely by knowing them
The yogin gains accomplishment.
Flowing through all the channels,
The awakening mind having been melted,
At the tip of the vajra or the lotus,
At the moment of holding the wind,
Through the practice of drawing up the palate,
And the practice of the mantra kṣmi,
One attains the supreme yoga.
The supreme ground of all bliss
Is the wheel of Dharma, that supreme reality.
At the hub of the lotus of the heart,
Having set hūṃ in the center,
The characteristic of total emptiness
Is wholly free of entity and nonentity.
Reality protects the body.
Wholly free of direction, place and time,
Wholly free of above and below,
Free of mind, it abides in its own nature.
The net of speech is entirely abandoned;
It is free of continuum and of signs,
Free of the domains of thought,
Wholly freed from all duality,
Supremely permanent and at peace.
The drop of wind is the supreme yoga,
Of five colors, greatly clear.
Through the yoga of joining at the tip of the nose
One should meditate on it on every side.
The syllable oṃ, the supreme mantra,
Should be recited by the yogin.
As before, the five wisdoms,
Pacifying and the rest, are likewise accomplished.
The characteristic of the order of the latent tendencies:
Through the division of body, speech and mind,
These three channels are supreme.
Gathered, and divided once more,

They go mutually, each on its own.
Included is the drop of substance.
There are two drops, mantra and wind;
The drop of mantra is that supreme reality.
There are two drops, light and substance;
And again the drop of wind
Goes into the two drops.
Having the nature of mantra and substance,
It is truly known by the yogin.
The channels of moon, sun and fire
Are what is characterized as the three.
la la nā and ra sa nā,
And the name called a ba dhū tī,
Are well known as the nature
Of body, speech and mind, and as reality itself.
Pervading above and below,
Each in the manner of a chain,
Pervading all the channels,
They abide in the sequence of the true instruction.
Thus the yoga is supremely subtle,
Wholly free of knower and known,
The ground of all accomplishments,
The great marvel of the great yoga.
Not through the restoration ceremony, not through recitation,
Not through the rosary, not through cessation,
Not through counting, not through time, not through fire offering,
Not through expelling and restraining:
The peaceful state of great wisdom
Is realized through yoga alone.
The five superknowledges
And likewise the supreme of the five wisdoms:
Meditating on the three drops,
The activities of pacifying and the rest
Are accomplished through the supreme yoga.
The characteristic of the wisdom of emptiness
Is the wisdom being, the vajra mind,
Which is called the pledge being.

Through the divisions of place and number
It is to be learned from the guru lineage.

From the Great Yoga Tantra, the Clear Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, this is the twenty-first chapter, distinguishing the three drops.

Then, further, listen to that reality:
The supreme state of the three realities,
The pledge that is the very self of the essence
Of the vajra of body, speech and mind.
The three syllables are body, speech and mind;
I shall explain the essence as well.
Listen as I set it out in detail;
I shall explain it just as it is.
oṃ is truly taught
As the essence of the vajra of body:
The syllable a, the syllable u,
And the syllable called ma, these three.
āḥ pervades the lotus of the wheel of Dharma
And the wheel of wind.
The great unobstructed wind
Gathers all that is called life force.
Partless and free of parts,
It abides in the midst of entity and nonentity.
It pervades the portions of the wheel of the drop,
The supreme syllable of the element of space,
The abode of the meaning of all mantras.
It fully awakens all mantras,
It benefits all mantras,
And fully awakens the wheel of speech.
It is in truth the ground of the three times;
It brings all the elements under control.
It is the abode without exhaustion or increase,
The seed of awakening, great bliss,
Truly taught as the formless realm,
The condensed meaning of the four wheels.
u dwells in the wheel of enjoyment.
Like fire and the sun,

From the end of the throat to the end of the crown,
It is a pervasive body of splendor,
Known as what is called the form realm,
The very self of the seventeen abodes;
It is taught to be called the wheel of great bliss.
The syllable ma is a mere drop,
About four finger widths beyond the measure of the face,
Dwelling in the place of the uṣṇīṣa of joy.
Like the form of the moon,
It is the peaceful state of great bliss,
That which pervades all the channels,
The state of the indivisible body,
Taught as the desire realm.
In sum, there are twenty abodes.
Thus the wind of the three places
Gathers in the place of the three channels.
If one knows the code of the syllable oṃ,
One fully awakens the three realms.
Vairocana, the form of beings,
Is the cause that has the nature of emanation.
The two winds of conceptuality
Emerge from the nostrils.
Truly, the two, sun and moon,
Move from within what is hidden.
Fire blazes at the tip;
Between the eyebrows is the wind of life.
Thus even the single one is taught as three.
Ascertained, these are the three realities,
Peace pervading the three realms,
The expansion of the seed of birth.

The syllable a is supreme wisdom,
The supreme vajra essence of speech.
a twice and the syllable haṃ,
Made long, form a threefold division,
Summing up the meaning of the dharma realm.
The syllable āḥ has already been explained.

The second, moreover, is the wind of life,
Which bears the name of the wisdom of emptiness;
It is known as twofold, life and exertion,
And it gathers in the objects and the senses.
The ground of all and the afflicted mind,
Whose essential nature is grasped and grasper,
Having become a single essence,
Are the supreme utterance of the vajra of speech.
āḥ, from the lotus of the wheel of Dharma,
Becomes the syllable āḥ itself at the throat.
Life itself and the downward-clearing wind,
Together with the syllable ha, from all sides
Are bound where they abide in the center of the throat.
a haṃ is clearly uttered from the mouth.
The crane of the channel through which taste descends
Is said to be what is called the sour.
Drawn in, it constantly pervades.
The form realm is the blazing.
ha, and likewise the syllable ū,
And the syllable ma make three.
From the feet to the crown of the head
They sum up the meaning of the four wheels.
ha is the wind named downward-clearing,
Abiding in the center of the anus and the secret place.
The syllable u is the pervading wind,
Abiding in the center of the throat lotus.
The syllable ma is the wind of life,
At the forehead, in the wheel of wind.
These, having become one, from the heart
Are declared to be the seed of mind.
The essence of Akṣobhya, black in color,
Bears the name of the formless realm.
As the essences of the vajra
Of body, speech, and mind, they are fully explained as three.

Vajrapāṇi, joining his palms,
Asked the Omniscient One once more:

"If I am to know the meaning of the mantra of the three vajras
And the divisions of their places,
Who is the lord in the midst of these?
How has the Principal spoken of it?"
The Principal, the great Vajradhara,
The Blessed One, spoke again:
"You ask about the hidden meaning
Taught as the supreme secret,
Which has not been taught in any of the tantras.
I shall explain it fully; listen.
The seed of mind is the lord;
Within them all it is free of conceptuality.
Because the Principal veils the others
And likewise seizes them,
The two winds of conceptuality
Pervade the whole body.
They move through the openings of the nostrils
And constantly arise in the body.
The path of the wheel of the six destinies
Is pervaded by their power.
The third is realized by the yogin:
Free of conceptuality, a great marvel.
When all the winds have ceased,
What arises is the realization of reality.
The cessation of all the winds, moreover,
I have explained with right reasoning.
In the center of the emanation wheel of Dharma,
This tantra teaches two lotuses,
The two of sixty-four and of eight petals,
Facing upward and downward,
And then abiding in the manner of union.
Life and the downward-clearing wind move there.
That very thing, together with conceptuality,
Is clearly taught as the two winds.
The two essences of body and speech
Are lalanā and rasanā;
Avadhūtī is the supreme place.

In the middle of those two is the supreme of the supreme,
The nonconceptual wind, the wind of winds,
Constantly moving and pervading all.
Whatever conceptual mind attains it
Constantly performs all activities and becomes skilled.
Among the particular natures of wind,
The one that is victorious out of the hundred and eight
Should be known to increase at all times.
What childish yogins do not know,
Perfect awakening in a single instant,
Is attained through that, this tantra says.
The time when that instant is attained
Is called the supreme instant.
And how is it to be attained?
For this I shall state the reasoning.
First the great yogin,
Of excellent intelligence, cultivates calm abiding.
Through the practice of the generation stage,
Having formed the mudrā of the wrathful one,
At the nine doors of the senses,
In every way conventional,
The recitation of hūṃ is unequaled.
If one recites it supremely, without interruption,
For a single month,
Thereafter that instant is attained.
For when one recites it,
The heart lotus too turns to face upward.
Then from the secret lotus,
Union, and more than that,
The two winds of conceptuality
Are severed and depart from there.
The great nonconceptual wind,
Having cut through the vajra of body and speech,
Grants the bliss free of conceptuality.
It is attained through the reality of mantra.
Abiding in the stream of avadhūtī,
The wind between the eyebrows is cut off.

Attaining that again and again, the joy
Is held continuously and is intense,
Free of passion and the rest, peaceful,
The great bliss of self-awareness.
Here I shall explain its signs.
The yogin who has accomplished mantra
Trembles, sweats, and his hair stands on end;
His thoughts are constantly joyful;
His face is copper-colored and pleasing;
All who see him rejoice.
Excess or shortfall in the count and so forth,
And the ways of the world likewise remain;
But for the yogin, the reality of mantra
Never becomes a source of harm."

This is the twenty-second chapter, explaining the essence of the three bodies, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, I shall explain; listen.
I shall teach the words of the three realities.
By one who practices the self, mantra, and the rest,
The stages just as they are:
The reality of the self is the supreme yoga,
The cause of Vajrasattva himself,
The self that is the nature of all buddhas,
The single body of all buddhas.
It makes the state of omniscience unmanifest,
And through the division of families makes it fully manifest.
Whatever has the aspect of the five families,
That is the defining characteristic of the aggregates.

Through its divisions into subtle, coarse, and the rest,
With the characteristics of the obstructive and the unobstructive,
It is the substance of the four great elements:
This is taught to be the aggregate of form.
There it has the essence of Vairocana,
And is the cause that emanates all things.
Pleasure and pain, supremely calmed,

Cold and warmth, the supreme of the supreme:
That by which these are thoroughly known
Is explained to be the aggregate of feeling.
It is the mark of Ratnasambhava himself,
The emanating self of the Tathāgata.
Elephant, donkey, jackal,
Horse, deer, and pig,
Father, mother, father's siblings,
Friends, blood relatives, and the rest:
That by which these are correctly discerned
Is the characteristic of the aggregate of perception,
The Tathāgata Amitābha.
It illuminates emanation on every side.
Fully knowing what pervades beings,
The fruits of virtuous and nonvirtuous karma,
And further, the indeterminate as well:
That is explained as its formations,
Which have the nature of Amoghasiddhi's emanation.
Saṃsāra, things and nonthings, and the rest,
Having the nature of the arising of conceptual thought,
Are fully known as what is called consciousness,
Having the nature of Akṣobhya's emanation.
When the aggregates are fully understood in this way,
Knowledge from scripture and reasoning is born.
jinajik and ratnadhṛk,
ārolik and prajñādhṛk,
And the mantra called vajradhṛk:
Know these in order, as is fitting.
The four, Locanā and the rest,
Should be examined as the three realms.
By the fourfold division of hardness and the rest,
It is examined as the element of earth.
Delusion is declared to be joy;
This is renowned as his Locanā.
Melting, tears, fluids and the rest,
The particular substances, are rightly relied upon;
These are known as the element of water,

Having the nature of Māmakī.
Warmth, the ripening of food and drink,
And all radiance of splendor
Should be known as the element of fire,
Having the nature of Pāṇḍaravāsinī's emanation.
The elements are inhaled and greatly increase;
The supreme of the host of winds,
Stretching out and drawing in,
And the actions of upward and downward:
These are known as the element of wind,
Having the nature of Tārā's emanation.
Thus the four elements as well
Are fully known as the supreme yoga.
moharati, dveṣarati,
rāgarati, vajrarati:
Such, in order, are the mantras.
By the rite of their direct perception,
The host of objects, form and the rest,
Is fully known by the supreme yogin
As having the characteristics of the goddesses' forms.
Emptiness alone, the single cause,
With divisions of blue, yellow, and the rest,
And through aspects of long and short,
Is the goddess Rūpavajrā,
Having the nature of the outer grasped object.
The staff drum, cymbals, wind instruments,
Likewise kettledrums and lutes,
And sounds of praise, of blame, and the rest
Are called Śabdavajrā.
Supreme in the grasped and in its nature,
She awakens consciousness.
Foul smells, fragrant smells,
And the finest of blended scents
Should be known as Gandhavajrā,
Intensely red in the aspect of the grasped.
That which supremely possesses the six tastes,
Divided into salty, sour, and the rest,

Should be known as Rasavajrā.
All of these are aspects of the grasped.
The eight groups of consciousness
That rely on the senses, the eye and the rest,
Should be known, in their proper order,
As the eight bodhisattvas.
The great being, the bodhisattva:
The two eyes are said to be Kṣitigarbha,
Who emanates his own essential nature
In form and the rest, as is fitting.
From all the aspects of sound,
In each particular, as is fitting,
The consciousness of sound
Is rightly explained as Vajrapāṇi.
Engaged in the particulars of smell,
Each in the way that is fitting,
The characteristic of nose consciousness
Is fully known as Ākāśagarbha.
Engaged in the particulars of taste,
In the sequence of their separate divisions,
The characteristic of tongue consciousness
Is known as Lokeśvara.
Engaged in the particulars of the tangible,
In the sequence of their separate particulars,
The characteristic of the consciousness of touch
Is known as Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin.
Engaged in the particulars of the mind,
In the sequence of their separate divisions,
What is taught as mental consciousness
Bears the name Mañjuśrī.
Rightly joined to all the sinews,
In the sequence of their separate divisions,
Having the nature of the objects of habitual tendencies,
It is fully known as Maitreya.
Having the characteristics of each of the channels,
The supreme ground of all bliss,
Having the nature of all things:

This is explained as Samantabhadra.
Thus the eight supreme groups of consciousness
Are the correct and unsurpassed reality.
The consciousnesses of the senses, eye and the rest,
Have the nature of seeing form and the rest.
The shins, the shoulders, the thighs, the kneecaps,
The two doors, and the whole:
The characteristics of the ten knowings
Are fully known in the pervading places.
Yamāntaka, Prajñāntaka,
Padmāntaka, Vighnāntaka,
Ṭakkirāja, Acala,
Nīladaṇḍa and Mahābala,
Sumbharāja and Uṣṇīṣacakravartin:
Thus, through the division of their places,
They are fully illuminated by the three wisdoms.
Having become a single essence,
They are the support of correct suchness.
One who follows that reality according to the rite
Should learn it from the lineage of gurus.
The reality of mantra is the supreme yoga,
Great wisdom well expanded,
Unborn, unending, unmanifest,
Unchanging and without obscuration,
Nondual, free of fear, peaceful,
The supreme state of great bliss.
Through the full division into the snake, the compiled,
The endless, and the headless:
That with oṃ and ending in hūṃ phaṭ svā
Is designated the snake.
Its own name, qualities, and form
Bear the name of the characteristic of the compiled.
That beginning with oṃ but without a foot
Bears the name called the endless.

That ending in svā but without oṃ
Is explained as what is called the headless.

That having everything but without oṃ
Is explained as what is called the headless.
Having understood the characteristics in this way,
The reality of mantra is unsurpassed.
Following the root tantra,
One should learn its vast meaning.
The reality of wisdom is the supreme yoga,
Having entirely abandoned all duality,
Joining all the senses in equality,
All things a single body,
Having abandoned all conceptuality of speech,
Having entirely abandoned all appearances,
Having the nature of self-blessing,
Pervading all, marvelous:
The supreme yoga of self-awareness.
The characteristic of the four instants
Is partless, all-going, and pervasive;
It is not known by childish yogins,
Who do not fully know the conventional.
The ultimate, one's own essential nature,
Through the divisions of the completion stage,
Fully illuminates the reality of mantra.
One should meditate on a itself
Dissolving completely into the final drop.
The drop dissolves into the syllable a;
a into the mere ha at the end;
ha in turn into the syllable hūṃ;
The syllable ū into haṃ;
The syllable haṃ in turn dissolves into oṃ.
The syllable a is the mere drop;
The drop in turn dissolves into sound;
Sound in turn into mere sound;
Supreme mere sound into space;
And that in turn dissolves into luminosity.
The clear state of luminosity
Is the utterly pure dharmadhātu,
The supreme nondual wisdom,

Fully awakening and fully dawning,
Free of all the activities of speech,
Having entirely abandoned all duality.
The five aggregates are a single ground;
The five elements are rightly relied upon;
The group of eight consciousnesses is isolated;
The six outer objects are gathered in;
By the ten winds the ten knowings are gathered in.
Thus all the characteristics are gathered.
By the yoga of emanating on every side,
That in which the three existences abide,
Accomplishing all siddhis, glorious,
Increasing all good fortune:
That vajra is Vajrasattva,
Vajrabhairava and Īśvara,
Heruka and Kālacakra,
The Ādibuddha, the great sage,
Samantabhadra and Mañjuśrī,
Having the nature of emanating variety,
The ground of the host of varied qualities.
The yoga of emanating on every side
Is the great stainless yoga.
The clarity of the reality of wisdom,
Without conceptuality and without abiding,
Is called the transference of the dharmadhātu.
The characteristics of generation and completion
Are like the tip of a hair split eight thousand times,
Utterly clear and luminous.
Through the divisions of scripture and reasoning,
They are learned from the lineage of gurus.
Thus are the three supreme realities.
The stages transmitted orally arise.
The supreme wisdom of the secret,
The supreme instant, the characteristic of the fourth.

This is the twenty-third chapter, establishing the commitment of the three realities, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then I shall rightly explain; listen.
The characteristic of the three nose-tips:
The secret, the heart, and the nose of the face are their names.
These three are made clear from the tantra.
Through the divisions of the three wheels
Is the stage of the yogin's meditation.
For one who has come under the power of intense passion,
It grants the bliss of mind.
Through the practice of the reality of wind,
The wheels of the channels are awakened,
And great bliss arises everywhere.
The three realms having become of one taste,
One should perform attraction and subjugation according to the rite.
The mind of awakening is great bliss.
The characteristic of the coemergent instant
Should be held at the tip of the vajra.
That itself is great bliss,
Having the nature of the five wisdoms,
Having entirely abandoned all conceptual thought.
At the secret nose-tip, the substance, the drop,
Has the nature of being rightly held.
By the single mind of great passion
It is to be known as the supreme yoga.
On the sixty-four lotus petals
The wheels of the channels dawn in order.
Its hub is explained as the nose;
The secret grants all bliss.
The heart lotus has eight petals;
Its hub too is declared to be the nose.
One should meditate on the mind of aversion itself,
The wisdom mind of blazing secret mantra,
The cause that rightly emanates,
Having abandoned all conceptuality of speech,
The supreme wisdom, greatly marvelous.
Mantra always arises as nāda,
The great bliss free of conceptuality,

Joined to meditative concentration, the supreme of bliss.
By obtaining the oral instruction, bliss is victorious.
Having swiftly brought aversion under control,
The single cause of the reality of peace,
Moon, sun, and fire, these three,
Pervades from the center of the three paths.
This is explained as what is called the nose of the face.
The characteristics of the abodes of the winds,
And the great wisdom that abides there:
The drop is suppressed by delusion,
And meditative concentration is victorious over supreme delusion.
Having entirely abandoned all things,
The nature of the five wisdoms is clear,
The supreme support of the five realities.
Its rays of light, the mere drop,
Are rightly supported at the nose-tip of the face.
One should meditate on this supreme yoga.
It is victorious over the ocean of delusion.
That itself is rightly explained
As bearing the name of the commitment being.
The commitment of all buddhas
Has the characteristic of the five wisdoms.
By yogins who are skilled,
The darkness of delusion is destroyed.
The characteristic of realizing omniscience:
When the families of the five buddhas abide there,
The five winds emerge from the openings of the nose-tip
And rightly move upward,
And come to operate constantly in the body.
Moving conventionally in the nose,
They emerge from that door,
Left, right, both,
And moving slowly: four modes.
The element emerging from the right
Is the maṇḍala of fire;
Its color is a fine red,
And it is the movement of the Lotus Protector.

The element emerging from the left,
Mixed with the maṇḍala of wind,
Appears green and yellow,
And it is the movement of the Karma Protector.
The element emerging from both
Appears golden in color;
It is the maṇḍala of Mahendra,
And it is the movement of the Jewel Protector.
The element moving slowly and without movement,
Appearing like pure crystal,
Is the maṇḍala of water,
And it is the movement of the Vajra Protector.

It arises in truth from the three realms.
What is held as support and supported
Has the nature of Vairocana,
And comes forth at the end of dying.
Those four maṇḍalas,
Through their arrangement, are constantly repeated.
By the count of mantra recitation,
They are repeated constantly, day and night.
Thus one should meditate on the wind at the nose-tip
As five-colored.
Through the supreme yoga of nonduality,
The host of light rays is stainless.
Through it, the activities of pacifying and the rest
Are accomplished by gradual practice,
And one comes to go to Vajrasattva.
Then Vajrapāṇi asked
Vajrasattva, protector of beings:
"Concerning the system of the three drops,
If I am to know it by serving at your feet,
I have some doubt about it.
You who end existence, please make it clear.
When the three drops, substance,
Mantra, and likewise wind, are meditated upon,
Are they meditated by a single yogin,

Or by separate yogins?
Chief who cuts through all doubt about this!"
The Blessed Vajrasattva spoke:
"For those long under the sway of great passion,
Who are to be protected in the three existences,
For the sake of liberating them,
The drop of substance is taught.
Whatever people have come under the sway of great aversion,
With bodies untamed,
For the sake of their swift liberation,
The drop of mantra is taught.
Whoever are utterly confused by great delusion,
To protect them from the ocean of existence,
So that they may attain the fruit of the eight siddhis,
The ocean of wisdom
Is taught as the drop of wind.
The elaboration of correct reality
Is thus the three correct drops,
According to one's disposition and according to one's practice.
For the sake of accomplishment in this very life,
For the purification of all obscurations,
With a one-pointed mind,
On a delightful site where the three wisdoms abide,
Adorned with flowers, fruits, and water,
On a mountain peak secluded from people,
The gathering of all siddhis
Should be accomplished with effort."

This is the twenty-fourth chapter, establishing the three nose-tips, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then I shall rightly explain; listen.
The characteristic of the wisdom of emptiness
Is that very supreme thing that abides in the body.
As the self of all, it always abides.
It makes all phenomena appear.
Its characteristic is held to be emptiness.
From it comes wisdom, great bliss,

The utterly pure luminosity.
Because it enters avadhūtī,
It is held to be true emptiness.
The conceptual appearances of phenomena spread forth;
It cuts off all conceptual thought.
The resting of the wind of conceptuality
Is explained as emptiness.
That itself is the world realm
Of the great chief, Akṣobhya.
The ground where he constantly dwells
Bears the name of the wisdom of life;
It has the characteristic of the peaceful nature
Of the great formless Rudra.
In it is wisdom, great bliss,
Filled with the mind of awakening.
That itself is the abode of the state of great bliss.
Wisdom, the true mind of awakening,
And so on: by these sounds of names
The single thing expressed is great bliss,
Possessing a single entity.
It is called the wisdom of emptiness.
It is explained as Sukhāvatī, the Blissful.
Bliss is the characteristic of attaining virtue;
That which abides in bliss
Is called Sukhāvatī.
In the buddha field of Amitāyus,
The supreme ground of all bliss,
The mind of awakening is Amitāyus.
The light that comes forth and arises from it:
Therefore it is known as Amitābha,
The supreme ground of all bliss.
Emptiness is the Lord of the Vajradhātu;
And the union in equality of that
With the lord of the vajra of wisdom
Is called the wisdom of emptiness.
Wisdom is the lotus, lalanā;
When the menses, the sun, flows,

That too is known as empty,
Having entirely abandoned all duality.
Method is the vajra, rasanā;
The moon, śukra, flows forth;
That is taught as supreme wisdom,
The supreme state of great bliss.
Know the union of those two as supreme:
The inexhaustible wisdom of emptiness.
It is the full moon and that very reality.
It is learned from the mouth of a yoginī.

This is the twenty-fifth chapter, explaining the words of emptiness, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, I shall explain; listen.
The body is the abode of emptiness.
That by which the body is known
Is the supreme palace of all the deities,
The support of enjoyment, Dharma, and emanation,
And of great bliss.
The wheels too, as they have been explained,
In their order, without exception,
Thus always truly abide there.
The lord of dissolution and enjoyment
Is the deity itself, supremely nondual,
The support of the state of the true essence.
For the sake of the state of great wisdom,
It is the true support of great bliss.
Great aversion and great delusion,
Great jealousy and the reality of passion:
Through these, the great wrathful ones and the supreme of aspects
Definitively cut the knots of saṃsāra.
Through the divisions of earth, water, likewise fire,
Wind, and space;
Form, sound, likewise smell,
Taste and the tangible;
The dharmadhātu, the fine eye,
Ear, nose, and tongue,

The body, consciousness, and phenomena,
The ground of all and the afflicted mind;
Through the divisions of the faculties of faith, diligence,
Mindfulness, concentration, and wisdom;
The power of faith, the power of diligence,
The power of mindfulness, the power of concentration,
And the unsurpassed power of wisdom:
These are rightly known in their places as they are,
And made clear as the deities of the body.
Through the divisions of their names as before,
Through the divisions of mantra and their order,
By the yoga of setting out the mantras,
Through the divisions of their places in order,
Through the divisions of the true places
Ascertained by scripture,
And with the goddesses, by the yogin constantly,
The state of self-blessing is established.
Enjoying the five sense pleasures,
One should make offerings with great effort.
Do not bow down to outer deities
Whose nature is stone, wood, or earth.
That very stage of self-blessing
Does not exist elsewhere in the three existences.
Reality is the supreme yoga,
The self-blessing free of obscuration.
The stages of mantra and mudrā and the rest,
Outer things, are not to be counted.
The yogin who has attained that reality
Is held to bless, with effort,
Supremely through the yoginī.
This is the characteristic of the method of self-blessing."

This is the twenty-sixth chapter, on the characteristic of the wisdom of the body's deities, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, I shall explain
The names of those goddesses.

Through the divisions of the four wheels,
By the count of the sequence of the channels,
Through the division of families,
Karma, vajra, lotus, wheel, and the rest,
And through the divisions of the four stages,
They truly abide in the sequence of the channels.
Here, as the fifth family as well,
Is the supreme experience of reality.
Experiencing feeling,
It abides pervading all.
Emanations born from their own families,
These goddesses truly enter.
The Knowing One, Caṇḍālī, the Heroine,
Karma Tārā and the Captivator of the Mind,
The Lady of the Yantra and the Blower,
And likewise the Mover of Wind,
The Courageous One, the Perfect Buddha Lady,
The Utterly Clear One and the Delightful One,
The Accomplished One, the Sustainer of Emanation, the Lady of Sound,
The Treasure Holder, the Queen of the Gods,
The Lotus Filament, the Stainless One,
She Who Strings the Chain of Wind,
The Excellent One and the Crow-Faced,
The Sleeper and the Non-Increasing,
The Leaper, the Blue-Green, the Marker of Time,
The Playful One and the Increaser of Good Fortune,
Narajana, the Dog-Faced,
The Passionate, the Joyful, the Graceful,
The Increaser of Diligence and the White One,
She Who Increases the Five Nectars,
She Who Brings Down Reality, the Supreme Heroine,
The Lotus Drum and the Desirous One,
The Illusion, the Lovely Beloved,
The Sour One and the Mistress of Liquor,
The Greatly Fierce and the Fortunate in Action,
The Excellent Flower, the Fierce Bewilderer,
The Upward-Gazing Face and the Trident-Marked,

The Beautiful and the Mover of the Tongue,
The Constant One and the Dancer,
The Deer-Eyed and the Joy of Passion,
She Who Sports in Varied Bewilderment,
The White Lady of the Three Worlds,
The Taster, the Stainless, She Who Accords with Beings:
These truly abide,
Always counted as eight interspersed with eight.
Three-faced, six-armed, stainless,
Through the divisions of the mudrās of the families,
They are truly adorned with weapons.
They hold a crossed vajra in the right hand,
And in the left, gracefully, an utpala lotus.
In the right are a wheel and a jewel,
And likewise a sword; a source of phenomena
Is in the two left hands.
They sit well in the sattva posture,
Their faces green, with three eyes,
Crowned with Amoghasiddhi.
One meditates on their faces as laughing,
And they increase all bliss.
Through the divisions of their own names,
Interspersed with the three syllables,
They are also truly worshiped with mantra,
And they bestow the reality one desires.
In the center of the eight-spoked wheel of Dharma
These deities truly abide:
The Queen of the Vajradhātu, Lāmā,
The Vajra Seal, the Lady of Great Power,
The Vajra Graceful One, the Vajra Face,
The Vajra Dharma Lady, the Vajra Excellent One,
And the Vajra Musician: so should they be known.
In the wheel of Dharma they are nine in nature,
With the aspect of three faces and six arms,
Sitting well in the sattva posture.
A vajra, a wheel, and a jewel
They hold in their right hands;

In the left, a sword, a lotus,
And a bell they hold, unsurpassed.
Their bodies are blue, with three eyes,
The fangs of their mouths slightly bared.
Interspersed with their own names and the three syllables,
They are fully worshiped with mantra.
On the sixteen petals of enjoyment,
In the center of the lotus, the deities abide:
Lotus Tārā, the White Lotus Lady,
The Lotus Increaser of the Kumuda,
The Lotus Eye and the Lotus Crest,
The Lotus Garland, the Lotus-Born,
The Lotus Seat, the Lotus Net,
And likewise the Lotus Light,
The Lotus Eye and the Lotus Excellent One,
She Who Dwells in the Lotus, the Lotus-Born,
The Lotus Filament and the Lotus Lady.
Thus are these rightly explained.
They have the aspect of three faces and six arms,
Sitting well in the sattva posture.
In the right they hold a lotus, a wheel,
And also plant a vajra;
In the left, with a sword, a bell,
And a jewel, they are graceful.
Their three eyes shine forth;
They are red like the color of a red lotus.
They dwell close upon the disk of the sun,
Seated in the sattva posture.
Together with their own names and the three syllables,
These are the unsurpassed mantras.
On the great wheel of great bliss,
On the thirty-two lotus petals,
The goddesses always abide:
The Fully Awakened, the Diligent,
The Force of the Wheel, the Vajra-Possessing,
Jewel Tārā, She Who Has Entered the Lotus,
The Lady of Varied Action, the Joy of Delusion,

The Vajra of Aversion, the Joyous Passion,
The Passion of Vajra Action, Rūpavajrā,
Śabdavajrā, Rasavajrā,
Sparśavajrā, the Lady of the Dharmadhātu,
The Light of the Eye, the Melody of the Skull,
The Appearance of the Nose, the Joy of Taste,
The Banner of the Body, the Joy of Mind,
She Who Has the Elements, She Who Makes the Cause Flow,
She Whose Mind Destroys Yama,
She Who Expands the Particulars,
She Whose Lotus Locks Are Raised Upward,
She Who Destroys All Obstructors,
The Hidden Depth and the Blue Staff,
The Very Stable, the Lady of Great Power,
The Self-Arisen and the Crest of the Wheel.
Thus they dawn from the center of the channels.
Again, the goddesses, three-faced
And six-armed, increasing bliss,
Abide also upon the disk of the moon,
The color of a stainless white lotus,
Peaceful, three-faced, three-eyed.
In their right hands they hold
A wheel, a hook, and a vajra, in order;
Likewise in their three left hands,
A lotus, a noose, and a jewel,
Displaying, planting, and graceful.
Their light is like a white lotus,
And on the crown they bear Vairocana.
Their own names and the three syllables:
These are their mantras, in sequence.
That supreme reality is fully clear.
The vow of body, speech, and mind:
Such is the supreme vow.
The supreme reality of the goddesses
Always abides in the body, asleep.
One relies on the enjoyment of the five sense pleasures,
And they are truly pleased by offering itself.

Intoxicated by the bliss of vajra and lotus,
The supreme state of Vajrasattva:
Once pleased, they in turn nourish.
Their activities of pacifying and the rest
Will be accomplished; of this there is no doubt.
The practices of meditative concentration, yoga, and the rest,
And the activities of mantra, form, and so on
Are not needed at all, supremely;
It arises truly from the guru's instruction.
Therefore the vajra master
Should be pleased with effort, through the siddhis."

This is the twenty-seventh chapter, distinguishing the four stages of the goddesses of the four wheels, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, I shall explain
The characteristics of arising and setting.
Through the channels comes the supreme yoga,
The abode of all accomplishments.
From the objects that stand before one,
Through mental attention one does not go there.
The former habitual tendencies dwell within;
At that time the senses are utterly clear.
By that, that is fully awakened,
And they abide in order in the channels.
Once it has been awakened by that full awakening,
The goddess herself, too, from the wheel,
Through that, is said to be the stage of arising.
Setting, too, I shall explain.
The objects, too, are absent, devoid of substance;
Mental attention dwells elsewhere;
The habitual tendencies do not awaken;
The channels do not come to arise;
And for the deities to be truly awakened,
For that reason, it does not come about.
From the center of the heart, the reality of bliss,
The clear light of the buddha sun,

Through the forms of grasped and grasper as well,
Is the twelve rays of light:
Increasing Light, Ray, and She of Splendor,
Clear One, Blazing One, and She of Blazing Light;
Relying on the eye and the rest,
These grasp outer form and so on.
Dispeller of Darkness, She of Light, She Who Illumines,
Clear Beauty, Clear Light, and Clear Sun;
These are the aspects of outer form and so on.
These six are held to be below.
Whatever goddesses arise,
That is the arising of the sun of wisdom.
And its true setting
Is also the supreme setting.
The cessation of arising and setting
Should be known as the supreme state.
The great yoga, well awakened,
Is the restraint of the buddha sun.
This is the supreme suchness of yoga,
The characteristic of arising and setting.
Following the vajra secret,
It should be known from the lineage of gurus."

This is the twenty-eighth chapter, on arising and setting, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, listen as I explain
The characteristic of the arising of joy,
Through the true knowledge of which
Comes the supreme state of Vajrasattva.
It is, in the wheel of channels,
Through expansion and contraction once again,
The true union of the four wheels.
The channels are eight, and two more besides;
And the sequence of the junction channels, too,
Relies on sixteen channels.
Four and four constantly pervade;
These are the stages of joy.

Having the water element absorbed within,
Like the fiber of a lotus,
It then pervades from there,
And great bliss brings benefit.
Through the division of each wheel,
The letter ha of the fourth part,
In its extremely subtle parts,
Abides as pervader and supported.
From the division of the four stages,
One attains through the division of sixteen stages.
The nature of the garland is marvelous;
One attains the state of single taste.
From experiencing each in turn,
From the joining of the various waters,
Gradually, like the waters of the ocean,
At the time of the wheel of the four unions,
The four joys are declared therein.
Through the practice of the yoginī tantra
The supreme state will be attained."

This is the twenty-ninth chapter, on the characteristic of generating joy, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, listen truly.
By the body of vajra firmness,
The constant flow of the channels,
Their suchness, I shall explain.
Twenty-four thousand
Channels, ever marvelous,
Are known to carry the flow of the mind of awakening (bodhicitta),
And all bliss greatly increases.
Channels ever marvelous,
Twenty-four thousand,
Are to be known as carrying the flow of blood,
Having the nature of the sun's transit.
Channels ever marvelous,
Twenty-four thousand,
Are to be known as where the wind moves.

From the Great Ocean Tantra,
Through the division of the sites of the body,
That is declared to be twenty-four.
Dissolution, enjoyment, and lordship:
Their number is declared to be seventy-two,
And each has a thousand wheels apiece.
Dissolution, enjoyment, and lordship are held;
And the principal ones too, when contracted,
Come to be the number of the sites.
When again they contract and move,
The division of the three into eight each,
And the division of day and night,
Through the joining of watches and instants,
The channels, higher and higher,
Should be known to move inward.
The left carries the flow of awakening and the moon;
The right carries the flow of blood and the sun;
The center, through the movement of the wind,
Should be known as bringing about non-waking.
Lalanā and Rasanā,
And the one by the name of Avadhūtī:
Through the joining of their emanation,
Each in turn with eight watches apiece,
The three go as twenty-four.
For dissolution, enjoyment, and lordship,
In order, the number is seventy-two.
Again, through joining their emanation,
Through the division of each into thousands,
The number constantly becomes
Seventy-two thousand.
The three principal ones, again,
Through union, go to oneness.
For the beginner yogin,
That subtle one is hard to know.
Inconceivable and supreme,
Free of bindu and nāda,
The secret basis of all bliss,

The characteristic of the support of life,
The sovereign of the vajra realm,
And the channel of time are explained.
Having the nature of the state of single taste,
It is known from the yoginī tantra."

This is the thirtieth chapter, called The Armor of the Characteristic of the Flow of the Channels, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, listen as I explain
The essential nature of the junction channels,
The arising of the restraint of the channels.
Whoever knows it constantly
Experiences supreme joy,
Makes the wisdom of the deity clear,
Truly joins with the mantra of the deity,
And the yoga of the deity, of definitive meaning,
The stainless union of the three suchnesses.
These three at once restrain the self.
Pervading the three worlds, and subtle,
It truly rests in the entire body.
The wisdom being is Vajrasattva;
Because the commitment being is bliss,
It should be known as the supreme yoga.
The marvelous suchness of pervasion,
Supreme, most supreme, and subtle,
Self-arisen wisdom, inexhaustible:
Thirty-two channels of the mind of awakening flow.
All the channels supremely expand
And abide in the wheel of great bliss.
The root, the nature of all the parts:
In its center are three channels,
Which are also truly explained as the principal ones.
Moon, sun, and fire move,
Pervading all the elements.
Just as a small root of a tree,
When it stands firm in the ground,

Completely pervades with trunk, branches,
Leaves, and so on,
Likewise, through the one at the head of the person,
The assembly of aggregates, elements, and the rest
Is supremely and completely pervaded.

The reality of the three doors of liberation,
The restraint of the three suchnesses,
Attachment, aversion, and delusion,
And the threefold division of intrinsic nature and characteristic;
Through night, day, and the junctures as well,
The three kinds of characteristic of commitment;
The Buddha, the true Dharma, and the Saṅgha,
The characteristic of commitment divided into three;
And emptiness, wisdom, and vajra
Are the characteristic of that threefold suchness.
Cause, result, and the attendant
Are the characteristic of the three yogas.
Wind, phlegm, and bile,
Divided into three, are the elements in summary.
The desire realm, the form realm, and the formless realm
Are the characteristic of the three worlds.
Three roots and a single fruit:
Becoming so in sequence, the wheel of Dharma turns.
That is made clear as three emanations,
Through the nature of body, speech, and mind.
When that is joined to that,
That is the characteristic of an eclipse.
When it is joined only slightly,
Then it is the characteristic of a partial eclipse.
Because when the life-sustaining wind is destroyed,
Then it is the characteristic of death.
The principal ones of the channels themselves
Are called the three certainties.
In detail, from the yoginī tantra,
The yogin knows them clearly."

This is the thirty-first chapter, on the certainty of the three junction channels, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, listen as I explain
The characteristic of the arising of the winds:
When the opportunity of time is sought,
How it is truly known in reality.
The mind with afflicted habitual tendencies
Sees its own nature as another form;
It does not know the meaning as it is to be known,
And is deluded by wind alone.
Having drawn in the foundation consciousness,
It moves about within the habitual tendencies.
By the habitual tendencies consciousness is seized;
From the stage of mixing with the habitual tendencies,
Imbued with the inner habitual tendencies,
At the time of their menstrual period,
When the force enters the womb,
The vajra semen and blood, the melted drop,
Become mingled,
And from the foundation, consciousness arises.
Just as one is intoxicated by the taste of beer,
From the habitual tendencies of the foundation consciousness
The stream of consciousness arises.
The afflicted one itself, the life-sustaining wind itself,
Truly moves in a single instant.
At the time of the first transition,
It becomes like the shape of a fish.
At the time of the second transition,
Mingling once again with blood,
Through the division into above and below,
The life-sustaining wind goes in two.
In the going and coming of the downward-voiding wind,
It comes to take the shape of a tortoise.
Then, in the third transition,
When the blood and semen are consumed,
The mass of the downward-voiding wind

Dries, and wind arises everywhere.
It abides facing upward,
And comes to bear a body like a boar.
Again, in the fourth transition,
The blood and semen are imbued;
Having drawn in the upward-moving wind,
It moves facing downward.
And with the shape of a lion,
It emanates the pervading wind.
Then, in the fifth transition,
The blood and semen increase;
The fire-accompanying wind trembles,
And the form of fire proceeds in sequence.
The fire-accompanying wind emanates the pervading wind,
By which movement and trembling come about.
When the five aggregates are complete,
As has thus been taught, then from that, again,
At the time of the sixth transition,
The earth element and the two eyes appear,
And by the pervading wind the nāga wind is emanated;
It increases the substance of wind.
Then, in the seventh transition,
The water element and the openings of the nose emerge;
By the nāga wind the Kūrma wind
Is emanated, and they unite without duality.
Then, in the eighth transition,
Fire and the openings of the nose arise;
By the Kūrma wind the Kṛkara wind is emanated,
And it comes to know its own nature.
Then, in the ninth transition,
The wind element appears and taste is felt;
By the great wind called Kṛkara
The Devadatta wind is emanated.
After that, in the tenth transition,
By the Devadatta wind Dhanañjaya is emanated,
Which has the characteristic of gathering all the winds.
In the center of the nine is the pervading element,

Subtle, with the characteristic of being unobstructed;
The hollows of the channels, intestines, and sinews
Develop the nine doors.
The supreme feeling of the body
Holds the characteristic of a single touch.
In space, the supreme full awakening,
The excellent clear light, truly abides.
The ten knowledges of the buddhas,
Just such as these, I shall explain.
The ten transitions are the ten grounds,
To be known in their sequence.
The mother is the perfection of wisdom;
The bhaga is called the great mudrā.
The child is a truly perfect buddha,
All-knowing and all-seeing,
The hair of his head shaven,
Wearing the red robe of the caul,
Glorious, with palms joined,
Bowing with the crown of his head touching the ground.
He bears the thirty-two major marks,
Adorned with the eighty excellent minor marks,
The great wisdom well awakened,
Having attained the formations, together with liberation.
The great hero, free of conceptual thought,
Destroys the flesh that generates him.
The five nectars are great wisdom;
He constantly experiences the five nectars.
Having abandoned all entities,
The yogin acts like a lion.
These two supreme ones are secret,
And have not been taught anywhere else.
The certainty of the arising of the winds
Should be known from the lineage of gurus."

This is the thirty-second chapter, on the entry into birth of the person generated by the winds, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, I shall explain
The supreme setting of the winds,
Through the true knowledge of which
One knows the characteristic of the moment of death.
They are truly awakened one after another,
And they dissolve in the order of their arising.
The true arising of the winds
Is like the sun setting in turn.
First, when ten years have passed,
When the wind intoxicated with vigor arises,
It devours the Dhanañjaya wind,
Gradually, as Rāhu devours the moon.
After that, when ten years have passed,
It truly arises through the wind of the waters of vigor,
And devours the wind called Devadatta,
The sequence of the winds being as before.
Further, when ten years have passed,
The wind of the waters of vigor arises
And devours the wind called Kṛkara.
Then, further, ten years pass,
And through the sequence born of the years,
The great wind of release and holding
Devours the Kūrma wind.
The nāga wind and the wind of release and holding,
Because they are equal in strength and splendor,
When another period of ten years has passed,
Are unable to do harm,
Because their strength and capacity are equal;
Neither is able
To do harm to the other.
That ten passes on further.

Once that has elapsed, the wind of release and holding gains great strength,
And gradually devours the nāga wind.
Then, when another ten has passed,
Blood and flesh increase;
Through the stage of vigor and intoxication,
It devours the wind of release and holding.

After that, when ten years have elapsed,
Having drawn in the wind of the waters of intoxication,
Fat and saliva increase,
And its release and holding devours the nāga.
Then, in the year when another ten has passed,
The strength of the wind of release and holding arises,
And it devours the wind of the time of intoxication.
Fire and wind increase;
The wind of release and holding itself transforms,
And great enjoyment comes to increase.
Then, when another ten years have elapsed,
Through wind the body swells and grows heavy.
When water and wind mingle,
From the stage of pervading and obscuring,
From that, another ten years pass,
And like the fruit of the plantain tree it is gone;
Together with its root, it comes to be no more.
By the limit of the ripening of karma,
Thus, through the tenth stage,
A month or another day,
Life having been shortened,
The life force should be known to be exhausted.
From the Ḍākinī Compendium Tantra
It should be known in great detail.

This is the thirty-third chapter, the detailed explanation of the exhaustion of life through the sequence of the winds, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, listen as I explain
The great characteristic, the supreme wisdom,
The gathering ḍākinī, the supreme yoga,
The essence in which the meaning of the essence is gathered.
Because it is gathered by the ḍākinī,
Therefore it is called the gathering ḍākinī.
Ever dwelling in the center of the navel,
With light equal to a thousand suns,
The fire of great wisdom arises

And destroys all conceptual thought.
By its blazing, the conceptions of the aggregates
Are burned, and the body is without interruption.
The conceptions of the vajra element
Are gathered, and again, by its nature,
The conceptions of grasped and grasper
Compassion gathers there once more.
Thus, like a moth in a flame,
It burns up all bonds.
Through the manifest application of the reality of wind,
Through the application of the body of mantra,
Even the slightest conceptual thought
Is burned away; of this there is no doubt.
From the Ḍākinī Compendium Tantra,
If one knows the stages of the supreme yoga,
The wisdom of the ḍākinī in its fullness
Should be understood by relying on yoga."

This is the thirty-fourth chapter, on the gathering of the ḍākinīs, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, listen as I explain
The cutting off of the winds of conceptual thought.
Know that by day and by night
One hundred and eight move in excess.
Those winds are conceptual thoughts;
Because it cuts them off,
That yoga is supremely peaceful
And makes everything into the nature of emptiness.
Without doubt, first, the six unions
Are to be supremely accomplished through knowledge of yoga.
Then the vowelless letter ha
Should be recited very extensively,
Because it destroys the knots
And grants the arising of bliss.
By it all conceptual thoughts
Are cut off in an instant.
Yoga and subsequent yoga,

Ultimate yoga and great yoga:
Through their eighteen divisions,
First the first union should be meditated;
Seventeen for subsequent yoga and the rest.
From that, the supreme king of maṇḍalas:
In the supreme yoga there are five divisions.
From that, too, the supreme king of actions:
Twelve divisions of yoga.
Its divisions are forty-nine.
Through the condensed generation stage,
It is the yoga that brings direct perception.
Then the supreme stage of vajra recitation,
The limb of yoga of the completion stage,
Destroys conceptual thought;
It is the subtle suchness, unsurpassed.
The yogin, according to the rite,
Endowed with intelligence, should meditate as before;
It cuts the bonds of existence.
Great yoga, great wisdom,
Great suchness, great marvel:
Through meditating with certainty, truly
The wind of conceptual thought is destroyed.
Through recitation that follows the meaning,
The single nature of nonentity,
And relying on emptiness, being intent upon it,
Meditation is made firmly stable.
When the practitioner truly meditates on
The unsurpassed stage of vajra recitation,
In its sequence, the supreme wisdom
Will be attained; of this there is no doubt."

This is the thirty-fifth chapter, on the characteristic of cutting off the winds of conceptual thought, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, listen as I explain.
When the nonconceptual wind has dawned,
Whoever knows it attains the excellent state

That is Vajrasattva's own reality.
The great nonconceptual wind
Has abandoned all duality;
It is the self that is the intrinsic nature of all entities,
Free of the state of meditation and nonmeditation.
The great wisdom of the great yoga,
Without abode and without stain,
Abides in the center of all the subtle parts,
Free of bindu and nāda,
All-pervading and peaceful,
The single characteristic of self-blessing.
It is liberated from the bases of characteristics and the characteristics,
Free of habitual tendencies and conceptual thought,
Of joints and the path of the knots,
And free of meditation and the object of meditation;
It is the characteristic of the wisdom of emptiness.
The portions that are aspects of mantra and mudrā,
And conduct with aspects, it has abandoned.
It is not to be read even in the tantras
Of action, conduct, and yoga.
The great tantra of the great yoga,
Which is to be explained, is the supreme commitment;
In accordance with the instructions and in accordance with the rite,
It is fitting to explain it at the very beginning.
To know how to follow its sequence
Is the supreme state of the lineage of gurus."

This is the thirty-sixth chapter, on the characteristic of the nonconceptual, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then Vajrin spoke:
"The yoga of the setting of the channels,
Its suchness, listen as I explain.
Objects and senses are truly joined,
And the channels, too, come to arise.
Having dawned and gone on as before,
There is the unsurpassed generation stage.

Because conceptual thought arises,
There is the sequence that exceeds by a hundred and eight.
From that come birth, old age, and sickness,
Death, and turning back once more.
Because of the wisdom purified
By the objects' lack of entity,
Because one practices that suchness here,
Because objects in reality lack entity,
The senses do not arise.
From that, the pairs are truly joined:
Entity and nonentity, emptiness.
Then the channels come to set,
Relying, too, on the sequence of the wheels.
From their setting comes pacification.
The seventy-two thousand
All become the wheel of channels.
That suchness pervades within all phenomena.
From the yoga of meditating on emptiness,
The essential nature of objects
Is known with certainty; and thus
The vajra of awareness conquers."

This is the thirty-seventh chapter, on purification through the setting of the channels, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, listen as I explain
The characteristic of the state of the six practices:
It is joined just exactly as it is,
Relying on the limbs as one wishes,
And is divided from those six aspects.
Likewise, eights upon eights exceed that:
Eight twice, and four sets of eight;
Thus the union is made clear by number.
Like the portion of a half moon,
Emptiness abides in the wheel of wind.
Neither half nor full,
It appears like the moon in water.

The great illusion, the mother of beings,
Has the characteristic of supporting all;
The wheel of wind is called the life force.
It is not the domain of the learned.
The wheel of fire is pervaded by emptiness;
In its center, like a bindu,
Unchanging and going everywhere,
Self-arisen and pervading all,
It truly increases bliss.
Free of vowels and consonants,
When the three worlds without exception
Are made one, it generates them.
It has the state of indestructible nāda,
Free of all aspects,
Moving like the tongue of a snake,
And Brahmā and the other forefathers,
Neither fearsome nor moving,
Neither letter nor word,
Free of the mass of the elements,
Beyond number, inexhaustible, unborn.
The navel abides in the wheel of emanation.
Dwelling in the center of the wheel of Dharma,
Mere sound, free of stain,
Free of attachment and without attachment,
Without activity or agent, and without abode,
Without example and without abiding,
Free of life force and of effort,
The lord of the gods, the supreme wisdom:
Such as this is hard to find.
It abides supremely in the wheel of enjoyment,
The supreme aspect without bondage.
Supremely realized,
It truly dwells in all aspects.
Of the nature of dependent origination,
Like intoxication from the taste of beer,
The supreme, the first, without exception,
Abides within all entities.

It abides beyond beginning and end,
Without characteristic and without appearance,
Free of all characteristics,
Peaceful, fearless, inexpressible,
The experience of its nature, its very essence,
It abides in the wheel of great bliss.
It is obtained from the lineage of gurus.
Thus is the great distinction of wisdom:
Its own essence, the six consciousnesses,
Truly joined above and below,
Is renowned as yoga."

This is the thirty-eighth chapter, on meditating on the six wheels, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The restraint that is the characteristic of time,
Which the yogin fully knows,
Is the unsurpassed yoga of number.
Time is said to be the measure of time.
The reality of the conceived and of what is free of conception
Truly abides in two aspects:
Good time and bad time.
Emerging from the openings of the nose,
It constantly arises from the outer door.
Gathering inward is called good time;
Emerging is held to be bad time.
What is other than bad time is supreme;
Good time is supreme, itself.
The Age of Perfection (Kṛtayuga), the Age of Three (Tretā),
And the Age of Two (Dvāpara) are good time;
The Age of Strife (Kali) is bad.
Such is the characteristic of time as taught.
Joy, supreme joy,
And the coemergent are good time;
To be free of joy is bad time.
Thus the characteristic of time is explained.
The time of entering and of abiding

Is well known as good time;
Rising is bad time.
Thus is the characteristic of time.
Time is all the elements:
Equality, the supreme state of single taste.
Free of wisdom and consciousness,
Time is declared to be one.
Free of entity, nonentity, and elaboration,
The characteristic of the fourth moment,
Liberated from what is expressed and what expresses it,
Is declared to be 'one time.'
Definitively liberated from attachment and nonattachment,
Great bliss, having relinquished any state,
The basis of the meaning of the great mudrā,
Is declared to be 'one time.'
Without characteristic and without appearance,
Free of number and of yoga,
That suchness is definitively explained as time;
It should be known from the lineage of gurus."

This is the thirty-ninth chapter, explaining time and the measure of time, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, I shall explain;
Listen to the supreme secret fruit,
Through which one goes to the supreme accomplishment.
Truly relying on the great mudrā,
It is called the hidden secret.
Childish yogins do not know it.
It bears the name 'the fourth empowerment.'
The stages transmitted from mouth to ear,
The supremely peaceful great wisdom,
Free of all conceptual thought,
The great accomplishment of the great mudrā,
The condensed meaning of the great yoga,
Learned from the yoginī tantra,
The supremely marvelous essential nature,
Which brings down the taste of great wisdom,

Endowed with the qualities of the great suchness,
The ground abiding in supreme space,
Vajrasattva's own essence,
Makes the blisses increase.
It transcends the state of great bliss,
Is free of knower and known,
Free of meditation and object of meditation,
Empty of the activities of mantra and tantra;
It abandons all conceptualization
And makes clear the state of all entities.
The person in the aspect of the three worlds,
Free of attachment and nonattachment,
Abides in the great commitment:
The innumerable three worlds, one reality.
This is the tantra of the suchness of accomplishment.
Thus the secret fruit is made clear,
Which has not been taught anywhere else.
The supreme wisdom of the supreme yoga
Should be known from the yoginī tantra."

This is the fortieth chapter, called The Secret Fruit, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The supreme state of the dharmadhātu:
The element that pervades from the dharmadhātu
Is therein declared to be the dharmadhātu.
All-pervading, supremely subtle,
Going everywhere, ever arising,
The five aggregates, the five elements,
Objects, sense sources, and consciousnesses,
And all the phenomena truly endowed with them,
Are explained to be the lord of the secret.
The element abiding in their center
Pervades, and is not a domain of experience.
Just as sesame oil is in sesame,
Just as fire is in wood,
So it pervades all phenomena,

And yet is not seen.
Stainless like space,
The supreme basis of all phenomena,
Though it pervades, through the conceptions
Of grasped and grasper it is not seen.
Through the yoga of the wisdom of emptiness,
The yogin sees it clearly.
The dharmadhātu is declared to be the bhaga.
The bhaga is a jewel casket.
Because it is endowed with the qualities
Of lordship and the rest, it is called the bhaga.
The bhaga is also explained as phenomena;
The space is said to be the mind of awakening.
The cause of the beings of the three realms
Is explained as what is called the bhaga.
The space, through the reality of true union,
Truly abides like the moon in water.
One knows the suchness of the single ultimate
Like an emblic fruit placed in the palm of the hand;
It appears as the supreme suchness.
Self-awareness, utterly stainless,
When entity and nonentity are exhausted,
Constantly sees that suchness, and it appears.
The state of the dharmadhātu is clear.
Thus it has been explained in great detail:
Through freedom from grasped and grasper,
Knowledge free of union is marvelous."

This is the forty-first chapter, explaining the meaning of the dharmadhātu, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The supreme characteristic of the vajra,
For its sake, listen as I explain;
I shall explain it just as it is.
Vajra is said to mean indestructible.
The supreme nature of the five wisdoms,

Relying on the space of the five channels,
Is the very essence of the five prongs:
Earth, water, and likewise fire,
Wind, and space itself,
The form of the space portion of the channels,
Should be known from the lineage of gurus.
The seed syllables aṃ raṃ laṃ vaṃ yaṃ,
When spoken, are the five prongs;
They should be known with effort.
The characteristic of arising from the vajra:
Abiding in the center of the lotus navel,
Explained as the bindu, without movement,
Knowing the abode of commitment,
Completely filled with supreme nectar,
Endowed with all aspects and without aspect,
That is renowned as the vajra.
Mirror-like wisdom, the wisdom of equality,
Discriminating wisdom, and the wisdom that accomplishes activities,
And the utterly pure dharmadhātu
Are the nature of the five wisdoms.
Fully knowing its essence,
The vajra itself, the supreme experience,
Abiding vastly in space, peaceful,
Without conception and without affliction,
The true basis of Vajrasattva,
Should be known from the lineage of gurus."

This is the forty-second chapter, explaining the vajra, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The condensed meaning of the divisions of the families:
At that time the families are fivefold,
As taught clearly in the root tantra.
Through the divisions of the elaborated yoga,
It is the commitment of the great yoga.
Through the divisions renowned in the tantras,
That final point has been truly taught.

And having condensed it from that very one,
The divisions of the families are taught as a hundred.
Through the yoga of manifold elaboration,
It is called Vajrasattva.
Whoever sees its aspects
Sees them just like a multicolored jewel.
Through the various inclinations of beings
And the distinctions of their various thoughts,
Having suppressed the various afflictions,
For the sake of liberation by the guru of beings,
From the scriptures, by whatever means, through that,
The essential nature of manifold emanation,
Through divisions without number,
Through the union of countless divisions,
The very division of the ultimate families
Taught in the other tantras,
Through the distinctions of beings' thoughts,
When condensed, comes to be divided.
Through the sequence of the wheel of channels,
They are seventy-two thousand.
Of these, thirty-six thousand
Are by way of the bodily substances, sites, and so on;
And from that sequence of divisions, too,
Twenty-four thousand.
After that, it is supremely filled with hundreds:
Seventy-two, sixty-four,
Thirty-six; and from condensing them,
Twenty-four; and from that, too,
Thirty and nine as well.
From that, five, and thence three;
The three, too, when condensed, are one alone.
Through the application of the completion stage,
They go, mingling from one into another,
And that, too, into the state of clear light:
The great nonconceptual bliss,
Nondual wisdom without stain,
The supreme nature of the dharmadhātu."

This is the forty-third chapter, called The Condensed Meaning of the Divisions of the Families, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The unsurpassed divisions of the mudrā
Are declared to be the Dharma, karma, and samaya mudrās,
And the Mahāmudrā.
Through the certainty of the ripening of karma,
It abides as though sealed throughout:
Whatever this may be, by whatever action,
Its fruit comes about accordingly.
Phenomena are without intrinsic nature;
Having been sealed by that very nature,
The samaya is the actuality of one's own qualities,
The seal of the Victor's heirs:
Emptiness and compassion indivisible,
Which thoroughly purifies a buddha field.
The samaya of the Tathāgatas,
Through deeds that are completely pure,
Has as its nature the absence of intrinsic nature:
That is called the Mahāmudrā.
If one fully understands the karmamudrā,
The mantrin attains it from that action.
When the guru confers the wisdom empowerment,
The characteristic, just as it is seen,
Is the meaning of Vajrasattva's own nature;
What is made clear through a compassionate intention,
Having been definitely obtained from that,
Is ascertained by way of the nature of reality.
Thus suchness is that wisdom.
Thus are the characteristics of the yoginī:
Skilled and devoted to the samaya,
Through the winds she has gone beyond to suchness;
Trained in the meaning of the Glorious Samāja,
Gentle of speech and endowed with wisdom,
One should find a maiden, a wide-eyed girl,
Adorned with beauty and youth.

In accord with the yoga and the samaya,
One practices together with the mudrā.
Then, when that suchness is attained,
That is the characteristic of the Mahāmudrā.
That very state of great bliss
Has abandoned all conceptual thought;
It is the wisdom of emptiness, without stain,
The luminous state of the dharmadhātu.

Then, further, there is this to be explained:
The unsurpassed divisions of the mudrā.
By the divisions of the families and the perfections,
The mudrās are correctly explained as six.
yaṃ raṃ laṃ vaṃ aṃ haṃ,
And from the sequence of the goddesses,
The sequence of offerings, of a single taste,
Should always be offered.
The caṇḍālī and the washerwoman,
The ḍombī and the dancer,
The corpse-burner and the brahmin woman:
For the sake of accomplishment, the yogin
Should dwell with them, delighting himself.
The washerwoman is born from the Jewel family;
The caṇḍālī is born from the Lotus family;
Likewise the dancer is of the Karma family;
The corpse-burner is of the Wheel family;
The ḍombī is of the Vajra family;
The wisdom mudrā, the brahmin woman,
Is declared to be of the family of Vajrasattva.
These become the six families.
The brahmin woman is the mother;
The washerwoman is called the sister;
The dancer is known as the daughter;
The ḍombī is renowned as the wife;
The corpse-burner is the daughter-in-law;
And the caṇḍālī is called the mother-in-law.
Through the rite of wisdom and skillful means,

They should be spoken of without conceptual thought.
For when one is free of conceptual thought,
In all accomplishments and at all times,
The mind, having become the mother,
Is correctly explained as the sisters.
The body should be known as the daughter;
The life-wind is clearly the wife;
The daughter-in-law is the downward-clearing wind;
The central wind is called the mother-in-law.
The mother is the portion of the channel of vigor,
The precious casket of the Buddha.
The sister is the channel through which semen flows;
It properly abides in the place of the crown.
The daughter is the channel in which blood moves;
It abides especially at the halfway points.
The wife is the channel through which urine flows;
It abides in the very center of that.
The daughter-in-law is the channel from which tears drip;
It abides especially in the place of the throat.
The mother is correctly explained as earth;
The water element is called the sister;
Fire should be known as the daughter;
Wind is renowned as the wife;
The daughter-in-law is explained as space;
The mother-in-law is great space.
Being sweet, she is the mother;
The sour is called the sister;
The bitter is one's own daughter;
The salty is renowned as the wife;
The astringent should be known as the mother-in-law;
The pungent is renowned as the daughter-in-law.
These should be desired with effort,
And relied upon by one who desires accomplishment.
These divisions of the karmamudrā
Are the supreme way of relying on her qualities.
With her one enters the samaya and its understanding:
The great bliss of the Mahāmudrā,

The peaceful state of Vajrasattva,
Supreme wisdom, unsurpassed.
Thus the state of the mudrā is made clear;
It is the domain of the yoginī tantras."

This is the forty-fourth chapter, called The Extensive Explanation of the Divisions of the Mudrā, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then, further, it is correctly explained,
The characteristics of the aggregates and so forth and of the sense sources:
The Victor of Victors is declared to be form;
Vajradhara is consciousness;
The Jewel Holder is said to be feeling;
The One Who Has Crossed Beyond Saṃsāra is said to be perception;
The Wisdom Holder is formations:
Thus they are renowned as the aggregates.
Earth is explained as Moharati;
Likewise water is Dveṣarati;
Fire is Rāgarati;
Likewise wind is Vajrarati;
Space is the Lord of the Vajradhātu.
Form is Rūpavajrā;
Sound is Śabdavajrā;
Smell is Gandhavajrā;
Taste is explained as Rasavajrā;
Sparśavajrā becomes the tangible;
And there is Dharmadhātvīśvarī.
The two eyes are Kṣitigarbha;
The ears are Vajrapāṇi;
The nose is Ākāśagarbha;
The tongue is Lokanātha;
The body is declared to be Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin;
The mind is Samantabhadra;
The channels are declared to be Maitreya;
Supreme wisdom is Mañjuśrī himself,
Correctly explained as all-pervading.
Likewise, the constituents of the body

Are correctly explained as the ten wrathful ones.
Thus is the maṇḍala of the body taught:
The aggregates and so forth, the sense sources and so forth.
That supreme nondual yoga
Is to be known from the lineage of the gurus.

This is the forty-fifth chapter, called The Characteristics of the Aggregates and So Forth and of the Sense Sources, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then, further, there is this to be explained:
The meaning and characteristics of the Mahāmudrā,
The peaceful fruit of the great yoga,
The condensed meaning of great wisdom,
The great fortune of great bliss,
Having the nature of the great supreme taste,
The great illusion, supremely subtle,
Great among the great, the great space.
The mudrā is the wisdom of the Tathāgatas,
The state free of conceptual thought,
The abode of indivisible Vajrasattva,
Great bliss free of conceptual thought,
Unstained, like space,
Without intrinsic nature and free of any basis,
Nondual, selfless, inexpressible,
The self-awareness of yogins.
The conceptual phenomena of the aggregates,
The elements, and the sense sources are wholly abandoned;
Meditation, the object of meditation, and absorption,
And the two stages are entirely abandoned;
Free of consciousness and wisdom,
Mantra, recitation, and approach are abandoned;
It transcends the abode of all entities.
Great wisdom, fully partaken of:
This should be known here as the great accomplishment,
The unsurpassed Mahāmudrā.

This is the forty-sixth chapter, called The Ascertainment of the Meaning of the Mahāmudrā, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The divisions of the characteristics of the states,
Fully knowing which the yogin
Comes to know the great yoga,
And thereby great wisdom as well,
That very one towers above all yogas:
Trembling, sweating, and the hair standing on end,
Change of voice and stammering,
Change of color, the shedding of tears, and dissolving:
These eight are the states of the one endowed with sattva.
The water of the channel where joy expands,
The joy of the channel that is the portion of vigor,
Produces trembling within the body's hollow.
When the channel of the water of vigor awakens,
It produces profuse sweating.
Likewise, the channel stirred by vigor
Makes the hair stand on end within.
Likewise, the channel called Nasara
Makes one stammer within.
When the channel of the Great Tortoise expands,
It produces a change of color.
When the channel of the Great Head expands,
It makes one swoon and be filled with suffering.
When the channel of the Great Humming opens,
It produces the hair standing on end.
When the channel of Great Joy expands,
It makes tears drip within.
When the channel of Great Intoxication opens,
It makes the life-wind dissolve.
Swooning and mindlessness are great bliss;
Then mindfulness lapses.
Grace and the rest are known as the states;
They are awakened by the stages explained before.
jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥde, and likewise
The mantra a la la la la ho:
When, being strongly urged, they expand,

The states are known by their individual divisions.
Such is the succession of their divisions."

This is the forty-seventh chapter, called The Explanation of the Divisions of the States, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"What is called 'self' is the support of the sound.
One who correctly knows it knows
The characteristic of the bondage of existence:
a haṃ are the bonds of the wheel;
Their complete exhaustion is liberation.
a is the supreme of all entities;
It abides especially in all bodies,
Endowed with the supreme of all aspects,
All-pervading, all-knowing, inexhaustible.
What is called unobstructed sattva
Arises all at once.
Without attachment to existence or the peak of existence,
It is the supreme emanation body,
Skilled in accomplishing every aim:
It is the out-breath of the Tathāgatas.
haṃ is free of entities;
Though it abides in the body, it does not produce the body;
It is beyond the senses, unmanifest,
Entirely free of all aspects,
Liberated from entity and nonentity;
Whatever abides especially in anything,
It is the setting of all entities,
The essential nature of the dharmakāya.
The mind is the out-breath of Vajradhara,
Free of accomplishing every aim,
Nirvāṇa whose nature is empty,
The very nature of the wisdom body,
Liberated from expression and the expressed:
That too is renowned as the letter haṃ.
a haṃ is all, pervading all;

It always abides as the self of all.
a haṃ abides especially
As the ground that pervades all entities.
A person without a haṃ
Is like a tree whose root has been cut.
haṃ is at the hairline of the forehead;
a properly abides at the navel.
Here, from a, it is explained as the moon,
And haṃ as emanating a thousand light rays.
Here too, relying on the name of a,
It is renowned as the dependent haṃ.
a is explained as the life-wind;
Likewise the downward-clearing wind is called haṃ.
The two becoming one is saṃsāra;
Therefore it is renowned as a haṃ.
In the state that is free of conceptual thought,
a haṃ abides nowhere at all;
Nor, in this, can anything else
Be apprehended in the ultimate sense.
Thus have I explained a haṃ,
Which is hard to find in all the tantras."

This is the forty-eighth chapter, called The Explanation of the Meaning of the Sound a haṃ, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The condensed divisions of emptiness:
The yogin who knows them
Comes to know that emptiness.
For the sake of the discordant factors and their antidotes,
Meditation on emptiness is fully taught.
The phenomena of the inner self,
As the antidote to conceptual thought
And the purification of error,
Are subsequently held to be emptiness.
Free of external objects,
The phenomena of the inner self,

And also not conceptualizing externally:
This is here correctly explained
As the emptiness of outer and inner.
Being free of the vessel world
Is declared to be great emptiness.
The wisdom by which one sees that as empty,
That too is declared to be empty,
Because it apprehends in turn
The perfection of the mirror-like wisdom.
Its discordant side is empty:
The emptiness of nonentity is the emptiness of emptiness.
Ultimately, it is a false entity;
The cognition is ultimate emptiness.
Because the virtue of conditioned things,
Giving and so forth, is not apprehended,
And one engages the characteristics of one's own conceptual thought,
It is explained as the emptiness of the conditioned.
Perfect awakening is unconditioned;
Its cause, too, is not apprehended;
Entity and nonentity are entirely abandoned:
This is taught as the emptiness of the unconditioned.
Aspirations and the rest, for the sake of sentient beings,
And one's own delight and the rest, are not apprehended:
This is explained as absolute emptiness.
All conceptual thoughts are entirely abandoned:
This is taught as the emptiness beyond extremes.
For the beings of a world without beginning or end,
There is aspiration itself;
This is declared to be without conceit:
The emptiness without beginning or end.
Nirvāṇa is not apprehended;
The self of virtue is not empty;
This is explained as being without conceit.

The emptiness of what is not to be discarded:
As for the stains of attachment and the rest,
The self is pure by its very nature;

Thus it is taught to be without conceit.
It is made clear as the emptiness of intrinsic nature.
The major and minor marks and the rest,
The qualities of that bodily form,
Are not apprehended in others either:
This is the emptiness of own characteristics.
The phenomena that are the factors of awakening,
And in their practice, too, there is no conceit:
This is explained as the emptiness of all phenomena.
The phenomena of self and of what is born
Are superimposed, the supreme absence of entity;
This cuts through all bonds:
It is taught as the emptiness of nonentity.
Just as emptiness was taught before,
So, knowing the absence of entity,
And again not apprehending it,
Is held to be the emptiness of the nature of nonentity.
Thus the divisions of emptiness, too,
For the sake of the antidote to habitual tendencies,
The antidote to the cause, and the discordant side,
Are to be known from the lineage of the gurus."

This is the forty-ninth chapter, called The Characteristics of Emptiness, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"Emptiness is the cause of birth,
The actual experience without aspects;
It pervades all bodies,
And the five aggregates are the body of its nature;
It pervades the six cakras,
And because it abides at the center of all phenomena,
It is not far and it is not near.
It is inseparable from the conventional;
Emptiness is the ultimate.
Thus the Vajra Garland is explained.
The characteristics of the support of life:
His body is blue in color, with three faces,

Three eyes, and six supreme arms.
Vajra, wheel, and jewel are in the right hands;
In the left are a bell, a lotus,
And an extremely sharp sword,
Held aloft in that order.
Arising from the vowels and consonants,
He is seated on a seat of moon and sun;
Upon a seat of a variegated lotus in full bloom
He sits in the sattva cross-legged posture.
He is perfected from the seed hūṃ
And arises from the great Vajra family.
The winds that produce conceptual thoughts
He cuts off and makes dissolve;
He dispels those harmful ones;
He cuts off all duality.
The great illusion, the great emptiness,
The wondrous ground of a buddha,
Grants the fruit of buddhahood itself.
His mantra should be recited:
oṃ and vajra māle,
Likewise āḥ and hūṃ twice,
Together with phaṭ and svāhā.
This is the unsurpassed supreme mantra, extracted.
Through the suchness that seizes the wind,
It dispels the conceptual thoughts of the mind.
In a peaceful place, on a riverbank,
At a solitary tree, at a crossroads,
Or at a junction of three roads,
One should recite it clearly a million times.
That one goes to the supreme accomplishment.
Through the yoga of the completion stage,
Its qualities arise clearly.
There is no need to strive for pacifying and the rest;
Manifest realization comes in a single instant.
That one knows suchness, the supreme family.
This is the rite of the solitary hero,
The practice of the solitary heroine.

The yogin who meditates on its characteristics
And has abandoned conceptual thought,
Being the utterly pure sky itself,
Goes to his own supreme accomplishment."

This is the fiftieth chapter, called The Characteristics of Generating the Vajra Garland of Emptiness, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The characteristics of night and day:
Night should be known as wisdom;
All beings go, having dissolved.
The portion of night becomes the moon;
The moon is the characteristic of nirvāṇa.
Wisdom is said to be of two kinds,
The conventional and the ultimate.
The conventional should be known as the knowable;
The ultimate entirely abandons the tangible.
Whatever bliss is free of the tangible,
That supreme bliss is hard to attain.
Day, in turn, is explained as skillful means.
When skillful means has become the day,
The sun, born from the entity,
Always becomes the lord of the bhaga.
The aspect of saṃsāra becomes the sun;
From the sun the moon arises;
From that it is explained as the nondual essence.
Because it blazes, it becomes the sun.
The ultimate that has been analyzed,
Free of attachment, supremely subtle,
Invisible, a body that is empty,
The peaceful state of clear light,
Does not truly abide anywhere at all."

This is the fifty-first chapter, called The Extensive Explanation of Night and Day, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The samaya of the vowels and consonants,
Not taught elsewhere in the tantras,
Intended for the heirs of the Victor:
The characteristic of the increase of appearance,
Born from the state of clear light,
Endowed with the thirty-three consonants,
Is the full maṇḍala of the consonants.
The state of the increase of appearance,
Arisen from appearance, inexhaustible,
Endowed with the sixteen vowels,
Is the full maṇḍala of the vowels.
From the secret union of these two,
The great bliss born in the center
Is called the samaya of the vowels and consonants,
Distinguished in intentional language.
This supreme, extremely subtle wisdom
Should be known from the lineage of the gurus."

This is the fifty-second chapter, called The Extensive Explanation of the Vowels and Consonants, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

"Then, further, listen to the explanation:
The unsurpassed characteristics of the juncture.
The juncture free of appearance and nonappearance,
Arisen from the wisdom vajra,
Abides at the center where the nondual mingle,
Entirely free of taint and defilement.
Vajra and lotus, born deathless,
Moon and sun perfectly mingled,
That which does not truly go to an end,
Purifies saṃsāra without juncture.
Its own essence is the supreme aspect;
Its subtle characteristic is inconceivable.
The juncture of all sentient beings,
The consort of Vajradhara,
And the dawning are explained as supremely pure.
Entirely free of the cessation of joy and the rest,

Abiding at the tip of the knot, supremely peaceful,
Merely the size of a chickpea,
It is the rising of the lord of the night,
Because it abides in the upper state.
In some it truly abides in four aspects,
As the very essence of the bindu;
In some, beginning and the rest are abandoned;
In some, that too is not apprehended.
Because it has its own nature,
It is therefore inexpressible."

This is the fifty-third chapter, called The Characteristics of the Dawning of the Juncture, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, the great yoga tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One spoke:
"The mere names of the twenty kinds
Are fully explained as the master's tasks,
For the one well advanced in the yoga of mantra:
First the preliminary approach, the cleansing of the ground,
And the expelling of the bhūtas,
The taking possession of the ground, and the cord,
Its purification and preparation,
The expelling of the obstructors, and likewise
The clear drawing of the lines of the maṇḍala,
The proper planting of the ritual daggers,
The blessing of the vase,
The preparation of the Blessed One,
Bathing and thorough purification,
Offering, consecration, and the torma,
The preparation of the disciples,
The fire offering according to the rite,
Empowerment, and the request to depart.
These are the tasks of the twenty rites.
Whoever knows them is the highest among beings.
They are to be performed by a monk who holds the vajra.
The threatening gesture against the māras is supreme.
If one asks about reciting the three syllables:

It especially liberates in the Vajrayāna.
Whichever of the actions, pacifying and the rest,
Always abides in the palm of the hand;
Through its proper rite,
The supreme rite is to be performed.
Yoga, subsequent yoga, and the rest,
And the rites and the rest, should be undertaken.
The heart mantra of Vighnāntaka,
The supreme one of twenty-four syllables,
Should be fully recited ten thousand times.
First, as the wise one does,
In order to remove all the obstructors:
This is called the preliminary approach.
After that, if one recites the three syllables
Ten thousand times with full intention,
It grants the accomplishment one desires in mind.
As a cause of the disciples' accomplishment,
One should sweep a place secluded from people.
One takes possession of ground with water close by,
Not too near a village,
Nor should one undertake it too far away;
Very smooth and without living creatures,
Very far from a royal palace,
And far from houses and marketplaces;
Or else at a shrine of the Sugata.
First, upon the fingers,
One should place the mantra of the Sugata.
Having made a ritual dagger of khadira wood
One cubit and four fingers long,
One washes it with water and the three-syllable mantra.
With the hundred-syllable mantra seven times,
And the three-syllable mantra, one digs,
Until the earth reaches water,
Or else two and a half cubits deep;
Or else one should purify it with the mind.
The bhūtas who dwell there
Should be made to go properly on their way:

oṃ mahā krodha jvalārka,
Properly ending with hūṃ phaṭ.
Thus, having placed the mantra on the palms,
One should expel the bhūtas.
Having struck the ground three times with the palm,
One recites the mantra,
Saying ud gacchad twice:
sarva bhuta graha u da gaccha,
And saying the three syllables at the end.
vajra satva veśad, and then,
Having given the torma that is taught for all the actions,
One makes them depart.
After the ground has been taken possession of,
The vajra master should begin.
Without cracks, with the stains removed,
Even and without thorns,
Smooth like a mirror,
And level: so the wise one should make it.
With cow dung and the rest,
The five products, one should smear it.
Having smeared it, one then performs the ablution,
And the master, in the form of the wrathful one,
And with the supremely unmoving form
Of the gentle vajra of the maṇḍala,
With a smooth cord twisted in three,
Of cotton cloth or of thread,
Purifies it with the three syllables.
With the cord one makes it even all around.
Having made it square,
The Vajrin should mark out
A square of three cubits by three.
In its center, at the part of the navel,
The fault of obstruction is to be avoided:
One inserts relics and jewels,
And having purified them well, one blesses them.
The three syllables, ending in svāhā,
Are properly joined with phaṭ in the middle.

This mantra too should be recited,
Made especially clear with one hundred and eight.
Having struck the Brahmā lines,
One should recite the hundred syllables.
After that, reciting the mantra,
One should scatter a rain of flowers on it:
oṃ and amoghā padmo,
And likewise, after that,
bhasudhari and dhara twice,
dharaṇi maṇḍali hūṃ.
With the hundred-syllable mantra,
Up to three times, one should purify the cord
With water for washing the feet.
With the three syllables one should strike the lines:
Four-cornered, with four doors,
With four corners by the Vajrin.
First the east and the north,
Then the south and the west,
And in the intermediate directions, the cord
Should again be properly struck.
At the southeast corner
And at the northwest corner,
One should take the measure with the cord.
The four corners and the cord are made.
Three circular lines, four doors,
Beautified by three vajra garlands.
Having struck the two Brahmā lines,
From that the palace of Indra
Should be properly drawn in every aspect,
The clear dwelling place of all the Victors.
Upon it one should draw the vidyādharas.
Then again, with jewel powder,
Or the five colors, with flowers,
Substances, or the application of the rite,
In the proper sequence,
One should draw the symbol mudrās and the rest.
With Akṣobhya's color, mudrā, and the rest,

The family should be placed in the center.
The Victor of Victors and the Jewel Holder,
The One Who Has Crossed Beyond Saṃsāra and the Wisdom Holder,
In order, by the distinctions of their colors,
Should be placed in the directions beginning with the east.
Moharati, Dveṣarati, Rāgarati,
And Vajrarati and the rest, in order,
In the intermediate directions beginning with that of fire,
Should be placed as is fitting.
Variegated lotus and moon:
Seven seats; for the others, two suns.
The retinue of joy together with Dveṣarati,
Adorned with a garland of ka letters,
Have the form of three faces and six arms,
Holding the sword of wisdom in the left.
With their forms and shapes as is fitting,
One should worship the central maṇḍala.
Outside, Rūpavajrā and the others
Should be placed in the corner sections.
On the ledges beginning with the east:
Maitreya and Kṣitigarbha in the east,
Mañjuśrī and Vajrapāṇi in the south;
Ākāśagarbha and Lokeśvara
Should be visualized fully in the west;
Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin
And Samantabhadra should be placed in the north.
They have the form of three faces and six arms,
With a sword placed in the left.
Vajrapāṇi has as his seat
A stainless disc of the sun;
The goddesses have a moon seat,
Clear upon a variegated lotus.
Arisen from the family of Vairocana,
The symbol mudrās and the rest should be placed.
At the doors beginning with the east,
Yamāntaka and the others should be placed,
Having the form of three faces and six arms,

Likewise holding a sword in the left.
Acala and the others, in the intermediate directions,
Have the very nature of Yamāntaka,
With the form of three faces and six arms;
One should imagine a sword in the left.
Because the left has the nature of wisdom,
The sword is therefore said to be in the left.
Likewise Sumbharāja and Uṣṇīṣa
Should be placed below and above.
The wrathful ones are seated on suns.

Likewise there is a seat of a variegated lotus.
Likewise the mudrās, the staff and the rest,
Should be indicated symbolically and placed.
The five lines of the pure Tathāgatas
Should be laid out.
Around it is a fence
Of a garland of blazing vajras.
With jewel nets, pendant tassels,
And the bands of the goddesses,
Pillars and archways marked with wheels,
Adorned with the emblems of deer,
Parasols, victory banners, flags and the rest,
Yak-tail fans, mirrors and the rest:
Thus it is explained as adorned.
It is properly relied upon by the buddhas.
The maṇḍala of the supreme master
Is the reflection of his own body.
What the vajra master is to do,
Preceded by the expelling of obstructors:
The sound sumbha and sumbha,
With oṃ first, greatly wondrous,
And hūṃ twice, ending with phaṭ,
Should be placed at the eastern door.
oṃ and gṛhṇa gṛhṇa,
Properly joined with hūṃ twice and phaṭ,
The intelligent one places in the south.

oṃ and gṛhṇāpaya twice,
With hūṃ twice, ending with phaṭ,
Should be properly emanated in the west.
oṃ ānaya ho bhaga bān and vidyārāja,
With hūṃ twice and phaṭ placed at the end,
Should then be placed in the north.
Having summoned the wicked ones with this,
The mantrin should then plant the ritual daggers.
The daggers, made of khadira wood,
Measure twelve fingers,
Three-edged and marked with the three syllables.
The hundred syllables are recited over each one.
Having purified them with mantra water,
One should place them in the directions and the intermediate directions.
oṃ and the syllable gha twice,
Likewise ghātaya twice,
And sarva daṣṭāṃ phaṭ,
Likewise kīlaya twice,
And sarva pāpaṃ phaṭ,
hūṃ three times, vajra kīlaya,
vajradhara ājñāpayati,
kāya vākcitta vajra,
And kīlaya hūṃ phaṭ:
With the dagger, bearing these syllables at the end, one strikes.
oṃ and vajra mutgara,
vajra kīlaya ākoṭa
ya, with hūṃ twice and ending with phaṭ:
This mantra is declared for striking the dagger.
After that, in order to expel the obstructors,
Those entering and the rest: the vajra fence,
Above, the net of arrows,
Below, the crossed vajra,
With the mantras of Uṣṇīṣa and Sumbharāja,
Through the rite of blessing.
Ten vases, or else six,
Made of precious substances and pure,
Filled with the five medicines, the five fruits,

The five grains and the rest,
The five jewels, jasmine and the rest,
Adorned with five kinds of leaves,
Should be filled with saffron, musk, camphor,
And sandalwood water.
One should worship them with flowers and the rest,
And bless each with its own mantra:
vajra dhṛg and jinajig,
ratna dhṛg and ārolik,
Likewise the mantra prajñā dhṛk.
With light rays in the shape of hooks,
From the Akaniṣṭha world realm,
The vases are empowered by the deities themselves;
Then, having invited them, one makes them enter.
Then, having emanated the forms of the goddesses,
After that one should place them in the others.
oṃ and ru ru sphu ru,
Then clearly jvala tiṣṭha,
Likewise siddha locani
sarva artha sādhane
svāhā: thus one recites over it.
Having completed the form of Locanā,
One should worship her in the center of the vase.
oṃ and also śaṃkare,
After that śāntiṃ kuru,
Likewise ghuṭṭi ghuṭṭe,
ghuṭṭine and ghuṭṭine,
And ghātaya, said twice:
One should recite the mantra ending in svāhā.
Having completed the form of Māmakī,
One should worship her in the center of the vase.
oṃ and ṭe vikaṭe
nikaṭe kaṭaṃkaṭe
karoṭa vīrye svāhā:
Having completed the form of Pāṇḍaravāsinī,
One should worship her in the center of the vase.
oṃ and tāre tuttāre

ture svāhā should be set down.
Having completed the form of Tārā,
One should worship her in the center of the vase.
For the others, Yamāntaka and the rest,
For each one, the mantra for all actions:
oṃ namaḥ smanta kāya vākcitta vajrāṇāṃ namo vajra krodhāya mahā daṃṣṭrota kaṭa bhairavāya asi musala bara śu pāśa hastāya oṃ amṛta kuṇḍali kha kha khāhi khāhi tiṣtha tiṣtha bandha bandha hana hana daha daha garjja garjja vi sphoṭaya vi sphoṭaya sarva vighnāṃ vināyakān mahā gaṇapati jīvita antakarāya hūṃ phaṭ svāhā.
This mantra, recited up to seven times,
Serves for all actions.
Having recited the heart mantra,
One should worship the lord of the family.
With the hundred-syllable mantra
One should meditate up to seven times;
And the three syllables, too, are recited
In the sequence of one hundred and eight.
Then, through the yoga of one's own deity,
One should make offerings in the arghya vessel.
Then, with a cloth of fine silk
Perfumed with camphor and aloeswood,
Having covered them, with each one's own mantra
One performs the preparation upon them in sequence.
Having the form of three faces and six arms,
They are like a cloudless sky.

With body colors and hands of such a kind,
They embrace a body that is their own appearance,
And are seated on a seat of variegated lotus
Arisen from the vowels and consonants.
In the center of a delightful celestial palace,
Dwelling in the realm of Akaniṣṭha,
The maṇḍala together with its retinue,
Crowned with the five buddhas,
Is meditated upon; then light rays are emitted from it.
With the five colors and with hooks

They are invited; the master,
Having recited the mantra, should perform the invitation:
ehyehi and bhagabāna,
samayamanusmṛra,
tiṣṭha twice, and samaya,
Then anusmara twice,
And the vajra of body, speech, and mind,
Ending with svāhā, recited three times.
Mañjuvajra should be invited,
Together with the deities of the maṇḍala.
Invited into the center of the maṇḍala,
They are seated on their respective seats,
And should be properly worshiped.
With each one's own mantra and in due order,
One worships with divine flowers and the like.
The supreme wheel-diagram should be worshiped:
"I, who am called so-and-so, here
In this city whose nature is the dharmadhātu,
With whatever requisites I possess,
Wish to make offerings to the maṇḍala.
Consider me with loving heart,
And, Protector, accept this offering!"
oṃ sarbatathāgatānāṃ būjopasbrānayā ātmanaṃ niryātayāmi
The guru recites the three syllables.
Having assumed the form of the deity,
One should then make offering to oneself,
Saying oṃ sarbatathāgata pūjābajrasvabhāva
ātmako'haṃ.
Having taken on the pride of one's own deity,
With the objects just as they have been generated,
And the harm-doers rendered blameless,
Arisen from the family of great aversion,
The lord of the maṇḍala should be worshiped;
Then the preparation of the deities is performed.
Captivating, various divine cloths,
Perfumed with camphor and aloeswood,

Purified by mantra, are used to cover them.
Having recited oṃ and tiṣṭhabajrahoḥ,
One performs the preparation of the maṇḍala.
oṃ and spharabajrahoḥ:
The intelligent one recites this mantra.
Having scattered flowers by the handful,
One should cause them to proceed to that preparation.
Complete in every aspect,
The supreme maṇḍala should be beheld.
Having meditated on the image of the Blessed One
With the excellent nature of the five families,
One bathes it in a mirror and the like,
Likewise with substances, milk, and so forth:
"Just as, at the very moment of birth,
All the tathāgatas were bathed,
So too I offer ablution to the holy body."
Vajrasattva, lord of the crown,
Interlaced in the middle with the three syllables,
Ending with svāhā, should be recited.
One who knows the rite and the reality of the action
Then makes the prepared torma.
oṃ sarba ābaraṇa
śuddha sarba pāpaṃ and
biśuddha bajra hūṃ phaṭ:
This mantra ending with svāhā should be recited.
With the mudrā of the circling lotus,
Having burned white mustard seed,
One dispels the afflictions;
Embracing and circling, one should cast them away.
Then one worships well according to the rite,
With cymbals, songs, and so forth,
Offering them to the Blessed One,
With each one's own mantra and in proper sequence:
oṃ sarbatathāgata
buṣpapūjāmegha and samudra and spharaṇa,
samaya and śriye āḥ;

Then the mantra of hūṃ is recited.
For all the substances, their own names,
Form and the rest, as before,
Are properly recited according to the rite.
As Vajrasattva in graceful poise,
The vajra master who knows the rite
Should perform the consecration with this mantra:
oṃ and supratiṣṭha and
bajra, ending with svāhā, is recited.
Having placed the heart of the three syllables
At the body, speech, and mind,
One should send down a rain of flowers.
The master, with the assembly of disciples,
Having properly roused them with song,
When they have awakened, also makes prostrations.
The yogin whose very self is all actions
Accomplishes every aim through the torma.
Trained and skilled in the rite,
With graceful poise according to the rite,
With liquor and various meats,
Likewise laḍḍus and milk,
Cooked rice and flour cakes,
And many tens of millions of pulse cakes,
With arghya water, flowers, and the like, one worships,
Upon ten vessels filled with water.

With the mantras of the ten wrathful ones that were taught,
By the rite just as before,
In its center, to all the bhūtas,
One gives a torma of great wonder.
By the rite just as before,
Especially with burnt sesame as food,
The intelligent one should recite the mantra.
This is what accomplishes every aim:
oṃ brahmadebatā sarba indradaśalokarakṣaka nāgaganddarbbakuṃbhāṇḍa yakṣabhūtagaṇāḥ tathābreta utgata piśāci apasmāra ḍākinīgraha bighnāṃ mātṛgaṇā sarbbatathāgata agnimaragrahā oṃ jobhakṣa mahāteja manuṣyanāma bihiṃsaka mudrāmantra adhidhobhyaḥca grahānakṣatra manuṣya imaṃ baliṃ pragṛhṇantu siddhimme prayacchantu me sandha satyamaneṣu karmeṣu satsahaya bhabantu ce dhānadhāna suparnañca dhaḍāntu mamatoṣita iti upātrāṇatroṣaṇisatvātanāmanāśayantu ce

Beginning with oṃ, and with āḥ hūṃ phaṭ,
Ending with svāhā, it performs all actions.
Thus this mantra is recited over the vessel.
In the play of Vajrasattva,
One should perform the preparation of the disciple,
Who is adorned with the characteristics and good qualities.
Bathed with water of sandalwood,
Camphor, and musk,
Bearing the water of faith,
The disciple washes away the stains of the mind,
Gives away all possessions,
And puts on supremely clean clothes.
Having made a many-storied chamber,
One stretches curtains of cloth all around it.
Joined with the three syllables,
Vajrin, by sprinkling the mantra water
Seven times upon the face,
Purifies the stains born of karma.
Then Kṣitigarbha and the others
Are set upon the eyes and the other senses.
With the two middle fingers,
Touching each sense faculty in turn,
One should recite the mantra and bless them,
Through the yoga of the body maṇḍala.
Recite oṃ and cakṣu cakṣuḥdaṅ
And samanta and cakṣuḥ;
maitrisatva locane
sarba artha sādhani:
Recite this mantra with svāhā at its end.
Joining thumb and middle finger properly,
And having gladdened the disciple with water for the feet,
One should recite that mantra three times,
And touch each of the disciple's eyes in turn
With the mudrā of the thumb.

Over a thread one cubit and four fingers long,
Shaped like a noose,
Having recited the hundred-syllable mantra three times,
One should cleanse it with water for the feet.
The thread is wound three times
And has three vajra knots.
While it is tied on the left upper arm,
One should recite this mantra three times:
oṃ and the sound locane,
yatatvadtaṃ saṃprataṃ,
mibha and the sound biśuddī,
raṃ and ratnatrayāya,
siddhinanidadaśa ya svāhā:
This mantra of the unsurpassed vehicle
Is recited seven times,
And flowers are scattered over the disciple.
Then Vajradhara
Should fashion a peg measuring twelve fingers,
Made fully three-sided,
Meditate on it as blessed by the three syllables,
And place it in the disciple's hand.
oṃ and pratibajra and
samanta and iśvari,
āḥ hūṃ, the mantra ending with svāhā:
Having recited it, the disciple should cast the peg.
Whichever direction the peg
That falls to the ground is facing,
The master and the disciple
Should sleep facing that direction.
At dawn, to the true guru,
The disciple reports all that was seen.
Taking that as the basis, a fire offering,
Distinguished as pacifying and the rest,
Should be performed, either for all the actions
Or for the sake of pacifying obstructors.
By one in the graceful poise of Vajrasattva,
In keeping with the yoga and the rite,

Here too, as before, the torma
Should be given in order to pacify the obstructors.
Then the disciple makes supplication
To the vajra master, who is pervaded by compassion:
Joining the palms,
Sitting before him and bowing, the disciple says:
"Since you, Great Joy, are my Teacher,
Master, please consider me.
Great Protector who teaches the way of great awakening,
I seek it.
Please bestow that very samaya,
And grant me the vows as well.
Protector, I wish to enter
The supreme city of great liberation."
Then the guru, in turn, tells him
What is to be done and not done:
"The lines are laid with the cord of beings' karma,
And the colored powders are spread in their sequence.
These beings are the maṇḍala,
Pure by nature and nondual."
First the vajra master, lord of the maṇḍala yoga,
Meditates on himself,
And, visualizing the disciple as like himself,
Afterward should accomplish everything fully.
In order to receive empowerment from the excellent guru,
The disciple next makes this supplication:
"Here in the ocean of saṃsāra,
Teeming with the sea monsters of the afflictions,
Its waves churned by the winds of karma,
O ocean of compassion, grant me your blessing!
My eyes are veiled by the cataract of ignorance,
I am brought under the power of the afflictions:
Protect me from the fears of pleasure and pain!
Ocean of compassion, be my refuge!"
Having heard such words, Vajrin,
His heart completely filled with compassion,
Fully addresses the disciple:

"Son, from this time onward,
The system of the Vajra Vehicle is shown to you.
Hold fast to the supreme yoga,
The abode of the conduct of Vajrasattva.
Son, this is nectar:
Guard it! If you do not guard it, it burns;
If you guard it, every accomplishment will be achieved.
It is a river that clears away all afflictions."
oṃ and pañca amṛta,
udaka and āḥ hūṃ ṭha:
The disciple should drink the five nectars,
The marvelous vajra wisdom.

Since recollecting the secret would become a fault,
One causes the descent upon the vajra disciple.
Excrement, urine, and the like,
The cloth of a girl in heavy menstrual flow,
Thoroughly smeared with blood and semen,
Are mixed together with guggulu.
Having taken the fire of a preta
And placed it in a lotus vessel,
One should put all of these into it.
The wrathful one, embodying the three vajras,
Standing in the posture with the right leg extended,
The lord Vajradhara fumigates the disciple
With the incense of great wonder:
There is no doubt that the descent will occur.
oṃ tiṣṭha mahākrodha,
And likewise ābeśaya hūṃ:
The yogin recites this mantra
And causes the descent clearly upon the disciple.
bajrasatva himahe
bidyarājaya bidyamahe:
Thus, with this mantra too,
Having empowered the disciple once again,
When, with his own body pure by nature,
He beholds this supreme maṇḍala,

The tathāgatas and the goddesses,
The true ground of the Victor's children,
The supreme secret pervaded by the wrathful ones,
And Vajrasattva and the support,
The outer and the inner maṇḍalas,
Both of these should be shown to him.
Once again the disciple makes supplication:
"Please confer empowerment upon me!"
Having taken up the victory vase,
On an excellent lotus vessel,
In its center the one of excellent mind
Meditates on Akṣobhya arisen from hūṃ and a vajra,
Arisen through the light rays of one's own wisdom seed
Properly stirred forth.
Again one meditates on the wisdom being,
The supreme form of Akṣobhya.
With that very nature of Akṣobhya,
One meditates on the aggregate of consciousness.
The vajra master, pervaded by compassion,
Places his hand on the disciple's head.
oṃ and mahāsatva,
And likewise īśvarataṃ,
And abhiṣīñcami svāhā;
oṃ sarbatathāgata
abhiṣekasamaya
śriye āḥ hūṃ is recited next.
From the depths of the water, for the disciple,
For the sake of the crown empowerment:
"The diadem of the king of the three worlds,
Which accomplishes the aims of all sentient beings,
Pervaded by compassion, I bestow:
The abode of the qualities of Vajrasattva."
Having meditated on Ratnasambhava
Arisen from the seed traṃ,
One should give the diadem too, with its designs, silk, and the rest,
Upon the disciple's head.
oṃ sarbatathāgata,

The sound ratnamukuṭa,
Likewise its sound, and pūjaya,
atiṣṭha and āḥ hūṃ:
Having recited these mantras,
One should place flowers upon the head.
For the vajra empowerment of the disciple,
Once again he supplicates the guru.
"The very nature of the five wisdoms,
The vajra discipline, I bestow,
By which the egg of ignorance is broken open:
I have caused you to attain wisdom."
One meditates on Amitābha,
As a lotus perfected from hrīḥ,
And gives the vajra into the right hand,
Saying this to the disciple:
"Today I empower you.
This is all the buddhas,
Firm in the discipline of Samantabhadra;
For excellent accomplishment, the vajra is yours."
The sword arisen from khaṃ,
Or the very nature of Amoghasiddhi, complete,
The disciple holds in the left hand
In the mudrā of graceful poise.
"This is declared to follow the sound
Of the bell of all the buddhas.
You too must always hold it:
Supreme awakening, the ground of the Victors."
After the vajra and bell have been taken up,
He who has the very nature of Vajrasattva,
Filled with the qualities of his intrinsic nature,
Becomes the yoga of the lord.
In the very nature of Vairocana,
Placing his hand on the disciple's head,
Vajrin confers the name empowerment,
And one meditates on the aggregate of form.
oṃ sarbatathāgata,
Then "so-and-so," bajrasatvaṃ

abhiṣīñcami svāhā.
Through the complete purification of the five aggregates,
From the water first to the name at the end,
The empowerments are known as supreme.
I shall explain the great wonder:
This purity of the five buddhas
Is the attaining of the five empowerments;
Having dispelled ignorance,
The five wisdoms are attained.
Then, as Vajrasattva,
He gives the mantra empowerment for the aim the disciple desires:
"The mantra empowerment, supreme wisdom,
I bestow: it grants accomplishments."
Then the six-syllable mantra with phaṭ,
And the three syllables ending with svāhā;
With the mouth filled with samaya,
Purified by the mantra body,
It is properly recited from the guru's mouth,
So that the guru may grant accomplishments:
"This is the supreme wisdom
Of the heart of all the buddhas,
The condensation of all the buddhas:
You too must always hold it."
Then the discipline of conduct for the disciple:
"Through the distinctions of various intentions,
For one whose conduct is wholly pure,
And who longs for it, by the lord of compassion,
As the means for working the welfare of sentient beings,
I bestow the discipline of conduct."
Then a book, a conch, and the like,
Bow and arrows, sword, and wheel,
Are purified with mantra as before
And given in sequence into the disciple's hands.
"This is the conduct and discipline of Samantabhadra,
Which purifies various intentions.
You too must always hold it.
Work for the welfare of all sentient beings!"

oṃ sarbatathāgata,
Likewise dhrīṭaratvaṃ,
And dharyami āḥ hūṃ:
In this way this mantra should be set down.
Then, in order to obtain the prophecy,
With a clear and faithful mind, to the guru:
"Now I enter the family of the buddhas:
Please prophesy for me!"
"You who are called Amoghavajra,
I prophesy that you will be lord of the family."
Then the disciple, wishing for assurance,
Rises before the guru:
"Protector, truly give me assurance,
That I may be firm in the discipline of the conduct of awakening."
Then, holding the hem of the vajra robe
With his left hand,
And making the gesture of granting fearlessness with the right,
He performs the supreme act of assurance:
"I declare you lord of vajra speech,
The supreme state of all the buddhas,
Vajrasattva by name,
Great king of the three realms,
Glorious lord, source of good qualities,
Victorious over all the power of the māras:
You have entered the supreme city."

Then, for the disciple who desires the aim,
One should confer the irreversible empowerment:
"Vajrasattva, grant me
The great irreversible empowerment!"
Then the lord of the wisdom vajra,
Through the light rays of the wisdom being,
Invites the five buddhas and the rest,
And the wheel of goddesses arises in sequence.
Thereby the tathāgatas, holding in their hands
Vases filled with the water of wisdom,
Vajradhara and the Victor of Victors,

The Jewel Holder and the Liberator from Saṃsāra,
And the Wisdom Holder, in their order;
Moharati, Dveṣarati, and Rāgarati,
And likewise Vajrarati and the rest;
Yamāntaka and Prajñāntaka,
Padmāntaka and Vighnāntaka:
As these confer empowerment from every side,
One imagines the vajra disciple.
"This empowerment is the great vajra,
To which all the three realms pay homage,
Arisen from the abode of the three secrets:
I bestow all the buddhas."
Then the tathāgatas, the goddesses,
And the wrathful ones are set in their own places.
Having meditated on Mañjuśrī,
Adorned with the wisdom vajra,
One sets down oṃ and supratiṣṭha
And bajra svāhā.
Having recited the mantra, the one of excellent mind
Scatters flowers over the disciple.
Then one worships with flowers and the like.
The disciple's maṇḍala is like a wheel.
Then the guru, pervaded by compassion,
Should give the disciple authorization:
"For the yogin who knows reality,
There is nothing at all that is not to be done.
Great glorious one, through this kindness,
Now enjoy the five sense pleasures.
Knowing them to be like illusions and dreams,
And knowing phenomena arisen from dependent origination
To be like reflections,
Accomplish the incomparable welfare of sentient beings.
Disciple who has done what was to be done,
Practice as you please."
Then the disciple offers the fee to the guru,
Praises him, and prostrates fully.
Together with excellent people,

The disciple then seeks the secret meaning from the guru,
Face turned downward, palms joined:
"Just as you are, great being,
Make me too the same as you."
Then, through the divisions of activity, Dharma, and the rest,
Arisen from the five families,
One is liberated further by the Mantra Vehicle:
A fortunate woman is taught to be the mudrā.
At midnight, secluded from people,
Having gone to the place of the corpse ground,
The vajra master, pervaded by great compassion,
The source of good qualities,
With the mudrā found as is fitting,
Whatever arises in union,
Of unsurpassed nature,
The assembly of all the buddhas,
Falls properly into the yoginī.
Whatever is the relative mind of awakening,
With that secret one should confer empowerment:
"This is the great samaya of all the buddhas,
Fully arisen;
Take it as the essence arisen from the five elements,
And experience it with great bliss.
Disciple, free from conceptualization,
Taste that which abides in the lotus.
Just as the Vajradharas of the past
Empowered the Victor's children
With the water of the mind of awakening,
So, son, I empower you."
Then, for the sake of the wisdom empowerment,
The disciple who desires the aim says to the guru:
"Grant me the empowerment
That gathers all accomplishments!"
Then the great master
Properly blesses the mudrā,
And, so that the supreme may be attained,
Thereafter gives her to the disciple:

"This goddess, the great mudrā,
Who bestows immeasurable bliss:
Son, having fully received her,
Make the unsurpassed offering."
Then, that wisdom and gnosis,
The aim the practitioner supremely desires:
"The supreme wisdom of the goddess itself
I give for the sake of accomplishment."
The goddess commands him:
"Unsurpassed son of heroes,
Hero, are you eager or not?
Are you able to eat the mind of awakening?
Truly and decisively,
Say it just as you wish."
"The supreme samaya, just as it was taught:
Goddess, why should I be unable?"
Then the goddess, delighted,
Loosening her hair and casting off her clothes,
Opening the lotus,
Said bhañjamokṣaho.
The channel abiding in the center of the lotus of the bhaga,
Where bliss moves everywhere,
Stimulate with the finger and give delight;
Play with the tongue as well.
Producing the coemergent bliss,
When one relies on this excellent consort,
Having experienced it with supreme joy,
One should savor it with the bliss of the descent.
Then the Blessed Lady, delighted,
Speaking the mantra of bhañjamokṣa,
Places her left foot on his head,
And by her command properly teaches that reality:
"From this day onward, son,
Until the heart of awakening,
As in a dream, work
The unsurpassed welfare of sentient beings!
From the instructions on meditating the generation stage

This is not known.
If this consort is rejected,
One will not awaken by any other means.
The supreme of supreme disciplines,
The discipline of the consort, the son should practice."
Thus this is supreme awakening.
The vajra yogin and the yoginī
Should be fully understood in their sequence.
"Support of the state of Vajrasattva,
Grant me the supreme state!
Through every samādhi the result is clear:
For all sentient beings, as they wish,
I ask for unsurpassed accomplishment."
Then, to bid them depart once again:
"Go to your own place, bajra muḥ!"
Then one gives the torma of the remainder,
The sequence of the remainder of the circle:
ucchiṣṭa kṣetrapala
ati cakra ucchiṣṭa
subhojanaṃ, biba twice,
bhukṣa twice, and sarba,
And siddhiṃ prayaccha me,
With oṃ before, and āḥ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā
Should be recited after it.
Becoming the holder of vajra and bell,
Standing in the posture with the left leg extended,
With the nature of Trailokyavijaya,
The very nature of the vajra master
Holds the nature of Trailokyavijaya.
Thus, from the twenty rites,
The characteristics of the generation stage have been taught.
By one who knows that reality in depth,
This is the guru's excellent virtuous activity.
This concludes the fifty-fourth chapter, on the elaboration of the activities of the twenty rites, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.
Then, something further to be explained:

Its reason and its result.
The activities have been taught as twenty rites:
"Great Lord (Maheśvara), what is their reason?
What will be their result?
Great One of the great, tell it as it is!"
Then the Blessed Vajra One said:
"The reason and the result of the activities:
Through the activity of prior approach,
The reason is the eight worldly accomplishments.
In order to dispel avarice and the rest,
One meditates on offering to the buddhas,
And generosity, moral discipline, patience,
Diligence, and meditative concentration are fully perfected.
Through the empowerment of wisdom and gnosis,
The perfection of wisdom is perfected.
Abiding in the secret and the rest
Is the reason for people's attachment."

Through the dharmas of all-embracing conduct,
Through the cause that is the wisdom of equality,
Worshiping the guru with faith
Has as its aim the state of Vajrasattva.
The empowerments from the water culminating in the name
Are for the complete purification of the five wisdoms.
The culmination of irreversible conduct
Is for the complete purification of beings' intentions.
The culmination of the wisdom discipline and the rest
Is in order to show bliss by way of example.
Equal to the minute particles of the maṇḍala's colored powder,
All the tathāgatas
Become the very objects of worship,
And thus the wheel of the result is set in motion.
Worship of all the buddhas
Purifies the obscurations of karma.
The empowerment of the utterly pure dharmadhātu
Is obtained, and,
Just as the nature of things is,

It is attained through wisdom and gnosis.
The practice performed by the guru, too,
Is the supreme state of that worship.
Thus one attains before long
Pure conduct, the supreme discipline.
This concludes the fifty-fifth chapter, teaching the reason and the result of the twenty rites, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.
Then Vajrasattva said:
"The unsurpassed rite of worship,
Through the yoga of nondual equality,
Is the sequence of the rite of worship within the body.
To images made of stone, wood,
Clay, or gold, one does not bow.
Consecration, maṇḍala, and fire offering:
From then on, one never performs them.
Excrement, vajra water, the jewel, and the rest:
The five that are oneself are always to be worshiped;
Therefore one is directly engaged in that.
The vajra of mind, oneself, is the principal.
That mind, too, has no substantial existence,
Because its characteristic is emptiness,
And emptiness too is without form.
Therefore everything is like space.
Thus consciousness too, completely purified,
Should be worshiped in the three channels as well.
Because whatever is the nature of mind
Does not exist as something other than mind,
One abides as Vajrasattva oneself
And in the nature of mind.
The unsurpassed form of the deity
Is nothing other than mind.
Therefore, the discerning one, in this way,
Always worships his own body alone.
Always practicing in the five families,
One examines them as a single family.
The distinctions of wanted and unwanted,

And of drinkable and undrinkable, are abandoned.
'A yogin is fortunate' or 'unfortunate':
This one should never say.
The aspects of the mudrā, blue and so forth:
Likewise form has three divisions.
Having summoned Rūpavajrā,
One should offer to Kṣitigarbha.
True song and melody beyond words:
Likewise sound has three divisions.
Properly summon Śabdavajrā
And offer to Vajrapāṇi.
Camphor, aloeswood, jasmine, and the like:
Likewise smell has three divisions.
Properly summon Gandhavajrā
And offer to Ākāśagarbha.
Kissing and sucking
And the six tastes likewise have three divisions.
Properly summon Rasavajrā
And offer to Lokeśvara.
Properly joining vajra and lotus,
Garments and embracing: three divisions.
Properly summon Sparśavajrā
And one should offer to Sarvanivaraṇaviṣkambhin.
All these outer dharmas,
Both those imagined and those not imagined:
Properly summon Dharmadhātuvajrā
And offer to Mañjuvajra.
Likewise the outer and the inner,
And both together, unapprehended,
Having made them threefold in form,
One should offer to the deities.
The five objects definitely abide;
That which definitely arises in the five continua,
In dream, and joined with the wind,
Enjoys the five desirables.
Through whichever faculty and whichever path
The practitioner obtains an object,

All of these, in order to please
The one of great compassion, should be offered.
With flowers of true joy,
Vajra, sun, and lotus arise.
Worshiping oneself with flowers
Is the supreme samaya of the three vajras.
That which is not the domain of conceptual ways,
And which is thus definitely burned
By the fire of caṇḍālī, is incense:
Offer it to the vajra of mind.
Arising from the stages
Of the vajra truly entering the lotus and the rest,
The indestructible sound of the yogin
Should be offered to the vajra of mind.
Truly arisen from the syllable hūṃ,
The mantra's light rays, utterly clear,
The true light of a blazing lamp,
Should be offered to the vajra of mind.
Great bliss abiding in space,
And the mind of awakening awakened,
Anointing with that very thing
Should be offered to the vajra of mind.
Here, whatever is enjoyed,
Properly relied upon by all the faculties,
All of that is the vajra of mind:
It should be offered in the vessel of food.
Laughter, flirtation, and play:
Through their variety they delight the mind.
These and the doors of liberation
Offer to the vajra of mind."
This concludes the fifty-sixth chapter, on the classification of the rite of inner self-worship, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.
Then the Blessed Vajra One said:
"The supreme characteristics of the goddess:
Those who contemplate the bliss of yoga,
Through the nature of the divisions of the channels,

Always engage in the play of the body.
These are explained as its deities.
Always delighted by every bliss,
A body graceful in every way,
Wholly pervaded by great bliss,
Is properly declared to be the deity itself.
Joy and supreme joy,
Cessation, and the coemergent moment;
Rain and play,
Flirtation surpassing all,
Fainting and becoming awakened:
These are explained as the goddesses.
When they arise outwardly,
Because they come into true union,
The channels of the body are properly awakened;
Therefore they are explained as yoginīs."

This concludes the fifty-seventh chapter, on the characteristics of the goddesses, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.

Then the Blessed Vajra One said:

"The two syllables called e baṃ:
e is explained as emptiness,
And likewise baṃ is compassion;
The bindu arises from the union of the two.
That is the arising of the supremely wondrous yoga.
The two, e and baṃ, are the Buddha
And, in brief, the seal of the Dharma.
Great king, the two seals
Were taught first in the tantras.
e is the characteristic of the bhaga."

It should be known as the support, the lotus;
The supported is said to be the vajra.
The form of the bindu of steadfast Vajradhara
That abides within it
Displays manifold emanations.
The abode that is the ground of all bliss

Is Vajrasattva, the great bliss.
e is the secret expanse of space;
In the bhaga, the source of phenomena, the lotus,
He sits upon the lion throne of yoga
And displays the supremely wondrous.
Vajrasattva, baṃ, the vajra,
Vajrabhairava, Īśvara,
Heruka, Kālacakra,
The Primordial Buddha, and so on, are its names.
e baṃ, the seal of the tathāgatas,
The nondual Saṃvara,
Emptiness and compassion indivisible:
That in which reality is made manifest in words.
Therein the seal of the tathāgatas,
The sign of nondual wisdom,
Is taught as the opening of all the tantras.
The condensed meaning of all the tantras,
Emptiness and compassion undivided,
That in which reality is made manifest in words,
Is the two syllables called e baṃ.
Where this itself is absent,
There is no suchness.
One who fully knows it,
Clearly, like refined gold,
Knows the tantra, that very well-spoken word,
And abides in the conduct of mantra.
Thus this is the supreme reality.
The meaning of e paṃ is ascertained:
The two syllables, the seal of the Dharma,
Are rightly explained as the opening words.

This concludes the fifty-eighth chapter, explaining the opening words called e baṃ and teaching their rationale, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.

Then:
"Further, I shall explain; listen!
The extensive meaning of e baṃ and the rest:

Whoever rightly and fully knows it
Truly realizes the reality of phenomena.

e:
e is sublime wisdom,
Whose self is the instants such as freedom from desire.
Fully known within the three existences,
It is taught to be the root.

baṃ:
Beautiful like a light not yet raised up,
Endowed with the arising of attachment and the rest,
It is the consciousness of clear appearance;
Its name is skillful means.

ma:
Great awareness itself is the root;
It is what reverses ignorance.
Since this arises from ignorance,
Therefore appearance arises.

yā:
The first of the three consciousnesses of beings,
Its name is clear appearance.
It becomes great emptiness,
And that in turn passes into luminosity.

śru:
This, bearing the characteristics of the three appearances,
Which has attained the three consciousnesses,
Is the intrinsic nature and root
Of the entire realm of sentient beings.

taṃ:
It is the appearance of each object,
Which, taken up by the wind, does the grasping.

laṃ:
Consciousness joined with wind
Comes to abide in going everywhere.

e:
This is the great wind element,
The mount of the three consciousnesses.
By it they come to move
Into the natures in whatever way they do.

ka:
The solid earth element, water,
And likewise fire and wind,
Being taken up by consciousness,
Are born in the abodes of the three existences.

smi:
This arises as the five aggregates,
Whose characteristic is to be conditioned:
Form, feeling, perception, formations,
And consciousness itself, the fifth.

sa:
Equality, discernment,
Accomplishment of activity,
The mirror, and the expanse of phenomena:
These are the five wisdoms.

ma:
The sense base of the mind,
The eye, and likewise the ear,
The nose, the tongue, and the body:
This is the arising of the sense bases.

ye:
All the sentient beings of the three realms,
Relying on life breath and its exertion,
Recite the king of secret mantras
Without knowing it, free of meditation and of reading.

bha:
From this arise the natures of attachment,
Non-attachment, and the rest.
From that comes virtuous and nonvirtuous karma,
And from that, birth arises.

ga:
The aggregates from which beings arise
Have the nature of the five buddhas;
By the name "the fivefold manifest awakening"
They are called forth.

vān:
Wind, water, fire, and earth
Are the four, Locanā and the rest.
Know them as threefold, having the nature of wisdom;
They bestow the awakening of a buddha.

sa:
All are sealed with the four seals
As the body of the tathāgatas,
And there, as the nature of the eye and the rest,
Are Kṣitigarbha and the other heirs of the victors.

ha:
The mighty kings of wrath,
Who delight in play,
As the nature of its directions and intermediate directions,
Should be visualized in the shoulders and the limbs.

ta:
The various gods and goddesses
Arising from each of their families
Do not exist; and yet they
Are displayed for the sake of beings.

thā:
Hence the yogin who sees nonduality,
In order to see the three wisdoms,
Should settle upon the lesser, the middling,
And the supreme objects.

ga:
Each sense faculty goes
Toward its own object;
Whatever is the sphere of the faculties,
Each and every one is mere appearance.

ta:
The objects that the practitioner obtains
By way of those sense faculties
Should likewise be offered to bring satisfaction,
With nothing other than that prescribed.

kā:
The three bodies were rightly taught
By the Protector as distinct;
Through the yoga of the completion stage
They also become one.

yā:
That buddha body with its characteristics
Which is taught as conventional truth,
Through the yoga of the completion stage
Is purified into luminosity.

vāk:
This very object of the path of speech,
The lord whose nature is the wisdom body,
For the benefit of all sentient beings
Appears like a rainbow.

cit:
Mind, mental factors, ignorance,
Wisdom, skillful means, and near-attainment
Are also proclaimed as empty,
Very empty, and great emptiness.

ta:
When one knows the divisions of the natures and the appearances,
One should then fully engage in the conduct.
Having completely abandoned the body of karma,
One attains the vajra body itself.

hṛ:
Having set in his heart the conduct
For the benefit of worldly beings, the Tathāgata
Abides conventionally in an emanation body
And acts however he wishes.

da:
Like a supreme wish-fulfilling jewel,
He grants every desire.
Even the riches of the buddhas
He takes by force and enjoys.

ya:
Whatever the lord of yogins desires,
He does without obstruction.
Through the yoga that is not set in equipoise
He constantly rests in equipoise.

va:
Through the union of vajra and lotus,
Knowing the portions of the three wisdoms,
Whether his mind is touched or untouched,
He abides there ever in bliss.

jra:
Through the illusion-like concentration
He sports among all things,
And while performing the deeds of a buddha
Abides on the ground that has been established.

yo:
He himself becomes yoga, the yoga that surpasses yoga,
And great yoga.
Vajrin and the ḍākinī,
Whoever they may be, are that yogin himself.

ṣī:
Since he does even what is forbidden,
He is free of what is to be done and not to be done;
Like a lotus by the mud,
By his very nature, it is said, he is not stained.

bha:
Being endowed with the eight qualities,
He becomes the family of all sentient beings,
And throughout every world realm without exception
He moves in his own wisdom body.

ge:
Wherever the lord acts,
His home is space itself;
Through the concentration of great bliss
He ever sports therein.

ṣā:
Here, in distinguishing the appearances,
The worldly conventions of twilight,
Of day and of night, are used
In order to see the three wisdoms.

vi:
The manifold conventions
Imagined by worldly people
Arise from the three wisdoms
Through the division of the three paths.

ja:
Arising, abiding, and perishing,
And abiding in the intermediate state:
All that the world imagines
Is the magical display of the wind of mind.

ha:
Laughing and playing,
Being endowed with the nine moods of dance,
And conceiving mantras and mudrās:
This is the conduct of Vajrasattva.

ra:
Apart from the great self-blessing,
There is no other jewel here.
Like a gem purified by fire,
It is the form of natural luminosity.

The opening words "Thus" and the rest,
The extensive meaning of what was supremely spoken,
The root sūtra of the Guhyasamāja:
This condensed explanation of its reality
Should be known in its proper sequence.
The knowledge of the practitioner's reality,

With the characteristics of supreme wisdom,
Has nowhere been clearly taught.
By this sequence the yogin
Has sealed the Glorious Samāja.
Knowing it thus through this sequence
Brings benefit to all sentient beings.

This concludes the fifty-ninth chapter, explaining the opening words called baṃ ma yā, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.

Then:
"Further, I shall explain; listen!
The supreme fire offering of the inner self:
The elements that move within,
That by which they are dissolved,
The seeds of conceptual imprints,
And the firewood of the five aggregates:
With the fire of the great wisdom of yoga
One should always perform the wondrous fire offering.
The mere sound abiding at the center of the navel;
The mere sound outside, the secret lotus.
There, by the fire
Stirred by one's own wind,
The two organs are truly joined,
And it blazes brilliantly with splendor.
When the secret lotus is filled with butter,
This is called the vessel.
haṃ is said to be the pouring ladle;
The vajra is called the filling ladle;
The bhaga is said to be the hearth.
The five senses are the substances to be burned,
And the aggregates become the kindling sticks;
The butter is explained as the mind of awakening.
From the new moon until the full moon,
For as long as one performs it, one makes the invocation.
The fire hearth is said to be the mere bindu;
The ladle never lets anything pass.

The buddhas, Moharati and the others,
Rūpavajrā and the others, the heirs of the victors,
And the ten kings of wrath
Should always be satisfied with the fire offering.
Whatever is the offering to Vajrasattva,
That too is called the oblation from the ladle.
With the mantra endowed with huṃ phaṭ,
Offer the oblations according to the rite.
When the one who dwells in the body is pleased by this,
The deity of unsurpassed commitment
Grants accomplishments
Just as one wishes in one's mind.
This fire offering is taught to be supreme;
It grants the fruit of all accomplishments."

This concludes the sixtieth chapter, on the fire offering of the inner self, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.

Then the Blessed Vajra One said:
"Eating the five nectars
Is the supreme reality that brings about all accomplishments.
In accordance with the sequence of the families,
Vairocana, Akṣobhya,
Amoghasiddhi, Amitābha,
And Ratnaketu, these five,
Are the characteristics of the five nectars.

Blood is Ratneśvara,
The mind of awakening is Amitābha,
Likewise flesh is Amoghasiddhi,
And likewise Akṣobhya is the vajra water;
Excrement is explained as Vairocana.
These are the supreme five nectars.
In a delightful outlying place, secluded from people,
Free of hair and thorns,
The house to be built there
Is a house of two stories with doors.
One room should be made underground,
And the other above it.

The other is to be made in secret,
So that worldly people know of only one.
The practitioner knows all of reality,
Knows mantra, and is vast in intention,
Steadfast, compassionate, and learned,
And free of envy regarding objects.
Whatever the qualities of the principal practitioner,
Such indeed is the supreme companion in practice:
Free of both attachment and detachment,
Diligent and without greed,
Without anger and courageous,
Very learned and holding the view that things exist.
First the bodies of both
Should be purified with fruits and the like.
Then the mantrin should recite
The urging mantra of Sumbharāja a hundred thousand times:
oṃ sumbha ni sumbha hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ gṛhṇa gṛhṇa hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ gṛhṇā va ya gṛhṇā pa ya hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ oṃ an ya ho bha ga vā na vidyā rā ja hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ
Then for one month the practitioner
Should recite the three syllables in silence.
Samantabhadra, lord of beings,
Is then seen in a dream in an instant,
And he gives this command:
"Rely on the supreme maiden,
And accomplish the incomparable benefit of beings,
Just as Vajradhara himself does."
A fortunate girl with wide eyes,
Adorned with beauty and youth,
Without greed and with a passionate mind,
Intoxicated with charm and with a proud bearing,
With full breasts, dusky blue, and delightful,
Free of conceptual thought and very learned:
The practitioner should desire her
For as long as it takes for the fluid to come.
Then, the mouth and the lotus, these two:

Taking what issues from both,
One should place it in that lotus vessel,
Under good signs, for seven days.
Elephant, horse, dog, cow, and human:
In the last month of spring, when both have appeared,
Having taken them from the place of birth,
Likewise, there, in due order,
One should place them in that same lotus vessel
For up to seven days.
For twenty-one days and nights
One should recite the mantra of three syllables.
In a secluded place free of bustle,
Having anointed it with fine sandalwood,
One should place it in a lotus vessel
Inscribed with the mantra jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ.
Goat's milk, sesame oil,
Butter, and white sugar
Are boiled together in equal portions,
And mixed with what was placed in the vessel.
One endowed with intelligence should make pills
The size of a juniper berry.
Having dried them in the shade,
One should eat them, gradually increasing the amount.
One should eat them together with one's vajra brothers and sisters
And the yoginīs.
For one month, and then beyond,
One should share them properly with one's friends.
On the eighth or the tenth day of the waning fortnight,
Or else beginning from the fourteenth,
The torma that is offered then
Is unsurpassed for every rite.
From that too accomplishments arise:
The great seal, manifest awakening,
The accomplishments of increase, pacification, and the rest,
Are obtained by it without effort.
One rightly learns the reality of the winds
And attains the state of a sky-goer.

This concludes the sixty-first chapter, on the rite of eating the five nectars, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.

Then:
"Further, I shall explain; listen!
The supreme rite of the feast gathering,
Arising from the worship
By which the supreme accomplishment of the heirs of the victors comes:
Together with great yogins
One rightly abides in order to accomplish it.
Fully knowing the signs of the mudrās,
One enters into the commitments with them.
Their assembly is supremely excellent
And is called the feast gathering.
All abide in the commitments,
Have abandoned all conceptual thought,
Have faith in the guru, abide in the commitments,
And are adorned with generosity and the other virtues.
If the one called the means is free of obstructors,
He enters the feast gathering.
Otherwise faults will arise,
And there will be no accomplishment in the circle.
The wisdom partner too is like the means:
A good friend, highly skilled,
Who has reached the age of twenty-five.
Having entirely rejected the rest,
The means and the wisdom are each paired;
One for all brings no benefit.
First, in a pleasing and delightful place,
One should make a maṇḍala of flowers.
Its various offerings
One should offer after settling well in equipoise.
The principal should be worshiped with all things,
Just as Vajrasattva is.
After the feast offering has been made,
Through the maṇḍala in forward and reverse order,
With faith and with all things,

Having meditated with a gaze of equality,
Whatever contradicts the treatises, experience,
Or the world should not be brought in.
Further, as is taught in the treatises,
At midnight one should invite the guests.
One should rightly worship the master, the protector,
And request him to be seated upon the seat.
The seat, endowed with the great seal
Of Vajrasattva:
The vajra master himself, the wise one,
Sits at the center of the circle.
The other members of the maṇḍala,
And likewise the others who dwell in the circle,
Should be known to be like the members of the maṇḍala.
In the feast gathering, idle talk,
Disputing and likewise arguing a case,
Spitting out phlegm and laughing,
Stretching out the legs and so on,
And rising again and again:
These should never be done there at any time.
Through the many signs of the mudrās
One should know what to do and what to do next.
With mindful awareness, dance and song
Should be performed in the maṇḍala of the gathering.
For the principal, the supreme vessel
Is one of a single piece with excellent marks;
Lacking that, one of three pieces,
Worshiped with various flowers.
Whatever divine liquor and the like there is
Should be offered after settling well in equipoise.
For the assembly too, each has a separate vessel,
Completely filled with masses of flowers.
First the great torma is given,
Furnished, as before, with foods and the rest.
Whatever impairs the joys,
Such a thing should not be drunk.

Having bowed again and again,
And having bound the mudrā, one should drink.
Then all the foods
Are rightly purified with the purifying syllables and the rest.
With oṃ, āḥ, and hūṃ
They should be purified, awakened, and realized.
Saffron, sandalwood, "hero,"
"Snow," and musk:
These are the five purifying nectars.
One should fully partake of these foods.
Through the union of the gross one and the nameless one,
The heroes and the yoginīs, in due order,
Should taste it with their own tongues.
At all times, in the midst of the heroes,
One should set the hero upon the mouth
And make the unsurpassed offering.
The center of the hub of the lotus
Is said to be the seat of the heroes.
If a hero does not know
The characteristics of the meaning of "hero,"
That circle which grants all accomplishments
Bears no fruit for him.
Whatever little fruit of that kind there is,
One who rightly practices outer and inner as oneself
Through that comes to pure accomplishment,
And it grants the fruit of the feast gathering.
Mingling with the yoginīs
I shall fully explain; listen to its reality!
Some ḍākinīs of discipline
Come, drawn by a mind free of conceptual thought.
At that time the practitioner
Should not speak to them,
Nor answer them with mere words.
"Have you come in happiness?" should be asked with a mudrā.
Whatever little is to be done or said to them,
The master himself should do.
Or else all that is to be done
Should be rightly carried out by the action vajra,

Because one is oneself Vajrasattva,
And the action vajra is no other.
Yoginīs of various forms
Should be summoned again and again.
Among them there is no wavering conduct;
One acts like the master, the hero.
Whoever behaves with faulty conduct,
His body will fall.
Great joy rightly arises,
And one performs the conduct of the commanded dance.
One should also perform the vajra binding,
So that the deities are pleased.
Mother, sister, or daughter,
If one wishes to worship her,
Through the rite of wisdom and means
She should be shown, without conceptual thought.
The most supreme accomplishment of that
Will be attained; of this there is no doubt.
Having taken the leftover torma,
One should go to a great wilderness and cast it away,
Reciting the mantra
kṣmīṃ ucchiṣṭa kṣetāpā lāya svāhā.
If the yogin who performs it well in this way
Sees them again,
Then, having fully understood them thus,
These are the supreme signs for the yogin.
She whose face has a blazing radiance,
Round, smooth, and beautiful,
With long eyebrows: know that she
Is born of the family of Amitābha.
To her one shows the lotus mudrā;
The tortoise mudrā is her reply.
With full lips and long eyes,
Yellow in complexion, she captivates the mind;
On her forehead are three lines
Reaching up to the hairline.
She listens intently

To tales of those who die in battle.
Having seen one who listens like this,
One should show the spear mudrā.
Bending her left leg,
She clearly shows that she is dancing;
Having turned her left hand around,
She shows the mudrā in reply.
She delights in multicolored clothes,
And is born of the family of Ratnasambhava.
Black in complexion and black in clothing,
Her hair coiled and bound with silk,
With the shape of a bow on her forehead:
When one sees such a sign,
Her mind ever restless,
She is renowned as a mātṛkā.
One should show the bell mudrā;
She shows the mudrā with her left hand.
Know her to be born of the family of Akṣobhya.
The supreme one who comes and goes by night,
Short, big-bellied, and white in complexion,
With thick thighs and very beautiful,
Should be known as an earth-goer;
The conch mudrā is her reply.
She is born of the family of Vairocana.
With wide eyes and thick lashes,
All her limbs covered with fine hair,
Dusky blue, with red eyes,
Slender limbs and long arms:
She is renowned as a ḍākinī,
Born of the family of Amoghasiddhi.
When one clearly sees such a one,
There is the banner mudrā,
And the left-hand mudrā is her reply.
Having come to know them thus with effort,
The wise one, going forth at night,
Should have no fear of them at all,
For they are to be worshiped.

This concludes the sixty-second chapter, on the worship of the feast gathering and mingling with the yoginīs, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.

Then:
"Further, I shall explain; listen!
As for the explanation of the secret words:
In the vajra sites and the other sites,
The yoginīs arisen from all the families
Hold the commitment of gathering at night.
Words such as these,
And secrets of that kind,
I shall explain; listen with faith!

This concludes the sixty-third chapter, explaining the secret words, from the Great Yoga Tantra, the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland.

Then:
"Further, I shall explain; listen!
As for the maṇḍala of body, speech, and mind:
The body abides in the head,
Where the thirty-two drops of the mind of awakening descend.
Since these are distinguished one by one,
It is called the wheel of the body.
Through the divisions of the letters of the alphabet,
It is known as abiding in speech.
Through the divisions of the imprints of attachment and the rest,
It is known as the wheel of the mind.
As for the explanation of body, speech, and mind,
Great being, listen!
In the body of the vajra master
The bodies of the victors abide in order.
First, Kāyavajra
Rightly abides in the aggregate of form.
Next, Gaganavajra
Abides in the aggregate of feeling.
The Blessed Vāgvajra
Abides in the aggregate of perception.
Karmavajra
Abides in the aggregate of formations.
The Blessed Cittavajra
Rightly abides in the aggregate of consciousness.
Further, in its earth element, the flesh and the rest,
The Blessed Mother Locanā abides.
In the water element, the blood and the rest,
The Blessed Mother Māmakī abides.
In the fire element, warmth and the rest,
The Blessed Mother Pāṇḍaravāsinī abides.
In the wind element, movement and the rest,

The Blessed Mother Tārā abides.
In its two eye faculties
Is the Tathāgata Kṣitigarbha.
In its two ear faculties
Is the Sugata Vajrapāṇi.
In its two nostrils
Is the Tathāgata Gaganagañja.
The Tathāgata Lokeśvara
Abides in its tongue faculty.
In its mental faculty
The Tathāgata Mañjughoṣa abides.
In the mass that is the nature of the four elements,
Which is imagined to be the body,
The Tathāgata Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin
Abides.
In all the joints of the body
Is the Tathāgata Samantabhadra.
In all the sinews of the body
Is the Tathāgata Maitreya.
At the root of the right arm
Is the Tathāgata Yamāri.
At the root of the left arm
Is the Tathāgata Aparājita.
The one who abides in the lotus of the mouth
Is the Tathāgata Hayagrīva.

The one who abides in the secret place
Is the Tathāgata Amṛtakuṇḍalin.
The one who abides in the right shoulder
Is the Tathāgata Acala.
The one who abides in the left shoulder
Is the Tathāgata Ṭakkirāja.
The one who abides in the right knee
Is the Tathāgata Nīladaṇḍa.
The one who abides in the left knee
Is the Tathāgata Mahābala.
The one who abides on the crown of one's own head

Is the Tathāgata Cakravartin.
The one who abides beneath the feet
Is the Tathāgata Sumbharāja.
Here, throughout this very body,
All the tathāgatas abide.
It is declared to be the body maṇḍala,
The body of Vajrasattva himself.
Through the divisions of Vajrasattva,
These perfect buddhas, all without remainder,
Are, without exception, the body of the Buddha.
In this very life the yogin
Swiftly attains nirvāṇa.
He is the one who wholly bestows your virtue;
Therefore, in the body of the vajra master
All the Victors abide.
O Amoghadarśin,
Great being, in times to come,
Therefore, with the offering articles of the gods
Of all beings, strive earnestly to serve the guru.
Then Amoghadarśin together with
The bodhisattvas of great renown,
Joyful and delighted, made prostrations
And addressed the Blessed One
On how the maṇḍalas of speech and mind abide.
Having said, "Excellent!"
The Blessed One spoke thus:
"a ā i ī u ū and ṛ ṝ ḷ ḹ e ai and
o au aṃ aḥ are called the vowels.
The groups ka ca ṭa ta pa,
ya ra la va śa ṣa sa,
And ha: know these as the speech maṇḍala.
All speech is fully endowed with emanation.
Attachment and the other habitual tendencies, too,
Are twenty-eight in number.
The mind maṇḍala, well elaborated,
Should be understood from the Glorious Supreme.

Thus, for the yogins of the Assembly,
The three vajras are the supreme pledge.
This supremely wondrous elaboration
Is truly known by the lord of practitioners."

This concludes the sixty-fourth chapter, explaining the maṇḍalas of body, speech, and mind, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, a Great Yoga Tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One said:
"The characteristics, all summarized,
Of the Buddha, the sacred Dharma, the Saṅgha,
The guru, the teacher, the master,
The vajra holder, and the disciple, are these.
The stainless mind becomes the Buddha.
The Dharma is truly spoken in speech.
The body is called the Saṅgha,
The abode of the host of bodhisattvas.
The Buddha is explained as the syllable hūṃ.
Speech is declared to be the syllable āḥ.
What is called the Saṅgha is the syllable oṃ,
Whose nature radiates in all directions.
The Buddha becomes the avadhūtī.
The Dharma is declared to be the lalanā.
The Saṅgha is declared to be the rasanā.
This is the characteristic of the three.
The formless realm becomes the Buddha,
The form realm the Dharma,
And likewise the desire realm the Saṅgha.
Thus is the supreme characteristic of the three realms.
Apart from one's own life force, which has become the essence,
There is nothing else in the three realms.
The three realms of illusion and wind
Are seen as if dreaming a dream.
Suchness, the nature of the three realms,
Will swiftly be seen as one alone.
Having been blessed, suchness
And accomplishment will swiftly be attained.

The Buddha is the enjoyment body,
The sacred Dharma is the Dharma body,
And the Saṅgha becomes the emanation body.
That is the nature of the three bodies.
Appearance is the form of the Buddha.
The Dharma is the attainment of appearance.
The Saṅgha becomes the increase of appearance.
That is the characteristic of the three appearances.
One who is trained in the rites of pacifying and the rest,
Who knows the mantras and the great yogas,
And has learned to perform the twenty ritual procedures,
Is designated a guru.
One who is pure in moral discipline and practices giving,
Supremely endowed with patience and diligence,
Devoted to meditation day and night,
Endowed with wisdom and skilled in the arts,
With the qualities a guru has in general,
Is called a glorious master.
One who inwardly delights in the Secret Assembly,
While outwardly conducting himself as a śrāvaka,
And by such a sequence of instructions
Trains the disciples,
Is declared to be the Teacher.
One who does just as he has been told,
Who learns, and also causes others to learn,
The ritual procedures, the host of maṇḍalas,
The activities of the ultimate meaning,
And again the three appearances,
And the conduct of supreme yoga,
Is called a master.

One who has fully understood the ten principles,
Who knows the activities of the maṇḍala and the rest,
Who is able to care for disciples,
And who confers the secret empowerment,
Truly endowed with wisdom and compassion,
Fearless in the instructions of the tantras,

Truly endowed with depth and vastness,
A supreme second Vajrasattva,
Skilled in subduing and in benefiting,
Is explained to be a Vajradhara.
One who has faith and is devoted to the guru,
Who always abides in virtuous action,
Without duplicity and without deceit,
Who has utterly abandoned wicked thoughts,
Who has heard much of the scriptures,
Who has abandoned killing and harming,
Who, with the resolve to deliver sentient beings,
Is truly endowed with diligence in every way,
Truly endowed with these and other qualities,
And of great faith, is a good disciple.
That in which the inseparability of emptiness and compassion,
That very reality, is to be known with certainty;
The unsurpassed, supreme and excellent conduct;
The stages of mantra and yoga and the rest;
The complete purity of the five wisdoms;
The very nature of the five buddhas;
The fivefold manifest awakening;
The characteristics of the three appearances;
The meditation on the three bodies,
The Dharma body, the enjoyment body, and the emanation body;
The characteristics of the qualities of great bliss;
The divisions of joy and the others;
Likewise the sentiments, the erotic and the rest;
Yoga, subsequent yoga,
Intense yoga, and great yoga;
The first union, in brief;
Likewise the supreme king of maṇḍalas;
The supreme king of actions, the yoga;
Entering, abiding, and arising;
The yoga of the completion stage;
The two blisses, the two emergences of breath, and the rest:
The tantra in which these are explained at length
Is declared to be a great yoga tantra.

What qualities befit the tantra?
One is said to be the support and the vessel
Of the supreme qualities, learning and the rest,
And to be adorned with all the marks.
Just as the milk of a lioness
Should not be placed in an earthen vessel,
So too the great yoga tantra
Should not be given to those who are not vessels.
The disciple dies in that very instant,
And is ruined in this life and the next.
If one teaches the instructions to one who is not a vessel,
The master's accomplishment will decline.

This concludes the sixty-fifth chapter, the extensive words on the characteristics of the Buddha, the sacred Dharma, the Saṅgha, and the rest, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, a Great Yoga Tantra.

Then the Blessed Vajra One said:
"The conduct of the disciple's duties,
And also the activities of pacifying and the rest,
Through the stages of mantra and yoga, are these.
Wearing shoes, a parasol, or a turban,
Chewing tooth sticks and the like,
Throwing away lumps of snot, spittle and the like,
Stretching out one's legs,
Looking elsewhere, speaking insolently,
Being proud of one's wealth, clinging to self,
Putting on ornaments and the like,
Speaking heedlessly,
Treading on the guru's shadow:
This host of faults and others like them
Should be entirely abandoned in the guru's presence.
With awe, joining the palms,
Receiving his commands as a seal upon one's crown,
Having pledged to offer all one possesses,
With modesty and with lowered face,
The disciple should remain in the guru's presence.

If they wish for the supreme accomplishment,
Disciples in the guru's presence
Are said to conduct themselves in this and similar ways.
The pledges and vows explained earlier:
These are the conduct of the disciple.
His activities of pacifying and the rest
Are fit to be taught by the guru;
I shall explain them here in brief.
The characteristics of the common rites are these.
Pacifying and increasing, both of these,
Should be performed in the waxing fortnight of the moon.
The actions of subjugation and of fierce rites
Should be undertaken in the waning fortnight of the moon.
Facing north for pacifying,
And likewise facing east for increasing;
For fierce actions, toward the south;
For the action of subjugation, face west.
For killing itself, the direction of fire;
For causing enmity, toward Nairṛti;
For driving out from one's place, the direction of the wind;
For paralyzing, the direction of Īśāna.
The color of pacifying is white;
For increasing, yellow should be used;
For subjugating and summoning, red;
The color black is for killing.
With a mind of loving-kindness for pacifying,
With a mind of joy for increasing,
With a mind of passion for subjugation,
With a mind of wrath, killing.
Pacifying is mostly performed at dawn;
Likewise increasing is performed in the morning;
The actions of subjugation and of fierce rites
Are at midday and at midnight.
Thus it has been correctly explained as is fitting.
By the characteristics taught in the mantra tantras,
The eight accomplishments, pacifying and the rest,
The wise should accomplish according to the rite."

This concludes the sixty-sixth chapter, showing the complete purity of the disciple's conduct and the results of the actions of pacifying and the rest, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, a Great Yoga Tantra.

Then, further, I shall explain: listen.
The characteristics of wrathful recitation,
By which the yogin will attain
The eight accomplishments, of this there is no doubt.
Recitation with a wrathful mind
Is called wrathful recitation.
Or else, through the practice of reciting
The mantras of the wrathful kings,
Know that as wrathful recitation.
It bestows the fruit of the eight accomplishments.
In a terrifying charnel ground,
A place that terrifies even the terrifying,
Take a human skull cup stained with blood,
One bearing the mark of being without a wound.
Mixing human semen with menstrual blood,
This is what is to be drawn:
Upon it, the form of the one to be subdued,
Clear, terrified, and frightened.
Pressing it down with the left leg extended,
For seven days, at the three times of day,
With this mantra of Yamāri
One should recite as the cause of accomplishment:
namaḥ smanta kāya vākcitta vajrāṇāṃ oṃ kha kha khāhi khāhi sarva duṣṭa satva damka asi musala paraśu pāśa hasta khaḍga vāmatara cani haṣṭha catur mukha catur bhuja ṣaḍa caraṇa āgaccha āgaccha sarva duṣṭa prāṇa apahariṇe mahā vighanāṃ ghātaka vikṛha ānan sarva bhūta bhayaṃ kara aṭṭa aṭṭa hāsa nādine vyāghra carmā nivāsana kuru kuru sarva karmāṇi cchinda cchinda sarva mantrān bhindha bhindha para mudrān a ākarṣaya ākarṣaya sarva bhūtāna matha matha niramatha niramatha sarva duṣṭāna praveśaya praveśaya maṇḍal madhye vaivaśvata jīvita antakara kuru kuru hana hana daha daha paca paca māvilamba māvilamba samaya manusmara hūṃ hūṃ tarjaya bhegānāṃ phaṭ phaṭ sphoṭaya sphoṭaya kāra kāra sarvāśa paripūrāya he he bhagavān kiñjirāyasin namaḥ sarvārtha sādhaya hūṃ phaṭ svāhā
This first wrathful recitation

Is supreme for subjugating and summoning.
Now I shall fully explain expulsion.
For the second wrathful recitation as well,
Mustard seed, salt, mustard oil,
Poison, and the juice of datura
Are mixed with blood from the index finger,
And on a cloth from the charnel ground
One should draw the supreme wind maṇḍala,
Shaped like a half moon.
Its two sides should be marked with vajras.
In its center write the name of the one to be subdued,
And standing with the left leg extended,
One should fully recite this mantra.
Having summoned the name of the one to be subdued, as before,
At the time of midnight,
One should practice for seven days in all,
And expulsion too will be accomplished:
namaḥ smanta kāla vākcitta vajrāṇāṃ namo vajra krodhāya mavādaṃṣṭotakaṭabhairavāya asi musala varśu pāśa hastāya oṃ amṛta kuṇḍali kha kha khāhi khāhi tiṣṭha tiṣṭha bandha bandha hana hana daha daha garja garja sphoṭa sphoṭa visphoṭaya visphoṭaya sarva vighanāṃ vināyakānmahāgaṇapati jīvitāntikarāya hūṃ phaṭ svāhā
This mantra is employed
For the purpose of expelling harmful beings.
The action of pacifying is now to be explained.
By reciting the third wrathful one,
Named Aparājita,
One pacifies fire, snakes, and the like.
On the two hands are two suns;
Upon them one should meditate on two syllables hūṃ.
With both hands one strikes
The head of the one to be accomplished, and, having entered it,
One should imagine that those two
Burn the bhūtas in the heart of the one to be accomplished.
The mantra of this one, who terrifies fire and bhūtas,
I shall now explain:
namaḥ smanta kāya vākcitta vajrāṇāṃ oṃ aparājītiriji hūṃ phaṭ

Free so-and-so from the seizing spirits of the bhūtas!
dhṝḥ
With the mantra that dispels poison,
The fourth, I shall explain: listen to it.
By reciting the wrathful Hayagrīva,
Truly incomparable and supreme,
One meditates on the one to be accomplished as the threefold stacked being.
In the heart, abiding on a moon, is the wisdom mind;
One should imagine supremely
That its light rays completely fill
The body of the one to be accomplished.
By that intense blazing, the poison is overcome.
Then, imagining the right hand
Adorned with a moon and haṃ,
One places white syllables on the fingers.
This is to be done for the practitioner.
One places hūṃ dhṝḥ ji kṣīṃ sā dha:
This accomplishes all actions.
Beginning from the head of the one to be accomplished,
One meditates down to the tips of the feet
On a stream of water, uninterrupted,
Driving the poison downward by stages.
Here this mantra should be recited;
It is called Hayagrīva:
namaḥ smanta kāya vākcitta vajrāṇāṃ oṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ tarūla virūla sarva viṣa ghātaka taka jvālita visphuliṅga aṭṭāṭṭa hāsa nāda sahīta kasari saho vataṃ ad deva vajra khura ghatana cata pasudha tala niśvāsa maruta ut kṣipta dharaṇi dhara piṣana aṭṭa hāsa aparimitā bala parākrama ārya gaṇa bhīta buddha buddha hayagrīva kha kha cchinda cchinda āveśaya sarva graheṣva pratihato bhava vajra daṃṣṭri kiñci rāyasi idaṃ duṣṭa grahaṃ daṃṣṭa sarvvaṃ vā dhuna dhuna mātha mātha marda marda buddha dharma radha buddha dharma saṃgha anujñāna karyaṃ kuru svāhā
Into the mantra one inserts the words: "Dispel the poison and the rest from so-and-so! hūṃ"
Following the root tantra,
The rest should be understood in detail.

This concludes the sixty-seventh chapter, on wrathful recitation and the eight accomplishments, pacifying and the rest, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, a Great Yoga Tantra.

Then, further, I shall explain
The summary of all accomplishments,
The supreme wisdom of the buddhas,
The characteristics of accomplishment and the rest.
Kṣitigarbha, Vajrapāṇi,
Mañjuśrī, Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin,
And Maitreya: these five,
Interwoven with the three syllables,
Bless the eyes, the ears, the mind, and the body,
And the wheels of the channels.
The three of the night are just like the day.
One thereby attains the five superknowledges.
Through the fourth empowerment,
The wise one will see reality itself.
Appearance becomes the portion of the night;
The day is the increase of appearance;
Twilight is the attainment of appearance.

Such are the characteristics of appearance and the rest.
That which is not night, not twilight, and not day
Abandons the winds of conceptual thought.
That is the instantaneous manifest awakening;
Its characteristic is declared to be momentary.
Whether arising at the end or arising at the beginning,
Or, though not arising in the middle, arising in the middle,
Or, though not an end, arising at the end,
That is declared to be the single instant of the universally empty.
That in which there is no going and no coming,
No exhaustion and no increase, neither entity nor non-entity,
Which has a wondrous form and yet is not wondrous,
Which neither comes to abide nor swiftly goes,
Which is free from all the conventions of existence and non-existence,
Which is not the form of merit and not the form of evil,
Not the self of merit or of evil, but supreme:
That is declared to be the single instant of the universally empty.

Manifest awakening in a single instant:
This characteristic is the supreme instant.
By holding the awakening mind at the tip of the vajra,
There is stability of the body.
Through that, by thoroughly applying
The reality of wind to the reality of the awakening mind,
And skillfully drawing it upward,
One will be free from aging, without a doubt.
Knowing hūṃ hoḥ in their order,
One interweaves them while holding upward.
The five nectars explained earlier:
This is declared to be the elixir.
Through this very thing one accomplishes;
Having turned iron into gold,
One attains the great accomplishment of the vajra seal
Through union.
The practice of the generation stage,
And likewise the completion stage too:
That in which these two become one
Is explained to be union.
Saṃsāra and nirvāṇa:
Through abandoning these two conceptions,
That in which things become one
Is what is called union.
The conventional and the ultimate,
Free from the two conceptions:
That in which they are truly mingled
Is explained to be union.
Through the thorough application of vajra recitation,
Having understood the characteristics of the winds,
One cuts off the winds of conceptual thought
And attains the focus on the mind.
Through the stage of self-blessing as well,
One attains the eight accomplishments.
Knowing the divisions of appearance and the rest,
One attains the stage of manifest awakening.
For one who abides in the stage of union,

The summary of all accomplishments
Will be accomplished in this very life
By the yogin, without a doubt.
The great accomplishment of the great seal,
Through the concentration of union,
Having entered nonconceptuality,
Is attained; of this there is no doubt.
The body becomes the celestial palace,
Truly relied upon by all the buddhas.
By the division of front and back,
And right and left, of its four corners,
And by the division of the doors above and below,
It is explained as having four doors.
By the shape of the tip of the nose, fourfold,
The four portals are to be described.
The nets are truly explained as the tendons;
What have become the sinews are the half nets.
The portions are the half moons,
And the vase is truly known as the belly.
The shins, thighs, upper arms, and forearms
Are truly explained as the eight pillars.
The eye consciousness is the mirror and the rest;
The consciousness of sound is the music;
The consciousness of the nose is the garland of flowers;
The jeweled parapet is the consciousness of the tongue;
The consciousness of the body is the cloth banners;
And the consciousness of the mind is the deer.
The eye is the emblem of the wheel;
The ears, all around, are the vajras;
The nose is explained as the victory banner;
The tongue is declared to be the bell;
The yak-tail whisks and the rest, completely pure,
Are explained to be the collection of the body.
The mind is declared to be the central lotus,
Truly relied upon by the winds of conceptual thought.
The five wisdoms, completely pure,
Are truly declared to be the five lines.

The five aggregates are the five purities;
The five pure colors are thus distinguished.
One should meditate on these within the celestial palace;
This should be known as the first union.
The five manifest awakenings,
The divisions of the families, and their own essence:
These are declared to abide externally;
This is the complete purity of the maṇḍala.
The nature of the four elements:
To summarize the aggregate of form,
The aggregates of form,
And the eye consciousness, which is Kṣitigarbha,
Are explained externally as Rūpavajrā.
Maitreya abides in the midst of the sinews.
Likewise the two wrathful kings
Are in the corner between east and south.
This is explained as the mirror-like wisdom,
The very complete purity of Vairocana.
Pleasure, suffering, fear, and weariness
Are held to be the characteristics of feeling.
Feeling is the water element,
Externally it is Śabdavajrā,
And the ear is explained as Vajrapāṇi.
The family is the very mingling of the two.
Gandhavajrā becomes the external;
The consciousness of the nose is Ākāśagarbha;
The two wrathful ones are to be recognized;
This is equality and Ratnasambhava.
Perception, of entities, non-entities and the rest,
Has the characteristic of recollecting what came before.
The aggregate of perception is the fire element,
Externally Gandhavajrā,
And the consciousness of the tongue is Lokanātha.
Likewise the two wrathful kings.
That is the discriminating wisdom,
Arisen from the family of Amitābha.
Through virtuous and nonvirtuous actions,

Formations have the characteristic of habitual tendencies.
The aggregate of formations is the wind element,
Externally Rasavajrā,
And the consciousness of the body is Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin.
Samantabhadra abides in the midst of the joints.
Likewise the two wrathful kings.
This is the wisdom of accomplishing activities,
Arisen from the family of Amoghasiddhi.
The nature of all things,
Whose characteristic is wisdom, is declared to be consciousness.
Consciousness is the space element,
And the mental consciousness is Mañjuvajra.
Likewise the two wrathful kings.
This is the utterly pure expanse of phenomena,
Arisen from the family of Akṣobhya.
The five manifest awakenings:
These abide within the celestial palace.
Through the divisions of the elements
I shall explain them in their proper order.
Head hair, bones, feces, spittle, and heart:
Earth is the nature of Vairocana.
Body hair, pus, the parts near the heart,
And nails are known as the water element;
They should be known as the support of the family
Whose nature is Ratnasambhava.
Teeth, skin, flesh, and heart
Are declared to be the fire element;
They should be known as the nature of Amitābha
And the division of his family.
Sinews, flesh, the ribs and sides, and heart:
Wind is Amoghasiddhi.

Dirt, sinews, bile, and heart
Are known as the space element,
Which is the nature of Akṣobhya;
And the heart is called the five consciousnesses.
In each of these, individually,

Know the emanation of five aspects.
The five aggregates of the Tathāgata,
The inner nature, are divided into substances:
Flesh, channels, sinews, lumps of flesh,
The brain and the brain membrane,
Bones, marrow, and the sheaths,
Kidneys, heart, and belly,
Lungs, spleen, and urine,
Feces, stomach, and intestines,
Fat, lymph, and pus,
Blood, bile, and phlegm,
Saliva and mucus, head hair and beard,
Nails, body hair, and skin,
Hands, feet, eyes, the limbs and the rest,
And what are called the hips and upper arms:
These should be known in their order.
Since the celestial palace is completely pure,
The division of the sacred sites within it
I shall explain in brief.
Pullīra is known as the head;
The crown of the head is Jālandhara;
At the right ear is Oḍiyāna;
The back of the crown is Arbuda;
Godāvarī is the left ear;
Rāmeśvara is between the eyebrows;
The two eyes are Devīkoṭa;
Mālava is the roots of the shoulders;
Kāmarūpa is the two armpits;
Oḍra is known as the two breasts;
Kosala is known as the navel;
Triśakuni is the root of the nose;
The lotus of the mouth is Kaliṅga;
The throat is declared to be Lampāka;
The heart should be known as Kāñcī;
Himālaya is known as the genital region;
The sexual organ is Gṛhadevatā;
Pretapurī is the anus;

The two thighs are Suvarṇadvīpa;
Saurāṣṭra is the two calves;
The insteps are the land of Sindhu;
The toes are Nagara;
The two big toes are known as Maru;
Kulutā is the soles of the feet.
Thus the purity of the sacred sites,
And the very purity of the ten grounds,
Should be known as endowed with reality.
Through dissolution, lordship over enjoyment,
Entry, and the rest, in their particulars,
One gradually becomes Vajrasattva himself.
Then, further, I shall fully explain
The supreme characteristics of the winds.
The life wind abides in the heart;
It is born from the family of Akṣobhya's division.
The downward-clearing wind, which abides in the genital region,
Is born of Ratnasambhava's division.
The upward-moving wind abides in the throat;
It is the nature of Amitābha.
The fire-accompanying wind abides in the navel;
It is the nature of Amoghasiddhi.
The pervading wind abides in all the limbs;
It is blessed by Vairocana.
From the stream through the doors of the senses,
This stream of life and exertion,
Which moves at all times,
Is explained to be what is called life.
Breath, wind, feces,
And likewise semen and the rest:
This leading downward is the downward-clearing wind;
The yogin should always know it.
Laughing, eating, belching,
Drinking, and sucking:
That which always abides evenly
Is declared to be what is called the evenly abiding.
Going upward and gathering in,

Eating, tasting, and the rest,
Knowing, and coming together:
These should be known as the actions of the upward-moving wind.
Pervading and holding,
Likewise going and returning, and the rest:
Because it pervades all the joints,
It is explained to be called the pervading.
Having explained the characteristics of the winds,
Next their dangers are declared.
As before, releasing, holding, and the rest
Harm one another;
One harms another.
By their nature of gaining strength,
One comes to dissolve into another.
Just as the moon is seized by Rāhu,
The winds gradually decline,
And, as before, higher and higher,
Dissolve into their own nature;
Then releasing and holding proceed again.
Just as what is burned by fire
Comes to dissolve into non-entity and causelessness,
So again the life wind arises.
The karmic winds are manifold;
Together with consciousness
They again abide in the three worlds.
From that comes action, and from that, birth;
From that, attachment and the rest, and habitual tendencies;
From that, again, death and birth:
Thus it is like turning a wheel.
As before, through vajra recitation and the rest,
It will gradually be separated.
Then all the great beings,
With the eye-salve stick of reality,
Removed the blindness of all delusion,
And saw true reality itself.
Then, prostrating again and again,
With tearful eyes, to the Blessed One,

They circumambulated him three times
And truly praised Vajradhara:
"How wonderful! All-pervading one, Lord of all,
You have attained equality with space.
How wonderful! You teach the three pledges, reality itself,
Supreme and marvelous.
Fully liberated from the three realms,
Very essence of the expanse of phenomena,
Unstained by desires,
Objectless one, homage to you!
Not relying on the aggregates,
The elements, and the sense sources,
Liberated from existence and from nirvāṇa,
Objectless one, we bow to you and praise you!
Thus, like space, without location,
Without elaboration and without stain,
Possessing a mind equal to space,
Objectless one, we bow to you and praise you!"
Then the body of the Blessed One
Became Trailokyavijaya, Victor over the Three Worlds.
He shook these three worlds,
And, having vanquished the māras,
Was victorious over the gods of the three worlds.
Then the ten wrathful ones, all around,
Will be given this command
By the chief, Trailokyavijaya:
"In whatever region of the earth
This great yoga pledge tantra,
Declared in the Vajra Garland,
Is practiced at all times,
There, continually, by their own power,
The ten wrathful ones shall always,
With ritual daggers against all obstructors,
Protect that land and its surroundings;
And with each one's own garland mantra,
Torma should be offered to them."
In order to care for sentient beings,

Displaying manifold emanations,
Vajrasattva, at all times,
Will abide by day and by night.

This concludes the sixty-eighth chapter, the summary of all accomplishments, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, a Great Yoga Tantra.

This completes the Secret Analysis of the Essence of All Tantras, from the Manifest Realization of the Glorious Vajra Garland, a Great Yoga Tantra.

It was translated, edited, and finalized at the temple of Tholing, the Heart Commitment, Essence of the Earth, Glorious Incomparable and Spontaneously Accomplished, by the Indian preceptor Sujanaśrījñāna and the great translator-editor, the divine ruler of Tibet, the lama and monk Zhiwa Ö.

Translator's Notes

• Several bodhisattva names could not be identified with confidence in Sanskrit and are given in English: Sky Goer, Sky Expanse, Sky Moon, Sky Crown, Wholly Liberated by the Boundaries, Vajra Crown, Nonconceptual Crown, Nonconceptual Sound, Nonconceptual Dharma and Nonconceptual Samaya. The "vajra path" is the tantric term for the channel through which the light (and in yogic practice the vital essence) travels.
• In the passage on the consort, the subject of "they themselves cast off forms free of passion" is not named; it is taken to be the assembled bodhisattvas, each embracing his own consort, which fits "each" and the following "seeing themselves once again in such forms." The moods of grace and the rest are the aesthetic sentiments (rasas), beginning with the erotic.
• In the closing verses Vajrapāṇi, the questioner, is addressed as Vajrasattva, as is common in this literature; the Lord's earlier epithet "Vajrasattva, guru of beings" is likewise addressed to the Blessed One. "Full Realization" renders mngon par rtogs pa (abhisambodhi) as it stands in the chapter colophon and verse, though the opening title has mngon par brjod pa (abhidhāna). Several terse question lines (for instance "the three tips of the nose," "the lord of enjoyment") are rendered literally; their technical sense is given in the answers later in the tantra.
• In the verses on the consort, ltung ba is taken in its tantric sense of "that which has fallen," the descended fluid of union, rather than "transgression." The pairing sbom po tha ltag is understood as thumb and ring finger, the fingers used for tasting the substance in parallel tantric passages; this identification is not fully certain. The lines "having brought the mantra disciple to understanding … the meaning as it is serves accomplishment" are elliptical in the Tibetan and are rendered closely. "The all-empty" renders thams cad stong pa (sarvaśūnya), a technical term of the completion stage.
• Most of the hundred and eight wind names are Tibetan renderings of Sanskrit names that cannot be securely identified; they are given in literal English, with a few kept as transcribed (Jaśa, Cuta, Kamboja, Raga, Udumbara). Some are especially uncertain: sbra ma ("Tent"), sdig pa ("Scorpion", possibly "Sin"), g.yon can sten ("Left-Leaning"), gun sel ("Winter-Dispeller", reading dgun sel), sna 'gyur gnas ("Dweller in the Turning Nose"), and khrung khrung ("the crane") in the list of thoughts. The listed items are not arranged here into an exact count of one hundred and eight; the Tibetan list is translated as it stands.

• In the line "Free of error and confusion," the Tibetan reads 'brel ("connected with"), which contradicts the surrounding list of what emptiness is free of; it is taken as a slip for bral ("free of"). "Son of Manu and child of Manu" renders shed las skyes and shed bu (Skt. manuja, mānava), standard terms in lists of views of a self.
• The names of the five channels (Vigor, Expansion, Intoxication, Drink, Friend; and Moon Portion, Nose, Service, Dewlap, Liver) are given literally, as their Sanskrit forms cannot be securely identified. The lines on the three knots ("Because by these the supreme one is overcome") are terse; the subject is taken to be the wisdom wind in the heart. The piece ends mid-sentence; the simile continues in the next piece.
• The coded instructions for "extracting" the mantra describe two syllables: ha with the sixth vowel ū plus the final nasal (hūṃ), and ha with the ninth vowel o plus the visarga (hoḥ), the latter named explicitly in chapter seven. Vajrapāṇi's request ("Blessed One, the king...") is elliptical in the Tibetan; it is rendered as an exclamatory appeal rather than supplied with an added verb. "Sets the nose in line with the tongue" renders the literal "places the nose at the measure of the tongue"; the intended posture point is uncertain. In chapter seven, "father and mother of these creators" and "without even peace" render obscure lines literally. The chapter colophons call the work the Manifest Awakening (mngon par rtogs pa), whereas the opening title reads Abhidhāna (mngon par brjod pa); translated as written.
• Viramānanda (joy of cessation) renders both bral dga' and dga' bral in chapter eight. In chapter nine, the four lines on entering the samaya ("Entering the midst of the samaya when aroused...") are obscure and rendered literally; skyed na may stand for skyes na. Also in chapter nine, "the painting for meditation" takes bsam gtan ras ris as a single item. In chapter ten, the line ending ye shes chen po'i me yis min makes little sense with min ("is not"); it is read as smin ("cooked, ripened"). The two lines beginning "From the skull at the crown of the head" are elliptical and rendered literally.
• The figures for the breath are as the text gives them: twenty-one thousand six hundred breaths in a day and night, and two thousand seven hundred for each of eight watches. The phrase rendered "the stage of alternating the locations" reads sbol pa'i sa, which is obscure; it is taken as a slip for spel ba ("alternating"). In chapter eleven the Tibetan has Vajrasattva questioning the Teacher, and the reply is attributed to the Vajrin; this is rendered as written.
• The opening lines of this piece continue a sentence begun in the previous piece and are elliptical; they are rendered closely. The four "protectors" (Lotus, Karma, Jewel, Vajra) are the lords of the buddha families, linked here with the four elemental maṇḍalas; Mahendra is the standard name of the earth maṇḍala. The lines on "holding in the vajrī" and being "filled by the parts of the five spaces" give a gloss on the two halves of the name Vajrasattva.
• The lines on the wisdom of the śrāvakas and the "rhinoceros" (the solitary buddha) are elliptical and rendered literally. In "nor by stopping the winds in meditative concentration," bgegs pa (obstructor) is read as 'gegs pa ("to stop, block"). The six long lines near the opening are in a longer meter and are kept as single lines.
• "Through the distinctions of the snake and the rest" renders the Tibetan literally; the reference is unclear and may concern the classification of breath or mantra practice. The three seed syllables are given by the letter-extraction code: the first letter with the fifth vowel and the end of the last class yields oṃ (body); the first letter doubled with the sibilant part yields āḥ (speech); the ūṣma letter with the sixth vowel and the final nasal yields hūṃ (mind). The colophon reads "Clear Realization" (mngon par rtogs pa) where the title elsewhere reads "Discourse" (mngon par brjod pa); translated as written. "The glory of the clouds" may be the name of a source text, but this could not be identified with confidence. The time units in the final section (nāḍikā, daṇḍa, caṣa, tatkṣaṇa and the rest) are given as the Tibetan states their relations, which are not wholly consistent with standard Indian reckoning.

• The opening lines ("abides in bliss in the three", "the dreadful collapse") are rendered literally; their reference is unclear. "The third letter of the second class" yields the syllable ja when joined with its vowel. "Yoṣirak" transcribes an obscure term in the Tibetan (yo ṣi rag), perhaps from Sanskrit yoṣit, "woman", plus a further element, possibly rakta, "blood"; its meaning is uncertain. "Nyiga" (nyi dga') is an unidentified ingredient and is given in phonetics. "Leprosy breaking out in marks" could also be read as leprosy breaking out on the private parts. As in the previous chapter, the colophon reads "Clear Realization" (mngon par rtogs pa).
• The names of the individual channels are Tibetan renderings of Sanskrit names that could not be identified with confidence; they are translated by meaning, and Kuśa, Śabi and Kisring are given as they appear. The word rendered "pride" in many channel names (rgyags pa) can also mean intoxication or nourishment. The Tibetan gives the total as a hundred and thirty-one, although the figures listed for the six wheels add up to a hundred and twenty-nine, and the list for the wheel of enjoyment yields fifteen names where sixteen are stated; both are translated as they stand. "The collection of a hundred thousand" ('bum sde) presumably refers to an extensive root tantra.
• The syllables listed in the nineteenth chapter are Sanskrit terms for the acts of love-play (embracing, kissing, sucking, grasping the breasts, biting and so on), given in transliteration as the Tibetan spells them; only the first two are glossed. na li renders Sanskrit nāḍī, channel, and śu kra śukra, semen. In that chapter the third and fourth moments are called "without aspect" and "free of aspect", whereas the list just before names them crushing and free of characteristics; translated as written. In the last line of the passage the Tibetan reads "the moment of conceptuality" (rnam rtog); since the preceding lines say conceptuality is destroyed and the scheme requires the moment of crushing (rnam 'joms), the latter reading has been translated.
• la la nā, ra sa nā and a ba dhū tī are the names of the left, right and central channels (lalanā, rasanā, avadhūtī). In the twenty-second chapter the Tibetan writes āḥ where the analysis of oṃ into a, u and ma would lead one to expect the syllable a; it is translated as written. "Not through cessation" may refer to stopping the breath. The correlation of the syllables with the wheels and realms is given as the Tibetan states it.
• "The crane of the channel through which taste descends" renders □□□□□□□□□ ("crane") as written; its sense in this yogic context is obscure, and the line's connection to "the sour" is uncertain. In "trembles, sweats," the text reads □□□□ ("dust"); the evident reading in a list of bodily signs with trembling and horripilation is □□□□ ("sweat"). In "are severed and depart," the text reads □□□ ("with"); it is taken as □□□ ("severed"), matching the following lines on cutting the winds. The colophon calls the text "Manifest Realization" (mngon par rtogs pa) where the title has "Discourse" (mngon par brjod pa); translated as written.
• In the list of body sites for the ten wrathful deities, the first item (rje ngar) is obscure and is rendered "the shins," and thal gong is taken as "the kneecaps"; both are uncertain. "Melting, tears" renders □□□□□□□□□□□, read as including mchi ma (tears); uncertain. "The ten knowings" renders □□□□□□□□□ as written, referring to the ten wrathful deities listed next. The four classes of mantra (snake, compiled, endless, headless) are translated literally, as their Sanskrit technical names are not certain.
• "The drop is suppressed by delusion" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ as written; the grammar of this line is unclear. "Dalwar gyu" (moving slowly) is the fourth mode of breath; the text then calls the water element "moving slowly and without movement," translated as written.
• In "for those long under the sway of great passion, who are to be protected in the three existences," the verb skyob ("protect") is translated as written, though the sense may be "wandering in" the three existences. "The fine eye" renders □□□□□□□□ literally within the list of sense bases.

• Most of the goddesses' names in this chapter are Tibetan translations whose Sanskrit forms cannot be identified with confidence; they are therefore translated by meaning. Where one Tibetan line might hold one name or two (for example □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□), the division is a judgment call. The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is obscure (ral ga is not a clear word) and is rendered loosely as "these truly abide." "The Constant One" renders □□□□□□□□, whose second element is unclear. "Narajana" transcribes □□□□□□□□ as written. The last lines on the guru, "should be pleased with effort, through the siddhis," follow the Tibetan grammar as written; the sense may be that the master should be pleased so that one gains the siddhis.
• The twelve light goddesses are given with literal English renderings of their Tibetan names, since their Sanskrit forms cannot be identified with confidence. "Great Ocean Tantra" renders rgya mtsho chen po'i rgyud literally; it may refer to a specific yoginī tantra (possibly the Ḍākārṇava), but this is uncertain. Saṃvara (sdom pa), given in the house rendering "restraint," here probably also carries the sense of binding or union. The closing line "skyes bu mgor ldan pas" (literally "by the person endowed with a head") is obscure; it is taken here to refer to the root or source at the crown, matching the tree-root simile.
• The ten "transitions" (pho ba) are the stages, evidently the months, of gestation, here correlated with the ten grounds. The shapes of the first stages (fish, tortoise, boar, lion) echo the sequence of Viṣṇu's descents; the text is translated as it stands. The seventh and eighth transitions both mention the openings of the nose; the seventh may originally have read "ear openings" (rna bug for sna bug), but the text is translated as written. The "wind of release and holding" (btang bzung) and the "wind intoxicated with vigor" are rendered literally; their identification is uncertain.
• The opening word lit. "blind" (long ba) makes no sense here; it is read as lon pa, "having elapsed," which the following lines repeatedly use. "Ḍākinī Compendium Tantra" renders mkha' 'gro sdud pa'i rgyud literally; it may designate a specific scripture, but this is uncertain. The comparison "phye leb" is taken as phye ma leb, a moth drawn to a flame.
• "One time" (dus gcig) echoes the opening formula of the scriptures, "at one time," here given an inner yogic meaning. The line rendered "Great bliss, having relinquished any state" (bde ba chen po go 'phang spangs) is terse and its construal is uncertain.
• The line rendered "The person in the aspect of the three worlds" ('jig rten gsum gyi rnam pa'i mi) is obscure; mi may instead be a negation, giving "not in the aspect of the three worlds." The fourth wisdom is written "so sor rtog dad bya nan tan," where dad is read as dang, "and." The qualities "of lordship and the rest" refer to the traditional sixfold sense of bhaga (lordship, form, glory, fame, wisdom, and effort).
• The term rendered "ḍombī" is literally "the woman with moles or marks"; it is taken as the Tibetan rendering of ḍombī, since the list and its family assignments (ḍombī to the Vajra family) parallel the Hevajra's six women. "Glorious Samāja" most likely refers to the Guhyasamāja. In the kinship correlations, the mind is said to become the mother and is then linked with "the sisters"; the text gives no separate item for the sister in this sequence, and it is translated as it stands. The names of the five aggregate deities (Victor of Victors, Jewel Holder, One Who Has Crossed Beyond Saṃsāra, Wisdom Holder) are rendered by meaning, since their Sanskrit forms cannot be identified with certainty.
• The eight states listed in chapter forty-seven correspond to the eight sāttvika states of Indian aesthetic and tantric literature. The second item is written "dust"; it is read as "sweat," a similar-looking word, which the following explanation of the channels confirms. The channel name Nasara is a transliteration whose meaning is uncertain; the other channel names (Great Tortoise, Great Head, Great Humming, Great Joy, Great Intoxication) are rendered by meaning. In chapter forty-eight the Sanskrit "ahaṃ" ("I") is analyzed into its two syllables. Chapter forty-nine sets out the standard list of emptinesses; the line here rendered "are subsequently held to be emptiness" appears to describe inner emptiness.

• Chapter forty-nine continues the classical list of emptinesses. The word rendered "bodily form" is written with an unusual syllable and is read as the similar-looking word for "body" (form body or image). In chapter fifty, "a million times" renders "ten hundred-thousands." In chapter fifty-three, the line rendered "merely the size of a chickpea" reads the transliterated word canaka as Sanskrit caṇaka, "chickpea"; this is somewhat uncertain. "The lord of the night" is the moon. "The cessation of joy" refers to one of the four joys of the completion stage.
• The "three syllables" and the "hundred syllables" refer to the three-syllable mantra and the hundred-syllable mantra. The line rendered "adorned with a garland of ka letters" is literally "adorned with the garland of ka"; its exact sense is uncertain. A few lines of the maṇḍala instructions are terse, notably the description of the master's form while purifying the ground and the line "seven seats; for the others, two suns," and are translated as they stand.
• "Jasmine" renders a flower name in the list of vase substances and is somewhat uncertain. Locanā, Māmakī, Pāṇḍaravāsinī and Tārā are the four goddesses placed in the vases; Pāṇḍaravāsinī is given in the Tibetan as "the White-Clad One."
• The deity invited as "Mañjuvajra" is rendered from the Tibetan "gentle vajra," taken as the name of the principal deity of the Mañjuvajra Guhyasamāja maṇḍala. The lines on the harm-doers "rendered blameless" are terse and their construction is uncertain. "Many tens of millions" renders the number word koṭi as written; it may be intended loosely as "great quantities."
• The object fashioned at twelve fingers' length and cast by the disciple is called a peg (kīla) in the Tibetan; in parallel rites this divination is performed with a tooth-stick, and the same object is evidently meant. "Great Joy" in the disciple's supplication renders an epithet of the master and may equally be read as "great bliss."
• The opening line ("since recollecting the secret would become a fault") is terse, and its connection to the rite of descent that follows is uncertain. "From the depths of the water" renders the Tibetan literally; it seems to mean following on from the water empowerment, but this is not certain. The "fire of a preta" likely means fire taken from a cremation ground.
• "Great Lord (Maheśvara)" is here an epithet addressed to the Blessed One as the teacher of the tantra, not a reference to the Hindu god. "The Liberator from Saṃsāra" translates a name in the list of tathāgatas whose Sanskrit form I cannot confirm. "Corpse ground" renders a phrase that could also be read as "the ground of taste"; the charnel setting seems most likely.
• "In the five continua" renders a phrase that could also be read "in the five tantras"; the sense in this context of the sense objects seems to be the five streams of experience. "Vajra, sun, and lotus arise" is rendered literally; the line is terse. "Cessation" renders the Tibetan for "separation," evidently the joy of cessation (viramānanda) among the four joys.
• The single syllables heading each verse after the chapter colophon spell out, one by one, the opening words of a tantra (evaṃ mayā śrutam ekasmin samaye bhagavān tathāga...), each explained in turn; they are romanized as the Tibetan writes them. The glossary rendering Saṃvara is kept for □□□□□□□□ in "the nondual Saṃvara", though "supreme bliss" is also a possible reading here. The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is obscure (□□□□□ may also mean "bamboo"); "like a light not yet raised up" is tentative. In this passage □□□□□□ means the sense faculties and □□□□□ means attachment, not the names Indra and Rāgarati.
• The syllables heading each verse continue the word-by-word commentary on the opening words of the Guhyasamāja, as the closing verses of the chapter state. □□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□□, "emanation body". In the fire-offering chapter, □□□□□□ refers to the sense faculties and to the two sexual organs, not to Indra.
• "The supreme maiden" renders □□□□ (Skt. kanyā). The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is obscure; "when both have appeared" is a literal rendering, and what "both" refers to is unclear. The single- and three-piece vessels are presumably skull cups.

• "Hero" and "snow" in the list of the five purifying nectars are rendered literally; "snow" most likely stands for camphor, and "hero" is probably a code word. "The gross one and the nameless one" is likewise a literal rendering of what seem to be code terms. In "the action vajra is no other," □□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□. Near the end, □□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□, "having come to know."
• Chapter sixty-three is a list of code words, written in Tibetan letters as pseudo-Sanskrit, each with its meaning; they are given as the Tibetan spells them. Where the boundary between a code word and the Tibetan gloss is unclear, as in the lines glossed "fortunate," "what exists," "far from the mother," "homeland," and "having no guide," the division and the meaning are tentative. □□□□□□□□ ("What is it like?") is Tibetan, not a code word, and the sense of that line is uncertain. In the wind-element line, □□□□□□□□□ ("unmoving") is read as □□□□□□ ("movement"), which fits the wind element; it is not the name Akṣobhya here.
• The ten wrathful deities placed on the body follow the familiar Guhyasamāja set; □□□□□□□□□□□□□ is Ṭakkirāja and □□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is Uṣṇīṣacakravartin, given here as "Cakravartin" as the Tibetan has it. The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is terse; it is taken as describing the vajra master as the one who bestows virtue on the disciple, though it could also mean "your virtue is wholly given (dedicated)." □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is read as an address to the bodhisattva Amoghadarśin, who then appears in the next lines; it could also mean "seeing him is meaningful." The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ literally says "the speech and mind maṇḍalas abide"; it is taken as the subject of the bodhisattvas' request. "The Glorious Supreme" (□□□□□□□□) probably refers to the Śrīparamādya tantra. "The Assembly" and "the Secret Assembly" refer to the Guhyasamāja. The three appearances are appearance, increase of appearance, and attainment of appearance, here matched to Buddha, Saṅgha, and Dharma in the text's own order.
• In □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, the syllable □□ ("faith") makes no sense in the list and is read as □□ ("and"): "entering, abiding, and arising." The passage beginning □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is terse; it is taken as describing the qualities of a fit recipient of the tantra. In the ritual section □□□□ is the rite of subjugation (vaśya), not empowerment. The sentiments (□□□), "the erotic and the rest," are the aesthetic rasas beginning with śṛṅgāra. The "direction of fire" is the southeast and the "direction of the wind" the northwest.
• The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is obscure; it is rendered literally as "the three of the night are just like the day," and may refer to the periods of night, twilight and day discussed in the following lines. The "threefold stacked being" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is the set of three nested beings visualized in deity yoga. The phrase "a human skull cup ... bearing the mark of being without a wound" is taken to describe the skull of one who died without injury. □□□□□□□ is read as mustard seed.
• "The universally empty" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□ (sarvaśūnya), the fourth of the four emptinesses in the completion-stage system. Where the text lists the wind element, it reads □□□□□□□□□□□□□ "aggregate of perception," which repeats the preceding item; since the preceding lines define formations, it is read as □□□□□□□□□□□□□□ "aggregate of formations." The description of the feeling and perception groups is compressed and appears to repeat Gandhavajrā; it is translated as it stands. Some architectural correspondences (the "tip of the nose" for the portals, □□□□□□□□□□□ "the parts near the heart") are obscure and rendered literally.
• Several entries in the list of bodily substances are uncertain: □□□□□ is rendered "the sheaths" and □□□□□□ "the hips" tentatively, and □□□□□□□ "lumps of flesh" literally. In the account of the winds, "dissolution" and "separation" follow the completion-stage dissolution of the winds through vajra recitation. The place names of the sacred sites are given in their usual Sanskrit forms. The temple epithets in the colophon are translated, with Tholing kept as a Tibetan place name.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
