The Great King of Tantras called Glorious Candraguhyatilaka

Śrīcandraguhyatilakanāmamahātantrarāja · Toh 477 · Derge Kangyur

དཔལ་ཟླ་གྲགས་ཐུགས་ལ་ཏིལ་བ་བྱ་རྒྱུད་ཀྱི་རྒྱལ་པོ་ཆེ་ཞེས་བ་

The Great King of Tantras called Glorious Candraguhyatilaka, in Sanskrit Śrī Candraguhyatilaka Mahātantrarāja and in Tibetan Dpal zla gsang thig le, is a Buddhist tantra whose title may be rendered "the Secret Drop of the Moon." It is Toh 477 in the Kangyur, where it belongs to the Tantra section among the higher yoga tantras. Opening with a homage to Vajrasattva, it unfolds as a dialogue in which the assembled tathāgatas, the Perfection goddesses, and other deities entreat the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, also appearing as Vajrasattva and Vajradhara, to reveal the secret of nondual wisdom and great bliss. Its teachings cover the hidden pledges and pledge substances, the families of buddhas and their colors, the union of method and wisdom, the four mudrās and the binding of hand gestures, wrathful rites of subjugation, and mantras for summoning the deities, and it closes with a colophon naming the translator Rinchen Zangpo.

In the language of India: śrī candra guhya tilka nāma mahā tantra rāja. In the language of Tibet: The Great King of Tantras called Śrī Candraguhyatilaka.

Homage to glorious Vajrasattva.

Then all the Blessed Ones, the tathāgatas, were filled with great wonder. Gathering once again, with dancing gestures, they joined their palms with a hollow between them, and bowing their crowns to the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, they made this request:

"The secret of all the heroes,
Candraguhyatilaka, which brings joy,
The true arising of nondual wisdom:
Blessed One, please explain it.
The unborn nature of all beings,
Free of both the born and the unborn,
Which fully joins what has arisen and what will arise,
Is the application to supreme conception.
The source of all jewels,
Like stainless space,

Raising aloft the great banner,
Is empowered by the great sun.
The true arising of the enjoyment of Dharma,
The color of the supreme red lotus,
That very desire, the great secret,
Is the supreme nectar that brings bliss to all.
Truly endowed with ā and la,
With a gait truly beautiful and graceful,
Various wisdom, great in its variety,
It is the very supreme of Candraguhyatilaka."

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra, lord of all the tathāgatas, knowing that all the tathāgatas had made this secret request, entered into the samādhi called the Vajra of the Wisdom of Great Cessation, and remained without saying anything at all.

Then all the tathāgatas were filled with marvelous wonder. Gathering once again, they roused the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, with the melody of reality, and made him rise:

oṃ hūṃ āḥ
Please partake of the taste endowed with the supreme bliss of unborn wisdom.
a la la ho
In order to raise that very supreme bliss of mind from the cessations,
Lord who holds the supreme bliss free of attachment, arise and partake!
Delighting in the supremely secret bliss, keep your pledge and liberate the world!
Source of awakening, never departing from the sphere of supreme bliss, perform the dance of joy!
a la la ho
Those tormented by the extremes of former clinging and by the withering afflictions,
Rouse them by skillful means, adorned with supreme bliss free of delusion, and make them understand!
At the gateway where all beings act alike, show the path of awakening,
And to the assembled host proclaim the nectar of supreme bliss, without distinction!
a la la ho

Then the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, the great being who pervades the whole sphere of space, entered into the samādhi called Rousing Candraguhyatilaka, the Great Heart of All the Tathāgatas. From the secret drop of his own heart he sent forth a mass of light rays called the Bliss of Great Utter Delight. He spread it out in the center of the moon drop, the secret heart of all the tathāgatas, and made it shine throughout the whole sphere of space. It entered above and below as well, illuminating all the mountains and all beings without exception, and gladdened them with the bliss of great utter delight. Then it returned back into that very place, and the Blessed One, lord of the bliss of great utter delight, dwelt blissfully in the center of the moon drop of the supreme secret heart.

Then all the Blessed Ones, the tathāgatas, being roused by that heart, the garland of the mass of light rays that had become the supreme great bliss, danced, and focusing each on their own samādhi, they accomplished, in the center of the moon drop at the heart of the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, a single dense mass of the supremely secret bliss of great utter delight. Generating their own bodies in the form of women, they emerged from the heart of the Blessed One.

Then some, turning and rolling their eyes like blazing lotuses in full bloom, and moving their eyebrows,

Danced in the manner of the Buddha.
In the center of the Buddha Yoginī,
The vajra, supremely delighted, without doubt,
Gave delight to the great being,
And through the bliss of the Buddha's bliss
The Blessed One Buddha came to dwell.

Turning their eyebrows and turning their feet,
Turning their eyes and pressing down hard,
Turning the tips of their fingers,
They danced in the manner of the vajra,
And gave delight to the great Vajra.
In the center of the Vajra Yoginī,
By rousing him moment by moment,
The Blessed One Vajra came to abide.

With majestic feet and jeweled heads,
Dancing with their stainless crowns,

And turning the circles of their faces,
They let him savor the great bringer of bliss.
With lotus eyes they gazed
Upon the hosts of the qualities of the charnel ground,
And for the great lord of bliss
They made beauty in the manner of the jewel.

Utterly delighted, radiant, sublime in bliss,
They opened the red lotus,
And in the slow, delighted turning of desire
They danced with nets of lotuses.
In the center of the Lotus Yoginī,
Gazing on all with majestic eyes,
They gave delight to great bliss,
And the Blessed One came to abide in the lotus.

Turning the ends of their fingers
At the tips of their hands, they danced.
With palms joined as a hollow lotus,
Glorious like lightning, and at the crown
With clouds of offerings billowing forth,
To the lord, the bringer of various bliss,
They gave delight in the manner of action,
And the Blessed One of the Various came to abide.

Then the Blessed One, Great Bliss, glorious Vajrasattva, the great Samantabhadra, entered into the samādhi called Candraguhyatilaka, the Supreme Secret of All the Tathāgatas, and once again, from the supreme vajra of body, speech and mind, he sent forth the very mass of clouds of great light called Great Bliss, which is desired by all the great secrets of the tathāgata, the vajra, the secret of the jewel, the lotus and action.

Then he illuminated all these bodies of the tathāgatas with light, and they became a single dense mass and dwelt in the moon drop of his own heart. In the center of the moon drop of his heart, that light generated delight, drew them in and made them enter, and made them one. Then he entered into the samādhi called the Undoubted Victory of the Great Delight of His Own Body, Speech and Mind, and from the vajra of body, speech and mind of that very great bliss of utter delight he sent forth the great king of maṇḍalas called Candraguhyatilaka, the Supreme Secret of All the Tathāgatas.

In the manner of the maṇḍala,
Having emanated it by applying the rite,
In accord with the vehicle, the meaning of the maṇḍala
Should be danced with the dance of union,
And it should be correctly visualized just as it is.
The maṇḍala as it truly is,
The maṇḍala of Candraguhyatilaka,
Cannot be fathomed
Even by the hero Vajrasattva.
The maṇḍala conceived by wisdom,
Sealed through the yoga of the deity
By the heart essence, the mudrā, and the vidyā mantra,
Should be drawn by one who knows the rite.
Square, with four gates,
Fully endowed with four archways,
Drawn all around with four lines,
With eight supreme pillars standing firm.
Fully round on every side;
Imagine a moon at its center,
And upon it draw the lord,
Indivisible great bliss.
That is with the visarga,
The syllable joined to the thirteenth letter,
The syllable of supreme bliss,
From which the wind maṇḍala truly arises.
In front of it the wise one
Should draw, brought forth from the indivisible mind,
The syllable with the fierce dot and the leader,
Crowned by the fourth.
To its south
Draw the supreme letter of the silent one,
The letter that accomplishes
All the supreme wisdom of mudrā.
ha joined with its own, with the visarga,
With the fourth placed at its center:
This letter of mantra form

Should be drawn in the west.
The letter of the wrathful one, of great wisdom,
The marvelous seal of letters,
Set down with splendor,
Should be drawn in the north.
So that all sentient beings may accomplish
Supreme purity and great delight,
With my speech of suchness
I have taught this very maṇḍala.
The awakening of the buddhas is great bliss;
By absorption in the dance, perfect buddhahood.
If the supreme being teaches it,
That very awakening of a buddha is accomplished.

Then all the blessed tathāgatas gathered once more as one and danced for the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, lord of utter great delight, and with eyes opened wide in exuberance,

Pressing down foot upon foot,
They drew in, cast out, and planted their steps.
With both hands, right and left,
They loosed the tips of splendor from the edges.
With eyes opened slightly sidelong,
Shifting their beautiful gaze,
They danced with the mudrā of the eyes,
And beings, sealed by it, bowed down.
With this melody they exhorted
The great being, the hero,
And in the maṇḍala of utter great delight
All the yoginīs came to dwell.
O vajra of utter great delight,
Great bliss of all the buddhas,
Blessed One, speak yourself
The suchness of the maṇḍala of supreme delight!
You who play in bliss unborn in every way and pervade all,
Our mind, bound with the pledge of form, enjoying, unchanging,
Supreme bliss, the mind of awakening, wholly free of suffering in every way,
Endowed with the spontaneous supremacy of great wisdom, enjoying bliss:

please sport in bliss!
a la la ho
By singing this as a song,
Through existence itself there is nirvāṇa.
The tathāgatas of great joy
Bless this maṇḍala.

Then the Blessed One, Vajra Great Bliss, smiling, his wide eyes like an opened blue lotus, his brows and body shifting, in a trampling stance that changed like lightning and waves, spoke this suchness from the vajra of his own body, speech and mind:

What is called "maṇḍala, maṇḍala"
Abides in the heart of vajra wisdom.
The supreme vajra maṇḍala itself
Is conceived through the yoga of oneself.
The maṇḍala of Vajra Great Delight
Is like the full moon,
Beautiful with garlands of white rays of light,
Like the supreme mind of awakening.
The maṇḍala of the Vajra Hero
Is a beautiful crescent moon,
Ablaze with dark blue all around,
As if fanned by fire and wind.
The maṇḍala of the Vajra Jewel,
Which accomplishes supreme utter delight,
Is a delightful maṇḍala of eight parts,
Like a blazing sun.
The maṇḍala that gives rise to supreme delight,
That of the Lord of the Lotus, is like a lotus,
With its eight petals spread open,
Its anthers adorned with a moon.
The maṇḍala of Vajra Action,
Which accomplishes all activities,
Is a delightful triangular maṇḍala,
Blazing intensely like fire.
These and other boundless
Maṇḍalas should be visualized
Just as they are emanated

By the protector Vajrasattva.

Then all the blessed tathāgatas rose once more and danced with splendid vajra steps. With song, cymbals, flutes, lutes, clay drums, kettledrums, paṇava drums, palikas, gentle hand-clapping and the like, all struck in many ways, and with the display of cymbals and other instruments, and with divine flavors, flavorful food, things to eat, things to chew, drinks, vehicles, seats, garments, things to lick, things to suck, soft foods and other things of many kinds, they made offerings to the Blessed One, Great Bliss, the glorious Vajradhara. Then, respectfully, holding their lotus fingers hollowed, bowing toward the left, opening their eyes with smiles, they again praised him with this melody that exhorts him to suchness:

Possessing eyes of compassion that see all with the loving-kindness of utter bliss,
You never weary of delivering beings to the heart of great awakening;
To free them from the six afflictions, you show the path that suits them;
In the manner of space, of the nature of dhāraṇī, you hold power over all the sugatas. How wonderful!

Great through bliss expanded everywhere, you draw forth and hold wisdom;
Your body, perfected by the bliss of the distinctive grounds, is like a king gathered by emptiness;
Touching the nature of reality just as it is, you display all the greatness of your body,
And so that all beings may travel to the heart of awakening, you reveal inconceivable doors.
Teaching the glorious essence as dhāraṇī, delighting the lords of the five families,
Come with delight and partake, and with utter delight make play!
Partaking of the bliss of the tathāgatas, in order to raise beings from the state of sinking,
You are endowed with the guise of a yakṣa and the mode free of arising and ceasing;
With great compassion you teach great bliss, the nature of reality, like space.
In the state of supreme delight, to the goddesses emanated as the sense sources
And to the assembly gathered in play, please bestow supreme bliss!
ha ha ha hoḥ Abiding in bliss, partake of bliss, hūṃ!

Endowed with supreme delight, please rain down unborn supreme bliss upon bliss!
In the expanse free of extremes in every way, Sugata, please take us as your disciples!
Glorious king, please take your seat in the place where you abide, just so, as is fitting!
This wondrous great awakening itself, through which beings gain bliss as their support,
Relying on nothing at all as the very substance of the six perfections,
Is always endowed with the dhāraṇī of unborn nirvāṇa.
You who abide in the expanse of phenomena with bliss free of extremes,
Bathe with the water of compassion the beings who dwell sunk in the bliss of delusion! hoḥ

Then:

By singing this as a song,
Utter supreme delight, free of attachment,
The great bliss that accords with the mind,
The siddhi, will swiftly be attained.

Then, when the praise had been offered in the melody of supplication to the Blessed One Samantabhadra, Great Bliss, the glorious Vajrasattva, lord of all the tathāgatas, he again gazed all around with eyes like stainless lotus petals, and his face broadened into a smile. Then again, toward the whole ocean of clouds, spreading through eons and leaving none out, of the many world systems as numerous as the atoms of immeasurable, boundless buddha fields: toward the tathāgatas; toward all those arisen from the families of tathāgata, vajra, precious jewel, lotus and action, namely the tathāgatas, the vajra holders, the jewel holders, the Dharma holders and the great holders of the various vajra; toward the great assemblies of lords of yoga; toward the immeasurable assemblies of attendants of the great queens of the yoginīs, such as those arisen from the heart, the weapons, the joyful ones and the coquettish ones, who lead, summon, kiss and so on; toward the assemblies of vajra sky-goers and great female sky-goers; toward the countless assemblies of vajra ravishers; and also toward the yogins arisen from the outer families of vajra, jewel, lotus and action, the great lords of yoga, and the assemblies of sky-goers: toward all of them he danced with all-seeing eyes accompanied by the transformations of great bliss. With a trampling stance full of transformations he pressed down on every side; full of transformations he lifted his feet and bared his teeth; he danced with hands intertwined all around, full of transformations; he swayed with charm full of transformations; with movements both performed and withheld, and with a trampling stance that cast out on every side, he blessed the great maṇḍala of the assembled retinue, and from the vajra of his own body, speech and mind he sent forth the great king of maṇḍalas called Great Delight, the Undoubted Vajra.

The suchness of oneself in meditative equipoise,
Likewise the suchness of the deity,
And the suchness of mantra and mudrā:
These become its supreme maṇḍala.
Beyond meditating on all the limbs,
Wholly abandoning conception and nonconception,
Perfectly beyond leading and beyond words:
This is called the supreme maṇḍala.
Engaging in what is Dharma and what is not Dharma,
One should examine all phenomena.
This maṇḍala, like pure space,
Is what has been taught.
Desire without attachment, the sameness of desire,
Like a red lotus in water;
One's own mind utterly attached in desire:
This is the supreme maṇḍala.
That which, stainless in form and in formlessness,
Enters into all the elements,
The mind, as water and as that which stirs it,
Is called "maṇḍala, maṇḍala."

Then the tathāgatas, the great lords of yoga together with their attendants, the male and female messengers, and all those maṇḍalas of the assemblies of great male sky-goers and great female sky-goers, again bowed to the Blessed One, the glorious Samantabhadra, Vajradhara, the great chief, and said this:

Oh, supreme being of utter delight!
Oh, utterly delighted one who turns the directions!
The maṇḍala of the supreme assembly of yoginīs
You yourself have spoken in secret.
Union of the buddhas, great in union,
Unsurpassed vajra union,

Through which the supreme bliss of the three worlds is attained:
Speak yourself the secret maṇḍala!
Great one of jewel, of lotus and of the various,
Who dances the dance of various unions,
In the world of the many kinds of drops,
Speak yourself the pure maṇḍala!

Then all the yoginīs, before the Blessed One, dancing, with vajra palms whose lotus-hand finger petals were intertwined all around, with the dignified grace of transforming dance, loosening the edges, pressing their lower lips with their teeth, smiling with gazes like the petals of a fresh lotus, singing melodies with the mudrā of song, urging one another on, lifting onto their own shoulders and pressing down on right and left, sang:

oṃ hūṃ a la la la ho
Appearing everywhere, yet without attachment,
With the supreme bliss of nonattachment,
You grant power to those of blissful yoga form
And bestow bliss. a la la la ho
Inconceivable, the nature of space,
Rise up and bring others to accomplishment in power!
Unstained by attachment,
Touch all the bliss of things, and please attend to us!

Then Samantabhadra, lord of the vajra of utter great delight, roused in his heart by the exhortation of the great melody of suchness, entered into equipoise in the samādhi called Vajra Glory Fully Enjoying Utter Great Delight. In this great maṇḍala of the assembly of yoginīs of the Undoubted Vajra of utter great delight, he danced in the various trampling stances of utter great delight, sang songs with the vajra melody of utter great delight, played with great vajra play, and laughed the great vajra laugh of utter great delight; and from the center of the moon drop of the vajra of his own body, speech and mind, uttering oṃ mahā sukha hūṃ, he sent forth the mistress of all the tathāgatas, Jñānadhātvīśvarī.

With a crescent moon above,
The second, like the letter ma,
Marked with a drop:
This is the yoginī of luminous wisdom.

Drawing out the vowels and consonants,
Visualize a line in the center,
And at its head and its tail
Imagine the two supreme wrathful ones.
This is the luminous one of the queen,
The maṇḍala of the Vajra Yoginī.
By merely recollecting it,
One is blessed by every merit.
Between the two vowel series draw a line,
Fully joined with the joining leader;
Above it a crescent moon and a drop;
At head and tail, further, traṃ.
This is the luminous ultimate:
The Jewel Yoginī bestows empowerment.
By recollecting it one gains merit,
And misdeeds too are destroyed.
Joining it with the two vowel series,
The visarga is explained as two letters.
This is utter joy, wholly attached,
Taught as Makarī.
The first, of great fortune,
And another with the fierce dot:
This vowel series of all the buddhas
Fully bestows the awakening of a buddha.
On oneself, or else on another,
Sealing with this mudrā,
If one accomplishes the maṇḍala to be accomplished,
Siddhi will swiftly be attained.
This is the supreme among maṇḍalas.
Whatever merit there is in holding
The manifest presence of the mudrā of letters,
Even by writing it, it becomes exceptional.
How wonderful! Bliss, great wisdom!
Its wisdom, in this very life,
Arousing desire and relying on bliss,
Is attained by way of this.
In this supreme maṇḍala of the three realms

There is nothing else more vast or supreme than this.
All beings who are practitioners
Will accomplish buddhahood in this very life.

From the great secret king Candraguhyatilaka, the extensive and supremely secret great samaya maṇḍala of the Undoubted Vajra of Utter Delight: the wisdom maṇḍala, supremely secret, of the great lords of the yoginīs, the great secret of the vajra queens of all the tathāgatas, the first chapter, is complete.

Then all the blessed tathāgatas were amazed, and, giving rise to delighted mental bliss, contentment and gladness, they danced and laughed the vajra laugh of utter great delight. Then again, having gathered into what is called the Vajra Wisdom of the Nondual Bliss of Utter Great Delight, they made a supplication to the Blessed One.

Great maker of bliss, speak the explanation!
Great bliss, speak the explanation!
Great secret, speak the explanation!
Great delight, speak the explanation!
From you desire truly arises;
From you comes great aversion;
From you come wrongdoing and suffering;
From you the three realms all arise.
From you come men and eunuchs;
From you come women tormented by desire;
From you comes liberation from desire;
From you unsurpassed awakening arises.
From you come space and wind;
From you, splendor, the element of fire;
From you, likewise, water and earth;
From you all that is done and not done.
From you the buddhas, great heroes,
Arise again and again.
From you the Dharma and the Saṅgha,
From you the host of the perfections,
The great bodhisattvas,
The mountains and all people arise.
From you comes Vajrasattva,
From you the stainless lotus,

From you the great, immeasurable jewel;
Likewise the various vajra arises.
From you come mudrās and mantras;
From you the heart of knowledge arises.

Then the Blessed One, with unblinking eyes, raised his brows and gazed, instant by instant, all around at all the tathāgatas; at the great ones, such as the bodhisattvas and the perfections; at the assemblies of great yoginīs; at the vajra sky-goers and the assemblies of sky-goers; at the worldly and those beyond the world; and also at the whole gathering of gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kiṃnaras, mahoragas, humans and nonhumans. With his gentle, majestic hand he brandished the vajra at his heart, and with the vajra of his secret sign and his gaze of passion, fully expanded and great, he outshone the entire retinue. From the center of the drop of the letter in the moon maṇḍala of the lotus of his heart he sent forth rays of light and blessed them to illuminate everything, and from the vajra of his own body, speech and mind he sent forth this great secret maṇḍala called the Undoubted Vajra of Utter Delight.

The thirteenth of the first letters,
Imagined with a drop,
Set down properly as great bliss,
With a drop that others cannot split;
The sixth letter as the leader,
Properly visualized below.
This is the great secret,
The marvelous mudrā of letters.
To give rise to great bliss as bliss,
It has been proclaimed by all the buddhas.
If, with this mudrā of wisdom,
One seals with the essence in an instant,
One becomes the expounder of maṇḍalas,
The Teacher Vajradhara.
Arousing great bliss,
It brings about the realization of the buddhas.
Through accomplishing the letter of wisdom,
One becomes the Lord of Wisdom himself.
The magical eye and great discernment,

Destroying the wrongdoing of ignorance,
Like Vajrasattva himself,
Are attained in this very life.
Great bliss, the great touch,
Destroys suffering and craving.
The great siddhi of discernment and wisdom,
Awakening, is swiftly attained.
Surrounded by ten million consorts,
That great being sports with them.
Through the equal union of vajra and lotus,
Playing with palms outstretched,
Long life, youth and good fortune
Are attained by mere recollection.
Whatever is needed through desire
Will be accomplished swiftly.
Through space below and above
One comes and goes as one wishes.
Piercing right through the earth,
That one of great power comes here.
Those who harm all the buddhas
Will without doubt be brought to awakening.
Through the form of great bliss,
Destroying and likewise tasting,
With vajra intellect all the māras
Are liberated through transformation.
By releasing great bliss,
One should offer it in an instant.
The great holder of the vajra of accomplishment,
The great hero, should summon.
The yoginīs, as one wishes,
Should be subdued in the manner of trampling.
Indra, Upendra and the great lord,
Who dwell in solitude by the power of harm,
Should be liberated in the manner of destruction,
By utterly crushing and pressing down.
Trampling with the five weapons,
One should sport with the women of others.

Oh! The great being abiding in bliss upon bliss,
Having brought about liberation,
Through the mind of awakening from which bliss arises,
Should worship the being who is himself.
Through remaining in accord with the samaya,
Yoga becomes permanent in nature.
In an instant one goes to the higher realms;
In an instant one goes to the Blissful Realm.
By the force of the vajra, everywhere,
Beings, in this very instant,
Become the abode of all the buddhas.
Beings and those of great renown,
The families of all,
And the perfections: this is their birthplace;
Likewise the families and the perfections
All abide fully in this.
Having become the lord, the great support,
The mass of qualities like space,
That very one, in all things,
Abiding equally in all three times,
Vajrasattva, supremely blissful,
Is the being without beginning or end.

This is the wisdom of the great letter mudrā called the Vajra Dharma Letter of the Utterly Great Bliss of the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

The great letter of the thirteenth,
Endowed with the drop of wisdom,
With that which arises from the vajra mind added:
ha with ra subjoined, crowned at its head.
This is born of the mind;
With the beauty of utter great delight,
It is the letter mudrā, the great mudrā.
On the lotus of the secret heart
Of the one who stands before the lord,
By sealing with this mudrā,
She at that very moment
Becomes pleased with utter delight.

Pleasing the great lord Vajrasattva
With her bliss,
Through the union of the organs,
By playing with her, one swiftly accomplishes.
From the mutual delight of those two,
They become the ground of utter delight;
Possessing the form of a supreme vidyādhara,
One is worshipped by all gods and humans.
When one plays together with her,
The Great God (Śiva), Brahmā and those who belong with them
Bow down to the great being
Abiding in the mode of the mudrā union.
Sealed by the perfect union
That has abandoned the stains of the three faults,
The being dances
And pleases the great being.
That one abides in bliss and travels
On earth and in the sky.
Various goddesses of great bliss
Enjoy him with various blisses.

Dancing with the dance of mudrā,
One swiftly brings beings to realization.
Having become a sword of great splendor,
One travels back and forth throughout the sky.
Goddesses who move by magic,
Daughters of asuras and of nāgas,
And daughters of humans possessed of magic power:
All such women are to be accomplished.
Through the wisdom of mudrā being firmly established,
That very one goes everywhere,
And in the maṇḍala, for as long as one wishes,
The great Vajrasattva abides.
All the buddhas are swiftly accomplished;
All dharmas are great bliss;
The Saṅgha, all those free of attachment:
All of these are that.

Having summoned, by the unobstructed power
Of Indra, Upendra and the great lord,
Abiding in the means of Vajrasattva,
One should sport with the women of others.
These and other boundless
Wisdom mudrās are to be accomplished;
Relying on them instant by instant,
One will be accomplished through one's own union.
Through this nondual union,
That one becomes every siddhi;
One becomes free of self and free of pride,
Without appearance and without letters.

This is the wisdom of the letter mudrā of Her Who Accords with the Mind of Utter Great Delight.

The goddess Vajra Kīli,
Adorned at the start with oṃ,
Joined with Vighnāntaka,
Is the one who bestows supreme power.
With her, in the heart of a woman,
Bestowing the blessing oneself,
Through the union of the two organs,
The wise one should meditate properly.
Then that great yogin,
Blessed by the lord of yogins,
Goes playing, with beautiful eyes,
Throughout the whole maṇḍala of space.
On oneself, or else on others,
Sealing with that mudrā,
By opening the vajra and the lotus,
The practitioner swiftly accomplishes.
Opening the lotus wide,
If one seals with this mudrā
Of play through the mudrā union,
Going and coming are without doubt.
Holding the mudrā of the hands,

If one meditates on the great union,
At once one goes into the sky.
Lying down oneself on one's back,
Place the mudrā on top of oneself;
The mantrin should properly move
The mudrā blessed by oneself.
At the right and left sides,
Where delight and love both dwell,
Place the mudrā without distraction,
And meditate on oneself as utterly delighted.
By this siddhi is attained;
Through keeping company with these together,
In the maṇḍala of all the consorts,
One becomes everything, the buddhas and the rest.
Through union together with her,
Like the buddha, lord of space,
Blessed by all the buddhas,
That one becomes a buddha in essence.
Through the perfect union of the two organs,
Drawing out the nectar for one night,
And relying on the mudrā of the consort,
One attains the marvelous, it is said.
At the end of night and the end of day,
If at first both are joined,
Wherever the lord of the mantra expanse goes,
Siddhi goes together with him.
At midday, or else at midnight,
One should touch the expanse of the consort,
And, swiftly crying out wrathful sounds,
One should begin the wrestlers' contest.
Right at the end of the release,
Having drunk the supreme milk,
That one then accomplishes the vajra
And goes into the center of Candraguhya.
Reversing that act in the same way,
And from relying on her as one pleases,
As soon as the mind of awakening arises,

It is the siddhi of Hārītī.
If with this one spends the night
Without distraction at the jewel crest,
One steals the siddhi of the buddhas,
And attains the very siddhi of the buddhas.
If with this, in the moon secret of the heart,
One visualizes it as a drop,
That one, at that very moment,
Becomes like the supreme Candraguhyatilaka.
Even by merely touching this,
Whatever siddhis there are are attained.
The vajra mudrā, of great splendor:
This king roams everywhere.
Even at the time of practice,
One should never engage in conceptual thought.
Always being free of conceptual thought,
One should practice it earnestly.
To beings who suffer
Always give the four gifts;
Give them bliss,
And never give anything unpleasant.

This is the Vajra Kīli Kīli, called the Great Mind Woman of Utter Delight, Endowed with the Incomparable, which brings about the attainment of the great bliss of utter delight.

First comes oṃ, the great rainbow,
Joined with vajra utter delight.
Through this, in every passion,
One equally attains the passion that brings bliss.
Through the union of amorous play,
One should always delight a woman with this.
Through this, in the three worlds,
Siddhi is swiftly attained.
Eyes like a lotus, wide and open:
That mantrin becomes so in an instant.
With the supreme bliss of the lord,
One should unite the vowels and consonants.

Sealing with the mudrā of joining,
One should practice moment by moment.
At the proper times, touching,
And insertion too, should always be done.
Moving and kneading likewise,
One should perform the rite of consorting together.
Generating and purifying,
One should perform the approach moment by moment.
Dancing and circling all around,
Sucking and likewise drinking,
With a mind free of doubt,
One should accomplish it with the samaya.
Through this mudrā the yogin,
When unwavering, has siddhi:
The siddhi of a buddha's awakening;
What need is there to mention remaining for an eon?
As soon as he attains this siddhi,
He becomes a follower of the Lotus Holder (Padmadhara),
Like one bearing a blazing lotus in his hand;
The wise one, undistracted, remains for an eon.
With splendor, together with Glorious Delight,
He goes to the Blissful Realm.
The great yogin, having gone there,
In the maṇḍala of lotus form
Of the lord, supreme in the Blissful Realm,
Will dwell in bliss.
Ever keeping company in the Blissful Realm,
He experiences the bliss of siddhi and wisdom.
Through this mudrā of syllables,
Holding the lotus-born dhāraṇī,
If, having blessed it, one tastes bliss,
One becomes lord of lotus bliss.
Sealing another's woman oneself
With this mudrā,
And relying on her, the mantrin
Will without doubt take the very form he desires.
Adorned with loveliness and the rest,

Like the newly risen rays of the sun,
Through a stainless and vast view,
The life of Padmasattva is accomplished.
As far as into the sky
The great hero flies,
And goddesses, hosts of ten million consorts,
Make offerings to him.
All the buddhas together with their heirs,
All the buddhas, worship him.
Even while dwelling in saṃsāra itself,
He is not stained by the stains of saṃsāra.
If one seals with this mudrā,
The afflictions are always purified,
Just as, by applying a medicinal powder,
A snake is killed.
This delight-maker of the Candraguhyatilaka
Is attained in this very life;
Through the nature of its power,
All that is needed is accomplished.
Whatever siddhi one desires, fruitful,
Of this saṃsāra and of the beyond,
Through this very mudrā of great power,
By merely remembering it, that is actually accomplished.

This is the syllable mudrā of wisdom called the Lotus Garland of Utter Delight.

At the beginning, joined with oṃ;
At the end, the exultant hūṃ;
In the middle is placed "utter-delight vajra."
This syllable is wondrous.
By sealing with this mudrā,
Wrongdoing vanishes in an instant.
This is the great siddhi of the three realms:
One attains glorious majesty.
Māras and those who follow the māras
He unimpededly makes faint;
Through union with the crossed vajra,
He captivates the three realms.

Victorious through his own power,
He enjoys the three realms.
Sealing with this mudrā,
One should fully join lotus and vajra.
In the manner of a half garland and a garland,
As one holds a garland drawn together,
Having blessed it with this,
If one performs the approach, siddhi comes swiftly.
By moving the right and left brows,
And joining the lotus eyes,
If, sealing with the mudrā, one sports,
One attains the highest siddhi.
The vajra yoginīs close by
Worship the one whose nature is vajra;
Surrounded by all of them,
He is empowered in the maṇḍala.
Vajrasattva, the hero,
Out of fear and dread, gives;
His own mudrā-dhāraṇī
He himself offers as siddhi.
Others too, the perfections,
The ornament of the buddhas' qualities,
They too, in fear and dread of him,
Offer their own supreme beloved.
The great three-eyed one,
The great father, the four-faced one,
Vajradhara and those who belong to him,
Offer their own beloved.
Yama, King Śakra (Indra),
And that Vajradhara, coming
To the one with siddhi, offer their beloveds,
Even for the sake of their lives.
Others, of magical bodies,
Who dwell on the paths of the three realms,
Swiftly drawing near,
Give themselves as siddhi.
The great king, kinsman of all,

The holy lord who fashions all things,
He too draws near, bows his crown,
And gives a yoginī of every kind.
Forms of yakṣas, rākṣasas and the rest,
Daughters of piśācas and pretas:
Taking them as mudrās endowed with union,
One should examine them with supreme examination.
Through this virtuous one, who performs all activities,
Siddhi is swiftly accomplished.
Daughters of gods and of nāgas,
Those born from the wombs of asuras and of gods:
If one blesses them with this mudrā,
Accomplishment is swift siddhi.
Whether of fair form or foul,
Whatever woman one has taken,
In the manner of this sequence
One should examine the practice of the mudrā.
Through this, sealing moment by moment
As all the buddhas
And likewise as all the heroes,
It is attained in this very life.

This is the syllable mudrā called the Garland of Great Utter Delight, Manifold and Incomparable.

Upon the thirteenth vowel,
Likewise the king of drops,
"Utter-delight vajra, great view, bliss,"
And at the end the syllable hi is joined.

This is the delight-maker,
The great-bliss eye of all the buddhas.
If, through this syllable of the mudrā,
The wise one bestows the blessing,
That very instant it
Becomes an unsurpassed magical eye.
Abiding in the wisdom of emptiness,
One sees the buddhas, exceedingly subtle.
Through the broad shifting of the eyebrows,

One dances with the mudrā of the gaze,
And summons all the buddhas,
The heroes, all the vajra holders,
All the perfections,
And likewise the hosts of dhāraṇī women,
Yoginīs and ḍākinīs,
The outer and the inner hosts,
Goddesses, nāginīs, yakṣiṇīs,
Asura women, supreme in bodies of siddhi,
Kumbhāṇḍas, humans, or pretas,
Piśācas, and magical human maidens.
By placing this at the heart,
One becomes Vajradhara oneself.
Buddhas, or else the sun,
The lotus net, the manifold mind,
Gods, asuras and humans,
And others too, yakṣas and rākṣasas,
Māras and the hosts of māras:
None of these others can steal it away.
Worshipped by gods and asuras,
He goes with siddhi through the three realms.
Attended by gods and asuras,
He travels in a single instant.
The domain of the buddhas' knowledge,
Throughout all the fields of the buddhas,
With hundreds of families of knowledge,
He goes, sporting.
Fearless, having abandoned all limbs,
He becomes without beginning or end;
Through union with the knowledge of the buddhas,
He becomes the one supreme wonder of delight.
Within the vajra he becomes vajra;
Within the jewel he becomes jewel;
Within the lotus he becomes lotus;
Within the manifold, the supreme manifold.
These and the other infinite supreme ones,
The equal and unequal sphere of phenomena:

Blessed by the wisdom of the mudrā,
He becomes the holy manifold itself.
One of ugly form becomes of supreme form;
One without eyes comes to have eyes;
The deaf too hear sound;
The dull too become sharp of mind.
These and others beyond measure
Come about by sealing with the mudrā of the eye.
Through it, the qualities in the body
Become supreme qualities, of great radiance.
As far as the open expanse of the sky,
He flies and comes down below.
He goes even through mountains, piercing them;
On the earth and beneath the earth,
Performing manifold miracles,
He travels in an instant.
In the maṇḍala of the manifold ḍākinīs,
The mantrin dances with swaying grace;
By generating great bliss,
He causes that being to enter.
Through the undistracted shifting of the gaze,
He performs all activities.
Through raising and gazing,
Dancing and whirling about,
He makes all beings descend;
To mountains and all beings
He speaks and utters sounds,
And sends them on whatever errand he likes.
With a fierce gaze he strikes
And liberates living creatures;
The savage, the vicious and the greatly terrifying
He liberates with a wrathful gaze.

This is the great power of wisdom, the syllable mudrā called Endowed with the Vajra Eye of Great Utter Delight, which accomplishes all the qualities of desire.

At the beginning, adorned with oṃ;
At the end, sounding forth thunder;

The body of vajra utter delight:
This is taught as the generator of bliss.
This mudrā is the great mudrā
Of the buddha, the Vajra Hero.
As soon as one meditates on it,
One is blessed by the three vajras.
Whether oneself or another,
If through this one meditates at one's own heart
And makes the nondual union,
The body of a buddha is fully accomplished.
When it is accomplished, one sports
With all the women of all the buddhas;
Through the union of the vowels and consonants,
Even a lowly being attains siddhi.
One attains all that is most fortunate,
And the fortune of the buddhas;
All who are fortunate
Attend upon his lotus feet.
When the knowledge women, daughters of gods and asuras,
See him, they are delighted;
Adorned with the wisdom of the mudrā,
He becomes whatever manifold form he desires.
Those who practice and those who do not,
Humans, gods, nāgas, yakṣas,
Kiṃnaras and men:
Even those with siddhi cannot steal it away.
These and others praise him,
And with minds grown fearful
Worship him as their guru;
All praise him, worship him and honor him.
These and the other infinite supreme ones,
The gods of boundless space,
Like the rays of ten suns:
The great yogin goes forth accomplished.
Throughout all the fields of all the buddhas,
He pleases all with his light,
And dwells outshining

The buddhas and bodhisattvas.
To the one whose nature is all the buddhas
The heirs bow down and prostrate.
Gods, asuras, kumbhāṇḍas,
Brahmā, those of the desire realm, and the Great God
Come to that blessing of the wisdom of the mudrā
In fear and dread.
"Blessed One, grant siddhi, give your command!
Just as you intend in your heart,
Taking your command upon our crowns,
We shall accomplish all those who are hard to tame.
In brief, the holy ones
Of the four kinds we shall also protect.
We shall also receive the empowerment
Of the supreme Candraguhyatilaka itself,
And take the vows of the five families,
All four kinds of them.
O lotus siddhi, at your feet,
For as long as we live we are your subjects.
Ever attending in your presence,
'What shall we do?' we receive your commands."
If one seals with this mudrā,
Those who practice and those who do not are delighted;
Always the supreme among the buddhas
Experience exceeding bliss and affection.

This is the samādhi of the mudrā called the Great Body of Vajra Utter Delight, Endowed with Incomparable Bliss.

At the beginning, oṃ topped with a drop;
With the wrathful one that others cannot split,
Placed in the middle of the two:
"Speech vajra utter delight."
The secret bliss of all the buddhas,
Which tastes the supreme flavor,
Clear speech filled with the sound of the true Dharma,
Delights the ears.
This great syllable mudrā

Brings about the accomplishment of great awakening,
Holding immeasurable qualities,
Qualities beloved and lofty.

If one seals with this glorious mudrā,
One becomes that very instant lord of all glory;
Abandoning the grasping at self and mine,
One attains the nature of all the buddhas.
With this mudrā, sealing oneself or another,
And then engaging in desire,
One swiftly attains through it
A siddhi that is wondrous.
The buddha Vajradhara, the king,
Heeds the command of the practitioner;
But if through delusion one transgresses,
That is the end of one's life.
If one guards it, glory,
Long life, youth and supreme bliss,
Just as the vajra speech has taught,
Will without doubt be attained.
Gathered in by the wisdom of the mudrā,
There is nothing at all that it does not accomplish.
Emanating oneself as everything
Becomes the siddhi of supreme wisdom.
In the blessing of the wisdom of the mudrā
Is the irreversible awakening of the buddhas,
And the unequaled, boundless dharmadhātu.
Even having gone as the very nature of siddhi,
The buddhas who have utterly passed beyond
Guide that great being.
When rising from one's own samādhi,
One should guard the samaya supremely.
In as many maṇḍalas as there are in space,
He enjoys all the objects of desire.
The great yogin does not pass away,
And does not go to the three lower realms;
He does not experience even the slightest suffering

Of all the beings below.
Because those three vajras are wondrous,
All the buddhas praise him.
Freed from habitual tendencies and the linking of rebirth,
He comes and goes along the stages of the sky.
The gods always worship him,
And by being worshipped he is worshipped all the more.
Whether the great being goes or sits,
Through all that brings bliss his nature is virtuous.
Dwelling, food, drink and the rest
He finds from the sky in an instant;
A precious, supreme woman, from the sky,
Is produced by his mere thought.
All the spheres of action without remainder:
Through this he attains the three realms.
Through the yogic union of siddhi
Great yogic adepts are captivated.
There is no discipline fiercer than this;
There is no austerity like this:
From the supreme bliss of women,
It is accomplished by enjoying the pleasures of desire.
In all the virtuous lotus families,
The great being becomes the lord of speech;
Through all the dhāraṇī women,
He becomes the great king of great bliss.

This is called Endowed with the Incomparable Vajra of All Speech. It is attained through the great bliss of vajra great utter delight, renowned as illuminating all the three realms, and through the speech of the face of the assembly of the lotus family it accomplishes every intention.

With oṃ, and the indivisible at the end,
"Supreme mind is bliss,
Vajra utter delight, great maker of bliss":
In the middle the name is to be joined.
Through this mudrā comes great siddhi:
The mind of awakening fully accomplished.
As soon as one is blessed by this,

The supreme nectar is attained.
If one makes all endowed with desire,
Or even all minds,
If the mantrin, through great bliss,
Seals all minds with the seal of touch,
Through this, Vajradhara himself
And the Vajra Hero himself,
Blessed by the mudrā of the goddess,
Are attained in an instant.
Dancing with the goddesses,
The lord of utter delight guides him;
In the palace of delight, of great utter delight,
For the attainment of exceedingly great bliss,
A lion throne is set up.
Through the union of vajra and lotus
Of the supreme of four and four,
He is guided and empowered.
Then the perfect Buddha Amitāyus
And the bodhisattvas of great diligence,
Who have abandoned desire for existence and nonexistence,
Will bow down to him.
He establishes the supreme vajra mind,
And in the manner of his own conduct,
All the perfections
And all the buddhas surround him before him.
Throughout all the three worlds,
The great being displays himself:
At times enjoying utter delight,
At times going forth from his home,
At times awakening, at times entering the womb,
At times taking birth, and at times passing away,
At times sporting in great conduct,
At times gaining victory over Māra,
At times awakening to manifest awakening,
At times turning the wheel,
At times causing the manifold to enter,
At times exceedingly beautiful in season,

At times as woman and as man,
At times as a god and as lord of creatures,
At times as a king ruling through desire,
At times turning his back on desire,
At times peaceful and at times fierce,
At times as great grahas and obstructors.
These and others without end,
Sealed with this mudrā:
To those who desire siddhi as they wish,
I show myself in my very essence.
Through the union of the indivisible rite,
Drawing near to the indivisible guide,
Through great mutual touch,
The vajra holder pierces her.
The many hosts of dhāraṇī women,
And what need to mention the other great makers of bliss?
Those who practice and those who do not
Attain the holy bliss without needing effort.
With splendor, at the heart of awakening,
He comes to dwell permanently,
For the yogin, through this mudrā,
Is endowed with union and gathering in.
Free from all parts,
Like the supreme mind of awakening:
Through union by means of this syllable,
He becomes the great self.

This is the syllable mudrā called Great Vajra Utter Delight, Born from a Satisfied Mind, Endowed with the Incomparable, which accomplishes all activities.

At the beginning oṃ is joined;
At the end, the two, with the sound of a kettledrum;
Blessed by utter-delight vajra,
The goddess who sweetens is placed in the middle.
This is the one who bewilders,
Attained through the utter delight of all the buddhas.
With vajra wisdom abiding in the heart,

One should accomplish all siddhis.
If the mantrin, with this syllable mudrā,
Seals himself or another
And inserts the vajra into the lotus,
Then siddhi comes swiftly.
Performing all activities, endowed with glory,
With long life, youth and good fortune,
He attains likeness to Vajradhara,
And Vajrasattva is fully accomplished.
He sports with the buddhas, with the heroes,
And with all the buddhas,
And he captivates the magical women
Of the lords of hosts and of the gods.

This is the syllable mudrā called Great Vajra Utter Delight, the Sweetener, All-Tasting, Endowed with the Banner of Flowers. Clearing away all obscurations, she is the great performer of all activities, the unfailing one whom others cannot overcome.

With the sound of Brahmā's speech,
At the end the two sounds of the bell,
In the middle the garland of the name:
This syllable is the supreme cloud.
It brings the attainment
Of the siddhi of mind of all the buddhas;
All the objects of desire
The syllable accomplishes in an instant.
Women sealed with this,
Whether oneself or one's own disciple,
If one relies on them through that very union,
One becomes like glorious Vajradhara.
As lord of the yoginīs,
He swiftly travels through the sky,
And is worshipped by Brahmā, by those of the desire realm,
By the great lord and by the gods.
He sports with the hosts of goddesses,
And becomes the lord of all goddesses.
Great lord of the captivators and the rest,

The terrifier and the thief,
Holy and supreme among all beings:
He becomes a great being.
In the midst of the host of beloved ones,
He moves with splendid conduct and the like.
With great splendor, with the great lotus,
With splendor in every way,
He experiences the great maker of bliss;
In utter delight, as if in amorous play,
Embracing the neck of the most fortunate one,
He abides as a great yogin.
By writing this upon the heart,
One obtains whatever one desires.
Applying the lotus mudrā:
If one does so, the mudrā is delighted.

This is the syllable mudrā called Endowed with the Stainless Color of Great Vajra Utter Delight, the virtuous one that performs all activities.

At the very beginning make oṃ,
Adorned closely with the king of drops;
The two guides, with the visarga,
Are placed at the very end;
Adorned with "vajra utter delight,"
Imagine "vajra autumn" in the middle.
This fully accomplishes
The light of wisdom of all the buddhas.
If, with this syllable mudrā,
One seals one's own heart,
It brings about the supreme wisdom of the buddhas,
And through it comes the siddhi of the Autumn Goddess.
The gods, with the lords of hosts and the gods,
The yakṣas together with the rākṣasas,
And the serpents and kiṃnaras that dwell there,
All become his servants.
With its rays of light blazing brightly,
He goes forth, endowed with the mind of the supreme Buddha,
Perfectly pervaded by the glory that arises in manifold ways,

Dispensing what brings about the holy, supreme Dharma,
Illuminating the world of those who practice and those who do not,
Bringing forth the supreme light of the moon free of clouds.
Utterly delighted by the vast unfolding of the sphere of space,
Experiencing vowels and consonants, the lotus and supreme bliss,
And making them supreme, he will remain for an eon.
Through this one steals away wrongdoing;
Through this one swiftly comes to delight;
This is the very essence of bliss;
Through this siddhi is accomplished.
Turning one's back on the suffering of birth,
One attains it in this very life.

This is the great mudrā called Endowed with the Light of Wisdom of the Vajra Utter Delight of All the Tathāgatas, which accomplishes the wisdom of omniscience.

At the beginning, endowed with oṃ;
At the end, the two syllables of delight;
"Vajra great utter delight":
In the middle imagine the clear syllable.
This goes before
The Great Manifold One of all the buddhas.
Through this Great Manifold One
Comes the siddhi of manifold wisdom.
Blessed by the mantrin himself,
He becomes the great lord of the manifold.
Abandoning all the limbs of wrongdoing,
He is virtuous with the limbs of all merit.
The siddhi of going everywhere
Is fully accomplished through this alone.
Through the great bliss of manifold illusion,
He remains for a great and manifold eon.
Adorned with the nature of vajra,
He will sport with all women.
Then he abides in the dharmadhātu:
The siddhi of the supreme lord.
Before the lotus, making it the first deity,

One should accomplish the vajra.
Extending the thumb and the ring finger,
One should place them inside the mouth;
If one tastes it as if it were liquor,
At once one takes whatever form one desires.
Through the perfect union of vowels and consonants,
One sports with women.
Of the wise Vajrasattva,
This is called Utter Delight.
It is the great cool maker of delight;
This manifold one abides in beings.

At the beginning oṃ abides;
Endowed with tra ta, it is placed at the end;
"Vajra great utter delight ho";
The Amorous Lady is urged in the middle.
This is the emanation
Of the amorousness of all the buddhas.
Through the union of these in equality,
The Amorous Lady should generate wisdom.
The steadfast one, wise in the vajra,
Should insert it into the lotus that longs for bliss;
Through desire one should enjoy desire;
Swiftly, through desire, comes siddhi.
Then the vajra, glorious in desire,
Brings about all that makes bliss.
Generating desire in all beings,
He becomes Great Bliss.
By its power, the supreme of the perfections,
Through amorous play in the manner of the lotus,
Abiding in the means of vajra union,
That great vajra is siddhi.
Through the passion of desire as one pleases,
One is endowed with the eternal path,
And acts in harmony with the eternal Dharma;
If one accomplishes it, one will realize the rite.
Through this one is called Samantabhadra.

He is all things;
Without desire and without affliction,
Without pride and without grasping,
Examined as the supreme Buddha,
He is the very reality of the great Buddha:
Glorious, without beginning or end,
In harmony with all phenomena.
Through this, oneself becomes
The Buddha, lord of all things.
Between the Buddha Vairocana
And this one there is not the slightest difference.

This is the supreme body of syllables, the Glory of the Vajra Lord of Great Utter Delight, Endowed with the Incomparable Amorous Lady of Utter Delight.

At the beginning, with oṃ, of the goddess;
At the end, the visarga and the two indivisible ones;
In the region in the middle of those two,
It is adorned with what is called he;
"Vajra great utter delight,"
And laughter is fully joined to it.
If, with this syllable mudrā,
One seals one's own heart,
Adorned with the ornament of garlands,
One becomes glorious that very instant.
Just as one has thought it in the mind,
He goes to the domain of the buddhas;
Therefore he sees the buddhas,
And sports with that lotus.
Then the assembly is delighted,
And from the perfect field of the buddhas
The buddhas bestow upon that yogin
Great bliss and siddhi.
Through acting and reversing,
And through seizing great bliss,
The lord of secret yoga
Is pleased by the great secret.
To the great wisdom joined with means

The Victor himself makes offering;
Through the union of vowels and consonants,
Great bliss is pleased.
The siddhis of bliss and of means
Should be accomplished in the manner of illusion.
Through this syllable mudrā,
Examine the exceeding, supreme siddhi.

This is the mudrā called She Who Is Endowed with the Incomparable Expanding Garland of the Bliss of Vajra Utter Delight, which bestows the siddhi that is the aim of all activities.

oṃ is made the crown at the beginning,
And at the end that sweet sound;
In the middle, what is called "he delight,"
"Great bliss, delight, vajra melody."
This mudrā of vajra great utter delight
Is joined with utter delight.
By writing it, by holding it,
And even by remembering it, it grants siddhi.
It frees from all wrongdoing,
And all merit draws near.
Abandoning all nonvirtue without remainder,
The mind goes forth adorned with the syllables of the mudrā.
The whole world everywhere pays him honor;
A thousand knowledge women worship him openly;
And the women of the vidyādharas and the celestial maidens
Fan him with hosts of white yak-tail whisks.
He attains the lord of the world, joined with supreme bliss.
The wise one, across the whole face of the sky,
With the yoginīs of Vajradhara's delight,
Their charming eyes wide open,
Piercing with the bliss of yogic conduct,
Sports in play, embracing them about the neck.
With the wondrous sweet sounds of vīṇā and flute,
Singing songs, he attains vast siddhi.
As many charming songs as there are,
The blissful bliss renowned in the world,

Transformed so as to be generated by the sound of bliss:
With a melody in harmony with them, this one accomplishes it.
By singing in song the melody kha ṭa ba da gar ja,
The lotus abides,
And siddhi is swiftly attained.
Through this, pure blessings,
Through this, blessings of bliss:
By applying this union,
All that brings desire will be attained.

This is the syllable mudrā Endowed with the Incomparable Melody of the Great Supreme Delight of Vajrasattva of Great Utter Delight.

Likewise oṃ is at the beginning;
In the middle, "he delight, great bliss,"
"Vajra dancer," and the two blisses.
This brings about all bliss,
The utter delight of the buddhas.
If the yogin seals with it,
He makes all endowed with bliss and goes forth.
In the great abode of Akaniṣṭha,
He keeps company with the buddhas;
He attains the great lord of the great maker of bliss,
The King of Dharma, great bliss.
As many movements and flourishes
As come from the treatises on dance,
And as many mudrās as there are:
Through nondual union, this is siddhi.
Oh, delight, great maker of bliss!
Oh, bliss, great bliss!
Oh, desire, great passion!
Oh, manifold one, great self!
These and others without measure,
The implements of the world:
Through the dance of the clear lotus,
The yogin who dances has siddhi.
This mudrā of all the buddhas
Displays the manifold dance;

By swiftly performing many dances,
One gains the siddhi of the treatises on dance.

This is the syllable mudrā called the Dance of the Delight-Maker of Great Bliss, the Glory of Vajra Great Utter Delight: the tenth in sequence, the third of the banner and the pennant.

The thirteenth syllable comes first;
"Vajra great utter delight,
Vajra body, great manifold one";
At the end, ja, like a blaze.
Like the moon and stars in the sky,
The wondrous wisdom of the mudrā:
Through this, setting oneself in equipoise with means,
Grasping the object to be grasped clearly,
Holding the splendor of molten gold,
One should imagine wisdom at the heart.
Like a vase of the sun in the sky,
He becomes so that very instant.
Through this one attains
All the buddhas themselves, most wondrous.
Joined with the bliss of all yogas,
It is the siddhi of the supreme vajra mind.
Having attained the great manifold one
Of the virtuous buddha Vajradhara,
With a mind unstained by the things of desire,
He relies upon great desire.

This is the great syllable mudrā called Endowed with the Incomparable Vajra Body, the vajra of glorious Vajrasattva, great utter delight, lord of all the tathāgatas, complete and without remainder.

Likewise oṃ is to be placed;
"Vajra great utter delight,
Vajra sound joined with bliss";
At the end it is to be joined with the wrathful one.
This mudrā is supreme bliss:
Even what is blocked off will be heard.
The whole essence of the three realms:

Hearing its sounds is siddhi.
Through this, all the buddhas themselves
Are siddhi in this very life;
He sports with women, lotus and utpala,
And with all the victors without exception.
By joining the vajra to the lotus,
The maker of delight is swift siddhi.

This is she who, through the meaning called Endowed with the Incomparable Sound of the Immeasurable Qualities of Glorious Vajrasattva of Great Utter Delight, accomplishes all glories.

oṃ descends as a drop upon the crown;
"Great utter delight, the one with the vajra,"
Joined with "vajra fragrance, bliss";
At the end, placed, wisdom is to be joined.
This goes before
The Great Manifold One of all the buddhas;
Through this Great Manifold One,
Manifold wisdom will be accomplished.
Adorned with the vajra self,
He sports with all who bear the marks.
Then, abiding in the dharmadhātu,
Through the union of vowels and consonants,
If he sports together with the maker of delight,
He gains the siddhi of the holy lord.
This, of Vajrasattva,
The wise, is called Utter Delight.

This is the syllable mudrā called She Who Is Endowed with the Incomparable Vajra Fragrance.

oṃ, having made the supreme uṣṇīṣas,
In the very center of Great Utter Delight,
The vajra taste, the great joining;
At the end, he, with two bindus.
By this one becomes utterly delighted.
Glorious incomparable bliss,
And the Blessed One, Vajrasattva himself,

Manifold union, manifold self,
Through the play of all the buddhas,
Will make inexhaustible offerings.
All the abodes of the buddhas,
And equality with space, are attained.

This, called the Lord of Utter Delight Endowed with the Banner of the Supreme Taste of Great Utter Delight, accomplishes all the aims of all sentient beings.

From the King of Explanations, Candraguhyatilaka, the Vajra Lord of the Body, Speech, and Mind of All the Tathāgatas, this is the second chapter, the Wheel of Dharma.

Then the Blessed One, Great Utter Delight, the glorious Vajrasattva, Samantabhadra himself, having taught from his own vajra body, speech, and mind the great maṇḍala called the Unfailing King of Great Utter Delight, fell silent.

Then all those tathāgatas, as many as the atoms of the entire expanse of space, surrounded by the secret dhāraṇīs and their attendants, preceded by great retinues of bodhisattvas, accompanied by all the sky-goers (ḍākas) without exception and by hosts of sky-goers, and with the outer and inner messengers and messenger women (dūtas and dūtīs) in great abundance, were utterly amazed and astonished.

Delighted and with eyes wide open,
They rose, and with majestic hands
They danced the dance of great delight;
Joining their palms and placing them
At the crown of the head, they bowed.
Exhorting him with this song,
They gave delight to the Lord:

"Oh, the Dharma is a great wonder!
Oh, the conduct is a great wonder!
Oh, the hidden is a great wonder!
Oh, bliss truly arises!
Oh, the meaning of Samantabhadra!
Oh, true union with utter delight!
Oh, bliss, the great purity!
Oh, bliss, the supreme bliss!

Oh, the true union of mantra!
Oh, the essence truly gathered!
Oh, abiding in the equality of mudrā!
Oh, the practice from which marvels arise!
Oh, she is the Perfection!
Oh, just as of the consort of power,
Oh, the manifold great purposes!
Oh, joining the three purities!
Oh, of the vajra in equal union,
Oh, by the opening of the lotus,
Oh, the joining of the two organs!
Oh, equal to the supreme!
Oh, the dance, the great purity!
Oh, the excellent song, stainless!
Oh, the cymbals resounding together!
Oh, the beating, and darkness dispelled!
Oh, the purifying garland of flowers!
Oh, the censer, so wholesome!
Oh, the lamp that dispels the darkness!
Oh, the fragrance, so very cool!
Oh, yoga joined in equality!
Oh, transformation like the sky!
Oh, buddha, the supreme vajra!
Oh, jewel that brings forth supreme bliss!
Oh, possessed of the manifold supreme lotus!
Oh, maker of manifold illusions!
Oh, the wondrous buddhas!
Oh, the wondrous heroes!
Oh, the wondrous beings!
Oh, the wondrous gods!"

To the Vajra of Great Utter Delight
All the adorned ones offered praise.
Through the graceful bearing of Vajrasattva,
Joy and the making of bliss will arise.

Then all the Perfections,
The maṇḍala of the retinue, were delighted,

And bowing to the Great Being,
They praised him with supreme song:

"The lotus face is smiling,
Dancing with wide eyes,
Moving hands and feet,
Utterly delighted, moving the brows,
Glancing from the corner of the eye with the faintest smile;
Full-fleshed thighs entwined with the breasts,
The curve of the waist spread wide,
The sides of the hips broad and beautiful;
In passion the teeth press lightly,
The row of teeth like kunda flowers and the moon,
With fierce eyes heaving repeated sighs:
a la la la ho!

You whose very self is devoted to the samaya, who pacify suffering,
Great Utter Delight, we praise you with delight.
Enjoying bliss through bliss, you reveal the inconceivable nature of supreme bliss.
Endowed with the power of intention, you tame beings by way of great marvels;
Secret Tilaka, here in these three worlds you teach the siddhis as foremost.
That Dharma for purifying the three worlds the Sugata has made for their sake.
Endowed with wondrous qualities, arising from the bliss of samaya,
Treasury of bliss, conduct of bliss, please sport in joy as is fitting.
Bringing forth everything in the very state of joy at the center of the bindu,
Urge on with bliss this path of beings, the essence of awakening, and perform the approach.
Wondrous one, abide delighting in the great awareness of the samaya of the tathāgatas.
We too, free from all perceptions, abide, our conduct marked by restraint;
Even the king of the Brahmās, endowed with power, depends upon that.
a la la la ho!
Draw the wide-eyed one near, bring her in, and sport as is fitting.
With that water of pure wisdom wash away the evil of beings.
Together with the great-souled consort, the Loving One, please strive with zeal,

And with that water of great compassion, pure by nature, empower us!
Because we wish to attain the wisdom whose nature is unmoving equality,
Abiding in these three, these three great samayas,
Into the expanse of Candraguhyatilaka we shall go without doubt."

With this king of songs,
Out of deep weariness with existence,
Singing the song, one will swiftly rouse
All the buddhas, just as one wishes.

Then the Blessed One, praised with this king of songs, was utterly delighted, and with the vajra great bliss of utter delight he gave delight to all those queens of the vajra, jewel, lotus, and karma families, together with the tathāgatas and bodhisattvas. For all the tathāgatas, the hosts of great lords of yoga together with the bodhisattvas, the sky-goers together with the hosts of sky-going women (ḍākinīs), and those born of the outer and inner vajra family, he performed, with great display, the dance and song of great utter delight, drumming, peaceful clapping of the palms, and the rest. Then he entered into equipoise in the samādhi called the Great Samaya, Vajra Utter Delight, Glorious Mistress of Desire, and in bliss fell silent.

Then all of them, delighted,
Became utterly delighted,
And joining their palms, upon the ground
They set their knees firmly down,
And for the sake of the Dharma made this request:
"The maṇḍala, the very self of samaya,
Blessed One, out of delight, please teach,
That by which, with the bliss
Of beings' very bliss, we may accomplish the maṇḍala."

Then the Blessed One entered into equipoise in the samādhi called Glory of Fully Enjoying the Desire of Samaya, and made the maṇḍala.

With the two hands, together with dance,
One should press the palms together in front.
On the tips of all the fingers
Imagine the hosts of the Perfections.
By the conventions of their names
All the fingers should be identified.

Crossing the thumbs one over the other,
Imagine them as the stūpa of wisdom.
Turning the vajra stūpa outward,
One should spread the rest out like light.
This is the excellent Perfection of Wisdom
Of all the buddhas.
By merely binding it,
The buddhas bless one with awakening.
Sealed with this mudrā,
One comes and goes in the eternal palace.
Endowed with the glory of the Buddha Vairocana,
One takes on the color of refined gold.
If one endowed with wisdom applies it,
Through this one swiftly gains siddhi.
Having blessed with this a fortunate maiden of magical display,
And having danced,
Placing the vajra in the lotus,
One accomplishes it as the mind remains there;
Then, taking up that mind,
That wise one drinks it,
And in the accomplished maṇḍala of the dhāraṇī
One goes to true siddhi.
Through wisdom and through magic,
One attains the magical powers of the tathāgatas.
The wise one, the buddha vajra,
Can never be overpowered by anyone.

This is the Perfection of Wisdom called Bliss of Fully Enjoying Utter Delight.

From that same joining of the palms, with the wrathful fingers raised,
Placing the thumbs crossed as in the cross-legged posture,
Making the manifold garland blaze,
The yogin spreads out the rest.
This is the clear Perfection of Wisdom
Of all the vajras.
Sealed with this mudrā,
The unsurpassed vajra wisdom
Will swiftly be attained through this.

Sealed with this mudrā,
By merely binding it,
One destroys evil far and wide.
Long life, glory, and a share of wisdom
Will be attained by the vajra holder.
By merely being empowered with this,
He becomes Lord Vajradhara;
Marked with the vajra center,
He comes and goes on the great ground.
This is the vajra family that brings joy;
Keeping company with the vajra women,
In the maṇḍala of the vajra dhāraṇī
He will attain the very vajra mind.
Just as siddhi abides,
The buddhas and the vajra heroes
He draws forth in a single instant.
Liberating and pleasing,
Sealing, and likewise bewildering,
Healing and devouring,
And generating one another.

This is the mudrā called Vajra Garland, the great vajra empowerment of all the tathāgatas, which brings the bliss of utter delight and makes one an incomparable vajra.

From that same vajra joining of the palms,
Bending back the wrathful fingers,
The remaining fingers as before:
This mudrā is empowerment.
Fevers, grahas, poisons, and the like
It removes at once.
By merely binding it,
One gains the delight of the buddhas.
Through this very one, empowerment;
Through this very one, sublime bliss;
Through this very one, the great king;
Through this very one, sublime glory.
By making play with this,

One accomplishes the summoning of supreme joy.
If, having blessed a person with this,
One practices it for half a day,
At once he
Holds the splendor of the glorious vajra
And becomes like the light of twelve suns.
It happens within seven days, not by other means.
The discipline of all the buddhas
And all virtue he brings under his power;
He dispels the darkness of those who seek liberation;
The wise one becomes the supreme mudrā.

This is the great samaya mudrā called Garland Endowed with the Incomparable Splendor of the Great Bliss of All the Tathāgatas, which brings great bliss in the three worlds of the three banners.

The very mudrā of the Perfection,
Free of the virtuous wrathful fingers,
Is the Dharma of the Perfection,
Wholly free of words and phrases.
By binding this mudrā,
One becomes a lord from within the dharmadhātu.
Empowered by all the buddhas,
He becomes the sublime lord.
Through devotion to the purity of all,
He becomes the holder of the supreme red lotus.
Through creating the illusion of the lotus,
He becomes the Great Manifold One.
It removes all suffering
And gives everything to all beings.
Great desire, its faults abandoned,
Becomes like amṛta.
When this is swiftly danced,
There is nothing it does not accomplish.
Through this union of the lotus,
One attains permanent supreme bliss.

This is the mudrā called Glorious Lotus Garland That Intoxicates with Great Utter Delight, which makes glorious and utterly delightful the aims of all.

This same one, turned around
And placed at the crown of the second,
Removes stains without remainder;
It becomes the Great Manifold One.
As soon as one is empowered with this,
One makes the three realms manifold.
Manifold lord, great king,
Manifold form and manifold self,
Sublime bliss of every accomplishment,
King, lord of all desires,
Accomplishing every desired aim:
Everything is accomplished through this.
Having blessed a woman with this,
With a dark-blue one and a white one with rouged cheeks,
By dancing together with her
One becomes the great Manifold Lord.
Having blessed the dark-blue field-born women and the garland women,
At the three times,
Performing the approach by night until the end,
One will attain the siddhis of the activities.
Women of low caste and outcaste women,
Dancers and likewise performers,
Blessed with the wisdom mudrā,
Will gain the approach and siddhi.

This is the mudrā called Giver of the Manifold Bliss of Utter Delight, which accomplishes the supreme for all who desire.

Those who rely on these mudrās,
In the way of dance, their own abode,
Through the samaya of the supreme samaya,
Come into the power of great siddhi.

Joining that same palm,
One binds it with the vajra binding.
Then, bringing forth the power that makes for joy,
One should hold it in the manner of sovereignty.
This, of the Lord of Utter Delight,
Is the beloved supreme Perfection.

It intoxicates the buddhas
And bewilders the heroes too.
By merely binding it,
It terrifies those who act without knowing.
The aims of the activity, as commanded,
They will gladly carry out like servants.
Blessed by this,
One becomes like the king of great bliss.
Dancing together with joy,
One goes to the ground of the lord of desire.

This is the great mudrā of union called She Who Is Endowed with the Nondual Bliss of the Great Delight of Samantabhadrī, the Utter Delight of the glorious Vajrasattva.

Through the union held at the heart,
This will perform all activities
And pierce all the māras.
The Victor whose conduct is free of desire,
And all the sugatas who have passed into nirvāṇa,
All of them this rouses.
Having pleased all the buddhas,
It swiftly sets them to the activity.
Of Indra, Upendra, and the great lord
It crushes all the malevolent ones,
And through the great terrifying fierce one
It torments all the malevolent.
By inserting the vajra in the lotus,
Holding the lower lip with the fangs,
And crossing the fingers with one another,
One should stretch out the arms and dance.
Through the Great Manifold One fully unfolding,
One attains the bliss of great bliss.
This accomplishes the desire and the liberation
Of all the buddhas.
If one is sealed with this mudrā,
One flies wherever one wishes.
Dancing in the bond of utter delight,

Through the very means of the sky consort,
With the pressing of twisting one another,
When it is bound, one gains siddhi through this.
At once he
Is worshipped by gods and asuras;
Indra, Upendra, and the great lord,
The sun, the moon, Yama, and Varuṇa,
Bowing with the crowns of their heads,
Lend him their own supreme glory.
All the vajra holders too,
Lending their own glorious might,
Gladden that steadfast one,
And he fully accomplishes the buddhas' purposes.
Through this, those of the way of activity
Come into accord with the activities.
The lord of yogins, by performing it,
Is joined equally with all the buddhas,
And through nondual union with the dhāraṇī
Performs every activity the mind desires,
By smiles, and postures, and things hidden,
Done through conduct and through dance.
Others, too, find that great siddhi:
By opening the petals of the lotus,
Fully accomplishing the bodhicitta,
The practitioner accomplishes the lotus,
The glory of the nondual bliss
Of all the tathāgatas.

This, called the Lotus Petal of Utter Delight, brings the bliss of great utter delight.

That same joining of the palms is bound;
Holding the binding upward,
One raises the two little fingers,
And does likewise with the two thumbs.
This mudrā is called the makara,
And is said to bear the banner.
It is the emanation of Vajrasattva,

Bringing those free of desire to passion.
By this mudrā one goes to the great palace
Of the Blissful Realm.
Arriving there, one turns
The unsurpassed wheels of Dharma.
Surrounded by the buddhas' Perfection goddesses,
Having summoned those who have abandoned evil,
In the way of fierce conduct
One performs the approach for ten million eons.
The buddhas who abide in perfect awakening
One pleases through this.
Then, delighted, the Great Manifold One,
From whom manifold wisdom arises,
Having spoken his own samaya,
One accomplishes the great being.
All the unsurpassed siddhis as well,
All of them, are accomplished through this.
Blessing it, endowed with union,
If one contemplates it closely at the heart,
Through this way that is the essence of activity,
Set it to perform all activities.
The joyful taste of dance and song,
The playing of cymbals and drums,
The lute, the flute, and the clay drum:
These one should accomplish through this mudrā.

This is the mudrā called She Who Is Endowed with the Incomparable Delight of the Mind of the Glorious Vajra Great Utter Delight.

Holding that same joining of the palms evenly,
Dancing with sway upon sway,
Binding it with the great binding,
One should make the great purification twofold.
With the two fists at the waist,
One should hold steady, swaying to the left.
With this mudrā, having worshipped the Victors and the rest
With sublime bliss,
If one dances in the union of swaying,

One accomplishes all siddhis.
Through the union of mere swaying,
It overcomes all arrogance.
The vidyā women of the gods and asuras
In ten million offer worship.
Utter delight, the great supreme bliss,
Will abide everywhere in dance.
Of nāginīs, gods, and asuras,
And likewise of kiṃnaras, he becomes the lord.
He becomes the husband of the sky-going women,
The great bliss of all the yoginīs,
The pure self of the dhāraṇī women,
The lord of the secret Perfections.
Through this union of activity
He is said to perform all activities.
The great secret of all the buddhas:
Through the union of the great secret, siddhi.

This is the mudrā called Glorious Utter Delight, Great Bliss, Hidden in Liberating All Beings, which accomplishes all.

Holding that same mudrā evenly,
With the petals of the hands dancing,
By tossing them swiftly upward,
Swiftness of going is the siddhi.
With this the sublime marvel of all the buddhas
Is worshipped; if one worships through union and dance,
One gains the siddhi that performs all activities.
Those who have no siddhi,
And those who have no bliss,
If they are sealed with this mudrā,
Will go to the maṇḍala of the sky.
Through it all the activities
Accomplish the sublime marvel.
The great queen and the tathāgatas:
Through this one accomplishes them.
Further, the supremely vast
Dharmadhātu, equal and unequal,

The sublime queen and the tathāgatas:
Through the union of the mudrā, siddhi.

This is the mudrā called Flower Garland of the Glorious Great Bliss, Vajra Utter Delight.

Casting that same one toward the lower side,
One should form it a little above.
Through this the supreme bliss of all the buddhas,
Their minds, are satisfied.
By merely binding this,
The māras go very far away.
Binding the mudrā and threatening with it,
Frightened, they grant siddhi.
The buddhas who abide in the three samayas
Will be worshipped through this.
Then the Lord, pleased by this,
Bestows the supreme means.
Through the union of binding the mudrā,
This will accomplish everything.
If he does it continually, the yogin
Will accomplish every purpose.
It removes all evil
And brings sublime bliss,
And in this life and the next
He goes to the state of the mudrā.

This is the mudrā called Satisfying the Bliss of Glorious Great Utter Delight; it is the Glorious Lady of Utter Delight, who abandons all stains.

From that same joining of the palms, raising the thumbs,
The rest like the bright sun:
This makes supremely radiant
The wisdom of all the buddhas.
Delusion that has circled from beginningless time
It removes through this;
As soon as it is bound in equipoise,
All the buddhas bless one.
Stainless wisdom of equality,

The lotus net, great joy,
The manifold net, great glory,
And the great maker of bliss will be attained.

This is the mudrā called She Who Is Endowed with the Incomparable Glory of the Vajra Great Delight.

With the right and the left hands
One should dance a majestic dance;
Joining that same palm evenly,
Place the left fist on the crown of the head.
This mudrā of the Victors
Accomplishes all offerings.
The virtue of accomplishing all aims
And auspicious victory it brings.
By merely binding it,
Clouds of offerings spread far and wide;
Infinite stainless splendor
And a buddha field are the siddhi.
Joining it through the union of the mudrā,
If one joins it in a single instant,
The perfect buddhas and their supreme heirs,
All of them, will descend through this.
Through the union of the manifold,
If one dances manifold dances,
All the heroes come from every side;
Excellence is accomplished through this.

This is the mudrā called She Who Increases the Mind of Bliss of Glorious Great Utter Delight.

This completes the third chapter, called Infinity of Eons, the great maṇḍala of the Undoubted Vajra of Utter Delight, the wisdom maṇḍala of the mudrā of the samaya of the great secret, from the boundless explanation of the Lord of the Body, Speech, and Mind of All the Tathāgatas, the glorious Samantabhadra, Great Utter Delight, the great Vairocana whose nature is bliss: Candraguhyatilaka, the supreme secret of all the tathāgatas, the supreme perfection.

Then the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, having taught this maṇḍala of the mudrā of the wisdom of the samaya of the secret perfection, again remained blissfully silent. Then all those tathāgatas, all the hosts of the Perfections, the great yoginīs, and all the hosts of sky-goers and sky-going women were amazed, and they revived all the hosts of ravishers belonging to the outer and inner vajra family. Rising from that, they danced, and with eyes wide in utter delight they gazed again and again at the Blessed One, and singing this supreme song of bliss, they gave him delight:

"Great Self, through the play of manifold bliss,
You reveal the glory of the wondrous and marvelous nature of reality, arising and unarising.
The maṇḍala of utter bliss has appeared in this world;
Please bring it forth from the center of the consort, pure by nature.
Sporting with bliss in the wondrous and marvelous nature of reality,
Reviving those gathered whose nature is amṛta,
Practicing the very substance of the secret bindu, which is like space,
Holding sway over the cause of enjoying perfect bliss:
This path of supreme awakening is free of the extremes of affliction;
Source of bliss, at the gate without birth and death, the lotus is utterly pure;
Untainted by afflictions, it abides as illusion, like the disk of the moon in water.
How wonderful! Samantabhadra, vast awareness beyond conception!
Being without substance, through the play of delight in the Dharma it becomes dhāraṇī.
The supreme bliss of all the buddhas, the elixir of amṛta,
As it rests in bliss, you grant to all.
Oh, supreme bliss, sport with bliss as is fitting!
Satisfy with bliss the beings whose karma is suffering!
Loving-eyed one, rising over all beings as the sun of compassion,
Light up the thick darkness of delusion with the mind of awakening.
This the King of Play who gives bliss proclaimed to the gathered assembly.
With that mind of supreme awakening, empower the essence supremely!"

With this mudrā of song,
If one exhorts him moment by moment,
The very self of utter delight
Abides before one and grants siddhi.

Then the Blessed One, Lord of the Bliss of Great Utter Delight, the great Samantabhadra, the great Vajra Candraguhyatilaka, being praised and exhorted by those measureless vajra sky-goers of the great secret and by those great hosts of yogins and yoginīs of the supreme perfection, entered into equipoise in this king of samādhis called Glory of Enjoying the Great Bliss of Utter Delight of All Secrets, and drew forth from his own vajra body, speech, and mind this great maṇḍala of the yoginīs called the Undoubted Samaya of Great Utter Delight.

It is square and has four gates,
Adorned with four porticoes,
With tassels of silk and of bells,
Beautifully adorned with sun and moon,
Ornamented with clusters of jewels and pearls,
Adorned with necklaces and bracelets,
With manifold parasols spread above,
Adorned with manifold garlands and cloths;
It has four cords,
And eight supreme pillars stand well placed.
On the joy-making seat in the center,
Beautifully adorned with silver and the like,
Covered with manifold lotuses and silk,
All of these are called the seats.
In the center, Vajra Utter Delight
Should be placed upon that seat,
Clad in manifold ornaments
Like countless red lotuses,
Wearing a crown ornament of wish-fulfilling jewels,
Made beautiful by a jeweled topknot;
With countless silk streamers hanging down,
The head should be made beautiful as with flowing streams.
Self of all the manifold buddhas,
In whom manifold wisdom fully abides,
His lotus eyes slightly widened,
The joy-maker bows slightly to the left;
With his right hand he holds the great vajra,
Intent on brandishing it at the heart.
Endowed with these and other qualities,
He is set out first of all.
A disciple, or else someone else,

Adorned with all the marks,
Should be blessed in the proper way
And placed in the middle of the center.
Oneself, too, in equipoise,
Foremost in such qualities,
When seated on the central seat,
Says, "I am Utter Delight."
By this the disciple is blessed,
Perfect in performing all activities,
And one empowers him as well
With the secret that arises from vajra and lotus.
Having sought out a lovely maiden
Endowed with the qualities of utter delight and the rest,
At throat, forehead, heart, and crown
Meditating on the syllables of the deity and the others,
With the sign blazing as the mudrā,
Through the mudrā of embracing oneself,
Joining vajra and lotus in equal union,
One should place them all in the proper way.
In front, the goddess Maddening One,
Biting her lower lip, delights in the taste;
Of a color mingling white and red,
Fully endowed with every ornament,
Supreme, sixteen years of age:
The one with wisdom places her in front.
On the right, the goddess Slayer,
Intent on drawing the arrow, her weapon,
Adorned with necklaces and anklets,
Twenty years of age,
Like a mountain of melting gold,
Her lotus eyes slightly blue,
She gives delight to the Great Being:
She should be placed in the proper way.
Behind, the goddess Bewilderer,
With the radiance of the red lotus's hue,
The beautiful one of the makara banner,
Twenty-one years of age,

Delights in the taste of the joy-maker's desire;
She wears manifold garments,
Is clad in manifold ornaments,
And is well trained in the arts of dance,
The manifold lotus union and the rest: so she is placed.
On the left is the Great Manifold One,
Trained in manifold purposes,
Twelve years of age,
Very diligent in yoga,
She who intoxicates all beings,
Gods, asuras, and humans;
She is clad in manifold ornaments
And wears garments of manifold silk.
In all the corners,
The goddesses of form, sound, smell, taste, and touch,
With incense, flowers, and fragrance,
Of great splendor and radiant with light,
Should be placed as is fitting.
In all the directions of the gates,
Endowed with the mudrās of their own activities,
Fortunate and devoted to joy,
The four gatekeepers should be placed.
And further, manifold others:
The lute, the flute, and percussion,
The clay drum, the great drum, and the mukunda,
The muraja and the dara,
Dance, song, and great laughter,
And manifold musical instruments:
The joy-making maṇḍala should be set out.
That is the whole of the outer maṇḍala.

Outside this maṇḍala
Place the vajra ḍākinīs,
Riding upon kings of the pretas,
Heroines who hold terrifying forms,
Fortunate ones bearing their own hand implements,
Threatening with malevolent minds,

Eating and consuming flesh and blood,
Entrails, marrow, and fat.
Seated so as to form a maṇḍala,
The maṇḍala of the host should be set out.
She Who Delights and She Who Draws,
She Who Slays and She Who Emanates,
Those of the host of vajra ḍākinīs,
Should be placed in the east.
Great Splendor and She Who Blazes,
Terrifying One and the Donkey, in the south:
By means of studying the treatises
The wise should place them in the proper way.
Great Passion and Free of Passion,
Wheel Lady and Sealing Lady,
Joining them through thorough union,
Should be placed in the west as is fitting.
Manifold Body and Protectress,
Yakṣiṇī and Thorough Ravisher,
Blessed with mantra and mudrā,
The mantra master places in the north as is fitting.
Those placed in the eastern corner
Are Crow-Faced, with eyes to match,
Terrifying Eyes and Terrifying Face;
Made to accord as is fitting,
They are seated well upon preta seats,
Holding manifold supreme colors,
Their hands holding knives and skull bowls,
Supremely eating flesh and blood.
Those placed in the southwest corner
Are Laughing One and Long Owl-Faced,
Wrathful Dog-Faced and Pig-Faced,
Great Belly and Hanging Belly.
In the northwest corner
Are Camel-Faced and Donkey-Faced,
Wrathful Goat-Faced and Cat-Faced,
Who eat entrails from the head on.
In the northeast corner

Are those holding white skeletons,
Wrathful ones clad in garlands of bone,
And Hanging Belly, who holds a vase.
Intent on fighting one another
Are the retinue of jackals,
Their terrifying faces baring fangs,
Taking on forms through transformation.
In all the directions of the gatekeepers,
To be placed at the four gates:
In the northern direction, Companion of the Cry;
Kumbhakarṇa in the east;
And in the west, the Destroyer.

In the south, King Yama is to be placed.
These and the other supreme kings
Are encircled on all sides by ḍākinīs.
Vases of various kinds,
Made of gold and of silver,
Well wrapped in various cloths,
Adorned with flowers and fruits,
Filled with the five nectars,
Furnished with the five medicines,
Furnished with the five precious substances,
And adorned with the five grains:
Sixteen such vases are to be set out,
Or twelve, or eight, or else half that,
Or at the very least just a single one,
Set out in their proper order.
In the center, a vase of the supreme taste,
Filled with the water of the pledge,
Of gold, of silver, or even of copper,
Or made of iron or of clay.
Moon and sun, urine,
And a rich, oily drink,
The substances that come from all the senses,
Thoroughly mixed with one measure of meat:
This supreme taste, surpassing all,

Is prepared in the midst of the gathering.
By tasting it as one would a drink,
The wise vajra one lives for an eon.
With various kinds of choice food,
With things to eat and things to chew, make offerings.
With the five offering foods
And the boundless five qualities of sense pleasure,
To the boundless host of yoginīs
Make offerings moment by moment.
The mantra adept, duly in meditative equipoise,
Gives torma to the bhūtas.
To each and every one of the deities,
With the mudrā of Heruka,
Bless their own torma,
And having invited them, offer it with purity.
That host of dhāraṇī goddesses,
Having been pleased, departs again.
Into the maṇḍala of the great yoginī
The supreme disciple is to be brought.
A most beautiful woman of equal conduct,
Well wrapped in various garments,
Is to be held by the left hand.
With the mudrā of the enjoyment of Utter Delight
Bring them in, and at the corner of the gate
The wise one should proclaim the pledge:
"Beyond this there is nothing at all that is not to be done.
With the very mind of skillful means and wisdom,
Always free of hesitation,
Enjoy the five qualities of sense pleasure.
Further, those who have broken the pledge,
And whatever persons oppress the sacred,
Summon them through your discipline
And drink their great blood.
Those who revile the master,
And those who do not carry out his commands,
When they flee, their great blood
The wise one should drink from their hearts.

Those who harm the Three Jewels
And those who harm the master too,
By gathering the vajra wrathful ones
And meditating on the pledge, are to be liberated."
Then the pledge is given to drink.
The vajra nectar of supreme taste
Is to be placed in a great conch.
The water of vajra nectar is given to drink:
"Alas! This is the water of hell.
It will dwell throughout your heart.
If you guard the pledge, it bestows accomplishment.
Drink this water of vajra nectar!"
oṃ vajra udaka hūṃ ṭha
Having recited this pledge a hundred times
And blessed it, have him drink.
Otherwise it would not become the pledge,
And this also becomes accomplishment itself.
"I am one who delights in the fortune of the pledge":
The disciple is made to utter this mantra.
Standing at the corner of the gate, one should ask:
"O, in what joy do you have faith?"
And the one entering should say:
"I, the fortunate one, in supreme bliss,
In the magical display of Utter Delight, I delight;
In supreme joy I delight."
Then into the center of the supreme yoginī's maṇḍala
A flower is to be cast.
The deity on whom the flower falls,
In that very deity lies the accomplishment.
Then with the mudrā of empowerment
Confer empowerment on the crown of the head.
With the four kinds of vases as well,
Evenly set out, together with the fifth,
Having entered the lotus maṇḍala,
Then confer empowerment once again.
As is fitting, the consorts
Declare, "I myself am fortunate."

Whichever deity the flower went to,
That very deity is to be relied upon.
"This consort, She Who Delights,
You must always practice."
Then the lord of victors should empower that disciple
By the gathering of the inner hidden,
By entering into secret union,
As one endowed with union.
What is drawn from the vajra and the lotus
Is to be taken up with the thick finger and the finger of power,
And placed on the vajra palate:
Permanent, virtuous, great bliss.
Saying, "Oh, the bliss of the pledge!"
And "Oh, bliss!", it is to be taken.
This is called the secret,
The supreme method of empowerment.
The great-souled vajra master
Places the vajra in his own mouth.
When the great being is drawn forth,
The mind attains the bliss of awakening.
This is supremely secret,
The bliss of empowerment.
To disciples who do not understand,
None of this is to be proclaimed.
The vajra master should examine
Again and again.
As soon as he is empowered by this,
The disciple becomes a gaṇapati, a lord of the gathering.
He will blissfully become a master
Of the buddhas and the vajra holders.
The lord in whom the consorts delight
Is declared to be the lord of the buddhas.
He becomes the consort of the sky-goers,
Lord of the mountains and of all beings.
Then the empowerment of wisdom and primordial wisdom
Is to be given to the supreme disciple.
That consort the guru himself

Blesses, and then,
So that the fruit of accomplishment is quickly attained,
Is to give her to the disciple.
Through the most hidden empowerment,
The vajra master, in the proper way,
So that the wise one may be free of doubt,
Bestows these four kinds.
From then on, to the disciple,
Whatever little there is from all the tantras,
The things hidden in the manner of letters,
The supreme secret, is to be taught.
Then the disciple rises,
Touches his head to the master's feet,
And the sovereignty of a king, sacred bliss,
Everything, is to be offered as the fee.
To all those consorts as well
Gifts are offered as they please.
Whatever the master wants, however little,
Even a gift he has only thought of in his mind,
Out of fear of transgressing the pledge,
All of these are to be offered.
To the master, the supreme of gifts:
Offering one distinguished in family,
One's own mother upon a lion throne,
Given to the buddha, is the supreme gift.
Elephants, jewels and gold,
And a sister are the supreme gifts for the guru.
This is the family of Vajrasattva;
That gift is the supreme of gifts.
A wife who is a precious lotus,
Chariots and horses richly adorned,
Various pure jewels,
Most beautiful with garlands of pearls,
And a daughter adorned with nets of jewels:
These are for the Viśvavajra.

The sovereignty of a king,
And a wife are to be offered to the guru;
Magical mounts of every kind,
Elephants and horses richly adorned.
To the lord of all the tathāgatas,
The guru, offer them with devotion.
This seal of the guru's fee
Is to be given by the wise vajra disciple,
If he desires all that brings bliss,
With a mind of joy and devotion.
Through this and similar practices,
The bliss of Utter Delight, without any doubt,
Is swiftly attained,
And one becomes the foremost master.
Victor, sovereign of all dharmas,
He becomes the supreme wise vajra one.
King of the family of all jewels,
And likewise in all the various families,
Endowed with the glory of all the lotus families,
Lord of all the vajra families,
And of all the families of the buddhas,
He becomes the supreme chief of the victors.
In the dance of the wheel of the maṇḍala,
Since he and the host of disciples have come together,
Vajrasattva, the great bliss,
The very nature of the being, is to be worshiped.
By way of mutual and other such methods,
Through the practice of offering to wisdom,
The great vajra abiding in skillful means,
One comes to make offering to all the ḍākinīs.
The outer, the hidden, the secret and so on,
The supreme inner offerings,
Abiding in the manner of the practice of the mudrā,
Are to be sealed properly and offered.
With body, speech and mind that bring bliss,
One should worship the very nature of offering.
By experiencing the play of desire,
One attains the offering of nirvāṇa.

Through the rite of all offerings,
Knowing the distinction of self-awareness,
If one accomplishes all the practices,
One swiftly attains all accomplishments.
Seeing this wheel of the maṇḍala,
With a mind joyful, pleased and satisfied,
One bows to Vajrasattva
And makes supplication to one's own maṇḍala.
The hundred postures of the great Bliss Maker,
Five by the distinction of families,
And for each of the deities as well,
Supreme and endless distinctions of mind.
What has not arisen in past times,
The vast and endless Dharma, is taught.
Bound up by attachments,
Tormented by suffering, they go to the end.
The enjoyments of supreme desire
They follow according to their inclination and enjoy,
Yet they never become attached,
And have minds risen up through bliss.
Proceeding to the heart of awakening
Is by the vows and by the mind.

Then the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, lord of all utter delight, laughing broadly and utterly delighted, with a mind that gazes from the corner of the eye, entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Glory of the Cross-Legged Posture of Total Enjoyment, and drew forth from the vajra of the body, speech and mind of his own mudrā's primordial wisdom itself the posture called the Glory of the Great Cross-Legged Posture.

In the manner of right and left,
Both feet are raised,
So that one's own thighs are not seen,
And the root posture is to be bound.
In the manner of a dancer in union,
One dances with the practice of dance.
The great bliss of the vajra seat:
Through this one will be victorious over Māra.

All the vicious ones and enemies
Are conquered in an instant; what need is there to say more?
Through this seat of utter delight
One swiftly attains perfect awakening.
The indivisible, together with the bindu,
And in the lower part the six syllables:
The one possessed of wisdom stirs and recites them.
When it arises, phaṭ is said.
The lotus and the indivisible are drawn,
And the practice joined with the bindu is to be done.
The indivisible is fully joined with oṃ,
With the fierce visarga, in the source of bliss.
One who sports with a woman
By this means for seven days
Sees the great yoga of the buddhas
Who fill the whole of space.
They exhort the great being
Who abides in the enjoyment of Utter Delight,
And with what arises from the consort's lotus
They confer the empowerment of the supreme Bliss Maker.
Then, having attained the bliss of utter joy,
That being is accomplished.
Without beginning and without end
He enjoys all that he desires.
He is endowed with long life, glory and abundance.
From grahas, poison and fevers,
From the harassment of ḍākinīs,
And from sinful saṃsāra he is freed,
And he roams through all the realms.
His splendor is like the rising sun.
Blazing with a likeness of all kinds,
He illuminates all things,
And through this he takes away
The sickness, grief and great fear of all sentient beings.
Through practice with this mudrā,
The five wisdoms are to be taught.
This is called the Cross-Legged Posture of Play, which accomplishes all the aims of the activities of the great mudrā.

Draw one's own feet together in the center,
Bind them with the feet,
And link them as in the posture of the being.
By merely binding this,
It is held to accomplish the three realms.
The syllables are as before.
By striving at union with one's own deity,
Whether one meditates or else stirs,
By this the mantra practitioner gains accomplishment.
Holding the mind on the mantra with purity,
Having cultivated the meditation for seven days,
One becomes perfect accomplishment itself.
If, having sealed with this mudrā,
One displays the practice thoroughly,
One will without doubt obtain kingship,
And it fulfills every need, like a wish-fulfilling jewel.
This is the vajra cross-legged posture.

Taking hold of the consort and binding her,
One joins in the manner of the jewel,
And one's own feet are not seen.
This is the cross-legged posture of all jewels.
This, the jewel of all jewels,
Destroys poverty and want.
She takes away all evil,
Removes all harmful poisons,
Bewilders all the vicious,
And destroys all enemies.
She makes all the wrathful ones smile.
If one seals the vicious ones,
Undistracted for a single month,
By this one gains the accomplishment of kingship.
It performs every activity, like a wish-fulfilling jewel.
If one wishes to accomplish oneself
As a king, supremely marvelous,
The jewel mind, the jewel mark,
Pressing in the manner of the secret mudrā,

A king victorious over the three realms
Is accomplished in just half a month.
This is the jewel posture.

Likewise, placing both feet,
Joined in the likeness of a lotus,
Oneself, or another as well,
The wise one should accomplish the bliss of the lotus.
By this all sentient beings,
And in short the pure buddhas,
And all the vajra suns without exception,
Come under one's power without doubt.
Of the great palace of the Blissful Realm,
This Bliss Maker brings attainment.
Through all the realms of sentient beings
The great being goes and comes.
This is the lotus posture.

Likewise, having spread the cross-legged posture,
One should practice union in various ways.
Through the practice of the great mantra adept,
The mantra adept, most diligent in the syllables,
If he recites and meditates on them,
Will attain lasting accomplishment.
Undistracted, by the former incense,
All the activities are seized.
By abiding in the center of the various,
One will attain the unsurpassed accomplishment.
This is the various posture.

Then, spreading the cross-legged posture of the ḍākinī,
And seizing all the blood,
The two feet of the consort
One raises oneself onto the nape of the neck.
Through the approach of the practice
Of the vajra ḍākinī, all the blood is seized.
In equipoise, if one raises
One foot of the consort to the neck,
As one endowed with union,

It seizes all foods:
Drinks, things to eat and things to chew,
And with the clothing and ornaments one is covered.
Likewise, within just seven days,
It performs all activities without doubt.
It seizes the great supreme glory
Of Brahmā, of those who seek to belong, and of Indra.
In the manner of raising the hand,
One crosses over the three realms in stages.
By closing the eyes,
One destroys the three destinies.
In equipoise like a tortoise,
If one binds it, undistracted, for a moment,
It seizes all vicious creatures,
Enemies, and those who practice and those who do not.
In equipoise like a frog,
One should circle in the manner of a maṇḍala.
It bewilders all without exception,
And crosses over the three realms.
In equipoise through the desire to realize,
The three worlds are to be sealed.
In equipoise through the lord of dance,
One makes the three worlds dance.
In equipoise through the bell,
The three worlds are to be struck.
By binding the cross-legged posture of the youth,
One attains the great bliss of the buddhas.
Having taken the half cross-legged posture in equipoise,
If one presses down with the second,
All the three realms are subdued,
And all that one desires is accomplished.
Through the equipoise of She Who Delights,
The cross-legged posture attains utter joy;
She Who Delights is the enchanting one,
The accomplishment of all the three realms.
Having set out the vidyādhara posture,
The three realms are to be pressed down in an instant.

Through the binding of the consort,
Condensed, the victory over the three realms,
The three worlds are fully conquered,
And in an instant one becomes the lord of the three realms.
Always joined to one another,
The two arms are drawn in,
And by blocking all the doors,
The thick fangs are firmly joined.
In the manner of stretching and bending the right,
One threatens with the pressing of subjugation,
And urges on by the practice of the indivisible;
With a wrathful mind one is to taste.
The stretching and bending of the left is to be joined;
Swiftly, by pressing, it is to be raised,
And with the hook of bliss of the little finger,
The index finger touches the tongue.
By adorning the crown of the bindu
With the seed hri with the fierce visarga,
Nectar or the knowledge woman is to be drawn forth.
Emanating it at the tip of the tongue,
It is to be drawn in the manner of summoning.
In the equipoise of the vajra yakṣa,
In the direction of the mouth, the fangs,
Thick, are made like the tongue.
Through the practice of the wrathful fangs,
Making the fingers like a skull cup,
One should drink a great deal of blood.
The first syllable is endowed with oṃ,
With a bindu placed on its crown,
And attached below with ra,
Drawing u and adorned with the vowel.
This is my heart essence,
Supreme, performing all activities.
Killing and all summoning,
Subjugating and empowering and the rest:
These and other activities as well
Are accomplished by applying it properly.

Closing the eyes as if dead,
And drawing in one's own body,
By the practice of the five vase-breathings to the end,
All enemies are to be slain.
Fully endowed with the first vowel,
One should make oneself the nature of everything.
Meditating on the great buddha,
One emanates masses of clouds of peaceful light rays.
Through this the body becomes peaceful.
Through this, for all sentient beings,
Fevers, grahas, poisons and the like,
Suffering, the fangs of the ḍākinīs,
And all fears are removed.
In the equipoise of the perfection of wisdom,
By oneself in the proper way,
Through this the suffering and fears
Of all those within are taken away.
These and other endless
Activities in the sky and on the earth:
Placing Vajrasattva in the heart,
One performs them all, like a wish-fulfilling jewel.
Swiftly, toward the vajra master,
Those who desire the aim of mantra accomplishment
Should turn with respect and reverence,
To an exceedingly high degree.
Never should the mind
Of the vajra master be disturbed.
If one does so through corrupt wisdom,
One will swiftly fall into hell.
Through sickness, harm and enemies,
Through grahas, fevers and poison,
One who reviles the feet of the master
Dies in great delusion.
Accomplishment is obtained from the guru.
The guru is the higher realms; the guru is bliss.
Therefore with all earnestness
One should not transgress the guru's command.

This concludes the fourth chapter, the maṇḍala of the host of the Great Vajra Yoginīs of Great Utter Delight, from the king of tantras, the Candraguhyatilaka, the great hidden secret of the supreme vajra of the body, speech and mind of all the tathāgatas: the great maṇḍala of the primordial wisdom of the empowerment of the vajra pledge, the undoubted bliss of the Great Utter Delight of Vajrasattva, the Great Bliss of the glorious Great Utter Delight of the great Samantabhadra, lord of the vajra of body, speech and mind of all the tathāgatas.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, with the hosts of the wheel together with their retinues, the hosts of the vajra yogins, yoginīs and great lords of yoga, and the servants of the hosts of vajra ḍākas and ḍākinīs, were filled with great supreme joy. Raising a clamor, they sang out with a great song:

"Oh! Of Vajrasattva,
The great Vajra Utter Delight!
The various skillful means, the great Bliss Maker,
The various primordial wisdoms, the great bliss!
Oh! Of Samantabhadra,
The virtuous primordial wisdom, the great bliss!
For the sake of whatever is bliss,
He makes his abode in the knowledge woman's lotus.
Oh! The knowledge most profound,
The bliss of the perfection of wisdom!
Through wisdom, for all sentient beings,
He dispels the thick darkness.
Oh! All is a great wonder!
He dances with the net of the ḍākinīs,
He makes them smell, and taste,
And caress, supreme among those who captivate.
How wonderful! Most utterly delighted,
Giving fortune to the fortunate,
The various fortunes, the great Bliss Maker,
Viśvavajra, most beautiful!"

Then, toward the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, Great Utter Delight, the god of desire who enjoys everything, abiding in the great bliss of utter delight, all the yoginīs and all the great female lords of yoga, the supreme Perfection Goddess and the rest, rose from their own seats. Bowing with the graceful bow of the great bliss of utter delight, they pleased him with this great seal of song, which brings about the attainment of the bliss of Great Utter Delight:

"Filling all of space with the bliss of illusion,
You show the supreme bliss of birth whose nature is emanation.
The lotus of passion pervades all with joy,
And even the very bliss of Dharma you hold in complete equanimity.
How wonderful! Such a consort, glorious with supreme bliss, possessed of every aspect,
Not abandoning the side of the Loving One, enters through wisdom itself.
These qualities of desire are the nature of reality, wholly pure.
You master the three poisons and do not shake those of faith.
Never parted from the side of wonder, you proceed to the heart of awakening."

Then the glorious Blessed One, Samantabhadra, with wide eyes and a smile, gazed for a moment, and again for a moment, at all that assembly, and entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Great Glory of the Union of Vajra and Lotus in Nonduality. Saying nothing at all, he remained in equipoise. He did not breathe in, he did not breathe out, he did not let his breath go forth. He did not look about at all, he did not look closely at all. He did not rise, he did not sit, he did not go, he did not speak, nor did he engage in conceptual thought.

In the same way, when the Blessed One, through utter great bliss, sought and spread out from the bliss of Great Utter Delight so that it utterly pervaded the whole expanse of space, he there drew in, caused to enter, bound and brought under his power all the tathāgatas, pleased them with the five qualities of sense pleasure, and they remained there.

Then all the blessed tathāgatas assembled once more and gazed again and again upon the Blessed One. They entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Great Glory of Enjoying Great Bliss and Utter Delight in Nonduality, and having roused him, they entered the heart of the Blessed One and dissolved into the great awakening mind. At that, the tathāgatas, abiding in the power of the karma of their former aspirations, saw: "Here in these three realms there is no one at all who teaches the sacred Dharma, who leads others into it, or who establishes them in the teaching. There is no one who leads others to the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha. Oh! These three worlds are being destroyed by those who are wrathful and greatly fierce, savage, intent on great violence, obscured by the darkness of desire, aversion and delusion, greatly violent and turbulent, taking the lives of others and stealing the minds of others, infatuated by women, tormenting others with harsh words and the other afflictions and secondary afflictions, eating one another's flesh, and abiding on paths without skillful means."

Seeing that all such world systems were being utterly destroyed, the tathāgatas, abiding perfectly in the great compassionate aspiration of skillful means and wisdom that enters all the expanse of space, roused with this king of songs the lord of all the tathāgatas, perfectly immersed in the bliss of Great Utter Delight, the great Samantabhadra, the glorious Vajrasattva:

"ho You whose nature is pure, pure, who possess the supreme bliss of the lotus,
Wish-fulfilling jewel of the heart, think of others and arise!
With the loving-kindness accomplished from the end of the eons, majestic in form,
With that water of the heart of awakening, wash the nature of beings.
a la la la ho
Source of the lotus, endowed with the supreme fortune of all the sugatas,
With compassion that dispels all suffering and sickness, look upon the three worlds.
With the play of joy, together with the dance, arise and bring them under your power.
a la la la ho
Bring forth this great secret, never proclaimed by the victors of the past,
Pleasing to the minds of all beings,
In the pure sphere of experience, in the sky that none can steal,
Rise up and perform the music of nonentity, surpassing all others.
a la la la ho
Through this momentary sphere of experience,
In order to dispel all darkness,
Thinking of others with compassion,
Please bless the gods.
If with this king of songs
The sacred supreme Delight is roused,
Please arise to join in bliss
The net of the lotus with the vajra.
When the lord who abides in bliss, Great Bliss,

Is roused by this,
He will rise for the sake of all sentient beings,
And all the victors will bring it forth."

Then the Blessed One, Great Bliss, Samantabhadra, the glorious Vajradhara, entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Glory Adorned with Great Bliss Endowed with Perfection. Rising, he gazed upon all the world systems of the ten directions, endless, vast and boundless, and was amazed: "Oh! These three realms are empty!"

"Because they are parted from the great seals of all the tathāgatas, these beings are harassed by all the vicious ones, and are utterly devoured by all the yakṣas and rākṣasas, by sicknesses, by harms, by great grahas, and by all the afflictions and secondary afflictions." When he had thought this, the Blessed One Samantabhadra entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Glory of the Great Bliss of Vajra Wisdom that Sends Forth All the Tathāgatas. Gathering the awakening mind from his own vajra and lotus of the great bliss of the vajra wisdom of his own body, speech and mind, he drew it forth from the vajra of his own body, speech and mind:

First, oṃ, imagined as a bindu,
Together with Vajrasattva, sounding forth the roar of thunder,
Endowed with the indivisible, the drawing, and the two:
This is the supreme of teachers, the very vajra family.

When it had been drawn forth, it lit up the whole expanse of space, filling it with its radiance, and then, gathering back again, it remained in the form of a vajra. Again it radiated and was gathered, and when it had gathered back, it became like the body, speech and mind of all the tathāgatas, Vajrasattva, and came to sit in the center of the eastern maṇḍala. Laughing a great laugh, "hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ," and saying "a," he sat, in his own cross-legged posture of the being, bending gracefully just slightly to the left, brandishing the vajra in his right hand, smiling and with wide eyes.

The great among the great, with five heads,
Endowed with sixteen arms,
Holding the supreme manifold body,
Performing the activities of all heroes,
Of five colors and of great splendor,
Holding weapons of many kinds,

Abiding firmly in vajra illusion.
If any wise one, in equipoise,
Holds him in the heart,
Through the great bliss of vajra and lotus
He swiftly attains the bliss of Vajrasattva.

Then the Blessed One entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Glory of Enjoying All the Ḍākinīs, and from the vajra of his own body, speech and mind, from the supremely secret Candraguhyatilaka of all the tathāgatas, he drew forth this heart essence of all the tathāgatas, called Great Bliss, which brings attainment of the utter delight of space:

On the crown of o, a bindu;
Together with the indivisible and the bindu,
Below it, together with splendor;
At the end, split, and with the fierce visarga.
This is the heart essence of all the jewels,
Supreme and marvelous.
When it is drawn forth, it fills space
And all the buddha fields,
Spreading masses of clouds of light rays,
And then it comes to rest again.
Entering into his heart,
It abides in the manner of a sign.
Empowered by all the victors,
The emanation in the form of a being
Has five colors and wide eyes,
A blossoming water-born lotus, with a smile,
Greatly beautiful with the splendor of the sun,
Adorned with mudrās and various ornaments,
In the cross-legged posture, bending gracefully to the left,
Holding a jewel at the heart in the right hand,
Adorned with the essence of the sixteen mudrās,
Free of the three stains.
Having filled his own maṇḍala,
He comes to abide in the south of the manifold.
Knowing all aspects, directly aware,
He destroys those stricken by sickness.

This is the great splendor and great radiance
Of all the buddhas.
It takes away the poverty, the sickness and the great grahas
Of all sentient beings.
At the time of sunrise
And at the time of midday,
If one places this in one's own heart
And meditates on the precious jewel,
Within seven days, with certainty,
It bestows accomplishment and great wealth.
Through the union of the two organs,
Oh! One is to be empowered with bliss.

Then the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, supreme great bliss, glorious Vajrasattva, entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Glory of the Power of Desire of Utter Delight, and drew forth from the supremely secret Candraguhyatilaka, the primordial wisdom of his own body, speech and mind, this great heart essence called the Glory of the Enjoyment of the All-Seeing Great Lotus:

First, it is endowed with oṃ,
With the indivisible, ra attached, and with the drawing,
With the fierce visarga: this is the mantra.
It encircles all intentions.
If any mantra adept, in equipoise,
Places this in the heart,
Thinking of himself as clinging to passion,
He should meditate by joining with the lotus.
At the final junctures of the times,
If one practices this pledge,
Within half a month
One attains the accomplishment of the goddess Īśvarī.
Arising from the great lotus,
It spreads out everywhere,
And entering into it again,
It abides in the manner of a lotus.
When all is pervaded by its light,
The emanation in the form of a being,

Then, with passion descending,
Enters into the center of the lotus.
Filling the maṇḍala,
He pleases from behind,
And with a smile, opening the lotus,
He bends just slightly toward the center of the heart.
Glorious, bearing five faces,
His arms filled with twenty-four,
Holding weapons of many kinds,
Covered with various ornaments,
Liberated like the moon,
He sits performing a majestic dance.
By this, in the very abode of the lotus,
One will attain it in this very life.
One will attain the glorious lord of dance;
Abiding in skillful means through all passion,
With a thousand gentle hands
He dances and tames beings.

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra, the great bliss of Great Utter Delight, once more entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Transformation of the Great Manifold One Who Enjoys All, and drew forth from the great Candraguhyatilaka, the supremely secret vajra wisdom of his own body, speech and mind:

The Great Manifold One, the great o,
Is perfectly endowed with a bindu above.
This is at the center; below it, the wrathful one.
The supreme of mantras should be set in place.
This Manifold One is renowned as being at the heart.
Having drawn forth the Manifold, by granting all,
He duly pleased all the buddhas.
That very one then returned and took his seat,
Abiding in the supreme form of Viśvavajra.
In an instant abiding in the body of the Sattva,
Adorned with laughter of manifold kinds,
With majestic poise he holds the crossed vajra at his heart
And sends forth blazing manifold splendor.

His arms, eight times two, face the directions two by two;
Opening his mouths, he sends forth manifold weapons.
His five faces, manifold, vast and great,
Dispel obstructors and grant all accomplishments.
Placed so as to fill the maṇḍala, he dwells in the north.
With the true vajra in the Lady Viśvavajrī,
Holding her at his heart, he abides perfectly in bliss.
If the mantrin meditates for seven days,
He becomes the Manifold One, and the Manifold descends upon him;
He will perform manifold actions of every kind.

Then all the blessed tathāgatas became supremely amazed, and, singing a great song, they pleased the Blessed One at the center of the great maṇḍala:

In order to consecrate the Lord,
May the Victor himself explain
The natures of the five wisdoms.
Praise and homage to the body of the Buddha!
Mantra, vidyā and mudrā together with their branches,
The perfection of the reality of the deity:
I am that very reality, the Great Manifold One.
Praise and homage to manifold wisdom!
Perfectly endowed with the lotus of dhāraṇī,
It is the supreme mind that fulfills desire,
Union with the perfection of wisdom.
Praise and homage to the wisdom of union!
The meaning of the Dharma is the nondual way,
Knowing the path of emptiness.
The vast eye sees each thing distinctly;
Mirror-like wisdom truly arises.
Diligent activity for the benefit of beings:
Tell of your own unequaled qualities.
All beings who know reality
Are blessed by the three vajras;
As soon as one is blessed by them,
The three buddhas come under one's power.

Then the Blessed One, the glorious Samantabhadra, entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Vajra Wisdom of Nondual Sameness, and drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech and mind these very syllables, blessed by all the tathāgatas:

oṃ bhruṃ This is the heart of great emptiness.
oṃ vajra citta hūṃ oṃ vajra kāya oṃ oṃ vajra vāk āḥ oṃ vajra abhiṣiñca trāṃ vajra samaya hoḥ

Then all the blessed tathāgatas, utterly satisfied, with minds of great delight, bowed to the Blessed One and spoke thus. All the tathāgatas also offered their own heart essences to the Blessed One.

Then the great Blessed One Samantabhadra said "Excellent!" to all the tathāgatas, and filled them with delight in the manner of great bliss:

Excellent, excellent, all you victors!
Excellent, excellent, supreme victor!
Excellent, excellent, good deeds!
Excellent, excellent, you who go before!
Excellent, excellent, Great Manifold One!
Drawing it forth from your own heart,
Explain your own secret,
Through which the buddhas of the future
Will come to possess a mind of bliss.

Then the Blessed One, the great vajra of the wisdom of emptiness, the Tathāgata, drew forth his own heart essence from the vajra of his body, speech and mind:

oṃ sarva tathāgata mahā śūnyatā jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako'haṃ

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Vajra of Mirror-like Wisdom, drew forth his own heart essence from the vajra of his body, speech and mind:

oṃ sarva tathāgata ādarṣa jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako'haṃ

Then the Tathāgata Vajra of the Wisdom That Individually Sees All drew forth his own heart essence from the vajra of his body, speech and mind:

oṃ sarva tathāgata mahā pratya prabekṣa jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako'haṃ

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Vajra of the Wisdom of Sameness, drew forth his own heart essence from the vajra of his body, speech and mind:

oṃ sarva tathāgata mahā samantā jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako'haṃ

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Vajra of the Wisdom of Diligent Activity, drew forth his own heart essence from the vajra of his body, speech and mind:

oṃ sarva tathāgata krītya anuṣṭhāna jñāna vajra svabhāva ātmako'haṃ

Then the great Blessed One Samantabhadra once more bestowed the words of "Excellent":

oṃ Excellent, excellent, great emptiness!
oṃ Excellent, excellent, great mind!
oṃ Excellent, excellent, great body!
oṃ Excellent, excellent, great speech!
oṃ Excellent, excellent, precious one!
oṃ Excellent, excellent, Great Manifold One!

Then all the blessed tathāgatas gathered together and requested the Blessed One to explain his own maṇḍala:

The maṇḍala of the buddha vajra
That brings joy, Blessed One, please tell it yourself,
Through which beings, by bliss itself,
Will fully attain the maṇḍala.
That which is called the maṇḍala of maṇḍalas
The lord of victors has taught as a secret;
Through it, having swiftly drawn the maṇḍala,
One becomes an ornament of the maṇḍala.
The very ground of bliss of the maṇḍala
Is called the secret maṇḍala;
Its nature is the adorned maṇḍala,
The secret the Blessed One himself has taught.
The wisdom of sameness of the maṇḍala
Is called the heart of the maṇḍala;
In accordance with the maṇḍala,
May the Great Lord himself tell it.
The unequaled wisdom of the maṇḍala
Is the secret lotus of the maṇḍala;
Please explain the immeasurable maṇḍala
That brings attainment of the maṇḍala of Utter Delight.

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Vajra Source of the Maṇḍala of Supremely Joyful Wisdom, and drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech and mind this great samaya maṇḍala of all the tathāgatas.

A wide-eyed maiden adorned with beauty and youth
Should be taken, and the wise one,
With the syllables of blessing,
Having placed her in equipoise and consecrated her,
Should set her as the embodiment of the perfection of wisdom,
The queen of the Tathāgata.
The second, placed in front,
Is the abode of the perfection of diligence,
The queen of Vajrasattva,
She who delights his mind.
The third, to be visualized in the south,
Should be set as the embodiment of virtuous giving,
The great queen of Ratnasambhava,
Who brings the qualities of empowerment.
The fourth is Great Moral Discipline,
Who abides truly in reality, the meaning of the Dharma,
The queen of Vajradharma;
She who bestows it is She Who Delights.
Great Patience is in the north;
She grants the ending of those whose nature is to kill,
The queen of the Unfailing Vajra,
She who guards the abode of samaya.
In all the corners,
Make offerings and so forth as before.
In all the directions of the gates
Are the four kinds of gatekeepers.
Offerings should be made as one wishes,
And the excellent disciple should be brought in.
With hands adorned with mudrās,
With smiling, passionate eyes,
Fully decked with every ornament,
Dancing with great exuberance,
With the longing of the deity's majestic poise,
The disciple should be led into the maṇḍala of joy.
Covering the eyes with a cloth of silk,
And holding the disciple by the hand,

One should place the disciple at the corner of the gate
And have the supreme aspiration spoken:
"I am called the Great Vajrī.
I bow to my own deities,
And with the Great Bliss Maker,
Arisen from the place of self-delight, I give them pleasure.
May I attain sameness just as it is."
Having cast the flower garland, one says:
"Great Goddess, please arise!
I seek your maṇḍala."
On whichever goddess it falls,
Taking her by the hand, one should lead the disciple around:
"This goddess is in harmony with you;
Great-minded one, take your pleasure."
Then that disciple
Should say, "My Utter Delight,"
And, "Please engage in desire with her."
The indivisible phaṭ of the wrathful ones,
With hoḥ at the end, should be joined.
What is to be done at the time of emission:
One says, "aho sukha, bliss!"
Then what is drawn forth by the vajra
The wise one should take up,
And the substance of the accomplishment of great bliss
Should first be offered to the guru.
Then that very substance should also be offered
To all, as they please.
Touching the crown of the head to the guru's feet,
One should request empowerment from the guru:
"O Blessed One, please bestow on me
The utterly hidden, noble empowerment."
Then, entering into equipoise
In the great union, the master,
Drawing forth with the vajra the bliss of it,
Should place it firmly on the crown of the head.
Without touching it with the hand,
He should give it into the mouth.

Having drawn it forth especially,
It should be drunk as one pleases.
To all those consorts
It should be given with the vajra.
Then the excellent disciple
Should offer a gift to the guru:
Mother, sister and daughter,
Wife and one's own son,
Oneself and one's kingdom,
Likewise wealth and power,
Goods, riches and treasures,
Elephants, horses and chariots:
These are the supreme gift to the guru,
To be offered with a joyful mind.
Of the outer, the hidden and the secret,
Of all the tathāgatas,
And of the vajras and consorts,
One should ask for the accomplishment one desires.
Having truly come to know the essence,
One should accomplish the supreme accomplishment.
If, out of delusion, one should speak of
This secret maṇḍala
Of all the tathāgatas,
The master's samaya is broken;
Swiftly, within half a month,
For having revealed it, he will be destroyed.
First the samaya should be set in place,
And afterward the maṇḍala should be shown.
If it is done otherwise, the heroes
Ripen in hell for countless eons.
Therefore the wise vajra holder
Should earnestly not proclaim the samaya.
Those who desire the aim, the accomplishment of mantra,
Should strive to guard the samaya.
If it is done otherwise, the mantrin's
Mantras and the rest will not achieve their aim.
Even the deities, though petitioned,

Will not consent to accept the samaya.
Great suffering in this world
And the hells in the world beyond:
Because of transgressing the conduct of samaya,
That deluded one will obtain them.
Likewise that disciple,
Of feeble mind, will come to suffering,
And thus the aim of the mantra will not ripen.
The supreme bliss of the deities
Will never be given
To a disciple without samaya.
Therefore samaya is foremost,
And first the samaya should be given.
Mantras and mudrās,
Likewise means and wisdom,
All of these samayas
The mantrin, through secret union,
In order to turn back hell and the lower realms,
Should give to son and disciple.
It brings about the merit of mantra accomplishment,
And one becomes free of worry over purity.
Having drawn properly and unhurriedly
The maṇḍala of all the tathāgatas,
A youth of sixteen years of age,
A samaya disciple, should be placed
In the maṇḍala and admitted by this rite.
These are the samayas:
Honey, meat and excrement,
The great mind of sun and moon,
And the waters arisen from the vajra, prepared;
These should be duly set in the maṇḍala and so forth.
If, by setting in place the samaya letters,
One swiftly accomplishes the samaya,
The joy-giving samaya is accomplishment,
And one will obtain all accomplishments.
This samaya is manifold;
By holding it one becomes powerful.

The great buddhas of the future
And Vajrasattva, the great lord:
Through the wise one's receiving empowerment,
All the perfect empowerments
Are obtained, as by all the buddhas,
And the mind becomes one of empowerment.

This is the fifth, the supremely secret great maṇḍala called the Great Vajra Wisdom of the Samaya of All the Tathāgatas.

Then all the blessed tathāgatas, in supreme and great delight, became joyful in mind and made a request to the Blessed One.

In order to explain the great maṇḍala
Of the great vajra wrathful one,
This great terrifier
Who utterly tames all the vicious,
Tamer of the great terrifying ones,
O wrathful samaya guide
Of all the vajra maṇḍalas,
Tell the great secret yourself.

Then the Blessed One, Great Bliss, the glorious Vajrasattva, entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Wrathful Samaya That Guides All the Tathāgatas, and drew this forth from the vajra wisdom of his own body, speech and mind:

oṃ vajra mahā caṇḍa sarvva duṣṭaṃ ta ka ha na da ha pa ca hūṃ phaṭ

As soon as this was drawn forth, this entire great trichiliocosm world system shook in six ways through the power of the great wrathful one; it shook all over. All the gods, nāgas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, mahoragas, yakṣas and rākṣasas fell into great turmoil. Then, stricken with great fear, they went to Śakra (Indra). Seeing that Śakra himself was without refuge, they went to Brahmā. Brahmā in turn went to the One Who Longs to Belong, and the One Who Longs to Belong went to Maheśvara (Śiva). Then Maheśvara transformed his own power into the form of the Great Terrifying One, and by the power of his miraculous abilities he illuminated all these world systems, and gave them relief, saying: "Gods, do not fear! Nāgas, do not fear! Yakṣas, do not fear! Asuras, do not fear! Gandharvas, do not fear! You gods together with the world, do not fear! Could anyone else overpower such a distinction of miraculous power as mine? Go about as you please, and be at rest!"

Then the Blessed One too entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Glorious Splendor of All the Tathāgatas, and drew forth from the vajra wisdom of his own body, speech and mind the heart of the great wrathful one called the Great Wrathful Frown of All the Tathāgatas:

oṃ vajra bhṛ ku ṭi mahā krodha ha na ha na gṛhna gṛhna ma ra mā ra bhañja bhañja da ha da ha pa ca pa ca hūṃ bhṛ bhṛ bhra hma bhra hma ya bhṛ kuṭṭa sarvva mā rā na sarvva du ma ṭa ma ṭa mo ṭa mo ṭa hūṃ bhṛ hūṃ tnaṃ tra ṭa tra ṭa bhṛ huṃ hṛ huṃ troṃ tra ṭa

As soon as this was uttered, they were terrified as before and came to Maheśvara. Then Maheśvara, displaying his own greatness as before, said to the One Who Longs to Belong: "You too are a great god of great power, the lord of the host of all the vicious. So display your own vast miracle of power, and give relief to these vicious ones!" At once the One Who Longs to Belong transformed his power, the form of the Terrifying One, into Mahākāla of the wheel, and, letting out a vajra cry, the sound of great fierce laughter, he remained displaying himself to the whole world.

Then the great Blessed One Samantabhadra entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Lotus Source of the Great Wrathful One. As soon as he had entered it, all the wrathful ones shining forth with nets of lotuses turned back and entered the heart of the Blessed One. Having entered, he consecrated himself as the heart of the great wrathful one, and drew it forth from the heart of the vajra of the Blessed One's body, speech and mind:

oṃ padma mahā jvā lahā kro dha ba da ba mu kha kha kha sarvva duṣṭāṃ kha hi khā hī sarvva duṣṭa'aṃ pra duṣṭa naṃ da ma da ma vajra daṃ ṣṭod ka ṭa mahā ma ṭa kṣo ṭa kṣo ṭa vajra kha ra ca pa la dur ga be ga tra sa tra sa mahā vajra ba ḍa ba mu kha pra ma tha pra ma tha hūṃ phaṭ hri ha ha hi hi ca tur mu kha ṅe śa prā ṇa śa na hūṃ hroṃ hūṃ hūṃ dhāṃḥ h

As soon as this was spoken, the great Brahmakāyika realm trembled violently, fell face down and thrashed about. Then Great Brahmā was amazed and asked Maheśvara, "This god appears exceedingly wondrous." Then Maheśvara urged Brahmā: "You are the chief of all beings, the lord of all the hosts of gods. You are the one who sends forth and who makes in the three worlds. Since you possess great miraculous power, destroy all vicious beings and all who have vicious bodies!" Then Brahmā, by his own power, emanated the form of the great rākṣasa of Great Brahmā: four-faced like a great Terrifying One, with a moving body having the splendor of a thousand flames, and letting out great laughter, he remained displaying himself to all the vicious ones among the hosts of gods.

Then the great Blessed One Samantabhadra once more entered perfectly into equipoise in the meditative absorption of the great wrathful one called Utterly Crushing All the Gods, and drew forth from the heart of the vajra wisdom of his own body, speech and mind this heart of the great wrathful one called the Terrifying One of the Great Vajra:

oṃ vajra bhai ra ba mahā kro dha sarvva duṣṭaṃ saṃ bhakṣa ya hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ vajra yakṣa ha na ha na hūṃ phaṭ

As soon as this was drawn forth, the whole palace of Śakra was shattered into a hundred pieces, and the summit of Mount Meru shook and spun all around. Śakra and his retinue fell face down and fainted. Then, rising, he looked to Maheśvara, and Maheśvara too urged him: "You are the lord of all the hosts of gods, and you are mighty. All the hosts of vicious gods of the Thirty-Three pay you homage, so display the power of your own miraculous abilities in the same way!" Then the great king of the gods, Śakra, displaying his own power in the form of yakṣas and great rākṣasas, gave relief to all the hosts of the vicious, saying: "Vicious ones, do not fear! When such miracles of mine are seen, no one can overpower them."

Then the great Blessed One Samantabhadra once more entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Vajra That Guides All the Mantra Deities, and caused all those deities to enter the vajra wisdom of his own body, speech and mind. Having made them enter, he transformed all the great wrathful ones into the great mudrā, and visualized himself too in the form of the great wrathful one who sends forth all the wrathful ones: baring great fangs, with a hideous face and a thousand eyes, having the splendor of a thousand great suns, his body blue in color, driven by a fire wind that makes him utterly unbearable; the great glorious seal of the great charnel ground, feeding on human skeletons, blood, flesh, brains, marrow and fat; his back and sides covered and bound with human skin; wearing a garland of human heads upon his head. From the pores of his body he sent forth many hundreds of thousands of faces of wrathful animals, of lions, elephants, donkeys, camels, buffaloes, pigs, jackals, goats, dogs, owls, crows, geese, cats, leopards, tigers and so forth.

In the manner of the great maṇḍala, in the east was the Tamer of the Great Terrifying One, with eyes like the terror of a deep frown and a face baring great vajra fangs; with a retinue of a hundred thousand terrifying great wrathful ones, he came to be massed in the eastern maṇḍala and remained there. In the southern maṇḍala, too, the Vajra Frowner, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of wrathful ones, came to be massed and remained there. In the western maṇḍala, too, the Great Lotus Horse-Face, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of wrathful ones, came to be massed in the western maṇḍala and remained there. In the northern maṇḍala, too, the Great Vajra Roarer, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of wrathful ones, came to be massed and remained there.

The Blessed One Vajra Utter Delight, the great wrathful one, surrounded by many hundreds of thousands of hosts of great wrathful ones, sat at the center of the maṇḍala. Enjoying himself fully with those hosts of great wrathful ones in the great bliss of Great Utter Delight, he sent forth many hundreds of thousands of forms of great wrathful ones, as many as there are atoms in Mount Meru, filled all the boundless reaches of the expanse of space, and filled this entire great trichiliocosm world system as well.

Then all the hosts of the vicious, seeing them, were terrified, and seeing no refuge, went each to their own lord, saying: "Lord, lord, protect us yourself!" Then those lords of the gods, Maheśvara and the others, emanating their own power, raised them up again and had them circle the three worlds, commanding: "You who are tormented by the Terrifying One, go for refuge to me!" Yet they did not accept going for refuge. Once more giving rise to pride in their own lineage, they drew forth what is called the Eightfold Great Terrifying One, displayed the great nature of Mount Meru, and let out a roar of great laughter:

oṃ mahā bhe ra ba be ṣṭiṃ ṣṭiṃ ṭra ṭra ṭra ta ṭra ta ha ha i ti

But not even the tip of a single pore so much as stirred.

Then the wrathful one who tames the Great Terrifying One let out the roar of Heruka, pressed down on his head and struck him. With his own great power Heruka made the Great Terrifying One cry out, drew out the tube of his entrails, and devoured his blood, bones and marrow, crunching them. He displayed this to his retinue, and Umā and some others were also destroyed. All the hosts of mātṛkās, too, were stripped naked and brought low. The wrathful one spread forth his own power, tamed the entire retinue, made them go for refuge, and established them in the samaya, and they fully entered it.

Then the Blessed One, Great Vajra Utter Delight, the great wrathful one, laughed a fierce laugh, and from the mouth of the great wrathful one Vajra Frowner gave them relief, saying: "Do not fear! Do not fear!"

Then the Blessed One Vajra Utter Delight, the great wrathful one, spoke to all the hosts of wrathful ones:

namo ratna tra yā ya mahā caṇḍa vajra pā ṇa ye mahā yakṣa senā pa tā ye tatya thā oṃ bo dha bo dha mahā bhai ra ba da ra ba pa hā ri ha ra ha ra gṛhṇa grīhṇa mā ra mā ra bhañja bhañja śīghraṃ mahā vajra caṇḍa sarva duṣṭāṃ ta ka ha na ha na da ha da ha pa ca pa ca ma tha ma tha hūṃ phaṭ

As soon as this was spoken, the Tamer of the Great Terrifying One expanded his body to the measure of the expanse of space. Many hundreds of thousands of wrathful ones, their faces deeply frowning and baring their fangs, swirling and transforming, holding various weapons in many hundreds of thousands of hands, with many hundreds of thousands of various faces, with hundreds of thousands of bodies blazing like tongues of fire, went to where the Great Terrifying One was, and, letting out great fierce vajra laughter, they laughed and stood before him:

oṃ mahā vajra he ru ka vajra aṭṭāṭṭā hā sa hā sa ra ha ha ha ha hūṃ ha i ti

Then Maheśvara, hearing the great fierce vajra laughter, fell face down together with his attendants and fainted. Striking him on the head with his foot, the wrathful one let him go.

oṃ vajra bhṛ ku ṭi ha na ha na gṛhṇa gṛhṇa huṃ ma ta ma ta kiñci rā ya si sūrya sa ha sra ha sti re ke ba su rā ja la la rci pra jvā li ta mahā mūrti ā kaḍḍhya ā kaḍḍhya a bya va ma bya va ma kri ṇa pa ca kra bhai ra ba hṛ da yaṃ hūṃ bhṛ

Then the great wrathful one, the Great Vajra Frowner, laughing with laughter, emanated a form pervading all beings and displayed it before the Wheel Bearer (Viṣṇu). Then the Wheel Bearer's retinue, stricken with great fear, fell face down and fainted utterly, crying, "Lord, protect us!" Seeing that they themselves had no refuge, they went for refuge to the Wheel Bearer. Then Viṣṇu too fully displayed his many powers, stood before Great Utter Delight, and then withdrew behind him: "Hey, hey! Before the heart is torn out by the frown close upon the vicious, and before it is drunk, go back to your own abode!"

Then that Great Vajra Frowner became utterly agitated and fierce, dragged him forth, bound him and tore out his heart, and with his blood he fully satisfied the great Sun Frowner, the embodiment of the great yakṣa graha.

oṃ vajra ba sūrya bhṛ ku ṭi kro dha mahā gra ha ha ra pa ta ra pa sya su dhe ra māṃ sa me da madje na oṃ bhra bhra bhṛ bhuṃ bhra

Then that Wheel Bearer remained with his mind utterly lost. His wives Rukmiṇī, Mahāśrī and Lakṣmī, together with their attendants, were also destroyed, and having tamed all the various ones, the wrathful one remained.

Then the Blessed One struck the Great Horse-Face, the great wrathful one, once upon the back and sent him forth:

oṃ vajra ba ḍa ba mu kha kha kha khā hi khā hi ca tu rmu khā pi ba pi ba a sya ru dhi ra ma a kaḍḍhya a kadbhya hṛ da yaṃ trā na dam he vajra ba ḍa ba mu kha hi hi ṣa mahā śva śve śve ra hī hī

Then the Great Vajra Horse-Face, letting out a great neigh, came to stand before Brahmā. Then Brahmā, as the rākṣasa of Brahmā, filled the sky with himself and moved about. Then the retinue of Great Brahmā fell face down and cried, "Lord, protect us! Lord, protect us!" And it was said: "Hey, hey! Vicious face, go quickly, go! Riding upon your back, shall I not tame you?"

Then the Great Vajra Horse-Face became utterly agitated and fierce. He trampled on the head of Great Brahmā, drew out his heart and set about drinking his blood; he tasted his flesh, brains, fat and bones, and scattered them in the ten directions. His wives Śirimā, Sarasvatī and Śānti were also destroyed. Having tamed his hosts as well and established them in the vow of samaya, he remained.

Then the Blessed One, the great wrathful one of Great Utter Delight, looked with a wrathful gaze and sent forth:

oṃ gu lu gu lu vajra mahā kro dha ā kārṣa ya ā karṣa ya śa kra hṛ da yaṃ mahā vajra daṃṣṭrā ya hūṃ bhakṣa ya bhakṣa ya hūṃ

Then the Great Vajra Yakṣa, filling the whole face of the sky with his great body, came to sit before Śakra. Then Śakra, swaggering with great arrogance and unbearably angry, said to him, "Great yakṣa, whose servant are you?" Then the Great Vajra Yakṣa became wrathful, agitated and menacing. He pulled out his crest jewel, tore apart his heart, and set about eating his flesh, blood, brains, fat, bones and everything edible. Then his retinue, their minds terrified and panic-stricken, drew near for refuge. His hosts of goddesses were also destroyed and came to remain in his place.

Then the Blessed One Great Utter Delight, the great wrathful one, sporting with the vajra yoginīs, sat in the great maṇḍala of the great wrathful one, enjoying everything in utter delight.

Then all the blessed tathāgatas gathered once more and urged the Blessed One:

oṃ mahā su ra ta vajra mahā kro dha saṃ ha ro pa saṃ ha ra sarva kro dha ma śam śam pra śam pra śam sarva kro dha utti ma kro dha sva sa ma ya mahā maṇḍa le sthā pa ya sthā pa ya sarva kro dha ma duṣṭa pra duṣṭa bi ba ya bi ja ya bi ja ya śa kra brahmabiṣṇur ma he śva ra ma ho bha ga vān su ra ṭa sau khya kro dha sarva ta thā ga ta sattya na sa ma yeñca ho su ra ta sa ma ya i ti

Then the Blessed One Great Vajra Utter Delight, the great wrathful one, in order to summon, bring in, bind and bring under control all the wrathful ones, drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech and mind:

oṃ jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ ṭakki hūṃ jjaḥ ṭakki hūṃ jjaḥ hūṃ ṭakki hūṃ jjaḥ hūṃ ṭakki hūṃ jjaḥ ā karṣa ya ā karṣa ya bhandha ya ba śaṃ ku ru sarva kro dha sa ma yaṃ jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ ṭakki hūṃ jjaḥ hūṃ ṭakki hūṃ

Then all those samaya beings of the great wrathful ones came and massed in the wheel of their own great maṇḍala, and remained there, saying, "O Blessed One, please give us your command yourself."

Then the Blessed One entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Vajra Samaya of the Wheel of Command of All the Wrathful Ones, and drew forth the great wheel of command of all the wrathful ones:

oṃ sumbha ni sumbha mahā kro dha śa hūṃ phaṭ

Then he commanded them, "Revive the great vicious beings, Maheśvara and the others!" They replied, "May the Blessed One himself revive the utterly vicious ones," and then remained without saying anything.

Then the Blessed One Vajra Utter Delight, as the wrathful one, crossed his hands and pressed them together, and drew forth the great wrathful queen of vajra nectar:

oṃ vajra a mṛ ta mahā kro dhe śva ri ut śrī jaḥ ut śrī jaḥ vajra a mṛ ti hūṃ āḥ

Then the Blessed Lady, Great Nectar, utterly wrathful, gazing with knitted brows and a laughing face, letting out the sound ru lu ru lu, placed the vajra of the Blessed One in her own lotus and drew forth this vidyā for truly accomplishing nectar:

oṃ a mṛ ta sañjī ba ni ma ha mṛ ta mu ṣe pra be śa ya pra be śa ya sarban vajra padma saryo ge mahā bo dhi citta pi ṭha pi ṭha mūrte ā

Then all those vicious ones, Maheśvarī and the others, had their bodies restored as before. Recovering the memory of their minds, they saw all the wheels of the tathāgatas and were amazed. Having gone for refuge to the Blessed One Vajra Utter Delight, the wrathful one, they came to remain as the retinue of wrathful ones in the arrangement of the outer maṇḍala.

Then they, with utterly gladdened minds, praised the Blessed One:

You are the father of all sentient beings,
And likewise the mother who brings benefit.
O Lord, as their union, you protect us
From great terror.
Lord, you dispel all suffering.
You are the lord, the Indra of beings.
You create and you release these three realms.
Greatest of the great, you protect the people.
Without beginning, you are the drop of resonance;
Above that resonance there is not even a fraction.
Lord without syllables, who releases
The nectar's Utter Delight, the Bliss Maker,
For the sake of benefiting all beings:
For the utter delight of all the buddhas
And for the happiness of beings,
O Protector, please release it.
Untainted by the mire of sentient beings,
You are the unsurpassed path of awakening,
Who pacifies suffering of every kind,
Who quenches the thirst of sentient beings,
Who frees them from the surging waves of saṃsāra,
And swiftly turns your mind to their happiness.
In every respect, by any thing at all,
Not to be measured even by all the victors,
Peaceful through your peaceful aspect,
Free of dust, you have given up smiling.

Wholly beyond meditation on space,
Unsullied by the stain of conceptual thought,
Truly transcending all illusion,
Turned away from all desires,
Lord, I bow to you,
The Terrifying One who is without arrogance.
Until we attain supreme awakening,
We go for refuge with all our hearts.
As long as we have life,
And as long as we may fall
Into the harsh world of hell,
We will keep your samaya.
So that we too may come to have
A stainless share in supreme awakening,
O Lord, we pray you grant us
Empowerment through great bliss.

Then the Blessed One, Great Vajra Utter Delight, having heard their words of supplication, entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the abode of the bliss of sameness. As soon as he had entered it, the Blessed One drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind many methods for accomplishing bliss and mental happiness, and through the great miracle of emanating great bliss he empowered the entire retinue of gods. Then those great gods, Maheśvara and the others, having been empowered by the miracle of emanating great bliss, became joyful in mind. They touched the feet of the Blessed One again and again, circumambulated him, and remained encircling him on all sides, just as before.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Great Vajra Utter Delight, again entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the method of union with the samaya of the vajra consort Utter Delight, the Great Lady of Bliss. Remaining silent, he at once drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind the one called the Great Sovereign Lady, the vajra wrathful goddess of all the tathāgatas:

oṃ sarba ta thā ga ta ma hā bajra kro dhe śva ri sarba duṣṭā ni mu drā ṇi ma hā pra la yā na laśma śā na bhī ṣa ṇi bajra ma hā kro dha daṃṣṭā ka rā lo gra ta ba ta ne sarba śa trūṃ pra śa ma ni hūṃ hūṃ ma hā kro dhe śva ri hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ

Having consecrated her with this, just as it should be, one places her in the central maṇḍala. With sixteen arms, she holds various weapons in her hands. She has three faces, and her color is like the blazing light of sapphire. In her hands she holds a vajra, a skull staff, a skull cup, a spear, an axe, a noose, a trident, a club, a musala mace, a wheel, a kanaya dart, a tomara javelin, a bow, an arrow, a śakti lance, and a knife. Her head is adorned with a garland of skulls, and she is like the light of a hundred suns and of fire.

In front of her, the Great Vajra Blood Drinker, bearing a form and attire like hers, should be placed with this vidyā:

oṃ ma hā bajra dha ra ma hā kro dhe śva ri ma hā śma śā na bhī ṣa ni nī la jvā la sa ha sra pra jva li ta mūrti dha re ka pā la mā lā bhū ṣi ta ma gu te na ra dū tir ra tra pa ri pu ri ta ka pā la a ste kha ṭvāṃ ga bajra tri śū la ghandha ma hā kro dhe na hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ he he runta munta pri ye hūṃ phaṭ

Then the Blessed One, Vajra Utter Delight, entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called endowed with the supreme Great Splendor of the great wrathful one, and drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind Vajra Sun, the great sovereign of wrathful goddesses:

oṃ hūṃ trāṃ ma hā sūrya bajra kro dhe śva ri bi da ma ma tha ma tha grā sa grā sa sarba duṣṭāṃ pra duṣṭāṃ huṃ phaṭ oṃ hūṃ traṃ traṃ tra tra tra

With this, the great wrathful goddess should be placed in the maṇḍala of Ratnasambhava in the south:

She radiates great splendor,
Blazes like fire, most terrifying,
Her sixteen arms are sharp,
Her armlets are piled up with skulls.
Her eyes are deep red, her color dark blue,
She is intent on holding a host of weapons,
She devours all the vicious ones,
And rides upon a seat of a great preta.
She is encircled in front by her own attendants.

Then the Blessed One entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the great garland of light of the array of the lotus source, and drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind Lotus Net, the great sovereign of wrathful goddesses:

oṃ hrīḥ bajra padma ma ha bandha mu khe kha kha khā hi khā hi ma hā ma ho dha ra bi ko pe hūṃ he hūṃ hūṃ ha ha hūṃ hūṃ hrīḥ hi śa hi śa ma hā bajra ba da ba mu la mi ho tyo tye hūṃ hūṃ hi hi hūṃ hrīḥ hūṃ

In the very center, within the maṇḍala,
This one should be placed at the back.
Greatly fierce and three-faced,
She displays a horse's head rising upward.
The great wrathful goddess, sixteen-armed,
With ugly, transfigured faces,
Rides upon a horse that is a human corpse.
She drinks a great quantity of blood,
She holds various weapons,
Her wrathful crown is piled up with skulls.
Emitting sharp rays of light,
She abides adorning the maṇḍala with her attendants.

Then the Blessed One again entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the method of non-dual union with the wrathful goddess of unfailing wisdom, and drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind this great sovereign of wrathful goddesses, called the Great Lady of Unfailing Ferocity:

oṃ sarba a mo gha ma hā bi śve śva ri hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ haṃ haṃ haṃ ma hā kro dhe gra mu khe ma hā bi śve ba da ri ṇi

sarba duṣṭa pra śa ma ni hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ

With this very one, as is fitting,
In the maṇḍala of the Unfailing Vajra,
With a fourfold retinue,
One sets out the various samaya beings.
Endowed with various forms and distinctive features,
She abides encircled all around.
Her faces are wrinkled and pursed;
Exceedingly fierce, she savors taste;
Frowning, she has skulls for her crest.
Adorned with sixteen arms,
The great wrathful goddess with three faces
Gazes like a man-eater.
The wise one should place her

Encircled by the four kinds of attendants
Who share all her nature,
Bearing their own mudrās as emblems,
And endowed with eight arms.
Then, according to the rite,
They ride upon the mudrā of a bhūtī.
Terrifying as a charnel ground,
The hosts of the outer yoginīs
Encircle them all around.
One may either set them out or draw them.
They abide upon such seats as these,
With ugly faces and four arms,
Together with the transformations of the vicious wrathful goddesses.
Following such a sequence as this,
The wise one should draw the maṇḍala.

Then those great sovereign ladies of yoga bowed to the Blessed One, and having worshiped him by dancing, each in her own way, again and again, they made this supplication:

The hosts of mantras of the yoginīs,
And the mudrā consorts, as is fitting,
And the secret dance of the Great Lady of Bliss:
Blessed One, proclaim these yourself.

Then the Blessed One entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the vajra that emanates all yoginīs, and drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind the mantras, mudrās, hidden teachings, suchness, and secrets of all the yoginīs:

oṃ sarba bajra dha ra sa tva a nu rā gi ṇi ma hā kro dhe hūṃ phaṭ

Then those yoginīs became satisfied, delighted, and joyful, and again they made supplication with this song:

Please consider the vast expanse of supreme bliss.
Endowed with the inconceivable sphere of supreme bliss,
With a sweet melody, unmoving and beyond all speech,
Please partake of the bliss of play within the dhāraṇī.
Displaying miracles of great wonder,
You show the path to those who travel to the heart of awakening.
Without relying truly on any of the tantras,
Please bring liberation through the dhāraṇī of supreme bliss.

Then the Blessed One entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the samaya of the great vajra ḍākinī, and drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind this heart essence of all the vajra ḍākinīs:

oṃ sarba ta thā ga ta ma hā bajra dha ra hūṃ phaṭ

Then all those vajra ḍākinīs, the great sovereign ladies of yoga, were utterly gladdened and became joyful in mind, and they uttered this great song:

Oh! Because the vajra union
Of Vajrasattva has been fully taught,
The ḍākinīs accomplish
Buddhahood itself at their ease.

Then the Blessed One Samantabhadra again drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind this heart essence for accomplishing the gratification and delight of all those vajra ḍākinīs:

oṃ ḍā ki nī ā karṣa ya pra be śa ya bandha ya to ṣa ya ā sarbā na bajra ḍā ki nī hrī da yaṃ hūṃ jjaḥ jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ ṭakki hūṃ jjaḥ oṃ bajra padma ma hā pa ḍa ba mu kha a kaḍḍhya pra be śa ya bhandha ya mo ha ya to ṣa ya ha ha hi

With this host of wrathful mantras one performs the rites of summoning, causing to enter, bringing under control, and so on, upon the vajra yoginīs, the ḍākinīs, the sky-goers, the vajra snatchers, and all the rest. For the samaya of worship with torma and the like, one displays the mudrā of Heruka, the mudrā of Ṭakkirāja, and the mudrā of Hayagrīva, and applies them to all rites.

Bind the vajra palms as is proper. Make the two wrathful fingers like hooks. Join the tips of the two thick fingers to each other, and raise the two peaceful fingers straight up. Extend the remaining two and send them out like rays of light. This is the supreme mudrā.

This mudrā of great splendor
Is bowed to by gods and asuras;
The buddhas, Vajradhara, and the rest
Have praised it and worshiped it.
That very binding brings the deities down
And causes all the hosts to enter.
She slays all the vicious ones
And devours all the rākṣasīs.
Abiding in the sublime yoga,
By this one performs all rites.
One who accomplishes all rites

But lacks it will not gain accomplishment.
Through approach, even those with attachment, aversion, and delusion
Swiftly obtain accomplishment.

Make the vajra binding twofold, joining the two backs of the hands back to back. Extend the two little fingers and cross them with each other. Raise the two wrathful fingers upward, show the mudrā at the heart, and hold it in the manner of extending and contracting. This performs all rites.

By this, rites of every kind
Turn out just as the mind desires.
Whatever wrongs one has done in this life,
This steals them all away.
All of them come about swiftly;
The accomplishments are a wish-fulfilling jewel.
As far as the pathways of the sky extend,
By this yoga one flies.
It also betokens the supreme vidyādhara;
When the rite is accomplished, one comes back again.

Join the palms evenly, join the two thick fingers in the middle, and make the rest like opened petals: this is the lotus seat. Point the tips of the two thick fingers downward: this is the mudrā of the Horse-Faced One.

Whoever applies it, in an instant,
Becomes one of great accomplishment.
As soon as it is bound, one takes flight
And goes wherever one wishes.
The accomplishments of the underworld, as one wishes,
And swiftly one returns once more:
These and other results without end.
This mudrā is a virtuous application.
I have taught it; the yogin
Should summon the hosts of the victors with it.
All the yoginīs as well
Are joined by that supreme limb of mudrā.

Then those great sky-goers and the others, tormented by desire, were delighted.

Transforming their own forms,
They rose up and danced exuberantly,
And on the great ground of the charnel ground
They made their inspection with great satisfaction.
In their hands they hold skull cups and knives,
Vajras and khaṭvāṅga staffs.
The fortunate ones are marked with their own mudrās,
With dark red hair and wrinkled faces.
Adopting the attire of bliss,
They savor the enjoyment of sublime bliss.
In utter infatuation they attend him,
And make supplication to the wrathful Utter Delight:

You whose eyes are perfect as a thousand stainless moons,
Generate us in the very womb of the sphere of compassion.
Those tormented by the heat of beings' suffering,
Satisfy them fully with that awakening.
a la la la ho
Through supreme play you truly open the door,
And show this very essence, the path of supreme awakening.
Secret self, overpowering all with bliss,
With compassion you deliver those who are bewildered and sunk down.
a la la la ho
Great wisdom, spontaneously endowed with sweetness,
With compassion untouched by partiality, you regard all evenly.
Through supreme bliss, in the very place of secrecy,
Even nirvāṇa is accomplished by showing enjoyment.
Though it is shown directly here in these three worlds,
Beings in torpor do not see the reality of the nectar.
How wonderful! Arisen from the essence, the unborn Dharma,
Inconceivable, equal to the bounds of space,
Lord blazing with the supreme bliss of utter delight,
Look upon this gathering of every kind of jewel.
Play this unprecedented music,
And bestow the accomplishment of the great charnel ground.
Inexhaustible lady, attired in the accomplishment of the power of taming,
With this blazing splendor of the yoga ḍākinīs,
For those confounded and bewildered by the three sufferings,

Abiding in the conduct of bliss, you act;
With compassion, generate us from the sphere of the lotus.
a la la la ho
Just as this lotus is without attachment,
Ungrasped by the bonds of the lovely, it is wholly free;
Abiding on the ground perfected through play, you act.
Looking upon these three worlds, make music.
We who have gathered in this samaya and appear here,
Be pleased, and arise, we pray, in utmost bliss.
With no conflicting mind and no attachment, in the vajra
You abide in a manner unchanging, just like space.
Though clothed in the nature of the elements, and wrathful,
With the compassion of love you abide pervading everything.
How wonderful! With bliss we bow to the giver of bliss.
We pray for the accomplishment of naturally established bliss.
Through enjoyment unattached yet endowed with attachment,
Make us, flawless in samaya, sport with you.
By that great mind of awakening, clear with compassion,
Purify the habitual tendencies of all beings.
Not relying on causes and conditions, naturally established,
Unattached, stainless, utterly clear like the moon,
Holding sway here over these three worlds,
The wisdom of omniscience sports everywhere in bliss.

If with this one urges the Lord,
There is accomplishment in the maṇḍala itself.
With a soft, longing voice
Singing the King of Spring,
And revealing all the intentions
Of the stainless net of ḍākinīs,
One should apply all the accomplishments
Of the charming vajra and lotus.
Urged by this great Bliss Maker,
She bestows delight.
Endowed with the syllables of the vajra holder,
One should apply it at the three times.

Then the Blessed One entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the bliss of the glory of the utterly delighted enjoyment of all the vajra ḍākinīs, and he gratified them all.

Holding her with the left hand,
And opening the secret-born lotus,
If with the right one inserts the great vajra,
Worship will be attained.
This net of ḍākinīs,
Being pleased, grants accomplishment from this.
oṃ and oṃ and the indivisible vajra bliss,
With phaṭ at the end, fully applying power:
How wonderful! Bliss, great net of ḍākinīs,
Utter Delight, queen, Bliss Maker, grant the moment of bliss!
If with this one sports
Among the hosts of radiant yoginīs,
The accomplishment of utter delight,
Of great bliss, bliss and joy, will be achieved.

This is the wisdom of the wisdom mudrā that gratifies the great yoginīs.

Placing half-joined palms upon the head,
Bring it to completion at the water-born lotus.
Properly endowed with the vajra binding,
One should bind the lotus posture.
If one sports with this,
The supreme woman will be accomplished.
Dancing with great bliss,
Delighting, giving bliss, striking,
Embracing all around, and uniting,
Dancing with many kinds of dance,
All foods and tastes are truly accomplished;
Through supreme bliss, accomplishment comes.
Binding the root mudrā,
The union of the buddhas, great bliss,
Should be accomplished with swift palms.
Working fully at the three junctures,
Striking the cheek with the teeth,
Taking the lower lip again and again,
Pressing the breasts from outside,

One should do the four kinds of caress upon the lotus.
Pressing the outer lotus again and again,
One joins it fully with the marked stamen.
With the nails one pricks the armpits,
The place where three meet, and both ears.
Slowly one should insert the vajra,
And move it with the king of wrathful ones.
Having moved it intensely with the right,
One should release with the left.
By sporting with this union
One should worship the wheel of ḍākinīs.
Exclaiming "Oh, bliss!"
One urges her on with the melody of great bliss.
Holding again and again,
The intelligent practitioner should accomplish it through practice.

This is the wisdom of the emanation of the great worship of all the yoginīs.

When they had all been gratified,
They made supplication to Vajradhara:
All the auxiliary foods,
And likewise the auxiliary articles,
The practitioner, by accomplishing bliss,

Great Manifold One, please instruct us
How, accomplishing every practice,
And performing unfailing austerities,
One swiftly, through equal union,
Fully transforms the maṇḍala.

Then the Blessed One spoke the mudrā of all the auxiliary articles and foods:

All the outer articles
Are clothing, ornaments, and the like.
As for the auxiliary foods,
Prepare them properly from meat and blood.
The fruits and roots are without measure,
Supremely blissful, satisfying the mind.
When worship is made with these,
The ḍākinīs grant accomplishment.

With the sublime milk well prepared
From swollen flesh, fill a skull cup;
If one offers it to all the ḍākinīs,
Accomplishment comes here in this maṇḍala.

This is the wisdom of the articles for the worship of torma.

Then all the tathāgatas and all the vajra holders rose, bowed, and again gathered densely into one, and they made supplication to the Blessed One:

The marks of the wisdom of all yogas,
And all the signs of the vajra yoginīs
That are to be kept in mind:
Blessed One, please explain them.

Then the Blessed One entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the glory connected with tasting Great Utter Delight, and spoke this mudrā of the signs of all the vajra sky-goers and ḍākinīs:

"Ka" means: because one wishes to make love,
It is the saying "I am full of desire."
If, blinded by delusion, one does not give,
That samaya is swiftly broken.
When one who keeps the samaya sees a samaya partner,
He extends his right hand.
If she in turn extends her left
And presses it firmly to her own breast,
Then bows her head to the left,
It is a greeting that asks after one's well-being.
If one rests the left hand on the waist,
That makes a salutation.
Placing the left hand on the head
And bowing to the left is the return of the greeting.
By moving the left eyebrow
A salutation is swiftly made.
One very diligent in union
Should return the greeting with the right eyebrow.
If one endowed with union
Presses the heart with the right hand,
This is the supreme vajra master:

It should be known as his sign.
When at some time one shows it so,
With the left wrathful finger raised,
"That great-bodied one has grown angry":
This is called the sign of the yogin.
Swaying proudly to the left,
One extends the hand at the heart;
If the queen finger is shown pointing upward,
Then one should recognize friendship.
When at some time one sees
The little finger made into a point and moved,
Then the consort, the sovereign lady of yoga,
Wishes to sport with vajra and lotus.
When at some time the thick finger is seen,
One should give her a feast.
When it is shown held very high,
One should recognize manifest pride.
When the mantra adept shows
The wrathful finger bent like a hook,
Then one must certainly kiss;
Otherwise one falls into hell.
If, just the reverse of that,
The mantra adept does not show it,
Then one should swiftly go;
If one does otherwise, the samaya is broken.
If by the mudrās of others
The yogin is urged on,
Knowing the application of the rites,
He should undertake those rites.

This is the wisdom of the mudrā of signs.

All the letters without a guide
The yogin should examine closely.
Always free of dots and the final stress,
That is the yoginī's manner of guiding.
oṃ is the sign together with the bindu;
Union should be recognized as the mantra-holding yogin.

These and other endless supreme signs
Should be examined in the center of union.

This is the wisdom of the mudrā called the Glorious Samaya Lady, which gratifies through the equal union of vajra and lotus.

Then the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, lord of all the tathāgatas, again entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the wisdom vajra that seals everything, and drew forth from the vajra of his own body, speech, and mind this wisdom of the mudrā of all the great yoginīs, the secret of the vajra perfection ladies:

Placing the vajra palms evenly,
One should bind the thick fingers crossed.
The two wrathful fingers should be joined,
And the rest sent out like light.
Placing this mudrā at the heart
And applying it fully in all rites,
In the maṇḍala of the manifold ḍākinīs
It brings unfailing accomplishment.
Joining those two palms evenly,
One joins the supreme and vajra fingers evenly;
The two little fingers also touch face to face,
And likewise one joins the thick fingers at the heart.
By this, all the vajra beings
Fully perform the samaya of the Terrifying One.
She who benefits all sentient beings:
That brings about accomplishment.
From that very mudrā, raising
The vajra and the supreme fingers,
And remaining in the vajra palms,
If one draws them in the manner of drawing,
Then, undistracted, there is accomplishment.

If by this, fully endowed with the power to harm,
Even the supreme Victor is drawn in,
What need is there to speak of the daughters
Of gods and humans, of asuras and the rest?
Just as one wishes in one's mind,

By this very one there is accomplishment;
By joining it with mantra recitation,
One draws them in supremely swiftly.
From that very joining of palms come the wrathful fingers;
Bending their tips ever so slightly,
And setting the rest like the tips of rays,
By that one obtains the power to intoxicate.
If, as soon as this is bound,
Even the Sugatas are brought under control,
What need is there to speak of the Mind-Born (Kāma), of the passionate,
Or of those whose nature abides in delusion?
Through the practice of desire, as one pleases,
By that one performs the ritual actions;
All correct practices are accomplished;
Without the practice there is no accomplishment.
Forming this very one at the heart,
Through the delighting practice of great bliss,
The supreme Victor is pleased.
With all these supreme bindings,
By this one obtains all ritual actions
And the doing of whatever one thinks in mind.
They delight one another,
And through delight accomplishment is swiftly obtained.
Joining the vajra palms evenly,
Bend the vajra fingers and join them to the thick fingers;
Send out the rest in the manner of light.
This mudrā is the supreme Delighter:
One obtains the accomplishment that is the fruit of buddhahood.
Kingship, wealth, and grains,
And likewise jewels: these are its accomplishments.
At once he
Becomes one worshiped by gods and asuras.
The wise one, binding this himself
At the junctures of the day,
And applying it fully to the five places,
If he confers empowerment upon his crown,
Then he will certainly come to hold

The empowerment of all the vajra holders.
By practicing in union for about a year,
Empowering one another,
The intelligent one, the vajra, undistracted,
Becomes lord of the three realms, Utter Delight.
Making that very one turn as a wheel,
Turn it at the heart like a wheel.
By practicing in union for about a month,
One fully accomplishes the turning of the wheel.
Applying that very one to the left,
Raise it up in the manner of a victory banner.
Through seven days of meditative equipoise,
One becomes victorious in the world.
Apply that very one at the mouth as laughter;
Through about a month of equipoise,
One will perform all ritual actions perfectly
By laughter alone.
Placing that very joining of palms evenly,
And turning the tips so that they are half open,
Make the thick fingers into the stamens
And spread the rest wide as petals.
By binding this yoga
One is completely freed from all evil.
Blessed by great merit,
All that brings bliss will be accomplished.
Join that very joining of palms at the heart;
Joining the supreme and the two wrathful fingers,
Bend those two fully at the three joints,
And set the thick fingers as though seated cross-legged.
Through applying it in the yogas,
If one does this for one month,
He becomes the lord victorious over the three worlds,
A great hero.
Joining that very joining of palms evenly,
One should turn it at one's own heart.
Then the mantra adept, with undistracted mind,
Becomes a teacher of the Dharma.

Setting the thick fingers in the manner of a tongue,
If one places that very one at the mouth,
All things whatsoever in the world,
In short, within just seven days,
Riches, gold, clothing, and the like,
And the supreme drinks of nectar,
All of these one seizes by this;
There is no doubt that it will succeed.
Joining that very joining of palms evenly,
Place the two supreme fingers below;
Joining the two little fingers and the two thick fingers,
Place them firmly at the heart.
It performs all the ritual actions that delight the mind,
The power of illusion, and the ending of existence;
Always, in a year and a half, the intelligent one
Will obtain the great power of kingship over the three realms.
Joining that very joining of palms evenly,
From the very middle of one's own lower lip,
With the thick fingers in the manner of tasting,
Send forth the wrathful fingers as a wheel.
Through intense effort for seven days,
By this comes the accomplishment of drawing blood;
It performs all the rites of being devoured by piśācas.
Having bound the joining of palms,
Join the two vajra fingers as a lotus;
Linking the edges of the thick fingers,
And likewise the two little fingers,
Stretch out the tips from the throat.
Applying it in all the ritual actions,
By this all the vicious ones,
Through its application, become terrified.
Placing that very joining of palms evenly,
One should bind it with a tight binding.
Put the two thick fingers inside,
And stir the two wrathful fingers as well.
By this all the vicious ones
Are made to cower utterly.

In an instant the harmers
Are likewise gathered in and crushed.
Sealed with this mudrā,
He becomes the lord of the great accomplishment
Among all accomplishments,
And accomplishes the aims of all ritual actions.
Sealed with this mudrā,
One goes and comes swiftly, in sequence.
Through the practice of a single year,
One accomplishes all the ritual actions.
These are the mudrās that perform all the ritual actions of all the Vajra Yoginīs.

Then all those yoginīs, utterly delighted, were filled with wonder, and they danced with transformations:
With hi hi they sing songs;
With hā hā they are utterly delighted;
With ho ho they bring pleasure;
With he he they summon;
With hūṃ hūṃ they laugh;
With hā hā they set in motion;
With phaṭ phaṭ they kill;
With hūṃ hūṃ they strike with the kīla;
With jā jā they draw in;
With sa sa they bind fast.
The virtuous, sovereign, supreme roar:
With hūṃ bhruṃ they kill.
hūṃ bhrūṃ hūṃ bhrūṃ
With hūṃ hūṃ they make things blaze;
With truṃ truṃ they bestow splendor;
With triṃ triṃ they draw in;
With traṃ traṃ they make offerings;
All accomplishments ripen as fruit.
With hraṃ hruṃ they bewilder;
With dhriṃ dhriṃ they make others cower;
With hriṃ hriṃ they draw in;
With hūṃ hūṃ they set wandering;
With hroṃ hroṃ they bewilder;

With hra hra they suppress;
With ho ho they bring pleasure;
With haṃ haṃ they protect;
With hūṃ hūṃ they kill;
With hu hu they delight;
With traṃ traṃ they offer incense;
With ghuṃ ghuṃ they make garlands;
With gaṃ gaṃ they make fragrance;
With raṃ raṃ they make others swoon.

Then the hosts of the circles of the maṇḍalas of all the tathāgatas were filled with great wonder and great amazement. Entering into equipoise in the samādhi called Delighting One's Own Mind, they again bowed to the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, lord of the vajra of the body, speech, and mind of all the tathāgatas, and made this supplication:

"Nondual one, supremely wondrous,
Blessed One, please explain that very reality
Through which beings attain this accomplishment,
By which the hidden secret is accomplished:
Dance and song and great laughter,
Amorous play, delight, and supreme bliss,
Cymbals and flutes of every kind,
Drums and strings in rich abundance,
The sequences of the rites of the secret tantras,
Miraculous powers and the great greatness of intellect.
You who have accomplished all accomplishments,
King of Mantras, please explain them."

Then the Blessed One of the buddhas,
The lord of all, the great king,
Wondrous in conduct from beginningless time,
The Great Manifold One, free of concepts,
Great in the qualities of manifold wisdom,
Unsurpassed lord of all dharmas,
Great lord of vidyā and mantra,
The great reality, the supreme essence,
Who seals deluded minds with the mudrā,
The sealer, the bewilderer, the devourer,

The releaser and the doer, the great pervader,
The mover, who steals away evil,
Who removes all evil dharmas,
The wrathful one who grants wishes in evil times,
Who leaves the imprint of the dharma of delusion,
Who likewise gives earth and sky and bliss,
And likewise gives to yogins,
To whom Brahmā, the One Who Longs to Belong, and Mahendra
Bow down and make offerings,
That very guardian, the protector,
The secret of secrets, the great bliss,
Reveals the great hidden secret
That arises from the Candraguhyatilaka.
His own vajra of body, speech, and mind
Brings forth great bliss.
All the enjoyments of the fortunate,
He brings all women under control.
The self-arisen one, marked with the bindu,
Has a net of thirteen at its head.
By this, women are generated,
And by the seed, kings are gathered.
Blazing with light rays and splendor,
Resembling a sprout springing from oneself,
It is placed toward the lower side;
Forming hraṃ, one should swiftly draw in.
Drawing the first two strokes,
With the visarga one makes the hook.
The supreme lord of gods and asuras
Draws in all of the three realms.
Through practice in this manner,
Having accomplished it together with each other,
One bestows accomplishments
Of many wondrous kinds.
One should see the nature of oneself
As the very form of the moon, joined in union;
Then one should place the seed there.
That very reality abides through skillful means.

By fully applying the practice of mantra,
The mantra adept then succeeds there.
Without that very mantra, the essence,
The mudrā and the vidyā,
Even the buddha Vajrasattva
Would never come to accomplishment.
If one joins that very one within,
By joining the essence at the heart,
One should join mudrā with mudrā.
Meditating on the mantra and the syllables of the mantra,
Join the vidyā as the vidyā itself.
By this there is swift accomplishment,
And swift travel is fully accomplished.
On the great ground of all the buddhas,
One draws near to arising and to change from arising.
The yogin who accomplishes the aims of yoga's wealth,
The great hero, goes and comes.

Then all the tathāgatas were utterly delighted and pleased, and they proclaimed this vajra song:

"Oh! The unsurpassed vajra vehicle
Of Samantabhadra,
The teaching called the secret,
Is accomplished for the sake of that reality.
The essence, mudrā, and samaya,
Mantra and vidyā, are one's own deity;
The secret of my own reality, just as it is,
Was spoken by the supreme Victor.
The maṇḍala and the samaya,
The hidden secret, that very reality,
The stages before which the three worlds bow,
Were fully proclaimed by the great hero.
Fashioning the vajra and the lotus,
He sports together with the vidyā:
Kneading all the vicious ones,
Devouring those hostile to the samaya,
Liberating those who revile the master,

Accomplishing the lord of the consort,
Generating all the buddhas,
Stirring Utter Delight himself,
Purifying all evil,
Desiring all women,
Drawing in all the Māras,
Inserting the vajra completely,
Filling the place of the lotus,
Accomplishment and close accomplishment,
Exceeding union and great union,
Union, full union, and the arising of union:
He is the one who knows the reality of these."

Great Bliss himself has spoken
The great union of accomplishment:
Join truly with union and with the consort of union.
That very reality, the great being
Has spoken clearly, with the intention to benefit.

Then the Blessed One placed in his heart the sūtra of further questions that all the tathāgatas had requested, and drew it forth from his own vajra of body, speech, and mind:

The samaya of all the buddhas
Is endowed equally with universal union.
That very one is the great mudrā,
Generated in turn by the five wisdoms.
The maṇḍala has four mudrās
And is accomplished in turn by the great mudrā.
He generated Vajrasattva:
Oh! Bliss fully arises.
The essence is called wisdom;
It is truly endowed with the four wisdoms.
The mudrā is wisdom, the great mudrā;
The supreme samaya is the vidyā.
Resembling the form of the mantra's syllables,
The mudrā of the syllables bestows great aims.
The dhāraṇī accomplished by this:
My reality is that very deity.

Their reality, just as it is,
The secret, I have fully proclaimed.
To those who are not of the samaya and do not know,
The knower of mantra should not teach it.
All the mudrās are to be kept secret;
The seal of the samaya is the secret.
The practice of that very deity:
Accomplish fully the secret of secrets.
Fashioning the vajra and the lotus,
Through the practice of outer and inner play,
One should sport together with the vidyā:
Kissing and embracing,
And likewise seizing the lip with the teeth,
One should insert the firm vajra.
In the manner of right and left,
One should move and dance in many ways.
One should knead all the vicious ones:
The breasts, the armpits, the two cheeks,
The jaw, the two thighs, the back,
The feet, the hands, and the soft pair.
Through this practice of kneading,
That great love is accomplished.
Those who obstruct the aims one desires,
Devouring those hostile to the samaya,
Those who are to be devoured by the wrathful,
And especially others and others besides, are to be eaten;
Those who always speak in hostility
And those who revile the guru should be liberated.
Drawing out their flesh, blood, and brains,
One should make the offering of the gaṇa feast.
This is the fierce secret:
Toward those who revile the vajra master
And those intent on reviling the guru,
It should be accomplished for the sake of the samaya.
That deluded one will not succeed,
And he will meet with suffering:
Through every illness, great wrath,

And the torment of the Terrifying One,
For countless tens of millions of eons
He undergoes great suffering,
And, crying out in lamentation, a lord of serpents,
He goes to ruin in the great Avīci hell.
Body, speech, and mind are sublime bliss;
Moving toward all the vidyās,
With the bliss of great awakening,
One should offer praise according to the rite.
Uttering this essence of urging,
jaḥ, moment by moment,
Abiding from its own place,
One should set it moving from that very one.
Endowed with the sixteen digits,
On the secret drop of the moon,
Just like a flower,
Wafted by the wind, it should be set moving.
That is accomplished by moving it;
Likewise one should urge it on.
Like a continuous garland of clear light,
The intelligent one should always practice.
For drawing in all the Māras,
The goddesses are taught as the essence:
Inserting in the manner of a noose,
And likewise filling and binding.
Accomplishment is the union of the god;
Subsequent accomplishment is for the sake of the goddess;
Great accomplishment is the seal of both;
Equal union is the supreme vajra;
Close accomplishment is where both abide;
Exceeding accomplishment is sublime bliss.
Seizing the lip with the tips of the teeth,
One should press the supreme lower lip.
The union and full union of the fortunate:
Tasting Utter Delight, sublime bliss.
Deity is truly joined with deity:
This is called nondual.

Through the essence, mudrā, mantra, and vidyā,
One should accomplish one's own form.
If one thinks, "I am the sattva,"
This swiftly becomes nondual.
One should accomplish all the accomplishments
Of the deities of form, sound, and the rest.
Union, full union, and great union
Were spoken by the supreme of all victors.
The Blessed One is vajra union;
Full union goes through the sky.
The full application of those mudrās
Is proclaimed as the great union.
By this, in equal union
With all the heroes and all the buddhas,
One will obtain in this very life
The lord of union, great bliss.
If one is sealed with this mudrā,
One becomes the great lord of the vajra.
By applying equal union,
One swiftly conquers the three worlds.
In the manner of applying true union,
Drawing in and fully inserting,
Urging on with the firm vajra,
One arouses desire through intense desire.
All the ḍākinīs, possessed of skill in means,
Should be made to swell and likewise to flow.
This is the hidden true union,
The hidden maṇḍala of the yoginīs.
By this one takes true accomplishment
And obtains the fruit of great miraculous power.
The awakening of the buddhas, great bliss,
And the most supreme awakening one truly obtains.
The great secret, the wondrous,
Their great hidden reality,
The seal the buddhas asked about,
I have truly and fully taught.
Whoever sees one truly endowed with it

And makes offerings to the great lord,
He sees all the teachers
And comes to make offerings to the supreme Victor.
He becomes one who cuts off existence
And becomes the supreme teacher of beings.
All the gods make offerings to him
And bow to him moment by moment.
Just as the Teacher, the perfect Buddha,
The benefactor, was born in the world,
So, by gathering manifold wisdom,
He likewise becomes a great yogin.
Through guarding the samaya oneself,
The bliss of Vajrasattva arises;
Endowed with the union of Vajrasattva,
He obtains the great accomplishment.

When the name of Vajrasattva has been conferred,
There is nothing at all that will not be accomplished.
The great bliss of all the mudrās
Is accomplished in turn, individually, in oneself.
The name of Utter Delight and the great beloved,
The greatness of the greatness of taste and touch:
Through the union of Vajrasattva
These are accomplished with no need for scrutiny.
Then they were pleased,
And Vajrasattva of great bliss,
Tormented by the desire for union,
Delighted them with great union:
rama rama samho mahāsatva
"Abide in Utter Delight without doubt,
In equal union with all the buddhas,
Truly endowed with the Candraguhyatilaka.
We all are the samaya:
In the supreme heart of the yoginīs
Of the fortunate, stainless Utter Delight,
Sport through great union itself.
With the lotus and the vajra jewel

Of the Great Vehicle of great bliss,
In the maṇḍala of all the yoginīs,
Partake of the very enjoyment of Utter Delight.
All of us are free of faults;
Harmless, that is like gold.
That very reality is the great accomplishment of all:
Partake of the very self of Utter Delight.
Kissing, embracing, and concealing,
Inserting and the supreme releasing:
Through this firmness of illusion,
O caravan leader, examine it fully."

Then the Blessed One, Great Bliss, Samantabhadra, entered into equipoise in the samādhi of the great concealment of the equality of all dharmas called the Glory of Victory in Enjoying All Desires. He fully engaged in the embracing, kissing, inserting, drawing, urging, kneading, dripping, causing to feel, moving, moving all about, the binding vajra, and the equal union with the great lotus of Great Utter Delight of all the yoginīs. Through the great bliss of utter delight he made bliss expand everywhere. Moving, delighting, and fully emitting toward all the tathāgatas and all the hosts of consorts, he remained, having filled the whole expanse of space with the multitude of the equality of the bliss of Great Utter Delight.

Then those great yoginīs, the great beings of utter delight, were pleased and blissful:
"Oh! Bliss, bliss, great bliss!
The perfect Buddha is greatly pleased;
Great Bliss is satisfied.
Oh! Bliss, bliss, great bliss!
They bow with bliss itself;
The bodhisattvas, the great-minded,
Are endowed with the bliss of great delight.
Oh! Bliss, bliss, great bliss!"
Those who torment with fear and terror,
The greatly wrathful ḍākinīs,
Utterly unbearable, like poison,
Through the play of the Great Bliss Maker
Make offerings to the great Bliss Maker.

The rākṣasīs of great fortune,
Utterly bewildered by the bliss of the Bliss Maker,
Make offerings with the vast and supreme
Masses of clouds of offerings endowed with bliss.
The great fierce goddesses, like the Mothers,
Utterly ferocious, like fire,
Coming, through the Great Bliss Maker,
Make offerings to the supreme lord.
All the gods and goddesses,
The nāginīs, and the Horse-Faced One too,
Coming, through the union of bliss,
Make offerings with what delights the mind.
Then Indra, the great god,
The great being, the god of gods,
Said: "Oh! Manifold bliss itself,
Manifold union, great bliss!"
Pleased and utterly satisfied,
The god of gods goes in front.
Bowing to the bliss of the hero,
"Oh! Bliss, bliss, great bliss!"
They make offerings with their own bliss
And give delight through fear and terror;
With boundless satisfaction and great laughter,
Supremely endowed with song and dance,
With food and snacks and great meat,
Cymbals, garlands, and great flavors,
Flutes, many-stringed lutes, and clay drums,
Lutes, and pa la ki ga ha la le,
With the tiger and the heroic and the fearful,
The peaceful, the wondrous, and the terrifying,
The self, the wrathful, and the wide-eyed,
They make offerings moment by moment.
Performing and averting,
Seizing and inserting,
With sid and hūṃ hūṃ
And ha ha they give delight;
Utter Delight, the very self of bliss,

Is delighted by his own wife.

Then the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, through the great bliss of utter delight, drew in all the buddhas, the bodhisattvas, the pratyekabuddhas, and the śrāvakas dwelling in space and in every reach of space, and those who abide in the wisdom of dharmatā, which is ceased by its intrinsic nature and without essential nature, by the bliss of the skillful means and the bliss of the wisdom of the bliss of Great Utter Delight. He empowered them and established them correctly in the samādhi of the bliss of Great Utter Delight. Then, as the king of the dharmatā of the bliss of Great Utter Delight, caring for them, he gazed with a gaze that is equal to the unequaled upon the realms of beings in all the great world systems without exception, which are equal to space. Having gazed, he pervaded the world together with its gods with great bliss.

In sentient beings and all the families; in all places; in what has conduct and what has no conduct; in the elements and what derives from the elements; in the underworld; in the aggregates, the elements, and the sense sources; in the five accumulated faculties; in consciousness and the knowable; in self and mine; in the manifold and the not manifold; in children, the old, and the young; in women, men, and those who are not men; in life and in utter exhaustion; in fear and fearlessness; in the eye, ear, nose, tongue, body, and mind; in knowing and not knowing; in wisdom and skillful means; in the pervaded and the pervader; in the moon, Mahendra, the sun, fire, Yama, the Lord of Waters, Pūtana, Brahmā, the One Who Longs to Belong, Maheśvara, and the Goddess; in the fortunate and the unfortunate; in things and the absence of things; in signs; in the vajra, the lotus, the jewel, the sword, the hammer, the staff, the trident, and the wheel; in union and full union; in the empty, the great empty, the supremely empty, the utterly empty, and the emptiness that is fully empty; in awakening and the awakening mind; in letters and the absence of letters; in the net and the creeper; in parts and the partless; in the drop; in taste and great taste; in the absence of mental engagement; in the permanent, the peaceful, and the inexhaustible; in liberation, the liberator, and freedom; in awareness; in freedom from afflictions; and in space, its openings, and the absence of openings, he became a single dense mass, and then, having opened out, he remained in a manner that cannot be seen.

Then the consorts of all the tathāgatas, the Lady of the Perfection of Wisdom, the Lady of the Perfection of Skillful Means, the Lady of the Perfection of Aspiration, and the Lady of the Vajra Perfection, bowed to the Blessed One, the lord of all the tathāgatas, Utter Delight, the great Unfailing Vajra, the great one who definitively explains the intention of the great secret. Urging him directly, they asked:

"suratastvaṃ masi ho
Why is desire great bliss?
How does awakening come from desire?
How is freedom from desire blissful?
How is aversion the great vajra?
How is delusion the great Victor?
How does desire become the lotus?
How is pride the lord of space?
How is jealousy the Unfailing One?
How is the awakening mind blissful?
How does one come to worship the Bliss Maker?
How is one accomplished through worship?
How, through union with the consort,
Is the supreme syllable accomplished?
How are the five qualities of desire
Swiftly accomplished through approach?
How, through union with the secret,
Does the wondrous empowerment take place?
How, through union with the lotus,
Does one fully enter the maṇḍala?
How do urine and the seed of awakening,
Blood and the great Vairocana,
Come to be samaya itself?
How should the drinks be fully examined?"

Then the Blessed One, the lord of Great Utter Delight, the great Samantabhadra, delighted all those great secret vajra perfection ladies with his own bliss, and drew forth from his own vajra of body, speech, and mind the great answer to the questions, supremely secret, utterly hidden, the great concealment of the equality of the unequaled:

"In the terrors of the three lower realms,
Because I show aversion to the afflictions of beings,
For that reason I, the great vajra,
Am proclaimed as aversion.

In the great terror of the lower realms,
Because it stupefies all beings,
For that reason this is delusion,
The permanent, supreme sage.
Through the very manner of skillful means and wisdom
It brings delight to all beings,
And because it is fully realized in the manner of the lotus,
For that reason it is called desire.
Through clouds that give great bliss,
It generates pride in all beings;
Because it gathers the bliss of space,
For that reason great space is pride.
Through union with taste and the rest,
Jealousy is the Unfailing Vajra;
Because it fully enters the manifold lotus,
For that reason it is the great manifold.
Because without desire there is no joy,
I am Utter Delight, the great hidden one.
Apart from desire there is no maker of bliss;
I am desire, great bliss.
Without desire there is no awakening;
Without awakening there is no desire.
Freedom from desire lies within evil.
Because it delights the buddhas with supreme bliss,
From the desire of desire, the bliss
Of the Bliss Maker becomes supremely wondrous.
Apart from the awakening mind, no other maker of bliss
Exists here in the three worlds.
All things have the nature of the awakening mind;
They are satisfied by every bliss.
bo is explained as the vajra;
dhi is the supreme consort;
ci is explained as flowing;
ta is great bliss.
Without worship there is no Bliss Maker;
Without bliss there is no delight;
Through delight accomplishment is obtained.

When it is accomplished, Vajrapāṇi,
The great bliss of the permanent Bliss Maker,
Is worshiped with the bliss of desire,
And is obtained in this very life.
The dharmadhātu, which has become
The basis of all bliss, is held;
Because she holds the vajra she is the consort,
And hrī holds the lotus.
This is union in equality with it:
The syllable is swiftly accomplished.
All the qualities of the five desires
Are emanations of the perfect Buddha,
The enjoyments of the buddhas and of Vajradhara,
And of the illusion of the ḍākinīs.
Therefore the five qualities of desire
Are accomplished by that approach.
Holding the body of mantra, glorious,
The king of mantras through the supreme lord,
Born from the heart of Vajrasattva,
She who bears the mark is taught as supremely hidden.
By practicing together with her,
The supreme empowerment is conferred.
Through what is called the lotus maṇḍala,
One accomplishes all the maṇḍalas,
If the intelligent one has entered there."

The hidden pledges of the assembly,
Urine, bodhicitta, the supreme red,
Great flesh, honey, and butter,
Abide pervading the whole body;
For that reason they are the great pledge.
Through this pledge comes accomplishment.
If one endowed with the syllables of the pledge
Purifies and generates them through what is called union,
By eating them one will attain accomplishment.

Then all the Perfection goddesses,
With their lotus gazes opened wide,

Smiling, danced from the left,
And once more entreated the Eternal One:
"Into how many kinds are those families taught?
How is it that they are called the three hidden ones?
Great Manifold One, you who abide in bliss,
Please explain all of these."

Then the Blessed One entered into equipoise in the samādhi called "the great bliss of the nondual sameness of all the tathāgatas," and from his own vajra body, speech, and mind he drew forth the suchness of the Perfection goddesses, the supreme secret of all the tathāgatas:

"I myself, the Blessed One of union,
Vajrasattva, bestow the great aim.
Through the five distinctions of family
I sport with those who practice and those who do not.
The Eternal One, Akṣobhya, the Supreme Jewel,
Lokeśvara, and Amoghasiddhi:
The families are taught as eightfold;
Condensed in brief, they are five.
Through body, speech, and mind
They are distinguished as three vehicles.
The Vajra Lord who possesses these three realities
Sports in the abode of bliss."

Then all the blessed tathāgatas became supremely amazed and made a request concerning their own vows:

"The vows that bestow every accomplishment,
The ascetic disciplines and austerities of the mantra adept,
The supreme guarding of the pledges:
Blessed One, speak of these in their very secrecy."

Then the Blessed One, the great Samantabhadra, being intent on the bliss of supreme and utter delight, knew that all the tathāgatas had made this request. His face blossomed with a broad smile, and from his own vajra body, speech, and mind he drew forth this:

"Through the hiddenness of body, speech, and mind,
One should guard them with diligence.
By guarding them, merit is great,

And accomplishments will surely arise.
That is done in this way: with a vast mind,
Sealing by binding the mudrās of great color and shape and so forth,
One should fully accomplish the hidden body.
To engage fully in vajra speech,
The nature of the Dharma is expressed by mudrā.
Hidden speech, uttered in secret,
Is vajra speech with the voice concealed.
Thoroughly piercing one's own mind,
Meditate on the moon and the vajra.
Meditate on the three natures as one:
This is the great hidden mind.
This is the supreme and vast reality.
Practicing these meditations continually,
By meditating on the three one will succeed.
It is not otherwise: so Vajradhara has spoken.
By the rite of the three hidden ones and so forth,
All the mudrās are sealed.
Therefore, with every diligence,
One should keep the three hidden ones well hidden.
The great holder of the supreme vajra
And the great lord bestow their blessing.
If some fool transgresses them,
Even a vajra holder perishes in an instant.
If one is parted from the great being,
In the three lower realms, again and again,
For as long as the sphere of space endures,
One will ripen into what is utterly unbearable."

Then all those pledge deities, delighted with Vajradhara,
Danced with gentle hands,
Paid homage with the left, and entreated him once more:
"Lord of Dance, dancing the dance of trampling and subduing,
With the proud bearing of your ten boundless arms,
You open the eight soft petals of the lotus
And set the vajra in nondual bliss;
That hidden reality, the unequaled, awakens.

Vajra, lotus, and moon are perfectly joined;
Method and wisdom, delight, the Bliss Maker, and the rest:
Speak of them through the very secrecy of the sugatas.
Union, non-union, and perfect union;
The peaceful joined palms, supremely blissful;
The qualities of the five desires are accomplished,
And the awakening of a buddha is fully achieved."

Then the Blessed One, king of pledges,
Vajrasattva, Great Bliss,
Urged concerning that hidden reality,
Explained the hidden in its entirety:
"Whoever is empowered through the union of vajra and lotus
By one versed in the rite,
To that one the master who desires bliss
Should teach this reality.
In this there is no bathing and no fault,
No austerity, and no hardship either.
The union of all the buddhas
Is accomplished by union with me myself.
One becomes Vajrasattva himself,
Of vajra body, speech, and mind.
If the descent of the vajra arises,
One flies through the sky as far as one wishes.
Binding the vajra fist at the heart,
Gazing about with the vajra gaze,
If one performs the approach in the manner of delight,
One becomes Vajrasattva in an instant.
Through the graceful, delighted trampling stance,
One goes to the ground of Utter Delight,
And is worshiped by the buddhas,
By Great Bliss, and by the accomplished ones as well.
Dancing in the proud standing posture,
The vast and supreme one of Vajrasattva,
One is like the moonlight of the Bliss Maker,
And overcomes the special karmas, the actions, and the rest.
By dancing the hidden dance,

One accomplishes the very nature of hidden union.
Dancing the manifold maṇḍala,
With many arms transforming,
Extended outward and filling space,
With a wrathful and stainless gaze,
Terrifying, subduing those hard to tame,
One becomes victorious over the three worlds.
If, in the very center of a blazing sun,
One meditates on the wrathful one sounding hūṃ,
Swiftly, to accomplish the welfare of the world,
One becomes victorious over the three worlds.
In union with the four goddesses,
Saying su ra ta stvaṃ,
If one joins in the manner of the drop of ha ra,
One at once becomes Utter Delight.
By supremely examining Utter Delight,
The yogin goes to the great ground,
And accompanied by the four goddesses,
Accomplishes every aim of sentient beings."

Then all those tathāgatas bowed to Great Bliss and entreated him:

Joining their palms perfectly, they said,
"Speak of the very reality of the mudrās."
They entreated the supreme Vajra:
"Speak of the offerings whose nature is bliss:
Forms and sounds, great scents,
Tastes, and pleasing touches,
Accomplished through great compassion.
Great Hero, speak of them yourself."

Then the Blessed One, the great Bliss Maker,
Vajrasattva, the great lord,
Great bliss, the binding of the mudrās,
Explained the supreme reality:
"First is the Dharma mudrā;
Second is the pledge mudrā;
Third is the great mudrā;
Fourth is taught as the action mudrā."

Then how the vajra of body, speech, and mind
Is to be meditated upon in its proud bearing,
Pure in accord with manifold wisdom,
The Great Manifold One explained:
"The body of the Eternal One is yellow;
Akṣobhya is a white vajra;
Ākāśagarbha is a great dark blue;
Amitāyus is a red lotus;
Of many colors, vast and supreme,
With marvelous garlands of light rays,
Is Amogha, the great vajra.
One should imagine them accomplishing the great aim.
In the abode of each one's own family,
One swiftly travels through the sky,
And with the four goddesses of the family
One sports and makes offerings.
In the manifold union of great bliss,
In union with the four goddesses,
If one meditates on the vajra union,
One becomes the very nature of Vajrasattva.
Vajrasattva and the other supreme beings,
Seated on the vajra and the other seats,
Adorned with their own supreme wheels:
Imagine them abiding in their own mudrās.
In the manner of the lotus seat,
Meditating with loving affection,
Dancing the hidden meaning of the essence,
If one makes bliss in the great hidden,
One accomplishes that great vajra
Endowed with the bliss of proud bearing,
And close by the manifold maṇḍala,
One will go to the Great Manifold One."

This is the expansion of the mudrā called "The Bliss of the Great Union that Accomplishes All Great Bliss."

Then the binding of the mudrās was explained:
"The reality of the Eternal One and the rest:
By swiftly binding them,

One goes to the buddhas' accomplishment, great bliss.
Method should be placed on the right side,
And likewise wisdom on the left.
With the three peaceful joined palms,
One should bring them together in the manner of union.
All the fingers, interlaced with one another,
Joined together, bestow the special result.
With this vajra joined palm,
One accomplishes oneself as all the buddhas.
Even by merely binding this,
One goes to the abode of Ākāśagarbha.
By binding this very tightly,
One should make offering by joining in three.
From that same mudrā, all the fingers
Should be fully bent and bound.
By contracting the vajra binding,
One transforms it into the binding.
Firmly inserting the thumbs,
One draws in the tips of the wrathful fingers.
This is the binding of the vajra family;
It accomplishes Vajrasattva himself.
Likewise, arranging the binding,
Join the thumbs to the tips of the wrathful fingers.
This is the binding, the great binding;
It brings about travel through the sky.
Binding that same binding,
The two wrathful fingers, in the form of the emblem,
Touch their tips together and draw them in.
By this binding one accomplishes the lotus.
With that same binding, the thumbs firmly
Are placed comfortably within and bound tight.
By applying the action binding,
One goes to the family of the supreme Amogha.
Binding that same binding,
Join the thumbs and the tips of the wrathful fingers.
With the vajra of the right thumb,
One should insert it in their center.

This is the great binding,
Which accomplishes the taste of Utter Delight.
By merely binding it,
One attains Utter Delight itself.
All accomplishments, great bliss,
Are attained by it in this very life.
Through the rite of binding the mudrās,
All the buddhas fully abide."

This is the expansion of the wisdom of binding the mudrās.

"Through the rite of the five bindings,
The yoga is not to be accomplished alone.
If one joins the six through union,
One at once becomes Utter Delight."

This is the mudrā of the five bindings.

"Likewise, forming the two bindings,
One should bind the left at the heart.
Raising the tip of the right,
One should hold it in the manner of a vajra.
This mudrā is the bliss of awakening;
It accomplishes all the buddhas as one.
Without fail, in this very life,
It brings an attainment like that of the Eternal One.
Placing that same left hand at the heart,
And touching the ground with the right,
Through the play of bliss upon the ground,
By this one will attain the inexhaustible.
Likewise placing the left at the heart,
One should make the right hand the gesture of supreme giving.
By this the jewel, the fortunate ones, and the rest,
Even the sky itself, will be accomplished.
Likewise placing the left at the heart,
And placing the right as well, one abides in meditative absorption.
By this Amitāyus himself
Will be attained in this very life.
Likewise joining the left at the heart,

The right hand bestows fearlessness.
It fully delivers from every fear;
Evil, malice, and great terrors,
By this it carries them all away.
Through the certainty of the unfailing,
It becomes the greatest of the great.
Forming that same mudrā as two bindings,
One should join the left to the left side,
And holding the right at the heart,
One abides laughing broadly in majesty.
Through great bliss abiding in method,
By this one becomes Utter Delight itself,
And the practitioner accomplishes it as supreme bliss,
In this very life, without doubt.
Likewise binding the binding,
One should make it firm with union.
The tip of the thumb, at the place of the lotus,
Is joined to the tip of the left wrathful finger.
With the thumb of the right hand,
Made manifestly into a vajra,
Inserting it, one should enjoy bliss,
And tighten it moment by moment.
This is what accomplishes the delight,
The supreme delight, of all the buddhas.
Even by merely binding this,
One attains the true delight of the vajra.
The consort of the enjoyment of Utter Delight and supreme bliss
Becomes accomplishment itself.
Counting with the right by the sign,
One should place it in the manner of a hook.
Vajra Desire is the hook;
Of the consort who brings about vajra desire,
First place that very guide,
And at the end make ha ra and the drop.
Vajra delight brings the attainment of bliss;
The name should be written in the middle.
By placing this at the heart,

One goes to the supreme bliss of the tathāgatas.
Accompanied by the four mudrās,
With this body one will succeed in this life.
Truly endowed in the union of Utter Delight,
Accompanied together with the four mudrās,
And engaging in the proud vajra posture and the rest,
By binding this yoga,
Utter Delight and all the others without exception
Are drawn in, in an instant,
By the one who sways in the taste of Utter Delight.
Likewise join it to the tip of the thumb,
And place great compassion there:
The greatly fortunate Vajra Eye,
She who reveals reality and every aim.
By binding this correctly,
One becomes the eye of the eternal vajra.
Abandoning both existence and nonexistence,
One will see all things.
Make the vajra joined palm firm;
The tips of the wrathful fingers, rounded,
Are raised high like the emblem,
And the thumbs form a great, firm vajra.
This is the supreme Blessed Lady,
Which brings the attainment of the bliss of vajra and lotus.
By binding this yoga,
One attains the delight of the great hidden."

Then the great goddesses,
With great exuberance, danced,
And together with Māra, paid homage
To the very self of the Vajra Bliss Maker.
Abiding in the method of the syllables of the Dharma,
They entreated concerning the reality of the Dharma:
"The Dharma mudrā, great bliss:
Blessed Vajra, please explain it,
By which, if the practitioner strives intently,
The deity will be accomplished;

By which, swiftly blessed,
The awakening of a buddha is fully accomplished,
And with the great exuberance of the two Bliss Makers,
The tathāgatas will enter and abide."

Then the Blessed One, knowing that all the goddesses had entreated him, drew forth from his own hidden vajra body, speech, and mind these words of the great Dharma mudrā:

"The guide whose nature is the thirteenth,
Truly endowed with the drop as deity,
At the end abides as ha ra and the drop:
Utter Delight, the delight of the vajra.
Having formed this mudrā at the heart,
One sports together with the supreme Delighter.
Those who practice and those who do not will succeed,
And the yogin goes to great bliss.
Likewise make the guide first,
Vajra desire, the supreme curved one,
Truly endowed with ha ra and the drop,
With two parts and a third joined.
If this is placed at the heart,
One goes blissfully through the sky.
Of bliss that is utterly eternal,
This is the supreme accomplishment.
Place that very guide first,
'Look! Look!' together with hūṃ.
The greatly fortunate Vajra Eye,
Urged in the middle, will be accomplished.
The five miraculous eyes, of great wealth:
By this the yogin will succeed,
And in vajra awakening, great delight,
Will see all the buddhas.
First place that very guide,
And at the end make ha ra and the drop.
Vajra delight brings the attainment of bliss;
The name should be written in the middle.
By placing this at the heart,

One goes to the supreme bliss of the tathāgatas.
Accompanied by the four mudrās,
With this body one will succeed in this life.
Truly mounted in the union of Utter Delight,
Accompanied together with the four mudrās,
And engaging in the proud vajra posture and the rest,
One will accomplish the Blessed Lady of Desire."

This is the wisdom mudrā of the meaning of the reality of the Dharma.

Then the Blessed One, the great union,
Supreme, without beginning or end,
In order to tame all the malicious,
Became the Vajra Wrathful One.
In front, as the very first deity,
Is the vajra one who sounds hūṃ, a blazing sun,
Of great splendor like twelve suns,
Endowed with fire blazing fiercely.
All those wheels of his retinue
Are adorned with the supreme ornaments of the charnel ground,
And among the hosts of the malicious
He truly sports.
This mudrā, supreme in taming, of the great wrathful one:
Meditate on the mantra at one's own heart,
And circle it before the daughter of the wrathful goddess;
Thus the great wrathful goddess is accomplished.
By this all the malicious ones,
Through sounding hūṃ, will swiftly be struck down.
Those malicious ones, greatly malicious,
Terrified and agitated, utterly perish.
Crying, "Protect us! Protect us!",
They call the Vajra Lord to mind.
This mudrā is to be held in equipoise;
All beings should be brought down,
And the practitioner of every supreme rite
Should destroy the enemies.
Endowed with union, reciting it a hundred thousand times,
When one performs all the rites,

All of them will come about without fail,
And one is able to accomplish even Vajrasattva.

So spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

This is the wisdom of the mudrā of the wrathful one.

Then those great buddhas,
Supreme among all who are born as buddhas,
All the dhāraṇī women and the yoginīs,
And the hosts of the wheel of their own retinues,
Endowed with bliss with one another,
Through joy, the retinues became exalted;
Joined with the arising of their own Bliss Maker,
The greatly fortunate women sported.

Then the Blessed One, the great Vajra Utter Delight, gazed again and again upon the hosts of the wheel of his own retinue and gathered them with this heart of the guiding knowledge-woman of all the tathāgatas:

oṃ vajra aṃ ku śa du ru du ru e hye hi kaḍḍhya vi kaḍḍhya sarvān varṣa ta ca kra sañca ya vajra aṃ ku śa hūṃ phaṭ

"With this, making firm the two bindings
Of the vajra mudrā,
One should release the vajra wrathful fingers.
The vajra wrath, fully joined,
Is called the Vajra Curve.
Beings, mountains, and sentient beings
Are all drawn in by this mudrā;
What need, then, to mention the daughters of men,
Whose minds are ever swaying with desire?
Placing the vajra binding evenly,
Set it likewise above the left,
And place the thumb in the center:
The vajra guide, Great Splendor.
Tightening the vajra binding,
Touch the tips of the vajra thumbs together.
Meditating 'I am the vajra,'
One should release that binding.
Making that same binding firm,

At the juncture of the roots of the ring finger and the little finger,
Making the vajra thumb potent,
One should set the very self of Utter Delight in motion.
From that, generate the two supreme vajras,
And join them in the manner of a knot.
It is supreme for drawing in and causing to enter;
Since through it all things are accomplished,
By this very yoga mudrā,
Drawing them in, causing them to enter, and binding them,
And bringing them under control, one should accomplish them."

Then, having drawn in, caused to enter, and bound all of them, and having filled them with joy, through the great bliss of his own Utter Delight he watched over his own kingdom, and he declared to Vajradharma:

"This great way of all the buddhas,
This secret of the supreme Delighter, of Candraguhyatilaka,
Whose nature is Utter Delight:
Great being, you must hold it."

Then he swiftly rose from his seat,
Joined his palms and paid homage,
And spoke words in the nature of the Dharma:
"I have received great bliss."
Dancing the enjoyment of his own bliss,
Vajrāyus spoke these words:
"Vajradharma is the great manifold one;
The manifold lotus dances fully."
Then all those Perfection goddesses,
Dancing the enjoyment of Utter Delight,
Following the Great Bliss Maker himself,
Gave the word "Excellent":
"Excellent, excellent, great bliss!
Excellent, excellent, great wisdom!
Excellent, excellent, great manifold one!
Excellent, excellent, great delight!"

When the Blessed One, with a delighted heart, had spoken thus, that great retinue of the Perfection goddesses rejoiced.

The great king of tantras called Candraguhyatilaka, the supremely secret, is complete.

It was translated, edited, and finalized by the chief editor-translator, the monk Rinchen Zangpo.

By the merit of translating, as fitting,
This teaching that a master who realized the meaning of the scriptures
Especially elucidated and set forth,
May sentient beings attain happiness of mind.

Translator's Notes

• In the invocation, bde mchog is taken as "supreme bliss", a common noun, not as the deity Cakrasaṃvara. The "withering afflictions" renders sngo skams, whose exact sense here is uncertain. "The Blessed One of the Various" refers to the lord of the action family, matching the preceding stanzas on the buddha, vajra and lotus families.
• The verses on drawing the seed syllables use a letter code (the thirteenth letter, the fierce dot or visarga, the leader, the fourth, the silent one); the Tibetan for "thirteenth" is literally "thirteen letters," and the intended syllables are not spelled out. "The tips of splendor" renders the obscure rjid pa'i rtse mo, read as brjid; the dance gesture meant is uncertain. "Crescent moon" renders zla ba kham pa, literally "a portion of the moon." Among the instruments, ba na wa is taken as the paṇava drum, and pa li ka is unidentified and left as "palika"; the offering terms bldag pa, bzhib pa and 'jams are taken as things to lick, things to suck and soft foods. In the song, bde mchog is read as "supreme bliss," not as the deity Cakrasaṃvara.
• "Bared his teeth" renders tshems kyis 'debs pa, literally "struck or set down with the teeth"; the exact dance gesture is uncertain. The line "the mind, as water and as that which stirs it" renders the terse sems ni chu dang skul byed pa, whose sense is uncertain. "Sky-goers" renders nam mkha' la 'gro ba (Skt. khecara), here the ḍākas and ḍākinīs. The maṇḍala's name, "Undoubted Vajra," takes gdon mi za ba as "undoubted," as in the earlier "Undoubted Victory," not as a reference to grahas.
• The verses on the seed syllables use a letter code (the second letter, the joining leader, the visarga, the first of great fortune) whose intended syllables are not spelled out. "The three worlds" renders 'jigs gsum, taken as 'jig rten gsum; as written it would mean "three fears." "Pressing down on right and left" renders rnal par gnon pa, where rnal is obscure. Makarī renders chu srin ma, "the female makara," taken as a deity's name.
• The verses on the seed syllables use a letter code (the thirteenth of the first letters, the sixth letter as the leader, ha with ra subjoined) whose syllables are not spelled out. "The vajra of his secret sign" renders mtshan ma'i phyag rdo rje, where mtshan ma probably means the sexual organ. "The great lord" renders dbang chen po in a list after Indra and Upendra; it may stand for Mahendra or Maheśvara. "Those who belong with them" renders the obscure gtogs 'dod rnams. "Ten million consorts" renders rig ma 'bum phrag brgya, a hundred times a hundred thousand.
• "Hārītī" renders 'phrog ma, "the ravisher," following the house glossary; the next verse plays on the word, saying the practitioner "steals" ('phrog byed) the siddhi of the buddhas, so the name may be meant here as an epithet of the consort. "The wrestlers' contest" renders gyad

kyi 'gyed pa, a figure for the sexual union. "Vighnāntaka," "the ender of obstructors," is probably part of the letter code for the mantra.

• Here □□□□□□□□ in "the supreme bliss of the lord" is read as a descriptive phrase, not as the name Cakrasaṃvara. The "thirteenth vowel" is taken as the vowel o, which with the king of drops (the anusvāra) gives oṃ. In the verses on the gods, □□□□□□□□□□ is read as "three-eyed" (Śiva) and the four-faced great father as Brahmā; □□□□□□□□□□ is taken as Śakra, and □□□□□□□□□□□ in this worldly list may refer to Indra as vajra-holder, though it is kept as Vajradhara for consistency. The "great king, kinsman of all" and the "holy lord who fashions all things" could not be identified with confidence and are translated by meaning. □□□□□□□□□ ("Glorious Delight") may name a consort.

• "Liberates" (□□□□□) here carries the tantric sense of ritual slaying that frees the victim's consciousness. □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is rendered "those who practice and those who do not"; its exact reference is uncertain. In the last mantra description, "the wrathful one that others cannot split" and the thunder sound at the end of the preceding one likely describe the syllable hūṃ, but the text does not spell it out. "Those of the desire realm" reads □□□□□□□□□□ as □□□□□□□□□□.

• In "if through delusion one transgresses," the transgressor is not named; it is taken as the practitioner breaking the commitment. "The indivisible" at the end of the second mantra description and "the two, with the sound of a kettledrum" at the end of the third probably denote final seed syllables (such as hūṃ), but the text does not name them. "The goddess who sweetens" renders □□□□□□□□, whose exact sense here is uncertain. □□□□□□□ is rendered "lords of hosts."

• "Should insert it" reads □□□□□ ("form") as the similar □□□□ ("insert"), which the sense of the line requires. Here □□□□□□□□ is read as "supreme bliss," not as the name Cakrasaṃvara. The "Autumn Goddess" renders □□□□□□□□ literally, since her Sanskrit name could not be confirmed. "Lords of hosts" renders □□□□□□□.

• The colophon of the third section (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□

love god. The line "lend him their own supreme glory" renders □□□□□□□□□□, whose exact sense here ("strengthen, lend might") is not fully certain. "A hundred hundred-thousands" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is given as ten million. In "the great queen and the tathāgatas" the construction of □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is unclear and might instead mean a single figure, "the great queen, the Tathāgatī."

• "Revived all the hosts of ravishers" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□

rendered as they stand; who is addressed is not stated.
• The god named □□□□□□□□□□, who goes between Brahmā and Maheśvara and later takes the form of Mahākāla of the wheel, could not be identified with confidence; the name is translated literally as "the One Who Longs to Belong." In Maheśvara's first speech, □□□□□□□□ is taken as □□□□□□□, "be at rest."
• In the list of animals, □□□ is taken as the bird of that name (a goose), and □□□□□□ as the animal, the donkey, not as the epithets used elsewhere. The western figure □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is rendered literally as "Great Lotus Horse-Face"; it may be a form of Hayagrīva. The Tibetan does not say who refuses refuge after Maheśvara's command, nor who speaks the words beginning "Hey, hey"; the sense of that speech is uncertain.
• The words "Riding upon your back, shall I not tame you?" are not attributed in the Tibetan; they appear to be the wrathful Horse-Face's challenge. In the last paragraph the text reads □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, "Maheśvarī," where the context, the revival of the slain gods, would lead one to expect Maheśvara; it is kept as written.
• "Drop of resonance" renders □□□□□□□□□, taken as the tantric pairing of nāda and bindu; the following line says nothing lies above the nāda. The line "free of dust, you have given up smiling" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□ literally; its exact sense is unclear. The names of the wrathful goddesses (Great Sovereign Lady, Great Vajra Blood Drinker, Vajra Sun, Lotus Net, Great Lady of Unfailing Ferocity) are translated from the Tibetan, since standard Sanskrit forms could not be identified with confidence; the mantras suggest Mahākrodheśvarī, Sūryavajrā and Amogha forms. "Musala mace" renders the transliterated mu su ra; kanaya, tomara and śakti are Indian weapon names kept as transliterated.
• The verse describing the maṇḍala of the Unfailing Vajra is terse, and the assignment of the eight-armed figures riding on bhūtīs to the fourfold attendants follows the most natural reading of the lines. A bhūtī (Tibetan "female elemental") is taken as a female bhūta spirit serving as a mount.
• In the mudrā instructions the fingers are named by code words: "wrathful," "thick," and "peaceful." These are translated literally; "thick" most likely refers to the thumbs, while the assignment of the others varies in the ritual literature. The couplet "It also betokens the supreme vidyādhara; when the rite is accomplished, one comes back again" is terse, and its exact sense is uncertain.
• This passage describes the sexual yoga of the practice in technical and partly coded language. Several lines are terse and their exact sense is uncertain: "working fully at the three junctures," "the four kinds of caress upon the lotus," "the marked stamen," and "the place where three meet." "The King of Spring" is taken as the name of a melody or song. In "Delighting, giving bliss, striking," the words rendered elsewhere as the names Utter Delight and Bliss Maker are read here as a list of actions of love play.
• This section gives a coded sign language between yogins and yoginīs, and much of it is terse. The fingers are named by code words (wrathful, queen, thick, little, supreme, vajra), translated literally; "thick" most likely means the thumb. The opening "Ka" is read as the syllable ka used as a coded word; its exact sense is uncertain. "Swollen flesh" renders □□□□□□□□□, whose meaning is unclear. The verse on "letters without a guide," "dots and the final stress," and "the yoginī's manner of guiding" seems to describe a coded way of writing mantra syllables; its exact sense is uncertain.
• The finger names follow the text's own technical vocabulary (thick fingers, vajra fingers, supreme fingers, wrathful fingers, little fingers), kept consistent with the preceding passage; their exact correspondence to particular digits is not stated here. The opening phrase "fully endowed with the power to harm" renders a terse expression that may instead name a deity or mudrā called "the Harmer." "The lord victorious over the three worlds" may allude to Trailokyavijaya.

• Several lines in the hymn of epithets and the seed-syllable instructions are terse and their construal is uncertain, notably "the wrathful one who grants wishes in evil times," "has a net of thirteen at its head," and "one draws near to arising and to change from arising." "The first two strokes" and "the visarga" interpret the instructions for writing the seed syllable. The closing terms "exceeding union and great union" may correspond to atiyoga and mahāyoga. "Kneading" renders the verb literally; a sense such as crushing or subduing seems intended.
• "The soft pair" renders an unspecified pair of body parts in the list for the kneading practice. "Those who are to be devoured by the wrathful" construes a terse line that may instead mean "those devoured by hatred." "A lord of serpents" is construed as the fate of the transgressor, which is uncertain. "Avīci" interprets the spelling bstir med as a variant of mnar med, the Unrelenting hell. The list beginning "Accomplishment is the union of the god" seems to give the stages of sādhana, anusādhana, mahāsādhana, upasādhana, and atisādhana.
• The list beginning "With the tiger and the heroic and the fearful" appears to name the moods or sentiments (rasas) of dance and drama, though "the tiger" and "the self" do not match the standard list. The syllables "pa la ki ga ha la le" seem to name further instruments or sounds and are left untranslated. "Those who torment with fear and terror" construes the verb as "torment"; it could also be read as "make lovely."
• "Pūtana" interprets lus srul po in a list of directional deities; the identification is not certain. "The seed of awakening" renders byang chub (bodhi), here a code term for semen, and "the great Vairocana" is likewise a code term in such lists of substances. The four syllables bo, dhi, ci, ta spell out bodhicitta. "Supreme bliss" (bde mchog) is read here as a description rather than the deity Cakrasaṃvara. The line "Freedom from desire lies within evil" construes a terse line.
• "Bodhicitta" renders byang chub, here one of the pledge substances (semen), paired with "the supreme red" (menstrual blood). In the list of families, 'jig dbang is taken as an abbreviation of 'jig rten dbang phyug, Lokeśvara, and gdon mi za grub as Amoghasiddhi; the verse names fewer families than the eight it announces.
• In the opening verse the verb mdzod is formally imperative; since the teaching follows at once, it is taken as narrative ("explained"). In the hand gestures, sbom po ("the thick one") is taken as the thumb and khro mo ("the wrathful one") as a finger, most likely the threatening index finger; the exact finger is uncertain. Gdon mi za ba and don yod mchog are both taken as Amogha, the Amoghasiddhi family. "Victorious over the three worlds" may allude to Trailokyavijaya.
• Bde mchog is here rendered "supreme bliss" rather than as the name Cakrasaṃvara, since in this tantra it describes the bliss attained, not that deity; likewise "rab tu dgyes pa rdo rje dgyes" is read as "Utter Delight, the delight of the vajra," not as the name Hevajra. "The guide" ('dren pa) appears to name the initial syllable of a mantra being constructed, with ha ra and the drop at its end and the name in the middle. The finger terms sbom po (thumb) and khro mo (wrathful finger, probably the index) follow the preceding piece. Kyo ba ("curved one") and "the thirteenth" are uncertain, apparently referring to letter forms or vowel signs.
• Rdo rje tshe is taken as the name Vajrāyus, one of the speakers in the closing praise; it could also be read adverbially. In the hand gestures, dbang is taken as the ring finger, which is uncertain, and sbom po/sbom mo as the thumb and khro mo as a "wrathful" finger, as in the preceding pieces. The closing rdzogs sho is read as rdzogs so, "is complete."

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
