The Vajra Peak, the Tantra of the Great Secret Yoga

Vajraśikharamahāguhyayogatantra · Toh 480 · Derge Kangyur གསང་བ་རྒྱལ་འབྱུང་ཆེན་པའོ་རྡོ་རྗེ་རྩེ་མོ།

The Vajra Peak, the Tantra of the Great Secret Yoga, known in Sanskrit as the Vajraśikhara Mahāguhyayoga Tantra and in Tibetan as Sangwa Naljor Chenpo'i Gyü Dorjé Tsemo, is Toh 480 in the Kangyur, where it belongs to the Tantra section among the scriptures of the yoga tantra class. Opening with homage to Samantabhadra, to all the tathāgatas and to the Tathāgata Vairocana, it presents the buddhas supplicating Vajrasattva, the lord of the vajra family, to explain the great way of yoga and the maṇḍalas of the buddha families from which the various rites arise. Over its chapters it sets out the secret practices of the families of the tathāgatas, the maṇḍalas, mudrās and rituals associated with them, and the subjugation of the three worlds, and it closes with a hymn of one hundred and eight names praising Vajrasattva in his wrathful form. It is closely related to the cycle of the Compendium of the Reality of All Tathāgatas, and according to its colophon it was translated into Tibetan by the Indian preceptor Karmavajra together with the translator monk Shönu Tsultrim.

In the language of India: vajra śikhar mahā gutya yoga tantra

In the language of Tibet: The Vajra Peak, the Tantra of the Great Secret Yoga.

oṃ Homage to Samantabhadra. Homage to all the tathāgatas. Homage to the Tathāgata Vairocana.

Then King Vajradhara,
supreme over all, lord of existence,
having examined that wheel,
the yogin remained without speaking.
All the buddhas, the great protectors,
the sages, supreme beings without exception,
made supplication to Vajrasattva,
the great king, the lord of sages:

"Accomplishing the great way of yoga,
from which the various rites truly arise,
source of the practice of the family maṇḍalas:
please explain this supreme wheel.

Protector, you are of great fortune;
you attend to the aim of what is to be done.
You know the secret and know the intended meaning;
you are proclaimed supreme among those who know yoga.
Possessing reality and the reality that follows it,
very self of yoga, great yogin, great vajra, mind of awakening:
speak, speak, O great way!

The wheel of the family maṇḍalas, the manifold self of vajra yoga,
the secret essence, the great maṇḍala,
that which accomplishes the way of the Dharma:
of phenomena that are free of conceptual thought,
tell what this meaning of dharma is.
What is the ritual procedure here?
What is the meaning of accomplishment?
Why is this the later tantra?
Please tell what the meaning of tantra is.
Why is it tantra, and why the later one?
How did the meaning of tantra arise?

What is this fierce Vajradhara?
How did the meaning of fierce arise?
What is this peaceful vajra?
For what reason is it called peaceful?
Why is he Vajrapāṇi?
And what, too, is Vajracaṇḍa?
For what reason is he called ferocious?
For what reason is he called wrathful?
That which is spoken of as vajra, vajra:
why is it called vajra?
What is this that is called Vajradhara?
What is his vajra like?
How many are the vajra holders?
To whom do all the vajra families belong?
In what abode does the great one dwell?
Tell how many kinds of family there are.

For what reason are they called families?
What is this, the nature of the family lord?
For what reason is he called a sattva?
How many kinds of perfect awakening are there?
Why is he Vajrasattva?

Tell what Vajrarāja is.
What is the meaning of this Vajrarāga?
Tell what Vajrasādhu is.
Why is there Vajraratna?
Tell what Vajrateja is.
Vajraketu and the great Vajrahāsa:
speak! Tell what they are.
For what reason is there Vajradharma?
Tell what Vajratīkṣṇa is.
Vajrahetu, the great wheel,
tell what Vajrabhāṣa is.
Vajrakarma and the great yakṣa, Vajrayakṣa, the great fierce one,
Vajrarakṣa and the great fist:
speak! Tell what they are.

From what did these sattvas arise?
Likewise, who are the father and the mother?
What is the first, and what the occasion?
What is the objective condition?
From what did this secret arise?
From where did these all-pervading lords arise?
What is this without beginning or end,
of which the great Lord of Secrets has spoken?
Utter joy itself, utter excellence itself:
what is the lord of the vajra heart like?
For what reason is he Samantabhadra, and likewise vajra, and Vajradhara?
How did the first family arise?
Since all phenomena are unborn,
how can arising be possible?

Tell what a bodhisattva is.
Why should one be called a buddha?
Tell what a tathāgata is.
Tell what the conquering in Blessed One means.
Likewise, what is the teaching of the Teacher?
For what reason is it called gnosis?
Tell what wisdom and gnosis are.
Why should it be called wisdom?
Likewise the perfection of wisdom:
what is its way, and what its samādhi?
What are meditative concentration, yoga, and the yogin?
What is the meaning of the three existences and the three worlds?
And for what reason the three realms?
What is the meaning of saṃsāra?
Tell also what nirvāṇa is,
permanence and destruction, and likewise tell what the Great Vehicle is.
And why is there space?
Tell, too, what earth itself is.
From what do the great elements arise?
What is cessation, and by what is it brought about?

For what reason is it called mudrā?
Why should it be called mantra?
For what reason is it called vidyā-mantra,
and likewise the dhāraṇī-mantras?
Tell the characteristics of mudrā;
the characteristics of mantra should be told;
tell the characteristics of vidyā-mantra,
and likewise of the dhāraṇī-mantras.
What is the basis of the root mudrā?
How is it to be bound, great sage?
When the mudrās are bound,
how are all the vajra holders pleased?
How should the vidyā-mantras be recited?
Great Sage, tell this!
When the vidyā-mantras are recited,
how is the vajra recited with the mind?"

This is the brief presentation of the set of questions.

"What is oṃ explained to be?
Tell what the syllable hūṃ is.
For what reason the syllable phaṭ?
Tell what svāhā is.
Why should it be spoken in offering?
Likewise, the knowing of the samaya too:
for what reason is it a maṇḍala?
What is the rite of the maṇḍala like?
For a man or else a woman who first enters the maṇḍala, what are the tasks to be done?
Speak, great Lord of Secrets!
To one who has entered the maṇḍala of the Sage,
how should the vow be given?
What is it that he must not abandon even for the sake of his life?
How should the act of bathing be done?
Likewise, binding the directions,
together with binding the obstructors,
how should the vināyakas be expelled?
With what great joy,
with deep reverence, should prostrations be made?
Incense and flowers, and likewise lamps, offerings and the rest: how are they to be?
How is the maṇḍala to be examined?
And how is one to be led in?
What is the samaya explained to be?
What is the rite of the vajra disciple?
How should the preliminary approach be done?
What is the meaning of accomplishment?
What is the secret yoga like?
What kind of absorption is it?

What is the meaning of summoning into one's presence?
What, too, is the attachment here?
What is the act of binding?
How do the guides become pleased?

How, here, is the request to depart made?
How should the supreme maṇḍala be taken up?
How, too, should the work for beings be done?
How should the tasks of the rite of activities be done?
What is the dense virtue, the great secret?
How are the various activities to be done?
How are the mudrā and the answering mudrā performed?
How are offering and the return of offering received?
How does the wheel of the maṇḍala arise?
How many varieties of wheel are there?
How are entity and nonentity abandoned?
What are the supreme one born of the secret, and the secret of light rays?

Tell how many kinds of fire offering there are.
What is the hearth like?
What is the condensed fire offering?
As to how the activities arise, tell how many kinds of activity there are.
How many kinds of secret are there?
How is the supreme secret spoken of?
What is reality like?
What are the mudrā and the secondary mudrā?
How is the offering mudrā?
Through the yoga of the family deity,
how is what is to be accomplished thoroughly accomplished?
How is the subtle vajra spoken of?
How should obstructors be removed?
In brief, what are the vidyādhara and the master like?
Tell how many kinds of wheel there are endowed with maṇḍala and wheel.
What are the various ritual procedures that accomplish the marks of siddhi?
The lines, and permanence itself:
how are the siddhis described?
What is the collection of siddhis like?
Speak the compendium of all secrets.

What is the rite to be performed for conferring empowerment on oneself?
Or else, upon others,
how is empowerment conferred?
How should the mind be generated?
What kind of samādhi is it?
This knowing of reality at all times:
what is vajra gnosis like?
Further, what is the intention like?
What is the conduct like?
Arising from any sign whatever,
the mark of knowing name and namelessness:
from what is it taught that there is an agent without action and result, and a producer?
The body that arises like space:
from what should it be said to arise?
For what reason is it called liberation?
Tell what the meaning of yogin is.
What is the yoga of the subtle vajra that generates the vajra sphere?
Further, from one's own families,
how is the observance of yoga undertaken?
In brief, what are bringing under control and the secret of reality?
The secret of the condensed Great Vehicle, taught in the great ritual procedure:
with its many intentions,
speak the secret, O great intellect!
Tell how many kinds of yoga there are.
How many arise from vajra yoga?
How is it called the root tantra?
What is the arising of the secret family like?
It is self-arisen itself:
the three realms, the worlds beneath the earth,
upon the earth and above the earth, nirvāṇa,
and the other secrets as they have been explained.
The vajra bearer himself is Viṣṇu himself,

the Sun, the Moon, Yama, and Rudra himself;
he himself is Prajāpati, he is father and mother.
How can such contradictory words be valid?"

This is the brief presentation of the second set of questions.

"Brahmā, the great lord Maheśvara whose body is the three worlds, the six-faced one born of the host, the maṇḍalas of the divine families, and further, whatever planets, hosts and the rest there may be:
how can it be valid to say that I am their very self?
'I am desire and liberation;
I am the hell-being of the hells;
I am the self of pretas and of animals':
how can those words be valid?

Then, further, those whose minds are attached to desire, holding views, full of words, attached to the views they grasp, the tīrthikas, the Lesser Vehicle, those who delight in existence, the families of creatures, understand the meanings just as they please;
the various family maṇḍalas as they have been explained, the source of pure dharma, they do not know as intended;
by their own wishes they conceive wrong extremes.
For their sake, great Lord of Creatures, speak out of love!
Great one worthy of offering, abode endowed with the supreme,
supreme lord of the secret, please analyze the compendium.

Before the secret maṇḍala of the Lord of Creatures, how should one offer with samaya offerings?
That one who sports with the five sense pleasures will attain the great, supreme collection of siddhis, that the siddhi of the family arises from base desire:
how can such words of delight be valid?
Likewise, how is the bhaga, and what are its signs like?
And how, too, does one enter it?
How are those substances fully prepared?
How are they base within the three worlds?
Then, that siddhi is attained by clinging to desire because desire is pure: how can that be valid?

That freedom from attachment is evil, and that for one free of attachment the teaching of the secret becomes actual evil: how can that be?
How is supreme merit attained through the torma?
How is there merit in killing creatures?
That by taking what is not given there comes merit:
how can such contradictory words be valid?
That by relying on a woman of great joy supreme buddhahood is accomplished in this very life, and that by relying on impure desire buddhahood and Vajrasattva arise: how can that be?
That here there is no merit equal to lying:
how can lying be called meritorious?
That here one should kill other beings and eat them:
how can such contradictory words be valid?
That even renouncing saṃsāra becomes non-dharma,
that devotion to nirvāṇa is not dharma, that following the yoga of the buddhas becomes non-dharma: how can that be valid?

Endowed with arrogance, avarice and a hating mind, practicing non-dharma and attached to false words,
one accomplishes yoga by fierce attachment to the three existences, and by desire's craving one is supremely victorious:
how is it accomplished through the yoga of the family?
One who desires the siddhi of the unsurpassed state should take up with devotion the pure and wondrous yoga.
By drinking handfuls of urine and eating excrement
one seeks the pure and supreme siddhi of yoga:
by eating and drinking impure excrement and urine,
how is the longed-for siddhi to be gained as siddhi?
Practicing dharma together with a woman,
both joined as one, one makes pure and clean offering:
how does one worship the maṇḍala together with a woman,
and how does it become the supreme, excellent siddhi?

Further, those born of the vajra family, complete in all,
who perform supremely unbearable, fierce deeds,
are pure, exceedingly lovely, and go on high:

how can that contradiction be valid?
Further, those devoted to beating and killing,
who perform expulsion and fierce deeds,
are pure, exceedingly lovely, and go on high:
how can that contradiction be valid?
Further, one devoted to eating and drinking,
who seeks purity by tearing out hearts,
is pure and lovely and goes on high:
how is that contradiction valid?
Further, by stealing precious jewels
one is lovely and steadfast, pure and goes on high;
and further, by devotion to pride and avarice
one becomes pure: that is a contradiction.
Further, one in whom the knowledge of action has arisen should do all nonvirtuous actions:
in doing the many kinds of deeds,
sexual union and the rest, how does no fault arise?
Further, by false words and likewise by sexual union, those who seek purity, though not noble, desiring the great power of the Victor by means of the secret, like nectar, are lovely and go on high: how can that be valid?

O Protector, you are the mass of pure dharma; you are ever in yoga.
O Protector, you who teach the nectar of great bliss are the source of the secret of the true Dharma.
O Victor, like the stainless sun you thoroughly cleanse all unknowing, all-pervading one whose nature is the Victor's, great guide of the three worlds, bodhisattva, feast of joy!"

This is the summary.

Supreme over all, the knower of all,
the omniscient one who has abandoned the three stains, bodhisattva, buddha, great king,
that very Tathāgata arose from his meditative absorption and gazed in every direction.
The Sage bowed deeply to the protectors and spoke thus to all the buddhas:

"Oh, the embodiment of pure wisdom!
Oh, buddhahood attained!
Oh, this wheel, the dancer,
inquires into its own wisdom!
I shall explain the supreme secret that gathers together all the rites.
I shall open the lid of the precious casket, sublime and very hard to find.
I shall raise the sublime banner of unsurpassed wisdom.
Having opened the precious casket,
I shall illuminate it with wisdom.
Then I shall truly explain the sublime, the supreme secret:

the great means of accomplishing activity,
the compendium of all rites,
which distinguishes the varieties of the secret and unravels the intent of yoga;
the compendium of all rites
that makes known sublime reality, the rite of vajra yoga
and the rite of the yoga of the wheel;
the compendium of all rites
of that which is called the Supreme Secret;
endowed with activity pervading the three times,
the source of all secret yoga,
the compendium of all rites
of the great means for every activity;
endowed with the rite of buddha yoga,
fully entering Vajradharma,
the compendium of all rites
of the great secret called the Three Bodies;
endowed with the rite of vajra yoga,
taming all the savage ones,
the compendium of all rites
called Trailokyavijaya, Victory over the Three Realms; endowed with the rite of dharma yoga, giving rise to the lotus dancer,

the compendium of all rites
called the Taming of Beings;
fully endowed with the four kinds of giving,
giving rise to the jewel wheel,
inspiring confidence in bodhisattvas,
the compendium of all rites;
the great means of all the buddhas,
giving rise to the dancer of many forms,
the compendium of all rites
of the rite of karma yoga;
knowing reality and knowing the intent,
making known the supreme great way,
the Supreme First, the supreme buddha:
the compendium of all rites.

Entering them in due order,
it alone performs the work of beings.
Great activity, supreme and peaceful,
through the supreme Dharma and enjoyment:
this wheel of the buddha dancer, supremely wondrous,
I shall tell how, according to fortune and according to the secret, it comes to tame sentient beings.

Long ago, in times past,
having taken up the mind of awakening,
when he had become a bodhisattva endowed with method and wisdom, with great enthusiasm he practiced immeasurable austerities of great wonder.
In due order he duly attained everything up to empowerment.
Having reached the far shore through great wisdom and having obtained the empowerment of the cloth, the one of great intelligence came to dwell
in delightful Ghana Akaniṣṭha.

The yogin thought,
'I shall become a supreme buddha.
Having brought my work to completion,
I shall attain what brings about the welfare of beings.'
Contemplating that work, he thought,
'Before and after there is no great bliss;
I shall practice the austerities of the great marvel, the joy of Dharma.' Seated at the foot of the tree of awakening, he took on every hardship.
He stopped the breath going out and coming in;
without thought and without movement, his body did not stir at all and he did not move his limbs.
And so, in the unmoving state,
he remained for a long time.

The lords of sages of the ten directions,
all the buddhas, considered:
'This is the time of perfect awakening;
it is not fitting to practice suffering.
Therefore let us all go together to rouse him.'
With this thought they all set out and came to Ghana.
Having come, all the sages made the supreme exhortation.
With the vidyā oṃ vajra uttiṣṭha they snapped their fingers and roused the bodhisattva completely.
When he looked in every direction, he saw an ocean of buddhas.
The Sage bowed to the protectors
and requested, 'Please give me instruction.'
All the buddhas, the great protectors,
declared with a single voice:
'Examine your own mind closely:
what is the domain of mind like?'

Having heard the words of all the buddhas,
he examined his own mind,
and when he had remained so for a long time
and had not seen any form of mind, he bowed deeply with all his limbs and asked, 'Blessed Tathāgatas,
I do not see any form of mind.
What is the characteristic of mind?'
Then all the buddhas said,
'The domain of mind is hard to know.
We shall give you the heart mantra;
practice its subtle recitation.'
oṃ citta prati vedhaṃ karomi Having taken up the pure heart mantra,
as he examined his own mind
and remained in that for a moment, he saw it as the maṇḍala of the Moon.

Then he asked, 'What is this mind?
Is it one that bears the seeds of affliction?
Is it a virtuous or a nonvirtuous mind, or a mind that bears the seeds of the ground of all?'
'Having realized what is concordant with the cause of the Dharma, relying on the six perfections,
this is the purity of sentient beings,
not an abode of thorough affliction.
For a long time the great accumulations of merit and wisdom have been gathered.
Just as this full Moon
is pure, clear and free of turbidity, so, because the accumulations are complete,
the mind is like the full Moon.
It is no thing, neither existent nor nonexistent:
how could it be the same as the Moon?
Yet the completion of great merit and wisdom is taught as being like the Moon.'

Endowed with the accumulations of good deeds, having seen the maṇḍala of the Moon that is his own mind, joy and delight arose in him,

and once again he spoke these words:
'Blessed protectors, I have seen the maṇḍala of the Moon that is my own mind, completely purified of the stains of affliction and free of grasped and grasper.'
All the buddhas said,
'This mind that has first arisen is excellent.
In the beginning, the adventitious afflictions are purified by the mind of awakening.
With this pure heart mantra,
which entirely abandons all things, contemplate the mind of awakening in the center of the maṇḍala of the Moon.'
oṃ bodhi citta utbādayāmi
Having taken up the pure heart mantra,
when he contemplated in the center of the mind,
in the center of the Moon he saw yet a second maṇḍala of the Moon, and he spoke these words to the sages:

"I see the second maṇḍala."
Then all the buddhas said,
"The nature of the mind of awakening is firm.
In order to make it firm, accomplish it well.
We shall give you the heart mantra;
recite it and contemplate it as firm."
oṃ tiṣṭha vajra Contemplating the great vajra that abides in the center of the second maṇḍala, and examining it closely for a moment,
he saw that it was utterly firm,
and said, "Perfect buddhas,
I see a vajra in the center of the maṇḍala.
I see the center of the second maṇḍala of the Moon endowed with a vajra."

Then all the buddhas said,
"Great vajra of all the deities, recite this utterly firm mantra that gives rise to the vajra sphere (Vajradhātu)." oṃ vajra ātmako 'haṃ
Having taken up the pure heart mantra,
he meditated on the vajra body.
Through that, he obtained the vajra body, solid and firm, without any hollow,
and said, "Perfect buddhas,
I see myself as a vajra body."
Then all the buddhas said,
"Meditate on yourself in the form of a buddha."
oṃ yathā sarva tathāgatāstathā ahaṃ
Having taken up the pure heart mantra,
by meditating in the form of a buddha he attained omniscient wisdom endowed with the supreme of all aspects.
Bowing deeply to all the buddhas,
he said, "Blessed Tathāgatas, protectors, bless me
and make my awakening firm."
All the buddhas of great renown,
having heard the words of the Vajradhātu, the protectors, entered his heart and proclaimed the yoga of the vajra:
oṃ sarva tathāgata abhisamabodhi dṛḍha vajra banadha
When all the buddhas of great renown uttered the great vidyā-mantra, the Vajradhātu became utterly firm,
and he fully awakened to the wisdom of reality.

Then all the buddhas
came forth from the vajra heart, and with the four empowerments of the Dharma
the Sage was then empowered.
The empowerment of the mind of awakening conferred by Vajrasattva:

whatever possesses the mind of awakening as its fruit,
that is the empowerment of Vajrasattva.
The giving of three countless eons,
the excellent fruits of giving,
and the obtaining of jewels equal to space:
that is the empowerment of the precious jewel.
The austerities practiced for others throughout three countless eons, and the fruit accomplished through diligence:
that is the empowerment of Vajrakarma.
The essence of the Tathāgatas,
the great way of the sphere of reality,
unsullied by the mud of affliction:
that is the empowerment of the vajra lotus.
These four empowerments of the vajra yoga of the perfected mind of awakening are the sphere of reality.
Then, further, there are the secret empowerments, the assembly of sublime qualities that is the nature of a buddha.
Through the empowerment of Vajrasattva,
it is held to be the essential body.
Through the empowerment of Vajradharma,
it is held to be the body of perfect enjoyment.
Through the empowerment of Vajraratna, likewise, come the major and minor marks.
The great wisdom of all the buddhas, equal to space, with the nature of reality as its essence, through the empowerment of Vajrakarma is held to be the emanation body.
Through the empowerment of the four secrets one attains the awakening of a perfect buddha.
Then, through the empowerment of the name,
that Sage became Mahāvairocana.

He also truly realized the nature of reality;
Dharma and enjoyment are to be understood as complete.
All dharmas are without substance,

without signs and without manifestation,
without characteristics and like space,
free of any object of reference,
without intrinsic nature and inexpressible;
all dharmas are not the domain of words.
Yet it is examined further as a secret,
and therefore here it is called realization.
Of dharmas that are free of conception,
what is this meaning of the Dharma? It is said:
selfless, they do not exist as things;
dharmas are nonexistent and free of conception.
Yet the nature of reality is truly realized,
and Dharma and enjoyment are realized as complete.
Realization is said to be experience,
and here it is realized as a wonder.
All dharmas are without form,
yet here they are also shown as having form.
All dharmas are not the domain of words,
yet here they are also shown as sound.
Therefore, in this wondrous Dharma,
the rite is declared to be a rite.
Why is this a wondrous Dharma?
Because it accomplishes that secret reality:
the six actions,
the powers of embodied words,
and the wonder of the vows for the sake of the fruit.
Therefore this is a wondrous Dharma, and therefore this is called a rite.
Therefore, in this wondrous Dharma,
the rite alone is the rite.
And what is the rite here?
For the sake of all sentient beings,
having generated the mind set on awakening,
to rely on the practice of the six perfections:
that itself is the rite.
And what is the meaning of accomplishment?
To accomplish the ground of Perfect Joy, with the selflessness of persons and of phenomena, which abandons grasped and grasper:

that is the meaning of accomplishment.

Why is this the later tantra?
"Tantra" means continuity,
and saṃsāra is held to be a continuum.
"Later" means what lies beyond,
and so the tantra is called "later."
Tantra means continuity:
the later arises from the earlier.
That secret reality is said to be hidden,
and so the tantra is called "later."
Why is it "tantra" and "later"?
The supreme Victor who has reached the end of the grounds has crossed beyond the prison of existence;
or else, whoever has crossed over,
that is explained as the later tantra.

How did the meaning of tantra arise?
For the benefit of all sentient beings,
the Dharma and enjoyment of the buddhas, urged on by the compassion of the buddhas:
that is the true arising of the meaning of tantra.
The Dharma and enjoyment that arose from the minds of the buddhas, the great secret of all the buddhas:
that is the true arising of the meaning of tantra.

What is this fierce Vajradhara?
For the sake of the hosts of vicious beings who are not tamed by the form of a buddha, one's own wisdom, the mind of awakening, truly arises as the fierce vajra.
How does the meaning of "fierce" arise?
The fierce one, with his fierce eyes,
is shown as the fierce wrathful one.
Those who engage in fierce deeds are to be corrected and turned back.

What is this peaceful vajra?
Having tamed all those vicious ones,
he truly arises once again as peaceful.
That very king, Vajradhara, teaches the means for the welfare of beings.
The Blessed Vairocana
is shown as the lord of the wrathful ones.
He is both peaceful and fierce,
Vajrapāṇi of great miraculous power.
Why is he called peaceful?
The great yogin of manifold forms, solely in order to ripen beings,
regards with love those made vicious by affliction,
and so the meaning of "peaceful" truly arises.

Why is he Vajrapāṇi?
In order to crush the evils of vicious affliction,
he holds in his hand the vajra,
the excellent nature of the mind of awakening;
therefore he is called Vajrapāṇi, Vajra in Hand.
Likewise, the māras of the three times and all adverse forces cannot destroy the vajra that is the nature of the mind of awakening, the assembled teaching of all the buddhas.
Then, endowed with all the buddhas,
he always holds such a great secret vajra in his hand, and therefore he is called Vajrapāṇi.

What is the meaning of Vajracaṇḍa?
Vajracaṇḍa is the great yakṣa; Vajrayakṣa, utterly firm, devours the noose of pride and affliction,
the self-arisen bodhisattva.
Why is he called ferocious?
"The great ferocious, vicious and fierce one is I alone, the self-arisen, who cut the noose of existence."
The meaning of "fierce" is "ferocious."

What is vajra wrath, it is asked?
Killing and driving away are fierce deeds,
and that is said to be the meaning of wrath.
"I blaze like vajra fire and burn up all the forces of affliction."

"Vajra, vajra," it is said:
why is it to be called vajra?
It is solid, with a core, without hollowness;
it cannot be cut or destroyed;
it cannot be burned, for it is indestructible.
So emptiness is to be called vajra.
The mind of awakening that abandons the wheel of the six destinies and tears evil apart is the vajra;
it clears away all afflictions.

What is this that is called Vajradhara?
Whatever is the wisdom of all the buddhas
and the firm mind of awakening, that is the king Vajradhara,
the very self of all the Tathāgatas.
What is his vajra like?
Free of all conceptual thought,
having abandoned all grasping at dharmas,
the suchness of all dharmas, emptiness, is called vajra.
Whatever is the nature of dharmas such as form,
the unchanging suchness,
the firm dharmadhātu:
such is this vajra.

What is the meaning of the vajra family?
True and meaningful suchness, unchanging and unborn,
unceasing reality:
such is the vajra.
That which has become a family of such meaningful unchangingness is called the bodhisattva family;

it is called the vajra family.
The Dharma without beginning or end is called the bodhisattva.
The mind of awakening that is true and undeceiving:
that is the family.

How many are the vajra holders?
The wise bodhisattvas who pervade all directions everywhere are, like the dharmadhātu, without end:
that is how many vajra holders there are.
To whom do all the vajra families belong?
To the unsurpassed lord of the Dharma, Vairocana, the perfect buddha.
What that protector has fully embraced is said to be his maṇḍala.

Who is the teacher of these?
Who is the one who instructs after him?
What are his conduct and his activity?
It is said in the Compendium of All Secrets:
"Its teacher is the mind of awakening;
the one who instructs after is wisdom and means;
the mudrās are its conduct;
the mantras are its activity."
What is the family of Vajradhara?
The family of all those vajra holders is the mind of awakening,
the bodhisattva of excellent discipline.
That itself is also the domain of the buddhas.
In what great abode does it abide?
In all dharmas there is no abode;
it is the domain of the rootless mind.

All dharmas are without form;
they are the dharmadhātu, with no domain of activity.
How many kinds of family are there, it is asked?
The permanent, the Imperturbable, the Lord of Jewels,

Amitābha, and the accomplishments:
the families are taught to be of a hundred kinds,
and gathered in brief they are of five kinds:
buddha, vajra, jewel,
Dharma and karma, the five kinds.
Why are they called families?
By the distinction of supreme and lesser,
what are called families are of two kinds.
The family of beings who have entered bad paths is said to be the lesser.
To abandon the beings of the bad paths and enter the mind of awakening is Dharma.
Therefore the vajra family is spoken of,
and that family too is the fifth.

What is the nature of the lord of the family?
The mind of awakening is the great king, Vajrasattva, who is without fear,
the great protector, lord of the family;
that family too is the fifth.

Why is he called a sattva, a being?
What are called beings are of three kinds:
the childish, likewise the wise,
and likewise the bodhisattvas:
beings are to be spoken of as of three kinds.
It is also said:
Why is one called a being?
What is a being? The childish is spoken of.
Why is there the wise being?
What is a bodhisattva, it is asked?
Whatever state one is to be spoken of as being in,
one is called a being of that.
Toward Dharma or what is not Dharma, toward good deeds and bad deeds,
one is obscured by the darkness of unknowing,
and grasps dharmas as affliction and as self;
one becomes of a lesser and deluded family.

Such a one is called childish.
Attached to all the afflictions,
and likewise to existence and the three lower realms, attached to the darkness of unknowing:
that one here is to be called childish.
Who is the wise being?
One who has passed beyond stains and abandons affliction, endowed with yoga and of great discipline,
who destroys the cataract of unknowing:
that one is called a wise being.
Here, who is the bodhisattva?
One who has realized the reality of the Dharma, has awakened from the abode of saṃsāra,
and awakens sentient beings:
that one is called a bodhisattva.

How many kinds of perfect awakening are there?
Awakening is of three kinds:
lesser, supreme and middling.
The lesser is the mind of the śrāvakas;
the middling is the awakening of the pratyekabuddhas;
the supreme is the mind of awakening,
and that is the unchanging vajra.
Whatever establishes body, speech and mind is to be called supreme awakening.

Why is he Vajrasattva?
Whatever is the wisdom of supreme awakening,
that is definitively called vajra.
That which arises from the vajra of wisdom is called Vajrasattva.
The king of all the vajra holders,
why is he called a being?
Vajrasattva, the great protector,
that great joy: is he attached, or what?
In order to free all sentient beings
he is attached to sentient beings;
therefore that king Vajradhara is proclaimed as Vajrasattva.

Whatever is the fruit of the mind of awakening,
the unsurpassed wisdom of a buddha,
that is the nature of the vajra mind:
Dharma, enjoyment and emanation.

What is Vajrarāja, it is asked?
He is the king of all the vajra families,
and is called the vajra hook.
The vajra of summoning and of bringing down is called Vajrarāja.
The four means of attraction
that the Blessed One practiced are called the means of summoning beings, and truly arose as Vajrarāja.

What is the meaning of Vajrarāga?
Pleasing all the buddhas,
he is called passionate devotion.
Vajrarāga, the great māra,
is called Vajrarāga.
When, to ripen sentient beings,
the Blessed One practiced the conduct of awakening, the passionate devotion to the conduct of awakening truly arises as Vajrarāga.

What is Vajrasādhu, it is asked?
Pleasing all the buddhas,
he bestows the cry "Excellent!" and delights all the bodhisattvas;
that is called Vajrasādhu.
He delights pure beings and accomplishes the vajra holders;
he gladdens wise beings
and satisfies the holders of the secret.
For the sake of the body of Dharma and perfect enjoyment,
the six dharmas of this Blessed One,
which he accomplished in former times,
truly arose as Vajrasādhu.

Why is there Vajraratna?
The giving of a bodhisattva is like a jewel equal to space; Vajraratna, of great fortune,
is called Vajraratna.
It is the empowerment of the great being,
the empowerment of all beings;
by the empowerment of the essence of awakening
he upholds the heirs of the Victor.
Whatever is the giving of all the buddhas truly arose as a vajra equal to space.
That is the jewel that is meaningful,
and it is called Vajraratna.

What is Vajrateja, it is asked?
He destroys the cataract of ignorance,
the darkness of unknowing of saṃsāra;
the light of liberation, of great splendor:
that is called Vajrateja.
Why is there Vajraketu?
The banner is the nature of all the buddhas;
going on the path of liberation is the banner;
the banner of the Dharma is the great banner:
that is called Vajraketu.
What is Vajrahāsa, it is asked?
The great yogin, Vajrahāsa, makes all the buddhas laugh and brings relief to all the bodhisattvas:
that is called Vajrahāsa.

Why is there Vajradharma?
The great yogin, the Dharma of the buddhas, which makes buddhas and sentient beings realize,
the pure essence of the Tathāgatas:
that is called Vajradharma.
What is Vajratīkṣṇa, it is asked?
Sharp wisdom, great primordial wisdom, cuts the most painful afflictions,
and since it also cuts the obscuration of the knowable,

it is called Vajratīkṣṇa.
What is the meaning of Vajrahetu?
Through the dance of the buddha wheel
the wheel of Dharma is firmly established; it arises from the essence of the taste of the true Dharma:
that is called Vajrahetu.
What is Vajrabhāṣa, it is asked?
The great Dharma of all the buddhas is equal to space and free of words;
it truly arises as the word from the wordless:
that is called Vajrabhāṣa.

Why is there Vajrakarma?
Whatever is the activity of all the buddhas for ripening and freeing beings, and the activity of the buddhas that is selfless:
that is called Vajrakarma.
What is Vajrarakṣa, it is asked?
It is the protection of the bodhisattvas, which abandons the Lesser Vehicle and protects against falling from the peak:
that is called Vajrarakṣa.

What is the meaning of this Vajrayakṣa?
He brings all evil to an end and decisively cuts off all afflictions;
the great yakṣa who devours existence:
that is called Vajrayakṣa.
What is Vajramuṣṭi, it is asked?
True suchness, not other,
whatever is unchanging reality,
the wisdom of the suchness of the buddhas:
that is called Vajramuṣṭi.

Whatever formerly became the mind of awakening truly arose as Vajrasattva.
The four means of attraction
truly arose as Vajrarāja.
Ripening beings is Rāga;

the conduct of awakening is Sādhu.
These, called reality, the great samaya,
truly arose from the mind of awakening.
Whatever was the former practice of giving
is called Vajraratna.
Giving fearlessness to all beings is called Vajrateja.
Loving-kindness toward all bhūtas truly arose as Vajraketu.
The gift of the Dharma is Hāsa.
These are taught as the four empowerments.
Whatever is the meditative absorption of a perfect buddha, from that Vajradharma arose.
The great vajra that cuts off afflictions truly arose as Vajratīkṣṇa.
The higher perceptions, the powers and so forth are called Vajrahetu.
The accomplishment of speech and the rest truly arose as Vajrabhāṣa.
Great wisdom, great Dharma,
the great joy that is called samaya,
the pure, manifest realization of wisdom:
these truly arose from Vajradharma.
The king, the perfection of diligence, truly arose as Vajrakarma.
Because he abandons the Lesser Vehicle,
he is called Vajrarakṣa.
Against the great graha of afflicted existence Vajrayakṣa truly arose.
That manifest awakening to the wisdom of reality is called Vajramuṣṭi.
These are the four samayas of action.
The great-souled being of action, Vajrakarma, who arises from the wheel of action, arose from that.

Further, from the generating of the mind of awakening Vajrasattva truly arose.
That mind whose nature is vajra arose in four forms:
freeing, being freed,
consoling, and establishing in nirvāṇa.
Sattva, Rāja, the great Rāga, and Vajrasādhu truly arose.
From the accumulations of merit and wisdom Vajraratna is proclaimed.
That jewel whose nature is merit is of four kinds, just as was explained.
What is spoken of as the accumulation of wisdom is called Vajradharma.
That Dharma whose nature is wisdom
also truly arose in four forms.
The perfection of diligence itself is called Vajrakarma.
That action whose nature is diligence
also truly arose in four forms:
what are called undertaking and application, discernment and accomplishment.
These four actions of diligence arose from it in sequence.

From what did these beings arise?
Vajrasattva and the rest likewise
truly arose from the mind of awakening.
The vajra bearers are held to have arisen from the practice of the six perfections.
Likewise, who are the father and the mother?
The mother is the perfection of wisdom;
the father is skill in means.
From the lotus come the heirs of the buddhas.
From what did the vajra bearers arise?
Vajrarāja and likewise Rāga, Vajraratna and Ketu, Vajradharma and likewise Tīkṣṇa:

these are taught as chiefly wisdom.
Vajrasattva, Vajrasādhu, Teja and likewise Hāsa, Hetu and Bhāṣa, the great beings:
these arose from means.
Vajrakarma and Vajrarakṣa, Yakṣa and likewise Muṣṭi,
are known as wisdom and means,
and are explained as the assembly of the great steadfast ones.

The chief of all the vajra families,
Vajrāṅkuśa, is explained as the mother; Vajraratna, the supreme,
and Vajrasattva likewise are the father.
The father is Vajrarāja, the cause;
the mother is Vajratīkṣṇa.
From them arose the lotus holder of the great and excellent lotus family.
Vajrateja is of the jewel,
and Ketu is shown to be the mother.
From them arose the jewels of the excellent precious gem.
The father is the king, Vajrakarma;
the mother is Yakṣa, the protector.
From them arose the actions of the excellent family of action.

What is first, if it is asked?
The first of all things is the seed;
the first of all the vajra bearers is mind.
Aspiration, mindfulness and meditative absorption are explained as the first of all the families.
And what is the occasion, if it is asked?
It truly arose from the four families:
the great compassion of those whose nature is compassion, endowed with the great abodes of Brahmā, is the occasion.
What is the object of reference, if it is asked?

It is without conceptual thought and without object of reference.
The six supreme perfections of the mind of awakening that first arose are explained to be its object of reference.
What is the condition, if it is asked?
Having seen sentient beings,
who always delight in the three existences,
fall into suffering,
one is urged on by the mind of awakening endowed with compassion.

Where did this secret arise?
In delightful Ghana Akaniṣṭha,
the fearless Densely Arrayed buddha field:
from there arose this mode of fully enjoying the Dharma of the buddhas.
From where did these all-pervading lords arise?
From the lovely celestial palace of great and supreme vajra jewels, endowed with the Dharma of the buddhas:
from there these all-pervading lords arose.
What is this that is without beginning or end?
The great Lord of Secrets spoke:
The awareness of all sentient beings,
buddha-nature,
and the great vajra of the dharmadhātu are explained to be without beginning or end.
What is this Perfect Joy itself?
For the sake of fully accomplishing great bliss,
the unsurpassed awakening of the buddhas,
Vajrasattva, the great king,
is explained to be Perfect Joy itself.
What is Utter Excellence itself like?
The vajra, supreme among all things,
is called the mind of awakening.
The vajra of the excellent one who gives birth to buddhas is explained to be Utter Excellence itself.

What is the Lord of the Vajra Essence like?
Those to be trained, the supreme noble persons, are called the vajra essence.
The king who is their lord is explained to be the Lord of the Vajra Essence.
Why is he Samantabhadra, the All-Good?
Whatever births in existence there are for beings who possess the state of a bodhisattva, since all of them are always good,
he is to be called Samantabhadra.
What are the vajra and the holder of the vajra?
Whatever is the mind of awakening, that is the vajra.
Whatever is the vajra, that is the vajra holder.
Vajrasattva, the great king,
is called the vajra and Vajradhara.
How did the first family arise?
The one of great renown who was perfectly awakened through the awakening of all the buddhas:
that is the arising of the first family,
and it is from the family of suchness.
Or else, the very learned who,
having passed through incalculable eons, attain the ground of Perfect Joy:
that is the arising of the first family.
All phenomena are unborn,
so how could arising be possible?
By realizing and knowing just this,
all phenomena are free of conceptual thought.
From the selflessness of phenomena and of persons that family is held to arise.
No phenomena whatsoever are born;
phenomena do not come to cease.
The complete pacification of conceptual thought:
that itself is the great buddha family.
What is a bodhisattva? Tell it.
One who realizes all phenomena,
who has awakened from the state of saṃsāra,

and who brings sentient beings to realization:
that one is called a bodhisattva.
Why is one to be called a buddha?
Suchness is true and utterly stable.
That which, having realized reality,
is called the realization of all phenomena:
because of that realization one is called a buddha.
What is a Tathāgata? Tell it.
One who abides correctly in the reality of phenomena,
who never again changes into anything else,
and who teaches the path of that reality:
that one is called a Tathāgata.
What is the Blessed One (the Buddha)? Tell it.
Karma and afflictions, likewise birth, likewise the afflictive and cognitive obscurations, whatever phenomena are adverse factors:
because he has destroyed these, he is called the Blessed One, the Destroyer.
What is his destruction? Tell it.
The Blessed One is likewise said to have destroyed.
Cutting off the attachment of desire, crushing and vanquishing the afflictions:
that is called his destruction.
Likewise, what is the Teacher of teachers?
One who cuts off afflictions, māras and the rest,
and by great skillful means protects all beings without exception from existence in the lower destinies, is called the Teacher of teachers.
Why is it called primordial wisdom?
Knowing reality is primordial wisdom;
it does not again conceive of it as a phenomenon.
It abandons permanence and annihilation,
and likewise primordial wisdom is deathless.
What is wisdom-gnosis? Tell it.
It knows many aspects,
and through realization it frees from suffering.
That which abandons the phenomena of complete affliction is called wisdom-gnosis.

Why is it to be called wisdom (prajñā)?
Joined with the prefix pra, it becomes knowing,
and it realizes in a special way.
The wisdom that knows truth and suchness is explained as wisdom, as knowing.
What is the meaning of the perfection of wisdom?
It is said to be higher than the wisdom of śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas and outsiders.
Directed toward suchness, gone beyond:
it is explained as the perfection of wisdom.
What does the word mode (naya) mean? Tell it.
Na has the great meaning of negation.
Since it is neither nonentity nor the absence of entity, that in which there has come to be no stain is called its mode.
What is the meaning of this, meditative absorption? Tell it.
Abiding thoroughly in the equality of all phenomena being without entity, relied upon above all by those who have wisdom,
it is to be called focusing on the mind.
Why is it called meditative concentration?
It abandons all suffering and utterly crushes the net of afflictions.
Thinking that is joined with wisdom is the supreme destroyer of existence.
What is the meaning of yoga? Tell it.
Through that Dharma which is vast and sublime and supremely profound,
the union endowed with knowing all and understanding all is to be called yoga.
What is a yogin? Tell it.
One who thinks by means of wisdom,
who contemplates yoga and the aim of yoga,
and who thinks of the welfare of all sentient beings:
that is said to be the meaning of yogin.
I am the great king of all,
knowing all and granting all,

the first great Vajradhara.
By this cause of bliss, likewise I am the three worlds,
the supreme knower of the yoga of the three realms;
likewise saṃsāra and nirvāṇa,
the higher destinies and the lower destinies,
and I am the one who enjoys the five objects of desire.
What is the meaning of this, the three existences?
Whatever is the mind of all sentient beings is to be called the three existences:
of desire, of form and of the formless.
Thus, O supreme knower of all,
there is no self, nor is there any agent,
and phenomena too do not exist;
yet all is obscured by the habitual tendencies of doing virtue and nonvirtue.
Phenomena are of beginningless time,
and there is no agent at all.
Through possessing a mind impaired by conceptual thought,
one comes to see cause and result.
The all-ground (ālaya) containing all seeds gives rise to all phenomena.
Imprinted and endowed with habitual tendencies, that is called the three existences.
As the cause of the three realms born of the karma of desire,
that very all-ground appears;
it is also the basis of all the phenomena of the beings of form and the formless.
Because all phenomena are completely pure,
they are free of every fault.
The essence of Dharma, arisen without beginning, becomes afflicted by adventitious stains.
I alone am the great Dharma;
I am explained to be the essence of Dharma.
Therefore I am the great king;
I am proclaimed to be the three existences.
What are the three worlds? Tell it.

The world of desire, likewise of form, and the beings of the formless:

these are called the three worlds,
and they are just I myself, the self-arisen.
What is called desire is the great Dharma.
In order to seek purity,
one discerns, in the light of suchness,
what are called the phenomena of apprehended and apprehender.
Because I am inseparable from the dharmadhātu,
I purify those phenomena.
Therefore I am the great king,
shown to be the lord of the three worlds.
As with desire, so with form,
and likewise with the formless, it is proclaimed.
Inseparable from emptiness,
I am explained to be the lord of the essence.
What is the meaning of the three realms?
The desire realm, likewise the form realm,
and the formless itself:
these excellent three realms are just I myself, the self-arisen.
This is the realm, the cause and the meaning.
The cause of the three realms is intention.
Emptiness and signlessness are explained,
and wishlessness is shown to be I myself.
What is the meaning of saṃsāra?
The childish arise everywhere,
and likewise they circle again and again.
Saṃsāra is pure in its nature,
and it is just I myself, the self-arisen.
A phenomenon in which saṃsāra exists does not exist even as an atom.
Because it is unreal and imputed,
it is without beginning or end.
Whatever is nonexistent is empty,
and whatever is emptiness is I myself.

Therefore saṃsāra itself is proclaimed to be I myself, Vajradhara the king.
What is nirvāṇa? Tell it.
That which is suchness, permanent and empty,
the excellent nature of the four truths,
which has entirely abandoned characteristics, entities and form,
and signs as well,
which cannot be grasped by words or sound,
and in which there is no conceptual thought:
therefore, by the word nirvāṇa,
I alone am to be fully known.
What is the meaning of its permanence?
Permanence itself, the source of the permanent,
that which is free of conceptual thought:
just that permanence
is proclaimed by the word nirvāṇa.
And what is extinction? Tell it.
That which does not enter saṃsāra, and which stops the impermanence of all things and the arising of suffering:
that extinction is the word nirvāṇa.
And what is purity? Tell it.
It is neither existent nor nonexistent, neither an entity nor a nonentity, neither what is expressed nor what expresses it.
Purity is nirvāṇa itself.
What is the Great Vehicle? Tell it.
That by which all the buddhas have gone,
which is certainly victorious over all vehicles,
the sentient beings who have become genuine:
this is taught to be the Great Vehicle.
The entry into powers and activities,
the gatherings, and the wonders of yoga:
what is called vast is the Great Vehicle,
the supreme wonder of all the buddhas.
What is the meaning of space?
And what is the earth? Tell it.

That which has no elements and no substance,
no birth and no death,
the supreme state free of the things of the three times,
is taught by the word space.
Being born again and again,
and likewise the nature of all the afflictions,
free of the countless and the immeasurable:
that is to be called the earth.
From what do the great elements arise?
What is their cessation, and by what is it brought about?
From ignorance, the afflictions and the rest,
the great elements truly arise.
The all-ground, which contains all seeds,
is held to be the nature of outer and inner.
The transformation of the basis,
in which the seeds of the all-ground no longer arise,
and which is free of all conceptions:
that is the cessation of the great elements.

From the Vajra Peak, the great yoga tantra, the supremely secret and hidden king of great rites, the compilation of all the rites of the dense assembly of the utterly secret, this completes the first of the explanations, the explanation called the Explanation of the Sixteen Sattvas, from the sixth.

Why is it called a mudrā?
Whoever has bound a mudrā,
by that one all harmful creatures and all sinful beings will always be sealed.
Why is it to be called a mantra?
The secret mantras summon and drive out all the harmful.
Mantras crush the afflictions, and they are the invitation of the Dharma of the buddhas.
If one asks why it is called a vidyā-mantra:
it tames the darkness of attachment,
it thoroughly tames the afflictions as well,
and it turns back ignorance.

So I have rightly called it vidyā-mantra.
What are dhāraṇī-mantras? Tell it.
They serve as the support of the teachings,
they utterly crush the side of existence,
they bring the attainment of the qualities of the buddhas,
and they also give a support for virtue.
The characteristic of a mudrā is stated:
it signifies the conduct of all the buddhas, of the bodhisattvas who keep their vows,
and of all the vajra holders.
The characteristic of mantras, too:
they are the mind of all the buddhas,
they accomplish the essence of the Dharma,
and they are truly endowed with the dharmadhātu.
This is said to be the characteristic of mantra.
The characteristic of vidyā-mantra was spoken:
that which pacifies the suffering experienced in saṃsāra
and the mass of faults such as attachment, together with their kinds,
is said to be the characteristic of vidyā-mantra.
Likewise, of the dhāraṇī-mantra:
that which holds the qualities of the buddhas,
which holds the teachings,
and which holds what is called virtue is said to be the characteristic of dhāraṇī-mantra.
What is the basis of the root mudrā?
How is it to be bound, great sage?
When the mudrās are bound,
how are all the vajra holders pleased?
First of all one should bathe,
and likewise bind the directions;
one should also bind the vināyakas and put on clean clothes.
In villages and districts,
in cities and market towns,
in their midst one should never bind the mudrās.

In a temple, or a hermitage,
or in mountain caves,
in a clean place, secluded in various ways
and free of bustle,
there one should sit cross-legged.
One should take the auspicious cross-legged posture,
just as the bodhisattva took it at the seat of awakening.
There one should close the eyes and set teeth upon teeth.
The two lips too should be made even.
Having made mindfulness one-pointed,
one should recite the mantra that joins the unjoined and bind the great mudrā.
Through binding a mudrā of that kind,
all the vajra holders are pleased.
How should the vidyā-mantra be recited?
Maheśvara, the Secret One, spoke:
When reciting the vidyā-mantras,
just as one recites the vajra with the mind,
one should take the cross-legged posture as before.
With mindfulness and mind undistracted,
one should recite the vidyā-mantras and also contemplate the divine body.
Not with the lips, nor with any one of them,

not with the two palates either,
not with the tongue and throat,
nor ever at the place of the heart.
With an extremely subtle mind
one should draw the mind within the nature of reality.
When recitation is done in this way, it is the vajra recitation done with the mind.
What is oṃ explained to be?
It is supreme, it gives wealth, glory and prosperity,
it is endowed with the aspects of good fortune;

it has the meaning of a pledge and of auspiciousness,
and it is the essence of the jewel holder.
What is the syllable hūṃ? Tell it.
It cures and crushes suffering,
it cuts the noose of existence,
it terrifies and slays the harmful.
hūṃ is to be remembered as supreme.
What is the syllable phaṭ? Tell it.
It crushes the harmful and suffering,
and it draws bliss to oneself.
phaṭ is the sound of crushing:
it crushes the foe together with his allies.
What is the word svāhā? Tell it.
It pacifies all wrongdoing,
it increases the store of virtue,
it carries off misdeeds,
and it is the supreme crusher of all suffering.
Why is it to be called offering?
It is offering because one makes offerings.
Where one is fearless about what is to be kept secret, one's offerings become manifold.
It is not an outer offering:
this is offered by all the buddhas,
and likewise it is supreme for liberation.
Those secret offerings
of the fearless children of the Victors,
the nature of all the buddhas, the incomparable secret of accomplishing the rite
by their own sons,
are ever supreme for the vidyādharas.
Likewise, knowing the pledge:
whatever one has entered,
that is knowing the pledge.
Habituating oneself to the pledge is also said to be knowing the pledge.
One becomes equal to the mind of awakening that has passed through incalculable eons.

One who has entered the secret pledge is said to know its pledge.
Why is it a maṇḍala?
Because the essence, the quintessence of the sublime Dharma, arises from it, it is called a maṇḍala.
The great maṇḍala is the great secret,
the great Dharma thoroughly taught.
What is the rite of the maṇḍala like?
The rite is Dharma and yoga;
from it secret liberation truly arises.
It is supreme for accomplishing Perfect Joy in this very life.
What is to be done
by a man or a woman who has entered the maṇḍala?
Speak, great Lord of Secrets!
Going for refuge to the Three Jewels, generating the great mind of awakening,
and likewise the supreme practice:
these are to be made utterly firm.
To one who has entered the maṇḍala of the Sage,
how are the vows to be given?
You must not kill living beings.
You must not take what is not given.
You must not engage in sexual misconduct out of desire.
You must not speak falsehood.
You must give up drinking liquor,
the root of all faults.
Discard all that is not to be done,
and above all tame sentient beings.
Serve the holy ones
and honor the yogins.
In order to accomplish the knowledge of yoga,
attend upon the learned.
The three kinds of bodily action,
the four kinds of speech,
and the three kinds of mind also,

guard as best you can.
Do not despise the master:
the guru is equal to all the buddhas.
Mantras and mudrās, too,
you must never despise.
Whatever symbolic seals there are,
the wheel, vajra, lotus and the rest,
you must not step over them,
nor must you eat them.
Likewise, the shadow of the goddesses and deities you must not tread on with your feet;
you must not sit upon it,
nor set anything down on it again.
The excellent emblems of the deities and the symbols of the deities' mounts you must not step over or despise.
Do not harm sentient beings.
What is it that one must not abandon
even for the sake of one's life?
Even for the sake of the life by which one lives,
do not abandon the mind of awakening.
The vajra, the bell and the mudrā you must never abandon.
Your faith in the Three Jewels, too,
you must in no way give up.
You must not give up the vows.
You must not torment yourself.
How is the act of bathing to be done?
Having abandoned the ten nonvirtues, relying on the ten virtues,
and wishing to benefit beings:
this is held to be the inner bathing of oneself.
In order to purify oneself completely and to seal oneself with the mudrā, one correctly binds all the mudrās:
this is called the bathing of the yogin.
Accepting the five secret baths,

the bath of water is to be performed.
This act, the bath of conceptual thought,
is to be done by the vajra masters.
Or else the bathing done by the rite, supremely wondrous, shall be explained.
First one puts on one's armor,
and in order to wash oneself
one should also call to mind the wrathful one.
Accomplishing every aim,
the two syllables are the excellent armor.
Vajrayakṣa, the great fierce one,
and the wrathful Amṛtakuṇḍalin.
oṃ vajra kīli kīli vajra hūṃ phaṭ oṃ ṭuṃ: this is the armor's.
oṃ hūṃ ā: this is Vajrayakṣa's.
oṃ amṛte hūṃ phaṭ: this is Amṛtakuṇḍalin's.
With this secret vajra mantra
and the mudrā of the blazing vajra, by the blazing vajra, hard to withstand,
one should make oneself blaze.
oṃ dhupi dhupi kāya dhupi prajālani svāhā Entering into the water and pouring out three handfuls:
for the families of all the buddhas
this vidyā-mantra is prescribed.
The three heaps of earth over which the vidyā-mantra has been recited are supreme for purifying
my upper, lower and middle parts.
oṃ bhūra jala hūṃ
Recollecting all the buddhas,
one should take up with all the mudrās
the water over which all the vidyā-mantras have been recited.
This vidyā-mantra is held to be secret.
How are the directions bound?
Agni, the great king, in the east,
Yama in the southern direction,

Vāyu in the west,
and Varuṇa in the north are to be subdued.
The yogin binds the four forms firmly in the four directions.
Then, above, below and in the intermediate directions,
one cuts off firmly with Vajrakālī.
How are the obstructors bound?
With the blazing Vajramuṣṭi,
the vajra blazing like the sun,
and the mudrā of the Vajra Eye,
the binding of the obstructors becomes firm.
What is the great joy like?
One should prostrate with great reverence.
With the four mudrās in the four directions,
and with the fifth, the stacked mudrā,
above, below and in the intermediate directions,
one should prostrate together with praise.

By the greatly fortunate vajra master,
the sublime one of the Supreme Secret, it is to be bound in the same way in the maṇḍala of the stacked mudrā.
If one asks what the offering is like:
the offering of reciting the vidyā-mantras, devotion to binding the mudrās,
the offering of meditating on yoga,
and the offering of the practices.
What is the rite of the fire offering like?
The three kinds of bodily action,
the four kinds of speech,
and the three kinds of mind:
these, to be burned, are the supreme fire offering.
It arises from vajra yoga.
Then I shall explain the reality, utterly hidden, supreme among the sublime,
the heart of the vajra vidyādhara which gathers all the secrets.

The vajra master is endowed with great conduct;
he has fully entered the secret maṇḍala and received empowerment from a master;
he knows all the secrets and intentions;
he is brave, steadfast and of great diligence, upright of mind, retentive and clear;
gentle, honest and possessed of spiritual friends.
Such a one should be the vajra master.
First, until the accumulation is complete,
for a month or half a month,
or else for as long as a year,
one should practice the observance of knowledge.
If it is of the buddhas,
the vidyādhara practice is threefold.
If it is of the vajra holder,
it is definitely threefold.
For the excellent jewel family
one should perform the four yogas.
If it is for the pure lotus-born,
one fully accomplishes the four yogas.
If it is the excellent nature of action,
from the family of all actions four applications truly arise.
Thus they come to eighteen kinds.
In the morning, the afternoon and at midday,
in the first and last parts of the night and at midnight,
one should do all the great tasks,
likewise for the buddha and vajra families.
First of all, the great yogin should prostrate to all the directions.
By the rite of vajra yoga
one becomes the vajra master.
With great wisdom one should recollect
all the buddhas again and again.
The great being should urge all the buddhas with the vajra mantra.
oṃ sarva tathāgata pūjepasvānāya ātmānāṃ niryātayāmi sarva tathāgata vajrasatva adhitiṣṭha sva māṃ Having gone to the eastern direction, one prostrates with all the limbs,

and with this secret vajra mantra
one offers oneself.
oṃ sarva tathāgata pūjā abhiṣekāya ātmānāṃ niryātayāmi sarva tathāgata vajraratna abhiṣiñca māṃ
With this secret vajra mantra
one prostrates to the southern direction and offers oneself
to all the buddhas.
Then, toward the western direction,
one prostrates with this mantra:
oṃ sarva tathāgata pūjā pravartanāya ātmānāṃ niryātayāmi sarva tathāgata vajra dharma pravartayāmi
The great master of pure Dharma prostrates to the western direction, urges with this vajra mantra,
and fully offers himself.
oṃ sarva tathāgata pūjā karmaṇe ātmānāṃ niryātayāmi sarva tathāgata vajra karma kuru māṃ Endowed with the acts of offering and empowerment, and through firm application to the Dharma in the north,
one prostrates to the northern direction,
and oneself becomes vajra action.
In the east is the act of offering,
in the south empowerment,
in the west the great Dharma,
and in the north firm application to the Dharma.
This is the sun of all the sages.
Having bowed down to the great protector,
in all the directions, with this mantra,
one should earnestly make prostration.
oṃ sarva tathāgata kāya vāk citta praṇamena vajra vandanaṃ karomi
Then one makes prostration as explained.
With a mind focused on the buddhas, the mudrās made with deep reverence are the swift practice of approach.

After prostrating, one rises and performs the acts oneself.
With the excellent offering of oneself,
one should offer to all the buddhas:
"Supreme ones dwelling in every direction without exception, buddhas, please consider me!
Thus may I, who am pacified, be made to become vajra itself."
To all the buddhas together with their children, supreme in the vajra family,
always and in every way,
one should offer oneself.
By that secret vajra mantra oneself comes to be offered.
Recollecting again and again
all the buddhas together with their children, one should confess all the afflictions, wrongdoing and the rest,
so that they are extinguished.
Having entirely abandoned all wrongdoing
of this life or of others, one should rejoice in the accumulations of merit and wisdom generated by all the buddhas together with their children, and likewise in those of all sentient beings.
One should request all the buddhas not to pass from awakening into nirvāṇa.
With the great means of the mind of awakening,
one should recollect sentient beings and the buddhas.
Utterly wondrous offerings should be accomplished as best one can.
Or else, to nirvāṇa and the rest,
and to the virtues of yoga and the rest,
with wondrous offerings
one should offer clouds of offerings.
Flowers grown in water and on dry land,
in this place or in others,
not claimed as their own by gods and others,
one offers to the great means, all the buddhas,

and, from the maṇḍala of their light,
to the lords of the sages.
With this vajra yoga
one worships fully with the offering of flowers, and with mudrā and yoga
one emanates them firmly in all directions.
oṃ sarva tathāgata puṣpa pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samye hūṃ Whatever excellent incense trees there are,
one offers them to the lords of the sages.
Marvelous divine incense and the rest
one should emanate in all directions.
oṃ sarva tathāgata dhūpa pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Excellent fields of fragrance one offers to the lords of the sages.
Having urged them on with the mudrā,
one should emanate them in all directions.
oṃ sarva tathāgata gandha pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Oceans whose nature is precious jewels, supreme mountains of jewels and the rest:
by emanating clouds of offerings
one should offer them in all directions.

oṃ sarva tathāgata bodhyaṅga ratna alaṃkāra pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samye hūṃ Play, merriment, bliss and great joy,
a host of laughter, grace and the rest:
in all directions, from every side,
one should emanate the supreme of joy.
oṃ sarva tathāgata hāsya lāsya rati krīḍā saukhya anuttara pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
That from which clothing, ornaments and the like arise, and likewise excellent wish-fulfilling trees:
one should recite the vajra mantra
and offer them to all the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata anuttara bodhi alaṃkāra vastra pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Excellent jewels blazing greatly,

what arises from trees of light, and the light of the moon, the sun and the rest:
one should emanate them in all directions.
oṃ sarva tathāgatāloka pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samye hūṃ Recollecting again and again
the great suffering of all sentient beings, through the practice of generating compassion
one should generate the mind of awakening.
Having generated the mind set on awakening,
for the sake of benefiting all sentient beings,
one should offer it to all the buddhas
and emanate it in all directions.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra bodhi citta pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Well-being for all sentient beings, loving-kindness toward all spirits,
the gift of fearlessness to all animals,
the wish that all the lower destinies be stilled:
loving-kindness, compassion, equanimity and joy,
the yoga of the abodes of Brahmā, has arisen.
One should recite the vajra mantra
and offer it to all the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata anuttara mahā catur brahma vihāra pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Through practicing the perfection of generosity:
"May all sentient beings attain glory and wealth!
May they never lack happiness!"
With these words one should offer and emanate.
oṃ sarva tathāgata mahā vajrodbhava dāna pāramitā pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
"May all sentient beings abide fully in awakening and in the vows!" One should emanate everywhere the stilling of great faults such as pride. oṃ sarva tathāgata anuttara mahā bodhi hara śīla pāramitā pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye huṃ

"From suffering such as fear and enmity, may all fears and the rest be stilled!" Through the yoga endowed with loving-kindness one should accomplish the selflessness of phenomena.
oṃ sarva tathāgata anuttara mahā dharma ava bodhi kṣānati pāramitā pājā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
"Until saṃsāra comes to its end,
may I not become a buddha!
And likewise may all sentient beings accomplish that very aim!"
oṃ sarva tathāgata saṃsāra parityāga anuttara vīrya pāramitā pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samye hūṃ
"May the great afflictions of all living beings, attachment and the rest, be stilled!
May all sentient beings be undistracted and possess the four meditative concentrations!"
oṃ sarva tathāgata anuttara mahā saukhya vihāra dhyāna pāramitā pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samye hūṃ
"The primordial wisdom and great wisdom of the buddhas is the unsurpassed cutter of suffering.
Through the application of wisdom that purifies, may sentient beings become pure buddhas!"
oṃ sarva tathāgata anuttara kleśaccheda sarva dharma samanta jñāna mahā prajñā pāramitā pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samye hūṃ
One imagines oneself
as many as the atoms of a great trichiliocosm,
and, having so imagined for the sake of offering,
one should offer to all the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata kāya niryātan pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
One imagines oneself
as many as the atoms of a great trichiliocosm,
each possessing as many tongues,
and one should utter the praises of the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vāka niryātan pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Then, gathering together the offerings that arise from the body, speech and mind of that very yoga,

one should offer them to all the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata citta niryātan pūjā megha samudrā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Having made offerings to all the buddhas endowed with great renown, without exception, and having gathered together the virtues,
one should dedicate them to the benefit of sentient beings.
Recollecting all the buddhas,
one should take the cross-legged posture of the sattva.
The great yogas of loving-kindness and the rest
one should emanate in all directions.
With the two syllables of the supreme armor
the intelligent one arms himself, and whatever vidyā-mantra he truly desires,
that vidyā-mantra he should recite.
In this great secret tantra
the recitation of the mantra of great yoga is explained to be one hundred and ten times, or else twenty-one times.
For the middling application of the rite,
five kinds are explained in common.
The secret recitation, the great yoga,
by which even the sinful attain accomplishment:
for the supreme family of the Tathāgata, this recitation is supreme.
Having taken the auspicious cross-legged posture,
with the mind focused on the buddhas, the intelligent one should always imagine himself as the omniscient Buddha.
Imagining my body endowed with the excellent marks, the uṣṇīṣa and the rest, with the essence of the Buddha dwelling within,
one should think, "I am the Buddha." Arising from the yoga of the Buddha, by which the wheel is emanated,
one should turn the wheel of Dharma

of great, manifest awakening.
The Dharma enjoyed by the assembly of those to be trained,
the enjoyment, and the emanation are also accomplished.
Through the transformation of the basis,
mind does not arise from the all-ground.
Because merit and wisdom are fully perfected,
one imagines a full moon.
The stainless full moon
one should meditate upon at the heart.
In the center of the disc of the moon
one should meditate on the syllables of the vidyā.
By such a supreme method
one attains accomplishment in half a month.
Even one who has committed the five inexpiable deeds attains accomplishment within one year.
For as long as he does not grow weary,
the great yogin should recite.
When the body has become tired,
he should begin binding the mudrās.
When reciting for the family of the Tathāgata,
he should then bind the supreme awakening,
or else the one called the source of phenomena,
or the utterly wondrous śrīvatsa.

Then, when reciting for the vajra family,
one's own self is Vajrapāṇi.
Abiding at the seat of awakening, oneself is shown as Vajrapāṇi.
In the center of the disc of the moon
one should meditate on the form of a vajra.
In the center of the great secret vajra
one should meditate on the syllables of the vidyā.
Then, when reciting for the lotus family,
one's own self is Padmasattva.
In the center of the moon is a great lotus;
in the center of the lotus are the syllables.
Likewise, when reciting for the jewel family, one's own self is the Jewel King.

In the center of the moon is a great jewel;
in the center of the jewel, too, are the syllables.
Then, for the excellent action family,
for the yoga that accomplishes every aim,
one's own self is the heart of the buddhas:
one should meditate on oneself as Vajrakarma.
In the center of the disc of the moon
one should meditate on a jewel vajra,
a great vajra with jeweled tips;
in its center, too, are the syllables.
This recitation of the five families should be declared the secret recitation.

Then I shall explain yet another,
the line of recitation that holds the supreme secret.
When reciting for the Tathāgata family, oneself the Buddha, holder of auspiciousness, should meditate on this world of a billion worlds
as the form of the Buddha.
In the center of that Buddha's heart
one should meditate on the syllables of the vidyā.
One's own body is without self,
and phenomena and the person are emptiness;
the form of those buddhas
one should contemplate as without self.
Though the body is spoken of as the Buddha, that Buddha, too, does not exist.
In the aggregates, the sense sources and the elements,
in what are called phenomena, there is no buddha.
As the person itself there is no buddha;
yet neither is there no buddha.
The six perfections are the seed,
and wisdom purifies the seed.
The fortunate one who knows what is possible and what is not
is the very one who holds awakening, selflessness.
If in this way one recites

for the great secret Tathāgata family, the great master will swiftly accomplish Perfect Joy.

Then, when reciting for the vajra family,
one's own self is Vajrasattva.
One should meditate on this world of a billion worlds
as the form of a vajra.
In the center of the hub of that vajra
one should meditate on the syllables of the vidyā.
That vajra is called the absence of entity;
it is what the fruit of awakening is.
That which is explained as vajra,
that which is reality itself, unchanging,
is called the reality of the body;
that which is empty of phenomena and the nature of reality.
The great phenomena, form and the rest,
do not bear the name of great elements.
The body is spoken of as form,
yet there is no such thing as form.
Analyzing that form as well,
one should meditate on the perception of the subtle.
When it is analyzed into parts,
there is no such thing as form.
When what is named a part is analyzed,
there is no such thing as a part.
Form is explained to be empty;
this is taught as what is called vajra.
All phenomena, form and the rest,
one should meditate on as emptiness.
By such a yoga as this one should accomplish Perfect Joy.

Then, when reciting for the jewel family, one's own self is Vajraratna, lord of the family.
One should meditate on this world of a billion worlds
as emptiness, as space.
That is the yoga of phenomena in space:

with conceptual thought, one contemplates the syllables.
That all phenomena are without entity is called emptiness and suchness.
What is called the absence of entity has no form;
like space, it is the domain of the buddhas.
Where form does not exist,
tell me, what is the thing called the eye?
And of whom is that eye
said to be the eye?
Who is this lord, this king?
And what is its arising like?
From the gathering of the four great elements
the faculty of the eye arises.
In that eye, too, there is no form;
what does it do? It does not even exist.
Just as with the eye,
everything is free of grasped and grasper.
By this practice of recitation one will be empowered with the great Dharma.

Then, when reciting for the lotus family,
one's own self is Padmasattva.
One should meditate on this world of a billion worlds
as the form of a lotus.
On that utterly pure lotus
one should meditate on the syllables of the vidyā.
With great wisdom one should contemplate that lotus as the essence of the Dharma.
The lotus is not stained by water,
nor is it stained by the faults of the mud;
just so are all sentient beings pure.
This very Tathāgatahood,
in which phenomena are unborn from the very beginning,
which is the emptiness of phenomena and of their nature,
is held to be the nature of reality, suchness,
of all phenomena, form and the rest.

Then, when reciting for the action family,
one should contemplate the yoga of action.
This wheel of the Buddha's emanations is what brings attainment of the Dharma and of enjoyments.
Where there is nothing called a phenomenon,
the emanations of the Buddha appear.
How wonderful! Those buddhas appear and accomplish their own deeds as well.
Through such a yoga as this
the vajra master of great austerity will in this very life attain the supreme, sublime buddhahood.

The mudrās such as the vajra heart are taught as the lords for the vajra family.
For the jewel and the rest, there is empowerment;
the supreme of purity holds the supreme lotus.
For the Buddha's body, the great Dharma,
the vajra yoga should be definitively taught.
The supreme awakening disciplines all;
this is held to be the sublime recitation.

Then the master, the Vajradhara, should certainly make use of a rosary.
Wherever one performs ten million recitations,
two kinds, three kinds, or even fewer, are allowed.
For the Buddha, the rosary is held with the index finger;
with the middle finger the vajra yoga arises;
upon the ring finger the jewel arises;
with the little finger the lotus opens.
Performing the action with the action rosary is taught to be done with all the fingers.
This is the great secret recitation of the vajra vidyādhara.
For the Buddha yoga, bodhi seeds;
for the vajra holder, rudrākṣa beads;
for the outer vajra family, indra gems;
for one whose yoga is the jewel, pearls.
A rosary of lotus seeds is praised for all of the lotus family.

Or else, supreme above all,
are the bodhi seeds that sustain life.
Recitation with iron is twofold;
with copper it becomes fourfold;
with rudrākṣa, twenty millionfold;
with pearl it becomes a hundredfold;
with indra gems the yoga is a thousandfold;
with silver it becomes a hundred thousandfold;
with lotus seeds it is said to be a billionfold;
with bodhi seeds it is beyond count.

With the left hand one should bind the mudrā;
the right hand should hold the rosary.
As explained before, the secret one and the rest,
one should perform the recitation of the great wonder.
For what reason is recitation taught?
Diligence in virtue becomes victorious, wonders too come to be seen,
the conduct of awakening becomes victorious,
and the play of the buddhas becomes manifest.
When, wearied by recitation, one rises,
one should bind the mudrās.
In order to act for the benefit of all sentient beings, bowing to all the directions is taught.
One should read the secret sūtras and the rest that bring attainment of the way of the awakening mind.
In order to generate the accumulation of merit,
one should properly worship the buddhas.
Then, at the time of the meal,
one should give a morsel offering in every way.
Having guarded it with the vidyā of the Buddha,
one should offer the food.
As the Buddha oneself, one should offer the food;
having divided it well, one should offer the food.
In the morning one should take the vow,
and that same at midday and at the junctures,

three times by day and three times by night.
The yoga that performs Buddha, vajra, jewel and lotus:
one applies it from those four kinds.
The Buddha, the Dharma, the Saṅgha and awakening, in six sessions by day and night;
vajra, bell, assembly and master,
likewise six for those who hold the vajra.
Material things, fearlessness and the Dharma,
and love, through every day and night as well:
the three dharmas and the four called Brahmā's,
one should recite in eight ways.
In its three great dharmas
one should always enter absorption:
the supreme secret, the supreme maṇḍala,
and likewise the performing of all actions.
Where it does not become wrongdoing,
one eats everything and accepts everything.
One should discard what is left over from the body,
and likewise remove all impurities.
Three times every day
one should bathe three times and take up the secret;
one should change one's clothes three times,
and three times put on clean clothes.
Meat, liquor, onions and the like,
foul-smelling belching from the mouth,
desire for sexual union and engaging in it, and harming sentient beings: one should not delight in these.
Diligent, skilled in action, endowed with good conduct, clever, gentle, joyful and clean,
doing the tasks and serving the guru,
one wears the ornament of virtue and goodness.
One should take the vows of the training of both kinds, conventional and ultimate.
Eating little, one should perform the approach, with the gaze turned inward and with faith in mantras, mudrās, vidyā-mantras, dhāraṇīs, the deity, the guru,

and the excellent emblems such as the vajra,
and possessed of a dwelling for the deity.
Not fearful, not deceitful or guileful,
not of unstable mind,
not delighting in nirvāṇa,
the mind not carried off by the senses,
the wise one does not delight in this world,
nor likewise does he delight in the world beyond.
One should not be indifferent to body and life,
and one should not transgress the training.
Not timid and not proud,
one should not desire worldly affairs.
In such a wondrous way as this
the yogin should practice.
Giving up idle talk, yet endowed with great eloquence,
giving up dependence, yet endowed with good gains, heroic, steadfast and respectful to the guru, fearing wrongdoing and restrained in every way,
one should be zealous as far as one is able.
Monthly, or else each year,
or twice in a single day,
likewise one should behold the guru.
Even one who commits the five inexpiable deeds, abiding in such a way as this
and binding the eight kinds of mudrā, will always attain accomplishment.
When the observance of pure conduct has been completed, in the maṇḍala of the yoga ḍākinīs
the master, the Vajradhara, will be empowered by all the buddhas.
He is the king, lord of all vidyās;
he knows the reality of all maṇḍalas,
he knows the reality of the rites of yoga,
and likewise he sees the families of the deities.
Having taken the vows, and being learned,
he will be empowered as a master of vidyā.

King who makes the great paths, endowed with vidyā and knowing reality,
knowing what helps and what harms,
he holds sway over all, the gods and the rest.
Yakṣas, bhūtas, the lords of the gods and the rest,
the king of vidyā commands as servants.
He abides in the boat of the Dharma;
he worships the buddhas with excellent worship.
King of the host of bodhisattvas, holder of the treasury, ever the holder of the secret,
he dwells in the great city of the wheel.
In him who holds the way of the bodhisattvas
the heart of the elixir of the true Dharma is born;
holding the essence, he worships the maṇḍala.
This one, who knows the way of the very intent and knows the meaning of the way of the Great Vehicle, with sublime worship surpassing offerings and gifts,
should make the secret maṇḍala.
At the very beginning of the samādhi of the vajra wrathful one,
one should utter the fierce secret mantra that surely destroys all obstructors, and also the rite of recitation and fire offering that is auspicious and destroys wrongdoing:
"I blaze like the vajra fire, holding fierce, unbearable gnosis."
To perform the worship of the maṇḍala, one should thoroughly examine the requisites;
or else, by one who performs it afterward,
they should be examined as is fitting.
It should not be made larger than a yojana,
nor smaller than six cubits.
This is called the twelve for accomplishment,
and there are also twelve for the performer.
If he is a king,
one should make it the extent of a yojana,
or else excellent all around

and fully endowed with four sides.
Or else, if the practitioner is a minister,
one of a thousand cubits is best;
or else, excellent all around,
it should not be made smaller than six cubits.
Or else, if it is some merchant,
or else a caravan leader,
it should be fully endowed with four sides and not be made smaller than five.
Or else, if it is any others,
or if they are practitioners,
it should not be made smaller than ten,
fully endowed with four corners,
nor should it be made large.
Or else, if the practitioner is a master,
it should not be made smaller than six,
or else it should be of the measure of a yojana.

Or else it should be furnished with the requisites.
If the practitioner is a king,
it should be made of jewel powders;
it should be made well from ground jewels, utterly excellent and delightful.
Indranīla, a deep blue,
should make the blue pigment;
padmarāga, of great hue,
supplies the red pigment;
the yellow pigment, of fine color,
is endowed with stainless rays;
and to have the white pigment,
the white should be made from crystal.
Vaiḍūrya and the color of madder:
these are taught as the five pigments.
If those are not to be had,
it should be made with a mixture of jewels.
Whether merchant or caravan leader,
it should be made with pigments.

Or else, if it is someone else,
other excellent pigments are prepared.
Even with ash, as the occasion allows,
masters may make it here.
Endowed with jewel powders,
or else endowed with the requisites:
if the practitioner is a king,
the various offerings should be to the measure of ten million, or else endowed with a hundred thousand;
they should not be made fewer than a thousand.
Offerings and praises with incense and lamps,
vases of scented water, likewise vasefuls of torma,
vases and lamps:
whether merchant or caravan leader,
they should not be made fewer than ten.
Even if some other person comes,
the foods to chew are ten thousand;
they should not be made fewer than ten.
The foods to eat are a hundred or a thousand;
they should not be made fewer than ten.
And all kinds of cooked dishes,
likewise every kind of scent,
music, graceful dance and play,
and likewise every excellence.
Then the vajra master,
having made offerings at that time,
and you, having gone forth,
should begin the observance in order to accomplish it.
Having bathed oneself and anointed the limbs,
wearing pure and clean clothes,
and dwelling in a secluded place,
one should invite all the buddhas.
Holding flowers and a censer in hand,
one should prostrate to all the directions.
The buddhas and all the rest,
endowed with the supreme gnosis of the buddhas, come;

one should bind the vajra mudrā that summons the secret eye.
With the vajra mantra and mudrā
one should invite all the buddhas.
Then one should properly prepare the site, secluded and wholly free of distraction:
a mountain or a wilderness,
or likewise the inside of a cave,
or a place at the foot of a tree,
the bank of a river or else a shore.
When one dwells in a place of accomplishment,
the deities will swiftly come.
Ground with stones, gravel and bones,
with ash, refuse and filth,
rough, pervaded with roots and the like,
one should avoid for drawing it.
Very good, of fine luster and smooth,
of proper measure and free of gravel:
to the depth of a fathom or a cubit
one should purify the site of the maṇḍala.
In villages and districts,
in cities and in provinces,
in royal palaces and in marketplaces,
the great maṇḍala is not to be made.
Having prepared such ground,
one should prepare the upper part,
a fathom or else a cubit,
fitted with four steps.
Having purified it, then in the center of the site one should plant a kīla.
With the mantra of the vajra kīla and with the mudrā of the vajra kīla one should beautify the ground of worship.
It is trodden by one who acts as a vidyādhara.
With the mudrā that binds obstructors
one should bind all the obstructors everywhere.
The directions of Fire, of Yama, of Water,

of Wind and of Indra, the vajra directions, one should purify with the mudrā of the unbearable vajra and with the vajra mantra.
For a site of worship the measure of a yojana,
one should begin from the fifteenth day;
on the second or the third,
there will be no fault in the lying down.
If one lacks the means,
one should apply oneself for about a month:
beginning from the fifteenth day,
one should complete it on the fifteenth.
If for about half a month,
one should purify it on the fifteenth.
If one is in haste, from the eighth day
one should complete it on the fifteenth.
On the ninth and the tenth,
the thirteenth and the fourteenth,
the seventh and the fifth,
there will be no fault in the lying down.
If one begins on that very day,
one should complete it on that same day.
In order to perform the great yoga,
one should prepare the ground of yoga.
Having bathed oneself and anointed the limbs,
wearing garments of various kinds,
and decked with every ornament,
the vajra master is beautifully adorned.
Clean and wearing clean clothes,
together with pure companions,
fully devoted to the welfare of all sentient beings,
one should properly take up the awakening mind.
Even for a hundred thousand eons, however much they may strive,
four kinds of person in the world,
though they practice, will not attain accomplishment:
those who have not generated the mind,
the faithless, who will not attain,

those who hold to doubt,
and those who do not carry out the commands.

Then that site of the maṇḍala,
well smeared with scented water, should be sprinkled in all directions with water that is scented.
Having purified it well with cow dung and anointed it well with what is scented, one should then prepare clean scents such as saffron.
With the mudrā of the vajra maṇḍala
one should properly bless the maṇḍala;
with the mudrā of the Vajra Eye
it is looked upon by those with lotus eyes.
In the middle of the maṇḍala and at its end
one should properly begin the rite of the fire offering.
The rite of the fire offering is of five kinds;
one should apply the rite of the fire offering.
For the rite of the accomplishment of the vidyā
one should properly begin the rite of the fire offering, likewise the collection of mantras and mudrās,
and not mantras and mudrās of that sort.
First one should destroy the obstructors;
then one should properly begin the fire offering.
After that, one should draw completely the maṇḍala of the great secret worship.
The fire offering is taught as five kinds,
or else it becomes sixteen.
Each according to its own rite,
one should properly begin the rite of the fire offering.
In order to accomplish whatever is intended,
one properly begins whatever worship it may be.
If one is unable, the greatly fortunate one should prepare the food;
mixed with what is scented,
or else one should eat the three white substances.

In this way the king, Vajradhara,
will bestow his blessing.

I shall explain the sublime binding,
my own, which surely destroys the obstructors,
the excellent action of the master,
the supreme means of repelling the obstructors.
Always one should salute Vajrakrodha and Vajrasattva.
With the mudrā of Vajrāṅkuśa
one should summon all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra noose
one should draw in all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of Vajrakarma
one summons all the obstructors everywhere.
"There is no wrongdoing, so do not fear!
Nor is there any harming of sentient beings.
Obstructors arise from one's own conceptual thought, just as nonvirtue arises from ignorance."
With the mudrā of the vajra chain
one should bind all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra fence
one should make all things of vajra nature.
With the mudrā of Vajrayakṣa
one should torment all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra tether
one should lead off all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra casting down one casts down all the obstructors everywhere.
With the mudrā of the vajra striking one should strike all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra blaze
one should set all the obstructors ablaze.
With the mudrā of the vajra sword
one should cut all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra crown
one should pound all the obstructors.

With the mudrā of the vajra wheel
one should demolish all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra machine
one should crush all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra khaṭvāṅga
one should chop up all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra short spear
one should pierce all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra burner
one should burn all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra whirler
one should whirl all the obstructors around.
With the mudrā of the vajra thread
one should shake all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra repeller one utterly destroys all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra destroyer
one should crush all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra terrifier one terrifies all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra eater
one should eat all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra chewer
one should chew all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra tearing one should tear apart all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra feller one should fell all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra raising one should raise up all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra killing one should kill all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra reviver one should revive all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra accomplishing one properly brings all the obstructors under control.
With the mudrā of the vajra sealing one should seal all the vicious ones.

With the mudrā of the vajra wind
one sends all the obstructors off on the wind.
With the mudrā of the vajra water
one scatters all the obstructors in the water.
With the vajra fire, utterly keen,
one should burn all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra stupefier one makes all the obstructors faint.
With the mudrā of Vajrahūṃkara
one should offer all the obstructors into the fire.
With the mudrā of the vajra gathering
one should seize all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra fang
one should bite all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra piercing
one should pierce all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra destroyer
one should demolish all the obstructors.
With the vajra that carries out commands,
having summoned them, one should set them under command.
With the mudrā of the vajra threatening finger
one should threaten all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra splitter one should split all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of Vajrahūṃkara
one should destroy every class of obstructor.
With the unbearable Vajrayakṣa, with the vajra blazing like fire,
and with the mudrā of the vajra terrifier,
one should strike them with the vajra foot.
With the mudrā that destroys obstructors
one should then destroy the obstructors above.

From the great secret tantra of the vajra, supreme of the sublime, the Supreme Secret,
one should enter the absorption of the vajra wrathful one.

A hundred and ten and more,
and the secret of the vajra master,
are fully taught in the extensive version.
They were compiled in order to punish all the vicious ones, the obstructors and the rest.
In order to accomplish the great maṇḍala
one should properly begin the rite of the fire offering.
Eight kinds and ten more,
the secret of the vajra master:
this is the great secret tantra;
it is fully explained in that tantra.
Together with the rites of the secret fire offering,
I shall further explain the first.
In the secret action of the great yoga one does not interrupt the rite of the fire offering.
In this great secret tantra
that compiles all the rites, everything is summed up in twenty kinds of fire offering:
pacifying and enriching,
the rite of the fierce rite, prolonging life and summoning, increasing wealth and grain,
protection and non-protection and obstructors, utterly destroying all wrongdoing,
binding and killing and wrath,
passion and subduing,
bringing under control, and beauty of form.

appearing in any form one wishes, going in the sky, and accomplishing the substances of accomplishment:
for these, the vajra master who makes the maṇḍala of accomplishment should perform it.
Of such kinds as these,
twenty excellent fire offerings are taught.
In accordance with the rite of the fire offering,

first the hearth is to be made.
For enriching it is square;
for pacifying it is round.
For summoning,
one should make it in the shape of a vajra,
and likewise another in the shape of a lotus.
For the fierce rite it is triangular.
In order to destroy all wrongdoing,
it is round, furnished with porticoes.
For increasing the lineage it is shaped like a jewel.
For increasing life and for diminishing it,
and for utter purity, it has the shape of a mudrā.
For protection it is like armor.
For binding it is encircled by a moat.
For killing it is furnished with fangs.
For assuming any form one wishes, any shape will do.
For invisibility it is furnished with a bow.
For the directions and for flying in the sky, a hook.
For accomplishing the mudrā that carries out commands,
and for accomplishing the great maṇḍala,
it is a wheel or else a square.
For accomplishing substances and medicines,
the hearth resembles the organ of a woman.
Or else one should properly draw the maṇḍala of the common accomplishments.
Just as the wheel of the maṇḍala is,
so the hearth of the fire offering becomes alike.
Thus one is endowed with the excellent accomplishment of a vidyādhara, and everything becomes perfect.
A little beyond the wheel and the rest,
one should dig the hearth of the fire offering.
These are the twenty hearths.

In all the rites of the maṇḍala, by merely seeing whichever hearth it is,
one will be freed from all wrongdoing.
I shall explain the teaching on the hearth.

First the lines are to be laid down,
and one should draw the ground well with colors.
Square, with what are called the eight lines,
one should draw out the central wheel.
The parts of the square are equal,
well divided and well drawn,
fully endowed with four porticoes, beautifully adorned with the door recesses,
fully endowed with four doors;
the doors should have eight parts.
It is adorned with nets and half-moons,
the vajra door recesses bearing vajras, with shoots of a lotus grove and with garlands winding all around.
The great mudrā of the ladle one should draw in the eastern part.
A trident and a half-moon,
a sword, a bull and a lovely banner,
and the great mudrā of bliss called desire,
one should draw in the southern direction.
A wheel, a conch and a club,
a horse, an elephant and a boar:
these mudrās one should draw in the west.
A short spear, a bell and a banner,
a peacock and likewise a goat,
and a cock poised to fight,
one should draw in the northern direction.
On its wheel of commitment
one should properly draw the mudrā of the Buddha.
In the central place there is a crown, adorned on the outside with vajras.
A blazing vajra, ablaze,
is in the eastern part;
in the south, various jewels;
in the west, a lotus vajra;
in the north, Vajrahūṃkara,
who destroys all the vicious ones.

The buddhas, the vajras, the great means,
are outside, as sixteen mudrās.
Over whatever hearth has been dug,
one should visualize a canopy.
With flowers, firewood, incense and the rest,
one should worship the maṇḍala as prescribed.
Having bathed oneself and anointed the limbs,
wearing various garments and ornaments, beautifully decked with every ornament,
one is empowered with excellent scents:
"I am the king, the lotus holder, with the Tathāgata in the middle of my topknot." Or else as Vajrasattva, or endowed with the empowerment of Vajrasattva,
together with a lovely woman,
clasping her tightly in one's arms,
with the organ fully erect,
one should properly begin the rite of the fire offering:
"How wonderful! Bliss, great bliss, the unsurpassed bliss of passion!
Vajrasattva, great passion,
lord of the world, grant me accomplishment!" Recollecting the bliss of passion,
one should not indulge the passion of desire.
Having drawn up the element of the woman,
one should give up the seven kinds of intercourse.
With the organ fully risen,
bringing the organ close,
and recollecting passion,
one should properly begin the rite of the fire offering.
The organ is called the hand emblem;
its rising is to be heightened.
Even more than the hand emblem of the vajra holder,
the wise one should hold to it.
The awakening mind of the vajra holder and of the bodhisattva is steadfast, and marked by the six perfections.

Through love, passion bestows accomplishment;
it shows joy in wisdom and means.
It is always to be relied on.
With the organ fully risen,
one should rely on it all the more.
Whatever lovely vidyā consort one longs for,
the yogin should kiss her.
When, with intensity, she has become the great mudrā,
he should clasp her tightly in his arms.
Whatever abundant perfect joy there is,
that is held to be the ground of Perfect Joy.
That to which one is attached, well examined,
one should savor again and again.
Anointed fully with compassion and loving-kindness, covered with the garment of modesty, anointed fully with discipline and the observance, adorned with the mind of awakening, one endowed with such an observance should rely on the great pigment.
Moreover the outer limbs,
since the vajra holder holds them,
in accordance with the rite of the fire offering,
one should perform the fire offering facing east.
Just as it is stated in the scripture,
the vajra master should perform it.
For pacifying, the supreme awakening of the Buddha;
for enriching, by Vajraratna; Vajrakrodha for the fierce rite;
summoning is taught to be by the hook;
for the extraction of essences, the vajra medicine;
likewise for increasing life, the great seal of the vajra medicine of Acala;
the vajra peak for increasing wealth;
for protection, the rite of the wheel;
for repelling, one should hold a vajra;
with the great mudrā of the chain in the left hand
the destroying of wrongdoing is taught;

for binding, the vajra binding;
for killing, the vajra killer;
for passion, by Vajrarāga,
and it is also taught for subduing;
for bringing under control, by the vajra of control.

For assuming any form one wishes, the Viśva mudrā;
for the accomplishment of going through the sky,
by the magical display of vajra accomplishment.
By the great mudrā of the lotus medicine comes the supreme bliss of accomplishment through substances.
For the accomplishment of the complete maṇḍala,
by the mudrā of the vajra maṇḍala,
one should take up that supreme mudrā
of the king, lord of all knowledge mantras (vidyā).
For accomplishing all accomplishments,
by the supreme medicine of the great lotus, bind the mudrā with the left hand and perform the fire offering with the right.
By the mudrā of the crossed vajra
the act of fire offering should be sealed.
The left, with hūṃ, makes the threatening forefinger;
the right bares the fangs;
with the mudrā of the fierce rite bind the directions with powdered bone.
oṃ suṃbhani suṃbha hūṃ gṛhṇa grahṇa hūṃ gṛdṇābaya gṛhṇāpaya hūṃ ānaya ho bagapan bihyārāja hūṃ phaṭ

The left joined with the gesture of teaching the Dharma, with the right perform the fire offering.
Through absorption in the Dharma of the buddhas,
by burning sesame, wrongdoing is burned away.
oṃ sarva pāpaṃ dahana vajrāya svāhā

The left hand becomes the jewel;
with the right perform the fire offering.
With the seven grains, or else with jewels,
one should give delight with every requisite.
oṃ maṇi ratna kramakāya svāhā

Deeply settled in meditative equipoise, kindle the fire with sweet wood;
if the yogin burns rice in it,
the household will surely prosper. oṃ vajra puṣṭaye svāhā

With firewood that is very sweet kindle the fire well;
if one makes the fire offering with kuśa sprouts and sesame,
it is supreme for the purpose of protection.
oṃ vajra apratihata vajraya svāhā

Sweet kindling sticks,
and likewise sprouts of dūrvā grass,
smeared with butter, burned with the vajra mudrā,
are supreme for increasing life.
oṃ vajra āyuṣe svāhā

With pungent firewood,
in the concentration of the vajra lord of wrath, kindle the fire in the hearth and summon with thorns.
oṃ vajra ākarṣaya svāhā

Likewise with every kind of wood
the wise one kindles the fire;
by constantly offering lotuses in the fire vajra binding comes about.
oṃ vajra bandhaya paṃ

Likewise by the rite of application
the wise one should burn kindling sticks;
by making a fire offering of bitter fruits
one kills in an instant.
oṃ vajra māranaye hūṃ

Likewise, burning red pākṣa brings under one's control.
oṃ vajra rāganaye hrīḥ

Making a fire offering with śapuṣpa is likewise supreme for arousing passion.

oṃ vajra śaṃkarāya svāhā

If, in wrath, one burns the rice of desire, one obtains whatever form one wishes.
oṃ vajra kāmarūpaṇi svāhā oṃ vajra kharacireṇi svāhā

With firewood of bitter taste, kindle the fire in great wrath;
burning vajra flowers in wrath,
they will do as the vajra commands.
hūṃ vajra śaṃkarāya svāhā oṃ bhuta vaśaṃkarāya svāhā

Following the rite for all accomplishments, the wise one should offer white mustard seed in the fire.
Since white mustard seed is supremely auspicious,
it is the supreme fire offering for accomplishment.
oṃ sarva siddhaye svāhā

To accomplish the state of a knowledge holder (vidyādhara), the wise one should burn svastikas;
by applying the maṇḍala of accomplishment,
the fire offering is made in the vajra maṇḍala.
oṃ siddha siddhaye svāhā oṃ dala dhipataye svāhā maṇḍal adhipataye svāhā oṃ bhuḥ svāhā oṃ bhuva svāhā oṃ sva svāhā oṃ bhur bhuva svaḥ svahā oṃ svasti svāhā oṃ svasti namaḥ svāhā oṃ siddhe prabhātaye svāhā oṃ sarva duḥkh upaśamane svāhā oṃ vajra siddhaye svāhā oṃ kārya kāraṇi puṣṭa śantike svāhā

The syllable phaṭ is for the fierce rite;
by the syllable jaḥ summoning comes about;
the syllable paṃ is applied for binding;
for bringing under control, the syllable śrī.
The syllable hūṃ is applied for threatening, and for killing, too, the syllable hūṃ;
ha is for excellent protection;
the syllable hūṃ is for repelling;
with śrī one should accomplish various forms;
oṃ is taught for invisibility;
ho is for passion and for summoning;
u holds the purity of the secret;

for one engaged in the fierce rite, the syllable hūṃ;
hūṃ accomplishes miraculous powers;
for accomplishing the great goddess, ā;
oṃ is to be applied to all without fail.

Yellow kindling sticks are for increase,
white ones for pacifying,
red ones for bringing under control,
and black ones for the act of the fierce rite.
For pacifying they are smeared with butter,
for increase, with milk,
for bringing under control, with salt,
and for the fierce rite, with pungent spices.
Through these vast distinctions
the acts of fire offering should be understood.
These twenty fire offerings of reality are the secret of Vajradhara.

This is the secret of fire offering called The Twenty Principles.

Then, the great means of accomplishment:
in the maṇḍala, wishing to accomplish everything,
by the rite of applying accomplishment, endowed with the application of the whole host of accomplishments,
the great vajra master,
born into a steadfast family,
abiding truly in the Great Vehicle, riding the great chariot of the Dharma until the end of countless eons, truly endowed with wisdom and skillful means, striving for the benefit of all sentient beings, embraced by all the buddhas, abiding in the way of a great master,
having gone supremely to the end of the grounds,
born into the family of all the buddhas,
the vajra master of great austerity,
having dispelled all obstructors,
being properly established in the site of the maṇḍala,
and having performed the rite of fire offering,

should undertake the great gift of the Dharma.
Arisen from the very essence of the heart of the true Dharma,
it is the unsurpassed worship of the buddhas,
the magical display of the bodhisattvas;
it brings attainment of the way of wisdom and skillful means.
The great victor, great wisdom,
and, through skillful means, the marvelous nature of reality.
Like a brahmin, born of a supreme family,
he holds the great secret of the bodhisattvas.
If he is able, the greatly fortunate one,
from the time he begins the worship
until it is completed,
should not eat.

Or else one may eat the three white substances well mixed together with scents, for then King Vajradhara
will bestow his blessing.
But if the patient one does not eat
by day or by night,
then the food that is the very nature of the Dharma will satisfy him, without a doubt.

The maṇḍalas should be purified and prepared with every kind of scent;
with water cleansed by mantra
one should sprinkle everything all around.
When one performs the worship,
one should pay homage to all the directions, and having performed in due order the acts of confession and supplication, clouds of offerings, rejoicing,
the offering of oneself, and so forth, in the very center of the great maṇḍala
one should sit in the sattva posture.
Ten kinds of seated posture are taught that comprise all the maṇḍalas.
This supreme great secret, reality itself,

is the worship of all the maṇḍalas:
the glorious, the auspicious, the threatening forefinger, likewise the right half-crossed posture,
the outward-extended and the seated,
and likewise the jewel nature;
these are taught as ten in nature.
One hundred and ten postures are fully taught in that tantra, the secret of the secret tantras.

Seated cross-legged in the sattva posture, with mind fixed upon the buddhas, recollecting great loving-kindness
for the three worlds, moving and unmoving, the yogin should enter into absorption
in the supreme samādhi of the initial union.
Then comes the supreme king of maṇḍalas,
and then again the king of action.
From the excellent higher samādhi they are taught as a hundred and ten;
for all actions they are stated as three;
this is fully taught in the secret tantra.
Without the application of samādhi
the maṇḍala does not become stable;
without the application of the maṇḍala accomplishment itself does not arise.
Therefore, always and with effort,
one should practice samādhi, accomplishment and maṇḍala.

If you wish for the Supreme Secret,
the secret of the unsurpassed vehicle,
then I shall properly explain the domain of the three samādhis.
Ordinary people are not capable of the magical display of the bodhisattvas;
their supreme samādhi
must be properly performed by the mind itself.
As explained in the first tantra,

the magical display of the buddhas is taught.
Through the samādhi of a bodhisattva
the intelligent one should imagine himself with great miraculous power, and should imagine that he himself has performed various fierce austerities.
He should imagine the abode of the gods,
the abode called Akaniṣṭha, and imagine the pure assembly in which all the buddhas are gathered.
First paying homage to the buddhas,
and then likewise to the sages,
having received their command as taught,
he should again sit cross-legged.
He should imagine the fivefold full awakening that delights all.
Himself in the body of a buddha adorned with all the marks,
and empowered by all the buddhas:
these five he should contemplate in himself.
He should dwell in the vajra seat and imagine the lofty peak.

This is the samādhi called the Initial Union.

Dwelling in the vajra east,
the wheel of the buddhas is magically displayed;
the bodhisattvas too are sent forth,
and the maṇḍala of the wheel is emanated:
the family maṇḍala together with its king,
the gatekeepers, the graceful goddesses and the rest;
together with the goddesses,
through the application of the mudrās,
one empowers the vajra holder and properly performs it as the vajra action.
In the space of one's own sphere
one should visualize with devotion all the buddhas, and properly confer empowerment
as the very nature of all the buddhas.

As the king who holds the vajra Dharma one should examine the arrangement of the maṇḍala, summon all the buddhas,
and make the vajra holders enter supremely.
Accomplishing and bringing under control:
this act is supreme.
In the maṇḍala of one's own family
one should especially visualize that place:
the wheel as it is, the arrangement as it is,
the mudrās as they are, and the empowerment conferred.

This is the samādhi called the Supreme King of Action.

Having bathed oneself and anointed the limbs, wearing various ornaments and garments,
armlets and bracelets,
likewise rings and a crown,
with gold thread and pearls
on the hands, the feet and then the neck, so that the whole body is adorned;
likewise one should put on fine garments, especially of silk, and be purified.
Or else one wears the Dharma robes,
like the banner that is the seal of the Buddha.
If one is a monk with shaven head, one should bind up long, coiled hair
of a blue color, dark blue;
or else hair grown on one's own head.
One should be oneself Vajrasattva, or else act as Vajrakarma.
Without the secret that is the nature of yoga excellent accomplishment will not be obtained.

Having sat as is fitting,
evenly in the center of the maṇḍala,
rising up and facing east,
without pride and without error,
one circumambulates as Vajrasattva.
The excellent hundred and eight names

should be recited once.
Having offered praise, one oneself should properly apply the accomplishment.
Through the application of great compassion
I should exhort the sage:
"Vajrasattva, great being,
supreme lord of unfailing purpose,
the best of those born of the supreme Great Vehicle, bodhisattva, accomplish me!
Great being, great means,
vajra wheel, great worship,
great accomplishment, great miraculous power, Vajrasattva, accomplish me!"
One should properly take up the vajra name and properly circumambulate in all directions, gaze upon the complete maṇḍala,
and recollect the vajra yoga.
Again seated cross-legged:
"I myself am the wheel-turning monarch."
In binding the host of mudrās one should do no fewer than a thousand.

At the very least, one should take up the mudrā of Vajrasattva himself.
Rising, one should speak these words:
"I am Vajrasattva,
who fully accomplishes the great maṇḍala.
Vajra and all the rest, come!
I am King Vajradhara; accomplish me as Vajrasattva!"

With a cord dyed in rich colors and scented, especially tightly twisted,
with the great mudrā of the vajra cord
one should lay out the lines of the great maṇḍala.
The wheel as it is, the arrangement as it is,
following the text exactly, one should draw the wheel of the maṇḍala as it is

and lay down the vajra lines completely.
Then its own family secret fully accomplishes the great wheel.
The wheel of the great maṇḍala
I shall now explain in due order.

It is square, with four doors,
made beautiful by four arches,
properly furnished with four lines,
and adorned with silk streamers and garlands.
All the corner sections,
and the corners of the door frames,
are adorned with vajra jewels.
One should lay out the lines of the outer maṇḍala.
Its inner level
should be drawn like a wheel, encircled by a vajra garland and beautified by eight pillars, adorned with five maṇḍalas
placed before the vajra pillars.
Each maṇḍala should be distinguished as it lies outside and inside.
In the very center of the maṇḍala,
where the five maṇḍalas are drawn,
adorned with eight supreme pillars,
is what is taught as the fourfold maṇḍala.

Going to the very center of the center,
one should place the form of the Buddha:
the great king who holds the Dharma,
Vairocana, the great all-pervading lord.
In all the directions around the Buddha,
in the centers of the maṇḍalas,
the four supreme samayas too should be properly drawn in due order.
Vajrasattva, the great king,
is placed before and behind; Vajrāṅkuśa on the right side;

on the western side, the crusher of Māra, Vajrasādhu, the great king;
the great holder of the Dharma, endowed with power;
the holder of the Dharma is in the north;
and in front, the vajra in the attitude of pride.
For this, its secret heart mantra, supreme in bringing about true understanding,
fully freeing from all suffering,
fully urging on the mind of awakening:
hūṃ jaḥ ho sā

In the maṇḍala of the eastern quarter,
having gone there with vajra speed,
in the center of that maṇḍala
one should place Akṣobhya.
The heart mantra of vajra speed, preceded by the cutting of doubt,
excellent, with the assembly going before,
fully destroys all wrongdoing:
oṃ vegakrama ho
Great secret of all the buddhas, the Sage, supreme among beings, Akṣobhya, abiding on the elephant seal,
holds the mudrā of peace.
For him the heart mantra is this: hūṃ

In all of its directions
the supreme vajra deities are placed,
adorned with every ornament,
with wrathful faces yet smiling:
Vajrasattva, the great king;
Vajrāṅkuśa, the great teacher;
Vajra Desire, the great Māra;
Vajrasādhu, of great miraculous power.
One should place Vajraratna;
what is taught as Vajrarāga,
one should place as Vajradharma;
what is taught as Vajrasādhu,

one should take up as Vajrakarma.
The fourfold samaya:
one should place the wheel-turning monarchs,
all wearing the crowns of buddhas,
empowered as wheel-turning monarchs:
Vajraratna, likewise Karma,
Padma, and the various, of great joy.
By the Blessed One Vairocana that supreme awakening was properly taken up.
The remaining transformations of his limbs, Vajrasattva and the others, should be placed.

Then, having set down the buddha family,
for the heart of the vajra family
the mudrā and the heart mantra are taught:
one should take up the vajra mudrā.
hūṃ jaḥ ho sva
In teaching the syllables ja and the rest,
the syllable oṃ is properly placed;
ho, dhi, the dharmadhātu syllable a;
the syllable sva is transformed.

Going south with vajra speed,
to the maṇḍala wheel of Ratnasambhava, the supreme Blessed One holds it fully.
In all of its directions
one should draw Vajraratna and the rest:
jewel splendor, the banner,
and the one adorned with jewel teeth.
For these, the heart mantras are:
oṃ aḥ trā ha

In the maṇḍala of the western quarter,
having gone there with vajra speed,
in its center Vajradharma, Amitābha, should be placed.
His heart mantra is hrīḥ.
In all of its directions
one should draw Vajrapadma and the rest:

the sharp lotus, likewise the cause,
and speech, with the lotus mudrā.
For these, the heart mantras are hrīḥ rdaṃ maṃ raṃ

Going with vajra speed
into the center of the northern maṇḍala,
the Blessed One Amoghasiddhi,
the Buddha himself, should be placed.
His heart mantra is kaṃ.
In all of its directions
one should draw Vajrakarma and the rest:
the protection of all, the great yakṣa,
action, and the very firm fist.
For these, the heart mantras are kaṃ haṃ hūṃ paṃ

In the four corners of the central wheel
one should properly draw the four goddesses:
Vajra, Ratna, likewise Karma,
and Padma are taught as the four goddesses.
For them, the heart mantras are oṃ oṃ hrīḥ a

This completes the central maṇḍala of the first section, from the great maṇḍala that is king of all.

Having completed the central maṇḍala,
one should draw all the mudrās.
Those mudrās are blessed;
one should take up the vajra mudrā.
From the center, the supreme, in supreme awakening;
the auspicious is the mudrā of the east;
in the southern quarter, supreme giving;
in the west, holding the wheel of Dharma;
in the north, that called granting fearlessness, held by Amoghasiddhi.
The remaining mudrās with their hand emblems.
Then one should draw the host of vajra beings.

This completes the section called the center of the great vajra wheel, from the great maṇḍala, the king of all maṇḍalas.

Having gone with vajra speed
to the maṇḍala of the eastern quarter,
one should properly draw the five maṇḍalas
of the delightful great vajra family.
With eight pillars, great vajras,
adorned with five maṇḍalas,
one should set out the vajra wheel furnished with four maṇḍalas.
In the center of its eastern part one should properly draw one in the form of a buddha:
a blue utpala, endowed with great light,
with a wrathful face yet smiling,
fierce, encircled by a garland of flames, holding the vajra tiriṃtiri,
the wrathful one holding the vajra gaze,
who fully tames all the violent.
Before the Buddha, Vajradhara should be placed in the midst of the blaze;
likewise in the midst of the blaze, Padma,
and likewise Ratna, with their various emblems.
That is the great wheel of the east.

Having gone to the eastern section,
in the center of its maṇḍala
one should properly draw Vajrahūṃkara:
four-faced and eight-armed,
he holds the eight emblems,
his fangs slightly bared,
with a wrathful face yet smiling.
Hook, vajra, chain,
and noose are taught as four emblems;
he holds arrow and bow as two;
two are gathered by the syllable hūṃ.
With his left foot
he should press down Maheśvara;
with his right he presses the goddess Umā down to between her breasts.
He stands well in the left-extended posture, encircled by a garland of flames, radiant,

his body blue in color, fierce,
striking fear into all the buddhas.
In all of its directions
one should place the Vajrakrodhas, all encircled by wrathful blaze,
their fangs slightly bared:
the wrathful Sattva, the wrathful vajra, likewise the wrathful Rāga,
the wrathful Sādhu, the fierce;
they should encircle the central maṇḍala.

Having gone with vajra speed,
on the right side of the king of the wrathful ones,
surrounded by the great wrathful beings,
in the center is the frowning wrathful one.
In all of its directions,
endowed with the empowerment of the Vajrakrodhas,
one should draw them all and properly place them.
In the supreme maṇḍala of the frowning one,
in all of its directions,
one should place the jewel wrathful ones:
the frowning one, the Sun, the banner,
and the wrathful Hāsa, wholly arisen.

In the third excellent maṇḍala,
having gone with vajra speed,
surrounded by the great wrathful beings,
one should properly draw the vajra division.
In all of its directions
one should place the lotus wrathful ones:
Dharma, the sharp one, likewise the cause,
and Hāsa, the wrathful one of great miraculous power.

Having gone with vajra speed
to the great supreme family of action, one should properly draw the great-souled king of action,
the vajra descent.
In all of its directions

one should draw the wrathful one of action and the rest:
the action, the yakṣa, the rākṣasa,
and the great fist, the miraculous power of gathering.
One should draw all five maṇḍalas;
this is taught as the vajra family.
It is called the great, great maṇḍala,
the secret itself, the lord of the assembly.

Then the heart mantra of them all,
delightful to the whole vajra family:
here the syllable hūṃ is spoken.
The fierce one proclaims ha ha, hūṃ;
proclaiming hūṃ hūṃ, he strikes terror.
The king of its maṇḍala should be made the well-gathered vajra secret.
In the corners of the wheel maṇḍala
one should properly draw the four goddesses:
the wrathful Sattvī, Ratna, Padma, and Karma, it should be known.
At all the borders
those with mudrās and samaya are held.

This completes the second section of the king of all maṇḍalas. The maṇḍala of the eastern section is also complete.

In the maṇḍala outside the pillars of the wheel of the central maṇḍala:
the graceful one, the garland, likewise song,
and the dance goddess, with their mudrās.
For the eastern vajra family itself,
in the outer place, likewise.
The four generated upon the sun are held by the vajra goddesses.
In the arising of the application of the vajra maṇḍala,
the syllable hūṃ is placed everywhere.
Likewise for the king of the buddha family
the syllable hūṃ is spoken here.
The mudrās are transformations of one's own limbs;
one should take up the vajra mudrā.

Through fully applying all the mudrās,
they are secret, and the supreme secret is taught.

This completes the section called the Great Vajra Family, from the great maṇḍala called the Supreme Secret, the king of all maṇḍalas.

In the southern jewel maṇḍala,
having gone there with vajra speed,
one should place there the five wheels
of the perfect maṇḍala.
In the wheel of its maṇḍala
one should place the form of a buddha:
the Great Jewel, riding a horse,
the Buddha Sun, the Tathāgata,
his body encircled by a garland of flames, wholly pervaded by garlands of light rays,
holding a supreme garland of jewels,
adorned with every ornament,
laughing with a row of teeth,
having the mudrā of the row of teeth,
holding a banner at the tip of his thumb.
In the center of the sun, the great Buddha,
his body of nectar like the moon, Vajraratna, of great good fortune,
supreme in the family of the vajra sun.
In all of its directions:
the jewel Sattva, Padma, and likewise Vajrakarma.

adorned with every ornament,
beautifully arrayed as a wheel-turning monarch, arisen from the great jewel family,
the jewel vajra holding the sun.
Then the heart mantra is trāṃ.

In the eastern maṇḍala of the south,
having gone there with vajra speed,
in its center one should properly draw the great being, Great Jewel Light,

adorned with every ornament,
endowed with the vajra empowerment of the buddhas.
In all of its directions
one should likewise properly draw the jewels:
the jewel Sattva, likewise Rāga,
and the king Sādhu, of great miraculous power;
the mudrās of Vajraratna and the rest,
their own mudrās with their emblems.

Having gone with vajra speed,
and settling upon the southern place,
in the excellent great jewel family
one should draw the excellent Vajraratna, endowed with the empowerment of the four jewels, supreme, bearing the buddhas upon his crown,
adorned with every ornament,
endowed with the empowerment of the jewel garland.
In all of its directions
one should properly draw the four beings:
the Jewel King, the banner, Hāsa, and the great Jewel King.

Having gone with vajra speed
to the western vajra maṇḍala:
the great-souled Padma Ratna, endowed with empowerment by the jewel garland, holding the supreme jewel lotus,
the great being with the crown of the buddhas,
fully holding jewel peace,
with sidelong glances, his eyes impassioned with desire, gazing upon the persons to be tamed,
the great king who holds the lotus, Lokeśvara Amitāyus.
In all of its directions
one should properly draw the jewel lotus:
likewise the jewel lotus,
likewise the cause, and the one holding speech.

Having gone with vajra speed
to the maṇḍala of the northern quarter, one should properly draw, with great nobility,
the king of the great jewel action:
the Blessed One, lord of sages, Amoghasiddhi,
the buddha of magical display who holds all actions, Vajrakarma, the king who holds the treasury,
the supreme and excellent chief of wheel-turning monarchs, with the crown of the buddhas, endowed with the four actions,
his limbs well adorned with every ornament, sealed with the excellent jewel of action, having become supreme in the great assembly of the jewel maṇḍala.
In all of its directions
one should properly draw the action jewels:
the action, the rākṣasa, the yakṣa,
and the one holding its fist of gathering.
Then the heart mantra of them all
is trāṃ.
The yogin of the great jewel family should recite the syllable trāṃ.
As is fitting, one should properly draw one's own mudrās and emblems.

This completes the third section of the great maṇḍala, the king of all maṇḍalas. The maṇḍala of the southern section is also complete.

In its four corners
one should properly draw the four goddesses.
In front of the outer maṇḍala
one should properly draw the four goddesses:
Sattvī, Ratnī, likewise Dharmī, and Karmī; in the wheel maṇḍala,
the graceful one, the garland, likewise song,
and the dancer, of the graceful ones.
The excellent great jewel family,
all pervaded by the jewel mudrās,
their supreme hands marked by their own mudrās, encircled by garlands of light rays, radiant, empowered by the jewel vajra,

each holding his own mudrā, bearing various jewel weapons,
arisen from jewels, possessing jewels, dwelling in a house whose nature is jewels,
with incense and jewel flowers,
dwelling upon great supreme jewels,
their bodies clothed in jewel garments.

This completes the section called the Great Jewel Family, from the great maṇḍala, the king of all maṇḍalas, called the Secret, the Supreme Secret.

Having gone with vajra speed
to the western lotus maṇḍala, one should properly draw with great joy
the excellent great lotus family.
In its western maṇḍala
one should properly draw the five maṇḍalas.
In the wheel at the central hub
one should place the form of a buddha:
an excellent lotus of eight petals,
eight petals, lovely,
the one with the yoga of the stable dharmadhātu, beautified by a garland of lotuses.
In its center, the great king,
having all forms, supreme in nature,
the Buddha endowed with wisdom and skillful means,
holding the wheel of Dharma.
Abiding on that single lotus,
resting upon its maṇḍala,
one should draw the four lotus beings:
the wheel-turning monarch, the fearless,
adorned with every ornament,
endowed with the empowerment of the buddha lotus;
one should draw Vajrapadma and the rest.
The lotus beings, fearless,
all wearing the crowns of buddhas,
empowered with the garland of Dharma, bearing lotus emblems and weapons,

sporting in the magical display of the buddhas:
Padmasattva, and likewise the king, Ratna, and Dharma of the great way;
the four supreme samayas
one should properly draw in due order.

In the eastern maṇḍala of the west,
having gone there with vajra speed,
in its center, the great king,
one should place the various wheel.
Well established in the essence of the Dharma, resting upon the eight-petaled lotus,
in the center of the lotus anthers one should place the one having all forms,
adorned with every ornament,
possessing a body of beautiful form,
endowed with the empowerment of the five buddhas,
three-eyed and eight-armed.
Brahmā is on the topknot, Indra on the forehead,
the flower-weaponed one between the brows;
on the eyes one should place the Sun and the Moon;
the Aśvins and Kumāra on the ears; Viṣṇu is the tip of the nose;
the Black One at the fangs, and Big Belly;
on the tongue is Sarasvatī,
and on the voice, the Great Sarasvatī; Kumuda and the one with the lotus garland dwell at the mouth and the cheeks;
on the eyes, the Perfection of Wisdom;
half of the face sends forth emanations;
on the right shoulder is the lion,
and on the left the boar properly dwells;
in the two nostrils
are Sāgara and Upatapta; Nanda and Upananda on the upper arms;
in the belly the Ocean dwells;
on the right thigh dwells Mahābala;

Gaṇapati on the upper arm;
the Great God (Śiva), Maheśvara, dwells at the door above the sexual organ; Śrīvatsa dwells at the heart,
and also the great goddess Śrī;
at the door of the lower opening the king Yama rests; Durgā and the great terrifying goddess properly dwell on the knees;
on the ten toes
the ten mātṛkās dwell;
Rudra dwells at the nape;
the water goddess dwells on the back;
the gods of spring, early summer, summer, autumn, winter and late winter, on the right and the left,
properly dwell on the feet.
On the thousand-spoked wheel below,
the binding of Rudra's aggregates and

Rāhu, Vemacitrin and the Illuminator, and all the asuras dwell all around.
On the palms of the ten hands
the ten perfections dwell.
Just as one wishes,
draw these, the Great God and the others.
With four faces and eight arms,
each face having three eyes,
endowed with fine garments and a fine form:
one should set out the Sage of such a nature.
In all of its directions
draw Padmasattva properly.
Padmasattva, the hook,
the arrow and Padma Sādhu are to be duly assigned.
In the supreme southern quarter of the west,
having gone there with vajra speed,
in its center, the great being,

draw Ratnapadma properly.
Having twelve faces,
the supreme one endowed with twelve arms, properly seated on a jewel lotus,
is held to arise from the jewel.
In all of its directions
draw Padmaratna, the net and the others:
Bhṛkuṭī, the Sun, the Banner, and likewise the Eleven-Faced One.
In the maṇḍala of the western direction,
having gone there with vajra speed,
in its center, the great being,
Amitābha is to be set out.
Bestowing the great lotus, Padmanarteśvara, the chief,
endowed with a thousand eyes and arms, holds all the mudrās and weapons;
noble, with twelve faces,
properly accompanied by the lotus goddess,
endowed with the ten perfections,
he sports in the midst of the hosts.
In all of its directions
draw Padmasattva properly:
Tārā, the mighty Kumāra,
and Nīlakaṇṭha, born from the color of Brahmā.
In the northern part of the west,
having gone there with vajra speed,
in its center, the great being,
Padma and the others are to be set out.
With six faces and twelve arms,
the supreme one holding mudrās and weapons,
the great one bestowing manifold things:
draw Padmakarma properly.
In all of its directions
is Padmanarteśvara, the king.
Dwelling in front of the maṇḍala, draw the Padma Rākṣasa, the yakṣa, and the Padma Fist properly.

Right and left, behind and in front: this is the maṇḍala.

Then the heart is ha. The heart of the buddhas is hrīḥ; it is the heart of all. Here ends the fourth section from the King of All Maṇḍalas, the Great Maṇḍala called the Secret and the Supreme Secret.

Having completed the maṇḍala of the hosts of the lotus family,
at the four corners of its wheel
draw the four goddesses properly.
Padmasattvā, Ratnā,
Karmā and Dharmā, draw them properly;
Lāsyā the graceful, Mālā of the garland, likewise Gītā of song, and this Nṛtyā of the dance, draw them properly.

Here ends the section called the Great Lotus Family from the King of All Maṇḍalas, the Great Maṇḍala.

In the northern maṇḍala of karma,
having gone there with vajra speed,
for its king of maṇḍalas set out five wheels, five by five.
In its center, the great karma,
set out the form of the Buddha,
the great king who holds the Dharma,
seated upon a garuḍa seat.
In all of its directions
draw the karma mudrās properly: Karmasattva, Ratna,
likewise Karma and Dharmatā.
Having gone there with vajra speed,
in the eastern maṇḍala of the north,
Akṣobhya, the great buddha,
Vajrakarma is to be set out.
Its offerings, together with weapons,
are held together with its mudrās:
the noble holder of great karma,

properly endowed with the deeds of a buddha.
In all of its directions
draw Karmasattva properly:
the sattva, Rāga, the great king,
Sādhu, and likewise Karma itself.
Having gone there with vajra speed,
in the southern part of the north,
the great king of the jewel samādhi,
draw Ratnakarma properly.
He sends down a rain of jewels and utterly destroys all suffering.
In all of its directions
draw Ratnakarma properly:
the splendor of the sattva, the Banner,
Karma, and Hāsa, the purifier.
The noble Karmaratna
is properly endowed with the jewel maṇḍala.
Having gone there with vajra speed,
in the western part of the north,
the great Padmakarmasattva,
draw him properly in the center of the maṇḍala.
In all of its directions
draw Padmakarma properly:
the Sharp Lotus, likewise the Cause,
and likewise Speech: this is karma.
Having gone there with vajra speed,
in the northern maṇḍala of the north,
the holder of great karma, the powerful one,
draw the king of karma properly.
In all of its directions
set out Karmasattva:
the Karma Rākṣasa, the yakṣa, and likewise the Fist of Gathering.

Then the heart is aḥ. The heart of the buddhas is aḥ; it is the heart of all. Here ends the fifth section from the King of All Maṇḍalas, the Great Wheel Maṇḍala called the Secret. The maṇḍala of the northern part is also complete.

Having drawn the maṇḍala in the north,
and having completed the karma maṇḍala,
at the four corners of its wheel
set out the four goddesses.
The four earlier samaya beings,
all together, are thirty-three.
The one called the center has thirty-three;
in the eastern direction there are thirty-three;
likewise the western quarter;
the north and the south are likewise.

Here ends the section called the Karma Family from the King of All Maṇḍalas, the Great Maṇḍala, the Secret and the Supreme Secret. The entire retinue of the maṇḍala is also complete.

The hundred and sixty-fifth.

Then the maṇḍala, the supreme wheel,
the great city whose nature is liberation:
at the four corners of the great wheel
four maṇḍalas are to be drawn.
The great union of the wheel, in the southeast, is to be set out in the form of the moon.
In the center of the moon maṇḍala Vajrasattva is to be set out, smiling, with the color of the moon,
blazing with manifold red rays of light, properly seated in the cross-legged posture of the sattva,
the supreme one, holding the vajra in a proud manner,
in his right hand holding a vajra,
and likewise in his left holding a bell;
the great being in meditative equipoise,
who ponders the welfare of all sentient beings, properly dwells upon his lotus.
Relying on that maṇḍala of light,
draw the four goddesses properly;
thus the five secret ones are properly shown.
The first and the second properly dwell on the right side;
the third and the fourth dwell on the left side.

The goddess who proclaims the vajra clamor,
his own goddess, embracing him with her knees,
turning her head at his side,
smiling and gazing all around, clasps the hand of the Blessed One.
Raising the makara banner,
at his side, laughing,
is the striker, the Mistress of Beings.
She who proclaims the sound of the vajra clamor, likewise Vajra Unfailing Joy,
the goddess Vajra Kāmeśvarī, and the Vajra Lady of Splendid Joy.
In the southwestern corner,
having gone there with vajra speed,
in the center of its maṇḍala
a great lotus is to be set out.
In the center of the lotus maṇḍala Padmasattva is to be set out,
with four faces and eight arms,
with a wheel and a maṇḍala of light;
he properly dwells upon his lotus.
Relying on that maṇḍala of light,
draw properly the four goddesses
born from the lotus family.
Of the wholly secret goddesses
the names shall next be explained:
Vajraśrī and Vajra White,
Vajra Lamp and the Vajra Bearer.
Having gone there with vajra speed,
in the maṇḍala of the northwestern corner,
having drawn a maṇḍala of the sky,
properly endowed with a vajra sun,
in the center of the sun maṇḍala Ratnasattva is to be set out, pervaded by blue and red light,
adorned with every ornament;

he properly dwells upon his lotus.
Relying on that maṇḍala of light,
draw properly the four goddesses
born from the great jewel family:
She Born from Space, Sky Vajra,
the Sky-Colored Mistress of Beings,
the great goddess Glorious Jewel,
and the Beauty of the Family, with her jewel.
Having gone there with vajra speed,
on the wheel of the northeastern corner, likewise with the petals of a blue utpala,
the maṇḍala is to be drawn properly.
In the center of that blue utpala,
the supreme great holder of the karmas, proclaimed the karma of all the buddhas and so forth:
Vajrakarma is to be set out.
He properly dwells upon his lotus.
Relying on that maṇḍala of light,
draw properly the four goddesses
born from the karma family:
Karmamudrā, Vajraratnā,
Karmā and Dharmā, the great glorious ones.
Just as earlier in the vajra family,
so in all the maṇḍalas
that very one dwells as the messenger, that very one properly dwells as the goddess,
that very one is Lāsyā, Vilāsinī and the rest,
and she also forms a further ocean of mudrās.
Yellow, red, like the sun,
they become like the color of the blue utpala.
Proud, endowed with the peaceful empowerment,
each fully holds her own mudrā.

Then the heart is hūṃ hrīḥ oṃ aḥ. Here ends the sixth section from the King of All Maṇḍalas, the Great Maṇḍala called the Secret and the Supreme Secret. The maṇḍalas of the corners are also complete.

Endowed with one hundred and eighty-five,
the wheel having been completed,
on the sides of its corners
draw the four deities properly.
In the east is the great vajra,
the vajra blazing like fire,
the emblem of the great vajra family,
most terrifying with its garlands of flame.
In the south, the perfect jewel:
Varuṇa, the jewels and the makaras,
the emblem of the great jewel family, proclaimed the source of the Buddha's Dharma.
In the west the earth goddess is to be drawn,
of the one called the Mighty Person,
bearing the great maṇḍala;
she is also the emblem of the lotus family.
In the north, the person of the wind,
whose garments are borne by the force of the wind,
and likewise the holder of the karma family,
moving and mighty, is to be drawn.
At one hundred and eighty-nine accomplish the central maṇḍala properly:
the great ship of the way of the Dharma,
the great city whose nature is liberation.

Here ends the Great Wheel Maṇḍala called the Secret, from the King of All Maṇḍalas, the Great Maṇḍala.

The supreme holder of vajra knowledge, of the common and supremely secret one:
the maṇḍala of the wheel of one's own family
I shall explain all in one place.
In the center of all the maṇḍalas is Vairocana, Lord of Sages, seated on a lion and lotus seat;
he holds supreme awakening.
Akṣobhya rides an elephant;
the Lord of Jewels rides a horse;
the Blessed One Amitāyus

is properly seated on a peacock throne;
the unsurpassed Amoghasiddhi
is properly seated on the lord of garuḍas.
These are declared to be their mounts.
This is the division of all the supreme families.

Akṣobhya's is the earth-pressing gesture;
likewise the Lord of Jewels grants the supreme boon; Amitāyus's grants samādhi;
Amoghasiddhi's grants fearlessness.
Blue, yellow, and likewise red,
and the green color that holds karma;
the lovely family of the Tathāgata is proclaimed white in the color of its body.
Likewise, for the precious vajra,
the vajra is marked with a vajra garland:
arising from the union of the vajra maṇḍala,
the vajra lines are to be drawn properly.
For the noble great lotus family,
the lotus is marked with a lotus garland:
arising from the union of the lotus maṇḍala,
the lines are to be laid with a lotus thread.
For the noble jewel family,
the jewel is marked with a jewel garland:
arising from the union of the jewel maṇḍala,
the jewel lines are utterly beautiful.
For the karma family the variegated is taught,
and likewise for the supreme buddha family;
yet it is distinguished by the vajra.
Of the one arising from the union of the vajra maṇḍala,
the vajra is in the eastern quarter,
in the south is the jewel maṇḍala,
in the west the lotus is properly taught,
and in the north karma is properly joined.
All the vajra bearers are frowning;
the host of the jewel is proclaimed;
the great lotus is tamed and peaceful;

the holders of karma are fierce and peaceful.
On the wheel of the great maṇḍala
the great wheel is to be drawn properly.
Then the outer wheel and the rest:
this whole rite is like that.

Here ends the seventh section, called the Secret, from the King of All Maṇḍalas, the Great Maṇḍala of the Great Secret, the Supreme Secret. What arises from the yoga of karma is complete.

Having completed the inner maṇḍala,
one should fill it with colored powders.
All of the lines and the drawings are to be filled entirely with every color.
From the first to the last,
draw the outer maṇḍala all around.
Even, with equal portions all around,
lay it out as a square,
with four corners and four doors, beautified by four archways,
properly endowed with eight pillars, pleasing and well divided,
properly endowed with four lines,
and adorned with silk and garlands.
With a thread of vajra jewels lay the lines of the outer maṇḍala.
Surround it entirely with a rim, beautified with a vajra rim,
pervaded by tendrils of half-moons,
endowed with clusters of vajra garlands,
decorated with nets and half-nets,
beautified by half-moons,
properly endowed with nets of bells,
and adorned with manifold colors.
On the line between that and the center draw the bodhisattvas properly:
the thousand of the Fortunate Eon,
the great ones of miraculous power who have gone before.

In the east all are marked with vajras;
in the south they hold jewel emblems;
in the west lotus, vajra and the rest;
in the north they hold karma vajras.
Whatever gods there are of great miraculous power,
draw them properly on the outer line.
The great gods, Rudra and the others,
have half their bodies emerging from the band.
Maheśvara, the great Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Sanatkumāra,
the kings with their families and hosts:
draw them properly in the eastern maṇḍala.
He of the Coiled Light, Caṇḍa, Piṅgala and Vajrapiṅgala, with their families, properly endowed with wheels:
draw them properly in the southern direction.
The Intoxicated One, Mālin, Jaya, Vijaya and the Escorts,
with their families and properly endowed with hosts:
draw them properly in the western part.
The Silk-Clad One, Agni and Vāyu, Vajrabhairava and the others,
below, from the western part,
draw them properly in the northern part.
Likewise, with their hosts and lords,
the mātṛkās, the World-Renowned One,
the chief who sports with the wheel,
the asuras and the others of great miraculous power,
are declared to be of the family of the outer wheel.
Those taught by the ten thousand in the great tantra called the Secret, draw as you wish.
At the corners of the outer maṇḍala
four maṇḍalas are to be drawn.
Endowed with flowers, incense and the rest,
draw the offering goddesses properly.
As you are able to draw,

as is beautiful and fitting,
as your own family is taught,
draw as you wish.

Here ends the eighth section, called the Supremely Beautiful Outer Maṇḍala, from the King of All Maṇḍalas, the Great Maṇḍala called the Secret and the Supreme Secret. The great secret maṇḍala of the tathāgatas is complete in its entirety.

Then, in this secret maṇḍala of all the tathāgatas, there arises this summoning of the entire awakening of the buddhas, namely: the summoning of the awakening mind and of the six perfections; the causing of great skill in means to enter the irreversible ground; the facing toward every aim; the abiding in nirvāṇa; the gathering of the accumulations for great awakening; the not deceiving with regard to the welfare of sentient beings; the not giving rise to a wish for any vehicle other than this Great Vehicle, and the binding to it unchangeably; and the full accomplishment of the great wisdom of the buddhas, which gathers means, wisdom, samādhi, dhāraṇī, conduct and the unsurpassed qualities of the buddhas.

There, at the eastern door, the Vajradhara called Great Vajra Hook is to be set out. In the south the one called Vajra Noose, in the west the one called Vajra Chain, and in the north the great Vajradhara called Vajra Bell are to be set out.

Here ends the great maṇḍala called Entry, from the special declaration of the way of the great bodhisattvas, from the Great Maṇḍala called the Secret, King of All Maṇḍalas. This is the wheel of the Tathāgata.

It brings attainment of the way of the bodhisattvas.
When the maṇḍala has been fully completed, the being of the great supreme samaya should circumambulate it three times.
The secret ones are to be inspected without omission,
and when all are assembled one should rejoice.
If a secret one is missing, it is to be made good,
and any excess is to be cleared away.
Then, as Vajrasattva,
one should quickly employ the great mudrā and recite at one time
the sublime one hundred and eight names.

The vajra goddesses properly dwelling at the corners of the wheel are to be invited.
The buddha stūpas dwelling
in the outer maṇḍala are to be invited.
The door guardians, who dwell
in the middle of the doors, are to be invited.
The great beings dwelling
in the outer maṇḍala are to be invited.
Then at all the doors,
performing the actions of the hook and the rest,
bind the four mudrās properly,
and do so one hundred and eight times.
With the vajra hook summon them all;
with the vajra noose draw them in;
with the vajra chain bind them all;
with the vajra bell make them descend.
This is the action at the doors.
Then, having taken one's seat in the center,
the vajra master, great in austerity, with the mudrā of vajra opening should open all the doors.
Visualizing oneself as the door guardian,
one is to open the doors.
With the mudrā of the vajra threatening finger threaten all the malevolent ones.
When one properly begins the offering,
until its time is complete,
in all of the corners
the incense smoke is to be wafted.
First performing the action at the doors,
then make the offerings properly:
first flowers, trees and so on,
incense and lamps, together with their mudrās.
Before the time of the twilight juncture,
the vajra vase is to be invited.
With the mudrā of the vajra vase invite it as best one can.

A single, very excellent vase,
beautiful, made of the seven precious substances,
or else one mixed with jewels,
is to be filled with vajra perfumed water.
With the mantra of vajra water and the vajra mudrā, the pure water, when one has recited one thousand and eight times, becomes the water of vajra nectar.

The mantra of the vase is oṃ vajra udaka hūṃ. The mantra of the flowers is oṃ vajra puṣpe hūṃ. The mantra of the lamps is oṃ vajra āloke hūṃ. The mantra of the perfume is oṃ vajra gandā hūṃ. The mantra of the incense is oṃ vajra dhūpe hūṃ.

Incense, flowers and the rest,
all are to be joined with their mudrās.
Having taken up the vajra mudrā,
apply them with the vajra mantras.
Beginning at the time of evening, perform the rite of bathing properly.
Anoint the body with perfume and adorn it well with every ornament.
By the mantra of vajra speed and by the mudrā of vajra speed, in going out and in entering,
the vajra yoga is not faulted.
Even if one should step upon the eyebrows, the vajra line drawings and emblems, the host of buddha mudrās and the rest,
or any of the beings,
the vajra yoga is not faulted,
and there will be no regret for it.
By ringing the vajra bell,
even if the rite is deficient or in excess,
it will be accomplished and not be faulted.
If one is equipped with that rite,
there is nothing at all to fear.
Because of the armor of accomplished yoga,

the buddhas do not hold it as a fault.
With the great mudrā of Vajrasattva
one should enter to worship the maṇḍala.
Having entered, in the center of the maṇḍala
the vajras are to be summoned.
Having bound the vajra hook completely,
one summons them with the finger.
That very vajra hook
is declared in the tantra to be the summoning.
Likewise, for the great vajra family,
bind the vajra hook properly.
By the application of the jewel hook the jewels are to be summoned.
The mudrā of the lotus hook is taught for the great lotus family.
With the mudrā of the karma hook summon the great karma family.
Binding the hook of the great vajra, invite all the buddhas.
With the mudrā of the maṇḍala hook invite all the maṇḍalas.
Binding the outer vajra hook, invite the outer vajra family.
With the hook of the auspicious vajra invite the bodhisattvas.
By the application of the hook of supreme awakening invite those of the maṇḍala.
With the mudrā of the jewel hook invite the vajra holders.
With the mudrā of the heart hook invite Vajrapāṇi.
By the application of the vajra hook recite twenty-one times for all.
With the mantra mudrā of the proud manner invite Vairocana properly.
By the application of the buddha hook, likewise, the buddhas themselves.

With the mudrā of the samaya hook invite the samaya beings.
Having performed the application of summoning, recite the one hundred and eight names.
When the hundred and eight names are complete, produce the clouds of offerings properly.
Practice the discipline as it has been taught,
the offering of oneself and the rest:
confession, supplication and offering,
the offering of oneself and the rest.
When one's own duties are complete, properly begin the binding of the mudrās.
By a hundred, or else a thousand,
or a gathering of a hundred hundreds,
having bound the host of mudrās,
the maṇḍalas will be accomplished.
Then, having performed the maṇḍala rite,
for as long as it takes for dawn to break,
for that long bind the mudrās properly:
this surely bestows accomplishments.
Then rising, together with the mudrās,
having come outside the maṇḍala,
threatening all the malevolent ones and the rest,
one should enter to worship the maṇḍala.
Having bathed oneself, the body anointed with perfume,
with ornaments and clothing as befits, wearing exceedingly beautiful garments, garlanded, with a sweet-smelling mouth,
by the application of the vajra dance
one places a flower on the crown of the head, and with the joy of the sporting vajra enters and bows low to the Protector.
With that very passion and attachment,
and with that very mudrā of urging,
all the buddhas, who bestow
all accomplishments, are to be urged:
"Free of faults and permanent, attached with passion to all,

great one worthy of worship, great king, Blessed One, accomplish that very thing for me!"
Then, having bound the mudrā of the supreme samaya according to the rite, the vajra master, having entered,
binds the chain mudrā properly.
Then the vajra master
binds that very vajra hook, and by snapping the fingers above all the buddhas are to be gathered.

The mantra for gathering the buddhas is jaḥ jaḥ jaḥ. At the eastern door, the syllable jaḥ.

Likewise in the south, the syllable hūṃ;
in the west, of the great chain, vaṃ;
in the north, of the causing to descend, aḥ.
For all the vajra maṇḍalas
these actions are properly taught.
When the actions have been completely performed,
then wonders will be seen:
great miraculous displays, great marvels,
hundreds of kinds and tenfold:
these great marvelous miraculous displays will be seen by the vajra master.
All the great beings of accomplishment will come to every maṇḍala.
The vajra bearers and the bodhisattvas, likewise the five families,
the Vajradhātu, the great being,
and the supreme Blessed One will also come.
Vajrasattva and the other children of the buddhas:
the master will see these wonders.
The offerings and the tormas will be complete with the rite as it should be.
Likewise, having seen the miraculous powers and accomplishments,
one is to carry out the maṇḍala.

According to how the wheel is arranged,
according to how the requisites are expended,
and according to how the discipline is practiced,
so will the accomplishments be attained.
The bodhisattvas of great power and the buddhas will truly be seen.
That the great wheel comes in such a way:
this is the supreme wonder.
Just as they are seated,
so one takes hold of the wheel completely,
and one attains the sublime marvel pervaded by excellent wisdom.
All the marvels of the maṇḍala will be seen, bursting forth from the earth;
or else the maṇḍala will be seen abiding in the sky, in the midst of space;
or else an ocean of buddhas,
filled with all the buddhas, will be seen;
or else in all the directions
the bodies of the buddhas will be clearly seen.
In the form of Vajrasattva
the vajra bearer sees himself;
or else as the one called the Five Secret Ones;
or else as the buddha, supreme among the wise;
or else that place of the maṇḍala encompasses the three thousand worlds;
or else Vajrasattva alone is declared the lord of the maṇḍala.
Its night is seen as day,
pervaded entirely by the light of the sun;
or else it is the rising sun,
or else the disc of the moon.
Having seen a pure realm,
one will see the play of the buddhas.
One will see the empowerment of the utterly pure assembly.
These wondrous displays, called the manifold marvels, will be seen.

For the vajra master of great fortune,
the worship of the maṇḍala becomes manifold.
But even when the requisites are gathered, whoever is obscured
will not see such wonders.
Then properly begin another yoga:
having bound all the mudrās,
properly perform the tearing apart of wrongdoing.
These are the manifold marvels:
for some, merely by entering,
accomplishment is beyond doubt;
accomplishment comes in the first watch.
Likewise for some, at midnight;
for a third, at the break of dawn, accomplishment comes;
likewise for some, when the sun has risen, immediately the desired
supreme awakening of a buddha is accomplished.
If the fortunate one should desire liberation,
the first ground is what one desires:
having attained the ground of Utter Joy,
one goes by it to the non-abiding.
Or else one becomes a vidyādhara,
or likewise becomes the vajra itself.
One accomplishes just as one wishes,
and fully takes hold of the awakening of the buddhas.
Even one who commits the five acts of immediate retribution,
and likewise commits every wrongdoing,
when he has done it seven times,
will accomplish the yoga by practice.
He is no longer embodied from the four elements;
he will forever have the form of space;
he will become the dharmadhātu itself.
The vajra command is not otherwise.
For those who practice seven times, wrongdoing becomes virtue itself,
and misdeeds become a mass of merit.

Otherwise there will be no accomplishment:
when one remains without faith,
and when one gives way to doubt,
that yoga will degenerate.
If the awakening mind is not fully embraced,
the prior approach practice will degenerate,
and the discipline will always degenerate.
Such and other obstacles are many;
these forms of pride are to be utterly given up.
One who has not fully taken the vows does not know the way of that yoga;
the vajra master will be unstable,
and there will be no accomplishment.
Therefore, with every effort,
if one is to become a vajra master, learned and having taken the vows,
the awakening mind is to be fully embraced.
When one's life is to be meaningful,
and if one wants a birth that bears fruit, then with every effort
properly begin the great yoga.
Having come to possess the awakening mind,
holding the vows of the knowledge mantra,
then properly begin the yoga:
the awakening of the buddhas will be accomplished.

Again it was asked:
"In order to accomplish the tantra of the knowledge mantras,
how should the vows be taken?
How should the samaya be guarded?
What is a degeneration of the samaya?"

For the sake of the welfare of all sentient beings, having properly generated the awakening mind,
one should not wish for another vehicle;
then properly begin the yoga.
Whatever maṇḍala one may be in,
go before the master,

bow at his feet and say:
"Great Joy, you are my teacher;
master, please consider me.
Great Protector, you who show the way of the bodhisattvas,
I request of you:

Please grant me that very samaya;
grant me the vows as well.
Lord, grant me the vows."

The master should examine him closely and question him in every way.
Whoever is a fit vessel
for the samaya to be declared, him he should admit.
Not because one is a son or a disciple:
it should be given to one who is a vessel.
If one knows him to be a vessel,
one should give even life and all one owns.

First he is brought into the maṇḍala,
and having been admitted according to the rite,
then, with palms joined holding flowers, bowing the body, with great joy,
he should make confession and supplication,
and rejoice in every way.
As taught in the secret lord of tantras,
he should dedicate fully, together with offerings.
Bowing in all the directions,
he should take the great vow.
Of the master he should earnestly request:
"Lord, grant me the vows.
All you buddhas without exception, suns among sages,
please consider me.
I, who am called such-and-such,
abiding under the master's authority,
shall enter the great secret, arisen from the play of the buddhas, endowed with the wealth of the irreversible wheel,
the supreme city of great liberation.

Into all the lofty secret families, great master, please admit me.
The empowerment of irreversibility,
O greatly fortunate one, grant to me.
Sealed with all the major marks, perfectly endowed with the minor marks,
the lovely body of a buddha,
great master, grant to me.
The great and marvelous empowerment,
so that, to act for the welfare of all sentient beings,
I may always become a master,
great master, grant to me.
The wheel arisen from the secret family,
together with the vajra family,
perfectly complete with its porticoes:
let it be known that I have become a master.
I myself, utterly pacified, shall take up the awakening mind,
and into the wheel of the secret
I shall enter, together with the vows."

Then the master should speak thus:
"Great secret, pure family:
do you, great being, wish to uphold the secret fully?"
And he should reply, "I do wish it."

Again the master should speak thus:
"Go for refuge to the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha, the Three Jewels.
This is the firm samaya
of the pure buddha family.
The vajra, the bell and the mudrā as well,
O great-minded one, you should take up.
The awakening mind is the vajra;
wisdom is said to be the bell.
The master, too, should be taken up:
the guru is equal to all the buddhas.

This is declared to be the vow and samaya of the pure vajra family.
In the great supreme jewel family,
three times by day and by night,
always give the four kinds of giving:
material things, fearlessness, Dharma and love.
The three vehicles, outer and secret,
the true Dharma, you should uphold.
This is declared to be the samaya and vow of the pure lotus family.
In the great supreme karma family,
one should properly take up possession of all the vows,
and perform acts of offering as far as one can.
The other fourteen, apart from these,
are taught to be defeats.
They are not to be given up or cast aside;
they are called root downfalls.
Three times by day and by night,
one should recite them every day.
When a yogin lets them degenerate,
it becomes a grave offense.

You should not kill living beings,
nor take what is not given.
Do not engage in sexual misconduct,
and do not speak falsely.
Alcohol, the root of all ruin,
should be completely avoided.
Except for the sake of taming beings,
avoid all that should not be done.
Rely on the holy ones,
and honor and serve the yogins.
The three kinds of bodily action,
the four kinds of speech,
and the three kinds of mind,
guard as far as you are able.

Do not desire the lesser vehicle;
do not turn your back on the welfare of beings.
Do not abandon saṃsāra,
and never be attached to nirvāṇa.
Gods, asuras and guhyakas
you should not despise, and you should not step over mudrās, mounts, weapons or emblems.
These are taught to be the samayas;
you should always guard them.
The concordant vows are taught at length
in the secret tantra."

He in turn should declare:
"Master, listen to me here.
As the Lord has commanded,
so I wish to act.
Just as the protectors of the three times made themselves certain of awakening, so I shall generate
the unsurpassed and holy awakening mind.
In the vow of the yoga of the buddhas,
the three moral disciplines:
the discipline of training,
the gathering of virtuous dharmas,
and acting for the welfare of beings,
I shall firmly uphold.
The Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha,
the unsurpassed Three Jewels,
from this day onward I shall uphold.
In the great supreme vajra family,
the vajra, the bell and the mudrā as well
I shall properly take up;
the master, too, I shall take up.
For the pleasing samaya
of the great supreme jewel family, every day, at the six times,

I shall give the four kinds of giving.
In the great pure lotus family, arisen from great awakening,
the three vehicles, outer, inner and secret,
the holy Dharma, I shall uphold.
In the great supreme karma family,
I shall properly take up
possession of all the vows,
and perform acts of offering as far as I can.
Having generated the unsurpassed and holy awakening mind,
for the sake of all sentient beings
I take up the vows without exception.
Those not freed I shall free;
those not ferried across I shall ferry across;
those not relieved I shall relieve,
and I shall set beings in nirvāṇa."

Then the vajra master
should confer the empowerment according to the rite.
The vajra master's empowerment is taught in the secret tantra.
When one always practices
by a rite such as this,
one will become a master, a great Vajradhara;
of this there is no doubt.

The rite of the vajra master is complete.

Next, the act of admitting the disciple
I shall properly explain.
The vajra master should admit the disciple into the great secret as is fitting.
Examining whether he is a vessel or not is not to be done by the great being.

For merely by seeing this buddhahood is held to be accomplished.
Even if he is not a vessel,

admission should be granted to him.
Or else, whoever comes seeking the goal,
for him, as is comfortable,
or whoever simply comes to be present,
the wise one should grant admission.
Because merely by seeing it everything is accomplished, without doubt.
But for whoever is merely present,
the rites are not to be performed:
only admission should be granted,
and not all the procedures are to be done.
If he is joyful and endowed with faith,
one should examine whether he is a fit vessel;
when he has first gone for refuge to the three,
admission should be granted to him.

The great mudrā of Vajrasattva
should be given to the vajra disciple.
As the great being Vajrasattva applies it,
one should ask, "Who are you?"
With his eyes covered by a cloth of white and red,
by the mudrā of vajra entry
the vajra disciple should be admitted.

Then the rite of the doors is performed.
First, with Vajra Hook,
one should draw him in with the vajra hook,
and utter the syllable jaḥ.
vajra aṃkuśa jaḥ
Having drawn him in with the vajra hook,
one should lead him in with Vajra Noose, applying it at the southern door,
and utter the syllable hūṃ.
hūṃ vajra pāśa hūṃ
Having led him in with Vajra Noose, one should bind him with the one who holds the chain;
having bound him at the western door,

one should utter the syllable vaṃ.
vajra sphoṭa vaṃ
Draw him in properly with Vajra Hook, lead him in with Vajra Noose, bind him with Vajra Chain,
and with Vajra Bell bring about the descent.
vajra ghaṇḍe aḥ
With the mudrā of vajra entry
he should be led in to worship the maṇḍala.
With the great samaya mudrā
bring down the vajra wisdom.
samaya stvaṃ
With the great samaya mudrā
the vajra mantra should be urged on.
By the great samaya being the wisdom of the buddhas should be brought down.
samaya hūṃ

Then, with the offerings and their mudrās, the hosts of incense, flowers and the rest,
all the mudrās should be performed
and the vajra mantra urged on.
Then, according to the rite,
the vajra disciple should be bound by oath.
vajra udka
Conferring empowerment with a vajra name, one should empower him as one wishes.
vajra abhiṣeka
Then the unsurpassed vajra wisdom:
the descent is then given to him.
vajra āveśa a a
Ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, sixty, seventy, eighty, ninety, a hundred.
With the vajra, by means of this mantra,
bring about the descent in every respect.
Then the face covering should be untied:
the unsurpassed vajra eye.
vajra akṣa

"Fortunate one of the vajra family, look upon the maṇḍala!" it should be said.
vajra pāśya ho
Then, with the excellent vase, the vajra master empowers him;
merely by its excellent name
one is freed from all evils.
oṃ vajra abhiṣiñca
The vessel should be properly examined and his wisdom thoroughly purified.
If he is known to be a fit vessel,
one should rejoice in making the distinctions.
he vajra nāma
Rite, ten. Holding, twenty. Water, thirty. Vajra, forty. Jewel, fifty. Clapping, sixty. Joined palms, seventy. Hāsa, eighty. Purity, ninety. Sattva, a hundred. Buddha, a thousand. Karma, two thousand. Form, three thousand. Yoga, four thousand. Holding, five thousand. Form, six thousand. Color, seven thousand. Shape, eight thousand. Sign, nine thousand. Words, a hundred thousand.
When a hundred thousand of the syllable a have been completed, one is perfectly endowed with the characteristics of the wheel.
This is another domain of the secret;
next I shall explain the rites.

The rite of the disciple and the samaya of the name are complete.

Great being of pure wisdom,
next I shall explain the secret,
by all of whose rites
the great wheel becomes firm.
The buddha-being, being itself, perfectly endowed with the characteristics of the grounds,
the nature of the secret pledge,
the pure mind of the tathāgatas,
vajra body, speech and mind,
pure wisdom of great miraculous power:
having taken hold of the vajra mind,
examine the characteristics properly.
The yoga endowed with the meaning of the minor marks:

examine the characteristics one after another.
By union in accord with the vajra mind,
pure wisdom is properly grasped.
The Supreme Secret, holy and supreme,
the abiding of wisdom, is fully explained.
Then, by holy wisdom,
one should be led into what transcends the world.
Endowed with the great characteristics, rely properly on the ground of realization.
The supreme domain of yogins,
the vajra Dharma, is delightful.
By what are called dissolution and the dharmakāya, threatening, and the fivefold light ray, lightning, and the moon in water,
the wisdom of the buddhas is properly attained.
By the excellent moon in water
the disk of the moon should be abandoned.
Perfectly endowed with five suns,
the family dharma called the star,
which destroys the harm of the afflictions:
how wonderful, it is taught as the great secret!
What is called the secret is the arising of vajra light;
further, it is held to be the half moon.
The maṇḍala of the messengers, the khaṭvāṅga, arises from the union of binding, love and the three.
The blazing hook,
and the host of Caṇḍa and the Vajra Bearer:
the transformation of the seat of conceptual thought is held to be the great vajra that brings attainment.
By the lowest of what is highest of all,
that partial one should be abandoned.

The Supreme Secret is complete.

Then, from this great wheel of play, which is the supreme secret and vast, whose domain is beyond conception, profound, vast in its manner and wise, which teaches the host of rites within the domain beyond conception, which is pervaded by the array of great joy, and which is the source of the treasury of the Dharma of the full and perfect awakening of all the tathāgatas and the rest, there comes forth what is called the Supreme Tantra of the Great Mudrā:

The supreme and vast secret teaches inconceivable rites.
In the great wheel of play
one should hold the treasury of the Dharma.

First of all, the host of rites shall be taught, namely hūṃ.
The method of application for grasping the maṇḍala of the wheel: one utters the syllable hūṃ.
By this, too, one becomes a king,
and the queens of mudrā become a hundred.

The second is entry into the mode of the wheel of the Dharma of the full and perfect awakening of great awakening.

Namely hūṃ.
By this, the syllable hūṃ,
which is called the mudrā, becomes firm.
By the application of the great mudrā
the queens of mudrā are of a thousand kinds.
The third: the thousands of mudrās become hosts of hundreds.
By the syllable hūṃ of entering the wheel of the buddhas it becomes firm.
hūṃ
The divisions of the fourth yoga here become a million.
In what is called the wheel of knowledge,
all the queens of mudrā, together with hūṃ:
as many mudrās of the wheel as there are,
their servants become ten million.
The trident and the other weapons are always the king of mudrās. hūṃ

Then the host of mantras arises:
ṭag, ten. maṭ, twenty. phaṭ, thirty. raṭ, forty. baṭ, fifty. riṭ, sixty. khaṭ, seventy. vaṭ, eighty. taṭ, ninety. taṭ, a hundred.
ka ta is a thousand times.
ta and what is called va,

and ḍa, become ten kinds.
The syllable ḍa is applied three times;
the syllable a, too, is of four kinds;
the syllable ba is of five kinds;
the syllable a is applied six times;
ka is properly applied seven times;
the syllable dha is applied eight times;
the syllable śa becomes half.
khiṭ becomes a hundred thousand.
From the hundred thousand the yogin should extract the tantra of mudrās.

From the Vajraśikhara, the very secret yoga, the great king of rites of the secret of all the tathāgatas, the supreme of the great secret assembly, the sixth of the great secret yoga that gathers all the rites, the second chapter, called "Entering the Vast Mode of Awakening," is complete.

The Supreme Secret of all the vidyādharas is also complete.

Then, from this vast mode of the bodhisattvas, there arises, at the beginning of the great maṇḍala, the wisdom from which the mudrās and the secondary mudrās arise:

When one has become a vajra master and a vajra disciple, one binds the mudrā and the secondary mudrā,
because this is the abode of the vajra holders.
When one binds Vajrasattva,
one binds the vajra fist tightly.
When one binds Vajrarāja,
one thoroughly binds Vajrayakṣa.
When one binds Vajrarāga,
one thoroughly binds Vajrarākṣasa.
When one binds Vajrasādhu,
one thoroughly binds Vajrakarma.
When one binds Vajraratna,
one thoroughly binds Vajrabhāṣa.
When one binds Vajratejas,
one thoroughly binds Vajrahetu.

When one binds Vajraketu,
one thoroughly binds Vajratīkṣṇa.
When one binds Vajrahāsa,
one thoroughly binds Vajradharma.
By an application such as this,
properly join the mudrā's counterpart.
By the mudrā and the secondary mudrā
the vajra mudrā becomes firm.

How are the mudrās of offering?
Having drawn in with the vajra hook, delight with the vajra arrow.
Having loosed the vajra arrow, accomplish with the vajra fist.
Having released the mudrā as is proper,
then perform the binding.
By this rite of offering the vajra maṇḍala is worshiped.
Likewise, dance with the left hand,
and having bound a fist with the right, circle it around the forehead and set it before the mouth.
Laugh with the laughter of the vajra sun, remaining even, slightly open.
With the stainless gleam of the sword
one should sing the vajra song.
The finger of the vajra wrathful one:
accomplish it well, raising it properly.
Then, at the crown and at the mouth,
when one performs the rite and worships the maṇḍala,
through the application of the family deity,
by accomplishing it well, speech is accomplished.
First, oneself as Vajrasattva;
then likewise examine the deity itself.
By this application of the observance
one should accomplish the family deity.

Of how many kinds is the wheel declared to be?
As the family is, so is the wheel;
as it is set out, so it becomes,
just as it was spoken, according to the intent.
In brief, it is of five kinds:
vajra, jewel, and likewise dharma, lotus, and the variegated, well taught,
and likewise buddha, the secret yoga:
the wheel is explained as being of five kinds.
Of how many kinds is the secret?
The secret is declared to be of five kinds;
in extended terms, of many kinds:
buddha, vajra, jewel,
dharma and karma, of great renown.
Of how many kinds are the rites declared to be?
In brief, they are held to be of three kinds:
in the rites of pacifying, increasing and fierce sorcery,
arising from vajra union;
unsurpassed vajra union,
immeasurable and countless:
just as the dispositions of those to be trained are,
so are the arisings of vajra union.
How is it declared in the root tantra?
That which possesses the five secrets is called the root tantra:
empowerment and the great mudrā,
the family maṇḍala, and the arising of yoga.
Just as it arose from the secret family, whoever first sees the nature of reality,
endowed with attention,
the great method of the perfect buddhas, should likewise examine the secret thoroughly.
By this, always know thatness.
How does vajra wisdom come about?
As, by meditating, the Vajra Bearer knows that very full union,
then the mind whose nature is wisdom,

that very wisdom, becomes firm.
How is the Supreme Secret described?
That which possesses the five kinds of mudrā is proclaimed the Supreme Secret.
Gather the mudrā and the secondary mudrā:
the offering of the gentle smile.

And what is that itself like?
Teaching the meditation of knowledge, perfectly endowed with the gateways of samādhi, supreme among the retinue of knowledge goddesses,
one always becomes that very thing.

How is the Subtle Vajra declared?
The wise one should contemplate the self:
now, who is it that does not find a self?
The body has the nature of the four elements;
how does it arise from the elements?
Then, through this whole body,
the yogin, starting from the crown of the head down to the soles of the feet, sees impure substances arise.
Or else one should imagine oneself dwelling in the middle of a moon vajra.
Or else, in the middle of the heart,
one should meditate on a moon disk.
Or else, perfectly endowed with two moons, meditate on a vajra in their middle.
Or else, dwelling in the middle of the vajra,
one should firmly radiate the whole body.
Or else, with a body whose nature is vajra,
free of the vajra as a substantial thing, knowing dharmas to be equal to space,
properly take up the vajra yoga.
Placing the tongue against the palate,
one should gaze at the tip of the nose;
by the blissful touch of the subtle vajra
the mind becomes settled in equipoise.

In the blissful touch of the subtle vajra
a sign will always arise.
Radiating that sign,
radiate it fully in all directions.
spharaṇa vajra
If one wishes to radiate the mind,
radiate it fully in all directions;
until it reaches the tip of the nose,
one should draw the mind back in again.
saṃharaṇa vajra
From then on, in equipoise, whatever little one meditates on
is the selflessness of dharmas and of persons, and the abandonment of grasped and grasper.
vajra vajra tiṣṭha vajra Having focused always and firmly on loving-kindness toward sentient beings, by the conduct of radiating the mind
radiate it fully in all directions.
mahā vajra maitri spharṇa
"These beings are caught in every suffering, in the greatest hardship":
by the application of great compassion
radiate it fully in all directions.
mahā kāruṇi spharaṇa
Setting aside nirvāṇa in equanimity, properly undertake the welfare of beings:
"Alas, these beings are hard to tame!"
Radiate it fully in all directions.
mahā upekṣi spharṇa
Since all things are luminous by nature,
they are, from the very beginning, pure in nature;
total affliction is no longer perceived,
and there is neither nirvāṇa nor liberation.
sarva budbha pramoda spharaṇa
In space or in the other directions,
by the application of the subtle vajra,

meditate in perfect equipoise
on the vajra at the heart, the awakening mind.
By the application of the subtle vajra,
in the proper sequence,
one should meditate on the great form of Vajrapāṇi,
the holy nature of reality.
Endowed with all the supreme aspects,
meditate in the form of a buddha.
By the application of the subtle vajra
one should recollect the Buddha.
buddha anusmṛtyā viśa
In the middle of a moon disk
one should meditate on oneself.
In the maṇḍala of one's own heart, meditating on the moon is a marvelous great yoga.
samanta bhadra āveśa
In the middle of the moon disk, oneself in vajra form,
endowed with all the supreme aspects,
Vajrasattva, according to the rite.
vajra satva
Oneself as Vajrasattva,
endowed with all the supreme aspects,
at the heart, in the middle of the moon,
one should meditate on the moon disk.
vajra satva samādhi jñānāveśa Meditating on oneself in the form of a buddha,
endowed with all the supreme aspects,
at the heart, in the middle of the moon disk, meditate on the sattva.
tathāgato haṃ
The meditation of vajra yoga,
in a hundred and ten kinds,
is explained at length, as appropriate,
in the secret tantra.

The Subtle Vajra is complete.

How do worldly people wish it?
The vajra form where treasure lies one should meditate on at the heart.
If one also meditates on the place in the ground,
the treasures will be clearly seen.
vajra nidhi
The vajra form of the great jewel one should meditate on in the sky;
where it is seen to fall,
one should know there is treasure.
ratna nidhi
On the tongue, the form of a lotus one should meditate on in perfect equipoise;
having fixed it with the words "it is there,"
the vajra tongue itself will speak.
dharma nidhi
Through the great yoga, the whole body
one should meditate on in vajra form;
where it comes down everywhere and falls, there treasure is shown to be.
karma nidhi

The knowledge of treasures is complete.

This is the arising of the vajra descent.
Meditating on water as having the nature of vajra form,
by the force of the vajra
one should walk upon the water.
vajra jala
In whatever form one wishes, Vajrasattva and the others, as desired,
one should meditate on oneself,
and one will obtain the very form desired.
vajra rūpa
All dharmas are equal to space:
"I am space," one says of oneself.
One should meditate on that very purity,
and one will become invisible.
vajra ākāśa

Sitting on a vajra ladder,
if one meditates on climbing it,
as far as the place one climbs to,
that far one will travel through the sky.
vajra mahaṃ

The knowledge of invisibility, of traveling through the sky, of walking upon water, and of the desired form is complete.

Sitting upon the form of a moon,
meditate on Vajrasattva;
if one meditates on Vajrapāṇi,
one will become a vajra vidyādhara.
vajra dhara
Sitting upon the form of a moon,
oneself as Vajraratna,
having meditated fully on the jewel,
one will become a jewel vidyādhara.
ratna dhara
Sitting upon the form of a moon,
oneself as a vajra holder,
meditate on the hands as lotuses;
one will become a lotus vidyādhara.
padma dhara
Sitting upon the form of a moon,
firmly established as Vajrakarma,
if one meditates on karma in the hands,
one will become a karma vidyādhara.
karma ṅhara

The suchness of the accomplishment of the vidyādharas is complete.

The samādhi of all the mudrās:
having imagined everything as the expanse of space,
for as long as one wishes to be of vajra nature,
for that long, in an instant, one will soar aloft.
vajra
The samādhi of accomplishment:
having imagined everything as the expanse of space,

one obtains the five superknowledges,
and wisdom swiftly becomes self-accomplished.
śuddha śuddha
Everything having the nature of the jewel vajra:
having imagined everything as the expanse of space,
the recollection has been taught;
swiftly one becomes the equal of the jewel holder.
vajra vajra
Everything having the nature of the form of a buddha:
having set one's conviction on the expanse of space,
the samādhi of all the buddhas
serves for the sake of buddhahood itself.
buddha buddha

The supreme accomplishment is complete.

Oneself making the vajra fist,
with eyes opened wide in the delight of passion:
whatever one looks upon with them is likewise seen as the Vajra Bearer.
oṃ vajra dṛṣṭi maṭ
Eyes that are clear and blazing, rolling the eyeballs all around:
this is declared the blazing gaze,
which summons all beings.
dīpta dṛṣṭi aṃkuśa jaḥ
Brows knit in a wrathful frown, utterly crushing, eyes rolling violently in wrath:
relying on the wrathful gaze,
one may destroy even the three worlds.
krodha dṛṣṭi hriḥ
Like Mount Meru and Mount Mandara, an eye that is steady and unblinking is called the loving gaze;
it destroys grahas, fevers and poisons.
dṛḍha tiṣṭa traṃ

The rites of the secret of all the tathāgatas, summoning, bringing under control, inflicting punishment, and full protection, are complete.

There is no other bliss at all.
The vajra master is of great austerity, yet summoning is bliss,
and it surpasses all.
At this time, for the greatly fortunate one,
from performing the great maṇḍala, whatever bliss there is, even without accomplishment, surpasses every bliss.
Even if the bliss of the worlds of gods and humans were gathered together, it could not match a sixteenth part of the bliss of the vajra master.
Or else, whoever obtains accomplishment should be known as buddhahood itself.
What one has realized for oneself,
by what means could others know?
One who has entered the ground and possesses the state of the victors, who bestows the secret accomplishment, whatever bliss he has attained is just as the holder of the secret.
Whoever has entered
this great assembly of the secret should be known to have attained the ground:
an irreversible son of the victors in very nature.
Though one attains the ground of the victors' state,
one does not gain conviction:
up to the eighth ground
one does not give up the Lesser Vehicle.
The sons of the victors who have entered this rite of the great secret and are devoted to the Great Vehicle do gain conviction.
The benefits of the secret
are fully known by the buddhas.
Here are its qualities in brief:
one attains the bliss of the buddhas.

The tantra concerning the qualities is complete.

There is no maker and no producer;
from what are karma and its result taught?
As to what is spoken of as "I":
I am the maker and the producer;
I am Prajāpati, the lord of creatures;
I am the lord of all that is various,
the maker, the producer, the Grandfather (Brahmā).

Again he said:
The pure essence of the tathāgatas
is said to be called the essence of beings.
I am the essence of the tathāgatas;
all sentient beings are equal to me.
Together with nirvāṇa, below the earth, upon it,
and above the earth, this world and its beings,
the abodes of all existences without remainder,
all enter into mind alone.
The mind of all sentient beings is declared to be the maker and the producer.
I am the king, the lord of mind.
Why am I said to be the maker?
As it is taught in another secret text:
I myself arose from myself.
Together with nirvāṇa, below the earth, upon it, and above it,
the three existences and the three worlds:
the mind that is said to abide there,
which has arisen from what does not abide,
the pure essence, the tathāgata,
that very thing, self-arisen, is I.
I am also the Vajra Bearer.
Because all suffering has been abandoned and all faults have been exhausted,
I am the vajra of the awakening mind;
I myself arose from myself.
I myself am also Viṣṇu:
the pure consciousness of suchness,
free of all that is grasped and the rest,
is without self and without affliction;

therefore I am called Viṣṇu.
Likewise I am the Sun.
Why is it said to be so?
I have realized the profound Dharma;
therefore I, the self-arisen,
am declared to be called the Sun.
I am declared to be the Moon: I am said to have realized
all dharmas as peace;
therefore, through great peace,
I am the Moon, of great intelligence.
Likewise I am Yama:
the great wisdom of all dharmas
just as they are is especially taught; whoever has realized that is I, Yama, the one who holds Yama.

Indra:
What is called the undeluded Indra has crossed saṃsāra and reached the far shore;
having gained the wealth of wisdom,
I am Indra, the one who wields power.
Prajāpati:
The aspect of all dharmas that tears out birth by the root fully knows the great suffering;
therefore I am Prajāpati.
I myself am the Grandfather:
having drunk the water of amṛta,
I ferry beings from the ocean of saṃsāra to the great city of liberation;
therefore I alone am the Grandfather.
I am the world of desire:
I fully bring into being the essential body,
the body of perfect enjoyment, and the emanation body.
What is called Mahāloka is the one who teaches the view of the world;

it frees from the terror of existence and thoroughly abandons the great afflictions.
Explained as Bhava:
cutting the noose of existence,
I am the great king of existence.
The one of the three realms:
tantra is declared to be "realm";
it is explained as the awakening mind.
Because I hold the three vehicles,
I am said to be the one of the three realms.
Below the earth:
the great vajra of true suchness is explained as emptiness and as suchness.
Just as the earth is the supreme upholder,
so am I the upholder of the Dharma.
Upon the earth:
upon the earth is declared to be space;
by nature I am like space.
The selflessness of dharmas and of persons:
I am declared to be that "upon the earth."
Agni:
I am from the beginning unborn and without arising;
not self, without self, I am the lord of creatures.
Beings bound by the creeper of existence are tormented;
I am the liberator who clears away the creeper.
Vāyu:
having meditated on signs,
the signless and unconditioned, the awakening mind scatters
the creeper and the noose; thus it is Vāyu.

I am Maheśvara:
I act as the great vajra Lord of Hosts (Gaṇapati).
I am the Buddha; what need to speak of any other lord?
The great nectar, the great city of liberation:
I am the lord, the wielder of power, the great lord.
I am declared to be the observance;

I am declared to be the destroyer of afflictions.
Because I am definitively freed from old age and death, I am declared Brahmā.
In the body of the three worlds,
the noose, aversion and delusion are the three realms, the three worlds.
I become their guardian and their servant;
since they arise from me, I am the three realms.
Ṣaṇmukha:
Buddha, vajra, jewel,
Dharma, karma, and the holder of secrets:
these six kinds are the great wheel.
I am the great supreme Six-Faced One.
Further:
whatever planets, hosts and the like there are,
as to how it is fitting to call them "my very self":
all the grahas and the rest are waves that surge up from the mind.
I am the king who holds the mind;
therefore I am the abode of Bhava.
I am Desire:
the great city whose nature is liberation,
the ultimate intent, is taught by me.
I long for all sentient beings;
therefore I am declared to be Desire.
I am Liberation:
I myself am liberated, and all sentient beings,
each one of them, I also set free.
Therefore I, the self-arisen,
am the king who holds liberation.
I am Hell:
I am neither self nor dharmas;
I am wholly free of attachment and aversion.
Because I teach the path of the deathless,
I am the hell-dweller of hell.
I am a Preta:
what is longed for, I obtain;

I ripen the meditation of sentient beings.
Because I have attained the abode of joy,
I am a preta, born a preta.
I am an Animal, born an animal:
because the river of saṃsāra is hard to cross,
all sentient beings remain within it.
Just as they have become ignorant and benighted, so do I set them free.
Further, I am passion,
because I am attached to the liberation of beings;
aversion, as the one who cuts off existence;
a miser, because I hold the secret treasury;
desire, because I desire sentient beings;
and, as the one who ripens beings, I am a sentient being.
Whoever is the king who holds the secret,
he is my fearsome son.
Therefore, of the great secret
I am the holder of the treasury of Dharma, the holder of the secret of the buddhas' awakening;
therefore I am the Lord of Secrets.
Or else: blessing,
and possessing a face proud and graceful;
joining thā upon that,
it is spoken of as secret.
da ra dha rma da ra is the secret.
I am the holder of the fives upon fives.
Of the Great Peacock and of her who has the treasury
I am declared to be the Lord of Secrets.
She who has veins and skin and breasts,
the Treasury One and the others with hanging bellies,
and he who dances upon the moon:
these are the king of secrets.
He who dances proudly upon the earth,
the vajra dancer, the destroyer of white hair, she of the net, who seizes by the hair, the big-bellied one,
the Treasury One, and she who holds the garment,
she who utters the letter ta, the Moon,

the Supreme, and she of terrifying face, Rāhu, the vajra sound in harmony,
she who bares her fangs, pervaded by intoxication, likewise she who is endowed with true conduct, Mālin, and she who destroys delusion,
she who invites all that is conditioned,
she who has a long-lasting troupe of dancers,
she who moves in the dance of the family,
the Terrifier and the Utter Terrifier,
the one called the Abode of Dance,
the dancer, she who is the vajra dancer,
she who scatters all that is excellent,
the refuge and holder of the five heaps.
With her anklets she crushes the hosts of māras;
with her anklets she makes the lord of thunder tremble;
with her anklets again and again she escorts the great lord;
trembling as she moves, she escorts the steadfast;
hands and waist move in accord;
with those outside the dance she gathers all.
The vajra Sun, the dance of the earth,
likewise na di ki si ri:
this is the secret of the dancer of the great feast;
therefore I am the Lord of Secrets.
hā hā hā thā pā tā pa kā ta sa ra ma ra hūṃ
She of great yoga who invites,
the Devoted One, and another, the Emanator, Hārītī, the Destroyer, she of the bow,
the Heart, the Māra woman, she who roars,
the holder of the drum, and Rudra,
and further she is declared the Vajra Bearer.
She who has the six hosts of neighing horses,
she who destroys the night with masses of light,
who sounds forth the lion's roar,
she who neighs like a horse, Rāhu's lady,
and further she who bathes in the dense secret,
the plundering mistress with manifold cries of "ha ha,"
she of the fair, wide eyes who reveals the secret, and further she who by her effort brings about joy itself,

and further she of wide eyes adorned with blue lotuses,
who destroys the clouds and destroys all the lands,
lion-faced and playful, in due order from above:
such is the retinue, endowed with the sublime.
And further she who proclaims taṃ in the secret mind, and likewise she who step by step brings about goodness itself.
ṭu hūṃ ṭu hūṃ dha ri dha da ri ma hā śri ri śa, or else śri ya ri kaṃ ma ta sa ta kaṃ.
This completes the secret of reality.

Having entered its maṇḍala,
if the yogin delights
in the supreme five qualities of desire,
he will thereby gain accomplishment.
As taught in the Lord of Secret Sūtras,
what is the conduct of sentient beings?
He further said:
The five qualities of desire that are taught are the full accomplishment of the secret.
First, for the Tathāgata family,
one should enjoy them as practice.
What the bhaga is shall be stated:
because it destroys, it is called bhaga.
That wherein afflictions are destroyed:
wisdom destroys the afflictions of the body;
therefore wisdom is called the bhaga.
Then what the sign is shall be stated:
the sign is explained as the mark.
O wise one, wisdom arises from the sign;
the awakening mind is the great means,
and that is proclaimed to be the sign.
Having placed the liṅga in the bhaga,
one should accomplish the accomplishment of the wheel.
Whatever samādhi and dhāraṇī there are,
the wise one should hold the two doors.
That is called "the insertion";

one becomes a great vajra holder.
Next, as taught with hidden intent,
the accomplishing of substances in the bhaga:
as spoken in the Lord of Secret Tantras,
how are these practices to be done?
Having brought forth saffron in the bhaga,
the mark too should be inserted.
Excellent substances will be obtained,
and the four kinds of rite will also be accomplished.
The bhaga is called the lotus;
the mark is explained as the vajra.

Having placed the substance upon the lotus,
one should accomplish it with the vajra churning stick.
One who is passionate, through intense attachment,
thereby fully accomplishes the secret.
How does great accomplishment come about through the union of passionate attachment?
This is fully accomplished by the passionate one;
it is rightly taught as truth itself.
For one free of desire there is no secret;
he will not accomplish the secret.
Whoever, with the great faith of faith, engages in practice with the attachment that arises from the secret union, will accomplish it beyond doubt.
The wrong of being free from attachment:
whoever becomes free of attachment toward the secret while practicing the awakening of the buddhas commits a great sin, a great wrong, utterly reviled by all the buddhas.
In the Dharma there is no wrongdoing;
by it the secret will be fully accomplished.
Of every kind of affliction,
desire is the supreme destroyer.
Desire, aversion and the other afflictions:
there is no dharma equal to their realization.

How is killing all creatures meritorious?
As long as one is bound in saṃsāra, existence will not be exhausted.
This prison of saṃsāra
is to be destroyed by all sentient beings.
Whoever steals the wealth of others
thereby fully accomplishes the secret.
Wealth is explained as saṃsāra;
those sentient beings become afflicted by it.
Whoever steals the wealth of others
fully accomplishes the awakening mind.
One who sports together with women thereby accomplishes the secret.
With whatever goddess of one's own family,
the unsurpassed goddess of knowledge,
through playing together in yoga,
by the play alone one is accomplished.
If one wishes to accomplish the family,
one should even speak false words.
All dharmas are without entity, inexpressible, not the domain of words.
Whatever does not exist bears false words;
the recitation of knowledge mantras is the truth.
If one wishes to accomplish the supreme accomplishment,
one should kill sentient beings and likewise eat them.
"Sentient being" is explained as attachment, attached in every way to name and form.
If, having summoned it, one devours it,
one will gain great merit.
How abandoning saṃsāra becomes contrary to the Dharma:
whoever abandons saṃsāra turns his back on the aims of sentient beings.
The wise one who delights in the lesser vehicle
is always at fault.
If one delights in nirvāṇa,
one turns away from the aims of sentient beings.
The wise one who delights in the lesser vehicle

is always at fault.
The miser accomplishes that family:
his moral discipline becomes pure,
and even for the sake of his life he does not give it up.
One endowed with the observance of knowledge
thereby fully accomplishes the secret.
One who has a fierce mind,
it is held, will thereby be accomplished.
In order to cut off all suffering,
he is ever fierce.
If he abandons sins and hatreds,
he thereby fully accomplishes the secret.
How conduct contrary to the Dharma is the accomplishment of supreme yoga:
one who knows the dharmas of grasped and grasper,
when he comes to abandon them,
always practices the supreme Dharma,
and thereby fully accomplishes the secret.
How yoga is accomplished through intense attachment to the three existences:
one becomes attached to the three existences;
because one realizes them as mind only,
that is the accomplishment of yoga.
Whoever is ever victorious through the passion of desire is firmly accomplishing the great secret.
What is to be desired is desire;
it is called the passion of desire.
It is attachment to supreme joy;
the wise one's understanding is attached to that.
If one drinks a palmful of urine,
one should eat a little excrement.
Through the observance of total purity,
one quickly gains the supreme accomplishment.
Urine is explained as the vajra;
excrement is truly endowed with the lotus.
By touching the dharma of joy,
one then goes to the city of liberation.
The great yogin drinks the bhaga,

and the yoga is fully accomplished.
Whatever is the wisdom of all the buddhas
is proclaimed by the word bhaga.
Whoever drinks the drink of nectar becomes like Vajradhara.
Together with a lovely woman
one should contemplate the great maṇḍala.
The goddess of the family, arisen from yoga,
is the lovely knowledge consort herself.
If one contemplates the secret maṇḍala,
in that very instant one is spontaneously accomplished.
Wrathful, ferocious and fierce,
one belongs to the vajra family.
Whoever is wrathful toward sufferings and hates the karma that arises from union with saṃsāra becomes perfect in vajra yoga.
It is the family that degenerates:
having abandoned all virtue,
one rightly practices what is contrary to the Dharma;
by the yogin who does what is not to be done,
the karma maṇḍala will be accomplished.
Having abandoned all conceptual thought,
one fully engages in virtue.
Being one who looks to the Dharma,
one should never practice what is contrary to the Dharma.
Whatever is not to be done is without entity;
that very thing one makes firm.
Through such great yoga,
one is fully accomplished by the great rite.

This completes the third explanation, called Commentary on the Intent of the Great King of Tantras, from the Vajraśikhara, the yoga of the utmost secret, the great king of realizations of the Supreme Secret of the great secret assembly, the sixth of the Compendium of All Rites.

From the great king of tantras called the Compendium of All Rites, the supreme Dharma of all the tathāgatas, the Supreme Secret, the abode of the secret Dharma, is also complete.

Homage to all the buddhas and bodhisattvas.

Having paid homage again and again to the Thus-Gone Ones of the three times together with their heirs, I shall explain in brief
the supremely marvelous tantra of knowledge.
hūṃ a ja kar dha ra ho dha ra sa oṃ a dra na ha ha he var dhi dha dha dhī ṅhār ṇi ma he to raṃ ka kra ṇaṃ ka ba ce hūṃ baṃ Herein is the secret, the supreme secret, the great nature of sublime wisdom,
the king, the Lord of Secret Sūtras, which gathers up the whole of the Great Vehicle,
the great wise source of the families,
the source of all the buddhas,
and the rite of the vajra empowerment of all:
this most marvelous teaching I shall fully explain.
In the body of essential nature
all the buddhas and vajra bearers arise.
The marvelous great tantra of the Dharma is the supreme teaching of liberation.
From the heart of Vairocana, the Lord of Sages, this tantra came forth.
Samantabhadra, the lord of vajras,
Vajrapāṇi of great radiance, Vajrasattva, the great being,
the sublime Lord of Unfailing Purpose:
the Great Vehicle, the awakening mind,
is called the Pledge of Truth.
The great Sage taught countless thousands of heaps of Dharma.
The great supreme Vajrasattva explained the realization of the Dharma:
the realization of discernment,
likewise complete awakening,
the supreme minor marks made manifest,
and likewise the very attainment of wisdom.
This Dharma of great wisdom is taught as the realization of the buddhas;

it is the realization of the Great Vehicle,
the great way of the utmost secret.
The discernment of one's own mind is the great way of the bodhisattvas, the supreme conduct of the six perfections,
the summation of the Great Vehicle.
The ultimate ground, the great ground,
the ground of buddhahood, unsurpassed:
this is the realization of the Great Vehicle.
Realizing the attainment of wisdom,
the great awakening of the ten practices,
the ten sublime perfections,
the full realization of the ten grounds:
this is the summation of the Great Vehicle.
Great and vast awakening,
supreme omniscience,
the complete awakening of all-knowing wisdom:
this is the summation of the Great Vehicle.
The five aspects of complete awakening,
the unsurpassed wisdom of the buddhas,
the Great Vehicle, supreme among dharmas,
the secret of all the tathāgatas:
the abode of the Dharma is wholly transformed.
Buddha, Dharma, and the supreme assembly.
The maṇḍala of the accumulations is utterly pure,
the same as the expanse of space,
freed from all negative tendencies, freed from all conceptual thought,
wholly purified of the stains of affliction:
first it is seen as the moon.
Loving compassion truly arises,
and one takes all sentient beings into one's care.
The awakening mind, of great purity,
the buddha field without defilement, filled throughout with virtuous dharmas,
decisively destroys all afflictions.
In the center of the great full moon,

awakening is a second moon:
the awakening of three countless eons, arisen from what was truly undertaken, countless supreme sublime dharmas, endowed with the supreme practice of generosity, realizing ground after ground,
wisdom that is pure and without defilement.
In the center of the moon disk is the vajra, utterly firm.
Whatever is the body of all the buddhas, without appearance and without abode,
unborn, unmade and pure,
free of arising and destruction, unburnable, uncuttable, indivisible,
the Dharma body without remainder:
the vajra self truly arises.
The vajra body is unsurpassed.
Body and secret likewise act,
fully realizing every domain of experience.
These five are all held in common,
having the nature of all the buddhas:
the five aspects of complete awakening,
the unsurpassed wisdom of the Dharma.
These five are called the secret,
and they are also spoken as heart mantras.
Because they serve to accomplish every aim,
formerly they brought all aims to accomplishment.
The Blessed One Samantabhadra,
the unsurpassed Vajrakarma,
the Vajradhātu, the lord of steadfastness,
the unsurpassed Vairocana:
these are the secret names;
through them one attains the stage of yoga.
Then the heart mantras:
oṃ citta pra ti bo dhaṃ ka ro mi oṃ bo dhi citta ut pā da yā mi oṃ tiṣṭha bajra oṃ bajra ātma ko haṃ oṃ ya thā sarba ta thā ga tā sta thā a haṃ
Then all the buddhas,

abiding in the heart of the Sage,
the speech of all the tathāgatas, uttered this vajra knowledge mantra:
oṃ sarba ta thā ga ta a bhi saṃ bo dhi dṛ ḍha bajra tiṣṭha
When all the greatly renowned buddhas had uttered this knowledge mantra, Vairocana, the great Sage,
became fully awakened to the wisdom of suchness.
Then all the buddhas
came forth from his own heart.
Having bestowed the great yoga of the four dharmas,
he is empowered by the goddesses.
Truly endowed with the aims of all sentient beings, fulfilling every wish,
truly arisen from speech equal to space,
he is empowered by the great jewel.
Whatever is the wisdom of all the buddhas,
the way of the perfection of wisdom,
omniscience, the great wisdom:
this is bestowed by the great Lokeśvara.
Unfailing in every activity, manifesting in Tuṣita and elsewhere,
the activity of means for taming those to be tamed:
this is blessed by all the buddhas.
Whatever is the secret of all the buddhas,
the awakening mind, the great way,
completely freed from all afflictions:
this is bestowed by the great chief Buddha.
At the very moment of empowerment
the secret name truly arose:
the king, the lord of all the buddhas,
the sublime empowerment, supreme over all.

Then the heart mantra:
oṃ sarba ta thā ga ta e śva jya a bhi ṣe ka hūṃ
Then the great king of buddhas, who had made the Dharma directly manifest, departed from the Densely Arrayed abode together with the buddhas, great and manifold, great beings joined with yoga,

and went to the abode of the vajra lord.
Then, from the body of essential nature, emerging once again, he is emanated.
The buddha of great yogic activity,
following the former ones just as they did,
came to be seated in the center of the vajra.
Just as the buddhas of the past had done,
he displays the deeds of a buddha.
In the wheel of secret play
his body is the supreme body of perfect enjoyment.
Great being who is all the buddhas, great being of manifold yoga,
he comes to abide in all the wheels.
In all the directions and intermediate directions,
following the former ones just as they did,
truly endowed with the play of the buddhas, buddha teachers come to be seated.
In accord with the wisdom of the three times the yoga of the buddhas is declared:
hūṃ bajra sa tva oṃ bajra ratna hrīḥ bajra dharma aḥ bajra karma
The awakening that the Blessed One accomplished three countless eons ago:
I shall make appear the vajra maṇḍala with its four beings of yoga.
Great awakening, supreme in Dharma,
the awakening mind, the great way:
I shall make the nature of Vajrasattva,
and the maṇḍala of the moon appears.
The practice of the perfections that the Blessed One practiced long ago:
through union with Vajraratna,
the maṇḍala of the moon appears.
Realizing the Great Vehicle,
fully realizing the supreme Dharma:

through union with Vajradharma,
the maṇḍala of the moon appears.
Ripening and liberating sentient beings,
fully engaging in the deeds of a buddha,
the great activity endowed with diligence:
the maṇḍala of the moon appears.
The awakening mind, the great secret,
the accumulation of merit, and wisdom,
fully applying the conduct of awakening:
the four kings fully arise.
Whatever is the application of armor,
and likewise the conduct and the realization,
the great awakening of the perfect Buddha:
the four kings arise.
Realization of the essence of awakening,
the empowerment of all the buddhas,
the turning of the wheel of Dharma:
the four kings arise.
Realization of the supreme Dharma,
the doors of samādhi and the dhāraṇīs,
the great means of all the buddhas:
the four kings arise.
The perfect awakening of the great king,
and likewise the realization of the Dharma,
the supreme Dharma and great awakening:
the four kinds fully arise.
Emanated from the heart of the Protector,
the four kings arise.
From all the directions everywhere,
having made the whole earth quake,
in all the directions everywhere
they made all bright with radiant light.
All the great protectors, the buddhas, uttered this inspired utterance:
"How wonderful, the great secret Dharma!
How wonderful, the unsurpassed wisdom!
How wonderful, the wheel of play!

How wonderful, the great marvel of the buddhas!
How wonderful, the great means of the buddhas!
How wonderful, it is wondrous indeed!
Dharmas whose nature is not to appear are here perceived as having appearance." Those great kings of yoga,
illuminating all the directions,
attained the samādhi of the Dharma body,
marvelous, equal to the sky.
In the eastern quarter,
all the buddhas of great renown,
and Vajrasattva, the great king,
were truly emanated into the dharmadhātu.
Having emanated as the Dharma body,
the dharmadhātu becomes dense.
Because he truly arose in the east,
he made himself Akṣobhya.
In the south is Vajraratna,
in the west is Vajradharma,
in the north is Vajrakarma;
they come to be endowed with the Dharma body.
All the buddhas, taught supremely without remainder,
are in the four directions:
Akṣobhya, Vajra, the Lord of Jewels, and the unsurpassed Amoghasiddhi.
The four kings in the four directions come to be seated upon the vajra.
In the four directions and intermediate directions
they were seated, envisaging equality.
The great king of vajra yoga truly gathers all the buddhas:
the essential nature of the steadfast dharmadhātu, gathered so as to pervade all secrets.
In the center is the protector Vairocana,
who confers empowerment on all the buddhas;
having made firm all the buddhas
of the directions and intermediate directions, he is seated.

The victorious lord over all the wicked, Akṣobhya, supreme being among sages,
having made firm all the buddhas,
is truly seated in the eastern direction.
The great king of empowerment,
the supreme being, the Sage of Space,
having made firm all the buddhas,
came to be seated in the southern direction.
The great king who holds the pure Dharma,
the great chief, the holder of the Dharma,
having made firm all the buddhas,
came to be seated in the western direction.
The king who holds the deeds of the buddhas,
the unsurpassed Amoghasiddhi,
having made firm all the buddhas,
came to be seated in the northern direction.
Akṣobhya is Vajrasattva; Ākāśagarbha is Ratnasambhava; Lokeśvara is Amitābha; Vajrakarma is Amoghasiddhi.
Secret, utterly secret, supreme:
whatever is the steadfast dharmadhātu, that itself is the protector Vairocana,
declared to be the lord of all the buddhas.
For all the buddhas in the four directions
the four gifts are fully taught.
Having made firm the six intermediate directions,
Vairocana is truly present.
The buddha of the east, victorious lord, Vajrasattva, the fearless one,
the Sage Akṣobhya, that light,
speaks the four heart mantras:
hūṃ bajra satva jaḥ bajra rā ja ho bajra rā ga sā bajra sā dhu
Those called the pledge beings, likewise Vajrasattva and the rest,
the four fearless beings,
arose from the heart of the Protector:

Vajrapāṇi, supreme and excellent,
holding the Great Vajra Hook,
Vajrarāga, the great māra,
Vajrasādhu, of great miraculous power,
and Vajrarāja: these four,
arisen from the heart of the Sage,
together making the number four,
came to be seated in the order of the wheel.
Vajraratna, of great fortune,
Ratnasambhava, of great renown,
lord of the gods, the Dharma of the buddhas,
speaks the four heart mantras:
oṃ bajra ratna oṃ bajra te jaḥ trāṃ bajra ke tu hā bajra hā sa Vajraratna, of great power, truly endowed with the number four.

Arisen from the King of Jewels,
arisen from the heart of the Sage:
Vajraratna, the precious,
Vajratejas, of great miraculous power,
Vajraketu, seen from far and wide,
Vajrahāsa, of great miraculous power.
And from each one of them
countless kings came forth.
To the right and the left, behind,
and in front of the maṇḍala they are seated.
The pure Dharma, the great wisdom,
the Tathāgata Amitāyus,
through the purity of the perfection of wisdom,
speaks the four heart mantras:
hrīḥ bajra dharma dhṛḥ bajra tīkṣṇa maṃ bajra he tu raṃ bajra bhā ṣa
The four kings of Dharma as well, arisen from the heart of the Protector,
for the benefit of all sentient beings,
came to be seated in the order of the wheel.
Unfailing toward all dharmas,
the supreme master of conduct,

the great king Amoghasiddhi,
speaks the four heart mantras:
kaṃ bajra karma haṃ bajra rakṣa hūṃ bajra yakṣa baṃ bajra muṣṭi
All of them are truly endowed with the wheel, those of supreme and pure wisdom.
The wheel of the emanations of the buddhas is supreme in the Dharma body and the body of perfect enjoyment.
Whatever was the former awakening mind arose as Vajrasattva.
The four means of attracting disciples become Vajraratna.
The pure perfection of wisdom
is endowed with the supreme Vajradharma.
Through skill in means, the wheel is emanated as Vajrakarma.
Then the Dharma, the perfect Buddha, the support of the Dharma body and the body of perfect enjoyment, has arisen, arises, and will arise.
The unsurpassed deeds of the buddhas, holding supremely to the awakening mind,
taming through the pure Dharma,
the great essence of the dharmadhātu,
arose from the Dharma of the Middle Way.
Further, compassion and likewise giving,
truly endowed with wisdom and means:
those four kings of Dharma arose from the heart of Vairocana.
Neither perception nor non-perception, not imputed, without abiding,
not a view of self or of dharmatā,
not arisen from conceptual thought:
in the body of essential nature
the separate appearances truly arose.
Through the body of perfect enjoyment comes such an enjoyment of Dharma as this,
free from all expression, peaceful and subtle, hard to see.

The buddhas hold it in their intent,
and the emanations of the buddhas will be seen.
That itself has the nature of the Great Vehicle,
the supreme nature of the great treasury,
great wisdom and great means,
the summation of the Great Vehicle,
the realization of the wisdom of the buddhas.
What the Blessed One did long ago:
those four beings
are held to be the realization of the Great Vehicle.
From that mind of awakening
the Sage Akṣobhya arose.
That mind, moreover, is fourfold;
the four aspects truly arose.
Whatever is the awakening mind is the vajra;
the vajra is Vajrapāṇi.
Delivering, liberating, and reviving,
the holder of the hook is firmly present.
The being who is taught is unfailing;
that very wisdom is intensely passionate.
In order to teach once more,
it truly arose from Sādhu.
The Protector who brings forth sages, who takes sentient beings into his care,
is called Ratnasambhava;
he too, in turn, is fourfold.
The gift of Dharma is the jewel;
fearlessness truly abides as splendor;
love truly proclaims the banner;
material gifts are truly endowed with laughter.
The king of the perfection of wisdom, Amitāyus, is fourfold:
the discriminating knowledges, fully perfected;
the door of samādhi, possessed of the lotus;
the cutting of suffering, extremely sharp;
the wheel of Dharma, endowed with life.
Another emanation of the buddhas,

the supreme Dharma that cannot be expressed,
is the activity of Amoghasiddhi;
that means too is fourfold.
From taming sentient beings and the like comes Vajrakarma, the great offering.
Not entering into another vehicle is proclaimed as Vajrarakṣa.
Taming the wicked and bringing them to certainty, not turning back, is the fist.

Then the secret names of these are Vajrasattva, Vajrarāja, Vajrarāga, Vajrasādhu, Vajraratna, Vajratejas, Vajraketu, Vajrahāsa, Vajradharma, Vajratīkṣṇa, Vajrahetu, Vajrabhāṣa, Vajrakarma, Vajrarakṣa, Vajrayakṣa, and Vajramuṣṭi. Among them, the first are Vajrasattva, Vajradharma, Vajraratna, and Vajrakarma; then their synonyms are Akṣobhya, Ratnasambhava, Amitābha, and Amoghasiddhi. Then the secret heart mantra of these is hūṃ oṃ ā ha. The heart mantra of the kings is oṃ hūṃ hrī hoḥ. The heart mantra of the sixteen is hūṃ jaḥ ho sā oṃ āṃ tvāṃ ha hrī dhi maṃ raṃ kaṃ haṃ hūṃ baṃ. That which has truly arisen as the sixteen kinds of sublime perfection of this great and utterly secret tantra is the sublime vajra perfection.

Through the power of the conduct of awakening,
one has gone to the far shore of buddhahood itself.
Therefore she who possesses perfection is to be called Sattvavajrī.
The four means of attraction
and the discriminating understandings, fully perfected:
these four dharmas become one,
and that is called Ratnavajrī.
The wisdom of the secret Dharma is itself the supreme perfection; arisen from the great perfection,
it is to be called Dharmavajrī.
That which truly knows the application is to be called Karmavajrī.
The four perfections of the kings are the supreme vajra perfection.
Because she is supreme in playful delight,

Lāsyā is the perfection of generosity.
With adorned body, captivating the mind,
Mālā is the perfection of moral discipline.
Uttering inspired utterances,
Gītā is the perfection of patience.
Swiftly bestowing buddhahood,
Nṛtyā is the perfection of diligence.
Unsullied by the mire of desire,
Puṣpā is the perfection of meditative concentration.
Spreading evenly everywhere,
Dhūpā is the perfection of wisdom.
Scent turns away from nonvirtuous deeds;
skillful means is perfectly endowed with scent.
Illuminating all directions, aspiration is the great light.
What is called the perfection of attainment is the supreme perfection of power.
Destroying the darkness of ignorance,
the goddess is the perfection of primordial wisdom.
Vanquishing all the māras,
the goddess is the invincible perfection.
The great awakening of perfect awakening,
the mode of the vajra perfection,
she who turns the wheel of Dharma,
the supreme intrinsic nature of selfless phenomena:
the vajra goddess has truly arisen,
the supreme vajra perfection.

Then their secret names are Sattvavajrī, Ratnavajrī, Dharmavajrī, Karmavajrī, Vajralāsyā, Vajramālā, Vajragītā, Vajranṛtyā, Vajrapuṣpā, Vajradhūpā, Vajragandhā, Vajrālokā, Vajra Hammer Lady, Vajra Wisdom Lady, Vajrāparājitā, and Karmavajrī.

The great skillful means of all the buddhas operates in four ways.
The great means of summoning sentient beings is explained as Vajra Hook.
Engaging in the conduct of awakening is proclaimed as Vajra Noose.

Having no desire for other vehicles:
that is explained as Vajra Chain.
All phenomena are unborn,
utterly luminous, at peace from the very beginning;
the Vajra Vehicle, the Great Vehicle, is called Vajra Bell.

Then their secret names are Vajra Hook, Vajra Noose, Vajra Chain, and Vajra Bell.

Then the heart mantra of all those wheels of the means of perfection is hūṃ trāṃ hrī ho; that is of the vajra perfections. jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ.

Abiding in the play of the wheel, through this yoga of the buddhas
the Vajra Bearer, enjoyer of the Dharma, becomes the unsurpassed dharmakāya.
The buddha in the center and the four buddhas,
endowed with the five wheels,
all the lords of vajra yoga,
bring about the attainment of yogic samādhi;
and each of them, moreover,
is surrounded by countless vajras.
Arisen from the Dharma and from perfect enjoyment,
it is the great mode of the pure Dharma.

Then their heart mantras are oṃ satva vajrī oṃ ratna vajrī, oṃ dharma vajrī, oṃ karma vajrī, oṃ vajra lāsye, oṃ vajra māle, oṃ vajra gīte, oṃ vajra naṃr rya, oṃ vajra puṣpe, oṃ vajra dhūpe, oṃ vajra gandhe, oṃ vajra āloke, oṃ vajra aṅkuśa, oṃ vajra pāśa, oṃ vajra sphoṭa, oṃ vajra ghaṇḍe. Then the heart mantra common to all of these is hūṃ.

The great protector Vairocana,
the four great wheel-turning monarchs,
the sixteen great beings,
the twelve goddesses of the great secret,
and the four gatekeepers:
they are no fewer than thirty-seven.
The four secret goddesses are the later supreme perfection;

from all the secret goddesses
they truly arose right afterward.
The great-souled bodhisattva should not count them among the thirty-seven.
From the heart of Vairocana
the supreme families of the Dharma truly arose.
Arisen entirely from the mind of awakening,
the great assembly of Akṣobhya and the rest
I declare to be the vajra family:
great-souled Vajrapāṇi.
Arisen entirely from the conduct of generosity,
Ratnasambhava and the rest
I explain to be the jewel family:
great-souled Ratnavajra.
Arisen entirely from the conduct of generosity,
arisen entirely in the pure Dharma, Amitāyus and the rest
are explained as the lotus family:
great-souled Vajradharma.
Arisen entirely from accomplished action,
from Amoghasiddhi and the rest,
that is explained as the action family.
Gaganagañja is the great action.
As the vajra is, so too is the goddess;
as the goddess is, so, relied upon, it is alike.
As it is taught, so it is peaceful;
as it is peaceful, so it has arisen.
Vajrasattva, equal to Akṣobhya, is seated in the eastern direction.
Vajraratna, the supreme jewel,
is seated in the southern direction.
The king, the protector Lokeśvara, is seated in the western direction.
He who is unfailing in all deeds will be seated in the northern direction.
In the center is the protector Vairocana,

the great yoga of omniscient wisdom, peaceful like the full moon,
the unsurpassed vajra wheel.
Because it always goes before, the vajra is endowed with the meaning of the mind of awakening;
from it comes conduct, from it the Dharma,
from it conduct that is hard to practice.
The unsurpassed great being will abide in vajra yoga.
With a single voice all the buddhas made supplication to the Protector; Vajrasattva, Lord of Sages, makes supplication to the Protector:
"Perfect awakening depends on you;
relying on you, the tathāgatas,
all the buddhas together with their heirs,
come into being by relying on you.
The primordial mind is the great yoga,
the mind of awakening, so very hard to find.
Alas, these sentient beings suffer;
they are not vessels for the Buddha's Dharma.
For the sake of all sentient beings,
teach the sublime maṇḍala of the wheel!"
Then King Vajradhara,
the lord of the supreme abode of all,
having heard the words of the Protector,
will teach the application of the wheel:
"I shall explain it properly.
The great wheel, the great city,
arisen from the heart of all the buddhas,
the supreme Dharma of the essence, endowed with yoga,
is the teaching of the buddha vajra.
These sentient beings are not amenable to training."

For the sake of their happiness
I shall explain vajra yoga.
The way of the vajra master's rite,

by which, having practiced yoga oneself as prescribed,
one will attain the awakening of a buddha:
that I shall explain fully first.
If all sentient beings there enter into it with great steadfastness, they will attain the very vajra of a buddha's awakening;
of that there is no doubt.
It comprises the Great Vehicle,
the utterly secret awakening of the buddhas,
and is taught as supreme liberation:
first one should listen to this supreme scripture.
Even if, for hundreds of eons,
one strives at it earnestly,
four kinds of person in the world,
though they practice, will not succeed:
one in whom the mind of awakening has not arisen,
one who is full of doubt,
one who does not act according to the command,
and one without faith: these will not succeed.
Just as those who have gone in the three times did,
having generated the mind set on awakening
and having faith in the Three Jewels, to be free of doubt is supreme.
Householders and those gone forth:
both these sides should practice it.
As is fitting and appropriate,
I shall explain it fully, in order.
Having taken the mind of awakening as one's chief concern,
one should not strive after other gods.
One should have faith in the Three Jewels and strive to be devoted to them.
Give up completely killing, stealing, sexual intercourse, lying, and intoxicants.
Abiding in the vows of a householder,
one should then practice the king of knowledge mantras.
If one has gone forth,
one abides properly in the three vows:

the prātimokṣa, the mind of awakening,
and the vidyādhara vow, which is supreme.
For a month, or else for a year at a time,
or likewise for a single year,
if one desires the supreme accomplishment,
one should first undertake the knowledge observance.
Each day, as much as one is able,
one should perform the rite in three sessions,
or this procedure in four sessions,
as is fitting and appropriate.
One should confess all misdeeds, rejoice in all merit,
make supplication to all the buddhas,
and dedicate that merit to awakening.
Likewise, to all the unsurpassed buddhas of the worlds in the ten directions, making supplication and bowing low,
one should prostrate at their feet in equipoise.
As is taught in the vast scripture, through the application of the four mudrās one should recite the vajra mantras of all the other tantras.

Here the heart mantra is this: oṃ sarva tathāgata pūjopasthānāyā ātmānaṃ niryātayāmi sarva tathāgata vajra satva adhitiṣṭha svamāṃ. oṃ sarva tathāgata pūjā abhiṣekāya ātmanaṃ niryātayāmi sarva tathāgata vajra ratna abhiṣiñca māṃ. oṃ sarva tathāgata pūjā pravartanāya ātmānaṃ niryātayāmi sarva tathāgata vajra dharma pravartaya māṃ. oṃ sarva tathāgata pūjā kermaṇe ātmānaṃ niryātayāmi sarva tathāgata vajra karma kuru māṃ.

Together with the mudrās and endowed with the rite,
I shall explain it correctly.
Joining all the fingers together is declared to be the vajra palms.
Seated in a clean place,
the wise one should prostrate with all the limbs.
Extending the vajra palms,
one should make offering to the Victors.

Having done likewise with the head,
the wise one should prostrate with the forehead.
Having lowered them from the head,
one should likewise prostrate with the mouth.
Likewise, having placed them at the heart,
one should prostrate from the crown of the head.
By this application of the rite
the vajra yogin should prostrate.
Then, abiding again in the rite, endowed with the rite of offering,
with incense, flowers, and lamps, scents, garlands, and ointments,
having recollected the Buddha,
one gives fearlessness to all sentient beings.
Through the application of the four kinds of giving,
the wise one should offer as much as one is able.
Clean, and wearing clean clothes,
together with pure companions,
one should take up the bases of training as the unsurpassed vajra vow.
Through the application of the four kinds of giving,
one should have faith and be fully devoted to them:
the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha,
and the master too, who is the last.
Each day, as much as one is able,
one should perform the four ablutions.
How the yogin is to bathe
I shall explain fully, in order.
Abiding fully in the three vows is said to be the first ablution.
The second, as taught in the tantra, is confession, supplication, and so on.
The binding of mudrās is the third,
and the fourth is water, which is the last.
By this rite of ablution
the wise one should bathe here.
The practitioner should perform the rite of changing clothes three times.

Being well established in the vows is the first change of clothes;
the second is accomplishing the rite;
the third is having a sense of shame and conscience.
These three clean garments are to be changed three times.
Whatever is blameless
may all be eaten and made use of.
Meat, alcohol, garlic, and so on,
which are not to be eaten, should be avoided entirely.
Foul-smelling and impure food and drink should be avoided entirely.
What involves harm to others is not to be done even for the sake of one's body.
Sexual intercourse, together with its seven forms, should be given up by meditating on the unattractive.
Conscientious, learned, and clear-minded, reflecting on the meaning of the Great Vehicle,
on the vast way of the bodhisattvas,
the Perfection of Wisdom and the rest,
reading them and contemplating them,
one should make supplication again and again.
Toward enemies, friends, and those in between,
with an even mind, one should give fearlessness completely.
Speaking pleasantly and truthfully,
one should cultivate loving-kindness, which destroys aversion.
Phenomena and persons are without self,
and conditioned things are mere delusion:
so should the intelligent and steadfast examine.
One should not be deluded about any conditioned thing.
Even for the sake of one's life and living,
one should not abandon the mind of awakening.
The vajra, the bell, and the mudrās should never be abandoned.

Whatever is the mind of awakening, that is the vajra;
the other, called the bell, is wisdom.
One should not despise the master;
the guru is equal to all the buddhas.
One should not be lax in application, and should take up the rite that is taught as one's chief concern.
In practicing the six perfections
one should train in their proper order.
Endowed with the aim of benefiting sentient beings,
one practices the conduct of a bodhisattva.
Even toward a slight fault, though it cost one's life, one should not be indifferent and let it pass.
Whether one is a householder or has gone forth,
one should give up all intimate familiarity.
Even from children and wife one should free oneself from the bonds of existence.
Not greedy, attached, or hostile,
nor deluded or possessed of laziness, with conscientiousness and great diligence one should accomplish the rite of yoga.
Fully liberated from all views,
one sees well by means of reality itself.
Knowing the meaning of the explanation of the virtuous intent,
one will come to realize the meaning.
Knowing the rite, what is fitting and what is not,
highly skilled in the yoga of reality,
loving, endowed with the conduct of awakening, highly skilled in the practices:
by such various ways
and by such a practice,
one attains accomplishment and liberation;
there is no doubt about any accomplishment.
One should give up all excess in dwelling, clothing, and food.
One should not despise the gods,
and should give up all that is not to be done.
Without laziness, every day,
one should perform the rite of protection.

Where there are no obstructors, one should not be afraid;
it is this mind of one's own that is hard to tame.
Regarding beings as father and mother,
and brahmins and monks likewise, pure, disciplined, and peaceful,
restrained, and knowing liberation,
not for kingship, heaven, or enjoyments,
not to increase the enjoyment of sense pleasures,
but rather for the sake of sentient beings,
one who has resolved on perfect awakening should know moderation in food and should wake from sleep at night as well.
Other faults, such as attachment, are not to be entertained by the mind.
Having made the mind utterly clear, unwavering and resolved,
speaking well and discerning fully,
one truly seeks the meaning of the Dharma.
As one would in the actions of fierce rites, one should not injure or harm sentient beings.
Wicked and malicious beings should not be admitted into the maṇḍala.
The bodies of the deities and their hand emblems,
the mounts of the deities,
a woman, the shadow of a deity,
all the signs of the deities,
the various kinds of food,
and signs made into images:
one should not step over them, nor eat them,
and should never tread upon them.
Food connected with the Three Jewels should never be made use of.
Not even the scent of offerings or of a woman should be smelled.
Within the mountains or the forest,
in a place clean, pleasing, and secluded,
or on a riverbank, or in a park,

or in a very pleasing meadow,
or in a clean and delightful temple,
or in a clean and secluded house,
wherever there is no crowd,
with mind focused on the Buddha,
together with pure companions,
having settled in such a place,
taught to be supreme for liberation,
one should properly begin the knowledge observance.
Through the application in four sessions,
one should prostrate to the supreme Protector,
and, meditating on the recollection of the Buddha,
should perform confession and the rest.
One should also make offering as much as one can.
Further, binding the mudrās properly, one emanates all the articles of offering throughout all the directions.
The entire ground, without exception, filled everywhere with jewel trees,
and furnished with supreme things of every kind,
should be offered to the Victors.
Flowering trees and incense, pleasing masses of scent,
and an ocean whose nature is jewels are offered to the Lords of Sages.
Then in all the directions one should imagine clouds of flowers, incense, and so on, pleasing hosts of music,
and clouds of offerings.
These great knowledge mantras, which perform all offerings,
and the mudrās as well,
should be grasped with a fully lucid intention.

oṃ sarva tathāgata puṣpra pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ. oṃ sarva tathāgata vṛkṣa pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ. oṃ sarva tathāgata gandha pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ.

Wherever there are, for the great Victors, flowers, incense, and masses of scent,
one should likewise arrange them properly everywhere,
even the strewn ornaments.
One should train in the great way of the offering mudrās
and in the great mudrā, just as it is taught at length
in the compendium of the Great Vehicle.
In order to protect all sentient beings,
as a cause of great bliss,
and to free them from the three destinies,
one should hold such an intention.
Here, so that the heedlessness of all the gods may be pacified, and the various sufferings of humans brought fully to an end, and likewise, so that those in the assembly who wish for the Lesser Vehicle may be wholly turned toward it, the great-souled vajra yogin should contemplate this:
"By the power of my merit,
may all sentient beings, without exception,
come to possess great bliss,
the supreme gathering of all happiness!
May all sentient beings be happy!
May there be loving-kindness toward all creatures!
May all animals be free of fear!
May all the lower realms be pacified!"
Having contemplated this great bliss,
one should bind the mudrā that rends misdeeds.
Having rent apart all misdeeds,
and likewise all the lower realms,

Recollecting again and again
all the buddhas of all the directions, one should read again and again
the secret sūtras without exception.
One should act with a mind that wishes to become, single-mindedly, an irreversible bodhisattva.

One should accomplish the unsurpassed vajra yoga,
the great yoga.
For a month, or else for six months,
for a year, or for some other period,
one should perform the knowledge observance in this way.
Binding all the mudrās properly,
every day, to the buddhas,
one must offer the food offering.
The food offering bestows illumination;
likewise, at the food offering of the knowledge mantra,
one should recollect at all times
Vajrayakṣa, the great wrathful one.
The rite of the application of binding should be made firm with Vajramuṣṭi.
Through the application of the vajra armor one should protect the whole maṇḍala.
By such a rite
one should accomplish the work of yoga.
Having made the protection and set about diligence, generating great strength and enthusiasm,
each day, having examined,
one should contemplate the maṇḍala of the procedure.
With the body colors as they are in the maṇḍala,
as is fitting and appropriate,
the actions, such as summoning,
should all be performed in meditative equipoise.
As much as one can, each day,
through this vajra application,
even one who has committed the five acts of immediate retribution will fully succeed within one year.
In the assembly of the Great Vehicle
he becomes supreme; he becomes Vajrasattva.
In accordance with the rites of the other tantras, together with the sūtras, just as they are,
one should then take up the knowledge observance,
and should not abandon the vows either.
Even for a fault the size of a particle of dust,

one should feel remorse.
One should properly examine the site,
free of thorns and the like:
a mountain or a hermitage,
a temple or a park,
the bank of a river, or a remote pasture,
wherever the area is clean.
Gravel, potsherds, clods,
and stones should be removed.
It should be purified very well,
because the deities take it fully as their own.
If one becomes lax in the application,
one should not be afraid in any way.
All the buddhas, the great kings,
the lords of the Dharma, full of loving intent, possessed of compassion as their very essence:
the buddhas will not hold it against one as a fault.
The site should be purified throughout,
and the maṇḍala, as far as one is able,
should be made a league in breadth,
and not smaller than six cubits.
First one should drive in the pegs and bind with the vajra and the rest.
Then all the requisites should be taken up by the supreme rite.
Here the vajra master himself should accomplish the maṇḍalas.
With ash and so on, according to the time,
the wise one should examine the maṇḍala.
As far as one is able and has the enthusiasm, and as far as one's substances allow,
so should the great yogin do it;
or else one should examine it with the mind.
If the practitioner is a king,
the intelligent one, by another rite,
if he desires the supreme accomplishment,
should purify the maṇḍalas,

furnished with the five colored powders.
Best is one a thousand cubits in size;
or else, on a portion of ground
the size of an earshot, one should snap the lines.
If he does not possess the wealth,
it should be reduced to four cubits in brief, or else made with eight cubits
in all directions.
Of deep blue sapphire, indranīla,
the blue powder should be made.
Ruby, padmarāga, deep red,
is said to be the red powder.
Vajra beak and great beak,
which also possess yellow,
together with pure and clear gold,
should be made to provide the yellow color.
With utterly pure crystal
the white powder should be made.
Because a king possesses great wealth,
these powders have been properly explained.
If he is rich and possessed of wealth,
and is a householder,
the maṇḍala should be a full hundred cubits,
and not made smaller than sixteen.
With powders endowed with scent, mixed with saffron and the like,
furnished with the five colored powders,
the wise one should make the maṇḍala.
For one rich and possessed of wealth,
a merchant or a caravan leader,
or a householder possessed of means,
or if others come gladly,
one should make great powders mixed with jewel dust.
Indigo, orpiment, and the like are furnished as the five colored powders.
Whether the person is of small or great means,

his wealth should be examined,
and the powders applied as is fitting.
The measure explained for a king holds likewise for a householder.
For a merchant and a caravan leader
the cubits are fifty.
If others come gladly,
it is made of twenty cubits.
If one wishes to accomplish siddhi,
it should not be smaller than six cubits.
Whether the materials are many or few,
they should be fully endowed with scent.
Always, with various scents,
one should first purify the ground.
At all four corners of the outer sides of the maṇḍala
the wise one should burn incense, because the vajra bearers come.
Then, at that site of the maṇḍala, with urine purified by mantra
one should always sprinkle it well, because it then becomes vajra in nature.
For six, seven, or eight days,
butter, milk, and rice:
the master should eat the three white substances as food,
or else ordinary food.
If he has endurance, then day and night
he should practice without eating, because food that is the nature of the Dharma will without doubt make him strong.
The supreme maṇḍala, the great king, whatever it is, is to be made by intention.

Beginning on the fifteenth,
it should be completed on the second full moon.
Or else, in the dark fortnight,
one should properly begin on the fourteenth,

carry it through to the fifteenth,
and complete it well.
Or else, beginning on the eighth day,
draw it all by the final full moon.
Or else, beginning on the fourteenth,
draw it properly over two days.
Or else, on the fifteenth,
begin it properly in the morning.
The wise one should draw the maṇḍala
in keeping with the great mode.
From the time one begins until it has been completed,
if one is to go wholly without food,
one should undertake great diligence;
or else one should eat the three white substances,
fragrant and well prepared,
because the Vajradhara of the Victors will then bestow his blessing.
On whatever pure day
is of great merit and auspicious, on that day the vajra master,
of great fortune, should begin the maṇḍala.
Having assumed the sattva cross-legged posture,
he should sit in the central part.
Focusing on all the buddhas,
he should meditate on the recollection of the Buddha.
Holding the mind fully,
having made the body straight, the actions such as confession are all to be done first.
Diligent in the mind of awakening,
through practicing the knowledge observance,
having bowed to the ten directions,
he should generate enthusiasm in himself:
"Today my birth has borne fruit;
my life too has its fruit.
Through the pledge with the buddhas,

today I become their equal in this existence.
With the one-pointed mind of a bodhisattva
I shall become irreversible.
There is no doubt that I shall become one born into the family of the Tathāgatas.
Today is my excellent day;
today my offering is unsurpassed.
Through inviting all the buddhas, today I am supreme among the assembled."
Thus, endowed with joy,
then, seated in the center,
holding a stick of incense in the hand,
he should invite all the buddhas.
With a mind joyful and pleased,
he should speak these words.
Bowing low with all the limbs,
he should make supplication to all the buddhas:
"Buddhas dwelling in all directions without exception,
please consider me.
I, the vajra, am named so-and-so.
I wish to draw the maṇḍala.
Buddhas and all the rest, please come,
and grant me this accomplishment." Having spoken these words,
he should assume the sattva cross-legged posture.
Having entered absorption in the great Dharma,
he should make himself possessed of samādhi.
If he is able, his fortune is great;
or else he should accomplish it with the mind.
In the supreme king of vajra maṇḍalas, whatever the samādhi so called may be,
endowed with the vajra form,
the yogin should enter absorption.
Or else in whichever yoga it may be,
if able, he should enter absorption.
How the mind comes to be placed in equipoise
I shall explain in order.

Just as the Blessed One formerly became a bodhisattva,
in just the same way one oneself should contemplate the meaning of yoga.
One should think that one performs various austerities and vows.
One should imagine the great assembly of buddhas as the trichiliocosm.
The intelligent one should imagine the exhortation,
the unsurpassed exhortation by the buddhas.
Bowing to all the buddhas,
one should receive the command as one wishes.
Without fail, in a moon disc,
one should examine one's own mind closely.
Having properly generated the mind of awakening,
one should visualize a moon in the center.
Then one should visualize one's own wisdom
as a vajra in the center of the moon, and one's own body in the form of a vajra,
the very nature of a buddha's form.
Then, having realized buddhahood,
one should confer empowerment on oneself.
One should view oneself
as all the buddhas, as vajra yoga.
On the summit of Mount Meru, having descended from the Densely Arrayed abode,
and being seated on the vajra seat,
one should perform the magical display of a buddha.
Having brought forth the four sattvas,
one emanates them fully in all directions.
Having made the dharmadhātu firm,
one should set them in the four directions.
In the intermediate directions are all the perfect buddhas;
one blesses oneself properly.
In the four directions there arises
the great maṇḍala of the buddha's wheel.
Together with the wheel of the retinue,

one should view all the maṇḍalas.
Together with the sattvas and the secret goddesses,
one should imagine the gatekeepers.
The pure maṇḍala of the wheel,
the great essence, should be visualized.
One's own wheel is properly established,
endowed with the five wheels.
One meditates on the recollection of the marks of all the buddhas of great means.
Even after rising from samādhi,
one should look with the vajra gaze.
Through the samādhi of Vajrasattva
one should enter absorption once again.
In the center of Vairocana's heart
one should meditate on the mind of awakening.
The form of the moon disc should be taken from the Protector's heart.
In the presence of all the sattvas
one should receive the command in order.
Through the empowerment of all the buddhas
one should confer empowerment on oneself.
By supplicating, one should let them hear:
"I am the supreme maṇḍala of the king."
Through this application of the Dharma, the utterly unsurpassed samādhi,
all the buddhas together with Vajradhara will bestow their blessing.
Even after rising from samādhi,
one should receive the command,
and one should never abandon
oneself as Vajrasattva.
Breaking the cross-legged posture and rising,
one should bow at the feet of one's own guide.
One should view the four directions as filled with an ocean of buddhas.
Having realized the Great Vehicle,
one should speak the vajra words:

"I myself am the Vajra Bearer;
I myself am Vajrasattva;
I am the Buddha, the great king;
I am the Vajra Bearer of great power;
I am the king, lord of yogins;
I am supreme Vajrapāṇi." oṃ vajra satva hūṃ.
This secret mantra of the vajra
should be recited just once.
"I am the chief, the great vajra;
I shall not abandon the blessing."

Everywhere filled with an ocean of buddhas, one is properly established in the fifth by means of the wheel.
Having brandished the vajra with pride,
one should take on the manner of vajra pride.
Then, putting on one's armor once again,
one should confer empowerment on oneself.
With the mudrā of Vajrayakṣa
one should cut off all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the kneading hands
one should utterly crush all the obstructors.
With the vajra pestle itself
one should pound all the obstructors.
With the razor-sharp vajra sword
one should chop up all the obstructors.
With the fierce vajra fang
one should pierce all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the excellent vajra
one should vanquish all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra sword
one should demolish all the obstructors.
With the renowned vajra fang
one should devour all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the Vajra Chain
one should bind all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the Vajra Hook

one should summon all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the Vajra Noose
one should draw in all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the vajra spear
one should pierce all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the falling vajra
one should topple all the obstructors.
In elaborate form, as far as one is able,
one should summon all the bodies.
Thinking, "There are no obstructors at all,"
the mind becomes pure.
One's own mind is said to be Māra;
the obstructors too are one's own mind.
Clear away all conceptual thought:
it is from conceptual thought that obstructors arise.
Taking hold of the mind that is hard to tame,
one should give up the five sense pleasures.
Beginning first with recollection, or else one becomes Vajrasattva.
Having crushed them and cut them off decisively,
one should drive them out with the syllable hūṃ.
With the mudrā of Vajrakarma
one should bind the vajra fence.
Sealing it with the vajra of Hūṃkara,
one surrounds it with the vajra fence.
With the great mudrā of Vajrasattva,
having properly blessed the maṇḍala,
in elaborate form, as far as one is able,
one should bind the supreme fence.
Having applied it decisively to all conceptions,
the mind becomes pure.
The characteristics of the maṇḍala should be grasped by the wise, and one's companions and all else should be guarded without negligence.
Leveled and well plastered,
of the right measure and beautiful,

fragrant and smooth to the touch,
well made and firm,
endowed with sweet scent,
pervaded all over with various colors, avoiding colors that are impure:
so should the Dharma maṇḍala be laid out with lines.
Then it is properly explained.
The supreme maṇḍala is great,
the great secret of all buddhas,
the great secret of all maṇḍalas,
the Vajra Bearer, steadfast among buddhas.
These sentient beings are not yet fit to be trained:
they have not gathered at all the accumulations,
the great ocean of merit and wisdom;
they lack the accumulation of merit and are without longing for the coming of the buddhas.
In order to inspire devotion in those beings,
the great maṇḍala is taught.
One who possesses the coming of the buddhas is admitted to hold the maṇḍala; or else the accumulations of merit
he will see for himself.
Because, together with the accumulations, the enjoyment body and the dharma body are unsurpassed, one should have him hold the coming of the buddhas that arises from the sacred Dharma of the vajra.
If he has gathered the accumulations,
he will first see the buddhas in succession;
abiding in the yoga of the maṇḍala,
he will see all the buddhas.
Without having gathered the accumulations,
and without having seen the buddhas,
he will not even get to hear of it,
let alone enter here first.
For this is the incomparable secret of all the buddhas;
this is the heart of the Great Vehicle,

the unsurpassed wheel of Dharma.
It arose over countless eons,
the supreme perfection of the grounds.
Because one obtains the lofty secret,
one will accomplish the Joyous ground.
If the yogin is diligent,
in this very life he passes into nirvāṇa;
he attains the ground of the Joyous and vajra-hood itself, without doubt.
Or else, merely by seeing it,
he passes into nirvāṇa within sixteen births,
and attains the Joyous ground or else vajra-hood itself.
He makes the sun and moon fall to the earth,
and becomes of the very nature of space.
Even ordinary people will attain buddhahood itself, and not otherwise.
The supreme yoga is unsurpassed;
therefore apply oneself to the great yoga.
If one desires buddhahood itself,
one should not sit idle, but strive with great diligence.
With the measurements just as they have been explained,
following the scripture accordingly,
one should lay out the lines of the outer maṇḍala,
for it is the abode of Vajradhara.
Four-cornered, with four doors,
it should be beautified with four archways;
endowed with four lines,
it is made beautiful by equal proportions.
It is adorned with silk tassels, ornamented with jeweled lattices, furnished with nets of small bells, splendid with the five colors,
richly decked with nets of bells,
beautiful with various yak-tail whisks,
and graced with garlands, whisks, canopies,
and the sun and moon.

All around, on the outer places,
vajra rims are properly set;
everywhere it is furnished with a rim,
but the doors are without a rim.
The pinnacles are of the nature of vajra stone;
others are golden in color,
others red like a lotus,
and others white like crystal.
Of the nature of all the supreme jewels,
the maṇḍala should be drawn beautifully.
Its various forms are supremely beautiful, worshiped by the hosts of vajra goddesses.
It is endowed with doors in two tiers and furnished with various archways, white and clear, and adorned with vajras and with sun and moon.
It is endowed with four petals,
and its four doors are supremely beautiful, lofty, spacious and lovely,
furnished with vajra upon vajra.
The vajra doorkeeper of great fortune,
holding the Vajra Hook in person,
the fierce protector, the yogin,
is stationed at the eastern door.
In the south is the Vajra Noose,
in the west the Vajra Chain.

The Vajra Bell of great fortune is stationed at the northern door.
Whether one is entering or coming out,
one should recite the vajra force:
if one treads upon the drawing, even its lesser lines,
one will not see the samaya itself.
oṃ vajra begākrama hūṃ
At the time that one lays out the lines,
one should recite the vajra line mantra;
then every portion of the ground without exception becomes entirely of the nature of vajra.

oṃ vajra samaya sūtra mātikrama hūṃ
First, on the powdered colors, one should look intently with a blazing gaze.
When one says vajra rāga,
everything becomes of the nature of vajra.
oṃ vajra rāga hūṃ
All the junctions of the sections and the corners of the door recesses
are adorned with vajra jewels.
One should lay out the lines of the outer maṇḍala,
with sides and sections equal,
its sections divided on every side,
and the sections of the maṇḍala distinct.
One should lay out the lines of the wheel maṇḍala.
Entering the tier inside it,
one should draw a wheel like it,
with sections equal all around,
beautified by eight pillars.
In the positions in front of the vajra pillars it is adorned with five maṇḍalas.
In all of the five places
one should set out five wheels.
In the center of the wheel maṇḍala
one should draw and arrange everything all around.
Having gazed with the manner of vajra pride,
one should take up Vajrasattva.
oṃ vajra satva hūṃ
There, in the center of the maṇḍala, one should place the king of buddhas, from whose heart there emerged the dense and steadfast host of secrets:
Vairocana, the great yoga,
who illuminates all directions,
by the mere mention of whose name
one is fully freed from every sin.
The great host of the wheel-turning monarch,

the four sattvas, the great kings,
should be placed in all the directions
by those who hold the vajra force.
In the east is Vajrasattva,
in the south Vajraratna,
in the west the one called Vajradharma, and Vajrakarma is in the north.
The five Vajrasattvas
all wear the crowns of buddhas, are adorned with every ornament,
and are clad in white garments.
Their heart mantras are these:
oṃ sarva yogīśvaraya hrī hūṃ
oṃ vajra satva hūṃ
oṃ vajra ratna hūṃ
oṃ vajra dharma hūṃ
oṃ vajra karma hūṃ
For Vajrasattva, the great vajra:
one should set down the five-pronged one.
For Vajraratna, the jewel;
for the vajra lotus, the lotus;
for Vajrakarma, the vajra;
for Vajratīkṣṇa, the great weapon.
Vairocana's own mudrā
is to hold the wisdom fist.
Endowed with the disk of the moon,
he abides in the midst of light.
All four great beings arose from the Blessed One.
In the four corners of the central wheel,
where there is no wheel,
the four great queens, the goddesses,
should be placed; reflect on their true nature.
Sattvavajrī, Vajradharma, and likewise Ratnavajrī,
and Karmavajrī, the great queen,
should be drawn in the four corners of the maṇḍala.

Sattvavajrī, the bodhisattva lady, is the great and supreme perfection;
the great goddess Vajradharma is the supreme Perfection of Wisdom;
the greatly glorious Ratnavajrī makes a treasure of the accumulation of merit; Vajrakarma, called Sky Treasury, is the supreme perfection of action.
Next, these are their secret names:
the Greatly Glorious Vajra White Lady, Vajra Tārā, and Sky Vajra.
Of all the family maṇḍalas,
they are the unsurpassed supreme secret.
All have the light of the full moon,
and are playful, with proud waists;
like the four aspects of the Victor,
their hands are busy with their own emblems.
With the playful poise of a lion,
having gone forth with vajra force,
in the eastern maṇḍala of Akṣobhya,
in the center of the moon, Akṣobhya, holding the mudrā of the Teacher,
should be properly drawn and placed by the wise.
He holds its directions completely;
he should be properly drawn and placed by the wise.
In all of its directions
one should draw the four samayas:
in front is Vajrapāṇi,
on the right the Vajra Hook, likewise on the left Vajrarāga,
and behind one should properly draw Sādhu.
Adorned with every ornament,
they have the empowerment of the split vajra.
Having gone forth with vajra force,
in the southern jewel maṇḍala,
in the center of the moon, is Ratnasambhava, holding the mudrā of the supreme;

he should be properly drawn and placed by the wise.
In all of its directions
are the four jewel sattvas:
in front is Vajraratna,
on the right Vajratejas,
on the left Vajraketu,
and behind one should properly draw Hāsa.
Adorned with every ornament,
they have the empowerment of the vajra jewel.
Having gone forth with vajra force,
in the western lotus maṇḍala,
holding the wheel of Dharma, Amitābha is seated in the center,
the great being of great wisdom.
In the four directions one should place:
Vajradharma in front,
on the right Vajratīkṣṇa,
on the left Vajracakra,
and Vajrabhāṣa behind.
Having gone forth with vajra force,
in the northern action maṇḍala, holding the mudrā of granting the supreme,
one should place the Sage Amoghasiddhi.
In all of its directions
one should properly draw the great action deities, all around in the four directions, showing their own emblems in their hands:
in front is Vajrakarma,
on the right Vajrarakṣa,
on the left Vajrayakṣa,
and Vajramuṣṭi behind.
Next I shall explain the sixteen emblems and the twenty including the central ones;
the sixteen and the twenty with the central ones
I shall explain in their proper order,
as is fitting and appropriate.
The great five-pronged vajra,

the jewel of Vajraratna,
the great vajra lotus,
and Vajratīkṣṇa: these are the central ones.
For Vajrapāṇi, the great vajra;
likewise the Vajra Hook holds the hook;
for Vajrarāga, the bow itself.

For Vajrasādhu, the double vajra;
for Vajraratna, the great and mighty jewel;
for Vajratejas, the sun; Vajraketu raises a banner;
for Vajrahāsa, great grinning teeth;
for Vajradharma, a great lotus;
for Vajratīkṣṇa, a fine sword;
for Vajrahetu, a great wheel;
for Vajrabhāṣa, the letters;
for the great action, a sharp vajra;
for Vajrarakṣa, armor;
for Vajrayakṣa, great fangs;
for Vajramuṣṭi, the clenched fist.
The hook, the noose, the chain,
and the bell are for the four doorkeepers.
For Sattvavajrī, the great vajra;
likewise for the vajra jewel lady, a gem;
the lotus for Dharmavajrī;
and the sharp vajra for the action lady.
In the four corners one should set out these secret emblems.
In all four corners
outside the great wheel
one should properly draw the vajra goddesses, the four kinds of secret offering: Vajralāsyā, Vajramālā,
likewise Vajragītā herself:
with pride, with garland, with lute,
and with song and dance, the secret goddesses.
In the corners of the outer maṇḍala

one should properly draw the offering goddesses:
flower, incense, likewise scent,
and the lamp in the northwest corner.
In between, beginning with the lamp,
all through the outer maṇḍala,
one should definitely set out the thousand great beings of the Fortunate Eon.
With their signs, as is fitting,
Maitreya and the rest without exception:
one should set out the great beings
according to one's wish.
By this ritual procedure
one should draw and set out everything.
So that all may descend through their own heart mantras,
each has his own heart mantra.
These are the heart mantras:
oṃ vajra pāṇi hūṃ vajra aṃkuśa jaḥ vajra rāga ho vajra sādhu sa
These are the heart mantras of the supreme samaya.
oṃ vajra maṇi oṃ vajra teja a vajra ketu trāṃ vajra hāsa hā vajra padma hrī vajra tikṣṇa dhaṃ vajra hetu maṃ vajra bhāṣa raṃ
These are the heart mantras of the great empowerment beings and wisdom beings.
vajra karma kaṃ vajra rakṣa haṃ vajra yakṣa hūṃ vajra muṣṭi baṃ
These are the heart mantras of the great action beings.
These are the heart mantras for consecration.
Next, the heart mantras of the buddhas are:
vajra hūṃ ratna trāṃ dharma hrīḥ karma ā
Those of the goddesses have already been explained, and likewise those of the doorkeepers.
By this ritual procedure
one should set out the whole maṇḍala.
Next I shall explain the activity of the vajra master.
Everything should be drawn by the vajra yogin whose mind is set on Dharma.
One should bind the mudrā of the sattva taught in the Śrī Paramādya.
Realizing the Great Vehicle,

one should recite it seven times.
Around the wheel of the outer maṇḍala
one should circumambulate seven times.
The wise one should examine everything to see that the wheel maṇḍala is complete.
If anything is lacking or in excess,
one should purify it with vajra force.
Having purified the great wheel,
one should properly take up the yoga of the buddhas.
One should fully perform the act of offering oneself to the Victors.
Then, with every kind of article,
one should make offerings to the maṇḍala.
This is done according to one's means;
even if it is modest, there is no fault.
All the wealth one has, however much,
one should offer in its proper order:
a hundred thousand full vases,
or a thousand, or even a hundred;
a hundred thousand or a thousand lamps,
or else a thousand, or even a hundred;
a hundred thousand vessels of scent and incense,
or else a thousand, or even a hundred.
Camphor and aloeswood, turuṣka, sandalwood and the like,
blended with many and fragrant:
these incenses should be burned.
Vessels of gold or of silver,
or even made of clay, are no fault.
All the articles there are, however many,
should be placed in the maṇḍala.
There, a thousand lamp bowls with brightly blazing lamp wicks, or at the least a single vessel:
even if incomplete, there is no fault.
Silk banners are raised aloft and spread out by the millions, adorned with yak-tail whisks and garlands,

decorated with nets and half nets,
and beautified with half moons.
Various mounts, a hundred,
or even a thousand, are no fault;
even if all are lacking but one,
one should gladly perform the finest music.
Thousands of wholesome foods,
and varieties in an ocean of kinds,
and various snacks as well:
if some are lacking, there is no fault.
All scents and fine garments,
fragrant unguents,
supreme activities beautifully arrayed,
canopies of various kinds,
very pleasing vases
filled with water of various scents, and flowering trees, a hundred,
or even four, will be no fault.

All scents and flowers,
and every delightful incense:
if one has the means,
one should make offerings of every kind.
Just as the practitioner presents
the offerings and the torma,
so will he attain accomplishments and miraculous powers in this very life.
Just as was proclaimed before,
one should set out everything according to the rite.
One should present them to all the buddhas and perform the worship thoroughly.
Then, having bowed to the central wheel of the wheel of the maṇḍala, and sitting with one's knees planted on the ground,
one should properly summon them.
Binding the sattva Vajra Hook,
one should recite the Vajra Hook mantra;

by reciting it twenty-one times,
the tathāgatas come from everywhere.
Then, having bound the doorkeepers,
one should fully recite the syllable jaḥ.
The Vajra Bearer summons them all,
and without doubt they come.
Having bound the Vajra Noose,
one should make them enter, according to the rite.
Having bound the Vajra Chain,
one should keep them always under control.
With the mudrā of the Vajra Bell one should make them descend.
With the mudrā of vajra abiding one should set them all in their places.
One should proclaim praises as best one can,
and then thoroughly perform the worship.
One should apply the mudrās of incense, flowers and so forth to the whole maṇḍala.
Offering oneself, worship, confession, supplication and so on,
and having generated the mind of awakening,
one should properly practice the vows.
With the great mudrā of Vajrasattva
one should confer empowerment on oneself.
One should snap one's fingers and gather all the buddhas.
Having summoned all the buddhas together with their heirs and caused them to enter fully,
one should properly bring down the Vajra Chain.
With the great mudrā of Vajrasattva,
opening it, one should properly bring it down.
The unsurpassed vajra wisdom,
pure wisdom, will arise;
the wisdom of the sattva will descend.
One should properly recite the vajra descent.
If it does not descend,
one should ring the bell with the syllable a.

Even such a vajra master who commits the five acts of immediate retribution will have sublime wisdom arise, and through this he will also see wonders.
A hundred and seven more,
and signs beyond even those will appear.
And any others at all,
if they have great merit and fortune,
will see all the buddhas,
or else bodhisattvas,
or else any vajra holder, or will see them by their radiating light rays.
The sound of thunder roaring haṃ, incense and flowers in between,
hair standing on end and the like will occur.
Then the vajra master,
having come outside the maṇḍala,
endowed with the mudrā of the sattva lady,
should hold a garland with two fingers.
Entering in the manner of a dancer, whirling in the vajra dance,
and fully entering the central wheel,
one should throw the garland.
Wherever the garland falls,
that very one is accomplished in an instant.
Having sat in the sattva cross-legged posture,
if one binds all the mudrās, all accomplishments will certainly be achieved; of this there is no doubt.
Moreover, Vajradhara
will bestow his blessing on him.
Rising up there, the Blessed One, or else Vajradhara,
may tremble or move,
likewise the limbs may contract, or else words may come forth,
or one may even say hūṃ,

and certainly one says, "Excellent!" This miracle of great bliss is wondrous and inconceivable;
the vajra master of great fortune
will see it; of this there is no doubt.
Then, rising, one should recite
the sacred hundred and eight names.
Having bowed down to the Protector, the Sage,
one should ask permission for whatever one wishes:
"Great ascetic, vajra master,
I, who am named such and such,
for the sake of benefiting all sentient beings,
shall bring in the disciples."
Whatever happiness belongs to all the sentient beings of the three realms, moving and unmoving, does not equal even a sixteenth part of that of the vajra master.
The activity of the vajra master is complete.

Next the disciples should be brought in. Into that great king of maṇḍalas, the secret of all the tathāgatas, every realm of sentient beings, all without exception and with none left out, is fit to enter. One should not examine whether or not they are suitable vessels; one should take up eagerness to bring them in. Why is that? Because merely by seeing it, all sentient beings at once become irreversible. Even though they may have much lack of faith, roots of virtue not accumulated, mental continua not fully ripened, and lack of devotion, nevertheless, merely by seeing it, they become so. For this great secret teaches the method of training through the secret of the Dharma maṇḍala of all the tathāgatas, the mode of the wheel, the conduct of the perfections, and the magical displays of the bodhisattvas. Therefore, merely by seeing it, all the lower realms are at once cut off.

The heirs of the Victor are without fear;
the doors to the lower realms are closed,
all are inclined toward liberation,
and they become irreversible.
Having them go for refuge to the Three Jewels,
one should have them generate the mind of awakening.

With the welfare of all sentient beings in mind,
one should also confer the vows.

From then on, killing, taking what is not given, sexual misconduct, lying, grain liquor, brewed liquor, and whatever intoxicates should be given up.

First, these vows
should be given by the wise
according to the wish and inclination of each;
they should not be given against one's will.
If he has faith,
one should give him the vows.
Having established him in the three vows,
one should then show him the maṇḍala.
If he wishes for the supreme accomplishment,
he goes for refuge to the Three Jewels, abides in the five precepts,
and strives supremely for the mind of awakening.
Those sentient beings who are very hard to tame, who do not take up the vows and who are also without faith:
even their entry should not be prevented.
Just as the compassionate buddhas become embodied for them,
so, merely by seeing it,
the vows are accomplished in purity.
Those sentient beings who are wicked by nature,
who are angry and grossly abusive,
or who laugh and mock:
that itself becomes the cause.
Next I shall properly explain the elaborate rite of entry.
As is fitting and appropriate,
one should bring in the vajra disciple.
He should prostrate with the four applications,
and also meditate on the vajra mantra.
According to the rite explained before,
the four prostrations are also to be done.

His upper garment should be red,
and his eyes too should be covered with red.
Having had him put on red cloth,
because it holds the body of the buddhas,
one should have him bind, very clearly,
the great mudrā of Vajrasattva.
The heart mantra is recited once,
and one says samaya staṃ.
With joy, delight and satisfaction,
he takes a garland with two fingers.
With these very heart mantras
the great master should bring him in.
samaya hūṃ
Inside the eastern door
one should properly recite the syllable jaḥ;
in the south, the syllable of the noose, hūṃ;
in the west, the chain, together with baṃ;
in the north, the bell, for awakening:
one should recite the syllable a.
Afterward, with playful music,
having summoned him, one has him bow.
Confession, supplication, worship,
full dedication and rejoicing,
and the offering of himself as well:
one has him do these in their proper order.
"Today I shall without doubt generate the wisdom vajra.
You must not show it contempt, or you will surely be ruined."
Having said this, one has him throw the garland, and one should give him the vajra garland.
Wherever that garland falls, it will be accomplished, without doubt.
oṃ vajra māle
Fully proclaiming the vajra words,
one should now remove the face covering.
One should give him certain confidence, and say, "Look at the maṇḍala!"

"oṃ I am Vajrasattva himself, arisen from the heart of the buddhas.
I shall open the vajra eye.
O, behold the vajra maṇḍala!"
One should give him the samaya itself and bind the mudrā of the sattva lady upon him.
"This crushes your samaya":
one should speak these vajra words.
oṃ udakaṭha
Through this vajra secret mantra Vajrapāṇi protects him.
"If the samaya is impaired,
this fruit will not be obtained.
This is your hell water:
if you transgress the samaya, it burns;
by guarding the samaya, you will succeed.
Drink! Drink the vajra nectar!"
With this heart mantra
of the oath of Vajrasattva, the oath is sworn.
"Vajrasattva himself
has today entered your heart.
If you speak of this way,
in that instant he will tear it open and depart." Whoever does not take the vows, is very hard to tame and without faith,
should be given entry only;
for him the rites are not to be performed.
One who has faith in the Three Jewels, fears wrongdoing and is well restrained,
and is perfect in faith:
to him one should give the samaya.
What, then, is the samaya?
The Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha:
these chief ones should be taken to heart.
Even for the sake of one's life,
one must never abandon the mind of awakening.

One should not disparage the deities,
nor ever the mantras and mudrās.
One should not despise the vajra master:
the guru is equal to all the buddhas.
Mounts, weapons, emblems,
the lesser lines, and the shadows of bodies should not be trodden on carelessly, and should never be eaten.
How I saw it before
should not be told to other beings.
The training in mantras and mudrās
should never be abandoned.
One should not kill sentient beings,
and should not delight in other vehicles.
Of the welfare of sentient beings and of saṃsāra
one should never grow weary.
The practice of the six perfections
should never be abandoned.

What should not be done, always abandon:
this is your pledge (samaya) and your vow.
If he is a supreme and worthy vessel, pledges such as these should be declared to him.
If he is not, one should remain in equanimity, or else let him be at ease, as he wishes.
Through all these applications,
in the compendium of all the maṇḍalas, the supreme pledge of all the tantras should be applied in every case.
By this ritual procedure
the vajra disciple should be brought in.
Through accomplishing Vajradharma
the supreme accomplishment should also be bestowed.
If the Vajra Bearer is himself accomplished,
the wise one should train others as well.
Wisdom having truly arisen in himself,
he should likewise produce it in others.

One who has seen the maṇḍala and knows the rite,
endowed with the pledges and accomplishment,
and endowed with faith as well, will succeed.
Here he becomes a master.
When he has made offerings,
he will succeed without any doubt.
Even one who commits the five acts of immediate retribution
will succeed within seven times.
To the vajra disciple one should say:
"From here you go to no other world.
You are fully freed from all suffering.
Here you become a Vajra Bearer.
Emanating the conduct of the buddhas,
you are born into the family of the tathāgatas.
In the prison that is the abode of saṃsāra
you will never again suffer.
Today your birth bears its fruit;
equal to all the buddhas
you have today become.
Touch your crown to me with reverence.
Your body has crossed beyond the three vehicles;
you will not be born into unfavorable states.
Through the conduct of awakening you are without fault;
you will attain the ground Perfect Joy.
Vajra Bearer, strive!
What others attain in sixteen lifetimes
you will attain in this very life.
Though the heirs of the Victor attain the grounds,
they have not seen the secret maṇḍala.
As you have entered into it,
not so is it with trust in the other vehicles.
In each and every birth
the Vajra Bearer will be diligent in teaching.
At the end of sixteen births at most
he will attain peaceful buddhahood.
The state of the Victors is attained through hardships over two countless eons;

without entering the secret vehicle,
it comes about through sixteen.
He will not be seen by any bhūtas.
The moving and unmoving beings of the three realms and all the hosts of malevolent gods will not overpower the Vajra Bearer.
Fevers, grahas, poisons and mudrās, ḍākinīs and others with terrifying faces, and other beings full of pride will never again overpower you.
Even over a hundred eons
the qualities of the vajra would still be told.
You will see the supreme secret essence;
you will never be afraid."
Bind the mudrā that is the nature of the sattva, and with great diligence make it firm.
What should be said is this,
the unsurpassed descent:
"This pledge vajra
is declared to be called Vajrasattva."
The unsurpassed vajra wisdom:
by that very thing one should make it descend.
vajra āveśa aḥ
Then, as soon as it has descended,
one gains the six superknowledges,
and through sublime wisdom, in an instant,
joy and bliss never known before,
supreme delight and contentment,
and all the knowledges become manifest.
The miraculous powers are brought to perfection.
With these very heart mantras
one then releases the mudrā at the heart.
Vajrasattva, the great king,
will dwell in the heart forever.
oṃ tiṣṭha vajra dṛḍho me bhava śāśvato me bhava hṛdayaṃ me adhitiṣtha sarva siddhi ma me prayaccha hūṃ ha ha ha ha hoḥ
Then, with this heart mantra, the garland should be cast.

pratīccha ho
Wherever the garland falls,
the deity of that place is his family.
In due sequence, the great secret of the maṇḍala should be revealed.
Even by merely seeing the maṇḍala,
the ground of buddhahood is beyond doubt.
Taking the water of the vase,
fragrant and pleasing,
one should empower with this heart mantra,
the supreme washing away of suffering.
oṃ vajra abhiṣiñca
Then, with whichever mudrā is suitable,
one should give the garland and empower.
In the empowerment of the vajra name,
the sound of the name should be properly joined.
oṃ vajrasatva abhiṣiñcami vajranāma abhiṣekata he vajranāma
This is the extensive rite for bringing in the disciple.
The unsurpassed vajra wisdom:
in that wisdom he should be trained.
Whichever of the four it may be should be asked according to his fortune.
If he speaks of the accomplishment of wealth,
it should be explained in four ways.
The four great wisdoms of wealth,
the accomplishments, should be taught.
Where one hopes a treasure lies,
there one sits cross-legged,
and if one meditates on a vajra at the heart,
one will clearly see where the treasure is.
vajranidhi
One should meditate on a vajra in the sky and gaze carefully into a mirror.
Where it is seen to fall,
there, it is shown, a treasure lies.
ratnanidhi

Meditate on a vajra on your own tongue, and you yourself will say, "It is here."
dharmanidhi
Vajrakarma truly descends;
where it descends, there it is shown.

karmanidhi
If he speaks of the vajra accomplishment, the four kinds should be taught.
Seeing water as having the nature of vajra,
one will delight in deep meditative equipoise.
Seeing water as having a solid nature,
one will walk upon the water.
vajra jala
Oneself endowed with samādhi,
one should rejoice again and again.
If one meditates on oneself in a pleasing form,
one will become like it.
vajra rūpa
Oneself equal to the nature of space, meditating on the very absence of intrinsic nature,
if one brings about the vajra descent,
one will quickly become invisible.
vajra ākāśa
If one meditates on a vajra ladder in the sky and climbs upward on it,
as far as the place one climbs to,
so far will one travel through the sky.
vajra mahā
If he says he wishes to be a vidyādhara, the four kinds of wisdom should be given.
Dwelling in the center of a moon disc,
oneself abiding in the sky,
one should meditate fully on oneself
as Vajrapāṇi, holding the vajra in hand.
One will become a vajra vidyādhara.
If one wishes for the Dharma seal,

whether seated or otherwise,
if one meditates on oneself as abiding there,
and, abiding thus, meditates well on a vajra lotus in the hand, oneself as Vajradharma,
one will become a lotus vidyādhara.
vajradhara padmadhara Seated on a moon disc,
oneself fully endowed with action,
oneself abiding in the sky,
one will become an action vidyādhara.
Oneself as Vajraratna,
and likewise oneself abiding there,
if one meditates on jewels in the hand,
one will become a jewel vidyādhara.
karmadhara ratnadhara
If he speaks of the buddha accomplishment,
the four kinds of wisdom should be declared.
If one has meditated constantly in the sky,
the body will become light,
and one will attain the state of miraculous power;
the vajra self swiftly flies up.
vajra ṛdhi
This whole world of a trichiliocosm is shown to be entirely of vajra nature.
As far as the vajra self wishes,
so far will it fly in an instant.
vajra vajra
Pure, of the nature of the dharmadhātu, with limbs endowed with lotuses,
if one meditates well on oneself as pure,
one will attain the five superknowledges.
śuddha śuddha
If, with diligence day and night,
one imagines Vajrasattva dwelling in the expanse of space,
one will oneself become Vajradhara.

If one conceives of all these three realms
as the forms of buddhas, and accomplishes steady recollection of them,
one will become a buddha.
satva satva buddha buddha
When she becomes the secret goddess, she becomes the deity of his family.
The pure wisdom should be declared,
and she should also be made to swear an oath.
As taught in the Lord of Secret Sūtras,
so one should enter the bhaga.
Having caused all to enter by the mind,
one emanates them together with her body.
Emerging from the heart of Akṣobhya
and from the heart of Vairocana,
and having entered her heart,
all the buddhas are emanated together.
Abiding in the yoga of samādhi,
in equipoise, one should clap.
By clapping the vajra palms,
all accomplishments come under one's power.
vajra pāśa
Emerging from the heart of the Jewel Lord
and from the heart of Vairocana,
and having caused all the buddhas to enter,
oneself as the vajra goddess,
forming the vajra palms,
one should clap the palms of the vajra binding.
One should accomplish the vajra yoga
and truly strike the vajra wisdom.
Having performed the vajra descent,
one likewise enters the bhaga.
Forming the vajra palms,
one should clap with the fingertips together.
Desire, aversion and delusion, ever bound up with the afflictions,
the obscurations called afflictions,

of a hundred kinds, are destroyed in an instant.
vajra hana
Likewise, abiding in the bhaga,
one emanates the bodies of the buddhas together.
Oneself as the vajra goddess
abides in the heart of Vairocana.
Having bound the vajra goddess,
one should say vajra vajra twice.
If one then releases the vajra binding,
it is the supreme destroyer of all suffering.
vajra hara
Next, the wisdom mudrā for accomplishing Vairocana:
Just as in the earlier samādhi,
one should fully enact the vajradhātu.
Abiding well in the five yogas as well, even buddhahood is not hard to find.
oṃ citta pratibodhaṃ karomi oṃ bodhicitta utpādayāmi oṃ tiṣṭha vajra oṃ vajra ātmako haṃ oṃ yathā sarva tathāgatā stathā ahaṃ Through these five yogas one truly accomplishes the five mudrās.
Oneself as Vairocana,
one will attain all accomplishments.
These are the mudrās of the perfect awakening of all the tathāgatas.

Seated in the sattva cross-legged posture,
one should hold the vajra, brandishing it.
Through the mudrās of body, speech and mind,
one becomes Vajrasattva oneself.
vajra satvā haṃ
The great and supreme among the practices
I shall now correctly explain.
Proclaiming it oneself with vajra speech,
one should accomplish the vajra yoga.
Brandishing the vajra with pride,
one should truly assume the bearing of vajra pride.
Having oneself become the vajra descent,
one should meditate on oneself as the one called Vajra.

vajrasatvā haṃ
Endowed with all the supreme aspects, revealing the maṇḍala without remainder,
in the form of a garland, radiant, endowed with ornaments, garments and colors:
one should recite ḍa ba ta
and recollect the Great Sattva.
The wisdom sattva is unstained, until one sees the lord of joy.
vajrasatva dṛśya
Having gazed at the sattva before one,
one should truly cause him to descend into oneself.
oṃ vajra satva aḥ
That body, beautiful and great,
one should truly draw in with the Vajra Hook.
jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ
With this vajra mantra
the great-souled one should gaze.
Into the heart of Vajrasattva, one should cause it to enter his heart once more.
samaya aḥ
Having said this, the yogin, abiding upon the moon,
performs whatever acts he wishes,
and should accomplish even buddhahood,
just like this Vajrasattva.
Then, by this application,
one should meditate on all the Vajra Bearers holding their own mudrās.
To whichever one one is devoted,
one should likewise recite that heart mantra.
By this vajra application
one becomes equal to the Vajra Bearer.
Having fully accomplished the recollection of the Buddha,
one should turn the wheel of Dharma.
Holding one's own mudrā,
through accomplishing the mind of Vajrasattva,

one will attain the state of a universal monarch.
With royal acts going before,
one should please and empower.
The sessions are brought to completion,
and there will be the laughter and joy of Dharma.
The wheel of samādhi and dhāraṇī,
the unsurpassed secret treasury,
ripening and liberation itself,
the supreme steadfastness of the buddhas' awakening:
from this great secret rite countless mudrās have truly arisen, fully endowed with the divisions of the families,
and they have been proclaimed at great length.
One who has not donned the armor does not become a vessel.
Those with laziness, anger and distraction are surely unable to hold it;
therefore it has been proclaimed in brief.
The Lord of Sūtras, the Secret King:
then the mudrās are explained.
The realization of the Great Vehicle should be regarded as a precious vessel.
The Realization of Wisdom is complete.

The Essence of the Vajradharas.
That from which the wheel truly arose,
the source of all the yogas,
the supreme secret, I shall explain.
What is explained as the central wheel is proclaimed as the Display, the display of the bodhisattvas,
fully revealing the wheel of means.
It is explained as five wheels,
and the means too are of five kinds.
The divisions of the secret abide there,
revealing the display of the wheel.
The central one is the mind of awakening.
The east is the four ways of gathering.

What is explained as the assembly of the south is endowed with the accumulation of merit.
The samādhis and the dhāraṇīs,
free of grasping at dharmas,
are what is declared for the west.
The north is the ripening of sentient beings.
The four outer corners
are with the four immeasurables:
loving-kindness, compassion, equanimity,
and what is called joy.
What is explained as the measuring cords arose from the path of the stream of Dharma:
this purity of all views is free of the ground of the vehicles.
What is called the rim
is samādhi, the pure nature of reality, explained as the vajra goddesses,
and called the doors of dhāraṇī.
What are explained as the gates are the four doors of liberation.
The archways and the nets are the city whose nature is the treasury of Dharma.
The nets, half-nets and canopies are the display of various miraculous powers.
What is explained as the colored powders is the accumulation of awakening of that kind.
What is explained as the lamps:
there is the supreme light of Dharma.
What is explained as the scents is the unsurpassed scent of renown.
What is the ointment of miraculous power is anointing with the scent of moral discipline.
The various foods
are the unsurpassed food of Dharma.
Joy of various kinds is explained;
all conceptual thought is abandoned.
What is explained as the city is the supreme city of liberation.

What is explained as the maṇḍala is the city whose nature is the essence of Dharma;
it is said to be called "free of sickness,"
and that is called the maṇḍala.
In the center, the one called Vairocana is all dharmas gathered into one:
the Buddha-king, the great chief,
fully illuminating all the directions.
He is explained as Vajrasattva,
the supreme nature of the mind of awakening.
Therefore the king is the mind of awakening.
From the mind of awakening there truly arose Vajrarāja.
The mind is said to be of four kinds:
ferrying across, liberating, giving relief,
and the hook toward nirvāṇa.
It is explained as Vajrarāga:
applying oneself to the conduct of awakening.
It is explained as Vajrasādhu:
revealing thorough application.
It is explained as Vajraratna:
fulfilling the wishes of sentient beings.
It is explained as Vajratejas:
making the application of Dharma shine.
It is explained as Vajraketu:
freeing sentient beings from saṃsāra.
It is explained as Vajrahāsa:
cutting the doubts of sentient beings.
It is explained as Vajradharma:
the unsurpassed wisdom of Dharma.
It is explained as Vajratīkṣṇa:
cutting and destroying the afflictions.
It is explained as Vajrahetu:
revealing the display of the wheel.
It is explained as Vajrabhāṣa:
teaching the vajra Dharma.

It is explained as Vajrakarma:
supreme in taming sentient beings.
It is explained as Vajrarakṣa:
supreme in freeing sentient beings.
It is explained as Vajrayakṣa:
exhausting the noose of saṃsāra.
It is explained as Vajramuṣṭi:
making supreme awakening firm.
Sattvavajrī and Vajradharma,
the vajra ladies of jewel and of action:
the vajra jewel, the great Dharma, arisen from the secret of action.
The vajra goddesses, eight more;
the supreme perfections, the remaining eight.
The Dharma lady is the Perfection of Wisdom;
the action lady is the supreme of means.

The ten sublime perfections
are truly explained as the ten grounds.
One who guards the city of the sublime Dharma is explained as the one called a bodhisattva.
How wonderful the wisdom! How wonderful the Dharma!
How wonderful the supreme city of liberation!
How wonderful the wheel of display taught by the Lords of Sages!
Through this application of Dharma
the Protector establishes beings in liberation.
Where the buddhas have crossed over,
they free sentient beings as well.
This is accomplished as the nature of Dharma;
this is the chariot of the nature of Dharma;
this is the essence of the nature of Dharma;
this is the city of the nature of Dharma.

From the Vajraśekhara, the great secret yoga, the great king of rites of the supremely secret reality, the exposition called the Lord of Secret Sūtras of All the Tathāgatas, the first chapter, is complete.

Unsurpassed among all accomplishments,
the secret I shall now explain.
The vajra vidyādhara
should be applied by oneself.
In accordance with the rite,
I shall explain the binding of the mudrās.
They should be bound as is fitting;
otherwise they will not succeed quickly.
One should bind the joined palms:
first, one should join the palms evenly.
Then one binds the vajra palms,
and should bind the vajra binding.
Having bound the fingers in the vajra binding, reciting the heart mantra, one should tear it open.
Then the mudrās come under one's power;
they will succeed, of this there is no doubt.
vajra bandha traṭ
This should be recited first,
and then the mudrā truly bound.
Before whomever it is bound,
one truly blesses oneself.
mahā samaya satvā haṃ
The wise one should contemplate the descent and cause the sattva to descend upon himself.
Having bound the samaya mudrā,
one should also recite the heart mantra.
a
By merely binding the mudrā,
it fully abides in all the limbs.
The heart mantra that should be recited:
these are the heart mantras.
samayo haṃ
Then, having blessed oneself,
one truly recollects one's own deity.
With these very heart mantras
the heart mantra should be recited.
samaya satva adhitiṣṭha sva māṃ Devoted to accomplishing the mudrās,

the wise one then accomplishes them.
The great samaya sattvas,
of four kinds, should be accomplished.
Here, the secret heart mantras of these are:
artha siddhi vajra siddhi vajra vīrya buddha siddhi
Then, the making firm of the mudrā:
oṃ vajra satva samaya manupālaya vajva satva tveno patiṣṭha dṛḍho me bhava sutoṣyo me bhava supoṣyo me bhava anurakto me bhava sarva siddhi mme prayaccha sarva karma su ca me cittaṃ śreyaḥ kuru hūṃ ha ha ha ha hoḥ bhagavān sarva tathāgato vajra ma me muñca vajrī bhava mahā samaya satva āḥ
Even one who commits the five acts of immediate retribution becomes like Vajrasattva.
All the mudrās will succeed,
and there is no doubt that all will be accomplished.
Next, the releasing of all the mudrās is common to all.
Having bound all the mudrās,
at the end one should empower oneself.
With the fingertips, the great garland,
in four ways, or else in three.
oṃ vajra ratna abhiṣiñca
The wise one should bind on the armor and empower as far as one is able.
With these very heart mantras
all the mudrās should be made firm.
vajra ka pa ce na vaṃ
They are released where they arose:
with these very heart mantras
one should release them in that place;
the act is not performed elsewhere.
oṃ vajra muḥ
One should please the protectors with the palms, and should bind the vajra palms.
With these very heart mantras
one should please all the Vajra Bearers.
vajra tuṣya ho
One should release by this rite;

it is the supreme releasing of the mudrās.
If all the mudrās become firm,
the Vajra Bearer will be pleased.
Every day, in the morning,
well restrained and keeping it secret,
one should recite Vajrasattva as much as one wishes;
by mere recitation one will succeed.
vajrasatva
By reciting the secret syllable hūṃ
one will see the five aspects.
Through the rite of secret application
one will accomplish Vajrasattva.
In the center of a moon disc one should meditate fully on a second moon.
Oneself endowed with the Buddha,
one should meditate in the center of the vajra.
In short, in the center of the vajra one should place the syllable hūṃ.
Through this vajra application
one should accomplish the syllable hūṃ.
hūṃ
Thus, in sixteen ways,
one should meditate well on all the hand emblems.
By placing them well in the center of the moon, oneself accomplishes all in an instant.
Or else, by applying the syllables,
one should accomplish by placing them in the center.
Through the application of the moon
the syllables ja and the rest will not succeed.
By applying well the syllables ho and sa and the syllable oṃ and the rest, on the moon oṃ a traṃ,
one should fully accomplish the syllable haṃ.
hrīḥ and dhīḥ and maṃ paṃ raṃ,
kaṃ haṃ hūṃ vaṃ should be accomplished.
Through these vajra words
one should accomplish by vajra recitation.

Oneself as Vajrasattva,
or by fully applying the sixteen as oneself,
one should accomplish according to the yoga tantra and meditate in the center of the moon.
Next, the rite of the maṇḍala in accordance with reality:
Beginning from sunrise, offering oneself and so forth,
one should make offerings to all the buddhas.
One should beg the Vajra Bearers for forbearance.
One should bind all the mudrās and please them with the vajra palms.
The sublime hundred and eight names,
having done all this, one should recite.
Three times and seven times
one should also circumambulate.
The great mudrā of Vajrasattva
the wise one should tear open.
The great mudrā of Vajrasattva
one binds above, in the center of the wheel.
That by which the mind has been purified:
one truly binds all the mudrās.
oṃ vajra muḥ
Having recited this heart mantra, one binds all the mudrās above.
For the gates and the outer offerings
one should recite the vajra mu.
This secret is the great secret.
The vajra vidyādhara,
the wise one does not teach to all;
one gives it to the supreme one who keeps the vows,
to another who is a truly worthy vessel.
That is the vow of the vidyā:
the vajra in the right hand,
and in the left the bell, should be given.
The vajra vow, the great secret:
this heart mantra should be given.
Having given it, one has him hold it at the heart.

It is the supreme accomplisher of all.

This is that of all the buddhas:
Vajrasattva abiding in the hand.
You too must always hold it, firm in the vow of Vajrapāṇi. oṃ sarva tathāgata siddhi vajra samaya tiṣṭha eṣa tvaṃ dhārayāmi vajrasatva hi hi hi hi hūṃ Then, with all made equal,
one should release the maṇḍala with the mudrā.
vajra satva muḥ
The activities of the vajra master are complete.

Just as it is fully endowed with the rite,
the secret vajra maṇḍala, Vajradhara, the great king,
should likewise be accomplished in every way.
Vajradhara, the great king,
the supreme of all, the sublime lord, spoke the compendium of the yoga tantras,
the supreme secret.
How wonderful! The Buddha, the great protector, appeared in order to practice the conduct:
from the protector of Dharma, the great yoga,
all the tantras truly arose.
There is no buddha and there is no sattva,
no yoga and no accomplishing of yoga,
no grounds and no supreme secret;
and yet they arose for the sake of those to be tamed.
The supreme Buddha and the supreme samaya,
the accomplishment of the supreme sattva,
the supreme secret, the supreme conduct of the sattva:
the vajra yoga truly arose.
Recollecting supreme qualities, supreme among the samayas;
recollecting supreme qualities, the sublime crown ornament;
greatly renowned, holding the supreme conduct;
the supreme conduct of those endowed with supreme qualities.
Great vajra, wholly restrained,

great yoga, practicing the great conduct,
holding the qualities of the great secret, bestowing the true arising of great bliss.
Endowed with recollection of supreme qualities, the supreme diadem, adorned by the arising of the supreme assembly of samayas, unmoving, utterly supreme, granting the supreme, stainless, supreme conduct, supreme of conduct, stainless.
Encircled by hosts, laughing greatly,
destroying the harm-doers, proclaiming traṭa traṭa, laughing and laughing a laughter that makes things tremble, supreme fierce qualities, cala cala pa,
daha daha paya, destroying the harmful ones,
hara hara hare hare, destroying with supreme action, accomplishing the great abode by power, liberating and liberating by the power of the supreme family.
ha ha hā ha ha hā ha ha hā hi hi hī hi hi hī hi hi hī hi hi hī hu hu hu hu hu hu hu hu hu hu
The supremely excellent self, led forth by the wise:
ṭa ṭa ṭī ṭa ṭa ṭī ṭa ṭa ṭī ṭa ṭa ṭī ṭa ṭa ṭī ṭa ṭa ṭī ṭa ṭa ṭī ṭu ṭu ṭya ṭya
nya nya ṭya ṭya ṭya ṭya ṭya ṭya ṭya ṭya
The conduct of ornament, trembling and making tremble, has become the supreme of the conducts of conduct.
Practicing the conduct, the supremely excellent self,
the samaya ornament, honored by the six classes of beings,
the great lord, destroyer of the ravishers, bringing to accomplishment the practices of the ravishers, granting the supreme, the self of the supreme, truly arisen, ta te ṭa te, possessing the eye of the teaching.
Supreme, arisen from the syllable ja; hūṃ is the first application of action.
ho ho, endowed with supreme passion, revealing the woman; sa bestows the taking.
oṃ is the first, unsurpassed; ṭa ṭa ṭa ṭi sa; a is splendor blazing.
traṃ traṃ perfects the yoga of passion; ha joins in laughter.
hrī makes one a holder of Dharma, sharp and stainless; hi is the great wheel of cause.

haṃ and raṃ bind the application of the speech that delights the sky; a makes the manifold.
haṃ is protection; tra ta splits apart; ta ṭa ta ṭi sa; hūṃ eats and chews.
vaṃ gives joy and is joy; cha ta cha ti ṭa gives utter joy.
haṃ, with the teaching of the vajra, firm bliss, together with passion, gives joy.
ho, the protector, has become the cause of supreme birth; hri is the very nature of joy.
hi establishes the conduct, the supreme casting off of dust, encircled by the protectors of the three times.
Secret and secret, supreme of all qualities, stainless; ho is the supreme conduct of awakening.
Supreme of the supreme, granting the supreme, attaining the supreme state; the syllable hūṃ is the supreme granting.
Destroying all the stains of the afflictions and radiating out, armed with the weapons of the fangs of hūṃ; beautifully adorned with supreme and manifold joy, truly interwoven with the syllable oṃ;
he ho haṃ is pleasing; with hūṃ, utterly destroying, surely destroying the harmful ones, the very self.
Supreme bliss, with song and music, honored by goddesses of beautiful form,
with a radiant face white as the moon,
marked by the heaped qualities of the vajra secret;
adorned with every jewel, delightful, beautified by canopies of jewel netting, honored and beautified by the assembly of vajra goddesses;
the abode of bodhisattvas, without fear, stainless, purified through all the grounds, whose very nature is the full realization of the conduct of awakening, endowed with the food of the fully realized practice of Dharma,
the great joy produced by that merit;
abiding truly in the fourfold wealth of the abodes of Brahmā.
With the lines laid out in the order of the supreme Dharma,
the wheel and its rim drawn most beautifully,
the Chief resides in the vajra maṇḍala.
Beautified by the rim of the supreme samādhis, with assemblies of offerings by the hosts of dhāraṇī deities, adorned by the vehicle of liberation and the gate of loving-kindness,

the Guide resides in the vajra maṇḍala.
The perfections, the queens, perform the dance, delighting in the display that ripens beings;
endowed with the food of meditative concentration, adorned with the supreme superknowledges,
the Guide resides in the vajra maṇḍala.
That maṇḍala has the nature of reality of the Chief;
all the essences that reveal the nature of reality have entered it;
through the beautiful gathering of the hosts of all the buddhas, it is explained as the one called the Secret of the Sugatas.
Vajrasattva, the great and sublime lord,
source of all secrets, abides truly in samādhi.
He beholds the nature of reality of Vairocana, the Sage,
the supreme true source of dhāraṇī and samaya.
In accordance with the Dharma of joy, the vajra truly abides.
He, Vairocana, chief Lord of Sages, definitively brought forth the great maṇḍala of the families.
hūṃ
It arose like the utterly pure nature of reality, supreme of all the sublime lords, the buddhas,
with one-pointedness: how wonderful, how greatly joyful!
The body of the Buddha too has the form of a woman, abiding truly in order to tame the realm of beings.
The form of a woman too is the pure nature of reality, which has become the abode of the lineage of all the buddhas.
Arising from your own great family, come forth!
oṃ vajra dhātvīśvari hūṃ oṃ vajra vajrīṇi hūṃ oṃ ratna vajrīṇi hūṃ oṃ dharma vajrīṇi hūṃ oṃ karma vajrīṇi hūṃ
The supreme first, the five marvelous secrets, made by the five buddhas, have the form of women.

together with the marvelous ones, they abide as sublime sovereigns.
The vajra secret, the supreme secret of the nature of reality, having come to dwell through the union of the wheel,
dwells in the east through vajra yoga.
This is declared the maṇḍala of the wheel of the family.

Each one, too, is endowed with supreme yoga;
supreme is what is fully explained as the wheel of yoga.
By it the maṇḍala of the supreme secret, which arose supremely as Akṣobhya, was taught:
oṃ vajra satva guhya samaye hūṃ oṃ guhya vajra satva aṃ kuśa hūṃ oṃ vajra guhya rāge rāgaya hūṃ oṃ vajra guhya sādhīśvari hūṃ
The maṇḍala of Vajraratna having been shown,
by him, again, four heart mantras were spoken:
oṃ vajra guhya ratna samayaṃ hūṃ oṃ vajra guhya prabha hūṃ oṃ vajra dhvajāgra guhya hūṃ oṃ vajra guhya hāsa hūṃ Vajradharma is the great sublime sovereign;
by him, again, four heart mantras were spoken:
oṃ vajra dharma guhya samaye hūṃ oṃ vajra ghoṣa guhya hūṃ oṃ vajra guhya maṇḍale hūṃ oṃ vajra guhya vāca samaye hūṃ Vajrakarma worships through complete purity, beautiful, abiding fully in all the wheels;
having become supreme in the Dharma, the sublime, supreme sovereign, by him the four heart mantras are spoken:
oṃ vajra guhya karma samaye hūṃ oṃ vajra guhya kavace hūṃ oṃ vajra guhya daṃṣṭra dhāraṇi hūṃ oṃ vajra guhya muṣṭi hūṃ
As before, abiding fully in the city of the wheel, beautiful, abiding fully in vajra form, these very ones are the sons of the buddhas, together with the vajra;
yet now they are emanated in the form of women.
They blaze intensely, purifying existence, purifying attachment in the city of liberation,
pure through reversing thought and conceptuality, delighting in the Dharma, from which the supreme body arises.
Truth and untruth, the twenty that are wholly pure,
Dharma and non-Dharma: delighting, a vessel of joy.
Doing and not doing: the vajra, distinct and one.
The vajra teaching thoroughly purifies and practices by means of ho.
Secret yoga, jewel, action performed, city of Dharma:
this wheel of magical display is the meaning of the unconquered, adorned with the ornament of the vajra canopy.
By the great vajra, the lord of secrets,
the city whose nature is liberation was made.

For the sake of benefiting all sentient beings,
the five wheels truly arose:
that called the Tathāgata family,
that which makes indivisible and firm,
the supreme practice of the conduct of awakening,
and the supreme of the way of the Great Vehicle.
Like the maṇḍala of the wheel, suited to those to be trained, they practice together, just as the principal deity practices.
To beings who are not to be trained, who are not supreme vessels,
the greatly powerful ones do not grant accomplishments.
There, of the very nature of vajra,
many good qualities truly arise.
For the sake of training sentient beings,
the vajra consorts truly arose.
That very one, together with the sons of the buddhas,
that very one, the great city of the wheel,
together with the offerings and the gatekeepers:
the secret maṇḍala truly arose.
The Protector, the Vajra Lord of Secrets, is declared to be the Sovereign Lady of the Vajra Sphere (Vajradhātvīśvarī).
Through the union of Vajradharma
she is the supreme Vajra Perfection.
As it was before, so too afterwards;
likewise she abides firmly in the center.
This is the means of all the buddhas;
the secret union truly arose.
Just as the Vajra Sphere was described,
that very thing is called the secret.
In the Compendium of the Great Vehicle,
extensively, together with the mudrās,
the supreme maṇḍala of the five wheels is truly explained in its extended form.
The king, the Lord of Secrets of the Sūtra Collection,
from the Compendium of the Great Vehicle,
the secret tantra and the mudrā tantra, the maṇḍalas, the wheels and the moons
of the Tathāgata family:

these are explained as fivefold.
The supreme heart of the Vajra Sphere is, in brief, explained as sixfold.
Endowed with the practice of the sublime Dharma, next, the Tathāgata family,
according to ability and as is fitting,
the supreme maṇḍala as it is practiced,
according to the rite, as appropriate,
the supremely marvelous, I shall explain.
First, of the Tathāgata family,
I shall distinguish the sattvas.
I have explained the Lord of Secrets of the Sūtra Collection, about which the childish are bewildered.
The vajra master of great fortune,
abiding in the secret maṇḍala, should train with certainty in the secret,
the sixteen secret mudrās.
In the center of the moon disc,
with feet and hands joined in añjali,
one should visualize the vajra opened wide,
and make the Vajra Bearer enamored too.
This world of the trichiliocosm
one should gather completely into a single moon.
Me, the goddess, the Vajra Sovereign Lady,
one should hold fully in the center.
One should move with coquettish grace, and beguile with one's countenance through magical display.
Through this union of meditation
the Vajra Bearer too is to be pleased.
Having sat in the cross-legged posture of the sattva, one should join the palms at the crown of the head.
Having bound this mudrā,
one truly blesses oneself.
Through this mudrā of meditation
one binds the mudrā of the body.
Bending the forearm into a hook,
one should accomplish oneself completely.

Likewise, through the union of meditation,
one should draw the vajra arrow fully.
With the hand one says, "Excellent!"
and with the shoulders one arms oneself in armor.
Again, what is to be done in secret:
in the center of the moon disc oneself abides as the single vajra,
the secret, the supreme sovereign of goddesses.
Likewise one should bend the forearm and imagine a vajra on the crown of the head.
I sit to one side,
and one makes the armor of the two vajras.
All is the vajra body;
the jewel eyes are completely clear;
face and speech are the lotus;
and one should visualize Puṣpā, trembling all over.
Moving the eyes like a child,
one truly accomplishes the signs of a woman.
Moving the eyebrows, baring the teeth in a wrathful frown,
the eyes are opened wide with the wrathful gaze;
the gaze of the wrathful lady is of great passion;
with a smile one should close the eyes.
Through the method of opening the eyes,
one should stare wide with the vajra gaze.
Again, speech is of four kinds:
ho at the palate and the throat,
ja at the middle and the tip of the tongue,
oṃ at the throat and the lips,
vaṃ at the lips and the edges of the lips.
These are the secret, fully extended.
Expelling, reviling, cutting,
and binding are to be done with vajra words.
Likewise, in just the same way, in the center of the moon,
one should meditate on the very self of Vajrapāṇi, and on jewel, Dharma, and likewise karma,
as the secret self.
In all the rites, in their extended form,

one guards the vajra secret thereafter.
Just as one abides truly in yoga,

so too one abides as the holder of the supreme secret,
the unsurpassed vajra yoga.
Next I shall explain it correctly.
Abiding truly in vajra yoga,
one should meditate on the subtle vajra.
The hero Vajrasattva,
freed from what is outside, abides truly.
Whether standing or else sitting,
one truly undertakes vajra yoga.
The pure way of the Great Vehicle,
the great conduct, the great way:
if one meditates thoroughly on oneself as the great Dharma,
one will attain the vajra accomplishment.
Out of the great suffering of formations,
one should radiate through the conduct of joy.
Having focused with great compassion,
one should not abandon sentient beings to mere indifference.
One should join the tongue to the palate,
and meditate at the tip of the nose.
Oneself as Vajradhara, the king, abides likewise at the tip of the nose.
From the heart to the crown, as far as one is able,
one radiates the entire body.
Through touching the bliss of the subtle vajra,
the mind becomes settled in equipoise.
Before the vajra is the vajra;
one should meditate in the center of the vajra.
Through the union of meditating on the vajra, one radiates the subtle vajra fully.
In front of one's own body
one should meditate on Vajrasattva.
In the center of Vajrasattva's heart is the maṇḍala of all the vajras.
In the center of the vajra maṇḍala,

at its hub, is the Buddha, the Tathāgata.
One should meditate on the subtle vajra.
Whatever mind has meditated on the vajra, formless and indemonstrable,
without delusion and without fear,
is here called the subtle vajra.
Because it is without entity and without substance,
one meditates on it thoroughly as without appearance.
In the absence of self and the absence of sentient beings,
the yogin meditates on yoga.
The body has the nature of the five substances;
it rests truly on the four elements,
on the twelve sense sources,
and further on the eighteen elements.
It is pervaded throughout by flesh, bone and blood,
by marrow and brain;
it is pervaded throughout by various substances,
by phlegm, bile and the rest, an aggregate;
it is pervaded by various kinds of worms.
As a source of foul smell and impurity,
one should examine one's own body individually.
With the three kinds of suffering as its origin,
by day and by night, constantly,
one meditates on mindfulness of the body.
One should examine one's own mind individually:
whatever has truly arisen there has no going and no having gone;
in it there is no transference.
If in it there is no arising,
from what has the mind truly arisen?
This unreal false imagining deludes the mind like a lie.
There is not even the mere absence of mind;
like a lie, arising appears.
In this there is no abode, no characteristic,
no stability and no arising.
Delight in grasping is great delusion.

It is to be declared the subtle vajra.
Through yoga of this kind,
in the manner of meditating on the mind, body, mind and feelings
one should meditate on in the subtle mode.
sūkṣma vajra
The place of the sign of vajra touch one should come to know correctly.
When it has arisen one should radiate it, radiating it fully throughout the trichiliocosm.
spharaṇa vajra
Through touch one should withdraw the union, and should not become frightened or bewildered.
One should also withdraw it into the three places,
and examine it individually with the intellect.
saṃharaṇa vajra
The very mind that focuses on the Dharma should not be bewildered or destroyed.
One should make that vajra firm,
and should touch the subtle vajra.
vajra dṛḍha tiṣṭha
Fearless Vajrasattva,
the king with the crest of Brahmā:
one should meditate on the sattva at the crown of the head,
and radiate the entire body fully.
vajra ātmaka
At the forehead, Vajraratna
one should meditate on in equipoise.
One should radiate the signs,
and radiate all the sattvas too.
vajra ratna ātmaka
Vajradharma, utterly pure,
one should meditate on at the tip of the nose.
One should radiate his signs,
and radiate all bodies too.
vajra padma ātmaka
Pervading the whole body completely,

one meditates fully on the sphere of reality.
One should radiate its signs,
and radiate all the sattvas too.
sarva vajra ātmaka
The sattva, likewise the jewel, the karma, and the Dharma one should meditate on at the crown of the head.
One should radiate their signs,
and radiate the entire body fully.
sarva vajra
A hook abides truly at the nose:
so the intelligent person should imagine.
One should draw in all the buddhas and make one's own body firm.
At the heart, the place of passion,
one should imagine passion completely purified.
One should please all the buddhas,
and the sphere of reality will become firm.
One should take up the gesture called "Excellent!", supreme as abiding truly at the crown.
One should please all the buddhas
and radiate the sphere of reality fully.
hṛda vajra aṃkuśa tiṣṭha vajra rāga hṛdaye ādi vajra duṣṭi
At the heart, a vajra sun
the intelligent person should meditate on.
One should radiate the splendor of its light,
and radiate all the worlds too.
At the crown, a creeper together with light
one should imagine at the top of a banner.
One should radiate showers of jewels,
and truly radiate clouds of vessels.
Having imagined bliss through laughter,
one should definitely purify intense suffering.
One should radiate a shower of Dharma too,
and radiate clouds of light as well.
hṛdaya vajra sūrya tiṣṭa vajra dhājāgre hṛdaya vajra hāsa
Beginning with recollection at the crown,
one should imagine the sword as principal.

One should cut the suffering of saṃsāra,
and radiate all the sattvas.
In the place of the wheel at the heart
one should meditate on what accords with the Dharma.
One should radiate it throughout all of space,
and radiate the sphere of reality fully.
The sound that arose from its family the wise one imagines on the tip of the tongue.
One should radiate the words of the Dharma and radiate them fully throughout all directions.
hṛda vajra ghoṣa tiṣṭha vajra hṛdayaṃ phra veśa vajra vāktra
Beginning with recollection at the crown,
one imagines the act of offering.
For the sake of offering one radiates vajras, radiating them throughout all directions.
At the heart, the vajra armor
one imagines in deep equipoise.
That which frees from all suffering one should radiate in the form of armor.
From the crown of the head to the soles of the feet
one should imagine being bound with vajras.
One should draw in the vajra essence and radiate all that has the nature of vajra.
hṛda vajra śavace tiṣṭha vajra yakṣa vajra vajra muṣṭi hṛdayaṃ Toward friends and non-friends without exception, toward all bhūtas, loving-kindness one should radiate, pervading equally, without exception, leaving none out.
Alas, these sentient beings suffer,
wandering everywhere among the five destinies.

Through thorough application by day and by night,
one should radiate compassion itself.
Day and night, virtuous and free of aversion, whatever sentient beings strive after virtue, rejoicing in them, great bliss
one radiates fully to all sentient beings.

Having entered the path that is hard to cross, abiding in the awakening of the buddhas,
in order to accomplish the welfare of all sentient beings,
the one endowed with great intelligence rests in equanimity.
mahā maitri sāraṇa mahā kāruṇi kāya spharaṇa sarva buddha pramoda spharaṇa mahopekṣa spharaṇa
In the sky, or else in the other directions, one should imagine the form of the vajra.
Through focusing on sentient beings equally,
one radiates it fully throughout all of space.
vajra muṣṭi bhava
Vajrasattva, the great king,
at the heart, the vajra, firm in the nature of reality:
one should meditate on all things,
and radiate the sphere of reality fully.
Beginning with recollection of the Buddha,
in every aspect, in all its variety,
one meditates on that as one's own self,
and radiates the sphere of reality fully.
Endowed with the other subtle vajra, meditating on all phenomena,
one swiftly radiates them fully in all directions,
and should meditate on the vajra at the heart.
mahā bodhisatva viśva buddha anusmṛti viśva vajra pāṇi rśaya sarūpaṃ
In the center of the moon disc
one should meditate on the mind of awakening.
samanta bhadra viśva
Abiding in the center of the moon disc,
one meditates on oneself as the vajra.
vajra satva
Abiding in the center of the moon disc,
with the vajra pride, and with play, vajra satva samaya samādhi jñāna piśva
abiding in the center of the moon disc,
one's own self in the form of the Buddha.
tathāgata samohaṃ
The union of the two faculties is to be performed by vajra masters.

If one desires the supreme accomplishment,
the wise one should certainly do it.
With a mind in meditative equipoise,
one should contemplate recollection of the Buddha.
Adorned with the marks, just as he is,
one should always meditate on oneself.
As the Buddha is, so am I:
one should always meditate on oneself as the Buddha.
Whoever is the Buddha, that is oneself;
one abides truly as many buddhas.
I am equal to the Tathāgata:
so one truly speaks the vajra words.
Through the union of the two faculties
one should please all the buddhas too.
oṃ sarva tathāgata samohaṃ
Vajrasattva, the great king:
just as his bodily color is, according to the rite,
the two faculties abide truly;
likewise I should always meditate.
oṃ vajra satva samohaṃ
I am equal to Vajrasattva:
so one truly speaks the vajra words.
Through the union of the two faculties
one will certainly conquer the world.
Whatever is the essence of the elements is free of dust and stainless.
I should always be meditated upon
as the vajra nature of reality.
vajra dharma samohaṃ
I myself am equal to Vajradharma:
so one truly speaks the vajra words.
Through the union of the two faculties
one will attain the vajra Dharma.
Vajrakarma is oneself,
without distinction, with a single sign.
Worshiping all the buddhas thoroughly,

one should always meditate on oneself.
oṃ vajra karma samohaṃ
I am equal to Vajrakarma:
so one speaks the vajra words again and again.
Through the union of the two faculties
one becomes equal to Vajrakarma.
I am Vajraratna himself,
the empowerment of all the buddhas.
One should always meditate on oneself,
and one becomes equal to Vajraratna.
oṃ vajra ratna samohūṃ
I am equal to Vajraratna:
so one speaks the vajra words again and again.
Through the union of Vajraratna
one will attain the empowerment of the buddhas.

The connection of the two forms is called the two faculties. When whatever is one's own body and whatever is the body of the Buddha have become mingled as one, that is called the union of the two faculties.

This world of the trichiliocosm
one imagines as a single vajra, and in the center, equal to the form of the Buddha,
one should meditate on oneself.
One meditates on the vajra in the sky;
in a single vajra, fully clear,
through the concentration of Vajrasattva,
one should meditate on oneself in the center.
This world of the trichiliocosm
being fully clear as a single vajra, through the concentration of Vajraratna,
one should meditate on oneself in the center.
As far as one is able, one blesses it;
one meditates on the single vajra.
Through the concentration of Vajradharma
I should always be meditated upon.
One should meditate on the form of the Buddha,
and meditate on the jewel self in the center.

Everywhere, in the center of the vajra,
one always meditates on oneself as karma.
Whichever is the principal deity, together with the principals, just as their bodily color and attire are,
one should always meditate on oneself;
then one attains that very sublime being.
Speaking the vajra words of oneself as the principal,
one should imagine oneself as the vajra mind.
Through the union of the two faculties
one will attain Vajradhara.
Further, the method of meditation
I shall explain thoroughly in its own right.
Just as it arises from the mind,
one meditates on vajra yoga.
Relying on the tip of the nose,
the stream of mind abides truly.
For a hundred and seven more,
one should meditate through the vajra union.
If one desires accomplishment through meditation,
one should accomplish the vajra meditation.
Through the union of recollecting the Buddha
the yoga of accomplishment abides truly.
Through the union of recollecting the sattva one should ascertain it without doubt.
Whatever one desires,
one should meditate on oneself as the vajra.
Just as is the yoga of bodily color,
as is fitting, oneself in various forms;
or else, the vajra meditation being principal,
one should also meditate on the accomplishment.
How wonderful! Marvelous! The wheel of magical display has arisen!
How wonderful! Marvelous! The supreme sublime conduct is accomplished!
Oh, marvelous! The state of the supreme secret has been attained!
I am supreme in meditating on vajra yoga.
This is the accomplishment of those skilled in yoga,
which accomplishes the knowledge of yoga.
Through the mudrā that accomplishes offering,

I shall next thoroughly explain offering.
Four sessions and four colors:
through thorough application at the four times, proclaiming the yoga of the buddhas,
one should make offerings to the buddhas.
Radiating fully throughout all the directions, radiating the offerings fully,
through thoroughly accomplishing the awakening of the buddhas,
one always truly meditates on yoga.
One truly applies radiation to the offering,
and so the Dharma is radiated fully.

Abiding in the union of concentration,
one should thoroughly perform the offering of the Dharma.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra satva anuttara pūjā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
This secret mantra of the vajra
one should recite again and again.
Through the union of the Vajra Sphere
one should thoroughly perform the five mudrās:
individual realization and full realization,
the vajra, and likewise the vajra self,
as explained before in extended form;
one thoroughly generates the Vajra Sphere.
Having meditated on all the magical displays of the buddhas without exception as one's own self,
through the union of the Vajra Sphere
one offers them to the Lord of Sages.
Through the concentration of Vajrasattva,
having made offerings to the Sage,
I am the Protector Vairocana;
I have radiated the elements.
Having radiated the mind of awakening,
one offers it to the Lord of Sages.
Through this vajra secret mantra
one thoroughly accomplishes all the offerings.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra satva anuttara pūjā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Having radiated Vajraratna,

the empowerment of all the buddhas,
I am the Protector Vairocana;
I have radiated the elements.
It will be accomplished through the vajra mantra.
One offers to the Lord of Sages, radiating the jewel offerings thoroughly,
and thoroughly accomplishes the union of binding.
oṃ sarva tathāgata pajra ratna anuttara pūjā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
Just as before,
through the concentration of Vairocana,
just as the sattva was brought forth,
so one should meditate on oneself.
Having meditated on one's own self, radiating the great marvel fully,
one should offer it to all the buddhas;
it will be accomplished through the vajra union.
Having entered into absorption in this way,
Vajradharma thoroughly arises.
One should radiate it throughout all the directions, and offer it to the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra dharma anuttara pūjā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Abiding in the union of concentration,
having radiated the vajra actions,
one should offer them to all the buddhas,
and radiate them everywhere.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra karma anuttara pūjā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
With this king of offerings
one should meditate in the four sessions.
Through the rite of offering one will be accomplished;
even the sinful will be accomplished.
The act of offering is unsurpassed;
I shall explain it thoroughly as is fitting.
Endowed with the king of Dharma mudrās,
one will be accomplished; of this there is no doubt.
oṃ sarva tathāgata sarva ātma niryātana pūjā sāraṇa karma vajri a One should meditate on one's own self as Vajrasattva in meditative equipoise, and again and again

offer oneself to all the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata sarva ātma niryātana pūjā spharaṇa karmāgre ja One's own self as the Vajra Hook one should radiate in all directions,
summon all the buddhas,
and offer to the Sages.
oṃ sarva tathāgata sarva ātma niryātana anurāga pūjā spharaṇa karma vāṇi hūṃ ho
As the passionate love of the vajra family
one should always meditate on oneself.
Having pleased all phenomena, having spoken this, one should radiate.
oṃ sarva tathāgata sarva ātma niryātana sādhukāra pūjā spharaṇa karma tuṣṭi maṃ Vajraratna, the great yoga:
one should meditate fully on oneself,
and radiate the unsurpassed jewel offering
throughout all the directions.
oṃ namaḥ sarva tathāgata kāya abhiṣeka rahnebhyo vajra maṇi oṃ
The great king of all the buddhas, empowered at the seat of awakening:
having contemplated the mind in this way too,
one will attain Vajraratna himself.
Oneself as Vajratejas,
illuminating all the directions,
should urge on all the buddhas,
and radiate the splendor of offering fully.
oṃ sarva tathāgata sūryebhyo vajra tejoni jvāla hrīḥ Vajraketu, seen everywhere:
the wise one raises the banner.
One should make offerings to all the buddhas
and urge them on with the vajra mantra.
oṃ namaḥ sarva tathāgata āśā paripūraṇi cintāmaṇi dhvaja agre trāṃ
The maṇḍala of all the buddhas of great renown
the wise one beholds.
One should always delight oneself,

and urge them on thoroughly with the vajra mantra.
oṃ namaḥ sarva tathāgata mahā prīti bramodyakrebhyo vajra hāse hā
All sentient beings are the great Dharma;
I am the great Dharma, pure.
One should urge on all the buddhas thoroughly.
All the buddhas are all of oneself.
One should lay out all the maṇḍala cities;
the wise one contemplates oneself,
and urges them on thoroughly with the vajra mantra.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra dharma samādhibhi stunomi mahā dharma agre hrīḥ
I am the sharp sword of wisdom,
the way of the Perfection of Wisdom.
I thoroughly turn the syllables of the wheel;
I am the one who holds all the sūtras.
oṃ sarva tathāgata prajñā pāramitā nirahare tunomi mahā ghoṣanuge dhvaṃ
The speech of all sentient beings:
I am the sattva, Vajrabhāṣa, the steadfast, Vajrabhāṣa, lord of secrets.
One should make offerings to all the buddhas thoroughly.
oṃ sarva tathāgata sandhi bhāṣa buddha saṃgīti bhirgaya stunomi vajra vāce rbaṃ
I turn the wheel of Dharma,
the one who bestows the maṇḍala of the wheel.
I fully dedicate the vajra wheel;
one should radiate all the offerings fully.
oṃ sarva tathāgata cakra akṣara parivartīdhana sarva mutrāṃ tenaya stunomi sarva manḍale hūṃ
I am Vajrakarma, the king, making offerings thoroughly in all directions:
flowers, incense and other fragrances.
One should urge them on with the vajra mantra.
oṃ sarva tathāgata dhupa megha spharaṇa pūjā karma kara kara Endowed with the apportioned rite, the one who presents the offering of flowers, oneself, one's very self, is the king.
One should urge them on thoroughly with the vajra mantra.
oṃ sarva tathāgata puṣpa prasara spharaṇa pūjā karme kiri kiri

I am Vajrayakṣa,
devourer of afflictions, the blazing lamp of Dharma.
One should radiate throughout all the directions,
and truly radiate blazing light.
oṃ sarva tathāgata ālokajval spharaṇa pūjā karme bhara bhara Vajramuṣṭi himself, truly, truly endowed with a vessel of fragrance,
one should radiate throughout all the directions,
making offerings thoroughly with every kind of shower.
oṃ sarva tathāgata gandha samudra spharaṇa pūjākarma kuru kuru Truly endowed with the welfare of all sentient beings, having generated the mind of awakening,
one should offer it to all the buddhas,
thoroughly accomplishing the supreme offering.

oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra ātma niryātana pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
The wise one should draw the maṇḍala,
and bow down thoroughly with all the limbs.
One should offer to all the buddhas,
and radiate throughout all the directions.
oṃ sarva tathāgata kāya niryātana pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Through the gathering of Vajrasattva, Vajraratna, the unsurpassed;
through singing Vajradharma as a song,
one comes to perform the vajra actions.
With this song of the vajra
one should delight one's own self.
One should offer to all the buddhas,
and thoroughly recite the vajra mantra too.
oṃ sarva tathāgata citta ninyātana pūjā meghasamudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
All the offerings in all the directions the learned one should imagine.
One should offer them to all the buddhas,
and thoroughly urge them on with the vajra mantra.

oṃ sarva tathāgata citta ninyātana pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ Having offered, the wise one contemplates the concentration of the vajra consort.
Endowed with supreme substances, one should radiate them,
and offer them fully to all the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata anuttara harṣa rati prīti sukha anuttara prajñā pūjā megha samudra spharaṇa samaye hūṃ
Through this application of the rite
one should make offerings thoroughly to all the buddhas.
The vajra master of great austerity
will attain the unsurpassed accomplishment.
All the maṇḍalas gathered together:
the wise one contemplates the maṇḍala.
With unsurpassed masses of offerings
one should make offerings to all the buddhas.
Through this vajra union
one obtains long life, good complexion, freedom from illness, and every perfect happiness;
it thoroughly destroys all evil.
Whatever vajra yogin
makes offerings day after day, without doubt that vajra yogin will attain every accomplishment.
With the vajra mantra one should train in the precepts,
and contemplate all the mudrās.
In the Compendium of the Great Vehicle
the mudrās are explained at great length.
Following the sequence of the vajra actions,
the wise one trains in the maṇḍala.
Fully equal to the Vajra Sphere,
it is explained once more to the yogin.
The Protector of the World, of great miraculous power, is always to be worshiped in that way.
O yogins of the supreme secret,
I shall explain still more beyond that.
When one has first generated the mind,

the unsurpassed vajra mind,
having firmly generated the mind of awakening,
one should train in the activity of offering.
In the union performed by the vajra master
one should contemplate vajra joy.
Having generated the joy of passion,
one makes the offering of joy thoroughly.
One should meditate on oneself as the Buddha,
and having meditated, perform the offering thoroughly.
For the sake of the bliss of great joy, through thorough union with the knowledge goddess:
buddha ātmakohaṃ
Having thoroughly generated the mind of awakening,
one should think, "I myself am the Buddha."
With the powers, the fearlessnesses and the rest one should empower one's own self.
buddha abhiṣiñcāmi
Having thoroughly generated the mind of awakening,
one should think, "I am the Buddha."
Singing the song of the vajra, one should worship oneself directly.
buddha siddhi karomi
Having firmly generated the mind of awakening,
one should think, "I myself am the Buddha." Dancing with the vajra dance,
the learned one should worship oneself.
buddha pājā
Body, speech and mind, the supreme vajra:
through union one likewise pays homage,
and having worshiped all the buddhas,
one will certainly have paid homage.
praṇamāmi
Arisen from vajra body, speech and mind,
all the great merit of the buddhas:
by my supreme rejoicing in it,
I will swiftly attain buddhahood itself.
anumode

Offering oneself and the rest:
with all the offerings of vajra body, speech and mind,
the very Buddha is worshiped by one whose nature is offering.
buddha pūjā
Arisen from vajra body, speech and mind,
all the accumulations of virtue, every one:
through the offering of full dedication one becomes equal to all the buddhas.
bariṇāmaḥ
The sphere of reality is the great essence, unsoiled by the mire of desire,
unborn because it is pure from the very beginning,
like a lotus in the ocean of saṃsāra.
sarva śuddha
All phenomena are unborn,
peaceful from the very beginning, without defilement, not defiled by adventitious stains, purified by the letter a.
samanta bhadra
How wonderful! The wheel whose nature is bliss, the unsurpassed wheel of Dharma!
Of all phenomena themselves,
here the Tathāgata is the cause.
dharma cakra
A sound like an echo
does not exist, nor is there anything else;
in the nature of all phenomena
there is nothing whatever called a self.
nisprapañca
First the intelligent one should contemplate, and meditate in equipoise;
after that one recites the various vajras,
and then one will attain accomplishment.
Of vajra body, speech and mind,
one's own body, the subtlest particles,
one should meditate on in vajra form,

and meditate on oneself as the vajra.
vajra kāya
Of vajra body, speech and mind,
however many aspects of the limbs there are,
one should meditate on the form of the Buddha,
and radiate them all fully.
dharma kāya
However many subtlest particles abide in one's own body,
one should meditate on them as Vajrasattva, and worship thoroughly with unfailing offerings.
satva kāya
Likewise, of all bodies, their own subtlest particles
one meditates on as arrayed everywhere;
that is declared the offering to the buddhas.
buddha kāya
All the buddhas rejoice.
Whoever is a bodhisattva in training,
the wise one, trains in the supreme secret and will attain the ground of a buddha.
Vajrasattva, the great king,
binds all bodies fully.
Through passion for all the limbs together with concentration,
one is fully enamored with every body.
The self-arisen offering of bliss:
how wonderful, I am the offering of passionate love!
One should speak the vajra words:
How wonderful, delightful! How wonderful, lovely!
How wonderful, joy, thoroughly beautiful!
Attachment to the Dharma is great passion, that in which one delights thoroughly and becomes attached.
The selflessness of phenomena and of persons, emptiness, should be declared passion.
One should abandon the suffering of saṃsāra,
yet should not abandon sentient beings.

Craving, attachment and enjoyment,
all conceptual thought, one abandons completely.
One should know name and form,
and realize the three characteristics.
What is called the bliss of the Great Vehicle is thoroughly declared to be passionate attachment;
not grasping at any views,

one completely abandons the suffering of existence.
There is neither thought nor conceptual thought;
all suffering is decisively cut off.
In the aggregates, the sense sources and the elements
there is not so much as an atom of thought.
In that there is nothing conditioned,
nor is there even the unconditioned.
There is neither male nor female,
no conceptual thought of a self or of a sentient being,
no desire, no aversion, no delusion;
afflictions and secondary afflictions are abandoned.
Through attachment of this kind,
in which the Vajra Bearer becomes attached, through union of this kind,
one should be passionately devoted to Vajrasattva.
The kiss of the mouth, supreme and pure,
should be thoroughly accomplished through secret union.
oṃ mahāsukha vajrasatva
The rite of passionate devotion has been taught.
One should clasp the upper arms tightly, and through what is taught as passionate attachment Vajrasattva will be fully accomplished.
Being freed from the five attachments,
one should not be attached to sense pleasures;
through the joy of the rite, the intelligent one will accomplish all accomplishments.
Through the rite of Vajrasattva
all the secrets should be fully revealed.
All the peaceful ones should be pleased,

and Vajrasattva and the others should be pleased.
Buddhas or bodhisattvas,
the Vajra Bearer and great joy,
are accomplished through great passion such as this;
of this there is no doubt.
oṃ sarva rāg rati sukha yāmi hūṃ Supremely secret, holy and supreme:
having done this, all the secrets,
once examined, come to be accomplished.
The wise one especially should train in it.
Having oneself accomplished the sign as firm,
one should abide in the center of the lotus;
having blessed the sign, the stūpa,
one's own self becomes equal to the vajra.
From the King of Sūtras, the Lord of Secrets,
he spoke words that are exceedingly secret.
They were spoken with a hidden intention,
and should be understood as intentional.
"Sign" is said to mean the hand emblem;
"firm" means preeminent.
Whatever the hand emblem of the bodhisattva,
the learned one should hold it preeminently.
Practicing the six perfections
is proclaimed to be its sign.
Because it should be taught as preeminent,
the intelligent wish the family to arise.
Those who have themselves become firm in the sign are proclaimed to be exactly these.
Practicing the six perfections
should be declared the vajra family.
Whatever is the mind of awakening, that is the vajra;
this should be declared the vajra sign.
Through thorough application of the mind of awakening the sign should be declared firm.
The lotus is the Perfection of Wisdom;
"one should abide in the center of the lotus" means that in the yoga of the Perfection of Wisdom

one should enter absorption again and again.
The union of bhaga and liṅga,
when relied upon again and again,
free of wavering and of fault,
truly arises without doubt.
Wisdom and the mind of awakening,
when relied upon again and again,
in the way of the Perfection of Wisdom, awakening comes without doubt.
This Dharma that is to be practiced is hard for any embodied being to find.
With the mind of awakening, faith and great wisdom,
one should be devoted to the stūpa, the sign.
By the yogin's meditation on this,
by practice of this kind,
and by this secret conduct,
the vajra secret itself is attained.
As is taught at length in the sūtra that compiles the secret by its intention, through this secret yoga
one should meditate on all sentient beings.
Through this yoga of practice of the Vajra Compendium of the Lord of Secrets, if one practices the great secret,
one is accomplished in that very instant.
Some, on that very day,
are accomplished again and again;
in two, three, four or five days,
or in six or seven, without doubt.
Even one who commits the five acts of immediate retribution,
by the rite as is fitting,
applying himself thoroughly for one year,
will be accomplished; of this there is no doubt.

The Rite of the Vajra Secret is complete.

The supreme maṇḍala of the secret and the rite of the vajra master,

as is fitting and appropriate,
I shall now correctly explain.
In brief, the observance of the vidyā,
as explained above in the maṇḍala, as far as one is inclined and as far as one is able,
should first be explained by the learned one.
Vajrasattva, of great fortune,
the king, light pervading everywhere:
without doubt, a hundred thousand times,
one should constantly recite the vajra words.
One should cultivate the being vajra;
having cultivated vajra yoga,
one should cultivate the purity of phenomena.
Through mere cultivation one will be accomplished.
Thoroughly abandoning afflictions, one should turn afflictions back;
through cultivating yoga one accomplishes yoga.
Through mere mantra recitation great joy is accomplished,
and through the rite of yoga the practice is accomplished.
Or else, for mere recitation,
one should recite with the supreme recitation.
In order to accomplish the yoga of vidyā, one should recite according to the rite of accomplishment.
Through that rite of yoga buddhahood is attained in an instant.
Without the rite of yoga
there is no accomplishment; of this there is no doubt.
The four secrets of all the vidyādharas are correctly explained.
The great, immeasurable secret is the compendium of all four.
The rites of recitation and fire offering,
devotion to binding mudrās,
the rite of the supreme vidyā:
this is the first compendium of secrets.
Killing and desiccating, striking with the ritual dagger, beating, and fierce rites,
and this yantra for expelling obstructors:

this is the second compendium of secrets.
Binding on the unchanging armor, conduct and likewise setting in motion, the very protection of oneself, dispelling the obstructors, seizing substances and destroying,
guarding against all the malicious:
this is the third compendium of secrets
of all the vidyādharas.
Worship with mantra and mudrā, likewise the accomplishment of vidyā itself,
the obstructors, and the gathering of merit,
are held to be the fourth secret.
All the four secrets,
comprising every nature and miraculous power,
the great tantra of the supreme secret,
are fully explained in that tantra.
The rite of recitation and fire offering shall be explained from the supreme tantra, because all vidyādharas should perform recitation and fire offering.
Without the practice of recitation the accomplishment of vidyā will not arise;
without so much as a fire offering the work of vidyā will not be done.
That by which one becomes diligent in yoga,
the stages of recitation, I shall explain.
Of all the vidyādharas,
this essence is the supreme secret.
In this secret family, recitation has arisen as twenty yogas.
The twenty kinds of recitation are twenty-one in the secret tantra.
One should realize the habitual tendencies of negative states;
thought is called a habitual tendency.

Through mere recitation it dissolves;
one should speak through mere recitation.
It abandons the wrongs one has committed,
and likewise purifies existence,
and various wonders will be seen;
therefore one should recite.
The conduct of awakening will arise,
and the supreme way will be seen;
therefore the rite of recitation must certainly be done by the yogin.
In this tantra of the great secret hūṃ is proclaimed as first.
All the secrets arise from it;
one should recite with hūṃ.
The chief of all the buddhas is likewise the supreme syllable hūṃ.
All the secrets, together with the wheel,
and together with the five families, arise.
Here, how the syllable hūṃ arises
the wise one should first examine.
The tongue and all the rest as hollow,
one should examine the whole body.
It does not arise from the ten points of articulation;
not in any way from the teeth, nor from the tongue and its root,
not in any way from the palate.
From what place does articulation arise?
It does not arise from the heart itself.
In all hollow things arising itself does not appear.
Through the application of the syllable hūṃ one joins it properly to one's own expanse;
that itself does not become afflicted.
The ground of all, which holds all seeds:
from the effort of the palate and the throat and the assemblage of the tongue, sound arises.
The sound of the syllable hūṃ that has arisen arises as nonconceptual.

From an articulation that arises in this way
the abode does not become afflicted.
Sound just as it is, together with words,
and all conditioned things, should be cast aside.
Just as with the application of hūṃ,
all phenomena are unborn.
What arises from conceptual thought
arises as nonconceptual.
The beginning of saṃsāra cannot be known in any way.
Here arising does not appear,
and conditioned things do not perish.
Therefore through the mere syllable hūṃ one should examine conditioned things one by one.
The pure and ultimate abode should also be joined with hūṃ.
This sound without intrinsic nature arises from the syllable hūṃ.
In it there is no entity;
it is without intrinsic nature and selfless.
Likewise, of all phenomena
there is no intrinsic nature.
There is no self, sentient being or nourisher;
grasped and grasper are abandoned.
Undefiled and unconditioned,
the pure abode should be made firm.
Through the wisdom of the union of accomplishment
the awakening of a buddha will be attained.
Through application of this kind
the syllable hūṃ arises, pure wisdom arises,
and it should be made firm through the dharmadhātu.
Even the great miraculous power of the buddhas is not apprehended here, because the essence of those gone in the three times,
the buddha essence, is taught as an assembly.
All the buddhas together with their heirs,

and the Vajra Bearer with the Victor's heirs, through the application of mere hūṃ should all be properly summoned.
Through the application of a single syllable
the essence of all the buddhas is made firm, because Vajradhara, the king, abides in this through his own union.
Without realizing the mind of awakening, the habitual tendencies that accord with the Dharma bring no emergence whatsoever from beginningless saṃsāra.
Of the śrāvakas, the pratyekabuddhas and the emanations of the bodhisattvas, without the mind of awakening not one can pass into nirvāṇa.
If buddhas did not appear,
from where would the śrāvakas come?
If there were no appearing of buddhas,
the pratyekabuddhas would not arise.
If there were no bodhisattvas,
from what would the buddhas arise?
If there were no mind of awakening...
Therefore this entire wheel arises from the mind of awakening.
The mind of awakening, the great secret,
arises from the syllable hūṃ.
The arising of all the buddhas becomes the appearance of the syllable hūṃ.
Because those with form, endowed with the marks,
the buddhas, constantly arise,
the application of the syllable hūṃ is hūṃ;
that itself arises as the vajra.
The vajra fully joined with the dharmadhātu arises from that.
From that comes the great vajra yoga,
the unsurpassed lord of yoga.
Without doubt, all yogas are accomplished through the application of the syllable hūṃ.

Through recitation of this kind,
just as the Blessed One made dedication in the past,
one dedicates the virtue produced by yoga.
Through the power of the bodhisattvas
one should dedicate even one's own mind.
The great vajra brings to completion;
one should deliver beings through the mind of awakening.
The great essence of the dharmadhātu:
all sentient beings are unsullied.
All are the essence of the Tathāgata,
unsullied by the mire of afflictions.
Pure just like the moon,
luminous as the full moon,
always abiding perfectly complete,
utter clarity will be accomplished.
This is the primordial wisdom of the Dharma,
the essence of the Tathāgata (tathāgatagarbha).
It always abides in purity,
yet is obscured by one's own afflictions.
Therefore the aspect of one's own mind should be known as a full moon.
There is no self at all;
this nature of reality is known by the Victor.
Wisdom is not a full moon,
because there is no self;
it is fitting to liken it to the full moon
because it is pure and unsullied.
The flawless wisdom of the buddhas should be meditated upon through the application of the moon.
Having seen it, the wise one should reflect:
"By whom is this realized?"
The Tathāgata, the Blessed One, who suffered for a long time,
one should think of as likewise purifying
all the habitual tendencies of the afflictions.

The mind of awakening is the great mind, destroyer of all afflictions,
which has arisen as the antidote from the habitual tendencies that accord with the Dharma.
Therefore, through its power,
one engages in the wisdom of the buddhas, unsullied by negative states with their habitual tendencies or by the mire of desire.
The great mind that is like the sun burns up the roots of the afflictions.
The great mind that is like the moon makes the medicinal herbs of virtue flourish.
Like the moon in the heat of summer:
the torment of the sun scorches,
but the moon, by rising, brings relief;
it pacifies all torment.
Untormented by the torment of afflictions,
to ignorance it is the very sun;
the mind of awakening is the great moon
in pacifying the torment of afflictions.
It is supreme in destroying thorough affliction with its habitual tendencies, and negative states.
As a magnet draws iron,
it draws out the habitual tendencies of the afflictions.
The yogin whose nature is vajra should meditate on that mind of awakening.
In that place, the moon disc,
one should meditate on the moon once again.
Through the power of the mind of awakening,

the wisdom that burns up all habitual tendencies will arise there.
Grasped and grasper abandoned,
nonconceptual and incomparable, selflessness and likewise emptiness destroy the mountain of ignorance.
Like a vajra, without hollowness, of vajra nature, of great essence,

the firm mountain of the view of a perishable aggregate is destroyed by that vajra;
therefore it is taught as having the nature of a vajra.
Therefore the vajra yogin,
in the center of the moon, an equal moon;
between the two moons, with a vajra,
should make firm the vajra wisdom.
Emptiness, suchness, reality,
the limit of reality and the unconditioned,
unborn and unceasing:
the syllable hūṃ is taught as their meditation.
The dharmadhātu, supremely firm,
equal to the expanse of space,
should be meditated upon in the center of the moon.
Through that application of hūṃ
one should meditate on the supreme vajra.
One should radiate it into the whole body,
radiate it as equal to emptiness.
This very form is a mere name;
there is no entity whatsoever.
If it is analyzed into its parts,
there is no such thing as form.
Even when they are examined down to the subtlest particles,
there is no such thing as a subtlest particle.
It is called the conventional truth of the world;
in the ultimate sense it does not exist.
In a nature of this kind
there is no such thing as form.
If that form does not exist,
how can it be said to exist?
If that form does not exist,
there is no name for it either.
From what does a name arise?
Whatever a name may be like,
what is called an entity is the same.
When it is examined one by one through that name,

in what place does it abide?
When a single entity is analyzed,
many names arise;
through the division of each one,
the earlier name is lost.
Where there is no name for it,
no name arises.
For that which has no name,
how can it be spoken of by a name?
That in which the name abides is not apprehended in any way.
Form is not apprehended;
how then does form exist in it?
This is the true nonconceptual, entwined all around by habitual tendencies,
where the childish are utterly deluded and do not attain nirvāṇa.
Just as one meditates on form,
so with feeling and perception:
when each is analyzed separately, no core is found in it.
Where there is no core,
how can there be an entity?
Where no entity is apprehended,
how can there be ultimate truth?
What is not apprehended when taught does not exist; it is not an entity.
Since all phenomena do not exist,
they should be declared unborn.
What is unborn does not exist;
what does not exist, how can it exist?
The learned declare
all phenomena to be unceasing.
Unborn and unceasing,
they are held to be at peace from the very beginning;
therefore they are by nature in nirvāṇa.
This is declared to be emptiness.

This is the great true reality;
it should be declared the limit of reality.
The dharmadhātu, of great essence, should be declared the Great Vehicle.
It is an essence without hollowness,
the unsurpassed teaching of the vajra.
One should radiate it into the whole body:
my own body is like this,
that which is called the vajra self.
One radiates the syllable hūṃ throughout.
Through this application of meditation buddhahood itself will be accomplished.
Such a phenomenon is unborn;
here too no arising appears.
Through the application called hūṃ
it does not appear as born either.
The nature of reality, pure, true,
the limit of reality, undefiled,
the dharmadhātu, firm and holy,
is here proclaimed as the syllable hūṃ.
That vajra syllable hūṃ itself is the teaching of the dense dharmadhātu.
Whatever is the mind of awakening, that is the vajra;
whatever is the vajra, that itself is hūṃ.
The nature of reality, pure like this,
the delightful vajra wisdom,
the great essence of all the buddhas, abides in my hand as the vajra.
Therefore all the secret yogas
of all the Vajra Bearers, through application to the syllable hūṃ,
one should contemplate as the yoga free of elaboration.
The holy moon disc
should be meditated upon in the center of the heart.
On that moon, two moons;
in their center one should meditate well on a moon.
In the center of the moon, a vajra

the learned one should meditate upon.
In the center of the vajra, the syllable hūṃ:
one should meditate well on the awakening of a buddha.
Through application of this kind
one should meditate fully on the whole body.
Through the recitation of Vajrahūṃkāra one swiftly attains the vajra self.

The Meditation of hūṃ, Vajrahūṃkāra, is complete.

Just as with the application of hūṃ,
one should meditate on all the syllables.
Through the application of the great being,
the sixteen syllables are pure.
hūṃ is the syllable of all the buddhas,
because the buddha family arose from it.
hūṃ of all the Vajra Bearers:
one should meditate fully on it as cutting off all that is fierce.
oṃ is properly endowed with the jewel;
hrī is properly endowed with the lotus;
the syllable a is said to be the various;
one should meditate on them in this way too.
hūṃ is the buddha vajra;
trāṃ is the vajra essence;
the syllable hrīḥ is taught as the vajra;
the various vajra is the syllable a.
hūṃ is Vajrasattva; Vajrarāja is the syllable ja;
ho is Vajrarāga;
Vajrasādhu is the syllable sa.
oṃ is Vajraratna; Vajratejas is the syllable a;
trāṃ is Vajraketu;
Vajrahāsa is the syllable ha.
The syllable hrīḥ is Vajranetra; Vajratīkṣṇa is the syllable dhoṃ;
oṃ is Vajracakra;
Vajrabhāṣa is the syllable sa.

The syllable kaṃ is Vajrakarma; Vajrarakṣa is the syllable haṃ;
hūṃ is Vajrayakṣa;
Vajramuṣṭi is the syllable paṃ.
Whichever one desires,
one should meditate on it likewise at the heart.
The yogin of the syllable hūṃ will swiftly be accomplished.
Through reciting it twenty-one times
one should emanate a single form.
Through merely reciting the syllable hūṃ
the awakening of a buddha will be attained.
Abiding in the center of the moon disc,
one should meditate on one's own self.
One's self in the form of a vajra:
one should meditate on a single vajra.
At the hub in the center of the vajra,
there one should meditate on the syllable hūṃ.
Following the Great Vehicle, fully compiled,
just as in the sūtra,
just as the king with his men,
with the syllable hūṃ placed first,
so with every mind, the yogin
should meditate at the heart.
One's self in the form of a vajra,
one should meditate on the syllable hūṃ in the center.
Likewise all the syllables too
the yogin meditates upon at the heart.
Abiding properly from the form of the moon,
one should meditate fully on oneself,
and through the application of the deity of the family
one should meditate on one's own self.
Whoever Vajrasattva may be,
whatever one may truly desire,
one should meditate on that family at the heart,
joining the syllable hūṃ first,
because realization arises from it.

So with every mind, the yogin,
having meditated at the heart, should meditate.
Or else, through the application of space,
one joins the syllable hūṃ first;
one should meditate on the nature of space and join all the syllables.
Or else, in the center of a moon in space,
one should meditate on the syllable hūṃ abiding there,
and think of oneself as the goddess of the family:
one is fully accomplished in that very instant.
As hūṃ has been taught,
one should meditate fully on all the mantras.
The secret of all the vidyās is the compendium of all the tantras.
Apart from that secret of recitation,
this secret is of six kinds:
the essence of the vidyādharas,
the compendium of the yoga tantras,
the meaningful, the exceedingly wondrous,
and what is taught as the supreme secret, beyond even the secret.
Through the application of mere recitation the mountain of views will be destroyed.
In the center of one's own heart
one should meditate on a moon disc.
In the center of that moon disc one should meditate on a second moon.
Whatever breath goes out and is drawn in,
one meditates on it as the vajra syllable hūṃ.
Through the application of churning fire
one should make it move upward and downward.
Abiding properly in the moon disc,
one should meditate on the syllable hrīḥ in the center.
One should meditate on it moving upward and downward, having joined the syllable hūṃ with it.
Just as with a dry base board for kindling fire,
when the fire drill is properly placed upon it,
by merely making the effort,

fire arises in an instant,
so the syllable a is the base board and the syllable hūṃ is the fire drill;
through the yogin who makes them move,
wisdom is born in an instant.
The wisdom of the Perfection of Wisdom should here be declared the syllable hrīḥ.
The mind of awakening is the syllable hūṃ;
one should churn it through the application of fire.
Through this application of churning holy wisdom will be born.
That vajra is to be burned:
the unsurpassed vajra wisdom.
The bhaga is the wisdom of all the buddhas;
the liṅga should be declared the vajra.
Whatever is the mind of awakening, that is the vajra;
one practices fully in bhaga and liṅga.
Having inserted the liṅga into the bhaga:
thus it is taught in the Sūtra of the Lord of Secrets.
Through this application of the bhaga
the learned one should insert the liṅga.
This secret of great splendor:
if someone practices it through the application of not churning,
wisdom is born in an instant.

The Seven Kinds of Secret Recitation are complete.

The great tantra, hidden and secret:
this very one is gathered into all the yogas.
This very great compendium
I shall further explain in full.
Abiding properly on the full moon,
one should meditate on oneself as a vajra.
In its center is the vajra,
and one should perform the recitation of the vajra family.
Abiding on the full moon,
one should meditate on oneself as a lotus.

In its center is that lotus,
and one should recite all of the lotus family.
Abiding on the full moon,
one should meditate on oneself as a gem.
In its center is the jewel,
and one should recite the jewel family.
Oneself as a single vajra
one should meditate on fully as a sharp vajra;
on that supreme karma family
one should recite all of the karma family.
Beginning with the recollection of the Buddha,
one should meditate on the form of the Buddha.
Having entered his heart,
one should recite all of the buddha family.
The great form of Vajrasattva,
the single being, one should meditate upon.
Having entered his heart,
one should recite all of the vajra family.
The form of the great lotus being,
Lokeśvara, one should meditate upon.
Having entered his heart,
one should recite all of the lotus family.
The gem, the jewel, of great fortune, Vajraratna, one should meditate upon.
Having entered his heart,
one should recite all of the jewel family.
The great being Vajrakarma,
the form of that being, one should meditate upon.
Having entered his heart,
one should recite all of the karma family.
Truth, become the supreme pledge, fully liberates all the buddhas.
By merely hearing it, the great means.
Or else, at the heart, of vajra nature,
the Lord of the Various, equal to the recitation:
whatever the wise one has thought of,
all excellences are attained with ease.

I shall correctly explain the secret.
One should meditate on the form of the Buddha,
and enter his heart;
having made all enter by means of the mind,
one radiates his body as an equal.
In the center of his heart
the vajra family is fully taught.
Following just as before,
one radiates all the Tathāgatas.
Through application of this kind,
if one recites the Tathāgata family, without doubt all the buddhas will be accomplished in that very instant.
This vajra arrow is peaceful;
one should meditate on a form like this.
Having entered its heart,
one should meditate on it as equal to the vajra dance.
Through application of this kind,
for all those of the vajra family,
without doubt all accomplishments
are accomplished through the recitation of wisdom.
One should meditate on the lotus being and enter its heart as before.
If one meditates fully on the various means,
those of the lotus family will be accomplished.
One should meditate on Vajraratna and enter his heart as before;
having entered the treasury of jewels,
one should radiate again and again.
Through application of this kind,
Vajraratna, the great joy:
without doubt all accomplishments
are accomplished through mere recitation.
Here in this world of the trichiliocosm,
one should think of it as Vajrakarma.
Having entered his heart,
one should radiate various emanations.

Through application of this kind,
having fully radiated the various treasuries,
without doubt all accomplishments
are accomplished through mere recitation.
These five, exceedingly secret,
are the unsurpassed secret of recitation.
Through application of this kind
the awakening of a buddha will be attained.
This application of the rite of recitation gathers the essence of all the tantras and utterly destroys all afflictions;
the vidyādhara should recite it.
Through this application of recitation one must certainly take up the observance of vidyā.
If one desires accomplishment from this,
the yogin should keep the observance.
In the rite of recitation and fire offering one should exert oneself in the supreme yoga.
The Compendium of the Great Vehicle
one should recite in full thirty million times.
Having recited it thirty million times,
one should begin the practices.
The mind of awakening is the great joy;
the wise one should draw the maṇḍala.
Vajrasattva, the great king,
should be drawn properly by a single person,
because the supreme king, the Lord of Secrets, bestows the supreme vajra.
Through the application of the vajra realm,
that should properly be begun first.
The wise one should draw the maṇḍala;
one should draw it properly ten cubits across,
square, with four doors,
adorned with porticoes,
properly furnished with eight pillars,
adorned with tassels of silk,
properly furnished with four lines,

beautifully decorated with ornamental borders,
draped all around with nets of jewels,
adorned with golden threads, bells and small bells.
At the door frames and the corners
it is bound firmly with vajra bonds, and vajra jewels are fully arranged.
The lines are laid with the vajra cord,
with the rite of applying perfume;
the obstructors should be dispelled with ritual daggers,
and the cord of five colors
should be protected by the vajra secret.
Through the application of the vajra realm
one should lay the lines of the outer maṇḍala.
Just as was explained before,
the vajra secret is fully arranged.
Having fully arranged the vajra secret,
one should lay the lines of the outer maṇḍala.
The beautiful Vajracakra
one should place in the center of the wheel, and place Vajrarāga all around.
One should fully distinguish the five colors,
just as is taught in the secret tantra:
white, blazing with various lights,
blue and yellow, brightly blazing,
fully furnished with madder and the rest,
endowed with various red rays of light.
One should draw with various colors,
blazing with various red rays of light.
Having fully arranged the Vajracakra, it is fully arranged upon the full moon.

Taking up all the wheels,
with their colors just as is fitting,
beautiful and exceedingly white,
just like the moon when it is full,
one should draw the full moon.
In the center of the full moon

one should draw Vajrasattva, by holding whose name
one is freed from evil in an instant:
smiling, the color of the moon,
intensely passionate, in great joy.
Swiftly one should utter the vajra words;
this is the heart of the vajra itself:
oṃ mahāsukha vajrasatva hūṃ jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ
One should sing the vajra song:
"Great conduct of the bodhisattva, bestower of the awakening of a buddha,
fully mindful of the passion of desire,
loving all, possessed of the supreme mind of bliss, Vajrasattva, supreme in perfect joy,
O you who bring increase by teaching great bliss, please bring the practice to accomplishment most swiftly!" Singing such a vajra song,
one should invite the wheel.
Vajrasattva, the great king,
will be loving and grant full accomplishment.
Seated in the posture of the sattva, supreme in bearing the vajra air of pride,
his eyes moving playfully,
of great proud bearing and great joy, with his right hand the vajra
he supremely holds at his heart;
the left is furnished with a bell,
and again he has a proud bearing.
"Bodhisattva, great vajra, great king, great sage,
great conduct, great vehicle,
Vajrasattva, grant me accomplishment!
Great jewel, great vajra,
great banner, great mindfulness, mindfulness of the buddhas, great vajra,
Vajrasattva, grant me accomplishment!
Great passion, great bliss,

unsurpassed great bliss,
blissful in the grounds and the perfections, Vajrasattva, grant me accomplishment!
Great wisdom, great vajra, arisen from Vajrahūṃkāra, mind of awakening, great vajra,
vajra mind, great vajra,
Vajrasattva, grant me accomplishment!
Great vajra, great passion,
great king, great sage,
Amogharāja, supreme vajra,
Vajrasattva, grant me accomplishment!
Existence of the Dharma, great wheel, unsurpassed act of speech,
protecting, great fierce protection, Vajramuṣṭi, grant me accomplishment!"
When with this vajra song
one has supremely urged him,
Vajrasattva, the great king,
will be accomplished; of this there is no doubt.
Great passion, great joy:
one should meditate on Vajrasattva,
and the wise one should lay out the maṇḍala of Vajrasattva, the great king.
In the same way as the previous maṇḍala,
one should draw it in the maṇḍala.
Then, gazing at the vajra,
one should recite the hundred and eight names.
The holder of the knowledge of the Dharma should perform all the rites, causing descent, entering, and the rest,
by the method of the Vajradhātu.
The vase and the other implements, supreme incense, flowers, and so on:
by the method of the Vajradhātu
one should perform all the rites.
If one recites the vidyā of Vajrasattva over the vase a hundred and eight times and places it at the feet,

it becomes the water of vajra nectar.
By the method of the Vajradhātu
one should enter according to the rite,
and with the great mudrā of Vajrasattva
one should empower oneself.
Having fully entered with hūṃ,
one should worship with vajra offerings.
Through the samādhi of Vajrasattva
one should accomplish as is fitting.
Abiding in the full disc of the moon,
one should take up the great mudrā;
through the samādhi of Vajrasattva
one should accomplish one's very self.
Then the secret great mudrā
one should accomplish instant by instant.
Vajrasattva, the great king,
will become stable; of this there is no doubt.
Having accomplished the secret yoga,
the unsurpassed, thoroughly taught,
the loving great sattva
one should accomplish in an instant.
Such is the supremely secret and consummate,
the supreme complete purity of the sattva, the great king;
this mode of purity has nothing in the least to equal it,
the supreme complete purity of loving passion.
The supreme vajra king, with stainless enclosures, holds the sublime wheel arisen from the secret;
this way of the secret mantra of knowledge brings awakening, practicing the conduct endowed with compassion.
Likewise it has gone beyond great and terrifying suffering;
supremely skilled and subtle, arisen from tantra upon tantra,
there it cuts the great net of existences.
Thus is explained the secret arisen from the wheel of secret mantra.
It is the wheel arisen supremely from the secret family,
the single intent of all the Tathāgatas.

The chief of the sons, the sovereign king, has thereby fully taught the city of liberation.

From the Vajraśekhara, the king of ritual of the secret great yoga, the supremely secret, sublime reality: the explanation called The Tathāgata Family, Lord of the Secret Sūtras of All the Tathāgatas, the second chapter, is complete.

Then the great secret yoga,
the gathering together of all the buddhas,
the supreme stability of the dharmadhātu, endowed with the various substances of space,
the great king, the lord of mountains,
emanated the emanations of the buddhas.
In the abode of the great Vajra Lord all the buddhas fully gathered.
At the summit of Vajrarāja
the secret yoga fully arose.
Vajradhara, the great king,
equal to the Dharma and to perfect enjoyment,
made utterly beautiful by all the vajras,
in that abode that had become supreme,
Vajradhara, the great king,
the yogin, remained in silence.
He sat in the posture of the sattva;
by the Chief all dharmas come under control.
Playful, with the vajra air of pride,
Vajrasattva of great joy,
the single abode of all the buddhas,
the supreme yoga of the great Dharma.
All the buddhas, having gathered,
supplicated the Lord of Sages:
"Vajra yoga, great yoga,
great joy of the bodhisattvas, sattva arisen from the mind of awakening,
please explain the arising of your own family!
Vajradhara, the king,
the great secret, the heart of the tantra,

the great secret, the lord of the family,
the sūtras' Lord of Secrets, the king,
the Compendium of the Great Vehicle:
through peace awakening will be accomplished,
yet that does not fully gather all.
Utterly conquering all the fierce ones, please always explain your own family!"
Vajradhara, the king,
remained entirely silent.
Silent, he did not speak the secret;
he remained in the bliss of peace.
The secret, supreme Tathāgata,
the great sattva, entered into equipoise;
neither conceiving nor looking,
he remained in the secret yoga.
All the buddhas, having gathered,
made the dharmadhātu stable;
they truly became like a single buddha,
the unsurpassed Amoghasiddhi.
The great yoga of all the buddhas arose fully from all the secrets.
Through the samādhi of vajra union they spoke an exhortation to the Vajra Bearer:
oṃ vajrasatva uttiṣṭha
When the vajra exhortation had been spoken,
the dharmadhātu, the one and only buddha,
through the samādhi of the secret yoga, Vajrasattva, rose up.
The Sage bowed to the protectors
and spoke these words:
"What shall I do in every way?
Let all the buddhas tell me." Then to steadfast Vajrapāṇi
all the buddhas spoke:
"Please explain the maṇḍala of the family called the secret vajra family." Having heard the speech of all the buddhas,

he who illumines the abode of the Vajra Lord bowed deeply and spoke these words:
"Protectors, please behold with yoga!
Among these there is no sentient being at all who is a supreme and fit vessel for me.
For they are attached to the non-Buddhists (tīrthikas), beings pervaded by the stains of views.
These sentient beings are not to be trained;
they are not vessels for the Dharma of the buddhas.
They have fully entered wrong paths,
bent upon thick darkness.
Some are attached to regarding gods and humans;
some dwell in views of ascetic vows;
some are deluded, tormented by austerities;
their minds are agitated by afflictions.
Attached to the five qualities of desire,
they do not even become weary;
to this secret of the vajra family
they will never be joined.
They are attached to great desire, overcome by the passions of desire;
free of attachment to the awakening of the buddhas,
they will not be joined to this secret.
They are overcome by attachment to views;
through the passion of desire they hold views;
they are tightly bound by the noose of existence;
they have no attachment to the Buddha's teaching.
Bound by pride and by arrogance beyond pride, vicious, fierce, and extremely wrathful,
they become without compassion and without love:
for them the secret is not fitting.
For the deluded who think they are omniscient, who think themselves skilled in great wisdom,
this secret is not fitting.
Guide, how shall I explain it?
Yakṣas and rākṣasas,
piśācas, bhūtas, guhyakas,

gods and the rest, the greatly vicious,
will not enter the teaching.
I am a buddha, utterly at peace,
the mind of awakening, great joy;
these sentient beings are extremely vicious:
my words will not be accomplished.
I, the great victor, in the Great Vehicle am vast as the expanse of space;
alas, these sentient beings are inferior:
my words will not be accomplished.
I am the pure Great Vehicle,
unsullied by the mire of afflictions;
alas, these sentient beings are afflicted:
these words of mine will not be accomplished.
I am great wisdom and gnosis, thoroughly taught in the Great Vehicle;
alas, sentient beings have poor wisdom:
these words of mine will not be accomplished.
Great merit, great gnosis,
I am a host of great offerings;
alas, sentient beings have little merit:
these words of mine will not be accomplished.
These sentient beings do harm, everywhere pervaded by various fears, stirred by concepts, poor in wisdom;
they are not vessels for the Dharma of the buddhas.
In this world of the trichiliocosm,
the great lord Īśvara, too,
has become the very dispeller of all delusion,
of great power and great magical might.
He has a king who acts as his ally,
who wholly holds the mantras of illusion;
he is called Human Lineage, devoted to deluding sentient beings.
He is the king, the Great God (Śiva), equal to the chief, the great king;
he is called Maheśvara (Śiva), destroyer of vicious beings.

The great king who has his form,
the generator, the maker, the lord,
the great Brahmā, the great king, bestows the various views.
The great king of the desire realm is called Indra, lord of Śacī.
The vigorous son of Maheśvara, Ṣaṇmukha (Kārttikeya), of great magical power,
has the great name Mahāsena,
and the names Kumāra, the Invincible, and Five Lights.
These five great kings
are declared to be the lords of the three realms.
The five kings of great splendor,
of the three bodies, of great wonder:
the instigator Maheśvara, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and Maheśvara; the great king who has his body
is renowned as Maheśvara,
a being vicious and extremely fierce.
Those five kings,
with their mantras and their retinues, utterly delude sentient beings.
They hold great views
and have come under the power of Māra;
they are utterly afflicted by great afflictions,
and they also thoroughly afflict others.
They destroy sentient beings:
these words of mine will not be accomplished.
Maheśvara, the great self,
the great mind of the sublime self,

Through conceptual thought such as this
they utterly delude sentient beings.
Brahmā, the producer, lord of creatures,
the maker, the self, the creator:
through great views such as this

they utterly delude sentient beings.
Viṣṇu, the all-going, the all-pervader,
all cities having the nature of Viṣṇu:
not grasping things correctly in this way,
they bestow the bondage of views.
These kings, far and wide,
surely teach the doctrines of views;
deluded, they think themselves wise,
and they bind sentient beings.
Those sentient beings, urged on by others, surely rely on the proponents of views.
Viṣṇu, Brahmā, and the rest pay homage to Maheśvara.
So in every way, O gnosis of the buddhas,
these words of mine do not succeed.
These sentient beings have become deluded;
for them the secret is not fitting."
In a manner such as this Vajrasattva of great joy,
the yogin, remained in silence,
all the buddhas having understood.
The great protectors, all the buddhas,
the sages, the suns, every one of them, with a single voice spoke the great secret, the vajra words:
"Alas, these sentient beings are hard to tame, vicious, fierce, and extremely savage;
they are not tamed by all the buddhas;
therefore we supplicate you.
Protector, you are great wisdom;
you must speak the great means.
The mind of awakening is the great means;
it surely conquers all afflictions.
You who thoroughly tame all the vicious,
Protector, we supplicate you!
Magical display who tames the vicious,
you who fully proclaim the great means:

these sentient beings, who are not vessels,
will not be tamed by all the buddhas;
so the great means, the great wrath, please, Great Sage, teach it!"
Having heard the words of all the buddhas,
Vajrapāṇi, of great magical power, requested with these words,
spoke thus to all the buddhas:
"How wonderful! The great secret wheel, the great means, the great self,
the very substance of the teaching of the dharmadhātu, fully showing the wheel of means:
just as you have commanded,
so I shall do.
For the benefit of all sentient beings
I shall display fierceness itself."
Having spoken thus, the great sattva, the bodhisattva, the great self,
remaining silent, through yoga
entered into equipoise in fierceness itself.
The samādhi called
"Supreme Vajra, the Fierce Maṇḍala":
in such a samādhi the great fierce one entered equipoise.
Then from his heart there came forth the fierce and terrifying syllable hūṃ, which uttered the great wrathful one.
Vajrahūṃkāra, the wrathful king, came forth from the Protector's heart.
The whole surface of the earth shook,
and these grounds resounded with sound;
the whole of this trichiliocosm uttered the words "hūṃ hūṃ."
When the measureless, immeasurable kings of wrath had come forth, the greatly vicious in every direction
in that instant turned savage.
Then, becoming one once again,

massed into a single lump and tightly compressed,
the king of wrath, of great body, became one terrifying being.
He, the great king of wrath,
the great renown of all the buddhas,
the wrathful king, sitting before them,
once again fully uttered his heart mantra:
hūṃ tya hūṃ tya
Making the hair stand on end with terror,
the yakṣa, lord of all yakṣas, Vajrayakṣa, of great magical power:
this is the great wrathful one who was uttered.
This world of the trichiliocosm
was pervaded by the light of blazing garlands;
the vajra fire, greatly fierce,
shone everywhere and burst into flame.
The vicious ones outside, every one,
by the vajra fire arisen from the maṇḍala fully blazing,
became motionless and died.
The vicious, the Great God and the rest, whatever maṇḍalas of the families there were,
tormented by Vajrayakṣa, became motionless and burned.
He, the great Vajrayakṣa, of fierce form, utterly terrifying,
with a face wrinkled in a wrathful frown, turned black and blue.
He has a mouth with bared fangs,
his hair stands on end, most frightening;
he has red eyes,
and likewise a face displaying the vajra.
The fierce one holds the vajra and the fierce hosts;
alone, he is fully ablaze;
lord of noose, hook, and vajra, terrifying all the buddhas.
He makes all the grounds shake;

he makes this earth, too, shake.
The great yakṣas, bhūtas, and the rest, motionless, fell down beneath.
He, the fierce great yakṣa, terrifies all the buddhas.
Remaining before him,
they fully uttered this inspired utterance:
"How wonderful! The mind of awakening, Samantabhadra, wholly virtuous, as a means to tame sentient beings has become a pitiless wrathful one.
He who formerly was Vajrasattva, abiding in a peaceful form,
having taken up Vajrayakṣa, is renowned as Fierce Vajra." He, the fierce Vajradhara,
terrifying, making the hair stand on end,
also spoke the savage heart mantra of the mudrā of the four syllables hūṃ:
oṃ sumbhani sumbha hūṃ gṛhṇa gṛhṇa hūṃ gṛhṇāpaya gṛhṇāpaya hūṃ ānaya ho bhagavāna vajra hūṃ phaṭ Extremely savage and greatly renowned,
there likewise came forth from his heart
one four-faced and eight-armed,
fierce like the fire at the end of the eon.
He came forth like the vajra fire of time,
fully dispelling the side of the afflictions,
his brows knitted, his mouth with bared fangs,
and likewise his face utterly terrifying.
The samaya that burns the three worlds,
he burns all the vajra bearers;
with the sound of blazing garlands massing everywhere,
he blazes like the vajra fire of the eon.
The mudrā of Vajrahūṃkāra
he holds fully with his two hands.
The king holding the vajra bond, adorned with hook and noose,

with a vajra chain
bound in two hands, his face terrifying, threatening all the buddhas,
Vajracaṇḍa fully came forth.
He receives the fierce command:
"Give your command swiftly!
Otherwise I shall without doubt devour all of you buddhas."
Then all the buddhas spoke:
"ṭakki jaḥ hūṃ, utterly fierce one,
with your great power summon the Great God together with his family!"
Then the supreme king of knowledge, laughing with an air of pride,
the fierce wrathful one, roaring like a drum,
is to exhort Vajra Noose:
"Vajra Noose, great fierce one,

together with his army and his allies,
and likewise with his family and his maṇḍala, go and summon Maheśvara!"
vajrapāja hūṃ
The mighty great king
dwelt amid his various retinues;
together with the Terrifying Lady,
the lustful one was supremely sporting.
Vajra Noose went there
and threatened him with a wrathful sound.
He said to the mighty king,
"The Teacher invites you." Frightened and enraged, the Great God uttered terrifying words:
"I am the king of the three worlds;
is there any teacher other than me?" Vajra Noose, the great wrathful one,
spoke the words three times:
"The vajra wrathful one, the great king, earnestly invites you."

The Great God, Maheśvara,
again spoke three times:
"I alone am the king himself;
who is there to invite me?"
Then the Noose did as he was commanded.
The fierce wrathful one, utterly terrifying,
binding all his limbs,
summoned Maheśvara.
Fearful and frightened, the Great God lamented loudly and wept:
"There is no refuge at all;
great terror has arisen everywhere."
With strength and likewise with pride, displaying his strength and vigor,
he cut the noose and fled.
Having gone to his own abode,
he called the gods of the three worlds.
Gods and asuras, together with gandharvas, gathered in an instant,
and the retinues wept:
"Such a thing as was never done before
we have truly seen.
Who is this extremely fierce being?"
Vajra Noose went before the supreme Vajra Knowledge and reported:
"Maheśvara cut me loose, and Rudra and Brahmā have fled."
The supreme king of vajra knowledge,
the wrathful, savage, extremely fierce one, having heard words such as these,
blazed up on every side.
To the wrathful Vajra Chain
the fierce one gave his command:
"Go swiftly and summon the Great God together with his great family!"
The king of wrath, Vajra Chain, having heard, went to Maheśvara's abode;

binding all his limbs,
he summoned him wholly, together with the goddess.
In an instant they wept with terror,
and all the gods were utterly afraid;
in the suffering of fear they lamented:
"Today the Great God is no guide!"
With all their strength and vigor
they fought against all the vajras;
by might, strength, and vigor
they broke free, and all of them fled.
The Great God and all the rest fled in every direction.
Everything was thrown into turmoil by darkness;
in every direction they were terrified.
The wrathful Vajra Chain came back and told him everything:
"Into all directions without exception they have fled from our abode."
The wrathful one, the supreme Vajra Knowledge, once again became extremely enraged;
fully ablaze with blazing garlands,
he became Fierce Vajra himself.
Fiercely laughing "ha ha,"
he devours his own limbs,
he strikes his own head,
and he blazes, whirling and brandishing the vajra.
With distinctive features such as these
the wrathful one fully arose.
Again recollecting his own self,
the king of wrath uttered:
oṃ sumbhani sumbha hūṃ gṛhṇa gṛhṇa hūṃ gṛhṇāpaya gṛhṇāpaya hūṃ ānaya ho bhagavān vajra hūṃ phaṭ Joined with the king of wrath, he fully uttered the syllable jaḥ and fully dispatched Vajra Hook:
"Mighty one, go in fury!"

oṃ vajra jvala agni satriṣa aṃkuśa jaḥ jaḥ
The blazing Vajra Hook,
the great self, went in every direction,
and in an instant the mighty ones,
all the gods, were summoned.
The five kings, the lords,
and all the gods beyond counting,
together with their families and armies, were gathered into one.
He fully dispatched Vajra Chain:
"Bind them, you of great strength!"
All the gods with their hosts were bound with the five bonds.
The hosts with their inner retinues,
the hosts of gods, yakṣas, and rākṣasas, asuras, and the hosts of wind spirits and bhūtas,
and the other hosts of the vicious,
were all of them bound.
He fully dispatched Vajra Noose:
"Together with Vajra Hook, go and summon the maṇḍalas!"
From Vajra Noose, in passion, nooses streamed forth from all his limbs;
the noose whose nature is vajra became firm, without any doubt.
Ten countless ten millions of vajra hooks fully came forth;
to each of the gods and the others
they fastened the summoning at the crown of the head.
Having fastened onto the crown of the head of the Great God, Maheśvara, by Vajra Hook, the king, Maheśvara is summoned.
All the gods and the rest, with their retinues, weep to one another;
heaving long sighs on every side,
they speak to one another:

"Alas, suffering! Alas, death!
Where is our host being carried off?"
Burned in that instant
by that great blazing vajra,
all the gods and the rest were summoned
to the summit of Mount Meru, the mountain.
There in that place they all remained, surrounding it on every side.
Outside the vajra city
all those gods remained.
Outside the vajra fence
all the gods and the rest were summoned.
The outer vajra fence
is like a vajra whose nature is red-hot iron;
by the blazing vajras of the Vajra Bearer
they were intensely tormented from within.
Those hosts of gods, those beings, too, cried out with terrifying wails;
all of this trichiliocosm, too, fully uttered the sound "hūṃ hūṃ." Crying out, they spoke:
"What are these evil destinies?
What is this, never seen before?
Here there will be Vajradhara!"
In Vajradhara, that king, compassion arose once again on every side.
He released them all from their bonds,
beautiful with the vajra fire.
Vajrayakṣa, the great fierce one,
came out from his own maṇḍala
and called all the gods and the rest:
"Listen well to these words of mine!"
Then the kings of the gods and the rest said, "Who are you?
We have never seen you before,
nor have we seen this supreme place before." Vajrayakṣa, the great fierce one,

laughing "ha ha," said:
"I am Vajrayakṣa,
the devourer of all, hard to bear."
Then the Great God said:
"I do not know Vajrayakṣa;
I have never seen you before.
I alone am self-arisen."
Fierce Vajra declared:

"Abide swiftly by my command!
Otherwise, with this blazing vajra
I shall burn up your own family."
The Great God spoke these words:
"I do not abide by any teaching.
I am Īśvara, lord of the three worlds;
whose teaching should I abide by?
Whatever strength you have, with your retinue, today I shall show you mine.
What strength do you have?
You who have great strength, show it!"
Maheśvara, the great king, together with his hosts of bhūtas,
having spoken these words,
was about to display his fierceness.
This world of the trichiliocosm
was pervaded by garlands of blazing light rays, and with an utterly fierce "ha ha" Maheśvara set about displaying it:
oṃ śūla atriśūla mahāsahasraśūla āyudhe
The king who wields the trident brought forth a thousand of them;
with their prongs blazing on every side
they fought against the Vajra Bearer.
Nārāyaṇa said:
oṃ mahāsahasracakra āyudhe
When Viṣṇu had spoken these words,
a single wheel became a thousand forms,

all of them pervaded by blazing rays of light,
and they fought against the Vajra Bearer.
Śakra said:
oṃ mahāsahasravajra āyudhe
A thousand vajras came forth, the blazing vajras pervaded by heat;
it was Śakra who had spoken,
and they fought against the Vajra Bearer.
Kumāra said:
oṃ mahāsahasraśakṣya āyudhe
When Kumāra had spoken thus,
a thousand three-pointed spears came forth;
roaring with a fierce sound,
they fought against the Vajra Bearer.
Brahmā said:
oṃ mahāsahasradaṇḍa āyudhe
When Brahmā had spoken thus,
a thousand staffs came forth,
and with fierce and terrifying weapons
they fought against the Vajra Bearer.
And all the others who remained,
every one of them, their weapons too each becoming a thousand, fought against the Vajra Bearer.
Even whatever emanations there were,
and the outsiders bound by oath,
each surely becoming a thousand,
fought against the Vajra Bearer.
Fire too blazed on every side,
and a terrifying wind arose;
thunder roared and great lightning flashed, pervading in particular the three realms of existence.
A great din of "hala hala" resounded through the sky and the intermediate space.
The great host of Fierce Vajra and all the gods were locked in battle.
Then the king, Vajradhara,

savage, fierce, and terrifying,
spoke the vajra heart mantras,
the mudrās that answer the gods:
oṃ mahāsahasraharavajracakre oṃ mahāvajraśūle
oṃ dībtajvālagnivajra
oṃ vajraśakti
oṃ mahāvajranidhi
In this manner,
a thousand heart mantras were brought forth by the great Vajradhara in order to pacify the three realms of existence.
Savage, pervaded by blazing rays of light,
fully endowed with vajra fire,
they arose from the fierce heart mantras,
and Vajradhara sat in the center.
Those mudrās of the hosts of gods were utterly demolished and broken into pieces;
crushed, compressed, and mixed together,
they dissolved in every direction.
Tightly bound by the vajra fire,
the kings of the gods burst into flames.
From beneath, the ground blazed fiercely;
from above, the fire tormented them intensely.
The great king, Vajra Wrath,
said to Maheśvara:
"You of putrid body, great fierce one,
listen well to my command!
You who delight in dwelling in the charnel ground, whose body is smeared with ashes,
who eat human flesh,
listen well to my command!
You who are thoroughly smeared with fresh blood,
who wear a fresh hide as your garment,
whose retinue is all the gods,
listen well to my command!
Vicious and greatly fierce, night-roaming beggar, wearing a hide soaked in blood, your body smeared with ashes,

hear my command, you of fierce mind and putrid body!
Otherwise I shall burn you like grass with the fire of the eon's end, and you will become ash, like a heap of ashes from a burned corpse.
With your family, your army, and your maṇḍala, fierce yakṣa, you will be utterly destroyed and demolished by Fierce Vajra." Maheśvara said:
"I am Maheśvara, the wheel-turning monarch of all;
the hosts of the gods of the three worlds, every one, are my retinue.
Though you are extremely fierce, grimacing, of the world,
you should listen to my command.
The vicious and the retinues of many buddhas, the source of the buddhas' Dharma, I have emanated.
Peaceful, and in that the taming, the secret, stainless, gone beyond to the absence of affliction:
such a protector, joyful, is empowered by all who abide in the three times.
Again, listen to the words of my bhūtas."
Such were his words.
Then the king, Vajradhara,
supremely skilled in the aim of taming,
the wrathful, vicious, great savage one,
the fully blazing king of wrath,
from the mudrā of vajra blessing entered into equipoise in a samādhi of such activity; and the great sattva,
in order to tame the vicious,
taking up the way of the Dharma of wrath, brought forth from his whole body, starting from his feet up to the crown of his head, wrathful ones arisen from his own family.
oṃ vajrakrodhauṣṇiṣa hūṃ Vajroṣṇīṣa, the great wrathful one, having come forth from his blazing crown, makes all the grounds shake and conquers all the kings of wrath.
oṃ vajrabhṛkuṭikrodha hūṃ
The king of wrath with the wrathful frown came forth from the ūrṇā hair between the brows, fully endowed with terrifying fierceness, setting all bodies ablaze.

oṃ nisumbhavajra hūṃ
The supreme king of vajra knowledge
came forth from the mouth, fully endowed with blazing vajras
from the crown of the head down to the soles of the feet.
ṭakki hūṃ jaḥ
The great king of wrath of the heart came forth from the heart,
his body pervaded by blazing garlands,
terrifying, making the hair stand on end.
oṃ vajraaṃkuśa ākarṣaya hūṃ Vajra Hook, the great wrathful one, came forth from the right shoulder,
brandishing a vajra hook,
fully endowed with blazing vajras.
oṃ vajravāśakrodha ākaḍḍhya hūṃ phaṭ Vajra Noose, the great wrathful one,
came forth from the left shoulder,
fully endowed with blazing vajras,
encircling with a vajra noose.
oṃ vajrakīlikrodha hūṃ phaṭ
The king of wrath bearing a hook came forth from the center of the navel,
fully endowed with blazing on every side,
equal to Vajrayakṣa of supreme intelligence.
oṃ vajramekhalākrodha hūṃ phaṭ
The great wrathful one, the Girdle, the vajra of the waist, came forth,
fully endowed with blazing on every side.

endowed together with the mudrā.
oṃ vajra krodha bala hūṃ
The great king of wrath, Strength, came forth from the right upper arm,

blazing with blazing vajras, exceedingly proud with fire.
oṃ vajra balāya krodha hūṃ
The king of wrath, the Bracelet, came forth from the left upper arm,
secret, and pervaded by blazing vajras, filled completely with vajra wrath.
oṃ samaya vajra krodha hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ
The king of wrath, Samaya, likewise the wrathful harm-doer,
came forth from the right fist,
fully endowed with blazing on every side.
oṃ vajra muṣṭi krodha hūṃ phaṭ
The wrathful Fist, greatly fierce, came forth from the left fist,
brilliant with blazing vajras, richly adorned with vajra fire.
oṃ vajra bandha krodha hūṃ samaya hūṃ oṃ vajra añjali bandha krodha hūṃ samaya hūṃ Vajra Binding, the great king, and likewise Vajra Fingers came forth from the fingers
of the wrathful one's right and left hands.
oṃ vajra nakha hūṃ
oṃ vajra krodha aṃkuli mahā krodha hūṃ Vajra Claw, the great wrathful one, and likewise Vajra Claw Face came forth from the fingers
of the left and right hands.
oṃ vajra kumāra krodha kaṭi rāga hūṃ oṃ vajra kumāra krodha murdha ḍha ka hūṃ phaṭ
The wrathful king of the Waist, and likewise the wrathful one of the Crown, kings, came forth
from the left and right thighs.
oṃ śṛṃ kha li mahā krodha bandha hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra krodha āśāni bandha hūṃ

Thunderbolt and Vajra Chain, wrathful kings of great miraculous power,
kings pervaded by garlands of flame,
came forth from the kneecaps.
oṃ vajra bandha krodha hana hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra krodha aṃkuśa hūṃ phaṭ Vajra Staff, the great wrathful one, and the Vajra Limb who draws in,
these two yakṣas, together with their blaze, came forth from the shins.
oṃ nūpura krodha hūṃ
oṃ vajra krodha mogha bega ānaya hūṃ phaṭ Then Austerity, the great wrathful one, and likewise Vajra Amogha himself, these two kings of great might,
came forth from the ankles.
oṃ vajra bandha hala krodha hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra pātāla māraya krodha hūṃ phaṭ
The Foot, the wrathful one of great might,
and likewise the wrathful one of the Sole,
intent on radiating blazing flames,
both came forth from the soles of the feet.
These and other kings
came forth beyond measure,
countless as the sands of the Ganges,
as the atomic particles of the elements.
From all the spaces between the body hairs and from all the crevices of the body,
the great kings, the vajra wrathful ones,
came forth from their own heart mantras.
Through the samādhi of Vajra Wrath
they emanated throughout all directions, and becoming one once again,
they took their places in the maṇḍala.
Assembled before all the buddhas,
they proclaimed this solemn utterance:
"How wonderful, the great skillful means of the buddhas!

How wonderful, wisdom most excellent!
The samādhi of all the buddhas
is declared to be the Great Vehicle.
How wonderful, all the buddhas have come to be called immeasurable!
These wrathful ones of the vajra family are all declared to be of the vajra family.
For the sake of benefiting all sentient beings,
that itself is the great buddha family."
Then their secret names,
all declared to be of the vajra family:
arisen from the great wrathful one,
the lord of vajra wrath is proclaimed;
Vajra Uṣṇīṣa, Vajra Ūrṇā, Sumbha, the mighty one among us,
the Wrathful One of the Heart, the great king,
the King Cakravartin, Vajra Hook, Vajra Noose,
the mighty Wrathful One of the Waist,
the Girdle and the Mighty One,
the Bracelet, and likewise Samaya, Vajramuṣṭi, Vajra Binding,
the extremely fierce Vajra Fingers, Vajra Nail, Vajra Face,
likewise the wrathful king of the Waist,
the wrathful king of the Crown,
the Chain of great miraculous power, Vajra Thunderbolt, Vajra Staff,
the vajra wrathful Fierce Limb,
Vajra Anklet, Vajra Amogha, Vajra Foot, and likewise the Sole:
these kings of the samaya vajra are declared to be of the vajra family.
These and other kings,
great kings of great miraculous power,
arose from the mind of awakening,
and ever more, countless others besides,

in their fury devouring their own flesh, abide with garlands of flame pervading the ground,
blazing like the fire at the end of the eon.
Vajra Wrath, having brought forth the maṇḍala, the vajra family, commanded the extremely fierce ones:
"Tame the malevolent ones, and heed my command!"
All the vajra bearers, having received his command, were to uphold it, and with one voice all the deities recited this vidyā:
oṃ ni sumbha vajra hūṃ phaṭ
As the mighty vajra wrathful ones, Uṣṇīṣa and all the rest, spoke it,
the malevolent ones, the Great God and the rest, fell down face downward.
When the gods had been made to faint
by the mighty Vajra Wrath, with "Vajra blaze, blaze!"
they proclaimed the heart mantra:
oṃ vajra anala daha paca matha bhañja raṇa hūṃ phaṭ
The great wrathful one, Vajra Fire, came forth from that in an instant,
and having burned those gods, likewise cast them face down.
Burned intensely by vajra fire,
set ablaze by vajra flames,
scorched and cooked,
the gods and the rest cried out in anguish.
Those great vajra wrathful ones,
likewise the great wrathful ones and the rest,
all speaking with one voice,
once again spoke a heart mantra:
oṃ vajra āveśa a
The great wrathful one of Vajra Possession came forth from the heart of the Vajra Bearer, went to the abodes of all the gods,

and likewise descended upon all the gods, the Great God and the rest.
Made to suffer terribly
by the vajra possession, they devoured their own limbs,
each one devouring the other.
All, together with the Vajra Bearer, recited the Vajra Noose:
oṃ vajra jvala agni pradīpta mahā vajra aṃkuśa ākarṣaya hūṃ Vajra Hook, the king, went forth and in an instant summoned them;
having summoned all the gods,
he made them fall upon their heads.
Summoned by the Vajra Hook, drawn in by the Vajra Noose, burned intensely by vajra flames,
feet up and heads down,
crying out "Ha ha!",
they suffered, with great and terrible cries.

They made supplication to the Vajra Bearer:
"Mighty One, do not destroy us!" Likewise, all the gods and the rest were summoned into the maṇḍala.
All, together with the Vajra Bearer,
recited the Vajra Chain:
oṃ vajra sphoṭa bandha hūṃ phaṭ Those malevolent hosts of gods
were bound with the five bonds.
Vajra Chain, the great wrathful one,
bound them with firm bonds.
The wrathful one, the great Vajrarāja, exceedingly ferocious, of great strength,
once again called the heart mantra to mind and proclaimed his own heart mantra:
hūṃ

Through the uttering of the fierce heart mantra those malevolent ones fell flat;
they became motionless, as if dead,
and came close to the suffering of death.
Then King Vairocana,
lord of all dharmas, endowed with power,
called out to Vajradhara,
the great king, Vajra Wrath:
"Great being, listen!
These ones terrify sentient beings,
yet this circle of the three worlds,
do not destroy their lives!"
Then King Vajradhara,
the powerful lord of all vajras,
having heard the Buddha's words,
recited this vidyā:
oṃ vajra uttiṣṭha
Vajra Raising, of great miraculous power:
by the mere uttering of it,
all the gods and the rest
came back to life once again.
They were freed from all suffering,
and the suffering of death was stilled.
Through the loving-kindness of Vajra Raising, since all the buddhas had urged it on,
all the gods and the rest
rose up through the Buddha's loving-kindness.
Joining their palms, with a single voice they made this request to the Blessed One:
"Blessed One, for what fault
do you tame us in this way?
May all the compassionate buddhas please protect us completely!"
The Blessed One said:
"I am not able to protect you completely or to benefit you.
This is the fierce Vajradhara, declared by all the buddhas to be the master."

They said:
"We do not understand how this can be fitting for you, the Blessed One.
Who is it that has become master of the buddhas?
What, then, is a noble buddha like?"
The Blessed One said:
"The awakening of all the buddhas:
from that he became the Vajra Bearer.
Whatever is the mind of awakening, that is the vajra;
whatever is the vajra holds the fierce form."
They said:
"All the buddhas are utterly peaceful;
that is the same as awakening, arisen from love and the mind of awakening.
From where did such a fierce one arise?"
The Blessed One said:
"This is taming by skillful means;
it thoroughly tames all the malevolent.
This glorious Vajradhara
arose from the mind of awakening."
Then King Vajradhara,
Vajra Wrath, the great being,
called out to all the hosts of gods and spoke to Maheśvara (Śiva):
"O malevolent ones, listen to the commands of my teaching!
Otherwise, with blazing vajras
I shall burn you together with your families." Viṣṇu and the other gods spoke thus with a single voice:
"Just as the Lord has commanded, Great King, so shall we do."
Then the Great God said:
"I do not know Vajrayakṣa.
I myself am the king;
listen to my command!"

Hearing the words of the Great God, Vajra Wrath, blazing fiercely, proclaimed the king of wrath called Vajrayakṣa the Crusher:
oṃ vajra ni sumbha hūṃ
By the uttering of this wrathful one,
exceedingly ferocious, of great strength,
Maheśvara fainted
and likewise fell to the ground.
Motionless, he came under the power of death;
he lay there like a felled tree, without stirring, without moving,
tormented by Vajra Wrath.
The Blessed One said:
"Vajra Wrath, all-knowing one,
why is this great being exhausting the cause of his life and bringing him to ruin?"
Then King Vajradhara,
urged on by the Buddha's compassion, spoke this vajra vidyā called Vajra Life.

oṃ vajra āyuḥ
Through the uttering of this vidyā Maheśvara rose up.
Restored to life by Vajra Life,
he attained great bliss.
Bowing down at the feet of Vairocana, the great sage, he made this plea:
"Protector, Blessed One, be my refuge!
Is that Vajradhara not cruel?"
The all-knowing Blessed One said:
"I am not able to show you mercy.
This one is exceedingly fierce toward the malevolent;
go for refuge to him himself." Vajra Wrath summoned the Great God

and spoke these words:
"Great malevolent one, listen
to the commands of my teaching!"
To Vajrayakṣa, the great being,
the Great God replied:
"I am able to bear a great death,
but I will not abide by your command."
When, through anger, the malevolence grew,
the greatly fierce Vajra Wrath uttered the fierce heart mantra, the exceedingly terrifying hūṃ:
hūṃ
Through the uttering of the syllable hūṃ Maheśvara fell once again.
The greatly fierce Vajra Wrath recited the drawing in by the feet:
oṃ pāta ākarṣaṇa vajra hūṃ Then this Vajra Lord,
by reciting, brought forth Vajra Wrath,
and these words were spoken.
Proclaiming the command, with great light, Vajra Wrath commanded:
oṃ bāta ākarṣaya sarva vajradhara kacara phaṭ vajra hūṃ jaḥ
When the great wrathful one had spoken this,
Maheśvara together with Umā
was drawn in by the vajra feet, by the vajra that draws in by the feet.
Vajra Wrath drew them in,
feet up and heads down;
the whole world was set laughing,
and they were tormented by vajra torment.
Then King Vajradhara,
pressing down under his feet
Maheśvara together with Umā, struck Maheśvara with the vajra.
With his left foot
he pressed down Maheśvara, and with his right he squeezed the goddess Umā between her breasts.

With this secret vajra mantra
he pressed Maheśvara down hard:
oṃ vajra ākrama ho
Once again Vajra Wrath recited the vidyā of possession:
oṃ vajra āveśa hana hana traṭa Thereupon Maheśvara and those with him, with their own hands, a thousand times,
struck their own faces terrifyingly;
it came to a full thousand blows.
All who dwell in the three worlds cried out with a great wail:
"This king of ours
has come to such a state!"
Then in King Vajradhara
love and compassion arose.
Placing compassion foremost,
he recited the Buddha's Loving-kindness:
oṃ buddha maitri rakṣa
When the glorious lord Vajradhara then spoke this mantra, the suffering of Maheśvara was stilled in that very instant.
Through being touched by the feet of Vajrapāṇi, Maheśvara attained
the great ground,
and likewise samādhi and dhāraṇī.
Casting off his ordinary body,
he offered it to Vajradhara.
The Great God died and passed on from here,
and having died and cast off his body, beyond buddha fields equal in number to the sands of thirty-two Ganges rivers, there is a delightful buddha field called Bhasmacchanna, Covered with Ash.

Going there, the Great God displayed the arising of a buddha:
there he abides as the Tathāgata Bhasmeśvaranirghoṣa, Lord of Ash with Melodious Voice.
Then that dead body
proclaimed a solemn utterance;
through the power of all the buddhas
it spoke forth a single verse:
"How wonderful, the unsurpassed buddha wisdom of all the buddhas!
Having been slain, in an instant
I have been set in the state of nirvāṇa."
The great king Vajra Wrath
brought forth Maheśvara, and summoning Viṣṇu
and the other gods, he said:
"Lords, enter fully
into this most supreme maṇḍala!
If you do not do so,
you will be made like Maheśvara." Then all the gods were afraid, and terrified, they all said:
"We wish to do just that.
We have become your servants.
King, how could we not accomplish your samaya?
We are your retinue;
give us your command for a great eon!" Vajra Wrath said:
"Go for refuge
to the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha.
Having truly generated the mind of awakening, devote yourselves wholly to all sentient beings.
Give up the taking of life;
stealing and speaking falsehood,
and likewise the wives of others:
give these up first of all.

Whatever brings harm to sentient beings
you should by no means do.

Applying yourselves fully to the conduct of awakening, be diligent in it and never slack.
These are the samaya of the command of my teaching, rightly declared.
Listen to my words!
Otherwise I shall burn you completely."
Then the circle of the three worlds, having accepted those words,
truly generated the mind of awakening and went for refuge to the Three Jewels.
The great king Vajra Wrath,
having conferred the mudrā upon all,
by means of this heart of the mudrā had them enter the maṇḍala of Vajra Tirinṭiri:
oṃ vajra samaya gṛhṇa buddha samaye vajrasatva samaya manusmara sarva tathāgata samaya traṃ dṛḍho me bhava apratiharo me bhava sarva karma su ca me cittaṃ śreyaḥ kuru ha ha ha ha hūṃ
Then by its mere recitation
the mudrā descended upon all,
and all the mudrās
of Vajra Tirinṭiri were shown.
Having had them enter in due order,
he empowered them with the vajra jewel.
Placing the vajra emblem in their hands,
he empowered them with vajra names.
There all the gods
received the empowerment of vajra names.
First the lords of the three worlds were empowered in due sequence.
The one who abides as Viṣṇu became known as Illusion Vajra.
Kumāra became Vajra Bell, Brahmā the Vajra Sage,

Indra the Vajra Weapon:
these are declared to be lords of vidyā.
The four kings of great splendor,
of great miraculous power and great strength,
who move through the sky,
were empowered with vajra names:
the Sun became Vajra Coil, likewise the Moon Vajra Light,
the Great Staff Vajra Staff, and Piṅgala Vajra Piṅgala.
These and other kings of wrath were empowered as vajra wrathful ones.
Then the gods who move in the sky
were empowered with vajra names:
the Great Intoxicated became the Vajra Intoxicated, Vajra Garland the Honey Maker;
Vijaya and Jayakara,
Vajra Knowledge and the Victorious,
the kings, the Gaṇapatis:
these and others were empowered.
Then those who dwell upon the earth
were empowered with vajra names:
the Guardian of the Treasury became the Pestle, Fire likewise became Vajra Fire,
the Great Wind became Vajra Wind, and the Terrifier, Vajra Terrifier.
Such messengers and others were empowered by the supreme vajra.
Then those who dwell beneath the earth:
Vajra Hook, the Leg Eater; likewise Yama became Vajra Black;
the Crown of the Earth, the Obstructor Vajra;
and Varuṇa, the Protector, Vajradhara.
Then the goddesses, as was fitting,
were empowered in due sequence:
with the empowerment of vajra names
the supreme mothers were empowered.

Vaiṣṇavī became Vajra Gold,
the Six-Faced One's consort Vajra Maiden, Brahmāṇī the Vajra Eightyfold Lady, Aindrī the Vajra Fist Lady,
the Slayer the Vajra Slayer herself, Jyeṣṭhā the Vajra Radiant Lady, and then the Staff, the Supreme Vajra Lady.
Hārītī became the Vajra Girdle,
the Slayer the Vajra Terrifying Lady, Thunderbolt the Vajra Thunderbolt Lady, Revatī the Vajra Powerful Lady,
the Clothed One the Vajra Clothed Lady,
the Vajra Messenger the Peaceful Lady, Vāyu's goddess the Vajra Swift Lady, Kauberī the Vajra Raised Hood,
the goddess of Fire likewise Vajra Blaze, Vārāhī the Vajra Faced Lady,
Vajra Black Lady, Cāmuṇḍī, Varuṇa's goddess the Vajra Makara Lady, and the Noseless One the Emanation Lady.
These and other goddesses without number were empowered.
Each having realized her own family,
they were declared, as was fitting, to be ladies of the deities.
Then he gave the binding of the mudrā and likewise the heart of the samaya.
All the lords of all the gods,
having been summoned, likewise came under his power.
Binding the two vajra mudrās, binding the threatening forefinger and the hook,
for binding and for releasing, the being whose aim is the work to be done:
before him you are to remain in order to accomplish his tasks.
Lest your life be ruined,
likewise do not give the samaya away.
In full, in the great mudrā,

through the Compendium of the Great Vehicle,
the one who applies vajra yoga:
this is what is taught as Reality.
All those supreme maṇḍalas,
and likewise all the gods and the rest,
were summoned and made to enter fully.
The Vajra Bearer, having taken control, empowered all of them with the vajra and marked them with vajra names.
The Great God alone
was struck down beneath his foot and kept there.
He who had grown so malevolent in the world became known as the Heart of Malevolence.
Into the maṇḍala of the king of malevolence beings will come, without any doubt.
For a moment, on each day of the month,
for a month, in that maṇḍala, hundreds of thousands of beings are made to suffer in that instant.
There are those that confront the mind, diseases that steal away vitality,
those that kill human beings,
and even great poisons;
those that destroy cities,
towns and villages,
those that cut off sentient beings,
those that leave the land empty of people;
those so fierce and terrifying, merciless, doing evil,
killing and destroying,
stealing away wisdom,
taking various fierce forms,
down even to the animal realm,
harming sentient beings,
swiftly stealing vitality;
bad harvests, hail and rain,
causing the rain not to fall,

the torments of cold and heat produced in an instant, causing grahas to descend,
surely giving rise to the supreme māras, distracting the mind:
such yakṣas without end.
Then King Vajradhara,
lord of the abode of the Jewels,
with the eye of wisdom beheld
the people struck by various diseases.
Beings hostile to the samaya, pestilence and likewise afflictions, fevers, grahas and fierce poisons are destroying these people.
Stirred up by every kind of suffering, pervaded by various terrors,
all ruined and overwhelmed,
they suffer with fierce suffering.
In order to make them happy once again,
he took up fully the black mantra.
Ḍākinīs, mātṛkās and yoginīs pervade all the affairs of beings;
fevers, grahas and bhūtas,
ḍākinīs, mātṛkās and bhūtas,
and the malevolent pervade everywhere this world, this vessel of suffering.

Seeing this, King Vajradhara gave rise to compassion:
"Alas, these beings suffer,
and there is no one to show them mercy.
I alone am self-arisen,
and likewise I take away all suffering.
They conceive of me wrongly,
and for those people there is no mercy.
Whoever is Maheśvara,
and all the malevolent, I shall thoroughly tame.

Perfect awakening will arise of itself;
all people without exception are to be protected.
All of them are to be summoned,
and likewise the samaya is to be guarded.
By doing both harm and benefit, these people will be liberated."
Then King Vajradhara,
the great being, entered into equipoise
in the samādhi of the kind called Protecting and Benefiting the Maṇḍala.
From the great protectors, all the buddhas,
he received the command in this way.
Then the heart mantra of all the buddhas was likewise brought forth:
oṃ vajri sumbha ni sumbha hūṃ phaṭ
Then King Vajradhara,
taking up the Buddha's command,
in order to summon the outer maṇḍala, brought forth the heart mantra of the hook:
oṃ vajra samaya ākarṣaya sarva maṇḍala vajradhara satva māti krama hūṃ phaṭ Through the recitation of the vidyā, from the Vajra Hook, utterly firm, supreme hooks of great being came forth in countless hundreds.
This world of a billion worlds gradually dissolved completely.
Whatever malevolent maṇḍalas were seen in the ten directions, having summoned those malevolent ones,
he likewise made them into a single mass.
Vajra Fire spoke out everywhere, and bringing down the summit of Meru, those beyond measure and beyond counting came into the outer maṇḍala.
Throughout the abode of the Vajra Lord they took their places as the retinue.

Then King Vajradhara
called out to the malevolent maṇḍala:
"O malevolent ones, give up harming people!
Take up the samaya,
and give up killing any living being!
Otherwise, with my blazing right hand
I shall likewise turn you to ash."
The samaya maṇḍala of the malevolent made this request with a single voice:
"Protector, we are piśācas;
tell us what we are to do."
Then the fierce Vajradhara,
hearing the words of the unrestrained,
with the command of Vajra Wrath, of great majesty, spoke the fierce heart mantra:
oṃ vajra krodha hana daha paca vidhāṃsaya vikṛha sarva duṣṭān samaya mudrā manḍala bhañja bhañja mardha mardha khāda khāda pāra mantra vajra samaya hā phaṭ
When the great wrathful one recited this,
those exceedingly fierce malevolent ones were scorched and fell flat, and their samaya mudrā was broken.
They wailed and wept,
and spoke to one another:
"Let us do just as he says;
yet we need not speak the truth." Vajrasattva, the greatly fierce,
by his very nature the self of the buddhas,
the mighty Lord of Secrets,
the all-knowing Blessed One, spoke:
oṃ ni sumbha hana daha paca gṛhṇa bandha hūṃ phaṭ
Then King Vajradhara,
abiding fully in the Buddha's command,
Vajra Wrath, the great devourer, recited the fierce heart mantra:
oṃ mahā vajra krodha pāda sarva duṣṭa manḍala phinā śaya sarva duṣṭa samyayan vikira vidhvaṃsaya sphoṭaya bhañjaya bhañjaya sarva duṣṭa samaya mudrāṃ bhandha gṛhṇa ha nad ha paca sarva duṣṭa samaya satva samaya hūṃ phaṭ

Then by its mere recitation,
Vajra Wrath, the great being,
ferocious, fierce, utterly terrifying,
Vajra Wrath was brought forth.
Seizing those hostile to the samaya,
together with their families and their armies,
he terrified them with utter terror,
and even the ocean shook.
By those terrifying mudrās they were destroyed and overpowered;
burned by vajra fire,
they were all turned to ash.
How can the Vajra Bearer, arisen from the mind of awakening, burn sentient beings?
These are words to be interpreted:
born of the beneficial family, the lord of victors, knowing the stains of the afflictions, attachment, faults and views and the rest,
the Vajra Bearer seized these stains and burned them with the fire of wisdom.
Beings, greatly afraid and terrified,
through the conduct of awakening abide in awakening;
they are born in the abode of Akṣobhya, and the Vajra Bearer became supreme.
Vajrapāṇi, the great being,
entered fearlessly into equipoise
in the samādhi of the kind called
The Great Vajra Summoning the Mudrā.
In order to train the ḍākinīs,
he received the command from the Victor.
Then all the buddhas
spoke to the mighty Vajrapāṇi: oṃ hana hana vajra hūṃ phaṭ
Then the fierce Vajradhara,
having heard the words of all the buddhas,

recited this mantra of his own,
the vajra that summons the terrifying:
oṃ vajra ākarṣaya śīghraṃ sarva duṣṭa gṛhṇa vajra satyena hūṃ jaḥ
Then by its mere recitation,
the ḍākinīs who steal vitality,
together with their yoga, mantras and mudrās,
all gathered at Meru.
Summoned by the Vajra Hook,
they blazed, wreathed in flames.
Joining their palms at the crown of the head, they said:
"Vajradhara, protect us!"
The greatly fortunate Vajra Bearer said:
"O great host of the malevolent, quickly give up killing and heed my command!"
Each of them said:
"We here are piśācas.
Please teach us a means by which we may stay alive always."
Then King Vajradhara
spoke this means to them.

"Whoever has died once a month has passed,
take that one as your food.
Those who, free of attachment to the mind of awakening, make a practice of reviling the secret,
I join together with you:
I grant that you may devour them.
This heart mantra of the mudrā you must always hold,
and, abandoning all outsiders,
guard the teaching of the Buddha.
oṃ vajra pratigṛhṇa hṛdaya ākarṣaya caryayaṃ me sadhodhena miniyate hāsaridhayaṃ niṣkamadu samaya hūṃ jaḥ"
Then King Vajradhara,
endowed with his own mantra and mudrā, emanated the wrathful one, the King of the Crown,
the yogin.

"If you transgress the pledge, the great multicolored being will always split your heads and surely burn you together with your kin."
In the samādhi
called King of Nectar Medicine
the great being became absorbed,
and searched for the sake of curing disease.
The Blessed One spoke:
oṃ vajra hūṃ phaṭ
Then King Vajradhara,
summoning all the diseases,
which destroy all sentient beings,
spoke the heart mantra of summoning:
oṃ vajra samaya ānaya sarva duṣṭa jvāraṇi dināśaya hūṃ phaṭ
Then by its mere recitation,
all the hosts of diseases and grahas,
and the fevers and the rest, hearing it, feet upward and heads downward, wreathed in blazing fire,
cried out "Ha ha!" in terror:
"Without destroying our race, O Great Wrathful One, give us your command!"
The great Vajra Yogin said:
"Listen well to my command!
Give up harming sentient beings,
and do not steal their luster either!"
They said:
"O Vajra King, we beg you,
protect our lives!
We all feed on vital splendor;
please devise some means for us."
Then Vajrasattva, the great king,
the one of great power, said:
"Whoever upholds my mantras and mudrās,
do them no harm.
oṃ vajra karma viśodhaya sarva āparaṇani buddha satve samye hūṃ

Moreover, all the great mudrās gathered in the Great Vehicle, all that is fully taught in the king of secret sūtra collections:
in whatever place their mantras and mudrās
are constantly practiced,
in that place too, at any time,
you must do no harm at all."
When he had said this, all the grahas cried out "Hi hi!"
and to the yogin of the crown
they surrendered all their harm-doing.
Then King Vajradhara,
lord of the supreme abode of all,
the one of great intelligence, became absorbed in the great mudrā free of evil.
In order to bind the lower realms,
he received the command from the protectors,
and all the buddhas, the great protectors,
together spoke the heart mantra:
oṃ kṣepaya vajra svāhā
The great means of Vajrasattva arose from the vajra.
Out of love for sentient beings,
all evils were summoned.
oṃ sarva pāpaṃ apāyana viśodhana vajra samaya hūṃ phaṭ Having said this, the great yogin in an instant summoned the lower realms, and near the king of mountains wailing and the like were seen.
Vajrasattva, the great yogin,
said to the beings of the lower realms:
"To the Three Jewels and to my teaching, quickly go for refuge, to the teaching!"
All of them said:
"O Mighty One, please protect us!
Whatever the Lord has commanded,

just so shall we do."
Then King Vajradhara
spoke the supreme secret
that tears evil apart and surely binds, that utterly destroys all evil:
oṃ vajrapāṇi visphoṭaya sarva apāya bhandhanāni pramokṣaya sarvāpāyagatabhyaḥ sarva satvaṃ sarva tathāgata vajra samya ṭvātha
By this vidyā empowering the beings who bear the causes of the lower realms, the wheel of the lower realms was torn apart and fell headlong into the ocean.
Likewise, dying and passing from the lower realms,
all of them were fully liberated.
Fully liberated from all suffering, they attained the state of the Vajra Lord.
Likewise, at the feet of the Sage Vairocana they were born.
By the power of Vajrasattva,
the unfavorable states were likewise exhausted.
By the power of Vajrasattva,
in that very instant they attained peace.
Various marvelous, greatly secret miracles came forth.
This world of the trichiliocosm
abided in the nature of vajra jewels, adorned with the seven precious substances,
made beautiful with vajra jewels.
All who had entered into its family were purified of every suffering.
Beings came to be happy,
fully endowed with vajra bliss.
This field of the great supreme one became renowned as a pure field, pervaded everywhere by pure beings,
likewise of the nature of the vajra yoga.
Moreover, forests of trees and the like no longer appeared; in great marvel,

all things of the nature of the seven precious substances grew forth from the forests and grasses.
Free of all highs and lows,
it appeared level like the palm of a hand,
pleasant to the touch like kācali cloth:
so the trichiliocosm came to stand.
All the sufferings of the hells and the rest,
the lower realms first of all, were stilled.
The sufferings of hunger and thirst ceased entirely, and all abided in sameness.
The oceans all dissolved away,
and the forms of the mountains, too, spread out everywhere.
Humans became equal to the gods of Paranirmitavaśavartin.
Moreover, there was no encircling ring of mountains,
no Meru, no Mandara,
no abodes of the god realms,
no ocean, and no asuras,
nor any dwelling places of the nāgas.
There were no human homes or houses;
it was free of cities, regions and provinces,
together with their caves.
There were no human dwellings at all,
no rivers, caves or valleys,
nor even human bodies.
No sentient being whatever appeared here.
There was no wheel of the lower realms,
no unfavorable states and no suffering,
no women, men and the like,
no camels, elephants or sheep.
Wish-fulfilling trees and fragrant trees were beautiful, of the nature of the seven precious substances, and oceans of perfumed water were beautiful with many kinds of jewels.
From all the delightful trees sounds of music poured forth, and the sounds of the Dharma in that music arose throughout the trichiliocosm.

Just as the summit of Meru, the king of mountains, belonging to the Vajra Lord,
so the abode of the trichiliocosm blazed with light of various kinds.

This world of the trichiliocosm
came to stand perfectly square, and all the outer abodes on every side appeared opened out as well.
Again there was no sun and no moon,
there were no stars and no gods;
even within their own houses
the gods themselves could not be seen.
It was lit throughout by the light of the buddhas,
by captivating rays of many kinds,
through which the field was wholly purified, delightful with vajra jewels.
Even the abode of the Vajra Lord
no longer appeared.
Elsewhere, in the abode of a single ground,
where the buddhas display their magical emanations,
this world of the trichiliocosm
was bright with divine lotuses, beautiful with the seven precious substances,
filled with delightful masses of fragrance.
In the center of the field of the great eon,
upon a most lovely maṇḍala,
a vajra lion throne
eighty thousand yojanas in size arose.
All around, in all the directions,
each measuring sixty thousand yojanas, beautiful, of the nature of vajra jewels,
four lion thrones arose.
Vajra canopies were spread out,
tassels of silk hung down,
nets of bells hung down,

and the field was adorned on every side.
Flowers of every kind were strewn all about;
it was covered with clouds of many kinds,
pervaded everywhere by many fragrances,
and adorned with wish-fulfilling trees.
The delightful wish-fulfilling trees and beautiful vajra music gave forth their sounds.
Together with this very field,
in a nature free of obstruction,
everything appeared in all directions.
Again there was nothing to fear.
This world of the trichiliocosm
was lit throughout by all the buddhas,
countless as the sands of the Ganges,
as many as the subtlest particles.
Like a pod filled with sesame seeds,
it was lit throughout by all the buddhas.
From every direction, without exception,
all the buddhas came here.
On the central lion seat,
in the fearless dharmadhātu, Vairocana of great power,
the Teacher, the Blessed One, was seated.
In the east is Akṣobhya,
in the south is Ratnasambhava,
in the west is Amitābha,
in the north is Amoghasiddhi:
the great protectors in the four directions are seated upon vajras.
In the directions and the intermediate directions
they abide, focused in sameness.
They were shown forth from the dharmadhātu,
and all the buddhas were firmly seated.
The five aspects of manifest awakening made the dharmadhātu firm.
All the countless buddhas,

the Vajra Bearers, were seated upon the five.
Pervading each of the directions,
a single buddha was seated.
The intermediate directions, above and below,
Vairocana made firm.
The dharmadhātu having been made firm,
the buddha of the central direction was seated.
Then the magical emanations of the buddhas,
the essence of Dharma and complete enjoyment,
the magical emanations of the bodhisattvas, all the buddhas, upon their own five lion thrones were seated.
Countless and immeasurable,
the dharmatā of the buddhas without exception,
like a clear drawing,
became the entire trichiliocosm.
The bodhisattvas, in great joy,
were seated upon lotuses.
Possessing the central wheel,
five countless koṭis,
endowed with the play of the buddhas,
all the Vajra Bearers were seated.
Firmly seated in the eastern quarter,
five countless koṭis,
displaying vajra emanations,
were seated with their wheel.
All abiding in the southern direction,
five countless koṭis,
endowed with jewel emanations,
were seated with their wheel.
Five countless koṭis
abiding in the western direction, displaying lotus emanations,
were seated with their wheel.
Five countless koṭis
abiding in the northern direction, displaying action emanations,

were seated with their wheel.
Those of the secret and of offering,
the goddesses and the vajra goddesses,
countless and immeasurable:
the twelve filled the maṇḍala.
The gatekeepers, countless,
the four endowed with supreme yoga,
the kings, abide in the east and the south,
in the west and the north.
Arisen from the Dharma Body, having become the Body of Complete Enjoyment, all these great beings
arose from Dharma and complete enjoyment.
Whatever great-souled bodhisattvas of the ten directions as well had attained the ground of great yoga, all of them, too, came here.
The hosts that entirely filled as many buddha fields
as equal the sands of the Ganges, all of them came.
Through the power of all the buddhas
the fields became vast,
and in all the lands, what was done brought no harm and no injury.
Just as the world of the trichiliocosm was before without any gap, so the buddhas and bodhisattvas abided without any gap.
There was not even a speck of space in which the buddhas did not appear.
The bodhisattvas, the great yogins,
those of the forty grounds,
or those born of the Dharma,
the greatly renowned children of the Buddha,
those arisen from the five families and the rest,
those displaying the buddhas' magical emanations, and the hosts of bodhisattvas dwelling here:

the supreme ones were seen in the directions and intermediate directions.
Of all the countless buddhas, the gods dwelling in this place saw only the five buddhas.
Apart from the buddhas, the arhats,
they saw no one at all in this field:
not the wheel of the vajra family,
nor the hosts of the maṇḍala.
Seated in the center and the directions,
the five buddhas were what they saw.
They saw Vajra Wrath,
who had harmed Maheśvara.
Together with the five buddhas, likewise, six or seven wrathful ones abide.
Brahmā and the other gods were struck with amazement.
Frightened and terrified, those gods spoke to one another:
"We see the Lord just as he is:
what utterly wondrous thing is this that appears?
Again, the worlds of the gods are not seen within existence;
there are no beings of the five destinies,
no Meru and no ocean;
the moon and the sun are not seen,
nor are there mountains or houses.
Have we become deluded,
or have our eyes gone blind,
or are our minds distracted?
What is this magical display of illusion?
We saw terror before:
fiercely summoned, we were reduced to ashes
on the summit of Meru, king of mountains, we were tormented by great suffering.
Again, there is no Meru,

there is no Wrathful One of great miraculous power, nor that other, the one Great Wrathful One who brings harm to Maheśvara.
Even the place that had become small appears here as vast.
This trichiliocosm, too, does not appear:
we have gone to another world."
Saying such various things,
they spoke to one another.
Then, falling silent,
they gazed at the Vajra Bearer.
As though pervaded by darkness
by yakṣas, bhūtas, piśācas and the rest, by all the vicious ones, grahas and the like,
so they saw this trichiliocosm.
Nothing else at all did they see;
elsewhere the directions were pervaded by darkness.
Bewildered by Vajra Wrath, stupefied by illusion,
utterly confounded,
they were confounded with one another.
Crying out the sound "Ha ha!" and uttering the words
"Where have we gone to here?"
they spoke to one another:
"Who is this? And who are we?
Into whose presence have we come?
Have we fallen in our own abodes?
Have we gone to another world?
Have we been slain by Vajra Wrath?
Then what is this?
Just as we do not see the abodes of the gods,
neither do we see the Vajra Bearer.
It is not the wheel of the buddhas' maṇḍala.
We have fallen into darkness.
We do not see our own abodes,
nor do we see Meru itself;

there are no lakes and no oceans,
no stars, no moon, no sun.
From where have we all come?
To what land are we to go?
The five destinies, too, do not exist;
there is no world and there are no mātṛkās;
humans and nonhumans
are not seen in any way at all.
Neither before nor afterward has such a marvel ever occurred." Elsewhere the earth quaked, shaken by the winds;
there was the sound of thunder and great lightning,
and every suffering was present.
Not free of hunger, thirst and the other sufferings, all became suffering.
There the miraculous powers of the great gods were not seen in the least.
The hells, the pretas and the animals were ruined and torn down.
Through the mudrā that tears evil apart,
the three lower realms were stilled.
The gods who dwell without perception and who live in the formless realm, their very selves within the five aggregates,
on seeing such a wonder, examined themselves
and gazed at one another as well.
Likewise all were frightened and terrified:
"What is this wonder that has come about?
For immeasurable great eons
we have dwelt in purity.
We were freed from the supreme self,
yet we have come again to grasp at a self.
Through former habitual tendencies and longing,
we came to see from within the three existences.
Yet the three existences are not seen,

and likewise the five destinies are not there.
Elsewhere, in utter purity, as one, emanations of Dharma and complete enjoyment,
only the five buddhas are seen.
The abodes of the three existences are nowhere else."
All the assembly became delighted
and spoke to one another:
"Who is this? And who are we?
We have gone to another world.
Before, I saw this world together with the five destinies, together with Meru and the ocean,
and the six classes of gods with their retinues.
Which of the gods
of the three existences has seen this?
The celestial palace and the beings and the Lord we see just as they are.
Such wonders of every kind are seen in this great abode.
This magical display of the mind of awakening is the play of all the buddhas." Even those who are supreme among all the pratyekabuddhas of this trichiliocosm were utterly bewildered and did not see the magical display.
They did not see the Buddha himself,
nor the Victor and the Victor's children;
the dharmadhātu, firm and peaceful,
that abode they did not see.
Elsewhere, this trichiliocosm was not seen in any way at all:
not the elements of earth, fire and water,
nor the golden disks,
nor the beings of the five destinies,
nor the moon and the sun,
nor the stars, planets and constellations;
nor the beings, nor the three realms.

All these became empty;
elsewhere there was not even the sphere of space.
All of them, frightened and terrified, attained nirvāṇa.
Whatever fearless śrāvakas there were in the ten directions,
by the great bodhisattva
they were all terrified.
In each of their own fields
they did not see the Buddha himself,
nor the great assemblies,
nor those who teach the Dharma,
nor the beings of that field,
nor the gods and humans.
There were no houses, there was no field,
no earth, no fire and no wind.
Not seeing even their own fields,
they grew afraid of Vajrasattva.
In an instant they became joyless;
in a moment they became bewildered.
In such a magical display
the mind of awakening shines forth.
In a great eon of the past
the magical display of the wheel was shown.
The Blessed One, the vajra yogin, blessed it in just this way.
Whatever beings dwell here
no longer knew day from night.
Then that very great secret,
the host firm in the dharmadhātu,
the buddhas of Dharma and complete enjoyment:
such a magical display arose.
The abode of the gods, embracing the whole trichiliocosm, was arrayed, the one single abode of the buddhas,
emanation of Dharma and complete enjoyment.
In some places it was beautiful with blue;

the area of the ground was adorned, ornamented with blue vajras.
In some places it appeared golden in color, ornamented with the color yellow;
that portion of ground was adorned,
ornamented with yellow vajras.
In some places it was red in color,
beautiful as coral;
that portion of ground was adorned,
ornamented with red vajras.
In some places, ochre in color,
it was beautiful like vaiḍūrya;
that portion of ground was adorned,
made beautiful with madder-colored vajras.
In some places it was crystal in color, beautiful with brilliant light;
that portion of ground was adorned,
ornamented with crystal vajras.
In the east is great blue,
the south is endowed with yellow,
the western portion is red,
and the north is endowed with madder.
The portions of ground in the center are crystal-colored, unsurpassed, utterly pure through the great vajra:
this is taught as the nature of the five colors.
Square, with four gates,
beautiful with four porticoes,
in equal portions, well divided,
endowed with proper sequence.
On every side, in the outer areas,

it was furnished with vajra borders, endowed with borders all around,
and adorned with the borders of the gates.
Its lines were of the nature of blue vajra,
and others were golden in color,

and of the supreme color red,
and others of excellent crystal,
supreme, of the nature of all jewels.
The maṇḍala, beautiful in its variety, supreme bearer of various forms,
was honored by the hosts of vajra goddesses, adorned with nets and half-nets, beautified with half-moons,
covered all over with nets of small bells,
with supreme bells hanging all around.
It had various delightful trees, delightful wish-fulfilling trees,
incense, flowers and likewise fragrances,
and was endowed with supreme trees of light,
endowed with arrays of every kind.
Various waters of vajra nectar filled the supreme lakes with water, with vast vajra oceans.
Flowers of every kind were strewn all about;
it was perfumed with various incenses, sprinkled with various scented waters,
pervaded everywhere by various fragrances.
The ten sons of the Great Fierce One,
and then delightful things, arose.
From all the trees, the lotuses and the rest,
the Dharma was heard to come forth.
Spreading forth into all the directions,
in the pure field, together with emptiness,
whatever sound resounds,
the bliss of the Dharma comes about.
yaṃ laṃ śaṃ vaṃ
oṃ vajra satva krodhaya hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra krodha ākarṣaya hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra krodha rāgaya hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra duṣṭi krodhaya sādhu sādhu hūṃ phaṭ
The Wrathful One, the supreme Vajra Jewel, with a garland of flames unbearable,

the unsurpassed Wrathful Vajra,
spoke the supreme secret:
oṃ vajra bhṛkuṭi krodha hana hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra sūrya mahā jvala māla krodha jvālaya sarva hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra ketu mahā krodha dhena hūṃ phaṭ oṃ aṭṭa hāsa vajra maṭṭa hāsa krodha ha ha ha ha hūṃ phaṭ
The great Wrathful One, Vajra Dharma, pervaded by a garland of flames,
the king of wrathful ones, utterly hard to bear, spoke the supremely terrifying words:
oṃ vajra dharma viśodhaya hūṃ phaṭ oṃ tikṣṇa krodha cchinda hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra hetu krodha praveśaya maṇḍalaṃ sarva hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra krodha bhāṣa ta pāta hūṃ phaṭ
The great king, Vajra Karma, gathering all the secrets together,
came forth pervaded by brilliant flames,
and the wrathful king spoke:
oṃ vajra karma krodha hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra kavaca krodha rakṣa rakṣa hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra yakṣa krodha khāda khāda hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra krodha muṣṭi sādhaya samaya hūṃ phaṭ These beings, the great secret, were transformed from peaceful forms:
the Vajra Wrathful Ones, greatly fierce, took their seats in the maṇḍala of the wheel.
Then King Vajradhara,
the great Wrathful One of great might,
set forth these secrets in full,
and the offering goddesses spoke them:
oṃ vajra lāsye rāgaya hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra mālai abhiṣiñcaya hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra gītye gātaya hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra nṛtye vaśi kuru hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra puṣpa pūjā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra gandha pūjā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra dhūpa pūjā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ phaṭ oṃ vajra ālokai pūjā spharaṇa samaye hūṃ phaṭ

Then King Vajradhara,
the Wrathful One, fierce and utterly vicious, Vajra Wrath, exceedingly ferocious:
the gatekeepers came forth on every side.
oṃ aṃkuśa mahā krodha ākarṣaya sarva samaya hūṃ jaḥ oṃ vajra pāśa mahā krodha praveśaya sarva samaya hūṃ hūṃ oṃ vajra sphoṭa mahā krodha bandhaya sarva samaya hūṃ vaṃ oṃ vajra āveśa mahā krodha āveśaya sarva samaya hūṃ phaṭ hoḥ
The wheel, perfectly round, became the great Vajradhara, pervaded by the hosts of great wrathful ones, endowed with the great maṇḍala, endowed with the great abode.
Gathered all together into the great maṇḍala:
the utterly secret great Dharma,
emanation of Dharma and complete enjoyment,
that very essence, the great secret,
the great liberation, the supreme city,
the great king of maṇḍalas,
endowed with every aim of sentient beings,
the dharmatā fully awakened:
such is Dharma and complete enjoyment.
Whatever is the secret of the five families,
that which acts without any doubt:
the Tathāgata family is peaceful,
because it is the great host of the pure.
Likewise the Vajra family is fierce,
because it thoroughly tames the Great God (Śiva), emanating the Great God and the rest.
Likewise there is the supreme Lotus family, because, for the beings to be tamed,
emanations of every kind truly arise.
The wheel of emanation is peaceful,
encircled by fierce offerings.
The wheel of the various families is endowed with the four families.

The supreme Tathāgata family arose as the eastern wheel.
Then the fierce Vajra family is truly terrifying for the sake of beings.
This great supreme Vajra family gathers in all the hosts of the maṇḍala;
the great king, Sovereign of Secrets,
because he is declared the Lord of Secrets.
Gathering all the vajras together, having explained his own supreme family,
the great King Vajradhara emanated the great maṇḍala in full.
All the vicious ones, the gods and the rest,
he summoned in that very instant,
and having then made them enter,
in an instant he struck them with the pledge.
Having conferred the empowerment of the vajra sign and given them what is endowed with the pledge, having summoned them and made them fully enter, likewise he bound them and brought them under control.
They were made to strive in the pledge;
and so it is with the pledge and the vow.

For the benefit of human beings
the supreme maṇḍala was proclaimed:
the great wheel, the great city,
the great and supreme Vajra family, called Trailokyavijaya.
This I shall now explain correctly.
Having vanquished the hosts of the three worlds,
the gods and the rest were made to enter.
Then the abode of Trailokyavijaya,
the great wheel, the great city:
by merely taking up its name,
beings are utterly subdued,
and grahas and the like are put to flight.
Fevers, grahas and poisons,

the fierce and vicious ones, and those of the pledge,
at the very moment of that excellent name,
are terrified and tremble.
The body is the supreme Body of Complete Enjoyment;
but there are humans who are not to be tamed by it, and therefore the king Vajradhara emanated the great maṇḍala.
The vajra master is of great fortune, thoroughly trained and highly learned,
knowing the rites of the intention,
having heard the texts and skilled in their meaning,
deeply faithful, intelligent and steady, knowing well what is fitting and unfitting,
diligent in the mind of awakening,
without desire for other gods,
having seen the supreme secret essence, compassionate by nature and loving,
pure, gentle and fully disciplined, abiding in his own natural state,
not clinging, attached or vicious,
without delusion and without laziness, loving, with a mind intent on benefit, always delighting in mirth.
Having fully overcome attachment to form and the other qualities of desire,
his mind is afraid of existence,
and he has no clinging to existence.
He is diligent in the way of the Great Vehicle, without desire for other vehicles, diligent for the aims of all beings, sprung from the supreme of the Three Jewels.
Abandoning all attachment to the afflictions,
he thoroughly cultivates their antidotes:
for desire and the other great afflictions
he cultivates the unattractive and the rest.
He knows the rites of the fitting and the unfitting,
and is highly skilled in mantras and mudrās:

summoning, causing to enter, binding,
bringing under control, and requesting departure,
as they are explained in the Vajradhātu.
First the vidyā observance is to be performed.
One must be wary in every respect of even the slightest fault.
The measurements, the colored powders, the cord,
and the implements are to accord with the rite.
The binding, and the striking with the kīla,
are just as explained before in the Vajradhātu.
What is to be eaten and what is not to be eaten,
through the samādhi of vajra pride,
in the Vajradhātu and the other maṇḍalas,
are to be done just as before.
Then I shall explain it fully and correctly:
the great maṇḍala, which is supreme,
entirely like the Vajradhātu,
supreme in bringing about all accomplishments.
It is square, with four gates,
adorned with four porticoes,
furnished with four lines,
and adorned with tassels of silk.
At whatever size is fitting,
just like the great vajra city,
entirely like the Vajradhātu,
one should draw the city of Vajradhara, furnished with five wheels
and furnished with eight pillars.
In its center, in the middle of its natural wheel, place the Buddha:
Vairocana, the great Teacher, Vajrasattva of great light,
the bodhisattvas, the great kings:
the maṇḍala of the buddhas' complete enjoyment.
In front of the Buddha, the vajra
is to be placed in the midst of flames:
blazing like Vajra Fire,

the mudrā that conquers the three worlds.
On the right, the jewel mudrā
is to be placed in the midst of flames.
On the left, draw the lotus mudrā.
Behind, the sharp vajra
is to be placed in the midst of flames.
These are the four kings of mudrās, endowed with blazing fire.
In the great maṇḍala of Vairocana,
the great city of the dharmadhātu, the mudrās of the four wheel-turning kings are also to be placed.
Whatever lines are to be drawn,
the wise one should strike the lines of the maṇḍala.
With this vajra mantra
take up the vajra cord fully:
oṃ vajra samaya sūtraṃ mātikrama hūṃ
Having gone with vajra speed
through the great condensed maṇḍala, one should draw and place the king who embraces all the vajra mudrās.
oṃ vajra vegākrama hūṃ
Having all the colored powders ready, gaze on everything with a blazing gaze;
spread the vajra colors
and urge on the vajra mantra:
oṃ vajra citra samaya hūṃ Wherever a mudrā is to be placed,
all the heart mantras are to be placed.
Whatever was placed before encircles the vajra form.
In the maṇḍala of Vajrahūṃkara,
having gone with vajra speed:
the vajra vidyā, the supreme king, unshakable, in perfect equipoise,
four-faced and eight-armed,
his fangs slightly bared,

the king of wrathful ones, pervaded by flames, his hands bearing weapons along with mudrās.
The mudrā of Vajrahūṃkara:
two hands are held above;
likewise, two hands
hold raised hooks;
one hand holds a noose,
one hand holds a vajra;
and two hands are fully set in the gesture of drawing an arrow.
This is the mudrā of Vajrahūṃkara:
he tramples Maheśvara completely, and with his right foot presses down on the goddess Umā between her breasts.
In all the directions around him
place the Vajra Wrathful Ones, pervaded by garlands of flame and blazing,
wrathful ones supreme in inspiring terror.
In front is Vajrasattva,
on the right is Vajrarāja,
on the left is Vajrarāga, and behind is Vajrasādhu.
Having gone with vajra speed,
in the south, the maṇḍala of the wrathful one:
draw the king of wrathful ones, Bhṛkuṭi, surrounded by wrathful ones,
all pervaded by garlands of flame,
his face wrathful and laughing, endowed with the mudrā of Vajreśvara:
he is proclaimed Bhṛkuṭi.
In all the directions around him
are the great Vajra Wrathful Ones; gathering their mantras and mudrās,
draw them correctly in their own places.
In front is Vajraratna,
on the right the Wrathful Radiance,
on the left the Fierce Banner, and behind the Wrathful Laughter.

Having gone with vajra speed,
in the western quarter, the maṇḍala:
the great Wrathful Vajra, surrounded by the great lords of wrath.
Vajradharma is in front, Vajratīkṣṇa on the right,
likewise Vajrahetu on the left,
and Vajrabhāṣa behind.

Having gone, too, with vajra speed,
the fourth of the supreme maṇḍalas:
the great Vajra Descent of action, surrounded by the great wrathful ones.
Vajra Karma is in front,
on the right is Vajrarakṣa,
on the left Vajrayakṣa,
and behind Vajramuṣṭi.
In the four corners of the central wheel
draw correctly the four goddesses.
In the corners, upon moon discs,
draw Vajralāsyā and the others.
In the corners of the outer maṇḍala
draw Vajrapuṣpā and the others.
As in the Vajradhātu and the other maṇḍalas,
following the rite explained before,
at the four gates, in every case,
the gatekeepers are to be placed:
the Hook, the Noose, the Chain,
and the Bell, the unsurpassed descent.
Their own mudrās are placed at the heart,
with each one's own heart mantra.
With vajra and bell, endowed with delight, set out Vairocana.
Oneself is Vajra Wrath,
the lord, the supreme Vajra Vidyā;
as Vajrarāja, bless it supremely:

oneself is the supreme vajra maṇḍala.
Having drawn the maṇḍala in this way,
enter with the vajra tirintiri.
Having examined it correctly, circumambulate it seven times.
Whatever is lacking is to be made wholly pure;
the wise one should draw in what is further needed.
The vajra bell is to be understood;
it becomes accomplished, without fault.
With Vajra Hook and all the others,
the rites are performed in meditative equipoise.
Having entered the middle of the wheel,
the wise one should open the gates.
With the mind lifting the vajra lines and opening them completely, the four vajra gates
are to be opened with the mind.
Its heart mantra is this:
oṃ vajradhara udghaṭaya praveśaya samaya hūṃ
In the places outside the maṇḍala draw the outer vajra families.
The gods, Viṣṇu and the rest, abide in half of the enclosure,
with their wheels and with their families:
vicious beings, grahas and the like,
fever spirits, bhūtas and piśācas, ḍākinīs, bhūtas and mātṛkās,
and all the goddesses bearing weapons;
draw them just as one wishes.
In the places of the outer enclosure are the beautiful vajra enclosures.
Then, first, the eminent master, seated in the middle of the maṇḍala,
in the vajra cross-legged posture, enters into absorption in samādhi.
Just as the vajra family arose,
so should one contemplate oneself.

Supreme king of vajra vidyā,
bless yourself correctly.
Supreme king, Vajra Wrath:
in a samādhi such as this,
through the samādhi of Vajrasattva,
the one of great fortune enters absorption,
and, just as was proclaimed above,
the wise one contemplates it all.
How the vajra family arises,
how the maṇḍala is completed,
the vast and great secret,
and the supreme rite of the vajra master,
the great tantra called the Secret,
are fully explained in this ritual section.
Then, having taken his seat in the center,
the vajra master of great austerity,
binding the mudrā of the wrathful one,
binds all the mudrās completely.
Binding the Wrathful Vajra Hook,
he should invite all the buddhas.
The sacred hundred and eight names
should be recited once.
With the offerings of Vajra Flower and the rest
all the guides should be worshiped.
Whatever secret offering is to be made,
all the mudrās are bound completely.
Endowed with mudrās and secondary mudrās,
the offerings likewise themselves,
and the answering mudrās and all the rest,
are presented fully in accordance with the rite.
The vajra bell is to be rung,
and the maṇḍala of the vicious threatened.
The vicious mind is to be tamed,
and the afflictions utterly slain.
The descent and the recitation are to be performed.
Worship is to be made with vajra offerings.
Duly endowed with song and offering,

the vajra song is to be sung.
Singing these songs of the vajra,
one should please the supreme ones.
Bowing down, one should make the offering;
the vajra song is to be sung:
śata śata matasta tiri ṭata ṭata briti hata mata śata brata kata tabiṭa biṭa ṭa ṭa ṭa baṭa iti taṭa ṭa ṭa kara ṭara ṭara raṭa
With the mudrā of the vajra tirintiri
one should empower oneself.
Having received permission as one wishes,
urge on the vajra mantra.
The upper body is to be covered with a blue cloth,
and the eyes covered with blue.
With the mudrā of the vajra tirintiri
bind the vajra disciple:
oṃ gṛhna vajra samaya hūṃ vaṃ
He is to be led in as is fitting,
and the vajra mantra urged on.
With this mantra of the vajra
the vajra disciple is to be led in:
oṃ vajra samaya praveśeyāmi
As in the Vajradhātu and the other maṇḍalas,
in full, just as before,
the rites of the descent of wisdom are to be performed by the wise.

The offerings and the torma
are just as the Vajra Bearer taught before.
The wise one should train in them all and perform them with a clear and confident mind.
With the mudrā of Vajrahūṃkara
the wise one should accomplish hūṃ.
All the vicious ones, gods and the rest,
are to be summoned and brought in there.
One should train in the vajra yoga,
and oneself, or else another,
is to be empowered with the vajra garland.

With the mudrā of the vajra oath
the oath is first to be proclaimed.
Vajra wisdom, great wisdom:
vajra wisdom is to be fully accomplished.
Holding the vajra emblem in the hand,
the vajra mantra is to be fully accomplished.
With this mantra of the vajra
the vajra emblem is bestowed:
oṃ vajrapāṇi karmakārodbhāva Then the name empowerment is conferred,
and the vajra mantra urged on.
With this mantra of the vajra
the vajra name empowerment is conferred:
oṃ vajrakrodhastvaṃ abhiṣiñcāmi oṃ vajranāma abhiṣekata he vajranāma
The perfect arising of wisdom
is to be meditated upon by the wise.
Trained through supreme wisdom,
one fully accomplishes vajra yoga.
Having drawn a vajra at the heart,
fully endowed with the various rites, pervaded by a garland of flames and blazing,
the vajra at the heart is to be meditated upon.
Supreme king of Vajra Vidyā:
so should one fully meditate oneself.
The king who holds all the rites:
so should one fully meditate oneself.
Or else, as one among the wrathful ones,
so should one fully meditate oneself.
Through absorption as Vajra Wrath
all beings are to be made to receive the descent:
hūṃ satva vajrakrodha āveśa aḥ
Through the samādhi of the wrathful jewel, draw a vajra jewel correctly.
Oneself being Vajraratna,
bring all the buddhas under one's power.
Having bound the vajra lotus at the neck,

draw it correctly at the throat.
Having meditated oneself as Vajradharma,
by that one destroys all afflictions.
A vajra is to be drawn at the crown of the head,
and the holder of the blazing vajra set there.
Having meditated oneself as Vajra Karma,
all the vicious ones are to be dispelled.
ho vajraratna krodha vaśamānāyatra hriḥ vajradharma krodha nāśaya phaṭ hūṃ karmavajra krodha rakṣa
The divine host, all the buddhas, are to be summoned together with their mudrās.
The wisdom is blessed and then held,
and in just that way it is correctly blessed.
Drawing a vajra hook on the hand,
the threatening forefinger bearing the syllable hūṃ,
the wrathful one moves his finger:
this is supreme for summoning the gods.
oṃ vajrakrodha ākarṣaya hūṃ phaṭ
Likewise below, on the sole of the foot, draw a vajra hook correctly.
Whatever god one presses down with it,
this is the supreme means of summoning him.
oṃ vajrakrodha agra aṃkuśa ākarṣaya hūṃ phaṭ Duly endowed with an outstretched arm,
having correctly drawn a vajra hook,
whatever god it presses upon,
each of them is supremely summoned.
oṃ vajrakrodhana ākarṣaya hūṃ phaṭ
Having correctly drawn a vajra hook
upon the seat, one presses down on it, and whatever god is pressed down by it,
each of them is supremely summoned.
oṃ vajrakrodha āsana āgacchaya ākarṣaya mite he vajrasamya manusmara hūṃ phaṭ
With the mudrā of descent, cause the descent correctly;
the wise one should train in wisdom.

With all the vajra applications
the practices, too, are correctly undertaken.
Standing in the posture with the left leg outstretched,
one should meditate oneself as the wrathful one.
Swiftly, without any delay,
cause the wisdom of the buddhas to descend.
oṃ vajrakrodha kāya āveśa hūṃ phaṭ Applying Vajrahūṃkara correctly,
one should meditate oneself as the wrathful one.
Summon correctly the awakening of the buddhas,
and urge on the vajra mantra.
oṃ vajravidyottama mahākrodha ānaya ho bhagavan vajra hūṃ phaṭ Meditating oneself as the wrathful one,
one should look with the wrathful gaze.
In the terrifying prison of saṃsāra all sentient beings are to be slain.
oṃ dṛṣṭa mahākrodha maraya sarvasatva hūṃ Always, as one clad in armor,
one should meditate oneself with the mind,
and by meditating others too in this way,
all these beings will be protected.
oṃ vajra rakṣa rakṣa sarva satva hūṃ phaṭ
The secret mudrā, the great yoga, is to be trained in, in four ways.
Vajra wisdom, the great reality:
contemplate the wisdom of the buddhas' awakening.
Through absorption as Vajra Wrath,
toward whatever being one is attached,
one should meditate that form with the mind and fully recite the syllable hūṃ.
Through these vajra applications,
with the mudrā of the vajra ḍākinī, whatever being one is wholly attached to,
that one's afflictions are destroyed.
ṭakki asalave alave accha ṭakki hūṃ phaṭ Even by reciting this a single time, the afflictions melt away and are shaken.

ṭakki ja
Whatever being's mind stream is looked upon with the vajra gaze, by the great eye of vajra yoga that one's suffering is destroyed.
ṭakki hūṃ
From the transformation of the syllable hūṃ, whatever being is near at hand,
at that one's heart, too, a vajra
the wise one imagines with the mind.
Then the mudrā of not turning back from all fears, as well, is to be sealed with the vajra yoga ḍākinī
and with the vajra mudrā.
ṭakki ho
Vajra yoga, great and wondrous,
vajra yoga, whatever is vajra,
the maṇḍala of the yoga ḍākinīs:
the wise one blesses the supreme secret.
Through the union of the two organs, embracing completely with all the limbs,
the one who applies the syllable hūṃ destroys suffering.
Holding the most fierce Vajra Wrath,
one should always meditate oneself.
Whatever is the wrathful body of that one is the single, supremely secret self.
Be it a buddha or a bodhisattva,
as equal to oneself:
this correct joining of bodies
is to be declared the union of the organs.

Whatever is the body of a buddha or bodhisattva, or of Vajra Wrath or another being, and whatever is my own body, to know these as equal: this is called the union of the two organs.

Or else, by way of meditation,
one embraces the limbs as was explained.

Vajrasattva, the great king,
should be held fast in the arms.
By embracing completely with all the limbs,
the awakening of the buddhas is fully accomplished.
In the union of the two organs
the passion of desire is not to be entertained.
By meditating on equality through this,
equality itself is the organ.
With the teeth of the application of haṃ traṃ hūṃ,
holding the lip, one kisses,
and whatever being one meditates upon,
by that one obtains a bliss that is not in vain.
hūṃ ja
Bringing bliss to all sentient beings, fully applying that syllable hūṃ, having purified oneself as the wrathful one,
one then attains bliss.
hūṃ
Whoever fully applies hūṃ,
and if, by whatever beings,
all the limbs are drawn together,
their afflictions become thinned.
hūṃ phaṭ
Endowed with means through great wisdom,
the whole of the vajra family,
likewise together with the retinue of the wheel,
is to be trained in by the wise.
Through the samādhi of union with the buddhas
one should always meditate oneself.
Endowed with all the supreme ripenings, meditate on the body of a buddha.
Through that application of meditation
one attains buddhahood in an instant.
a Supreme king of vajra vidyā:
so should one fully meditate oneself.
hūṃ

Vajra Wrath Bhṛkuṭi
is to be meditated upon by the wise.
traṃ
Oneself as the vajra host,
all the buddhas are to be meditated upon.
hrīḥ
The great wrathful Vajra Descent
is to be meditated upon by the wise.
a Oneself, upon the vajra mind, is meditated as Vajrasattva.
hūṃ vajrasatva
One should meditate oneself as Vajrarāja.
ja vajrarāja
One should contemplate oneself as Vajrarāga.
ra vajrarāga
One should meditate the Excellent Wrathful One.
sa vajrasādhu
Then comes Vajraratna.
oṃ vajraratna
Likewise Vajratejas.
jvālaya
Meditate oneself as Vajraketu.
dhehe
Meditate on Vajrahāsa.
hāsa vajrahāsa
Vajradharma is to be meditated upon.
śodhaya
Meditate on Vajratīkṣṇa.
cchinda
Vajrahetu, the great wheel.
praveśaya
Meditate on Vajrabhāṣa.
bhāṣa
Vajra Karma is to be meditated upon.
karma
Meditate on Vajra Armor.

rakṣa Vajrayakṣa is to be meditated upon.
khāda
Meditate on Vajramuṣṭi.
vaṃ
Whatever one desires,
in just the way the deity of that family appears,
so should one meditate oneself;
through this it is accomplished in an instant.
hūṃ
Binding once with the vajra mudrā, the wise one performs the vajra recitation,
as was explained in the tantra of recitation;
otherwise one should adopt the wrathful one.
One should recite with the mind as well,
and urge it on with the mudrā of the body.
By joining the three maṇḍalas equally,
the wise one accomplishes it in that instant.
Then the delightful vajra family,
the countless great mudrās,
duly endowed with the mudrās of the body,
because beings are not fit vessels,
for that reason were taught only briefly.
The full compendium of the great mudrā is fully explained, from the Compendium of the Great Vehicle, in that tantra,
the great tantra called the Secret.
With this secret rite
the work of yoga is to be accomplished.
Through the application of vajra yoga buddhahood is accomplished in an instant.
Here the many benefits
are to be applied with certainty to one's own practice.
Whoever is disciplined and applies himself fully accomplishes buddhahood in an instant.
Even one who commits the five deeds of immediate retribution, having entered, becomes diligent,

and if he performs the rite of yoga,
there is no doubt that he will succeed.
In this very life the yogin attains the ground of Great Joy.
Whoever applies himself to the Vajra Bearer will without doubt attain the grounds.
The hardships of countless eons are not without the very nature of practice;
yet for one who strives in this yoga
the grounds are therefore not hard to find.
This Great Vehicle is secret;
it teaches the way of the Dharma of the buddhas,
the great essence of the buddhas' awakening;
from it the grounds are not hard to attain.
Standing in the posture with the left leg outstretched,
proclaim the wrathful words.
Truly wrathful, with the wrathful gaze,
all the rites are to be accomplished.

From the Vajra Peak, the king of ritual of the supreme secret, the sacred reality, the secret yoga, lord of the sūtras of all the tathāgatas, the explanation called Victory over the Three Realms, the third chapter, is complete. From the Vajra Family, the first chapter.

Then the supreme compendium of all the secrets, truly arisen from union with the joy of mind,
its work accomplished and supremely beautiful,
the host of all the emanations of Vajreśvara.
Then the supreme great family of the buddhas, arisen from the heart of Vajragarbha and endowed with bliss, gathering the supreme qualities of the utmost secret:
Vajrarāja took on the form of a woman.
"How wonderful! The woman who enjoys supreme delight, arisen from the compendium of all the secrets, is Vajrasattva, supremely free of fear."
Having said this, he remained silent.

The supreme one, truly arisen from the pledge of dhāraṇī, abiding in samādhi, the secret of the nature of reality,

from the teaching that gathers all, from the crown to the soles of the feet, drew forth the hosts of the maṇḍala of his family.
hrīḥ
Then he drew forth, too, those whose names are joy,
the supreme vajra women arisen from his heart,
far surpassing the gods of the supreme form realm;
in the vajra quarters the words of the goddesses resound.
Joyful, with smiling eyes,
with faces laughing and flirtatious, goddesses of the gods of the families of Brahmā and the rest, delightful, victorious through great joy.
That goddess Vajrayoginī, too, abiding in the center of the wheel, contemplates;
the gathering of her family, beautiful and delightful,
is the great vajra lady, the Vajra Bewilderer.
oṃ sarva tathāgata mahārāga mohanaya hi
This heart mantra was spoken by the bewilderer of the buddhas.
Even the supreme tathāgatas become bewildered.
She is the joy that bewilders the joy of all the buddhas, supreme in wholly transforming the forms of the buddhas.
That supreme lord of sages, Vairocana, becomes an emanation in the form of a woman.
That lord who possesses supreme miraculous power became the four sisters of the retinue.
oṃ vajrakrodha samaye sthi
Then the peaceful host of steadfast secrets, pervading all with the body of Dharma and the body of enjoyment,
the Vajra Sovereign of Secrets, master of bewildering, abides in the pure nature of reality of the buddhas' consorts.
The earth quaked in six ways.
Rays of light of many kinds shone in the ten directions.
The goddesses, outshining
the goddesses together with the gods, became greatly expanded.
The hosts of goddesses, equal to the maṇḍalas of the families, abide in their own celestial palaces.
Then, of the buddha Ratnasambhava,
the sacred Sovereign of Secrets, the guide,

set out the great Vajra Joy.
The syllable of the lord of all the vicious,
arisen from the heart, the pure nature of reality:
the four vajra consorts and the central one, five in all,
abide in the eastern portion of the maṇḍala host,
the sacred and supreme lord of Akṣobhya.
Then, arisen from the one of the vajra family, the eastern maṇḍala, with the wrathful ones and with its maṇḍala, the one whose nature is the pledge of sacred Akṣobhya spoke the urging of the heart mantras;
he spoke the arising of the most supreme heart mantras:
oṃ vajrakrodha samaye ji oṃ vajraroṣa aṃkuśa ānaya sarva ji oṃ vajraroṣa karmavajri vaśaṃ me ānaya di ji oṃ vajraduṣṭi krodha tiṣṭhaya sarva ji That Ratnasambhava, in the form of a woman, that supremely delightful jewel,
spoke the four heart mantras of the retinue:
oṃ vajrabhṛkuṭī krodha hara hara sarva garbha ji oṃ vajrajvalamāla praveśa mahākrodha agni jvālaya sarva rabhiṣaja ji oṃ vajradhvaja agra keyuri mahākrodhi dehi sarva ji oṃ vajra aṭṭāṭṭa hasini hāsamayāṭṭāṭṭa hara hara ji
The syllable ji abides most firmly;
he spoke the heart mantra that had become supreme.
That sacred lord of jewels spoke the supreme ones that urge on the heart mantras;
he spoke the supreme heart mantra, he spoke the wondrous one.
Amitābha, having taken the form of a woman, supreme source of the sacred vajra consorts, spoke the four heart mantras:
oṃ vajraśuddhi hana duṣṭi dhi oṃ tīkṣṇa krodha cchindana sarva dhiri vajrahetu mahākrodha braveśaya sarva dhi oṃ vajrajihvā mahākrodha bhāṣi paca uṅgaraya dhiḥ
He spoke the steadfast heart mantra of supreme knowledge.
The supreme lotus maṇḍala, endowed with power, showing the supreme secret of Amitābha, spoke the supreme heart mantra of urging:

ṇi
With great joy he drew forth the emblems as well.
Amoghasiddhi, having taken the form of a woman,
endowed with intense urging toward action,
spoke the four sisters of the retinue:
oṃ sarvamukhe karmavajriṇi mahākrodha kuru sarva ṇi oṃ vajrakavaca krodhi rakṣa maṇi oṃ vajrakrodhe mahāyakṣiṇi vajre daṃṣṭā karāli vilāsa sarva ṇi oṃ vajramuṣṭi vajrakrodhani
Then the various maṇḍalas of action,
the supremely secret compendium, the great joy, urging on the maṇḍala of the central lord, spoke this supreme heart mantra of the consort of action:
hūṃ
From the center the various secrets come to arise;
Vairocana spoke these chief ones:
oṃ vajreśvarī hūṃ
oṃ ratneśvarī hūṃ
oṃ padmeśvarī hūṃ
oṃ karmeśvarī hūṃ
Whatever arose from the urging, together with the Vajra Queen, abides, through the four yogas of the vajra consorts, as the central sovereign.
The consorts of vajra, jewel and Dharma, endowed with beautiful limbs:
apart from this secret host there is no supreme yoga at all.
Vajrasattva, supremely free of fear, abides in the center of his own retinue.
With a mind of love and of benefit
he spoke the supreme vajra secret maṇḍala.
Then, having shown the city of the wheel,
he whose nature is Victory over the Three Realms correctly drew the secret yoga of the maṇḍala of the consort of the lord of vajra yoga.
Draw the city correctly in two ways;
the wheel is to be arranged in two ways.
Likewise, enter correctly into this city,
or else draw it correctly just as one wishes.

And together with the host of mudrās,
draw correctly the vajra worthy of meditation.
Or else, worshiped with the secret Dharma,
now draw correctly what is endowed with form.
In the central tier sits Vajrasattva, endowed with the noose and with the mudrās of the retinue.
From the blazing vajra, jewel and lotus,
place them blazing and endowed with fire.
The eastern maṇḍala, the great nature of the five wheels:
in the vajra maṇḍala, where Akṣobhya is chief,
sporting with the great vajra mudrā,
the supreme one, trampling Maheśvara who bears the trident.
Then, in the places of the four directions,
the Vajra Hook, the arrow and the joy, fully endowed with rays of blazing fire, possessing mudrās that abide in the midst of the blaze.
That one, delightful in the jewel family:
in the center of the vajra sits Vajraratna.
Then, in the places of the four directions,
the mudrās of the jewel, the radiance, the banner and the laughter.

Likewise the lotus family, delightful, with the mudrā of the vajra lotus;
then, in the quarters of the four directions,
the lotus, the sword, the wheel and likewise speech.
Likewise, from that family wrought by action, Vajratīkṣṇa, endowed with great fire;
firmly in the quarters of its four directions are Karma, Yakṣa, Rakṣa and Muṣṭi.
From that, among the vast hosts of forms,
the supreme and fierce ḍākinīs of the vajra consorts, terrifying, with great blazing fangs;
in the center is the vajra sun, ablaze.
Together with the rites for protecting the ground,
one should always look into the vast supreme scripture.
All the rites of purification and of descent are to be taken from the sacred one endowed with the supreme limbs.

Then train in the mudrās and the limbs of the mudrās.
With the offering mudrās, the offering mudrās are declared.
Then, in the maṇḍala with its gates and corners, summon the consorts, the meteoric iron, the supreme yakṣa.
Then, for the host entering at the gates:
vajra jaḥ jaḥ
the vast cloud of the summoning strokes;
vajra hūṃ hūṃ
likewise the one who grants the dharma of binding;
vajra vaṃ vaṃ
then the manifold nature of reality of wisdom;
vajra aḥ aḥ
then worship together with secret grace;
vajra hūṃ khaṃ
then endowed with the various garlands of the limbs;
vajra hūṃ ghuṃ
then the singing of songs and music;
vajra hūṃ taṃ
likewise the other supreme lords of the maṇḍala;
vajra hūṃ ste
then, outside, the vast flowers;
vajra tite
likewise thousands of instruments struck;
vajra ṭraṃ ta
the drawing of incense, fragrances and music;
vajra dhātu
then rays of light and radiance fully streaming forth.
vajra krodha
Then summon with the host of the Vajra Hook, and please them with joy, fully endowed with the vajra.
oṃ siddhiya vajra
ānaya vajra
Then the ground of passion, the one full of desire:
rāgaya vajra ahi vajra
likewise the one who gazes at the sun:
jvālaya vajra
of the banner:

dehi vajra
of the laughter:
hāsa vajra
likewise of attachment:
kāmaya vajra
of grasping the sword:
cchedaya vajra
and further, of turning:
bhramaya vajra
then of uttering the host of words:
brūhi vajra
the steadfast host of the maṇḍala of the offerings of action:
tyi vajra
then of the portion of the rite:
rakṣa vajra
likewise of eating:
khāhi vajra
the delightful body is to be firmly bound:
bandhaya vajra
Then likewise extend those of wisdom.
Then urge them on with a wrathful mind.
The lower lip is to be clenched with the teeth,
and likewise the eyes are to be closed.
Then fully meditate the samādhi of the wrathful one.
With the secret mudrās the four māras are vanquished.
Then recite the heart of the vajra words,
and train in the hosts of mudrās of many kinds.
The hosts of the mudrās of the body,
from the Compendium of the Great Vehicle,
in accordance with the command of Vajrasattva,
are fully declared at length.
The Supreme Secret is complete.

Then King Vajradhara,
the lord of the place supreme over all,
abiding in the subtle vajra,
spoke the subtle vajra:

oṃ sarva tathāgata sūkṣma vajra krodha krama hūṃ phaṭ
One should imagine oneself in the form of a buddha, for the sake of benefit.
Through this subtle vajra
the mind becomes peace itself.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra krodha krama hūṃ phaṭ
Supreme king of vajra vidyā:
so should one fully meditate oneself.
Through this subtle vajra
one's own mind is tamed in an instant.
oṃ sūkṣma vajraratna krodha kramaka hūṃ phaṭ Oneself as Vajraratna
is to be meditated upon by the wise.
One swiftly attains the Dharma of the buddhas and becomes the chief, supreme among all jewels.
oṃ sūkṣma vajradharma krodha krama hūṃ phaṭ Meditate oneself as Vajradharma, pure from the very beginning.
Through this mudrā of speech
one becomes equal to Vajradharma.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra karma krodha krama hūṃ phaṭ Oneself as Vajra Karma
is to be meditated upon again and again;
urged on by the vajra mantra,
one becomes equal to Vajra Karma.
The great being of empowerment:
if one always meditates oneself
as the four universal monarchs, one also obtains the empowerment.
hūṃ oṃ sūkṣma jñāna krodha hūṃ phaṭ
If one meditates oneself as Vajrarāja, one becomes rigid.
Through these very heart mantras
one summons all the buddhas completely.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra aṃkuśa ākarṣaya mahākrodha hūṃ phaṭ
With the application of drawing the bow, Vajrarāga is to be meditated upon.

Through these very heart mantras
all the buddhas become attached.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra krodha anurāgaya hūṃ phaṭ Having pleased all the buddhas, one should meditate oneself as well.
Being Vajra Joy oneself,
one attains the vajra accomplishment.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra duṣṭi krodha hūṃ phaṭ
I am Vajraratna, the king, supreme in steadfast empowerment.
Having urged on with the vajra mantra,
one becomes equal to Vajraratna.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra bhṛkuṭī krodha hara hara hūṃ phaṭ Through the samādhi of Vajratejas one should always make oneself blaze.
Radiating fully in all directions,
urge on the vajra mantra.
oṃ sūkṣma jvāla maṇḍala krodha sūrya jvala hūṃ phaṭ
As the jewel banner of giving one should always imagine oneself.
All sentient beings are to be purified,
and the vajra mantra fully urged on.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra dhvaja krodha yaśodha sarva āḥ hūṃ me prayaccha hūṃ phaṭ Laughing the laughter of the great Dharma, Vajrahāsa, the steadfast self,
is to be urged on with the vajra mantra;
oneself alone is the speech of Dharma.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra hasa krodha ha ha hūṃ phaṭ ha ha Peaceful from the very beginning, unborn, all dharmas are utterly pure.
Oneself as Vajradharma, the king, recite once with the vajra words.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra krodha yaśodha hūṃ phaṭ
The host of mighty swords, Vajratīkṣṇa, most steadfast.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra ccheda krodha cchinda cchinda hūṃ phaṭ

Having turned the wheel of Dharma, one becomes equal to the vajra wheel.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra krodha mahāṃ cakra cchindapa hā iśvari praveśa hṛdayaṃ cchinda hūṃ phaṭ
Now, it is neither what expresses nor what is expressed;

I am the steadfast Vajrabhāṣa.
Having made firm the very longing for the Dharma, one attains Vajrabhāṣa.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra hūṃ kāra krodha hara pacaya va mudreṇa hūṃ phaṭ
One should worship all the buddhas
and contemplate Vajra Karma as steadfast.
If one teaches the Dharma with vajra words,
one attains Vajra Karma.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra karma sarva kārya hṛdaya hūṃ
I am the king of great loving-kindness, the steadfast lord Vajrarakṣa.
Having always meditated on oneself as him,
all the lower destinies are destroyed.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra kavaca krodha rakṣa hūṃ phaṭ
One should devour all evil deeds and meditate on Vajrarakṣa.
If one spurs on the vajra mantra,
the vajra destroys all afflictions.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra yakṣa hara bhakṣa sarva duṣṭa vajra yakṣa hūṃ phaṭ
I am Vajramuṣṭi, the king.
Recollect the mind of awakening.
If one binds all the obstructors,
one becomes equal to Vajramuṣṭi.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra muṣṭi bandha bandha hūṃ phaṭ
That mind at the tip of the nose, having made it firm, one should properly begin.
Having applied the very syllable hūṃ,
all afflictions are utterly destroyed.
hūṃ
First, at the heart and at the tip of the nose, having made firm its nature,

if one emanates that sign,
enemies such as disease are destroyed.
nāśaya vajrī hūṃ
Having also made that mind firm,
the holder of yoga should emanate it, and the wise one should take up the lord of wrath:
negative tendencies are certainly destroyed.
vināśaya sarva vajra hūṃ
For as long as the yogin who knows wishes, if he then withdraws that sign,
all evil without remainder is destroyed and does not arise.
oṃ sūkṣma vajra pratya śīghāṃ hūṃ Clearly, to all directions without exception, emanate loving-kindness toward all sentient beings.
For as long as one emanates the vajra,
for that long sentient beings will be happy.
bherava vajra krodha hūṃ phaṭ
Alas, these beings who have no protector!
To protect them from fear,
one should emanate that mind of compassion:
one attains vajra wisdom.
kāruṇā vajra krodha hūṃ phaṭ
The essence of all the tathāgatas:
all sentient beings are pure from the beginning.
How wonderful, bliss! How wonderful, the Dharma!
Emanate it fully throughout all directions.
hūṃ kāra viśuddha hūṃ phaṭ Focusing on the sentient beings of saṃsāra, practice equanimity together with bliss.
Through this application of equanimity, emanate it fully toward sentient beings.
oṃ viśodhaya vajra krodha hūṃ phaṭ Properly draw the form of a vajra.
Whatever it is firmly placed upon,
by that very means the yogin destroys the whole host of stains.

hūṃ vajra pravarta
Upon whomever the mind of awakening itself is brought down through recollection, that sentient being will attain
the very awakening of a buddha.
hūṃ bodhisatva pravarta Having recollected Vajrapāṇi and brought down the pure nature of reality,
that sentient being will attain supreme bliss, without doubt.
hūṃ vajra dhāra pravarta Meditate on the form of the Buddha
endowed with all the supreme aspects.
If one brings down the qualities of the Buddha, fear will certainly not arise.
hūṃ buddha pravarta
The Moon, the actual nature of the vajra:
if one meditates on it as it was generated,
the one of excellent mind, equal to the vajra Moon,
will swiftly travel through the sky.
buddha pravartaya hūṃ
Meditating on oneself in the center of the Moon, those sentient beings upon whom one brings it down
will become irreversible;
of this there is no doubt.
satva pravartaya hūṃ
The learned one should meditate on oneself as Vajrapāṇi, and the place where it is brought down will increase in glory and happiness very swiftly, without doubt.
vajra satva pravartaya hūṃ
One should meditate in meditative equipoise on oneself in the form of the Buddha.
Wherever that vajra is brought down becomes vast in miraculous power.
buddha pravartaya hūṃ

Through the absorption of Vajra Wrath, encircling one's own body,
the one in whose name this is done attains awakening without doubt.
oṃ vajra valita krodha māraya hūṃ
In breathing out and breathing in,
fully apply the syllable hūṃ, and through the absorption of Vajra Wrath destroy the faults such as desire.
oṃ vajra śvāsa vivātala hūṃ phaṭ
One should look with the vajra gaze,
and by fully applying Vajra Wrath, whatever sentient being one looks upon is liberated from saṃsāra.
oṃ vajra dṛṣī vināśaya hūṃ phaṭ Abiding as the very self of body and speech, as one's own mind goes forth,
if one recollects the mind of awakening,
by that too one attains buddhahood.
hūṃ hṛdaya ākarṣaya vajra krodha hūṃ phaṭ
As Vajra Vidyā, the supreme king,
the learned one meditates on himself,
a body pervaded by blazing light;
through meditation on the vajra one attains accomplishment.
hūṃ
O Lord of Secrets, the heart mantra of all is thus proclaimed.
Then Vajradhara contemplated the lord of yoga:
utterly seizing those who are not to be tamed, with a loving mind toward those to be tamed, the supreme lord of mountains, the ground where the trainings play.
The sūkṣma is complete.

The secret is the stars, the Sun and the Moon;
one should recite the vajra pledge.
Beautiful as it is imagined by conceptual thought,
next the rite of offering is explained.
Oneself in the form of the Buddha,

meditate intently on the Buddha's magical emanations.
As was explained in the first application,
one should worship all the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra karmeśvari hūṃ
At one's own heart, the mind of awakening;
having imagined the host of all the buddhas, with this supreme offering one should worship all the guides.
hūṃ
All the gods, together with Maheśvara, should be summoned,
and oneself, as Vajra Wrath, worships them intently with wrathful offerings.
oṃ sarva tathāgata pūjā karma samaya visti vistvar trailokya vijayeśva sarva duṣṭāna mahā samaya vajrī hūṃ
I myself am wholly Bhṛkuṭi;
one should meditate as the jewel wrathful one.
Making all the buddhas afraid,
one worships them intently with jewel offerings.
oṃ sarva tathāgata kapāśa samaya spharaṇa mahā pūjā ākarṣaya vidhi vistvara samaya hūṃ Appearing equal to the expanse of reality,
I am the steadfast Vajradharma.
Worshipping intently with the offering of Dharma,
one should worship all the buddhas.
oṃ sarva tathāgata dharma dhātu spharaṇa mahā pūjā vidhi vistvara samaya hūṃ Having become Vajra Karma oneself, one should meditate on the Buddha's magical emanations.
One should worship all the buddhas,
worshipping them intently with the offering of action.
oṃ sarva tathāgata loka dhātu jīvita mahā karma pūjā vedhi vistvara samaye hūṃ
I am Vajrapāṇi, I am the vajra;
the tathāgatas should be summoned.
Worshipping Vajrasattva intently,
one should meditate on it as an offering.

oṃ vajra satva siddhi jñāna samaye hūṃ jaḥ
As Vajra Hook, supreme among the steadfast,
one should always meditate on oneself.
In order to accomplish the meditation,
one should summon all the buddhas.
oṃ vajra ākarṣa jñāna samaya hūṃ jaḥ Being oneself Vajrarāga,
one should delight those who have been summoned.
Worshipping intently through Vajrarāga, apply it properly, thinking, "They are to be accomplished."
oṃ vajra rati rāga samaye hūṃ jaḥ Meditating on oneself as Vajrasādhu, one should please the Victors.
Worshipping intently through Vajrasādhu,
one should summon all the buddhas.
oṃ vajra sādhu karma jñāna samaye hūṃ jaḥ
As Vajraratna, the great king,
one should meditate on oneself.
Bringing the tathāgatas under one's power,
rain down a shower of jewels everywhere.
oṃ vajra bhṛkuṭī vaśī kuru hūṃ Meditate on oneself as the vajra Sun, endowed with garlands of light rays.
Bringing the buddhas under one's power, emanate light rays in all directions.
oṃ vajra sūrya maṇḍala vaśīṃ kuru hūṃ
Bringing the tathāgatas under one's power,
I am the very king of the lotus.
Fulfill all the wishes of sentient beings,
and worship intently with the jewel banner.
oṃ vajra dhvajāgra keyūre vaśīṃ kuru hūṃ Laughing aloud with "ha ha,"
being oneself Vajrahāsa,
bring all the buddhas under one's power;
worship them intently with the offering of laughter.
oṃ vajra aṭṭa hāsana vaśīṃ kuru hūṃ
I am the very king of the lotus,

the queen, steadfast and self-arisen.
I shall make the buddhas passionately attached;
worship intently with passion for desire.
oṃ vajra padma rāgaya hūṃ
I myself am the sharp one,
the steadfast perfection of wisdom.
I shall cut through the afflictions and make the tathāgatas enamored.
oṃ vajra tikṣṇa rāgaye hūṃ
I am the goddess Vajratārā, who turns the wheel of Dharma.
I shall please the Vajra Bearer;
worship intently with steadfast passion.
oṃ vajra maṇḍal rāga rāgaya hūṃ
The goddess of space who speaks the Dharma teaches the inexpressible nature.
Rejoicing in the pure Dharma,
one should please the tathāgatas.
oṃ vajra vāka rāga rāgaya hūṃ
I myself am action,
renowned throughout all directions.
I am also Gaganagañja;
worship intently with a rain of offerings.
oṃ vajra karma samaye pūjā hūṃ
I myself am protection,
the steadfast loving-kindness of the buddhas.
I shall worship the buddhas;
worship everywhere with the offering of Dharma.
oṃ vajra kavaca bandha rakā hūṃ
I shall devour the afflictions;
I am the steadfast Vajrayakṣa.
I shall worship the buddhas;
worship intently with the offering of Dharma.
oṃ vajra yakṣa māraya vajra daṃṣṭra hūṃ phaṭ
I am the awakening of the buddhas, myself Vajramuṣṭi,
the wheel of nonregression;

worship intently with the offering of action.
oṃ vajra karma muṣṭi siddhya siddhya hūṃ phaṭ
All such various offerings bring about the full attainment of the secret mantra of wisdom.
For all the goddesses and sattvas without exception,
as for the king, the heart is hūṃ.
Lāsyā, Mālā, and likewise Gītā, Nṛtyā, Puṣpā and the rest: by applying them,
the sattvas and the other goddesses are the offering of offerings, most carefully guarded.
Next, the rite that is the great means,
by which accomplishment comes swiftly,
by which one is joined to joy:
the ritual procedure of the fire offering.
Just as the fire offering, through its accomplishment, performs unsurpassed rites,
all the other rites of knowledge mantras
do not act in such a way.
The fire offering has many kinds;
condensed in brief, it is of five kinds.
In detail, it is fully explained in the secret sūtra of the Great Yoga.
The magical display of the knowledge holders,
how, through the kinds of fire offering,
the maṇḍala of the family is accomplished,
I shall explain in brief.
The rites of fire offering are of five kinds,
and each again has many kinds:
pacifying and increasing;
the third is the fierce rite;
summoning is the fourth;
the fifth is endowed with subjugation.
Of these fire offerings, the fifth, subjugation, is supreme.
Next I shall explain the hearths;
they should be applied according to each application.
For pacifying the hearth is round, perfectly round all around.

For increasing it is square;
for the fierce rite it is triangular.
A hearth in the shape of a vajra is supreme for summoning everything.
Likewise, a hearth made long
is supreme for subjugation.

These are explained as five kinds;
the rites of the hearth are unsurpassed.
At dusk one should perform pacifying;
in the morning, the rite of increasing;
at midday one should surely perform the violent rite of the fierce kind;
summoning at all times;
and at night, subjugation.
Through these five applications
one should perform the rites in meditative equipoise.
Facing east for the sake of pacifying;
for increasing, abide properly facing north;
having turned to face the south,
the fierce rites are performed.
Facing upward, likewise, for summoning;
subjugation in all directions.
Imagine all the intermediate directions joined equally;
or else it is explained as the western direction.
For pacifying, the buddha mudrā;
for increasing, the sign of the jewel;
Vajra Wrath for the fierce rite;
for subjugation, the lotus family;
endowed with powerful summoning,
Vajra Hook for summoning.
Through these five applications
one fully accomplishes the rites of fire offering.
The wood for pacifying is sweet;
for increasing, likewise, it bears fruit;
pungent for the fierce rites;

thorny for summoning;
for subjugation it is explained as bearing flowers.
These are the kindling sticks in their order.
First the yogin should properly arrange the five kinds of kindling sticks.
Among them, wood that is smeared with mud is declared to be dead.
Where evil is destroyed and all turmoil is burned away:
with a fire of sweet firewood,
having kindled it in meditative equipoise,
make a fire offering of sesame oil,
and all evil will be burned.
oṃ sarva pāpaṃ dahana vajrāya svāhā
With sweet firewood
kindled in deep meditative equipoise, having made a fire offering of rice,
the accumulation of merit will increase.
oṃ vajra puṣṭaye svāhā
With sweet firewood,
having kindled the fire in meditative equipoise,
through a fire offering of butter-soaked dūrvā grass,
vajra life will greatly increase.
oṃ vajra āyuṣe svāhā
With those same kindling sticks,
having kindled the fire as virtue arises,
with kuśa sprouts and sesame oil,
even the three worlds will be protected.
oṃ apratihata vajrāya svāhā
First one should apply pacifying, and likewise increasing for the middle two;
the rites of fire offering of pacifying and increasing come first.
With kindling of pungent wood for the fierce rites,
and for summoning, together with the fierce rite,
the same applies as well.

With the samādhi of Vajra Wrath,
first, with pungent kindling,
having kindled the fire in wrath,
the learned one should make a fire offering of thorns.
And with wood that bears thorns,
with the thorny one certainly summons.
Whatever one may desire,
one certainly summons the buddhas.
oṃ vajra ākarṣaya jaḥ
With firewood, red flowers and the like, having kindled a blazing fire,
if one makes a fire offering of red flowers and fruits, it is supreme for subjugation.
hūṃ vajra pāśāya ja
Using pungent kindling sticks, having kindled an extremely fierce fire,
if one burns bitter fruits,
it is supreme for the fierce rite.
hūṃ vajra māraya phaṭ
All the secret fire offerings
I shall next explain further.
Through the rite of the fire-offering wheel,
apply them there as is fitting.
With pungent kindling sticks,
having kindled the fire very fiercely,
make a fire offering with a terrifying hook,
and all the malevolent will be terrified.
oṃ vajra bandhaya phaṭ
In a fire of wood together with flowers,
with the samādhi of Vajra Wrath,
a fire offering of fruits, with mantra and the rest,
is supreme for subjugation.
oṃ vajra vaśaṃ karāya svāhā Both bitter and sweet,
one should use sweet kindling sticks;
if one burns desirable flowers and fruits,
one becomes supreme, with whatever form one desires.

oṃ vajra karma rūpaṇe svāhā
Then, with those same firewoods, having kindled the fire in great wrath,
burn the tiny seeds of bamboo,
and one swiftly becomes invisible.
oṃ vajra atriṣaya svāhā
With that same firewood of wisdom, having kindled a fierce fire,
if one burns it with flowers of the power of the sky,
one will travel through the sky.
oṃ vajra khecarena svāhā Next, messengers and servants, those who do one's bidding, are urged on;
how they may be swiftly accomplished
I shall explain in order.
Bitter wood should be used as firewood;
dig the hearth in the shape of a vajra.
In wrath, burn vajra flowers,
and fully recite the syllable ja.
Through this application of mantra,
urge on the vajra mantra;
if one burns vajra flowers,
one will obtain the supreme servant.
oṃ vajra ājñā karāya ja
With those same kindling sticks,
one should dig that same hearth;
if one burns whatever medicinal substance belongs to the bodhisattva,
he will do one's bidding.
oṃ vajra sauri vaśaṃ kārāya ja
With a fire of those same firewoods, in that very same hearth throughout,
if one burns the medicinal substance of Vajrasattva,
he will do one's bidding.
hūṃ vajra pāṇi vaśaṃ karāya ja
Or else the medicinal substance of the Buddha, or else oneself and the signs:
make the fire offering through the application of accomplishment, and the buddhas will do one's bidding.

oṃ buddha śaṃ karāya ja Through this application of words, perform the fire offering, and it is swiftly accomplished.
Through the vajra application all accomplishments will be accomplished without doubt, for all of them, the vajra family and the rest.
Next, the secret great seal:
in order to accomplish vajra yoga,
one should accomplish the great yoga.
Whatever consort is pleasing,
in order to obtain one of the sister's family, together with a goddess consort
one should accomplish the yoga intensely.
Together with a lovely woman
the learned one should engage in dwelling together, just as it is explained there in the royal sūtra of the Lord of Secrets.
With saffron powder all over,
having inserted eye ointment into the bhaga,
one should know her sattva,
because the intention is thus proclaimed.
The consort of that beloved is whoever is desired and pleasing;
whatever goddess is of one's own family,
she is known as "woman."
Through that union with the consort,
one accomplishes the deities of one's own family.
The inserting of eye ointment and the rest means placing it properly upon the lotus.
bhaga is explained as "lotus,"
and inserting is to be explained as placing.
Through this application of the bhaga,
the eye ointments should be accomplished.
Inserting eye ointment into the bhaga
means placing it properly upon the lotus;
placing it together with the lotus,

the four kinds will be accomplished.
oṃ guhya rati vajra vaśaṃ karī siddha hūṃ Warmth, smoke, blazing and dust,

the four kinds will be accomplished.
oṃ guhya vajra siddha hūṃ Having placed bezoar in the bhaga, one should set down the secret seal.
Through the four kinds of signs accomplishment is explained as fourfold.
oṃ guhya vajri siddhi hūṃ
With the seal of Vajrasattva, having inserted saffron into the bhaga,
if, when it is covered, it blazes,
the four kinds will be accomplished.
oṃ vajra dhara guhya siddha hūṃ
The application of vajra action, the condensed vajra seals,
the absorption of Vajra Wrath,
the application of Vajramuṣṭi,
these supreme pledges,
the finger application of hūṃ, likewise here the Dharma seal,
the syllables beginning with oṃ, and through this rite of fire offering one should fully accomplish the wisdom seal.
In detail, all of these are fully explained in the secret tantra.
Through this application of the rite,
the vajra master of great austerity
will in this very life accomplish supreme buddhahood.
In this delightful great vajra family, compiled from all the great tantras, whoever strives intently will gain unfailing accomplishment.
For those who have not gathered the accumulations and have not seen the buddhas, this great secret essence will not even come to be heard.

The rite of secret yoga is complete.
Next, the four secret seals should be learned by one skilled in the maṇḍala.
That very secret of wisdom, too,
is fully turned once it has been accomplished.
The great and utterly secret one should be placed so that it pervades all things.
These are the four fierce vajras, together with oneself as the fifth:
the supreme inexpressible secret,
which brings attainment of the way of supreme wisdom,
for the sake of fully accomplishing great bliss,
great joy, utterly steadfast.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra samaye hūṃ
hūṃ vajra maṭa
oṃ vajra prati bhṛkuṭī vajra rata oṃ vajra padma vajra tita oṃ vajra karma atri krodha
In the eastern and southern quarters, in the western and northern quarters,
in the center and the four directions,
one should arrange the seals through application.
The sublime maṇḍala of seals should all be drawn and arranged.
Vajrasattva, the great king,
will be seen; of this there is no doubt.
In accordance with the yoga as explained,
the subsequent yoga of the vajra arises.
As for the remaining yogas,
all of them should be made firm.
The utterly secret is the great reality;
the supremely secret is the supreme reality.
The great secret holds the secret,
the vajra secret, greatly steadfast.

One who wishes for the knowledge mantra should draw it properly with his own hand.
If one recites the great queen, accomplishment comes in the maṇḍala in an instant.
oṃ sarva tathāgata viśuddha dharma hoḥ Having drawn the great maṇḍala oneself, one should strive in reciting the knowledge mantra.
Through the application of summoning by loving-kindness, one should apply compassion to saṃsāra.
oṃ viśuddha dheṣṭi jaḥ
Having written the secret mantra oneself, and having kissed the girl's lips:
the great queen of Lokeśvara,
the goddess Prajñāpāramitā.
oṃ svabhāva viśuddhaḥ
mukhe hūṃ
Through practicing the six perfections
the conduct of awakening is very hard to find;
but if the yoga of the Buddha becomes firm,
one will accomplish it; of this there is no doubt.
One should enter this maṇḍala, and with the five supreme sense pleasures
one should sport and take delight.
As explained in the sūtra of the Lord of Secrets,
the full accomplishment of the five secrets is explained as the five sense pleasures.
The tathāgata family and the rest are spoken of as the five sense pleasures.
Through this application of desire the fortunate one attains accomplishment.
That secret is the great reality:
the full accomplishment of the five families.
In order to fully accomplish great passion,
one should sport and greatly delight.
For the sake of accomplishing great bliss,
the great conduct, the great way,
the compendium of all the yogas of reality,

I shall next properly explain.
Through the yoga of Vajrahūṃkara
one should accomplish the work of yoga.
Just as, arising from the syllable hūṃ,
it forms the great king of secrets,
so through the application of Vajrahūṃkara
one should accomplish the work of yoga.
If it is not so, the great seal called the pledge will never be accomplished.
Having condensed the great seal,
fully take up the vajra seal.
Next, the great seal of accomplishment, which through the true syllables of accomplishment brings swift and full accomplishment, the great marvel, I shall explain.
oṃ sarva tathāgata vajra samaye hūṃ Abiding within the full disk of the Moon, fully take up the great seal;
one should urge it on with the vajra mantra and fully accomplish the awakening of a buddha.
hūṃ vajra maṭa
As Vajra Vidyā, the supreme king,
one should fully meditate on oneself;
if one makes all the buddhas afraid,
one will accomplish it; of this there is no doubt.
oṃ bhṛkuṭī vartha
Empowering oneself,
fully take up the jewel seal;
through raining down a shower of jewels
one will accomplish it; of this there is no doubt.
oṃ padma vajri hrīḥ th Oneself as the eye of wisdom, with the words, "One should urge it on with the vajra mantra," one should urge on the great lotus family.
hūṃ karma vajra kriti ta
The great king of the variegated vajra,
the great self of various activities:

if one worships all the buddhas,
one attains the accomplishment of activity.
Together with a lovely woman
one should properly perform the maṇḍalas.
From the royal sūtra of the Lord of Secrets
the four kinds have come forth.
Then, fully gathering the various characteristics,
the one with wide eyes, supreme great joy, likewise the host, and she who has the vajra eye, with the eye of wisdom, endowed with the great supreme queen.
oṃ vajra karma ho vajra hūṃ hūṃ kaṭa maṭa raṭa vaṭa karana vajrī gri vajra guru vajra phaṭ karara gri śuddhi ghi śuddhi śuddhaṃ gri buddha satva rāja rāga tuṣṭi ratna teja ketu hāsa dharma tīkṣṇa hetu ghoṣa dharma rakṣa yakṣa sanbhi siddhi yoga guhya viṣaka cārya cari jñāna ratva sumbha taga gruṃ hūṃ phaṭ hūṃ vaṃ hūṃ ca hūṃ ma hūṃ sa hūṃ ha hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ ja hūṃ ho hūṃ sa hūṃ aṃ hūṃ a hūṃ traṃ hūṃ taṃ hūṃ haṃ hūṃ dhaṃ hūṃ dhi hūṃ maṃ hūṃ raṃ hūṃ kaṃ hūṃ haṃ hūṃ vaṃ oṃ sarva tathāgata abhijñā oṃ sarva tathāgata cagresa oṃ sarva tathāgata viśāca oṃ sarva tathāgata cakre dhaṃ oṃ anudpanane a oṃ anuruhe ā oṃ anale i oṃ nīle ī oṃ ratne u oṃ ratta ū oṃ sa u ṛ oṃ la e ṝ oṃ ata ḷ oṃ āhare ra ḹ oṃ āśane e oṃ bhehe ghe ai oṃ sarvāśā paripūrṇe o oṃ bharade au oṃ spharaṇe aṃ oṃ viśva aḥ oṃ mahoce bre ka oṃ tiṣṭha kha oṃ amukha ga oṃ abhiṣe gha oṃ jñāna ṅa oṃ ccheda ca oṃ vārāhirya cha oṃ bhaśe ja oṃ bhadhe jha oṃ praśame ña oṃ krodhi ṭa oṃ harane ṭha oṃ bhigha ḍa oṃ kṣave ḍha oṃ aṇu ṇa oṃ ṭakkile ta oṃ visule tha oṃ dhāraṇī da oṃ vatake dha oṃ valoke na oṃ trate pa oṃ sarva harani pha oṃ bhuśani ba oṃ bhibaśani bha oṃ arate ma oṃ alini ya oṃ traha ra oṃ viśa la oṃ buddhe va oṃ dhame śa oṃ yamabhe ṣa oṃ sarve sa oṃ dhalini ha ho tha hūṃ jaḥ hāsa oṃ a vaha aro nivi daśa traradhi bhupa saya ahi krodha dhamaśa bharaya yugati darśana hāsaya he mahāne dharaṇa oṃ sarva tathāgata savijñā mahāmune rājā garbho rājā kraya hi hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ ha

This secret of the tathāgatas, since it is spoken in the sūtra of the Lord of Secrets,
is of the steadfast nature of the dharmadhātu;

it arises from the Dharma and from complete enjoyment.
Nothing is equal to meditating on it for well-being.
How wonderful! The great secret, the compendium of all secrets, the vast compendium of yoga, too, is without equal.
This great bliss becomes steadfast, a steadfast reality.
The master of great joy is the Sun of great joy;
the compendium of the secret, worthy of worship, the compendium of all the maṇḍalas arising from the speech of the Omniscient One, has been spoken, by which the accumulations grow and greatly increase.
The great vajra one, of great fortune, should train in all the secrets.
The Dharma of reality, the great yoga:
one should enter it in the dense compendium.
One hundred and thirty-six and more,
the compendium of all the maṇḍalas of the assembly:
through drawing and the letters of the vajra words,
one should train in the secret maṇḍala.
The compendium of all the maṇḍalas of the tantra:
into this secret maṇḍala,
with the utterly pure letters of reality,
one should enter the great yoga.
It is square, with four gates,
adorned with four archways,
properly endowed with four lines,
and adorned with silken tassels.
Through the application of the Vajradhātu and the rest,
the dense secret is utterly steadfast.
In order to train in the secret of reality,
the wise one should train in the maṇḍala.
How wonderful! Through the application of the maṇḍala, the compendium of all the secret maṇḍalas,
through the application of the Vajradhātu and the rest,
the learned one should properly draw and arrange it.
The tiers, equally square,
should be made within it.
In the central part of the maṇḍala

one should place the form of the Buddha.
In all its directions
draw properly whatever is appropriate.
On the maṇḍala whose nature is four-sided place thirty-six letters.
In all the directions around the Buddha draw sixteen letters properly.
The king of the sixteen letters,
together with the host of seals and with light:
on the four sides of the great maṇḍala draw the letters properly.
Thirty letters, thirty each,
should be placed in all the directions.
In the center of the Buddha's heart
one should apply the syllable hūṃ.
The one who bears the name of the application should be placed in the center, as the Buddha.
Fully applying the vajra letters,
the wise one, as a holder of vajra knowledge,
places the letters:
in the center the vajra, and four vajras;
in the east draw thirty letters;
likewise thirty letters in the south;
thirty in the northern quarter;
and in the west one should apply thirty.
Properly apply the sixteen letters;
in the center make it endowed with four buddhas.
Vajra yoga, great yoga,
lord of yoga, great lord,
glorious one of the world endowed with yoga,
become the host of steadfast descent, great Victor arisen from speech:
one should enter the yoga of the Buddha.
uroti kota mahārya yodharya virte nāmane
Then, through this application, one should set down the vajra wheel.
ha ha ho ho, great secret,

holding the trident and three locks of matted hair,
great king, for the sake of great splendor:
encircle it fully with vajra lines.
Having looked upon it, the great master should fully recite the letters.
Through the wheel of the vajra maṇḍala, emanate the vajra wheel everywhere.
a ā: properly take up the yoga;
i ī: the light of Maheśvara;
u ū: the one who holds the sharp one;
e ai: fully urging on the melodious voice;
o au: the protector, the great spokes;
aṃ aḥ: the excellent eye of wisdom.
And with this Vajra Hook
one should urge on Vajradhara.
According to the wheel, according to the family,
as is fitting, according to the vajra family,
so one should fully arrange the wheel.
The vajra master of great austerity
and great fortune properly applies this secret vajra wheel and fully turns that magical display.
Bringing down the wheel and setting it in place,
one should enter according to the rite,
just as it was taught at length
in the maṇḍalas of the Vajradhātu and the rest.
With the wheel of the maṇḍala of the family,
endowed with the wheel maṇḍala,
the place of the wheel comes under one's power, properly endowed with the wheel of Dharma.
Vajra summoning, the fortunate one,
the one who delights, the jewel, splendor,
properly endowed with banner and laughter; Dharma, and the sharp one, the supreme chief;
cause, and the fierce one, the great violent one;
action, protection, the yakṣa, accomplishment:
properly endowed with these various applications,

the magical display of the wheel arises.
Through such an application
one should draw the vajra wheel all around.
The master should bring all the vajra holders into this maṇḍala.
To those who are not sons or disciples
the great collection of secrets should not be given.
Otherwise, to those endowed with fortune,
you may give this text here.

From the Vajra Peak, the great king of ritual of the supremely secret, utterly secret yoga, the king of the lords of the secret sūtras of all the tathāgatas, the explanation of the utterly secret reality of the vajra family, the fourth chapter, is complete.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana, together with all the tathāgatas, once again supplicated Vajrasattva, the reality of all the tathāgatas, with these one hundred and eight names:

Vajrahūṃkara, supreme vajra, holder of the supreme vajra, vajra arrow,
vajra frown of wrath, vajra body,
vajra blaze, great banner,
vajra peal of laughter, vajra lord,
vajra host, holder of the supreme Dharma, Vajraketu, exceedingly sharp,
vajra wheel, great mantra recitation,
karma vajra, great vajra, Vajrayakṣa, great terror,
vajra mudrā, great sound, Vajramuṣṭi, great steadfastness,
vajra blaze, great vajra,
great action, great arrow, Vajrasādhu, great joy,
vajra ornament that captivates,
vajra light, great banner,
vajra teeth, supremely joyful,
vajra lotus that utterly cuts,
vajra maṇḍala, vajra knowledge,

vajra tongue, great in variety,
great weapon of every kind, arrow for all creatures,
great armor, vajra body,
terrifying vajra fangs,
vajra binding, great vajra,
Vajra Wrath, great bow,
Vajra Hook, great treasury,
great noose, great power,
vajra chain, great in bringing down, Vajra Descent, the terrifying,
the syllable jaḥ, the syllable hūṃ,
the syllable hūṃ that binds fast,
the syllable hoḥ, the syllable haḥ,
vajra mudrā, supreme in pride, Vajrasattva, great wrathful one,
hook beyond all threat, vajra wrath,
vajra māra, supreme among māras, utter destroyer of the māra of māras, Vajra Joy, great peace,
vajra austerity, bringer of auspiciousness,
vajra fierce one, exceedingly savage,
vajra sovereign, maker of vajras, vajra desire, great wrathful one,
vajra sound, great sound, Buddha Hūṃkara, the syllable hūṃ, equal to the syllable phaṭ and the rest,
the syllable phaṭ, the blazing command,
the syllable svāhā, without intrinsic nature,
lord who slays and who revives,
stainless one who terrifies and who brings relief, buddha, great wrathful buddha, wrathful vajra tathāgata, suchness arisen from attachment:
Vajra Wrath, homage to you!

Whoever recites these sacred one hundred and eight names

once each and every day will attain the supreme accomplishment.
For them there will be no fear;
they will not become destitute or servants.
As taught by the Buddha Vajradhara,
they will attain the supreme accomplishment.

Hero, we supplicate you:
in order to tame the vicious
and likewise to benefit sentient beings, please bring forth the great way.

The Great Yoga Tantra of the Secret called the Vajra Peak is complete.

It was translated and checked by the Indian preceptor, the great vajra master Karmavajra, and the translator monk Shönu Tsultrim.

The twelfth section.

Here is contained the Collection of Tantras, volume Ta.

Translator's Notes

• The supplicants' questions continue into the following piece; the closing quotation mark is placed before the section marker that ends this set. "Ritual procedure" renders □□□□□□ (Skt. kalpa). The names Vajrarāja through Vajrarakṣa are the sixteen great bodhisattvas of the Vajradhātu maṇḍala; "the great fist" refers to the last of these, Vajramuṣṭi (also called Vajrasandhi). "Of which the great Lord of Secrets has spoken" reads the instrumental with □□□□□ as a relative clause; it could also be taken as a request, "Great Lord of Secrets, speak!"
• "The supreme one born of the secret, and the secret of light rays" renders a terse line whose construction is uncertain. "Taken up" renders □□□□, referring to the dismantling or withdrawal of the maṇḍala at the end of the rite. The doubled syllable in □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is treated as a copyist's repetition.
• "The six-faced one born of the host" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, probably an epithet of Kārttikeya (Ṣaṇmukha), with □□□□ read as □□□□ ("face"); the identification is not certain. In the line "that I am their very self," □□□□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□□□, □ ("I") fitting the following first-person verses. In "how does no fault arise," □□□□□ is read as □□□□□ ("fault"). In "lovely and steadfast," □□□□ is read as □□□□. These verses voice the apparent contradictions of tantric teaching as questions; they are not instructions.
• The repeated phrase rendered "the compendium of all rites" (rtog pa thams cad bsdus pa) reflects Sanskrit kalpa in the sense of ritual system; the list appears to name the ritual cycles of the Yoga tantras (for example the Tattvasaṃgraha, Trailokyavijaya and Paramādya), but the titles are translated as this text gives them. "Ghana Akaniṣṭha" renders 'og min stug po; the later "sdug po" is read as the same place name (stug po). "bas gas pa" is read as bsags pa, "gathered," and "mtshungs bas" as mtshungs par. "rigs pas" before the snapping of fingers is read as rig pas, "with the vidyā." The line "Before and after there is no great bliss" and the phrase "the unmoving state" (g.yo ba med chos ma, the āsphānaka absorption) are uncertain in sense. The empowerment "of the cloth" (gos kyi dbang) likely refers to the bestowal of the silk diadem at the final stage of consecration.

• The closing section plays on the Tibetan rtog pa, which renders both kalpa, a ritual system or rite, and kalpanā, conceptual construction, alongside rtogs pa, realization. Dharmas are said to be free of conception, yet the teaching is called a rite; "rite" is used where the text defines its own term. "Dharma and enjoyment" likely alludes to the Dharma body and the enjoyment body. The ground of Perfect Joy is the first bodhisattva ground (Pramuditā).

• "Later tantra" renders rgyud phyi ma (uttaratantra); the text glosses each word in turn. In this piece drag po is used as an adjective, "fierce," of Vajradhara and his wrathful form, not as the name Rudra. "Compendium of All Secrets" renders gsang ba kun du bsdus pa, taken as the title of a cited source; it could also be read as "as taught in the gathering of all secrets."

• "The permanent, the Imperturbable, the Lord of Jewels, Amitābha, and the accomplishments" seems to name the five families by their lords (Vairocana, Akṣobhya, Ratnasambhava, Amitābha, Amoghasiddhi) in veiled form; rendered as the Tibetan stands. "Word from the wordless" reads tshig med for tshig me. "Most painful afflictions" renders shin tu sdug pa'i nyon mongs as written.

• The deities of this passage are the sixteen vajra bodhisattvas of the Vajradhātu maṇḍala, often named here by the second element only (Rāga, Sādhu, Hāsa and so on). "The four families" from which the occasion arises may refer to the four abodes of Brahmā named in the next line. In the line on the father and mother of the action family, "gnod sbyin srung ba" could name either Vajrayakṣa as protector or Yakṣa and Rakṣa together; it is read as one figure.

• The passage gives semantic etymologies of Sanskrit terms. "Joined with the prefix pra" renders rab sbyor, explaining prajñā as pra plus jñā; "na has the great meaning of negation" explains naya by its syllable na; "thinking" explains dhyāna from the root dhyai. The line on the yogin, shes rab kyi na des sems pa, is obscure as it stands; it has been read as "one who thinks by means of wisdom." The line "and I am the one who enjoys the five objects of desire" reads □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ as □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□. "Vajra jewels" (rdo rje rin chen) here describes the material of the palace rather than naming the deity Vajraratna. "Densely Arrayed" renders stug po'i zhing khams, the Ghanavyūha field.

• The Great Lord who answers the question on recitation is called dbang phyug chen po gsang ba, here rendered "Maheśvara, the Secret One"; in this tantra the epithet may well refer to the presiding Lord of Secrets rather than to Śiva. The colophon's phrase "from the sixth" (drug pa las) is translated literally; its reference is unclear. The last line, mchu yis ma yin gcig kyang min, continues into the next piece, which lists the other organs of speech not to be used; "nor with any one of them" is a provisional reading of gcig kyang min. "The mantra that joins the unjoined" renders sbyor med sbyor ba'i sngags literally.

• "The nature of reality" reads chos nyid for the written cho sa nyid, which makes no sense as it stands. "The goddesses" renders sman ma, here read as female deities; the line may instead intend medicinal plants. "Vajrakālī" renders rdo rje nag mo, "the black vajra goddess"; the identification is not certain. "The Vajra Eye" renders rdo rje spyan, possibly the deity Vajralocanā. The labels after the mantras are given as the text places them.

• "Until the accumulation is complete" renders ji srid tshogs bar du, whose exact sense is unclear. The phrase phyag rgya rgya rnams repeats a syllable and is read as "the mudrās." "Firm application to the Dharma" renders chos la nges sbyor. The total of eighteen comes from three for the buddha family, three for the vajra family, and four each for the jewel, lotus and action families.

• "The yoga of the abodes of Brahmā" (tshangs pa'i rnal 'byor) refers to the four immeasurables, the brahmavihāras. "One hundred and ten" renders brgya rtsa bcu as written. In the stanza on wisdom, the last line, sangs rgyas sems can dag gyur cig, could also be read

"may buddhas and sentient beings become pure." "The supreme awakening," "the source of phenomena" and "śrīvatsa" are names of mudrās. The line on the Dharma, the enjoyment and the emanation seems to allude to the three bodies of a buddha.

• The figure called "the heart of the buddhas" (sangs rgyas snying po) in the action-family section may be a proper name (Buddhagarbha); it is rendered by meaning. In "do not bear the name of great elements" (byung ba che sgra 'dzin pa min) the sense is uncertain. "Indra gems" renders dbang po, probably indranīla (sapphire), though the identification is not certain. In "there is no such thing as form" the text reads bra ba, taken as a slip for bya ba; "de na" at the start of the action-family verses is taken as "de nas", "then". In the rosary section the Tibetan joins bo de tse to "sustaining life" (srog 'dzin pa), which may reflect a seed name such as putraṃjīva.

• "When, wearied by recitation, one rises" reads skyon ("fault") in a line one syllable short; it is taken as skyo ("weary"). "Should not be made smaller than five" reads chud for chung ("smaller"), an evident slip. The line on offering food (bza' bdag pa dbul bar bya) is unclear and is rendered simply as "offer the food". In the list of daily practices the text names three dharmas and the four called Brahmā's (the four immeasurables), yet says "in eight ways"; this is translated as it stands. The units for the maṇḍala sizes after "six cubits" (five, ten, six) are not stated and are presumably cubits.

• The line rendered "and you, having gone forth" (ci nas song ni khyed cag rnams) is obscure; it seems to address the disciples. "The secret eye" (gsang ba'i spyan) that the vajra mudrā summons is unclear. "The lying down" (nyal) probably refers to the sleep or night spent at the site during the preparatory days. The days counted (the fifteenth, the eighth, and so on) are days of the lunar month. "Foods to chew" and "foods to eat" read bca' bdag and bza' bdag, taken as bca' ba and bza' ba.

• "Vajrakrodha" renders rdo rje khro bo, "the vajra wrathful one", here paired with Vajrasattva as a deity to be saluted. The counts "a hundred and ten and more" and "eight kinds and ten more" follow the Tibetan (brgya dang rtsa bcu lhag; rnam pa brgyad dang rtsa bcu lhag), whose exact totals are unclear. The line "and not mantras and mudrās of that sort" is obscure in the Tibetan. "Prepare the food" reads bza' bdag, taken as bza' ba. The list of twenty fire offerings breaks off at the end of this piece.

• In the sexual yoga passage mtshan ma is the sexual organ, not "sign", and dbang po is the organ, not Indra. "Lord of the world" ('jig rten dbang phyug) is taken as an epithet of Vajrasattva, who is being addressed, though it could name Lokeśvara. In the western group of emblems rta babs ("portico") stands among animals and is taken as "horse". "Savor" renders bran par bya, whose sense is uncertain. "The great pigment" (tshon rtsi chen po) is translated literally; its esoteric referent is not explained here.

• "Supreme bliss" renders bde mchog, which here is a description of the accomplishment rather than the deity Cakrasaṃvara. The line on increasing life reads che 'phel, taken as a slip for tshe 'phel, "increasing life," as the accompanying mantra (āyuṣe) confirms. Pākṣa and śapuṣpa (sha pus pa) are offering substances that cannot be identified with confidence and are kept close to the Tibetan spelling. Under the syllable ho, tshags is read as chags, "passion." In "it brings attainment," thob ba is read as thob par. "Fire offerings of reality" renders de nyid, which echoes the title The Twenty Principles (de kho na nyi shu pa) given in the colophon line.

• "Supreme lord of unfailing purpose" renders don yod dbang phyug dam pa, taken here as an epithet of Vajrasattva rather than a separate deity. In the passage on the monk with shaven head, the Tibetan says only that long, coiled blue hair should be bound up, and the sense of the instruction is left as the text gives it.

• The placement of the four samaya deities around Vairocana is given tersely, and the lines naming them, including "the crusher of Māra" and "the vajra in the attitude of pride," are kept as they stand. "Vajra Desire, the great Māra" renders rdo rje 'dod chags bdud chen po, which may be an epithet within the Vajrasattva group rather than a separate figure. "The fourfold maṇḍala" could also be read as "the fourth maṇḍala."

• "Vajra tiriṃtiri" keeps the Tibetan sound-spelling of an implement that cannot be identified with confidence. The garbled spellings □□□□□ and □□□□□□□ are read as dgod ("place") and mche ba dag ("fangs"). The frowning wrathful one (khro gnyer can) probably corresponds to Bhṛkuṭi, but the text gives no clear name, so the epithet is translated.
• The deities placed on the body of the all-formed central figure are identified as follows. □□□□□ is read as the Aśvins, □□□□□□□ as Kumāra (Skanda), □□□□ as Durgā ("fortress"), □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ as Gaṇapati, and the flower-weaponed one as Kāma. "The Black One" and "Big Belly" translate □□□□□□□□□□□ and □□□□□□□□□□ literally. □□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as the nāga Upatapta, with some doubt. □□□□□□ is unclear and is tentatively rendered "nape."
• "The Illuminator" renders □□□□□□□□, which follows Rāhu and Vemacitrin in a list of asura figures; its Sanskrit form could not be identified with confidence, so it is translated by meaning. The line "Padma Sādhu are to be duly assigned" takes □□□□□□ as the name Sādhu (the fourth attendant, after the sattva, hook and arrow), with □□□□□ read as "assign"; it could also mean "bestow well". □□ in □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is rendered "net" as written, but it may be a scribal slip; the next line lists the usual jewel-family attendants (Bhṛkuṭī, the Sun, the Banner). The closing □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is probably a running count of sections or verses in the edition, and is translated literally.
• The names of the four secret goddesses around Vajrasattva and of the goddesses of the lotus and jewel families are translated by meaning, apart from Kāmeśvarī and Vajraśrī, because their Sanskrit forms could not be identified with confidence. The verse about these goddesses is hard to construe, and the reading given (her clasping the Blessed One's hand, another raising the makara banner) is a best attempt. "Lord of Jewels" renders □□□□□□□□□□□, apparently Ratnasambhava as the jewel-family buddha, but it is translated by meaning. The numbers one hundred and eighty-five and one hundred and eighty-nine probably count the deities of the maṇḍala.
• Several names of the outer-circle deities are translated by meaning (He of the Coiled Light, the Intoxicated One, the Escorts, the Silk-Clad One, the World-Renowned One, the chief who sports with the wheel) because their Sanskrit forms could not be identified with confidence; the Silk-Clad One may be Indra under his epithet Kauśika. □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as Sanatkumāra, "the eternal youth". "The ten thousand" in "those taught by the ten thousand" is literal, and its reference is unclear.
• The heading of the incense mantra reads □□□□□□□□□, evidently a slip for □□□□□□□□□, "incense", which the mantra itself (dhūpe) confirms; it is translated as "incense". The line about stepping on "the eyebrows" (□□□□□□) is translated as written; the sense of eyebrows in a list of maṇḍala features is unclear.
• "Hundreds of kinds and tenfold" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, whose exact sense (literally "a hundred varieties and ten points") is unclear. The opening line in the request to the master, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, is taken as an address, "Great Joy, you are my teacher". The piece ends in the middle of the disciple's request, which continues in the next piece.
• "The secret lord of tantras" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, which may be the title of a specific tantra (compare the chapter colophons' "lord of secret sūtras"); it is translated descriptively. The jewel-family section lacks the closing line naming its family that the other sections have; it is translated as it stands. In the master's instructions the vehicles are "outer and secret," in the disciple's pledge "outer, inner and secret," as the text gives them. The phrase □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ here clearly denotes the ritual implements vajra and bell, not the name used earlier, so it is translated as two objects. The final lines state that the great being should not examine whether the disciple is a vessel, which contrasts with the earlier instruction to examine; the following verse (that merely seeing the maṇḍala brings buddhahood) supports this reading.

• The opening lines (the continuation of the previous verse) are read as saying that even one who is not a vessel may be given mere admission, since seeing the maṇḍala alone is held to bring buddhahood; the full rites are reserved for those examined and found fit. The bare numbers after the descent mantra and the list of words with numbers (rite, ten; holding, twenty; and so on) are given as they stand; they appear to be recitation counts or a coded list, and their exact sense is uncertain. □□□□□□□□ is taken as "clapping". Several verses in the section on the Supreme Secret (dissolution, threatening, the five suns, the star, binding, love and the three, the lowest of the highest) are highly condensed technical allusions; they are translated literally and their precise reference is uncertain. In the prose, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, "wheel of play," as in the verse immediately after it. The last verse line about the king and the hundred queens of mudrā is ambiguous as to who or what becomes these.

• The opening section and the "host of mantras" consist of syllables with counts or numbers of applications; they are given as they stand, and their ritual purpose is not explained in the text. In □□□□□ the □□ is taken as a particle after the syllables ka and ta. The sixteen deities bound in pairs are the bodhisattvas of the Vajradhātu maṇḍala; their names are given in their standard Sanskrit forms (Vajraketu for the Vajra Banner). □□□□□□□□□□ in the last line is taken as "gentle smile" rather than as the deity name Hāsa.

• The line "now, who is it that does not find a self?" is kept as the text's question; its point appears to be that on analysis anyone fails to find a self in the body of four elements. "Vajra descent" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is taken as introducing the following practices; its exact force as a heading is uncertain.

• This section reinterprets the gods of the Brahmanical pantheon (Prajāpati, Viṣṇu, the Sun, the Moon, Yama, Indra, Brahmā as the Grandfather, Bhava, Agni, Vāyu) and the cosmic levels (below the earth, upon the earth, above the earth, the three realms) as aspects of awakened mind; short labels such as "Indra:" and "Agni:" in the text name the god about to be explained. □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as Mahāloka, one of the higher worlds of Purāṇic cosmology; this identification is uncertain. In the passage on the qualities, the lines saying one who attains the ground "does not gain conviction" and keeps to the Lesser Vehicle up to the eighth ground appear to describe a practitioner outside the secret path, in contrast with those who have entered it.

• This piece is a run of Maheśvara and other gods redefined in Buddhist terms, followed by a list of epithets of goddesses in the retinue. Most of these epithets cannot be matched with confidence to known Sanskrit names, so they are translated by meaning. □□□ ("food") is read as □□□ ("planets"), since the next lines turn to the grahas. The lines on "blessing" and the syllable tha seem to be an etymological wordplay that cannot be fully recovered from the Tibetan. □□□□□□□□ is taken tentatively as a drum. In the closing section, "sign" (rtags) and "mark" (mtshan ma) stand for the male organ (liṅga), and the bhaga is the female organ; the text glosses these as wisdom and means.

• This is antinomian tantric verse that recasts killing, stealing, lying, desire and impure substances as figures for liberating realization; the text supplies its own glosses (for example, "wealth" as saṃsāra and "sentient being" as attachment to name and form). The text is translated literally, as it stands. The line "It is the family that degenerates" is ambiguous in the Tibetan; it may be a heading for the verses that follow. "The great rite" renders rtog pa chen po, echoing the title Compendium of All Rites (Sarvakalpasamuccaya).

• The verses follow the five aspects of complete awakening (pañcākārābhisambodhi) of the Yoga tantras: discerning one's own mind as a moon disk, the awakening mind as a second moon, the vajra, the vajra self, and the buddha body. "Lord of Unfailing Purpose" renders don yod dbang phyug, which cannot be confidently matched to a Sanskrit name. The line "formerly they brought all aims to accomplishment" seems to allude to Sarvārthasiddhi, the bodhisattva who awakens through these mantras in the Yoga tantra narrative.

• "The Densely Arrayed abode" renders stug po'i gnas (Ghanavyūha). The line listing the four kings, "Akṣobhya, Vajra, the Lord of Jewels, and the unsurpassed Amoghasiddhi," is translated as it stands; the western buddha does not appear by name in it. "Turning the wheel of Dharma" reads brtul ba as bskor ba, which the context requires. The "six intermediate directions" are translated as written.

• The verses link each of the sixteen great bodhisattvas to a virtue by wordplay on his name (hook, passion, Sādhu, jewel, splendor, banner, laughter, lotus, sharpness, wheel, speech, protection, fist). Without that background, some lines, such as "the being who is taught is unfailing," read obscurely, and they are translated as they stand.

• The line rendered "Scent turns away from nonvirtuous deeds" reads dring in the Tibetan, which makes no sense and leaves the line a syllable short; it is taken as dri ni, "scent". The list of sixteen secret names ends with Karmavajrī again, repeating the fourth name; this is translated as it stands. The goddesses called "Vajra Hammer Lady" and "Vajra Wisdom Lady" are translated literally because their Sanskrit names could not be identified with confidence. The couplet about the great-souled bodhisattva and the thirty-seven is obscure; it seems to mean that the four secret goddesses are not counted among the thirty-seven deities. Who is supplicated, and whose words Vajradhara hears, is also ambiguous in the verse: "the Protector" may refer to Vajradhara or to Vairocana.

• "The seven forms" of sexual intercourse likely refers to the seven kinds of sexual conduct (maithunasaṃyoga) which a celibate must give up, as listed in the sūtras.

• The couplet on the slight fault is terse; it seems to mean that one should not be careless of even a small fault, even at the cost of one's life. The lines about "those in the assembly who wish for the Lesser Vehicle" are obscure in the Tibetan ('khor pa rnam par gzhol ba); they are taken to mean that such hearers should be turned toward the Great Vehicle.

• "Bind with the vajra and the rest" renders rdo rje lta las sogs pa bcing, whose wording is unclear. "Vajra beak and great beak" translates rdo rje mchu and mchu chen po literally; these appear to be yellow substances whose identity is uncertain. Dri chu is taken as urine, used with mantra to consecrate the ground; it could also be read as scented water.

• The line "I am the supreme maṇḍala of the king" renders the Tibetan literally; it may mean that one asks to perform the supreme king of maṇḍalas.

• "Established in the fifth by means of the wheel" is rendered literally; the reference is presumably to a position or mudrā within the ritual sequence and is not specified in this piece. "Because one obtains the lofty secret" reads □□□□□□□ as the evident □□□□□□□. The "Joyous ground" is Pramuditā, the first bodhisattva ground. "Vajra stone" for □□□□□□□□□□□ reads □□□ as □□□ (stone); the reading is uncertain.

• The two lines "He holds its directions completely; he should be properly drawn and placed by the wise" repeat, in slightly altered form, the lines just before them and look like a copyist's dittography; they are translated as they stand. The secret names of the four goddesses are given in only three phrases, so it is unclear whether "Greatly Glorious" is a separate name; the names are translated literally. The four queens are Sattvavajrī, Dharmavajrī, Ratnavajrī and Karmavajrī, though the Tibetan writes the second and fourth as Vajradharma and Vajrakarma. "Sky Treasury" may stand for Gaganagañjā. The meaning of "split vajra" (rdo rje phyed pa) as an empowerment is uncertain.

• "For the great action, a sharp vajra" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ literally; it presumably assigns the emblem of Vajrakarma, but the wording is unclear. "Armor" for Vajrarakṣa reads □□□□ ("rite"), which makes no sense as an emblem, as the similar-sounding □□□□ ("armor"), Vajrarakṣa's usual emblem. The emblems for the four corner goddesses are written rdo rje rin chen ("vajra jewel") and las ma ("action lady"), presumably meaning Ratnavajrī and Karmavajrī. "At the least" reads □□□□ as □□□. "By the millions" renders □□□□□; the line is obscure.

• "A hundred and seven more" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ literally; the reference, presumably to the number of signs, is unclear. The vajra master's request ("I, who am named such and such ... shall bring in the disciples") is in humble speech, addressed to the Sage.

• "If the samaya is impaired" reads □□□ ("equal") as the evident □□□ ("impaired, broken"). "This crushes your samaya" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ literally; the sense is presumably that the oath water destroys one who breaks the samaya. "The lesser lines" renders □□□□□, as in the earlier line about treading on the drawing; it could also mean "women", and the reading is uncertain.

• "Sixteen lifetimes" reads the evident □□ for the written □□ in □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□. The lines "not so is it with trust in the other vehicles" and the four lines on the two countless eons and "sixteen" are terse and their sense uncertain; they seem to contrast the long path of the other vehicles with the sixteen births of one who has entered the secret maṇḍala, though the verse as it stands says "without entering the secret vehicle"; it is translated as written, and the line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is a syllable short. □□□□□□ is here plainly the flower garland cast onto the maṇḍala, not the goddess Mālā, so it is translated as "garland".

• "The Lord of Secret Sūtras" renders □□□□□□□□□□□, apparently referring to the Tathāgata-guhya Sūtra Lord teaching named in the chapter colophons of this tantra. "The Jewel Lord" translates □□□□□□□ literally; it presumably denotes the jewel-family lord (Ratnasambhava or Vajraratna), but this is not certain.

• The syllables ḍa ba ta are given as written; they appear to be a recited formula whose sense is unclear. The closing verses listing Sattvavajrī and the other goddesses are terse; they seem to name the four family consorts (of vajra, jewel, Dharma and action), but the exact grouping is uncertain.

• "First" reads □□□□ for the written □□□□. "The one who keeps the vows" reads □□□□ for the written □□□□, which makes no sense here.

• The hymn in long lines interprets a series of seed syllables; many of its phrases are terse and their exact sense is uncertain, especially the glosses on the individual syllables. "The harmful ones" renders □□□□□□□□□, taken as a variant of a term for harm-doers. "The ravishers" renders □□□□□□□□□□ literally; the class of beings meant is not certain.

• The first line reads smad byung, which makes no sense here; it is taken as the evident rmad byung, "marvelous," echoing the preceding line. "The Compendium of the Great Vehicle" renders theg pa chen po mngon bsdus, probably a reference to the Mahāyānābhisamaya, the title by which the Tattvasaṃgraha tradition designates its root scripture. "The unconquered" (ma pham) may alternatively be the epithet Ajita. Several verses of this section are terse and their syntax is open to more than one construal.

• "Whatever mind has meditated on the vajra" renders gang zhig as a relative ("whatever") because the clause is picked up by the predicate "is here called the subtle vajra." The two verses beginning "beginning with recollection at the crown" read rjes dran, "recollection," as written. "Bhūtas" renders 'byung po, which in this context of loving-kindness toward friends and non-friends may simply mean "beings" in general.

• "The two faculties" renders dbang po gnyis, which the text's own prose gloss here explains as the joining of one's own body with the body of the Buddha. "For a hundred and seven more" renders brgya las rtsa bdun lhag par literally; the sense may be a count of one hundred and seven (or more) repetitions.

• "The speech of all sentient beings: I am the sattva, Vajrabhāṣa" renders rdo rje smra ba, taken as the name Vajrabhāṣa; the preceding line reads sems dpa' smra ba brtan, "the steadfast speaking sattva," which may also be a further epithet of the same deity.

• The line "O yogins of the supreme secret" ends in the Tibetan with a stray syllable a, which is left untranslated. "First the intelligent one" reads sdon du as the evident sngon du, "first." "The Protector of the World" (Lokanātha) is taken here as an epithet of the buddha being worshiped rather than as the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara.
• "Kha yi 'o" is read as "the kiss of the mouth" ('o being "kiss"). "Sign" renders mtshan ma throughout, which the text itself glosses as the hand emblem; in this sexual-yogic context it also carries the sense of the male organ (liṅga). In "Killing and desiccating", the Tibetan has gsang ("secret"), which makes no sense in this list of fierce rites; it is read as gsad ("killing"), a likely copyist's slip. The line on obstructors and merit in the fourth secret is terse, and its exact construction is uncertain.
• The line "If there were no mind of awakening" stands without its own conclusion in the Tibetan; the following lines ("Therefore this entire wheel arises from the mind of awakening") appear to supply it. "Nourisher" renders gso ba (Skt. poṣa), one of the standard synonyms for a self. The verb bsgral ba is here taken in its ordinary sense of delivering beings, not in its wrathful-rite sense.
• "The view of a perishable aggregate" renders 'jig tshogs (satkāyadṛṣṭi), the view of a real self in the aggregates. The instructions on the moons ("in the center of the moon, an equal moon"; "on that moon, two moons") are elliptical in the Tibetan and are rendered as they stand.
• The seed syllables and their deities follow the sixteen bodhisattvas of the Vajradhātu maṇḍala as this text pairs them; Vajranetra (rdo rje spyan) and Vajrarakṣa (rdo rje bsrung ba) are identified from the Tibetan. "Vajra essence" and "various vajra" are kept descriptive, as they may be epithets rather than names. The list of the six kinds of secret is terse, and the division into six is not explicit in the Tibetan.
• In "a sharp vajra" the Tibetan reads non po, taken as a slip for rnon po, "sharp." The verse beginning "Truth, become the supreme pledge" is elliptical, and its construction is uncertain. "Thirty million" renders "three koṭis."
• In "vajra mind, great vajra" the Tibetan rdo rje sems (elsewhere a short form of Vajrasattva) is taken as "vajra mind" because it stands in parallel with "mind of awakening" in the preceding line. In "one should recite the hundred and eight names", gdon is the verb "to recite", not the noun graha. The line rendered "with stainless enclosures" reads ra ba dag, literally "pure enclosures/fences"; the sense is uncertain.
• The name rendered Mahāsena reads dbung chen in the text; it is taken as dpung chen, "Great Army" (Mahāsena), a standard name of Kārttikeya. The names "the Invincible" and "Five Lights" (mi pham, 'od lnga) and "Human Lineage" (mi rgyud), given to the king who is Īśvara's ally, could not be identified with confidence and are translated literally.
• The name rendered "Fierce Vajra" (rdo rje drag po), the name Vajrasattva takes on as Vajrayakṣa, is translated literally because its Sanskrit form could not be identified with confidence.
• The consort named "the Terrifying Lady" (jigs byed ma) is translated literally since her Sanskrit name could not be fixed with confidence. In "Rudra and Brahmā have fled", drag po is taken as the name Rudra; it could also be an adverb, "fiercely". The text reads bsngags ("praised") where the context, and a later parallel line, require mngags ("dispatched"); the latter is translated. "Ten countless ten millions" reads bye bdag, a line one syllable short, evidently for bye ba dag.
• The verses of Maheśvara's reply, from "The vicious and the retinues of many buddhas" to "the words of my bhūtas," are syntactically obscure in the Tibetan and are rendered closely; their sense is uncertain. "A great din" reads sgru, evidently for sgra, "sound". The wrathful one from the navel is said to bear a hook (lcags kyu), although his mantra names the kīla; the text is translated as it stands.

• The deities here are named after the body parts or ornaments from which they emerge; where a Sanskrit name could not be securely identified, the Tibetan has been translated by meaning (Strength, Bracelet, Fist, Vajra Fingers, Vajra Claw Face, the Waist, the Crown, Vajra Limb, Austerity, the Foot, the Sole, Vajra Possession). The Tibetan for "Austerity" (dka' thub) stands where the mantra and the later list of names point to an anklet (nūpura); it is translated as written. "The Vajra Limb who draws in" renders rdo rje yi ni yan lag drangs, which the later list gives as "Fierce Limb" (yan lag drag); the reading is uncertain. In the list of secret names, gnod mdzes is taken as Sumbha (compare the vidyā that follows), and bdag cag ("we, us") is translated literally as "among us"; the line is obscure. "Devouring their own flesh" (rang gi sha za) could alternatively be read as "their own piśācas", but the context of wrathful fury favors the literal sense. Here mtshan means "names," not the major marks.
• "Vajrayakṣa the Crusher" renders rdo rje gnod sbyin 'joms; it answers the Great God's claim not to know Vajrayakṣa, and the mantra that follows is that of Nisumbha. In the Blessed One's question near the end, "this great being" is taken as Vajra Wrath, the agent who is exhausting Maheśvara's life.
• Maheśvara's line "Is that Vajradhara not cruel?" renders rdo rje 'dzin pa de gdug min, taken as a plea; it could also be read as a flat statement, "That Vajradhara is not malevolent." The buddha field Thal bas g.yogs pa and the tathāgata Thal ba'i dbang phyug sgra dbyangs can are identified with Bhasmacchanna and Bhasmeśvaranirghoṣa, the names Maheśvara receives in the parallel account of his subjugation. "Maheśvara and those with him" renders dbang phyug chen po bcas, which leaves unstated who is with him.
• "Vajra Tirinṭiri" is a transliterated name (rdo rje ti rinti ri) that could not be identified with confidence. Many of the vajra names and divine names in the lists are rendered by meaning where a Sanskrit form could not be securely identified (for example Vajra Coil, the Great Staff, the Honey Maker, the Leg Eater, the Crown of the Earth, the Vajra Eightyfold Lady, the Clothed One, the Noseless One). In "Piṅgala Vajra Piṅgala" the Tibetan ends in min ("not"), most likely a slip for mig, and is rendered by context. In the line on the Terrifier, the syllables nga na are obscure and have not been given a separate rendering. The line "Lest your life be ruined, likewise do not give the samaya away" is a tentative reading of an elliptical couplet.
• "These are words to be interpreted" renders 'di ni gzhug pa'i tshig yin; the verses that follow explain the burning figuratively, as the burning of the afflictions with the fire of wisdom. The piśācas' line "Let us do just as he says; yet we need not speak the truth" is taken as their plotting deceit, which fits Vajradhara's renewed wrath; it could also be read as an instruction not to speak truthfully. "With my blazing right hand" renders g.yas 'bar bas, which is terse.
• The syllable □ standing between the mantra "oṃ kṣepaya vajra svāhā" and the following seven-syllable line "rdo rje sems dpa'i thabs chen po" fits neither and appears to be a stray syllable; it is left untranslated. In "the great multicolored being" the text reads □□□□□, rendered per the house glossary; it may be a variant for □□□□□□, the wrathful one emanated just before. "The King of the Crown" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, apparently an Uṣṇīṣa wrathful king; the Sanskrit form is not certain.
• "No stars" reads □□□□□□ as a slip for □□□□□ (stars), which fits beside sun and moon. The sense of □□□□□□ ("opened out") in "the outer abodes appeared opened out" is uncertain. □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as "six or seven wrathful ones"; it could conceivably mean sixty-seven.
• □□□ in "thunder and great lightning" is read as a slip for □□□□ (lightning). In the color sequence the north is given as □□□ / □□□□ (rendered "ochre" and "madder") and likened to vaiḍūrya; in the five-family scheme this quarter is normally green, and the terms may stand for that color here. □□□□□□□ in "blue vajras" is read as □□□□□□□.
• □□□□□□, used three times of the maṇḍala's architecture, is rendered "borders"; its precise sense is uncertain. □□□□□□□□ in "a garland of flames unbearable" is read as □□□□□□□□ (hard to bear), as in the parallel line that follows. The couplet "the ten sons of the Great Fierce One, and then delightful things, arose" is obscure, and the identity of the Great Fierce One (□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is not stated.

• "Always delighting in mirth" renders the obscure □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, taking □□□□□ as a form of □□□□ (laughter); this is uncertain. □□□□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□□□ (four porticoes). "With his right foot presses down" supplies "foot" for the bare "with the right" (□□□□□□), as the trampling posture requires. The wrathful attendants of the south (Wrathful Radiance, Fierce Banner, Wrathful Laughter) correspond to Vajratejas, Vajraketu and Vajrahāsa of the Vajradhātu maṇḍala.

• "The great Vajra Descent of action" renders rdo rje dbab pa las chen po, the principal of the fourth (northern) maṇḍala; "descent" (āveśa) is the ritual descent or entering of the deity, and the exact Sanskrit name of this figure is uncertain. The "enclosure" (kha khyer) is the outer precinct of the maṇḍala where the worldly deities are placed.

• "The two organs" renders dbang po gnyis (two indriyas), here referring to the sexual union of deity and consort, which the closing prose reinterprets as the knowledge of the equality of the deity's body and one's own. "Made to receive the descent" renders dbab pa, the ritual descent (āveśa) of the deity or of wisdom into the participant.

• The lines on "the hardships of countless eons" are terse; the sense appears to be that the long path of hardship has its own practice, while for one diligent in this yoga the grounds are easily won. The "Compendium of the Great Vehicle" (theg pa chen po mngon bsdus) is taken as the title of a source text, possibly the Tattvasaṃgraha; this is uncertain. "The ground of Great Joy" is the first bodhisattva ground (Pramuditā). Vajratejas, Vajraketu, Vajrahāsa and "Vajra Armor" (Vajrakavaca) are identified by their standard Vajradhātu roles and the accompanying seed words.

• This piece is terse, with many compressed verse lines; the sequence of buddhas and their maṇḍalas (Ratnasambhava's guide setting out Vajra Joy, followed by the eastern maṇḍala of Akṣobhya) is rendered as the text stands. "The Vajra Bewilderer" renders rdo rje rmongs byed ma (probably Vajramohanī) and "the Vajra Queen" renders rdo rje rgyal mo; their Sanskrit forms are not certain. "Sisters" (sring mo) are the female attendant deities of the retinue.

• "The meteoric iron" (gnam lcags) and "summoning strokes" (pheg rdob) in the list of gate deities and offerings are terse and their exact referents uncertain. "One becomes rigid" renders reng par 'gyur as written, though its sense in connection with Vajrarāja is unclear. "The ground" in "the rites for protecting the ground" is taken as the ritual site. "The Supreme Secret is complete" marks the end of a section.

• The second Vajrarakṣa stanza is followed by a Vajrayakṣa mantra, but the Tibetan names Vajrarakṣa (rdo rje srung ba) again, so it is translated as written. In the Buddha stanza the text reads pham ("defeat"), evidently a slip for phab ("bring down"), as in the surrounding stanzas; translated accordingly. The four stanzas on loving-kindness, compassion, joy and equanimity correspond to the four immeasurables. The closing lines on Vajradhara are terse and their syntax is uncertain.

• Lāsyā, Mālā, Gītā, Nṛtyā and Puṣpā render the Tibetan names of the offering goddesses (sgeg mo, phreng ba, glu, gar ma, me tog) of the Vajradhātu maṇḍala. The lines on Bhṛkuṭi and on "making all the buddhas afraid" are translated as they stand, though their sense in this context is obscure. "The secret sūtra of the Great Yoga" may refer to a scripture of the Mahāyoga class rather than a generic description.

• The text reads thag khung, evidently a slip for thab khung, "hearth," and is translated so. The term sman ma, rendered "medicinal substance" in the stanzas on the bodhisattva, Vajrasattva and the Buddha, is uncertain; it may instead denote a female figure or effigy associated with each. "Consort" renders rig pa (vidyā) in its tantric sense of a female partner. The "royal sūtra of the Lord of Secrets" (mdo sde gsang dbang rgyal po) presumably refers to the scripture named in the chapter titles as the lord of secret sūtras; the identification is uncertain.

• "Bezoar" renders gi wang (gorocanā). In the line on the conduct of awakening the text has sbyod, read as spyod, "conduct." The closing verse naming the wide-eyed one and the vajra-eyed and wisdom-eyed goddesses is elliptical; chogs is read as tshogs, "host," and the identities of the figures are uncertain.
• The text reads sang pa chen po, evidently a slip for gsang ba chen po, "the great secret"; and rta babs bzhes, read as rta babs bzhis, "with four archways." In the list of the sixteen vajra deities, ngas byed is obscure and is rendered "the one who delights" on the assumption that it stands for dgyes byed (Vajrasādhu's position). The final instruction, gzhung 'di khyed kyis ci 'dir byin, is unclear; the interrogative ci may be a slip, and the line is taken as a permission to give the text to the fortunate.
• The litany of one hundred and eight names is a string of epithets of Vajrasattva in his wrathful aspect; many lines could be read either as names or as descriptions, and I have kept already established names (Vajraketu, Vajrayakṣa, Vajramuṣṭi, Vajrasādhu, Vajra Hook, Vajra Wrath, Vajra Descent, Vajra Joy) and rendered the rest descriptively. In "great noose, great power," □□□ is taken as power or control rather than empowerment, as the context of noose and subjugation requires. The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is unclear; I read □□□□□□□□□□ as "without (fear of) threat," hence "hook beyond all threat." The final lines on the twelfth section (bam po) and the volume label are scribal and catalog notices, translated as such.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.