The Section of the Mantra Ritual of Śrī Paramādya, known in Sanskrit as the Śrī Paramādya Mantra Kalpa Khaṇḍa and in Tibetan as Pal Chok Dangpö Ngak kyi Tokpé Dumbu, is a tantra devoted to the cycle of Paramādya, the Glorious Supreme Primordial One, a form of Vajrasattva identified with great bliss. Opening with Vairocana teaching the Pledge of the Unfailing Vajra of Great Bliss as a gateway to the Perfection of Wisdom, it presents great desire, when wholly purified, as the path to supreme accomplishment, and sets out mantras, mudrās, maṇḍala rites and the practice of the deities of the vajra families, closing with a series of questions and answers on the meaning of its own rites. It is Toh 488 in the Kangyur, where it belongs to the Tantra section, among the yoga tantras. According to its colophon it was translated at Tholing by the Indian paṇḍita Mantrakalaśa and the royal monk Zhiwa Ö, with gaps left in an earlier translation by Rinchen Zangpo later filled from manuscripts that had since been found.

In the language of India: śrī baramādya mantra kalpa khaṇḍa nāma. In the language of Tibet: The Section of the Mantra Ritual of Śrī Paramādya.

Homage to the Blessed One, Great Bliss.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana, who has realized the secret nature of reality of all the tathāgatas, because all phenomena are free of elaboration, once again spoke this sublime teaching called the Pledge of the Unfailing Vajra of Great Bliss, the gateway of the Perfection of Wisdom that is the vajra nature of reality, Śrī Paramādya, the Glorious Supreme Primordial One, without beginning, end or middle:

The supreme accomplishment of great desire of the great bodhisattvas becomes the supreme accomplishment of great bliss. The great bodhisattvas' supreme accomplishment of great bliss becomes the supreme accomplishment of the great awakening of all the tathāgatas. The supreme accomplishment of the great awakening of all the tathāgatas becomes the supreme accomplishment that utterly crushes all the power of the great Māra. The bodhisattvas' supreme accomplishment of utterly crushing the power of the great Māra becomes the supreme accomplishment of great sovereignty over all the three realms. The bodhisattvas' supreme accomplishment of sovereignty over all that belongs to the three realms, because it is the cause of their wish to purify completely the realm of sentient beings, entirely and without exception, and because the bodhisattvas of great diligence, unattached even to saṃsāra, completely protect the realm of sentient beings, entirely and without exception, becomes the supreme accomplishment of benefit and happiness for all sentient beings, the highest and utterly great bliss.

Why is that so?

As long as the supremely wise
Remain in the abode of saṃsāra,
So long are they able, unequaled, to work for beings
Without passing into nirvāṇa.

Through the perfection of wisdom and means,
And by making primordial wisdom their abode,
Since all phenomena are completely pure,
Saṃsāra becomes completely pure.

If they tame by means of desire and the rest,
Then constantly, as long as saṃsāra lasts,
To purify those in the world who do evil,
They themselves will tame them for as long as saṃsāra endures.

Just as a lotus, deep red,
Is not stained by the fault of the mud,
So those who benefit beings
Are not stained by the faults of their abode.

Great desire, completely pure,
Great bliss and great wealth:
Because they have attained lordship over the three realms,
They teach for the benefit of beings.

Whoever rises in the morning and every day recites, hears, retains, reads and meditates on this Dharma discourse, the gateway of the way of the Perfection of Wisdom of Śrī Paramādya, will obtain all happiness and joy of mind. In this very life he will also obtain the supreme accomplishment of the Pledge of the Unfailing Vajra of Great Bliss. He will also accomplish the supreme secret of all the tathāgatas, and will become all the great vajra holders, or a tathāgata.

From the Pledge of the Unfailing Vajra of Great Bliss, Śrī Paramādya, the gateway of the Perfection of Wisdom of the vajra secret of great bliss of all the tathāgatas is complete.

Then the Blessed One, the great Tathāgata Vairocana, the great king of the extensive rite for the accomplishment of the supreme vajra secret blessed by Vajrasattva of all the tathāgatas, the vajra of all body, speech and mind sealed by the rite that is the unfailing teaching of the vajra secret of the body, speech and mind of all the tathāgatas, who had fully entered into all the great pledges of all the tathāgatas and fully entered into the primordial wisdom that realizes the nature of reality, and whose action reaches the very limit, emanating through the manifold activities of all the tathāgatas into all world systems without exception in the three times, was dwelling in the celestial palace that is the abode of Vajrasattva, Great Bliss. It shone with the light of the manifold rays blazing from vajras and jewels set upon many half-moons. It was beautified by hanging golden bells and by manifold banners stirred by the wind. It was lovely and adorned with hanging garlands of various flowers, with cloths, mirrors and strings of pearls. It was richly adorned with supreme goddesses standing on its various balconies, with their laughter, their grace, their dancing and their songs, and with praises that awaken.

Then the Blessed One Vajrasattva, supreme among all the pledge beings blessed by the vajra of the body, speech and mind of all the tathāgatas, among all the empowerments, and among all the meditative absorptions and actions of omniscience, the tamer of all the three realms, the one who brings all under control, the holder, possessor of all the rites of the vast accomplishment of every desire, made this supplication to the eternal Tathāgata:

"As long as existence remains,
So long, accomplish the supreme aim of beings.
Because the realm of beings is boundless,
And because the Victor's children choose existence,
In order to destroy the faults of existence,
And in order to increase great bliss,
Grant me the authorization
Of the supreme secret rite that you have spoken."

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, contemplating intently the very unobscured nature of all phenomena, entered into absorption in the meditative absorption called the Manifold Vajra of Great Compassion for All Who Are to Be Tamed, which completely fulfills all the wishes of sentient beings, entirely and without exception, protects them all, and brings about every excellence of benefit, happiness and accomplishment, up to becoming the cause of primordial wisdom, of action, and of supreme accomplishment. The one who had attained all the tathāgatas themselves and the great Vajradhara, the first vajra of great bliss whose aim is supreme accomplishment, the universal monarch of all the tathāgatas, was himself consecrated with the empowerment of the diadem of the garland of the bodies of all the tathāgatas.

Then, in order to obtain all accomplishments, beginning with the supreme accomplishment of great bliss, entire and without exception, the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, sat in the cross-legged posture of a sattva, held his body straight, set his left hand in the gesture of pride, and, twirling the vajra in his right, held at his heart the application of the first and supreme vajra. And this very mudrā of all, called the Vajra of Great Bliss, issued from his body, speech and mind:

As soon as it had issued forth, all the tathāgatas came, and those who had fully taken up the fist of all the tathāgatas once again fully awakened to great awakening, and they burst into great laughter. All the world systems quaked and became completely pure. All the vast elaborations of the three realms became the great maṇḍala of the Blessed One, through which all sentient beings obtained happiness and joy of mind.

Then the great Vajradhara entered into absorption in the meditative absorption called the Great Vajra Mudrā, arisen from the unfailing and unobstructed nature of all the tathāgatas. Bringing under his sway what is called the Pledge of the Vajra of Great Bliss, he emitted from his whole body the beings of the Pledge of the Vajra of Great Bliss, who bestow all accomplishments, happiness and joy of mind, who are constantly joined with him and act together with him, and sent them out in all directions. In front was the Vajra Secret Born from Mind; on the right, Vajrakilikila; behind, Kāmavajra; and on the left, Vajragarvā. In the corners were the offering goddesses. At the corners of the outer parapet were the goddesses. The gatekeepers were those holding the vajra hook, noose, chain and bell. Outside were the hosts of vajra gatekeepers, the messengers and the servants.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, binding the fist of all the tathāgatas, entered into absorption in the meditative absorption called the Awakening

Vajra of All the Tathāgatas, and made this supplication to the Blessed One Vajrasattva, the great Vajradhara:

"For the happiness of all beings
The great victors come forth;
Free of desire, yet possessed of desire,
They partake even of their own consorts.
Therefore I request of you,
Great bliss, great vajra:
The accomplishment of the secret rite,
The supreme discipline, please explain."

Then the Blessed One, bringing under his sway the unfailing and unobstructed command called the Supreme Vajra Desire, the discipline of every accomplishment of great bliss, spoke this great maṇḍala called the Pledge of the Great Vajra Secret:

"Next I shall rightly explain
The great and sublime maṇḍala.
Great bliss, the supreme vajra,
Bears the name of the sublime pledge.

Having prepared the site of the maṇḍala,
In its center, according to the rite,
Settled in the great mudrā,
One should accomplish the maṇḍala there.

With a red cord, new, well twisted,
And without any knots,
One should lay out the lines,
And draw it with colored powders.

Four-cornered, with four gates,
Beautified by four archways,
Encircled all around by a parapet,
Its corners lovely with goddesses.

At the corners of the maṇḍala,
And at the corners of gates and archways,
Vajras and jewels set on half-moons
Blaze with rays of light.

Supreme bells stirred by the wind
And various banners make it lovely.
Furnished with mirrors, nets and garlands of flowers,
One should draw the outer maṇḍala.

Within it, a wheel
Resembling an eightfold maṇḍala,
Encircled by vajra lines:
One should rightly draw the vajra wheel.

In its center, according to the rite,
One should set Vajrasattva,
Cast in metal, or else fashioned,
Or hammered, or else painted,

Smiling, with the light of the moon,
Pervaded by blazing red rays,
Beautified by a garland of buddhas,
His body well anointed with colors,

Seated in the cross-legged posture of a sattva,
Supreme one holding the vajra in pride.
Saying samaya stvaṃ,
One should set him at the heart.

On every side around him
One should draw the great beings,
With paints or else with colored powders,
Each in its proper order.

In front, the one red in color,
Intent on the vajra weapon;
On the right, the one of pure white,
Holding the vajra in close embrace;

Behind, the one yellow in color,
Holding the makara banner;
On the left, the one blue in color,
Both hands held in pride, and the rest.

Holding vessels of offering,
The offering goddesses should be drawn:
The Graceful One, the Laughing One, the Singer

And the Dancer, the hosts of goddesses.

Vajra hook and noose,
Vajra chain and bell:
At the four gates
One should set the four gatekeepers."

Then their heart mantras are these:

hūṃ vajradriṣṭa sāmake maṭ hūṃ vajra kili kilāya hūṃ hūṃ smara vajra bandha hūṃ hūṃ tuṣṭa vajriṇi hūṃ.

These are the vajra servants.

Then, those of the offering goddesses: hūṃ madhura vajri hūṃ hūṃ vajra mighe hūṃ hūṃ śārad vajri hūṃ hūṃ vajra śiśiri hūṃ.

Then, those of the goddesses: hūṃ vajra lāsyai mahābar vajriṇi oṃ vajra nrityai.

Then, those of the gatekeepers: jaḥ vajra aṃkuśi pratihara hūṃ vajra pāśa gana baṃ vajra sphoṭa duha aḥ vajra ghanḍaccheda.

Thus, in the maṇḍala of the goddesses,
One should set those renowned women themselves.
When they have been set in place,
It becomes blessed by them.

Then the one who holds the vajra in hand,
Having drawn the maṇḍala supreme over all,
Should worship with as many full vases as he can,
And with flowers and every other offering.
Banners hung with bells
Should be set at the corners.
Vases with sprigs of leaves
Should be set outside the gates.
With the vajra, and with the four,
Having recited over the sprig,
A vase filled with urine
Should be set before Vajrapāṇi.

Here the heart mantra that blesses the nectar water of the pledge of great bliss is this: oṃ mahāsukha vajra samaya abhiṣeka jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ. It is recited twenty-one times. If this water is sprinkled or drunk, all suffering is thoroughly removed and all happiness greatly increases.

Then, by means of their own pledges, one should accomplish Vajradhara and the rest. Saying jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ:

Summoning, causing to enter,
And binding, in an instant they come under control.
Settled in the great mudrā,
Make the right index finger likewise into a hook.
This summoning succeeds
At a single try; then one should cause them to enter fully.

oṃ mahāsukha vajrasatva a ahi śīghraṃ mahāsukha vajra guhya samaya manusmara phrabhuta samaya staṃ hṛdayaṃ sutoṣyo me bhaba supoṣyo me bhaba anurakto me bheba adhitiṣṭha bhagabāna anatinaṃ dana sid dhyaṃ tu me mantrapadaiḥ jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ.

Then the Blessed One himself
Always comes into the maṇḍala.
Summoned, made to enter and made firm,
He comes under control, and he is accomplished.

One sees many wondrous miracles, or else one will see the Blessed One himself.

Then the vajra holder himself, master of all, has accomplished all the mudrās, knows all the pledges, is capable of all actions, and is blessed by the Blessed One. By this rite of entry, the vajra master himself, anointed and perfumed with as many fragrances as there are, his body richly adorned with garlands of flowers together with ornaments, and clad in two red garments, should himself praise the Blessed One and should himself enter, in the pride of Vajragarvā, holding the vajra. The praise is to be sung in the ṣaḍja mode and the like:

"You whose mind is every bliss, desire and the rest,
All-encompassing one, grant bliss to me!
Vajrasattva, think of me, and quickly show yourself to me!
You who delight me, perfect in supreme bliss, to you I bow."

Then, having fully entered, one should make this request:

"Being without beginning or end,
Vajrasattva, great bliss,
You are Samantabhadra,

Lord of vajra pride, all-pervading lord.
Meditative absorption of the being of mind,
Likewise vajra, holder of the vajra,
Possessor of the accomplishment of the pledge supreme over all,
Vajra mind, accomplish me today!"

Then the Blessed One himself will bless the vajra master. Then a bliss of individual self-awareness, never known before, will arise in both. The subtle will also descend. Then one should know, "The Blessed One has been accomplished for me." Then, remaining just so, one should do whatever recitation one wishes. Then, remaining just so, one will obtain the desired accomplishment through the blessing of one's own merit. From then on, all the great beings will be accomplished and will be seen, and they too will grant him every accomplishment. If one binds all the mudrās oneself, all actions will be accomplished. All the pledges will also be revealed to him. He also performs the actions his mind desires. Experiencing every happiness and joy of mind, unconquerable by others and not to be slain, after one year has passed he obtains the supreme accomplishment, buddhahood and the rest.

Then one should examine the disciples for the purpose of bringing all beings in. The vajra master himself, having adorned his body as before, should place the mudrā of the pledge of the vajra of utmost bliss, and likewise, rightly urging with the urging of the great reality, should summon. He says this:

"For the sake of the purity of the bliss of existence
You delighted in existence before.
Great accomplishment of every desire,
Bring it about for all beings too."

Then, having made offerings, one should cause the pledge mudrā of whichever is one's own special deity to enter, together with a flower. Having made it enter, one should say this into the ear:

"The world to be tamed through dispassion
Is tamed by dispassion itself.
Great desire, great bliss,
Is Vajrasattva hidden.
There is, by nature, no other suffering
Like that of being parted from desire.
Therefore, O being, do not once again

Turn your mind toward dispassion."

Then one should have him cast the flower and the rest with this heart mantra: oṃ mahāsukha vajrasatva bratigrihṇa samaya stvaṃ. Then wherever it falls, that is his deity. Then one should declare the great reality. One gives him whatever heart mantra he desires and has him practice it; and oneself, having consecrated him with the empowerment of the special deity, places that deity's emblem in his two hands, confers on him the name empowerment of that family, and should empower him with this heart mantra: oṃ sarba tathāgata ātmaki 'haṃ vajradhāra samūkhebha abhiṣega tvāṃ abhiṣiñcāmi gṛhṇa siddhi vajriti amogha siddhi stvaṃ.

Then one should teach the binding of the mudrās. Then, having made whatever offerings are desired and had them made, and having satisfied the disciples with whatever food and drink they wish, one should have them perform mudrās and answering mudrās, dancing and laughter, and should do so oneself as well. Then, having sent everyone away, one should say this:

"This world, which wanders from beginning to end,
Depends upon supreme joy;
It becomes the great being, the vajra.
Please depart once more."

Then, having cast away the flowers held in the cupped palms, one should send them out. As for the maṇḍala, one should sweep it up oneself; if one makes pills from those colored powders and keeps them, all rites will be accomplished. Then, if one also introduces that procedure of the nectar of the Great Bliss Vajra Samaya, all rites, such as increasing life, are intended. If one empowers with that very nectar, one obtains empowerment into the maṇḍala and also obtains the supreme accomplishment. If one cannot find an artist to draw the figures, one should draw the maṇḍala with the mudrās of their respective hand emblems. If one does not know even that, one should set out the hand emblems. This is the extensive rite of the mudrās.

Then the Blessed One entered the samādhi called the Vajra Samaya of the Vast Rite of Swift, Unobstructed, and Meaningful Accomplishment, and, having exercised his overpowering, the great Vajradhara spoke this:

"For the full accomplishment of great bliss
And for the purification of great desire,
I shall explain the accomplishment of Vajrasattva,

Which is ever swift.

As long as one is in the abode of saṃsāra,
For so long should one deliver sentient beings.
Nirvāṇa obscures awakening;
Therefore these are the samayas:
As long as one remains in existence,
For so long one acts for the benefit of beings.

Possessing the supreme quality of utter purity,
Just as this fully accomplishes all accomplishments
For the benefit of all sentient beings,
Not so do the perfections, such as giving,
Through the supreme conduct of awakening.
The tathāgatas, toward those not yet tamed,
Act for the benefit of sentient beings;
When this accomplishment has been fully achieved,
They do everything at all times.

Therefore I shall explain this practice:
It is an accomplishment that is utterly permanent.
Through it, in this very existence,
One gains the utterly permanent accomplishment.

Even if one has not entered the maṇḍalas,
Or has altogether abandoned the samayas,
Or even lacks merit, in every way
One quickly succeeds in this existence.

If one wishes to achieve accomplishment,
And is always endowed with the objects of the senses,
Having worshiped with the secret offerings,
One will succeed through one's own mudrā.

With sweet songs, such as those in the ṣaḍja mode,
And with every passion, just as one wishes,
And with recitation, as much as one is able,
One should accomplish Vajrasattva.

By this one becomes lord of all desires,
Comes and goes at will, and travels through the sky;

One attains lordship over all accomplishments,
Is free of aging and death, and becomes the chief.
Worshiped by all the victors,
Served and honored by all, oneself and others,
One is equal to the great Vajradhara,
And one's conduct is unfailing, supreme above all."

The king of the accomplishment of the Great Bliss Vajra, which fully bestows all accomplishments, such as that of a tathāgata.

If a bodhisattva who is a great Vajradhara truly wishes for the supreme accomplishment of all the tathāgatas, he should paint on cloth the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, holding the fist of the mudrā of all the tathāgatas, smiling, and surrounded on every side by tathāgatas. In front of it, holding the fist of all the tathāgatas, he should recite the vajra words one hundred thousand times. When the hundred thousand are complete, at midnight, hosts of māras will come. Then he should destroy them with the Crushing of the Power of All Māras. Then, at dawn, he will attain the very state of all the tathāgatas, or the very state of a bodhisattva.

If he truly wishes for the very state of the great Vajradhara, then the practice of Vajrasattva has been explained according to whatever particular image he obtained for the earlier practice, whether cast, assembled, hammered, or well painted on cloth and so forth, as in the maṇḍala of Vajrapāṇi. In six months the great accomplishment of the great Vajradhara is achieved. If he would summon the great Vajradhara, he should summon him with the Great Bliss Vajra Hook and accomplish whatever he wishes. After one month has passed, he should make every request.

If one accomplishes oneself through one's own mudrā, one should bind the great mudrā of one's own deity and, meditating, should practice while meditating, "I am Vajrasattva." One should accomplish oneself through recitation, just as one wishes. One should oneself meditate and recite again and again, for as long as it takes, until after half a month has passed one attains the very state of Vajradhara.

Then, if one wishes to accomplish lordship over all desires, one should in the same way fully enter together with one's beloved, bind the mudrā, and recite until one becomes lord of all desires and master of the entire three realms.

Then the Blessed One Vajradhara, having displayed the play of the wisdom of the nature of reality, in which the whole intrinsic nature of the vajra continuum of the entire three realms is accomplished, spoke this extensive vajra rite, the continuum of mudrā activities that require no prior accomplishment.

The heart-mantra activities that require no prior accomplishment are as follows. Protecting oneself is done with the Great Bliss Vajra Secret Uṣṇīṣa. Protecting everyone is done with the Great Bliss Vajra Secret Ūrṇā. Binding all the directions, the boundaries, and the maṇḍala is done with the Great Bliss Vajra Secret Blazing Garland. For accomplishing all the samayas of everyone, it is done with the Vajra Samaya Mudrā. For accomplishing all rites, it is done with the Vajra Secret Offering. For all accomplishments, it is done with the Vajra Secret Accomplishment of Great Bliss. For every excellence, it is done with the Vajra Mudrā of Deliverance from Downfalls. For attaining the wisdom of omniscience, it is done with the Vajra Wisdom Mudrā. For making offerings to all, it is done with the Vajra Secret Dance. For the sublime accomplishment of all vajras, it is done with the Vajra of the Great Bliss Vajra. For the sublime accomplishment of all great beings, it is done with the Great Bliss of Vajrasattva. For the sublime accomplishment of all the tathāgatas, it is done with the Great Bliss of the Supreme Secret of Vajrasattva. For the sublime accomplishment of all vajra holders, it is done with the Great Bliss Vajra Secret Samaya Mudrā.

From the great king of ritual manuals, the Great Bliss Vajra Secret: the extensive rite of the offering of the Supremely Joyful Vajra Secret.

Then the Blessed One, the great Vairocana, blessed by the samaya being of the Great Bliss Vajra and possessed of the secret Dharma, holding the fist of all the tathāgatas, entered the samādhi called the Vajra That Blesses the Wheel of All the Tathāgatas, and made this request to his own Vajrasattva:

"For the full accomplishment of great bliss
And for the purification of great passion,
Please bring forth the sublime family,
The infinite tathāgatas themselves."

Then the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, having performed the indivisible overpowering of the great bliss samaya of all the tathāgatas, having fully abided in all the vajras of the Blessed One's body, speech, and mind, and having emanated equally the very self of all, spoke this dhāraṇī of the mudrā

of the Great Bliss Vajra:

oṃ dhaṃ

Then, as soon as this was spoken,
Everything shook in six ways,
And all the buddhas, together with their heirs,
Gathered from every side and became manifest.
Through the application of the great maṇḍala,
They took their seats all around for the accomplishment of all;
And with a special great laughter
They laughed out in great wonder.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Vajrasattva, likewise entered absorption in the vajra and spoke this maṇḍala of the dhāraṇī called the Great Bliss Samaya Vajra Secret:

"Having drawn it thus, according to the Dharma,
With the Victor on the left in the pose of pride,
And having set out the supreme of supreme samayas,
One says, samaya staṃ.
The tathāgatas, together with their heirs,
Should be shown holding vajras, weapons, and the like;
The bodhisattvas, the great beings,
With flowers and the like, and palms joined at the crown."

The special feature of the extensive rite of entering it and so forth is this: one should have the disciples enter with the mudrā of homage to all the tathāgatas and with this vajra song:

"Through gathering Vajrasattva,
Unsurpassed Vajraratna,
And through singing Vajradharma,
One will perform Vajrakarma."

Then, having taken one's seat, one should summon the wisdom dhāraṇī of all the tathāgatas with the Great Bliss Vajra Secret Hook:

oṃ bajradhārasuramahāsukhe sarbahārarmapamataya sarbatathāgatajānamai mantrapādaiḥ jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ

Then all the tathāgatas, together with the holders, will truly arrive. Signs such as happiness of mind will appear, and many miracles are seen. Then the extensive rite, the practice, all the accomplishments the mind desires, and the sublime accomplishment, meaningful, unobstructed, and swift, are achieved. One should do likewise.

Then, even without prior accomplishment, by reciting once one will perform the rites. For protecting everyone, it is done with the Vajra Uṣṇīṣa. For bringing all sentient beings under control, it is done with the Vajra Ūrṇā. For attaining the whole nature of reality, it is done with the Vajra Nature of Reality. The accomplishment of offering to all the tathāgatas is done with the Vajra Offering. For taming all the malevolent, it is done with the Vajra Wrathful One. For completing the conduct of awakening without remainder, it is done with the Vajra Mudrā of Conduct. For crushing all māras, it is done with the Crusher of All Māras. For becoming the very self of all the tathāgatas, it is done with the Vajra Fist of Wisdom.

From the Great Bliss Vajra Secret: the extensive rite of the great secret of all the tathāgatas. The teaching of the maṇḍala of the tathāgatas.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata whose command is meaningful and unobstructed, entered the samādhi called the Vajra of the Wrathful One of Great Bliss, the Means of the Great Vajra Mind of All the Tathāgatas, and made this request to his own Vajrasattva and the others:

"For the full accomplishment of great bliss
And for the purification of great passion,
In order to crush all the malevolent,
Emanate your own family, O Vajra Holder."

Then the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke this Supremely Joyful Vajra Wrathful One, called the Vajra Samaya of the Command of All the Tathāgatas:

hūṃ raktajvalamālāpralaya agnipratipatateja mahāsurata bajrakrodha jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ phaṭ

Then, as soon as this was spoken, from the vajra of the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi there came forth wrathful ones whose essence was red light blazing on every side, with contorted brows and gathered wrathful frowns, with tawny beards and blazing eyes, with overpowering faces, vajra fangs bared over the lower lip, with hair blazing upward, and holding vajras, bows, and the like; and they took their places in the manner of the great maṇḍala of the Blessed One. The Blessed One, for his part, having tamed all the malevolent of the three realms, blessed them with the great vajra samaya.

One should lay out the lines of the great maṇḍala,
And there first place the Wrathful One,
Reciting suratodbhava hūṃ:
Blazing with the light of a blue utpala,
The supreme one, holding the vajra in the pose of pride,
His face with fangs slightly bared,
His face laughing with wrath,
Seated in the vajra posture,
Its light the turbulent blaze of rays.
In the manner of the great maṇḍala,
Draw wrathful ones everywhere.

With the great mudrā of the Supremely Joyful Vajra Wrathful One the master should first enter, and the disciples likewise. Once the master has entered, he should summon with that same wrathful hook:

hūṃ surata bajrakroṇha ayate mahāsukha bajrasatva ja sarba bajrakula netra prabiśaya hūṃ sarba mudrāgaṇa bandhaya baṃ sarba mayā mabiśva kuru ho sarba karma netra satvaya a

Then the whole vajra family, together with the Blessed One, comes and is accomplished. For the master and the disciples, signs of delight and of the descent of the wrathful one will truly arise. Further, if even a little arises, then its accomplishment, the attainments, and the extensive rite are likewise. If it is not accomplished, one recites it once.

For victory over the entire three realms, it is done with the Vajra Mudrā of the Maker of hūṃ. For taming all the realms of sentient beings, it is done with the Vajra Secret of the Wrathful One. For complete victory over the three worlds, it is done with the Mudrā of Victory over the Three Worlds. For summoning everyone, making them enter, making them descend, binding them, bringing them under control, destroying them, paralyzing them, putting them to sleep, sealing them, overthrowing them, and killing them, it is done with the Great Bliss Vajra Wrathful One. For making everyone fall, it is done with the Vajra Subtle Wrathful One. For making everyone descend, it is done with the Vajra Wrathful One Who Brings Down. For utterly suppressing everyone, it is done with the Vajra Loud Laughter. For establishing all rites, it is done with the Great Bliss Vajra Samaya Wrathful One.

From the Great Bliss Vajra Secret: the extensive rite of the samaya of the Victorious Vajra Secret, arisen from Supreme Joy.

Then the Blessed One entered the samādhi called the Vajra Wisdom Mudrā of All the Tathāgatas, the unobscured Dharma of all the tathāgatas, meaningful, unobstructed, and wholly pure, and made this request to his own Vajrasattva:

"For the full accomplishment of great bliss
And for the purification of great passion,
O great supreme one, please bring forth
The great and pure lotus family."

Then the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, having performed the overpowering called the Vajra That Gazes upon All Phenomena, spoke this mantra called the Great Bliss Vajra Secret Lotus:

oṃ hrī baṃ ho

As soon as this was spoken, there came forth from the mouth of the Blessed One great lotus beings, radiant with the color of the lotus, like the light of the moon's disc, holding lotus petals and the like, bearing the empowerment of the tathāgatas, with crowns of matted hair and wearing red robes, and they took their places in the manner of the great maṇḍala. The Blessed One, laughing broadly, holding a vajra in his right hand and a lotus in his left, likewise with vajra pride, sat in the vajra posture.

Then, the maṇḍala:

In the manner of the great maṇḍala
One lays out the lines of the whole maṇḍala.
One places Vajra Lokeśvara
And draws the assemblies of lotus emblems.

Then, having entered by means of the Vajra Lotus, one should summon with the two hooks of the forefingers:

oṃ hrī baṃ hoḥ oṃ hrīḥ mhāsukha bajra ālokeśvarāya me ā āhe prabeśa dhi dhi me bhaba siddhi mame ra mudrā pādaiḥ jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ

Then the Blessed One Avalokiteśvara comes and bestows every supreme gift. Signs of light will appear. All the extensive rites, the practice, and all the accomplishments are likewise. Even without prior accomplishment, by reciting it once one performs all the rites. For purifying all obscurations, it is done with the Great Lotus. For protecting everyone, it is done with the Lotus Uṣṇīṣa. For making everyone impassioned, it is done with the Gazing upon the Lotus. For attaining the samādhi of total purity, it is done with the Opening of the Lotus. For bringing all women under control, it is done with the Passion of the Great Lotus. For bringing all men under control, it is done with the Lord of the Great Lotus. For sending dreams, it is done with the Great Red Lotus. For obtaining the supreme from the Blessed One, it is done with the Vajra Secret Lotus Free of Delusion.

From the Great Bliss Lotus Secret: the extensive rite of the Great Bliss lotus family.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Īśvara, master of all the three realms, entered the samādhi called the Mudrā of the Jewel Empowerment That Fulfills All Wishes, and made this request to his own Vajrasattva:

"For the full accomplishment of great bliss
And for the purification of great passion,
Please bring forth the supreme family of the great jewel
For the sake of prosperity."

Then the Blessed One, having performed the overpowering called the Establishment of the Empowerment Samaya of All the Tathāgatas, spoke this vidyā-mantra called the Great Bliss Vajra Jewel:

oṃ litidhabhaṇṭaṭate trāṃ

Then, as soon as this was spoken, a precious jewel was drawn forth from the Great Bliss vajra of the Blessed One's empowerment and came to rest in his left hand. And that pure precious jewel became vajra jewels the color of flawless emerald, empowered by their own light, holding emblems such as jewel arrows, and they entered in the manner of the great maṇḍala of the Blessed One.

Then, the drawing of the maṇḍala:

One should lay out the lines of the whole maṇḍala,
Place there the lord Vajraratna,
And draw the great family of the jewel.

Having entered with the mudrā of Vajraratna, one should likewise summon with the vajra hook of the two forefingers:

oṃ mahāsukha bajra bibhūte raya bhagabāna taṃ ākarṣaya gira baṃ sarba tathāgata agaṃ saṃtra samabena nāma bhe ramatra bhe traṃ paḍaḍa svāhā

Then the Blessed One Ākāśagarbha comes, together with all the jewels. The sign of the hair standing on end from the crown of the head will appear, and one should understand, "The Blessed One is empowering me." Then one should have the disciples enter, and perform all the extensive rites in the same way. Then the rites that require no prior accomplishment succeed through a single recitation. For obtaining all empowerments, it is done with the Vajra Jewel Sprout. For obtaining all aims, it is done with the Tip of the Vajra Jewel Banner. For fulfilling all wishes, it is done with the Vajra Mudrā of the Emblem of the Great Jewel. For obtaining a great treasure, it is done with the Vajraratna Mudrā of What Lies Beneath. For obtaining the mudrā of vajra empowerment, it is done with the Mudrā of the Underground of the Great Vajra Jewel. For obtaining vajra empowerment, it is done with the Great Vajra Garland. For obtaining the empowerment of a great bodhisattva, it is done with the Great Vajra Jewel Garland. For obtaining the empowerment of a tathāgata, it is done with the Garland of the Sublime Empowerment of the Vajra Jewel. For obtaining empowerment as a great vajra holder, it is done with the Garland of the Vajra Jewel Crown of the Supreme Body of All the Tathāgatas.

From the Great Bliss Vajra Secret: the extensive rite of the jewel family of all bliss and happiness.

Then the Blessed One, having attained the wisdom blessed by the vajra that gathers all the families, entered the samādhi called the Vajra Mudrā of the Wheel That Brings In All Sentient Beings, and made this request to the Blessed One Vajrasattva, who is without beginning or end:

"You who are fully accomplished in great bliss,
For the purification of great passion
And for the sake of great bliss,
Please bring beings in, just as they wish."

Then the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, victorious over all, tamer of all beings, bestower of all samayas and all accomplishments, the Teacher, the accomplisher, unobstructed in strength and in overpowering adversaries, meaningfully accomplished by teaching all in accord with them, having performed the overpowering called the Samaya Vajra Holder, spoke this heart of all, meaningful and incomparable, called the Great Bliss Samaya of All Accomplishments:

hoḥ āḥ hūṃ hrīḥ trāṃ

Then, as soon as this was spoken, all the maṇḍalas, mundane and supramundane, of all the tathāgatas and the rest, came to abide fully in that great maṇḍala and became one single maṇḍala. Then the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, spoke the secret of the Great Bliss Vajra Samaya that brings in all sentient beings:

"In the manner of the great maṇḍala
One should draw all the maṇḍalas throughout.
The first, the great maṇḍala,
Should be visualized at its center.
On its sides one should draw
The four maṇḍalas of the families.
At the edge of the outer boundary
Draw the assemblies of the outer maṇḍala.
At all the doors, for entry,
They abide as their own mudrās.
Gathering the five sublime maṇḍalas,
One should enter by the force of the vajra."

All the extensive rites, all the accomplishments, and all the rites are likewise. The extensive rite of the gathering of the families.

Then all the samaya beings, the gods and the rest, having received their respective permissions from the Blessed One, bowed at the feet of the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, who is meaningful bliss for all sentient beings, and offered these, their respective secret heart mantras. Then the offering of the three worlds:

oṃ bhrūṃ trāṃ

Then, the drawing of the maṇḍala:

Four-cornered and with four doors:
This is the supreme outer maṇḍala.
In its center, for the sake of accomplishment,
Draw the one who bears a bow and a khaṭvāṅga,
Holding an arrow and a cup:
Madhukara and Jayakara,
The accomplisher of every practice.
With the mudrā of the trident emblem,
Kneeling with one knee raised,
Having entered and bound the samaya,
One should perform the true summoning:

oṃ bhūr bhuva svāhā

By reciting it twenty-one times,
One is encircled entirely by all.
To those who have come for the sake of all accomplishments
Give whatever torma one has found.
The master, by means of the entering,
Should have all the disciples enter.
One should declare the reality of the supreme samaya
And the reality of the secret:
"If you speak of it to one who has not been examined,
Or if you do not fully practice here
The Dharma just as it has been taught,
The trident will smash your heart."
Sattva, rajas, and tamas,
Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and Maheśvara (Śiva):
These three names
Should never be held in contempt.
Whoever has held them in contempt
Should enter again and again
And perform the worship of the maṇḍala.
For the attainment of all accomplishments,
Having also displayed the mudrās,
He should make the offering of dance;
With the five qualities of sense pleasure
He should always worship the maṇḍala.

Then the secret goddesses offered their own mudrās.

hrīḥ hūṃ śrī bhyo

As for the making of all the maṇḍalas:
It is square, with four gates,
Properly furnished with four lines,
Together with four great pillars,
And beautified by four corner pieces.
Likewise, in its center
The four maṇḍalas should be drawn.
At the gates the four who face outward
Should be placed together with their heart mantras,
Joyful, holding weapons in their hands,
With the proud bearing of those who bring accomplishment.

Then, first, into the maṇḍala
One should likewise enter completely.
The sisters, with their own mudrās,
Should enter in their proper sequence.
Having entered, with incense and so forth
Having made offerings according to the rite,
Through the full accomplishment of that very secret
The summoning is properly performed.

oṃ kālimaniradeprotalamebhūrākāsiparastāmayahebahoba barhebidyetīmayasvāhā siddhikesiddhistāmaahe

This is done with these mudrās. hrīḥ hūṃ śrī bhyo Then all will descend. When they have descended, they should be made to enter. Then, in the same way, having taught the binding of the mudrās and having proclaimed the oath, one should speak the secret:

"Those who abide for the benefit of beings,
Those who teach the maṇḍala wherever they are:
If you do not guard the secret,
You will have killed them.
Attachment, aversion, and delusion,
And likewise food, drink, and taste,
Through Dharma give happiness to the world,
And through what is not Dharma give suffering.
With the mudrās and the offering of dance
One should make offerings as one wishes.
As much as there is, and just as one desires,
One should rely upon the objects of the senses."

Then all the asuras offered their own heart mantra:

oṃ sarba mahācakro prabartaya darśaya baṃ hūṃ phaṭ

A four-cornered maṇḍala,
Having been dug to the depth of about a cubit,
Should have its gates drawn facing upward.
Saṃvara and the others should be drawn there.
Having fully entered the wheel,
One should summon with the proper summoning.
With offerings of flowers and so forth,

And with meat and so forth, one should make the torma.

oṃ bilcucakra ānaya śamabarci macita traṃ sura adhipan heśo haṃ sarba māyā ghṛtaṃ dhapame siddhya hā hā svāhā

Then every illusion the mind desires is accomplished. The bringing in of disciples should also be done in the same way.

Then the four families of nāgas offered their heart mantra: phuḥ

Then, as for their maṇḍala:
It is four-cornered, with four gates,
Drawn all around with lines of snakes,
Encircled by the tips of nāga hoods,
And at the corners the tips of their tails are knotted.
In its center the bearer of the earth,
The nāga king Śeṣa, should be drawn.
All the families of the great nāgas,
Those endowed with wisdom, should be drawn.
Then, through the force of meditative absorption,
Wrathful and running, one should enter.
Having fully entered that maṇḍala,
One should summon with the mudrā of the hood.

oṃ hrīḥ anīla jaba bega pṛthvī bhinad dhar śeṣaṇa āya hrīḥ nuya nāga kula anaya hūṃ phuḥ samaya prabeśaya phuḥ sarbaṃ sādhaya phuḥ phuḥ phuḥ phuḥ

Then all the nāgas, repeating "phuḥ," enter the maṇḍala and descend, and they are won. Then the master should render everything free of poison with the mudrā of the drawn image. From then on, even if one eats anything at all, it is digested like nectar. By dancing together with these, one becomes able to burn, destroy, and devour all poisons. Then one should give the pledge as one wishes:

"Attachment, aversion, and delusion:
These are the three poisons of the world.
If one has passed beyond the truth,
This world of the living endures forever.
If you wish to obtain accomplishments,
Do not treat lightning with contempt,

Do not turn back hail,
And do not kill any snake whatsoever."

This concludes the extensive rite of the vajra secret of the great pledge of Great Bliss and so forth, from the great king of ritual manuals, the Vajra Secret of Great Bliss. The second section: from the root tantra, the ritual of the ten maṇḍalas.

Then, on the summit of Mount Meru,
The mountain of the great vajra,
Beautiful with stainless splendor
From the clear light of vajra jewels,
Four-cornered and with four gates,
Beautified by its gateway arches,
Worshiped by hosts of vajra goddesses
Who dwell upon its parapets,
Beautified by vajra jewels
Set upon half-moons,
Resounding with the sound of banners and bells
On silken streamers stirred by the wind,
Adorned with nets and mirrors hung there
And with great garlands of flowers,
Is Great Bliss, the great vajra,
Brought together by all the vajras,
The great abode of Vajrasattva,
Taught with certainty by all the buddhas,
The supreme abode of the bodhisattvas,
The abode of all who hold the vajra.
Great Bliss, the great vajra,
Called the great supreme jewel:
Within the great vajra mansion
Great Bliss dwells.
The being without beginning or end
Is Vajrasattva, the great joy,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
Lord of lords, in the manner of vajra pride.
Whatever is the mind of all beings
Is explained as "sattva" because it is firm;

Through meditative equipoise it is concentration;
Because it is certain, it becomes vajra.
Through applying the blessing of the sattva,
It becomes Vajrasattva once again.
That very one is the permanent Blessed One,
Who follows the conduct of awakening.
When one discerns one's own mind and so forth,
In accordance with the rite of the buddhas' awakening,
Māra is the buddha, the great vajra;
He is that very great Vajradhara.
He is the Tathāgata family;
He is the great vajra family;
He is the pure lotus family;
He is the holy jewel family.
He is desire and liberation,
Of attachment and of freedom from attachment.
The three times, the three existences, the three supreme ones,
The three worlds and the three realms:
That supreme one is all that is unmoving,
Firm, the essence, the great jewel;
And that which moves, the mind's formations, the means:
He is all, the doer of all.
The first being, the great being,
The bodhisattva Supreme Bliss and the others,
Having sat in the cross-legged posture of the sattva,
Have entered the center of the lotus,
Surrounded by the various vajra goddesses
Together with a host of queens.
For the full accomplishment of great bliss,
For the purification of great attachment,
For the sake of all those to be trained without exception,
And for the full accomplishment of all accomplishments,
The great beings, oneself and the others,
For the full accomplishment of all accomplishments,
The pledges of the supreme pledge
Are guarded even by the Victors.
Brandishing the vajra with pride,

Truly holding vajra pride,
For the purity of all the mudrās
And for the supreme accomplishment of Vajrasattva,
Great Bliss, the great vajra,
In accomplishing all accomplishments,
Is truly endowed with the wisdom mudrā:
This is the holy great heart mantra.
Through it even those who lack merit
Have likewise entered every maṇḍala without exception,
And all the accomplishments of the supreme,
Unfailing and unimpeded, are not hard to find.
Great Bliss, the great vajra,
Supreme among secrets, the firm pledge,
Accomplishes all accomplishments
And swiftly accomplishes all rites.
Without beginning or end, arisen first,
Lofty above all merits,
The Saṃvara of the radiant ones,
And for the purification of great attachment,
Called "the meditation of passion,"
Wisdom just as it is fully enters.
The heart mantra together with the near-heart mantra
The Blessed One spoke in the first eon:
hūṃ
Then, merely through speaking this,
All the buddhas together with their heirs
Gathered closely together
And brought forth all beings.
Having brought forth all the various beings,
The Lord asked about accomplishment:
"How is it accomplished here in an instant?
Great being, tell us quickly!"
Then, as for the first maṇḍala:
Having first blessed the maṇḍala,
Having accomplished according to the rite
The pledge of the vajra supreme over all,
From then on beings arise

Who follow their karma just as it is,
Who always engage in every evil,
Who cling to what is bad, and who are lazy.
Having seen these three kinds of people,
The lords of the world asked:
"Blessed One, how, then,
Can the childish bring forth virtue in every way?"
Having heard their words,
He spoke these words:
The Vajra Holder, maker of all,
Looked upon those who die through their karma.
Having heard those words of his,
Vajrasattva, the Vajra Holder,
And all the buddhas together with their heirs
Spoke thus with great compassion:
"For the full accomplishment of great bliss
And for the purification of intense attachment,
Please explain that heart mantra
Of the extensive rite supreme over all."
Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
Is the bestower of all accomplishments,
The great bliss of all rites,
The supreme first vajra secret;
And further, the teaching of the heart mantra
And the great rites of the maṇḍala and so forth,
Together with the various later tantras,
Fully accomplish all accomplishments.
All the worlds, the great realms,
Equal in number to the finest particles,
Through this very great heart mantra
Have come to the holy bliss of accomplishment.
Then those Sugatas,
Having heard his supreme words,
At that time made supplication to him
Who bestows the accomplishment of the first maṇḍala:
"To train those free of attachment,
Should freedom from attachment be taught?

Or, for the purification of all attachment,
Speak the rite of your own heart."

Then the Blessed One, singing the great vajra song, laid out the maṇḍala:

"Mind of holy bliss, passionate toward all,
Vajrasattva, you have come forth;
Supremely joyful, the great bliss of all beings,
Firm and exalted one, today turn toward me with swift accomplishment!"

Thus singing the song of the maṇḍala, he laid it out.

Through the application of the great maṇḍala
The first maṇḍala should be laid out.
In every part belonging to Vajrapāṇi,
The host of vajra goddesses and the rest,
Exactly according to the rite,
Should be adorned and made to enter.
On the left, the maiden who holds the vajra
Should be embraced, and the yoga maintained.
With the supreme mudrā of pride
Together with the vajra, one enters oneself.
Having entered that maṇḍala,
One should circumambulate three times.
Seated before Vajrasattva,
One should also speak that very secret:

hūṃ hūṃ mahāsukha bajra satva jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ smaya stvaṃ anurakto me bhaba sutoṣyo me bhaba driḍho me bhaba supoṣyo me bhaba adhitiṣṭa bhagabā banadinidhena svāhā mahāsukha bajra sastva samaya guhya samaya siddhi mame prayaccha oṃ oṃ ha ha ha ha a

Then, rejoicing greatly, one should speak words of delight to the vajra goddess.

oṃ bajra driṣṭi samaya kemaṭa bajra kili kili ho hūṃ smara bajriṇe banadha hūṃ hūṃ tuṣṭa bajraṇṛ hūṃ

Then, sitting close before the Blessed One, one should make this request to the Blessed One: "In the same way, Blessed One, grant me accomplishment!"

"Swiftly, toward passion for all,
Through kili kili all things are possible.

Recalling passion for all,
May I always be well pleased."

oṃ mahāsukha siddhi bajra satva jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ siddhaṃ samaya stvaṃ siddhi hūṃ

Then, having been empowered with the vajra water of Great Bliss and having drunk it, one should hold the five-pronged vajra and state one's own name, saying, "I am Vajrasattva." As before, one should make offerings with the offering of dance. Having made offerings together with the disciple, with whatever objects of the senses are at hand, one should come out. The disciple should be brought in, and when one also enters there oneself, one has entered all the maṇḍalas.

Since one performs the activity of the wisdom of all vajra masters, who are lords of all mudrās, who know all the pledges, who are able to subdue all and to benefit all, and who are perfect in all accomplishments, by the mere fact of one's own entering, even one who is not a master and has not entered the maṇḍala is blessed by the Blessed One in a single instant. Why is that? Because the Blessed One himself, having certainly become the vajra master through his own pledge, brings about the entry. He also performs the extensive rite of all activities. Through the blessing of this heart mantra, even if one has not entered the maṇḍala, one has entered all maṇḍalas and becomes the master of all. By reciting it a single time one cannot be slain and cannot be overcome, and everywhere, through the various letters, there is seeing, hearing, awareness, and knowing. Having brought forth all the tathāgatas without exception, together with the great Vajradhara, they bestow all accomplishments upon that person. It is not a matter of purification and of reliance. Even those who make obstacles will not inflict suffering. The Blessed One, Great Bliss, Vajradhara, who is supremely firm, supremely delighted, passionate, and supremely expansive, swiftly brings about all accomplishments, all perfections, all wisdoms, and all activities, with an accomplishment that is beyond doubt.

Moreover, whoever writes it, or has it written, or recites it a single time, or retains it, even without practicing it and without entering the maṇḍala, will in this very life accomplish all the supreme accomplishments, just as he wishes. Why is that? It is like this: the Unfailing and Unimpeded, the lord of the lords of all the tathāgatas, cannot be obstructed even by all the tathāgatas, because he is passion for all. Even the awakening of the buddhas arises from passion. Passion comes from relying on desire. If one does not desire it, how could one come to all the states such as supreme great bliss? Thus spoke the unimpeded Blessed One, the great bliss of great passion.

"When it is accomplished, great bliss
Is bestowed in an instant through vajra passion.
This is the pledge of practice;
It is hard for anyone to transgress.
One who commits great evil,
Or likewise one who has not seen the maṇḍala,
Having purified that evil by a single recitation,
Becomes accomplished through accomplishing the supreme.
If, as taught in the ritual manual or as one wishes,
One meditates, recollecting the image,
Or the heart mantra, or a book,
Because it is everything, the lord is accomplished.
And for one who has no image,
And even if there is no book,
One should write the syllable hūṃ everywhere
And practice the accomplishment of oneself."

Thus spoke the great Vajradhara, possessed of unfailing and unimpeded accomplishment.

Then, when one wishes to accomplish
All the activities of this king of ritual manuals,
Having laid out the lines of all the maṇḍalas,
One should draw the mudrās that are emblems.

Having entered with the first vajra, one should declare:

"From great passion comes great unimpededness;
From great unimpededness, great bliss;
From great bliss the vajra is shown;
From the vajra the mudrā arises.
Through fully joining the image
Of the vajra of body, speech, and mind,
All the mudrās are explained;
This pledge is hard to transgress.
When, by the mere binding of a mudrā,

The buddhas, Vajradhara and the rest,
Are truly gathered together,
The world of sameness is accomplished.
Just as the command
Of a king's seal is hard to transgress,
So too even all the Victors
Are unable to transgress the mudrā.
Buddhahood itself, or Vajradhara,
Not attained even in ten million eons,
How is it attained in this very life
By gathering the supreme mudrā!
Just as the world to be trained is,
So accomplishment has been taught.
Its means is the mudrā,
Supreme in bringing about all accomplishments.
Likewise, through the extensive rite,
All accomplishments are beyond doubt."

Then this is the binding of the mudrās of the secret pledge of the first maṇḍala:

Joining all the fingers together
Is called the vajra palms.
From binding the fingers inward
The vajra binding is properly explained.
Within the vajra binding
The index fingers and thumbs are properly joined.
Raising the right thumb,
Inserting it and pressing, one holds the hook.
Having bound the five gathered arrows,
It rests within the binding of the middle fingers.
With the thumbs made even, the tip a vajra:
This is the first holy bliss, the firm one.
The tips of thumb and index joined, and the tips of the middle fingers
Joined like eyeballs, are held.
Beneath the vajra of the middle fingers
One should press down and squeeze with the thumbs.
Like the vajra guide,

The ring fingers and little fingers are opened;
Circling them and placing them upon the knee
Arises from the first vajra.
Scattering upward and pouring downward,
Joining the thumbs and circling,
Stretching out fully and anointing,
Circling and resting upon the crown,
Circling and placing at the heart,
Circling all around and laughing;
Coming forth upward from the mouth,
And likewise circling with dance;
With the two index fingers,
The left index finger held by the right;
Binding the index finger and the thumb,
And placing the thumb within the last finger:
These are the mudrās of the fist.

Then, the Unfailing and Unimpeded: the binding of the karma mudrās belonging to these alone, which is supremely secret and unsurpassed and which accomplishes the whole range of the highest activities, cannot be overpowered even by me together with all the tathāgatas.

Here, from the central vajra of Great Bliss come placing the tips of the vajra nails at the lips and so forth, fully turning the wheel, and the vajra jewel. Of these, which bring about every accomplishment as one wishes, the accomplishments are those of the great Vajradhara, of the buddhas and bodhisattvas, of the vajra jewel, and the supreme accomplishment.

With the Vajra Guide comes the activity of the eyeballs. By looking with the right and the left eye, there is passion for all. By drawing the eyeballs inward, there is summoning. By making them enter, all are made to enter. By pressing, there is binding. By not closing them, there is subjugation.

With Vajrakilikilā: when the middle fingers are pinched, and by embracing, pressing, playing, and gently striking the middle fingers and the tips of the thumbs, through seeing, playing, and pressing one plays with all, and women in divine form appear everywhere, among the moving and the unmoving. For as long as one plays with them, one also plays with the consort of Vajrasattva.

With Vajramakarī: by pressing, raising up, tasting, going near, and eating swiftly, one binds with steadfast passion, is victorious over all, dwells within water, walks upon it, and accomplishes the eating of everything.

With the vajra circling: by moving and moving, loosening, pressing, drawing the middle fingers together toward each other, and swiftly tearing apart the vajra of the middle fingers, all the wrathful ones blaze, and full pacification, the sealing of all, causing to fall, and killing are swiftly accomplished.

If one makes offerings with the offerings in which the thumbs enter within the vajra, one will be honored even by the great Vajradhara. Likewise, by the activities of the goddesses in which the thumbs enter within the vajra, all the daughters of the gods are summoned and engaged in every activity, such as play. By the activities of the inner fist of Vajrāṅkuśī and the others come all the accomplishments that the mind desires.

Then, the tantra of all accomplishments: through the great mudrā of Vajrasattva, the accomplishments of accomplishment, of pledge, of wisdom, and of activity are accomplished. Accomplishment through the Unfailing: swiftly, through the blessing of the Blessed One, the self of all, what the mind desires is accomplished. With the vajra of supreme joy, from the moving of the tip of the sign, everything comes; and likewise from the moving of the womb. Through performing the activity of the central vajra of Great Bliss come all accomplishments. If, with the Graceful One, keeping the vajra eye of joy unmoving, one practices all activities, there will be unimpeded accomplishment. Likewise, through their own hand emblems, all accomplishments will be accomplished.

First, once every day,
One should recite the heart mantra of the great mudrā.
With the vajra near-heart mantra
One should definitely apply all the mudrās.
Everything is accomplished unfailingly.
Great Bliss, the great vajra,
The supreme secret rite, the later one,
The unfailing pledge of practice,
Bestows accomplishment in an instant through the heart mantra.
The root tantra, together with the later tantra,
The tantra of mudrās, is unsurpassed.
Likewise the supreme accomplishment

Is the accomplishment of unsurpassed wisdom.

This completes the extensive rite of the tantra of all the mudrās of the first maṇḍala and the rest.

Then, the tantra of the great mudrā of the Blessed One:

Placing it on the left lap,
One should set the lotus feet comfortably.
Having sat in the vajra cross-legged posture,
Holding the body upright and at ease,
Brandishing the vajra with pride,
Truly holding vajra pride,
Through the vajra of body, speech, and mind
One becomes Vajrasattva oneself.
Through this, Vajrasattva himself,
Buddhahood, or being an heir of the buddhas,
And lordship over all accomplishments
Will be accomplished in this very life.
Through the vajra of body, speech, and mind,
Having followed the mudrā just as it is,
One becomes oneself the great being
Endowed with the mudrā of the emblem.

This is the great mudrā.

Then, the binding of the pledge mudrās: the vajra of Great Bliss is explained. The four, the vajra arrow and the others, arise from it. The two index fingers form a hook turned outward. Then embracing with the thumbs. With the two thumbs opened, the two index fingers draw out the tips of the middle fingers, the ring fingers and little fingers are joined evenly, and their tips are opened apart: this is raising the makara banner. Then circling at the two thighs and remaining there. Likewise, at the corners, by circling the vajra palms. The mudrās of the gates are made with the fist of vajra pride.

The great mudrā of supreme great bliss
Likewise fully bestows accomplishment;
The various pledges, the arrow and the rest,
Bestow the supreme great accomplishment.

Then, the Dharma mudrās: ho bid hūṃ dhṛk hūṃ. These too bestow all accomplishments.

Then, the karma mudrās are to be understood through vajra fists without the vajra. With the left hand in vajra pride, the right fist is held at the heart in a raised manner: this is Vajragarvā, which makes supreme joy firm and bestows all accomplishments. Raising the bow and arrow is the Vajra Weapon Goddess. Below is embracing. Then raising the banner. Then raising the two prides. With grace, releasing with the last fingers and so on, circling fully to the right in a dance like flashing lightning, one brings down from the crown of the head the cupped palms holding flowers and the rest. Releasing the vajra palms, likewise with grace, one should cast down the offering. The vajra dance is at the inner corners.

Whether complete or incomplete,
Or else just as they are obtained,
Through the ladies of the flower offering and the rest
The supreme accomplishment is bestowed, and the common.

This is the full grasp of the signs of the application of the pledge mudrās. These too are practices of unfailing activity. With the vajra fist one should recite over the nectar water.

The explanation of the mudrās of the rite of entry. Of what is called "the secret pledge blessed by the vajra master of all the great maṇḍalas," the second mudrā of entry:

Having bound the vajra binding,
Into the womb of the left thumb and index finger
One inserts the sign of the right thumb;
When it is pressed, it bestows bliss.
With that bound hook of the index fingers
One should enter the supreme maṇḍala.
Or else, whatever being one enters,
That will swiftly be accomplished there.
This is the Vajra Lady of Supreme Joy.

Having taken up the vajra nectar water of the vajra with one's own fist, if with that stream of water one confers empowerment and has the disciple drink, he becomes empowered. Through all the empowerments he will be in the prime of youth, free of illness, and endowed with all accomplishments. Fevers, grahas, poisons, compounded poisons, ḍākinīs, mudrās and the like will be unable to harm him. In the cross-legged posture one should offer the dance and the offerings. Then the offering is made with the vajra dance. The offering of the vajra dance, made by singing the vajra song, is done with the dance of the universal monarch. Fully holding the vajra fist, with vajra praise one should raise the vajra weapon and the rest; and at the end one pays homage with the face and moving eyes, together with the secret laughter of the Graceful One, the vajra of joy. The Blessed One Vajradhara, being pleased, bestows the accomplishments of all bliss and all mental happiness, such as every joy.

Pressing the vajra binding, if one releases the bliss at one's own heart, then in releasing the maṇḍala, if through the meditation of Vajrasattva one raises up the line (rekhā) and the vajra with the mind and gradually enters the inner maṇḍala, the pledge will not be broken. If through the meditation of Vajrasattva one turns toward the maṇḍala, the pledge will not be broken.

Then the tantra of the karma mudrās. When the Great Bliss vajra is placed face down at the crown, at the forehead, and at the heart, a blazing fence arises in all directions, which even the great vajra wrathful kings cannot enter. Meditating at the heart, together with the vajra. Facing upward, one should drink. Having fully cleansed one's own face, one should release it at the face. The central vajra should be bent. One should place it at the two shoulders and place it at the heart. The empowerment of silken streamers is seen. From the womb comes the drawing forth of activity and of life. One should place it at the crown. One should touch the ground. This is with the hook of the sign of the vajra of supreme joy. With the upper tips, the womb released, one should rub and strike the palm of the left hand. One should press it. One should close the eyes. Circling and pressing, one should look with a wrathful gaze. Having circled fully, showing the fangs at the corners of the mouth, the threatening forefinger is made with the right index finger. One should rise up on the index finger. One should press the thumb. With the syllable mu the mudrā is released.

First, one should strike with the vajra of the little fingers. That same one with a transformed face. That same one, circled fully, rests at the forehead facing upward. With that same one, one strikes the sky. With moving and closed eyes, the bound mudrā is released. One should touch with the jewel of the little fingers. With the index fingers even, one should exchange the toes, and eat, or place it with the mind. With the index finger, one performs the fire offering. The vajra of supreme joy should be released at the face. One performs the fire offering. Joining the two little fingers at the womb, one should tear the mudrā apart. Joining the ring fingers and the last fingers evenly, one should raise the fingers like a banner. Perfecting it with the vajra binding, the index fingers and thumbs opened evenly and bent, one should circle and tear it apart. With the vajra binding fully stretched out, one should touch the ground with the palms. The first vajra produces clouds. With the index finger one should bring forth rain. With the index finger one should turn it back. With the vajra gaze one should seize it away.

The vajra of supreme joy is explained. The jewel of a single index finger. The little finger is the vajra threatening forefinger. With the index finger, one draws up a spring from beneath the earth and shows it. Holding it with the Great Bliss vajra, one should move it. With the two index fingers one shows the form of a serpent's hood. With the light rays of the four tips one shows sparks of fire. With the index finger one produces wind. With the vajra of supreme joy, with the tip of the index finger, one should make the mirror, the play, the vajra gaze into the sky, and circling above. The vajra radiance should be placed at the base of all trees, upon forests, pleasure groves, and all grains. With a sharp index finger one should recite. By oneself one should lead all aright. One should circle the outer army in front. With the two vajra fists one should circle like flashing lightning. Like flashing lightning one should circle in the sky. With the right one should strike the left. The two vajra fists, moving, should be placed upon that which is unmoving. The circle of the even index fingers is the jewel. The right index finger should be inserted into the opening of the left thumb of the index-finger vajra. With the vajra of supreme joy, above in the sky there is the stirring of joy, the moving of the womb, and the stirring and binding of the central vajra. Thus are explained the Vajra Born from Mind, Vajrakilikilā, Vajramakarī, and Vajragarvā.

Making supplication with the index fingers of the vajra binding, one should cover one's own eyes with the two index fingers and meditate with the mind on whatever one wishes. One performs the fire offering. With the index fingers one should close one's own eyes. One should hold it with the teeth. One should drink. Moving the tips, one should perform the fire offering. Stretching it out fully beneath the thumb, one should give.

The supreme mudrā of the vajra body: the thumbs in the cross-legged posture of the sattva and the index fingers as a vajra: this is the supreme vajra body. With the even tops of the middle fingers forming a crest, speech is brought forth. Placing it at the heart, one should meditate on oṃ bodhicitta utapādayāmi. The sign of the thumb should be inserted into the opening of the left thumb. The two vajra fists circled like flashing lightning: this is the vajra wheel. Vajragarvā is together with the vajra. With the syllable hūṃ: the threatening forefinger. This is with the dance of the vajra of supreme joy.

Vajragarvā has been explained. With the little fingers knotted at their corners, the even tips are circled all around. Raised from below, with the tips of the index fingers even, if it is placed at the site of empowerment, it is the vajra ūrṇā. The fist of all the tathāgatas will be explained below. This is the explanation of the vajra dance. With the index finger turned outward and raised, the vajra at the heart, saying vajro ta haṃ: this is the great mudrā. Likewise, meditating on a vajra at the heart, one says mahāsaha haṃ. With the wisdom fist, tathāgato'haṃ: the great mudrā of the Blessed One has been explained.

Next, the binding of the vajra fist:

Bind the fingers in the vajra bond,
Adorned with the two bent index fingers;
Within the last two fingers
The two thumbs are joined at their tips.
The great pledge, the supreme vajra,
The fist that grants every supreme accomplishment:
Thus is the vajra fist fully set forth.

Next, the extensive rite of the tantra of mudrās of the Tathāgata family. The great mudrās are to be bound with tathāgato'haṃ. The supreme pledge rite is the thumbs and little fingers held even. The vajra is the crossed vajra. The binding of the arrow and the rest is likewise. The karma mudrās are just those. With the tathāgata fist they are bound in the same way. It is as with Aṅkuśī. As for the distinctive fists: the fist of the vajra bond resting on the two thumbs is the pledge fist; made twofold, it is the tathāgata fist. With the two tathāgata fists and the five circles one should prostrate and enter. These too grant all accomplishments.

Next, the binding of the karma mudrās. With the supreme vajra body, placing it at the crown of the head, at the ūrṇā, and at the heart, and circling it round and round, it should be held at the cheeks and at the uṣṇīṣa. With the two index fingers of the two tathāgata fists one makes the threatening forefinger and the gesture of giving. Holding the left at the heart, one touches the ground with one finger of the right. With the wrathful index finger of the left turned inward toward the right fist: this is the fist of all the tathāgatas, by which buddhahood is swiftly attained. Bound below the vajra bond, it is the firm cross-legged posture.

Next, the tantra of the extensive rite of mudrās of the Vajra family. The mudrā of entering is just the summoning mudrā of the wrathful vajra of supreme joy. The great mudrās are likewise. The pledge mudrā: below, with the vajra bond, all the fingers blazing, and the thumb vajra within, is Vajrakrodha, tirintiri, which accomplishes the great Vajradhara. The others are likewise. Those of the Dharma are likewise, and the karma mudrās are likewise. As for the distinctive fist: with the vajra fist, the index finger is the threatening forefinger. Those that arise from the pledge are likewise. Next, the karma mudrās arise from Vajrahūṃkāra. With the little fingers of the vajra hands bound like a bracelet, the threatening forefinger is Vajrahūṃkāra, standing with the left leg extended. The vajra threatening forefinger is made with the index finger of the left. It is done with the breath of the nose and the syllable hūṃ. In wrath one should join to it the syllable a. One should laugh aloud with the laughter ha ha. By meditating on a vajra at the heart, it is the great mudrā of the vajra.

Next, the tantra of the extensive rite of mudrās of the Lotus family. Bending the two index fingers of the tathāgata vajra and placing it at the heart is the vajra lotus. All the mudrās, the great mudrā and the rest, are likewise. Then the distinctive pledge mudrā and the distinctive fist. From the palms joined like a bud, opening the thumbs and the little fingers forms the great four-petaled lotus. All the bindings are just as before. As for the distinctive fist: with the vajra bond, the two index fingers are bent, the thumbs are extended evenly, and the two middle fingers are placed side by side facing outward; made twofold, this is the lotus fist. Next, the karma mudrās. This is the explanation of the great lotus. That same is held at the crown of the head. With that same, one should gaze with the vajra gaze. That same is made with all the fingers opened. That same forms the eyes of the vajras, two by two. That same makes the gesture of approval. Placing that same at the forehead, one should make supplication. That same, the sign of the thumb, is inserted into the left womb.

Next, the extensive rite of the tantra of mudrās of the Jewel family. Fully extending the vajra palms, placing the bent index fingers on the even thumbs, and setting it at the place of the ūrṇā on the forehead, one bestows all the empowerments. The binding of all the mudrās, the great mudrā and the rest, is likewise. The pledge mudrā: with the vajra bond, the two index fingers bent outward and the fingers even, the jewel enclosed by the thumb vajra, is the vajra jewel. The others are the vajra jewel fist that arises from it. Made twofold, it is the jewel fist. Next, the karma mudrās. The raised vajra jewel is the sprout to be accomplished. With the palms joined and the ring fingers and little fingers opened evenly, it holds the supreme silk streamer. The middle fingers form the jewel. The tips of the little fingers. Scattering below. From the vajra bond, with the jewel of the index fingers extended, it is the garland. The three vajra jewels should be bound in front and on the two sides. Placing the vajra jewel at the place of the ūrṇā, with the tips of the index fingers one makes a knot above in the manner of silk streamers. Making the two thumbs into the firm cross-legged posture, bending the two index fingers, even and shaped like a bud, is the one with the supreme body, the supreme body of all the tathāgatas. With it, beginning from the crown of the head, having performed the action in front, on the right, on the left, and behind, and likewise in front, behind, and on the two sides, with graceful movement, one releases the last fingers and the rest, makes the knot that binds the garland, and forms it in the manner of silk streamers. This is the empowerment of Vajrasattva, and by it one attains the very state of Vajrasattva, supreme among all the lords of the three realms of existence. All the rites of all the vajras are just as above.

Next, this is what is to be known as the outer mudrās. The great mudrā is the mudrā with a bowl in the left hand and, in the right, the shooting of an arrow.

The pledge mudrā of entering: the index, middle, and ring fingers are joined well and evenly to form three points, and the two thumbs and little fingers are linked like a chain. This is the mudrā of the protectors. Held in just the same way, it is the mudrā of the goddesses. The pledge mudrā: with the middle and ring fingers in the vajra bond, the index, middle, little, and ring fingers are gathered at the root of the thumb. This is the mudrā of the maṇḍala of the four sisters. If one is unable to prepare the maṇḍala, then by binding this the maṇḍala will be fully prepared, and accomplishments too are fully bestowed. With this very mudrā the goddesses should be invited and made to enter.

Next, the wheel of illusion: on the left hand all the fingers are fully extended. It is the wheel of the pledge maṇḍala, which makes all the illusions of all the asuras effective. With the two thumbs of the lord of the hooded serpents, and with the eight fingers whose tips are turned outward forming a mass of hoods, it is the pledge for summoning, bringing in, binding, and bringing under control all the nāgas. This is the hand of the mahoraga. If one transgresses it, one will die. Knotting the four, the middle and ring fingers, raising them upward in a gesture of delight and drawing them together, if one strikes with the tips of the two little fingers, all poisons blaze; and binding all poisons, gathering them from everywhere and striking, all poisons are destroyed. With this very mudrā one should render free of poison all poison that has been eaten and all that has spread. This is the tantra of the extensive rite of the outer mudrās.

Then the Blessed One, the vajra secret of Great Bliss, the great pledge, Vajrasattva, said, "Next I shall explain the extensive rite of the tantra of mudrās that accomplish all rites."

Of these, the five mudrās of body are as follows. The great mudrā is for the family of the great Vajradhara. The pledge mudrā is for the Tathāgata family. Vajrahūṃkāra is for the Vajra family. The great lotus is for the Lotus family. The great vajra jewel is for the Jewel family.

Next, the five mudrās of speech. Singing with every flow of song, in whatever way one is able, in all the styles of every kind of melodious song, and reciting: this is the vajra speech of supreme joy, for the family of Vajrasattva. The vajra speech in which the tongue and the two lips are utterly unmoving, their surfaces not touching at all, and which is free of melody, is for the Tathāgata family; it is needed by all the families. That which has the thunder of clouds together with the subtle sound of the syllable hūṃ is the speech called the vajra of Vajrakrodha, for the Vajra family. The speech of meditative absorption is for the Lotus family, and is called the lotus that purifies all. The speech of Dharma is for the Jewel family, and is the jewel of offering.

Next, the five mudrās of mind. For accomplishing everything, it is by the very being of Vajrasattva. By recollection of the Buddha, it is for the Tathāgata family. The thought, "It shall be slain, by me or before me," is for the Vajra family. The thought, "It shall be purified," is for the Lotus family. By meditating on the whole of space, it is for the Jewel family.

Next, the five mudrās of the vajra. The five-pointed vajra whose points are wholly pervaded by a garland of light rays, with the vajra fist of Great Bliss, is for the family of Vajrasattva. The five-pointed vajra with light rays, with the tathāgata fist, is for the Tathāgata family. The four-pointed vajra, blazing in nature, with the fist of Vajrakrodha, is for the Vajra family. The tathāgata vajra upon a lotus, with the vajra lotus fist, is for the Lotus family. The half vajra, the vajra jewel, with the jewel fist, is for the Jewel family.

Then the Blessed One, the Unfailing and Unimpeded, possessor of swift and supreme accomplishment, Vajrasattva, said, "Next I shall explain the tantra of all practices, the extensive rite of swift and supreme accomplishment: the secret that comprehends all the families, the unimpeded and unfailing truth of reality."

The great mudrā of Vajrasattva is the secret pledge of the vajra of Great Bliss. The mudrā of speech is the heart mantra. The mudrā of mind is the near-heart mantra. The mudrā of the vajra is that of Vajragarvā.

Next, this is the unfailing and unimpeded tantra of the subtle karma mudrās. Holding the lower lip with the teeth and gazing with the vajra gaze, one experiences, each in an instant, the accomplishments of passion for all, of bringing under control, of play, and of making firm: this is for the family of Vajrasattva. Blessing it with the subtle vajra and gazing merely as a pledge, one attains the accomplishment of beholding the moral discipline, meditative absorption, wisdom, liberation, and the wisdom of liberation of all the tathāgatas: this arises from the Tathāgata family. With a wrathful frown, as a wrathful one, making a fierce gaze and holding it utterly unwavering, the accomplishments of felling all, bringing down, paralyzing, putting to sleep, sealing, killing, stupefying the armies of others, and complete victory over all arise in an instant: this is for the family of the wrathful vajra fist. With the steady vajra gaze, the eyes not closed, and the lips even, the accomplishments of purifying all obscurations, of protection, and of the manifestation of meditative absorption arise: this is for the Lotus family. With a blazing gaze and the face broadly smiling, one swiftly attains the accomplishments of all empowerments, of all excellence, and of the extensive rites of offering.

Next, the practice of binding all the mudrās:

Once each day, openly,
One practices one's own heart mantra;
Binding them oneself, in brief,
All the mudrās will be accomplished.

Next, the secret practice of all the mudrās:

This practice of the heart mudrā
Of the vidyā mantra is marvelous.
By reciting as much as one can and as much as one wishes,
The near-heart mantra is the secret.

The unfailing and unimpeded secret,
And likewise the accomplishment of one's own nature:
Even for those who are without merit,
Every accomplishment will be achieved.
To those who have not entered the maṇḍala
This supreme heart mantra should not be given,
Nor the secret, nor the sublime secret tantra,
If one desires delightful accomplishment.
In whatever house it comes to dwell,
This mudrā and mantra is auspicious;
Others cannot overcome it or harm it,
And all accomplishments will be attained.

The second section, the root tantra of the Mantra Section, is complete.

For the happiness of all sentient beings,
And to accomplish all that is to be accomplished,
All the buddhas together with their heirs
Made request of the holder of the supreme vajra:
"For the thorough accomplishment of great bliss
And for the purification of great passion,
O Great Being, please explain
The tantra that gathers all the rites.
For phenomena that are free of concepts,
What is it here that is called a rite?
What is it that is called the heart,
And what is the tantra of wisdom like?
What is it that is called a maṇḍala?
What qualities come with entering it?
What are the distinctions of the wheels of the families,
And what, moreover, is the practice like?
Vajrasattva, the very being,
How is he, and what is his reality?
Being without beginning or end,
And how supreme joy comes about;
Whose is this first heart mantra?
And what is suchness?
By whom was the song of hūṃ sung,
And how is its meaning to be told?

The mind as the vajra itself,
And likewise the mudrā as the vajra itself;
The arising of the buddhas,
And likewise of the families too;
The accomplishing of the buddhas' awakening,
And how buddhas become māras;
The accomplishing of the rites as well,
The reality of the first heart mantra,
The practice of the heart mantra, the mudrā, and the vidyā mantra,
And likewise the accomplishments:
How are they achieved by those without merit?
How does one become a master?
Flowers, incense, and lamps,
And scents: what are they, and how do they come about?
How, too, is offering to be made?
What is the secret offering?
Those who do all things, who eat all things, the sinful,
The utterly sinful: how do they reach accomplishment?
Through the unfailing and unimpeded accomplishment,
How do they become accomplished?
And what, moreover, is that secret?
By what is it accomplished in this very life?
For the thorough accomplishment of great bliss
And for the purification of great passion,
The secret of the reality of the secret:
Please explain it all to us."

Then the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, having heard the words of request made by all the tathāgatas, smiled broadly, and with a great laugh performed the subjugation called the vajra of the reality of all the great pledges. Then he spoke this subsequent tantra of all the rites.

Of these, the tantra of the pervasion of nonconceptuality:

From the meditative absorption free of concepts
The welfare of beings is thoroughly considered.
Therefore it is explained as a rite,
For conceptual thought is completely purified.

Of these, this is the tantra of the maṇḍala of the vajra secret of Great Bliss:

Having drawn the places of the letters on the ground,
One recites "Great Bliss."
Its pledge is the vajra,
Which accomplishes all the heart mantras.

Of these, the tantra of the explanation of the maṇḍala:

According to the place and according to the time,
According to the world and its nature,
The retinue is to be arranged;
Draw the maṇḍala in that manner.

Next, the tantra of the ripening of having entered all the maṇḍalas:

Whatever merit there is in entering
The maṇḍala at that time
With Vajrasattva and the other beings
Together with their retinues,
Drawing it in that way is just the same.

Next, the tantra of the distinctions of the wheels of all the families:

As the vajra wheel has been taught,
So is the sublime iron wheel,
And likewise the blazing wheel,
The eight-petaled lotus, and the great jewel.

Next, the tantra of accomplishing all the maṇḍalas:

Having prepared the maṇḍala,
One should enter by the inner sequence;
At the maṇḍalas one should recite
jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ prasiddhyamaṃ.

Next, the tantra of Vajrasattva himself:

Of all beings, the buddhas and the rest,
He is the self of all, the supreme Blessed One.
Because beings arise from him, he is the being,
Renowned as Vajrasattva.

Next, the tantra explaining the reality of the great pledge:

The being without beginning or end
Is Vajrasattva, great joy,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
And likewise saṃsāra and nirvāṇa.

Next, the tantra explaining the reality that is without beginning or end:

All that is without beginning or end
Is the abode of space, the great element.
Because the arising of space is nonarising,
Vajrasattva is just the same.

Next, the tantra explaining the supreme joy of the Blessed One:

Because of supreme joy there is affliction;
All beings desire happiness.
In order to purify that happiness,
The Blessed One arose before the three worlds.

Next, the tantra explaining the reality of the first heart mantra:

Passion for all, great passion,
Awakens all who are possessed of desire.
The heart of the gandharva of blazing passion
Is Vajrapāṇi.

Next, the tantra of singing the song of the syllable hūṃ:

From song comes passion, and from joy, desire;
From supreme joy all things arise.
Because all is accomplished as arising,
The Blessed One spoke it in the first eon.

Next, the tantra explaining the meaning of the recitation of the syllable hūṃ:

By swiftly drawing all things with passion,
All accomplishments are drawn in passion.
The supreme means of drawing with passion
Is the meaning of reciting the heart mantra.

Next, the tantra of the vajra mind:

Just as songs and the wrathful one,
When gathered, enter everywhere,
The vajra thunderbolt becomes firm;
Likewise is the vajra gathered.

Next, the tantra on knowing the arising of Vajrasattva:

The being who is the self of all
Abides also in the self of oneself;
Vajrasattva, in actuality,
Swiftly enters into all as well.

Next, the tantra on knowing the arising of the Tathāgata:

From desire comes passion, from joy comes bliss;
From bliss comes sin, from sin comes suffering;
From suffering comes utterly firm meditative absorption;
From the vajra itself the buddhas arise.

Next, the tantra on knowing the arising of the Tathāgata family and the rest:

That very Tathāgata family
Is itself the great Vajra family;
It is itself the pure Lotus family,
And itself is called the supreme Jewel family.

Next, the tantra on knowing full awakening:

Discerning one's own mind, each aspect in turn,
The mind of awakening truly arises.
Because one is the vajra itself, one is the Buddha himself:
Meditate intently on oneself as the Buddha.

The tantra on knowing the Tathāgata as Māra himself:

One's own mind itself is Māra;
Mind itself is the Tathāgata.
In order to tame one's own mind,
The Buddha arises as Māra himself.

Next, the tantra on knowing the accomplishment of all the rites:

Whatever is to be accomplished in all the rites,
Whether it moves or does not move,
Through the yoga of one's own deity
All of these are to be accomplished.

Next, the tantra on knowing the practice of the first heart mantra:

By the power of knowing the meaning of recitation,
One fully accomplishes Vajrasattva.

The supreme recitation, for as long as one wishes,
Bestows the bliss of great accomplishment.

Next, the tantra on knowing the practice of the heart mantra, the mudrā, the mantra, and the vidyā:

Whatever being's heart mantra,
Mudrā, mantra, and vidyā there are,
For the purpose of recitation, the great being,
Oneself, is what is to be accomplished.

Next, the tantra on knowing the accomplishments:

The great accomplishment of Vajrasattva,
And likewise that of all the tathāgatas:
Vajrasattva is the very being,
For the sake of the supreme accomplishment of all acts.

Next, the tantra on knowing how accomplishment is achieved by those without merit:

Having drawn whatever wheel one wishes,
Even with ash or with anything at all,
And having set the great being upon it,
One should practice for four days and nights.

Next, the tantra on knowing the attainment of the state of master:

In the city of the pledge,
The supreme secret of the vajra of Great Bliss,
One should oneself fully enter as is proper,
And be empowered with the water of nectar.

Next, the tantra on knowing the presentation of offerings such as flowers:

All the offerings to the Vajra Holder
Are white for the Tathāgata family;
For the Vajra itself they are black;
Red for the Lotus, and yellow for the Jewel.

Next, the tantra on knowing the presentation:

Whether complete or incomplete,
Or else just as they are obtained,
Through offerings such as the vajra dance

All things will always be accomplished.

Next, the tantra on knowing the timely offerings:

With melodious songs, the ṣaḍja note and the rest,
And with all songs, as one wishes,
Vajra Opener and the others are set free;
The offerings should be fully made.

Next, the tantra on knowing the secret offering:

The offerings together with the vajra dance,
In their proper sequence,
Even if not spoken with the meaning of recitation,
Will bring about the supreme accomplishment.

Next, the tantra on knowing how even those who commit great sins attain accomplishment:

Even without having entered the maṇḍala,
Those of broken moral discipline and the like,
By the power of meditative absorption,
Will be freed from all sins.

Next, the tantra on knowing the cause of not attaining accomplishment:

Passion is not to be disparaged;
It is pure, and likewise it is bliss.
The Blessed One too is great passion.
Because this is not pure, accomplishment does not come.

Next, the tantra on knowing the practice of the supreme accomplishment:

Having become endowed with the proper object,
One should practice the supreme accomplishment.
This yoga, in all the rites,
Brings accomplishment in this very life.

This is the extensive rite of the subsequent tantra of all the rites, from the Precious Vajra Jewel, the great king of rites of the vajra secret of Great Bliss.

Then all the tathāgatas, pervading all the emanations of the realm of phenomena to the very limit of the realm of space, made manifestly known the wheel of the Blessed One, the rite that is the vajra secret of all the tathāgatas, the vajra jewel of the empowerment of all the tathāgatas, the

vajra lotus of the lord of wisdom who beholds the rites of all the tathāgatas, the extensive rite of accomplishment of the firm vajra realm, which by the vajra of the extensive rite of sublime activity, through the various deeds of all the tathāgatas, pervades all without exception and without remainder. Having done so, they spoke this tantra of the practice of the vajra of the secret reality of the first heart mantra:

As long as they have entered the state of saṃsāra,
So long do they deliver sentient beings.
The glorious one who abides in nirvāṇa
Is not able to work for the welfare of beings.
Therefore the sublime beings
Enter saṃsāra for as long as saṃsāra lasts,
Wholly intent on the welfare of beings.
Possessed of the supreme quality of total purity,
Since the tathāgatas do not tame them,
They do not work for the welfare of beings.
Here is the supreme accomplishment, fully accomplished,
At all times and in every way.
The great Vajradhara and the others,
In this way, through the ripening of merit,
Through being seen by all and the like,
Do not act by way of their own karma.
Even without having entered the maṇḍala,
One will swiftly accomplish it in this existence.
Through being clearly seen and the like,
They grant it fully to all sentient beings;
Everywhere, at all times, to all,
All accomplishments will be fully granted.
The king, the great Vajradhara,
Is chief of all the lords of existence;
Therefore this practice is to be explained,
The accomplishment that is utterly permanent,
By which, in this very existence,
One attains the utterly permanent accomplishment.
Whether cast or hammered,
Painted as a picture, or fashioned,
The image of Vajrapāṇi

Should be fully installed as explained.

This is the extensive rite of accomplishment of the practice of the reality of the pledge of the vajra secret of Great Bliss.

Then the Blessed One, all the tathāgatas, through the wisdom of mudrā, again spoke this tantra of accomplishment of the practice of all the mudrās.

Each day, beforehand, at the proper time,
The first vajra, great bliss:
Through this, at all times,
By gathering all the mudrās in brief,
Binding the pledge correctly, one accomplishes;
Thereafter one is accomplished without having to practice.

Then the Blessed One spoke this practice of the secret mantra of the reality of Vajradharma:

Whether standing or sitting,
Or remaining wherever one may be,
Through the yoga of passion for all,
All accomplishments will be attained.

Then the Blessed One spoke this tantra of the secret reality of action:

Making offering with the supreme secret dance,
Or else making offering as one pleases,
If one then practices the Protector,
One swiftly attains the supreme accomplishment.

Next, the tantra of practicing oneself through one's own mudrā:

Placing the great mudrā in equipoise,
Practice once with one's own heart mantra.
Steady, utterly delighted, passionate toward all:
Utterly delighted, the Lord is accomplished.

Next, the tantra of accomplishment by singing the song of the syllable hūṃ:

Adorned with ri bhi da and the rest,
As much as one can and as one wishes,
Having sung the first gandharva song,
One is accomplished through the syllable hūṃ.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the first of great passion, Vajrasattva, the great Vajradhara. This is the tantra of practicing the secret accomplishment of the great reality.

Then the Blessed One, Vajrasattva, whose activity is without beginning or end, said, "Next I shall explain the karma mudrās of all the rites."

Increase of a very long life is through the Vajradharma of Great Bliss. Increase of a very youthful age is through the vajra elixir of Great Bliss. Increase of great beauty and great splendor is through the splendor of the vajra form of Great Bliss. Increase of all great formations is through the great vajra formation of Great Bliss. Protection of all the selves of all sentient beings is through the vajra protection of Great Bliss. Binding all the directions, the intermediate directions, and the maṇḍala is through the vajra encircling of Great Bliss; then even Vajra, the great king of wrathful ones, whose nature is the great vajra of all, will be unable to enter it, and it will be unbreakable. Protection from all sins is through the vajra blessing of Great Bliss. Making all one's own accomplishments, or those of others, into vajra is through the vajra armor of Great Bliss. Victory in all battles is through the armlet of the supreme vajra banner of Great Bliss. Protection in battle is through the invincibility of Great Bliss. Destroying all the armies of others is through the vajra holding of the vajra of Great Bliss. The defeat, rising, falling, and slaying of the armies of others is through the vajra lightning circle of Great Bliss. Pacifying all diseases, fevers and the rest, and great epidemics is through the vajra seizing of Great Bliss. Destroying all poisons and rendering them harmless is through the action of the vajra mudrā of Great Bliss. Freeing from all grahas is through the vajra expulsion of bhūtas of Great Bliss. The great freeing from mātṛkās, ḍākinīs, and all grahas, their destruction, drawing out the hearts of others, reviving the dead, increasing life, and utterly protecting it, are through the action of the vajra mudrā of Great Bliss. Bringing down possession on all, making them tremble, binding them, making them dance, making them sing, making former things appear and establishing each one, marvels, displaying miracles, making all speak every truth, releasing, protecting, and reviving, are through the vajra possession of Great Bliss. Accomplishing every prasena divination one wishes for, on all things moving and unmoving, is through the vajra prasena of Great Bliss. Accomplishing the knowledge by which one's own body, speech, and mind see, hear, speak, and teach by the vajra is through meditating on oneself as the vajra of Great Bliss. Bringing the hearing consciousness fully to engage all the various letters, or all the various things, of the past, the future, and the present that are seen as the command, is through the vajra omniscience of Great Bliss. Turning back all lightning, rain, and thunderbolts, and dispersing clouds, is through the wrathful vajra gaze of Great Bliss. Bringing forth and taking up, from everything beneath the earth, crops and other fruits that had not appeared before; bringing forth and taking up water from places without water; generating and taking up great light in great darkness; commanding and taking up all winds; and seeing and taking up from all of space whatever things the mind desires, are through the Great Bliss Vajradhātvīśvarī. Destroying all, paralyzing, tearing apart, stupefying, putting to sleep, sealing, felling, confounding, slaying, and turning back, are through the vicious vajra mudrā of Great Bliss. The practice of performing all rites, of passion for all, summoning, bringing in, bringing down possession, binding, releasing, tearing apart, felling, raising up what has fallen, leading, enslaving, dispatching and commanding, drawing all near and sending them away, slaying and reviving again, and the like, and of bringing under control, is through the vajra accomplishment of all of Great Bliss. The extensive rite for swiftly accomplishing all the supreme accomplishments, the supreme accomplishment of all the families and the rest; all the supreme empowerments and the rest; all excellences; the bliss of passion for all and the like; fully instilling all happiness of mind; and all acts such as all the great offerings, is through the supreme vajra accomplishment of Great Bliss.

Of these, this is the tantra of the karma mudrā of the first supreme pledge of the pledge of the vajra secret of Great Bliss. The vajra of Great Bliss gives the life of Vajrasattva. All its karma mudrās are to be bound. One should drink the middle vajra. Making light rays from its tips, one thoroughly purifies the face and should release it at the face. Having circled it all around oneself, one should release it at the heart. One circles the uṣṇīṣa, all the directions, and the maṇḍala.

Placing it at the heart, and with the mind at the back, the shoulders, the crown and the forehead, one binds the garland with the two vajra fists and puts on the armor. Having tied a knot, one again makes the garland at the vajra places, ties a knot at the back, and lets the ribbons hang down. They should be placed at the heart, the forehead, the throat and the crown. This is the supreme silk of the middle one.

For the activity there is piercing with the opening turned upward, and gazing with a terrifying face. Casting it in the manner of the four blazes and binding it at one's own wrathful heart, one should seize the tips with a peaceful gaze.

One should seize with the gaze. One should seize with the gaze. By lowering it, one should swiftly release it. Having circled it all around, one places it at the forehead. When the two tips of the middle vajra fingers are moved, one places it, just as it is, at the heart of the one who performs the action.

The actions of the middle vajra are these: at the heart, raising, generating, binding, making it dance, clearing the throat, pressing the vajra tips, turning it face down, clearing the throat, swiftly releasing what is bound, protecting, and the actions of activity. At the heart, union is generated.

Each day, once in the early morning, there is thoroughly purifying the body, speech with a cleared throat, placing at the heart, and gazing at the mudrā: each day, once in the early morning, one should circle it around all the senses. What is done with the middle vajra is done with the gaze of the wrathful vajra.

The actions of the middle vajra arise from below: enjoying, summoning everything, granting descent, making blazing sparks, taking up, the manner of the wind, and meditating in space. These are many actions.

As for the body of the middle vajra, these are its actions: destroying with the mudrā, pressing the two tips at the heart, rubbing the nails, raising the eyes and closing them, lifting it to the heart with the fingers held even, letting it fall and raising it up, striking one against the other, and placing it in its natural state at one's own heart.

The actions of the middle vajra are these: aiming the arrow, summoning with the two chains, inserting the right into the left, moving the tips, binding it as a bracelet, swiftly releasing, swiftly tearing apart with the fingers held even, letting it fall, lifting it from below, drawing the left with the right, applying it to all actions, moving it from below and drawing it upward, drawing it inward and sending it outward, lifting forcefully with left and right, drawing the tips to one's own heart, the action of definitively applying it to all actions, setting the wheel at the heart, binding the garland and ribbons of empowerment, drawing out the action at the heart and drawing in bliss, thoroughly purifying everything, and taking it up with a dance and releasing it at the crown.

For the full accomplishment of Great Bliss
And for the purity of great passion,
The tantra of the mudrās, unfailing, unobstructed and manifold,
Has been thoroughly explained.

By the great Vajra Holder,
The very self of all the buddhas with their heirs,
So that all sentient beings may swiftly attain,
All unfailing accomplishments are bestowed.

Those who have not entered the maṇḍalas
And are possessed of every evil deed,
Even they will attain accomplishment,
For by merely binding it their evil is purified.

Whoever, through laziness,
Or though possessed of diligence, is deficient,
Whatever beings have no maṇḍala,
And those not blessed by a master,
They become great vajras of supreme accomplishment
And become vajra masters themselves.
By merely binding the supreme, unfailing and manifold,
They swiftly attain,
And enter into all the supreme accomplishments
That fulfill every wish.

The supreme vajra that arises first
Arises truly from Great Bliss,
Pure and perfectly accomplished,
And for all beings as well.

Next, the secret tantra for accomplishing all the mudrās:

One who desires the rite should first, with the mudrā,
Accomplish it through the heart mantra according to one's fortune,
And should definitely apply it to oneself.

From the great king of ritual manuals, the Vajra Secret of Great Bliss, the extensive rite of the later tantra called the Supreme Unfailing Accomplishment of the Vajra Pledge of All Great Bliss is complete.

Then, concerning the application of the actions of all the vajras of the body, speech and mind of the Blessed One, of all the tathāgatas, which are utterly without final limit, they, together with the Vajradharas, entreated Vajrasattva, who is without beginning or end, that through this great king of ritual manuals, the Vajra Secret Pledge of Great Bliss, there be the extensive rite of pervading and emanating throughout the entire realm of sentient beings and of all accomplishments, for the sake of the scripture that brings to its culmination the culmination of the peak of all existence:

Through the great vajra space
Comes the supreme emanation of the dharmadhātu;
The great vajra space
Grants the accomplishment of emanating the dharmadhātu.
All the buddhas, at all times,
Together with the great Vajradhara,
Are unable to bring
The vehicle of Vajradhara to its final limit.
How wonderful! For beings who cling,
For the lazy and those burdened with every karma,
You, vajra of holy compassion,
Are the unsurpassed awakening mind.
For the full accomplishment of Great Bliss
And for the purity of great passion,
That this ritual manual, the culmination,
May be fully accomplished, proclaim the culmination.

Then the Blessed One, having heard the words of entreaty made by all the tathāgatas, entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Blessing of Vajrasattva, the meditative absorption of all the tathāgatas, and spoke this:

For the full accomplishment of Great Bliss
And for the purity of great passion,
For the sake of accomplishing all intentions,
The culmination is blessed.

Those who will hear this supreme way,
And those in whose house all secrets abide,
To them, in this very life, is shown the accomplishment
Of the supreme secret, the supreme vajra of supreme Great Bliss.
Because it is steadfast, it does not itself impose discipline.
For the sake of beings, since the Victors are pure of karma,
This is what brings about purification.
This ritual manual has no obstructors and no māras;
It is blessed so that accomplishment cannot fail to increase.
I do not bring about Māra or instability;

Because it is steadfast, it does not itself impose discipline.
Whoever practices this supreme great ritual manual
Swiftly reaches supreme accomplishment and becomes steadfast in himself.
Steadfast and well performed, he is loved by the Steadfast One,
And Great Bliss, the maker of all, flourishes greatly.
Whoever practices my first heart mantra,
To him I always grant accomplishment.

Then all the tathāgatas assembled, gave their "Excellent!" and praised what the Blessed One had spoken.

The later tantra of supreme accomplishment of the king of ritual manuals called the Vajra Secret of Great Bliss is complete.

Then the Blessed One once again revealed this very great bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, smiling broadly. Brandishing with vajra pride the vajra of Great Bliss, the vajra of the supreme first, and holding it at his own heart in the manner of praise, he spoke the great later tantra of the Maheśvara king of ritual manuals called the First Supreme Weapon: this supremely secret and supremely accomplished pledge, the Unfailing and Unimpeded, the unfailing vajra of Great Bliss, which, by the power of the blessing that tames all conceptual thought, evil, obscurations and all māras, causes even those who are unaccomplished to accomplish the holy supreme, and which is supremely secret and without beginning or end.

Then the first abode, delightful,
Stands throughout all of space,
Beautiful with the light of jewels, brilliantly clear,
Adorned with a stainless luster.
It is square, with four doors,
Beautifully adorned with porches,
Encircled all around by a parapet,
And worshiped by hosts of vajra goddesses.
In all the corner directions
And at the junctions of the porches
Half-moons are set.
With blazing vajra jewels,
Supreme pinnacles stirred by the wind,
Banners and pennants, bells that ring out,

Nets, mirrors, crests and flowers,
It is encircled with ornaments of flower garlands.
Great Bliss, the great vajra,
Well fashioned by all the vajras,
Is the great dwelling place of Vajrasattva,
Frequented by all the buddhas,
The supreme abode of bodhisattvas,
The abode of all the Vajra Holders.
The great vajra of Great Bliss,
The great Vajradhara called the supreme Vajraratna,
Having taken his seat there,
Abides in Great Bliss.

The being without beginning or end
Is Vajrasattva, of great joy,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
Lord of lords in the manner of vajra pride.
That which is the mind of all sentient beings,
Because it is steadfast, is called heroic.
Being firmly placed, it is meditative absorption;
From certainty, it becomes vajra.
Through the yoga of blessing it as the being,
One becomes Vajrasattva himself.
He himself is the manifold Blessed One,
In accord with the conduct of awakening;
He is Māra and the victor over Māra;
He is the awakened Buddha himself.
He is the fierce vajra, Antaka himself,
And Vajrapāṇi himself as well.
He is the tathāgata family;
He is the great vajra family;
He is the pure lotus family;
He is declared the excellent jewel family.
He is free of attachment;
He is desire and liberation.
He is the three times, the three existences, the three supreme ones,
Supreme in the three worlds, belonging to the three realms;

He is the immovable, the supreme of all;
The firm teaching, the great wealth;
The moving, compounded by mind;
The maker of all, and all things themselves.
The first being, the great being,
The bodhisattva, bestows Supreme Bliss.
Seated in the cross-legged posture of the hero
Upon a lotus,
With a manifold host of consorts,
He is surrounded by vajra goddesses.

For the accomplishment of Great Bliss,
For the purity of great desire,
For the sake of all who are to be tamed, without exception,
And for the full accomplishment of all accomplishments,
The supreme pledge, in its entirety,
Should be guarded even by the Victors.
Brandishing the vajra with pride
And holding the posture of vajra pride,
So that all mudrās are swiftly and directly accomplished,
For the supreme accomplishment of Vajrasattva,
It is the great means of all accomplishments,
Greatly beheld through all merits,
Fully endowed with the wisdom mudrā:
It is the great and holy heart mantra.
Even one who has no merit,
Or likewise one who has not entered a maṇḍala,
Becomes supreme, unfailing and unimpeded;
All accomplishments are hard to find.
Great Bliss, the great vajra,
The steadfast pledge of the supreme secret,
Grants the accomplishment of all things
And swiftly accomplishes all ritual manuals.
Because it is without beginning or end, it arises first;
It is declared to be the supreme and the first.
With all words, whatever one wishes,
And with all passions, whatever delights,

Saying, "I shall be passionately devoted,"
The wisdom that descends just as it is enters.
The heart mantra, together with the near-heart mantra,
Was spoken by the Blessed One in the first eon:
hūṃ

Then, merely by his speaking this,
All the buddhas with their heirs,
Together with the manifold Vajra Holders,
Assembled in an instant.
First, through the great Vajra Holder,
The three worlds arise in a moment.
"How are beings fully accomplished?"
Thus the sugatas asked about accomplishment.
Having heard their words,
The Vajra Holder, himself liberated,
Acting as producer, bestower and teacher,
Respectfully spoke these words:
"The worlds tamed by those free of attachment
Are purified by freedom from attachment itself.
Great desire, great bliss:
How will this be accomplished?"
Having heard those words of his,
The Victor himself declared:
"That awakening mind is the first deity;
You are great means itself."

"As long as the supreme sage
Remains in the abode of saṃsāra,
So long, unequaled, he is able to work
For the benefit of beings without passing into nirvāṇa.
As long as beings have conceptual thought,
So long is awakening a great existence.
For the sake of awakening and to benefit beings,
Vajra Bearer, do as you please."

Then the first, the maṇḍala,
The first maṇḍala, was blessed:
The supreme pledge of all the vajras,

Accomplished through the rite just as it is.
Then, for the accomplishment of Great Bliss
And for the purity of great desire,
The chief entreated the protector, that Blessed One:
"Blessed One, I entreat you:
Great desire, great bliss,
This heart mantra, the supreme ritual manual,
Swiftly accomplishes great bliss."
Having heard their words,
Vajrasattva, the great bliss,
The great vajra of Great Bliss,
Declared the great maṇḍala.

Now what is to be explained
Is the holy great maṇḍala,
The supreme vajra of Great Bliss,
Declared to be the holy secret.
First, the vajra master
Who has obtained the three pledges, with his own mudrā,
In the rites of all the wheels,
Should always hold the vajra and bell.
They bring down all the ritual manuals correctly;
They accomplish all the maṇḍalas.
This seal, called the three great pledges,
Accomplishes everything.
In all the rites of accomplishment,
By vigorously ringing the vajra bell,
Even if the rite has something extra or is incomplete,
It will be accomplished; it should not be disparaged.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

The supreme first, infinite and supreme,
Unsurpassed and unequaled,
Abiding throughout all of space,
Is the supreme, the holy syllable.
Having purified the site of the maṇḍala,
In its center, according to the rite,
Through the rite of blessing for accomplishment,

That maṇḍala should be accomplished.
With the rite of songs and music,
With offerings of flowers, incense and the like,
As many as there are and as one wishes,
One should always do this for the supreme first.

In the supreme first, infinite and supreme,
Unsurpassed and incomparable,
Abiding throughout all of space,
Is the supreme unchanging city,
Without beginning, supreme and permanent,
Where the arising of the buddhas also abides.
Resting on the equality of the all-supreme,
Without excess or lack, filling all,
Is space without edge or center.
Examining this as the middle,
Through the meditative absorption of the yoga of mudrā,
By that it is examined as the center.
In its center, the form of a lotus
With its stalk should be set,
Covered all over with manifold lotuses:
That is the seat of total purity.
Then the lines should be struck
With a cord made double.
Because it is the measure of all space,
And because the minds of those to be tamed are infinite,
Its measure is measureless.
Since nothing is unequal, it is square;
Mindfulness and the faculties are the four doors;
The concentrations are the four archways;
Meditative absorption is declared the courtyard.
The lord of the vajra resting in the courtyard,
And the forms, are worshiped by goddesses.
Made brilliant by every ornament,
It fulfills every wish.
The supreme manifold, set in motion by the taming,
The holy Dharma, supreme, goes everywhere.

Banners of many kinds, stirred by the wind,
Are tied to the pinnacles, and bells resound.
The mirror is wisdom; the crests are flowers;
The limbs of awakening are the flower garlands;
Nets, mirrors and great flowers,
And it is encircled by ornaments of flower garlands.
The bliss that is all-accomplished and unchanging
Is declared to be Great Bliss.
The palace of Great Bliss
Should be drawn in the first place.
Having drawn well that supreme of all,
The supreme city of great liberation,
Contemplate the expanse without beginning or end,
With all directions as equality itself.
That is the outer maṇḍala.

The inner wheel within it
Is like an eightfold maṇḍala:
These are the eight liberations,
Which grant the bliss of all accomplishments.
By turning the wheel of the sūtras
Of the Great Vehicle of the bodhisattvas,
One correctly draws the vajra wheel,
Encircled by vajra lines.
There, upon a great manifold lotus,
Vajrasattva should be set,
Whether cast, or carved,
Or fashioned, or painted:
Smiling and the color of the moon,
Red and blazing with manifold light,
With the empowerment of all the buddhas and so forth,
With manifold ornaments and garments,
Seated in the cross-legged posture of the hero,
Supreme holder of the manner of vajra pride.
Saying surata stvaṃ,
One should also set him in place with his own heart mantra.

In all of its directions,
With colors, or likewise with powders,
In their proper order,
One should correctly draw the vajra goddesses.
One should be diligent in vajra offering and praise.
Draw Vajrarāgā in front.
The goddess Vajravilāsinī
Is closely embracing the Vajra Bearer.
Behind, Vajrasmṛti
Holds the makara banner.
Vajrakāmeśvarī
Should be drawn proudly with two vajra fists.

Then the mudrās for setting these in place are:
jaḥ vajra driṣṭi samkemaṭa hūṃ
oṃ vajra kili kili hūṃ vaṃ vajriṇi smararaṭa
ho vajra kāmeśvari stvaṃ

In the corners, Vajrasattvā and the others,
The offerings of the seasons, should be correctly drawn:
The vajra lady of honey and the clouds,
Autumn and winter, the vajra ladies.
Flowers, incense, great lamp,
And scent, with palms joined at the crown,
Are the goddesses of the vajra king.
Then the mudrās shall be explained:
oṃ madhu vajri ghuṃ ghuṃ
oṃ vajra meghe gulu gulu oṃ oṃ śarada vajri
oṃ oṃ
oṃ vajra śiśiri hūṃ hūṃ

The Graceful One, the Laughing One, the Great Singer,
And the Dancer, the host of goddesses,
These vajra musicians
Should be placed in the outer corners.
he rati vajra maghavilasini traha
he rati vajra nṛtyai veva veva

At all the places of the doors
Are the four door attendants:
The vajra hook, the noose,
The chain, and likewise the bell lady:
vajra aṃguśa jaḥ
vajra pāśe hūṃ
vajra śriṃkhale vaṃ
vajra ghaṇḍe hoḥ

This pledge will be contemplated
And examined by all.
The host of vajra goddesses and the rest
Will arise for all accomplishments.
Of the door attendants and the serving women,
There are chief ladies, messengers and handmaids.

Then the All-Supreme and the others
Should be drawn and correctly accomplished.
Having bound the supreme pledge,
One should say jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ.
Seated in the cross-legged posture of the hero
Before the Vajra Bearer,
One should once correctly summon the lord,
The supreme vajra of Great Bliss:
hūṃ mahāsukha vajrasatva yahi śīghraṃ mahāsukha vajra amoghāya anupālaya prabuddha surata stvaṃ anurakto me bhava sutoṣyo me bhava supoṣyo me bhava bhagavān nādinas tva sarva siddhimme prayaccha aśetamatriṣa āveśaya samyer baddha vaśīkaro me imer mudrāpaṅaiḥ jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ
By this the Blessed One always
Comes himself into the maṇḍala;
Summoned and made to enter, he is very firm;
Brought under control, he is fully won over.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the Great Pledge.

The vajra master will see
His own deity displaying light rays everywhere, and so on:
Many kinds of signs
That are wondrous.

Then the vajra guest water
Is offered with the vajra palms opened.
With vases, however many are filled,
And with flowers and the like, one also makes offering.
Banners with bells tied at their tips
Should be set at the sections of the boundary.
Over a vase filled with scented water,
Blessed with the vajra,
One should recite fully over the twig.

Here, the accomplishment of the water of the pledge of the unfailing vajra of Great Bliss is this:
hūṃ mahāsukha vajra amogha samayodaka saddha abhiṣiñca sarva sukha saumanasyānyādada kuru kuru jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ
Having recited this fully twenty-one times, one should empower oneself with the vajra. Sprinkling it for purification, and drinking it as well, will remove all suffering and increase all great bliss. Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

Then, even though he has not entered the wheel,
He himself enters first,
And the great master of all the vajras
Blesses himself through the Vajra Bearer.
Then the master, the Vajra Holder,
Bathes himself and anoints himself well with scents,
Adorns himself with all the ornaments there are,
Wears garments of deep red,
Fastens on a flower garland and scents his mouth.
With the vajra of graceful joy
And the yoga of the vajra dance,
Joining his palms with flowers at the crown,
He should pay homage to that place, the protector.
Having entered that maṇḍala,
He should circumambulate it three times.
Then, sitting in front,
He should recite the suchness once:
"Great desire, great bliss,
Great vajra, great wealth,
Great wisdom, great action:

These are declared the accomplishment of Vajrasattva."
Then, scattering loose flowers
On the protector according to the rite,
He should sing once, as a song,
The praise beginning with śara.

Then, the great suchness, the king of praises of the Blessed One, of one hundred and eight names, is this:

Śrī Paramādya, the great being,
The great joy of great joy,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
Lord of lords in the manner of vajra pride;
Mind, and the supreme meditative absorption of the being,
Vajra of vajras, great and supreme,
The supreme conduct of Samantabhadra,
Utter destroyer of Māra and the māras;
All of all, the great awakening,
Buddha of buddhas, supreme born of the born,
Vajrahūṃkāra, the syllable hūṃ,
Lokeśvara, brilliant wealth;
Great desire, great bliss itself,
Desire and liberation, the great wealth,
The three times, the three existences, the three supreme ones,
Supreme in the three worlds, belonging to the three realms;
Steadfast, self-arisen and luminous,
Very subtle, gross and well gathered,
The moving one who attains the very supreme,
Who purifies existence and saṃsāra,
Without beginning or end, yet having beginning and end,
Radiant, abiding in all from the first;
Heart mantra, mudrā, yoga and pledge,
Suchness, the supreme truth,
The great accomplishment of the tathāgatas,
Dharma and action, the great element,
The holy Dharma, lord of supreme action,
Who thoroughly purifies the awakening mind;
Vajrakrodha, the great wrathful one,

The tamer blazing like the end of time,
The great tamer, supreme over the vicious,
The fierce one who consumes the fierce;
The all-pure great lotus,
Wisdom and means, the great way,
The supreme meditative absorption of purified desire,
Manifold passion, Maheśvara;
Infinite space, the meaning of permanence,
The great abode of all beings,
All riches, the abode of riches,
Glory, chief and king,
Who fulfills every wish:
Homage, homage to you!
Homage, I bow, homage!
With faith I rely on you;
Vajrasattva, grant me accomplishment!

Whoever recites this king of praises
Every morning,
Or says it once with words of Dharma,
Will gain accomplishment very swiftly.
If one does not wish for accomplishment here,
Then, first, praising it each day at the three times,
One is surely freed from evil
And accomplishes a pure field.
It always removes all suffering.
By reciting it fully once,
One makes all accomplishments fortunate
And increases excellent glory.
Endowed with the qualities of unfailing accomplishment
Are these holy one hundred and eight names.

Then, with the secret offering,
Greatly delighted, one makes offering to the protector.
Once, with one's own mudrā,
Binding one's own mudrā, one accomplishes it.
Then, with the water of the deity,
And likewise with the supreme body, one confers empowerment.

For oneself, in the vajra mudrā,
One should take up this heart mantra.

Here the heart mantra of empowerment as Vajrasattva is this:
hūṃ mahāsukha vajrasatva abhiṣṭekena hrīḥ abhiṣiñcāmi sarva vajra adhipaji stvi dṛḍho me bhava midhanāmamaste bhagavāna mahāvajradhara surata stvaṃ mahāvajrasatva oṃ bhur bhuva sva

Then, empowered with the vajra,
Holding the eye of Vajrapāṇi,
One becomes fully accomplished, right here,
As the master, the great Vajra Holder.
Then also, as one wishes,
Having accomplished the holy rite,
And having made fine offerings
With the offering of the vajra dance, one should come out.
From then on, the lord of the vajra,
Holder of the scriptures of all the vajras,
The master who holds all the vajras,
Will accomplish all accomplishments.
Vajrasattva, the great accomplishment,
Lord of all mudrās, Maheśvara:
dhīḥ
The great vajra of omniscience:
All actions are to be examined in the center.
Unshakable and invincible,
Maker of all, he grants all accomplishments.
The great king of all beings,
He is able to subdue and to benefit.
Supreme of all, he makes all devoted,
All-knowing and the abode of all,
Fully engaged in every desire,
The great lord of every excellence.
All beings, gods and the rest,
Always carry out his every command.
He always sees all the beings,
And attains accomplishment in this very life.
Through that very thing he is endowed with desire;

Joyful, he himself becomes the lord,
The vajra master.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

This is the tantra of the extensive rite of blessing and entry for the vajra master of Great Bliss.

Then the Blessed One Vajrasattva said, "Next I shall explain the tantra of the extensive rite for the entry of the disciple."

Circling the vajra guest water at the heart,
Having bound the mudrā, as the thought stirs,
One bows down properly with the head:
This accomplishes all accomplishments.
Having entered the maṇḍala
And circumambulated it three times,
One declares, "Great desire, great bliss
Brings accomplishment to all beings as well."
Then, with the offerings of the seasons,
One makes proper offering to Great Bliss.
Likewise, for empowerment,
The disciple of the vajra secret should be brought in.
Then, having adorned him fittingly,
The vajra master leads him in.
Having brought in the hosts of disciples,
They obtain whatever accomplishment they wish.
Then, having brought the disciple in,
One should say these words of great joy:
"You who reveal great delight and great bliss, Vajrasattva, lord, grant me accomplishment today!"
Then the flower garland
Is swiftly cast down from the crown of the head.
Wherever the flower falls,
In that chosen deity one becomes fully accomplished.
Then, with the water of the deity,
One empowers the Vajra Holder and oneself.
Giving the great vajra, the five vajras,
One declares the vajra bodhi:

oṃ mahāsukha vajra vajra abhiṣekena staṃ abhiśiñcāmi mahāvajradhāra he vajranāma siddha nāmaḥ

Whatever a person's vajra name is, it should be joined with the vocative he, meaning "O." Then, having given the heart mantra and taught the binding of the mudrā, one should accomplish whatever one desires.

Whether it is the rite of Vajrasattva
Or whatever one wishes for one's own accomplishment,
For that, through that very deity, the pledge itself
And the rites of entry and the rest are explained.
The various worldly deities,
And likewise the transcendent ones,
All of them, each in its own order,
If practiced extensively, will be fully accomplished.
By merely entering into this,
One becomes a child of the Victors,
Unshakable and irreversible,
And it grants the full accomplishment of Great Bliss.
Then the master, the Vajra Holder,
Having solemnly proclaimed the oath,
Should train himself and others
In suchness, the Dharma and the pledge.

Here, having empowered the disciple with the vajra water that seals the oath, one should say this:
"This is your water of hell:
If you transgress the pledge, it burns;
If you guard the pledge, you will be accomplished:
It is the vajra nectar water of accomplishment.
As for suchness, the Dharma and the pledge,
If you speak of them to one who has not seen the maṇḍala,
Some people who stay in gatherings,
Having no faith, will laugh at them."

Here, this is the full bestowal of the secret rite of suchness and the pledge:
The being without beginning or end
Is Vajrasattva, of great joy,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,

Lord of lords in the manner of vajra pride.

One should declare the explanation of the great suchness of the five secrets of supreme suchness. The Blessed One spoke that very supreme Dharma:
Existence is pure by its essential nature;
By its essential nature it is made free of existence.
The supreme being, pure in intrinsic nature,
Is what makes existence supreme.

Here, the method of purifying existence, the supreme secret of all ritual manuals, the great pledge to be relied upon, is this:
Because the bliss of existence is very slight,
And to purify the great suffering,
The method of holy, supreme bliss,
The pledge, should always be relied upon.
While relying on all the enjoyments of desire
Just as one wishes,
Through the yoga of one's own chosen deity
One should make offering to oneself and to others.

Here one should declare this great pledge of the supreme secret of all ritual manuals:
As long as the supreme sage
Remains in the abode of saṃsāra,
So long, unequaled, he is able to work
For the benefit of beings without passing into nirvāṇa.
The method of the pledge of the supreme secret,
Which accomplishes merit and blessing,
Supreme lord of all accomplishments,
Works continually for the benefit of beings.
Thus make your mind clear and vajra itself;
Rely on your own inexhaustible pledge of bliss and joy.
That will swiftly be realized for beings as bliss,
Fully equal to all the buddhas, and as permanence itself.

Then, having duly presented offerings of elixirs, food, lodging, songs, music and the like, you should honor the great vajra master even with your very self, to whatever extent is possible.

Having duly honored the vajra master with flowers and the like, as one wishes,
And having worshipped him rightly with the offering of the vajra dance, one comes forth.

Then the Vajra Holder, the master,
Having been honored with the offering of dance,
Is fully honored by all the disciples
With the joining of the vajra palms.
With elixirs, food, lodging,
Songs and music, as much as one wishes,
Having rightly honored Vajrasattva, and likewise oneself,
One should then come forth.

This is the supremely secret maṇḍala called Śrī Paramādya.

Next the practice shall be explained,
The accomplishment that is utterly permanent,
Through which, in this very existence,
One attains permanent accomplishment.
Through this, bodhisattvas,
Abiding in existence and awakened within existence,
Accomplish lordship over all accomplishments
And always act for the benefit of all beings.
The supreme accomplishment as it is gained through this
Is not gained in that way through the conduct of awakening and the like,
Nor through other virtuous ways,
Not even by all the buddhas and the rest.
For those unfit to be trained, who lack merit,
The buddhas and vajra holders,
Through being seen and so forth, in every way,
Are unable to act for beings' benefit.
Therefore one accomplished through the great tantra,
Whether a buddha or a vajra holder,
Through being seen and so forth acts for the benefit of beings
To an extent equal to space.
Great passion, great bliss,
The stainless certainty of existence,
Acts for the benefit of beings boundless as space,
Without passing into nirvāṇa.
Even one who has not entered the maṇḍalas,

Or who lacks merit, or who is lazy,
Through the accomplishment of the All-Supreme
Will attain accomplishment in this very life.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Amoghasiddhi Vajrasattva.

Then the Blessed One Vajrasattva said, "Next I shall explain the supreme swift accomplishment of the Unfailing and Unimpeded."

Having fashioned the First Being,
Whether cast, or carved,
Or made, or painted,
One should practice in front of it.
Each day, at the first session,
Likewise endowed with the sense objects,
Summoning with the first supreme secret,
One should fully bless the great mudrā.
Gazing likewise with the vajra eye,
In the vajra manner of pride, oneself the lord,
Singing the vajra hūṃ,
One should accomplish Vajrasattva.
With the vajra attire just as prescribed,
The supreme First One is greatly delighted.
First the image and so forth,
As one wishes, should be fully accomplished.
Through this one becomes lord of all desires,
By mere wish one goes, comes and soars through the sky;
One accomplishes lordship over all accomplishments,
And is the lord of the sublime All-Supreme.
Lord of all perfections, of everything,
Great passion, great bliss,
Who causes all to enter, manifold,
Ever taming everyone.
Supreme bliss of all accomplishments,
Lord and master of all mudrās,
Great accomplishment of all vajras,
Great source of omniscience,
Unshakable and indestructible,
Doer of all and abode of all,

Victorious over the three realms, manifold,
Subduing and benefiting,
Loving toward all, supreme of all,
All-knowing, bestowing every accomplishment,
In every world-system
He displays his own magical emanations.
The All-Supreme, the great accomplishment,
The great lord of Maheśvara,
Supreme vajra of form, life and strength,
Like a second Vajrasattva,
Worshipped and praised by beings,
Relied upon by his own kin,
Like the king, the great Vajradhara,
He becomes free of aging and death.
If one wishes to become Vajrasattva,
Or a buddha, or a bodhisattva itself,
Whatever accomplishment one desires
Will be accomplished in this very life.
In later lives, or in worldly ways,
By the rites taught in all the ritual manuals,
Or by those one composes oneself, always
All accomplishments will be accomplished.
Thus spoke the Blessed One, the vajra
Lord of accomplishments, Great Bliss,
The great king Vajradhara,
The All-Supreme, lord of the earth.

How, then, is the tantra for accomplishing one's own mudrā?
Resting in equipoise in the great mudrā,
Accomplish it once with one's own heart mantra:
dṛḍha sutoṣya saṃrakta supo siddha talagu

How, then, is the tantra of singing the syllable hūṃ?
Adorned with ridhita and the like,
As far as one is able and as it pleases,
Through the syllable hūṃ, sung with gaṇḍe and the like,
Accomplishment will come.

Then the tantra for accomplishing
The supreme of all mudrās is explained.
If one wishes to accomplish the mudrā,
Likewise endowed with the sense objects,
Binding the seal oneself,
One should practice it tirelessly.

How, then, is the tantra for accomplishing all pledges?
Having bound the pledge mudrā,
Saying stvaṃ with the mind,
At one's own heart, in due order,
One should accomplish that supreme mudrā.

Then the tantra for accomplishing the supreme action mudrā:
If one practices tirelessly
With the offering of the vajra dance,
The activities, all offerings and the rest,
Will be accomplished in this very life.
The state of the great Vajradhara,
Buddhahood and bodhisattvahood,
And moreover all accomplishments,
The sublime ones, will swiftly be accomplished.

This is the extensive tantra of the rite of the great practice of all ritual procedures, unfailingly accomplished.

Then the tantra of the accomplishments of practicing all ritual procedures: "For a single day, intensely, accomplishing the mudrā once, I shall explain the unfailing and unimpeded accomplishment," said the Blessed One.

For accomplishing the delighting of all, summoning, binding, and bringing under one's control, it is by the vajra gaze of great bliss. For increasing bliss, mental happiness, prosperity and all accomplishments, it is by the vajra Dharma of great bliss. For increasing life, youth, form and great splendor, it is by the rejuvenating elixir of the first vajra. For increasing great glory, good fortune, renown and fame, it is by the accomplishment of the first vajra. For accomplishing great strength, wisdom, Dharma and action, it is by the great courage of the first vajra. For displaying magical powers, miracles, wonders and all manner of emanations, it is by the magical emanation of the first vajra.

For accomplishing everywhere the seeing, hearing, speaking and questioning of all the truths of letters and of forms, it is by the unfailing truth of the first vajra. For seeing, hearing, speaking and overpowering all truths with all the senses, it is by the unfailing truth of the first vajra. For accomplishing all illusions, supreme bliss, oracular commands, and the obtaining of answers, it is by the marvel of the first vajra. For extracting all treasures, seizing wealth, gaining a kingdom, and enjoying the earth, it is by the empowerment of the first vajra. For emanating all lands, peoples, cities, forests and rivers to be enjoyed, it is by the accomplishment of the first vajra. For emanating and enjoying divine realms surpassing all and never before seen, jewels, food, drink, servants, retinues and the like, it is by the emanation of the first vajra. For causing the whole earth in an instant to ripen grain and the like, bringing forth great masses of water, producing great light, and bringing all the winds under one's control, it is by the first vajra, the Lord of the Sphere. For eating and drinking all things moving and unmoving, making them one's playthings, and employing them in all activities, it is by the unfailing all-subjugation of the first vajra. For seeing, among all accomplishments, the tathāgatas, bodhisattvas, vajra holders, vajra beings and the rest, it is by the pride of the first vajra. For emanating and displaying oneself in every form, such as Vajrasattva, accomplishing invisibility and travel through the sky, and appearing as extremely subtle, as gross, and as manifold, it is by the manifold forms of the first vajra.

For bringing down, subjugating and binding all who are lords of the three worlds, and employing them in all activities, it is by the first Vajrahūṃkāra. For bringing down, binding and subjugating all the gods, and definitively employing them in all activities, it is by the first vajra, Lord of the Gods. For exorcising, taming and subjugating all the nāgas, and definitively employing them in all activities, it is by the first vajra, the Blazing Vajra. For summoning and subjugating all the yakṣas and the rest, definitively employing them in all activities, and terrifying them, it is by the first vajra, Tamer of Grahas. For examining, entering, worshipping and practicing all maṇḍalas, and definitively employing them in all activities, it is by the first vajra wheel. For summoning, binding, subjugating, stabilizing and accomplishing all mudrās, it is by the mudrā accomplishment of the first vajra. For summoning, causing to enter, binding and accomplishing all pledges, it is by the supreme pledge of the first vajra. For fully accomplishing all activities, for making fearless, making stable, and proclaiming great renown, it is by the action of the first vajra. For accomplishing the summoning, causing to enter, binding and subjugation of all vajras, it is by the first vajra. For accomplishing the summoning, causing to enter, binding and subjugation of all great beings, it is by the first Vajrasattva. For accomplishing the summoning, causing to enter, binding and subjugation of all the tathāgatas, it is by the first Tathāgata. And it was also said: for summoning, causing to enter, binding and subjugating the great Vajra Holder, it is by the first Vajra Holder.

Even one who has not entered the maṇḍalas,
Or who has committed every evil,
Or who has not practiced his own heart mantra,
Will accomplish all accomplishments.
Without practice, all is accomplished.

This is the supreme accomplishment of the great mudrā, unfailingly accomplished.

Then the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara, the manifold activity of all vajras, said, "Next I shall explain the instantaneous accomplishment of the cause of all activities, unfailing and unimpeded in everything, without practice of the first heart mantra."

Unfailing and unimpeded,
I, together with the sugatas,
Accomplish these vast activities
As accomplishments in a single instant.

Namely: for thoroughly protecting and guarding all, pacifying, bringing well-being, and increasing life, it is by the uṣṇīṣa mudrā in the manner of the being of the vajra dance. For binding and protecting the boundaries, directions, pledges and accomplishments of all maṇḍalas, it is by the great Pratisarā of the vajra dance. For dispelling tertian fever, quartan fever, recurrent fever, chronic fever, and all the fevers of Viṣṇu, it is by the freedom from fever of the vajra dance. For destroying all torments, harm-doers, illnesses, sorrows and sufferings, it is by the pacification of suffering of the vajra dance. For complete freedom from poison and from compounded poison, and for bringing it down, binding it, eating it, and turning it into nectar, it is by the secondary poison of the vajra dance. For bringing down all grahas, binding them, making them hold to the pledge, fully taming them, and for protection, it is by the liberation from grahas of the vajra dance. For binding, freeing, tearing apart, felling and raising up all, it is by the great vajra wrathful one of the vajra dance. For destroying the mudrās of all ḍākinīs, freeing from grahas, raising the dead, increasing life, and thorough protection, it is by the counter-mudrā of the vajra dance. For destroying all obscurations, all evils, bad dreams, bad omens and calamities, it is by the pacification of the vajra dance. For bringing down and possessing all, making them shake and dance, making all speak the truth, and accomplishing all prasen divinations, it is by the all-possessing mudrā of the vajra dance. For sealing, killing, felling, raising up and reviving all, it is by the great ḍākinī of the vajra dance of Amoghasiddhi. For paralyzing, stupefying, putting to sleep, killing and devouring all, it is by the vicious rākṣasa of the vajra dance. For terrifying, destroying, subjugating, felling and killing all enemy armies, it is by the executioner of the vajra dance.

For clearing away all wrath and making the countenance bright, for victory in disputes, liberation from fear, and victory in battle, it is by the armlet of the supreme victory banner of the vajra dance. For gathering up all clouds completely and making them unmoving, for bringing down great rain, for averting wind, rain, lightning and hail, and for dispelling heat and cold, it is by the vajra of Indra of the vajra dance. For the complete accomplishment of all forms, sounds, smells, tastes and tangibles, it is by the Lord of Desire of the vajra dance. For enamoring, summoning, subjugating and sporting with all that moves and does not move, and definitively employing them in all activities, it is by the all-accomplishment of the vajra dance. For bringing down all the gods, subjugating all the nāgas, and definitively employing all the yakṣas, bhūtas and mātṛkās in activities, it is by the supreme vajra body of the vajra dance. For suppressing Vaiśravaṇa and drawing forth his wealth, carrying off all the daughters of the gods, sporting with all the women of the gods and asuras, conquering the three worlds without exception, conquering all lords of desire, and carrying off all the Maheśvaras, it is by the great Maker of Men of the vajra dance. For accomplishing all offerings, making all into vajra, utterly destroying Māra and all the rest, binding all mudrās, and swiftly accomplishing the cause of the activities of all accomplishments, the supreme accomplishment and the rest, entirely and without remainder, it is by the sublime accomplishment of the vajra dance's manifold activities, unfailing, unimpeded and swift.

Then the extensive tantra of the rite of accomplishing all mudrās:
Each day, once at the first session,
One fully accomplishes all mudrās.
Having recited the supreme heart mantra once,
One should fully accomplish the great mudrā.

After that, through definitively applying
The secondary heart mantra to all activities,
By Amoghasiddhi the activities
Will be fully accomplished in every case.
All mudrās are fully blessed.
The mudrā of Vajrapāṇi
Will be fully accomplished even by one who has not seen the maṇḍalas,
And even by one to whom it has not been explained.
In this rite there is no fear.
For Śakra, who has no wheel,
Since he is blessed by me,
Becomes the cause of my own son.
Even to one who commits great evil,
Once his intention is known, it should be given.
Merely binding these purifies,
And all accomplishments will be accomplished.

This is the extensive ritual chapter on the pledge of the unfailing vajra of great bliss, from the great king of rites, Śrī Paramādya.

Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
The producer, Great Bliss,
In order to establish beings firmly in great bliss
And to purify all sentient beings,
Equal to all realms and inexhaustible,
Entered into the nature of all,
And emanating the supreme accomplishment of equality,
Brought forth the family of the tathāgatas.
All the infinite fields,
Together with all the world-systems,
Were then swiftly filled by all the buddhas,
Like a pod full of sesame seeds.
In all the world-systems
They abided fully before all beings.
Since all beings were impure,
They did not become pure through their own awareness and actions.
Then, because the realms of beings
Are by their nature hard to heal,

In order that they purify their own karma,
The buddhas assumed great equanimity.
Then the Blessed One, the Vajra Bearer,
The great being, Great Bliss,
His mind steadfast in great awakening,
In an instant exhorted them:
"You who benefit beings, possessed of merit,
Steadfast in the mind of awakening,
Since the realm of beings is falling into ruin,
Do not remain in such utter equanimity!"
Then the buddhas said,
"Vajra Bearer of body, speech and mind,
Supreme mind of awakening, you must speak
The method of the one whose nature is compassion!"
Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
At that time blessed everything:
Great bliss, the great vajra,
Is the great and sublime maṇḍala.
Through the whole expanse of the three realms of saṃsāra
The great wheel arose from the very beginning.
Through its abiding in the three realms,
All beings were fully accomplished;
In the accomplishment of all the buddhas and the rest,
Purity will then be accomplished.
Then all the buddhas
Assembled and made supplication:
"Great family of the tathāgatas,
Supreme of all buddhas, please explain!"
He, abiding fully in the body,
Speech and mind of all the buddhas,
Emanating fully into the vajra of body, speech and mind,
Uttered this: oṃ bhū khaṃ
Then by the mere utterance of this,
All the buddhas assembled,
Accomplished the conquest of Māra and the rest,
And blessed the seat of awakening.
Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,

Spoke the supreme of maṇḍalas,
For the sake of bliss for all beings,
The great bliss of all rites.
Next shall be fully explained
The great and sublime maṇḍala.
Outside the great maṇḍala, the supreme,
Draw a vajra wheel correctly.
At the hub of the wheel, the Buddha himself,
Smiling, his teeth not showing.
Uttering suratesamayastvaṃ
oṃ siddhamāṃ, set it in place.
In front, draw correctly the Buddha
Who brings about complete victory over Māra.
On the right, the one who confers empowerment
With the great jewel of the bodhisattvas.
Behind, the one who, together with the bodhisattvas,
Turns the wheel of Dharma.
On the left, the one who draws out all the accumulated evils
Of those who are wrongly arrogant.
Then their heart mantras are:
vajrasatva vajraratna vajradharma vajrakarma
Then the mudrās:
satvavajrī ratnavajrī padmavajrī biśvavajrī
In the corner sections draw a vajra,
A jewel tree, and a gem.
In the corners also the goddesses,
And Aṅkuśī and the others at the gates.

Likewise, just as before,
That wheel should be laid out.
Bind the palms of offering at the heart,
And likewise circle to the left.
This mudrā, together with flowers,
Is the sequence of the pledge of all the buddhas.
Together with flowers, bind it at the heart,
And, the mind stirred, one should feel longing.
Having bowed one's head to the Protector

And circumambulated three times,
Having entered, one should cast the flower,
And fully summon the utterly secret one.

Here the heart mantra for pleasing, subjugating, summoning and accomplishing all the tathāgatas is this:
oṃ akāro mukhaṃ sarvadharmāṇāṃ ādyānutbannatvāda

Then, according to the rite,
Scatter loose flowers upon the Teacher,
And in order fully to accomplish the awakening of a buddha,
Utter that very mantra to the Protector of beings.
Through that, the buddhas from every side
Will all assemble together,
And through the practice of not apprehending anything
They will bestow all accomplishments.
For one who has entered that maṇḍala
All accomplishments will be accomplished.
Supreme signs, such as joy,
Will arise in manifold ways.
Then likewise, through the extensive rite,
Lead the disciple in, in the supreme way.
Having made offering to the great wheel
With the palms of offering, lead him out again.
Having done the practice, the accomplishments too
Should be fully explained according to the rite.
On cloth draw the Blessed One
Who gained victory over Māra and the rest.
By doing this practice even once,
One will attain accomplishment through such a practice.
Before an image or the like, correctly,
Holding firmly the fist of wisdom,
With the vajra words, according to the rite,
One should perform a hundred thousand recitations.
In short, when a hundred thousand are complete,
All accomplishments one wishes,
And buddhahood itself in this supreme life,
Will be attained; of this there is no doubt.

Then the great tantra of the great practice of the great mudrā of the tathāgatas:
Having bound any one of the mudrās,
If one meditates, "I am the Buddha,"
The great accomplishment of the great mudrā,
Stable, will swiftly be attained.

Then the tantra of accomplishing the pledge:
Placing a vajra form at the heart
And saying samayastvaṃ,
Having practiced with a hundred thousand recitations,
One will attain all accomplishments.

Then the tantra of accomplishing all action mudrās:
Binding the supreme mudrā of victory over Māra,
Fully turning the wheel of Dharma,
And accomplishing the incomparable benefit of beings,
One always accomplishes the action mudrā.

Thus spoke the Blessed One. This is the extensive tantra of the rite of accomplishing the supreme accomplishment of all the tathāgatas.

Next, the supreme accomplishment without practice,
The vast and sublime activities,
Manifold, dispelling all evil,
Shall be fully explained in due order.

Namely: for completely destroying all illnesses, sorrows, harms, harm-doers, all poisons, compounded poisons, executioners, distracters, vetālas, mantras, potions, obstructors, vināyakas, evil, bad dreams, untimely death, fevers, grahas, ḍākinīs, calamities, contagious diseases, faults, afflictions, and all sufferings of body, speech and mind, it is by the remover of suffering of all the tathāgatas.

For increasing life, youth, form, complexion, great splendor, radiance, strength, vigor, diligence, glory, good fortune, merit, name, renown, fame, mindfulness, intelligence, steadfastness, realization, power, samādhi, the aggregates, the formations, and body, speech and mind, it is by the great bliss of all the tathāgatas.

For accomplishing the generosity, moral discipline, patience, diligence, meditative concentration, wisdom, primordial wisdom, powers, skillful means, vajra, practice, dhāraṇīs, grounds, conduct, the discriminating knowledges, the unshared qualities of a buddha, Dharma, action, manifold deeds, the benefit of beings, the aim of the buddhas' deeds, and the body, speech, mind and great vajra of all the tathāgatas, it is by all the accomplishments of all the tathāgatas.

For accomplishing the generation of the mind set on awakening by all the tathāgatas, the perfecting of the conduct of the rite of Samantabhadra, the benefit of all beings, the demonstration of the descent, of the place of birth, and of youthful play, the renunciation, the demonstration of austerities, the going to the seat of awakening, the taming of all māras, the full awakening into great awakening, the turning of the wheel of Dharma, the crushing of all non-Buddhists (tīrthikas), the Victory over the Three Worlds, the descent from the gods, the blessing of the great assembly, the taming of all the vicious and establishing them in discipline, the rescue from all the lower realms, the teaching of all the sūtras, the blessing of all rites, the bestowal of all accomplishments, and the magical powers and miracles focused on the body, speech and mind of all the tathāgatas, it is by the manifold vajra of all the tathāgatas.

Sublime awakening, as it is relied upon
Through these mudrās in the mind of awakening,
Is not attained in that way
Through the conduct of awakening and the like.
Accomplishing the vast activities
Of unfailing and sublime merit,
It accomplishes the rites not yet accomplished,
And fully bestows the qualities of a buddha.
It should be given to all beings
Endowed with every aspect.
Even those who have not entered the maṇḍalas
It joins to it in a single instant.

This is the extensive vajra chapter on the blessing of the vajra of awakening of all the tathāgatas, from the great king of rites, Śrī Paramādya.

Then the one of great and manifold activity,
The all-pervading lord, the great Vajra Holder,
Supreme tamer of all the vicious,
Gave teaching suited to all beings.

Though he had brought forth the family of the tathāgatas,
Because the vicious, through their misdeeds,
Act according to their own minds,
The aim of all beings, their taming,
Cannot be fully accomplished by peaceful means.
All these beings
Are those whom all the buddhas must accomplish.
When the sugatas do not engage
In working the sublime benefit of beings,
Then the Lord, the very substance of all,
Made supplication to the Vajra;
He made supplication to the Blessed One,
Who tames all beings:
uttiṣṭha samaya krodhani sumbha jvāla vajra hūṃ
Then, by the mere utterance of this mantra,
Vajrapāṇi himself, the chief,
Came forth again from the vajra
Of body, speech and mind, and stood in front.
In the form of the great king of wrath
He sat well in the posture of the hero,
Bright with a garland of blazing light,
Like a second eon of burning.
With his left hand in the gesture of great vajra pride,
Brandishing fiercely, he set all in motion;
The blazing vajra blazed mightily,
As if burning all with its radiance.
The great blaze that slays
Was like a mass of the fire at the end of the eon.
Frowning with the first vajra,
The holder of the supreme vajra spoke.

Here this is the heart mantra called "the great vajra blazing like fire and the sun": hūṃ

Then, by the mere utterance of this,
The firewood of all evils was consumed.
The three worlds of the world-systems
All quaked and trembled.

The gods, the Great God (Śiva) and the rest,
Became motionless and stupefied.
All the turbulence of the blazing vajra
Likewise became like destruction itself.
The śrāvakas and the pratyekabuddhas
Drew near to nirvāṇa.
All the three existences, of gods and the rest,
Were at that time utterly stupefied.
The assembly of all the buddhas
Taught once more the awakening of the buddhas,
And the great and sublime method
Of all the beings was comprehended.
Then the supreme blazing vajra,
With turbulent light in garlands of flame,
His face with bared vajra fangs,
His countenance wrathful,
Sat well with the left leg extended,
His eyes blazing and terrifying,
His hair streaming upward and waving,
Coiling all around and blazing greatly.
The great yogin of the vajra secret
Sent forth those with bodies of the hosts of ḍākinīs,
Those who go everywhere,
And everywhere blazing turmoil arose.
Like the fire of the eon stirred by the wind,
The garlands of flame churned everywhere.
In all the world-systems without exception,
He duly exhorted all the buddhas
With their heirs, abiding there,
And encircled all the worlds.
Having summoned them, for the benefit of all beings
And to accomplish all the teachings,
He rendered those lords of the three worlds,
And all that moves and does not move, lifeless.
Then the king, the Vajra Holder,
The All-Supreme, lord of the earth,
Out of compassion for them,

Firmly spoke the revival of the dead:
oṃ uttiṣṭha mahā adhipati vajriṇi śīghraṃ utathāpaya hūṃ
This is the raising of all that moves and does not move.
Then, in the raising of the three worlds,
The dead were revived everywhere.
They were tamed by the hero Buddha,
And then tamed further by the Vajra Bearer.
Then the wrathful Vajra Holder,
Brandishing the blazing vajra,
Saying, "Abide in my pledge!"
Gave his command to the manifold beings.
They asked, "Who is this?
The Blessed One is peaceful;
Please tell us who this one in the form of a yakṣa is.
What kind of pledge do you require?
We ask you; speak in words of truth."
The Blessed One said,
"This is the Buddha, fully liberated,
The primordially born great vajra yakṣa.
To the Three Jewels, and likewise
To me, go for refuge!"
Having heard this, the three worlds,
With Gaṇapati and the lords of the hosts,
With blazing weapons like the fire-mass of the eon,
Set out to fight.
They said,
"We do not know
A buddha family or a vajra yakṣa.
We are the sole lords of the three worlds;
Why should we do what a yakṣa commands?"
Then the Vajra Holder, enraged,
Remained with a frown gathered on his brow.
Then all the frowning wrathful ones
Followed after the Vajra Holder.
With his left hand in the gesture of pride, forming the seal,
His brows and eyes drawn together, laughing,
With a voice pervading space,

Fiercely wrathful, he spoke:

Then the near-heart mantra of Trailokyavijaya, victorious over all beings without exception, is this: hi.

Then, when this heart mantra had been brought forth,
The eleven were bound, surely conquered,
And made to hold firmly to the commitment.
Empowering them with vajra names,
Vajrapāṇi made them supreme holders.
Having given them vajra names,
He set them in the samādhi of the three worlds.
Then the supreme Great Vajra,
The Protector, made this request:
"As guidance for all beings,
Please explain this ritual."
The Vajra Holder spoke:
"Outside the great maṇḍala
Properly draw a blazing wheel.
In its center should be placed
A beautiful, blue, blazing form,
His fangs slightly bared,
His face laughing with wrath,
Seated well in the posture of a sattva,
Proud and fiercely blazing,
Amid a turbulent light of blazing rays,
Intent on brandishing the vajra.
All around his figure
Are the forms of Vajrayoginīs,
Holding the weapons: vajra weapons, great spears,
Swords and nooses;
In the intermediate directions, holding arrows and khaṭvāṅgas,
Wheels and various banners.
The manifold ones of the vajra family
Are encircled by a blazing wheel.
The maṇḍala is to be laid out
Properly with seven lines:
First, the lord of the vajra mudrā;

Second, the mantra goddesses;
In the third, the vajra king,
Properly surrounded by vajra goddesses,
The great vajra lady and the great Graceful One;
In the fourth, the female singers and the rest;
The wrathful ones of the kṣatriyas, attendants and servants
Are in the fifth;
In the sixth, the supreme vajra messengers,
Yakṣas, rākṣasas and kiṃkaras,
The excellent Īśvara, Rudra and the rest,
Who tame the great fierce ones.
In the shapes of the outer maṇḍala,
In brief, the three brothers and the rest,
All the hosts of gods and others,
Should be well drawn or placed.
In the intermediate directions, those taught as goddesses;
At the center of their gates,
The wrathful ones, Vajra Aṅkuśī and the rest.
In the manner of the great maṇḍala,
With the sequence just as it should be,
Perform the extensive rite just as it is prescribed.
Wrathfully brandishing the vajra,
Bow with a wrathful frown and a smile.
Then the great master, wrathful,
Should clearly entreat the supreme Vajra Bearer.
With the threatening finger of Vajrahūṃkāra
One should fully apply the Hūṃkāra gesture,
And, with pride, seal it.
Likewise, in taming through wrath,
The great Vajradhara, delighted,
Rejoices greatly in the very wicked.
Then, taking up a flower,
Wrathfully scatter it on the great lord.
With the blazing vajra hook
One should properly summon.

oṃ mahāvajrajvālayānalārkaya hi jaḥ sarvavajrakula praveśaya hūṃ sarvamudrāṃ ganā bandhana trāṭa sarva samayaṃ sādhaya phaṭ sarva duṣṭana daha paca bhasmviṃ kuru mahākrodha akani vajreṇa hūṃ phaṭ a a a a

Then the Blessed One, the king of the wrathful ones,
The great steadfast one, will come.
All of them, the vajra family and the rest,
Will bestow all accomplishments.
Then the signs of sounds
Such as hūṃ will also arise.
If in the disciple and the others
A subtle descent arises at the heart,
Then with the mudrā of Vajrahūṃkāra
The disciple should be brought in.
Having brought him in, one should recite
The First Being's own heart mantra.

hūṃ hūṃ vajra praharaṇi phaṭ hūṃ vajra śūlayāgriṇi triti mata sa hūṃ vajrakoṣe cchindda haṃ oṃ vajra amala pāśe maṭa

The vajra summoner, the vajra spear, the vajra sword and the vajra noose: these are the protection of Vajrakrodha.

Then one should rouse the mudrās of these, of unfailing vajra and unobstructed, thoroughly accomplished, powerful and overpowering adversaries, able to seal beings completely.

oṃ vajra guhya siddha parama yogīśvari hi hūṃ vajra caṇḍa ho khaṭvāṃga mahāvajra kapāla yam kute rulu rulu ṇṭi hūṃ vajra nārāyaṇi ji hūṃ vajra vaṭake ji

These are the ḍākinīs of Vajrakrodha. Having recited them once, one should set them out or draw them. If one invites the Blessed One to be seated with the heart mantra of suchness, the accomplishment that is unfailing in all accomplishments will be attained.

Then one should pronounce the commitment:

"For the happiness of many beings
And for the accomplishment of the whole teaching,
From taming the wicked, merit
Arises." So the Vajra Holder declared.

Then one should join the finger together with the mudrā of the Blessed One Vajrahūṃkāra. Then the Blessed One blessed it to be the thorough taming of all the wicked, all the māras, and all the three worlds.

Then, having performed the extensive empowerment and the rest in the same way, one should train in the four activities of Vajrakrodha: sealing beings with the mudrās, undoing the mudrā, killing, and restoring to life. If the one to whom the mudrā is applied dies, it should be understood that he is wicked. Then one should revive him with the reviving mudrā; and if one applies thorough protection, because he is then thoroughly protected, the wicked will not harm him again.

From then on, the good disciple
Cannot be overcome or slain
By any of the vajra hosts,
And will attain accomplishment in this very life.
Then I shall explain the practice here:
With the body as is fitting, amid the Saṅgha,
Brandishing the vajra, one should first
Perform a hundred thousand recitations.
When the hundred thousand is complete, the great being,
Supreme, equal to Vajrasattva,
The supreme king Vajrakrodha,
Will be free of aging and death.
He tames the wicked,
Makes abundant offerings to all the buddhas,
Shines splendidly in the three worlds,
And becomes fearless of anything at all.

Then the practice of the heart mantra of suchness:

Whether standing or else sitting,
Walking or lying down,
If, however one is, one recites it a hundred thousand times,
One will attain accomplishment in this very life.
Through this, as lord of all desires,
By mere wish one goes, comes and soars;
One attains lordship over all accomplishments
And becomes free of aging and death.
Worshiped by beings

And attended by one's own kin,
One tames all the wicked
And moves about fearless of anything.

So spoke the Blessed One, the great king of the wrathful ones.

Then the practice of the supreme mudrā:

At the proper time, bind the mudrā.
Having surely burned oneself,
For as long as one does so, all the accomplishments
Of the Great Wrathful One will be attained.
Then the practice of the commitment:
Saying, "I shall slay them all,"
And binding the commitment mudrā
Of Vajrapāṇi,
If one recites, one will attain the Vajra Holder.
Then the practice of the activities:
The practice of the supreme activities
Is performed in four ways;
If one eats for the happiness of all,
One will attain Vajrakarma itself.

This is the tantra of the extensive rite of the great practice.

Then the practice of accomplishments:

The supreme tantras of the activities
Of the king, the supreme Vajra Wrathful One,
I shall explain in their proper sequence.

Namely: for burning all, expelling, destroying, paralyzing, putting to sleep, sealing, stupefying, destroying, binding, tormenting, tearing apart, beating, setting ablaze, felling, cooking, cutting, piercing, pulverizing, scattering, utterly crushing, causing one to be seized by fever, poison and grahas, maddening, and killing, it is done by Vajrahūṃkāra.

For summoning all, setting them firmly in place, moving them, making them dance, making them sing, making them faint, making them play, making them laugh "ha ha," whirling, drawing in, making them shine, meditating, making them sink, expelling, hurling, lifting up, sending, making them roar, making them weep, making them beat themselves, binding, making them tear out their hair, making them hostile, stripping off their clothes, and making wrath blaze up, it is done by the mudrā of the seat of the wrathful one.

For summoning all, causing entry, causing descent, accomplishing a prasena divination, making one speak the truth, displaying illusions, giving answers, reversing the wheel of the seasons, displaying trees ripening flowers and fruit out of season, properly displaying all grains, freeing from fever, compounded poison, grahas, poison and ḍākinīs, freeing from all battles, crushing the armies of others, binding the directions, the boundaries and the maṇḍala, thorough protection, complete safeguarding, liberating, raising up, and bringing under control, it is done by the Great Wrathful One of Manifold Accomplishment.

For making all the gods and others fall, exorcising nāgas, making yakṣas follow, terrifying rākṣasas, subduing all grahas such as ḍākinīs, crushing all the armies of Māra, taming the mātṛkās, scattering the hosts of the wicked, annihilating the wicked, reconciling, properly generating fearlessness, bringing Maṇibhadra under control, seizing all wealth from the Giver of Wealth (Kubera), pressing down Vaiśravaṇa and drawing away his fortune, sporting with all the young daughters of the gods, pressing down Śakra and seizing Śacī, annihilating Skanda, making Brahmā fall, taming Viṣṇu, conquering Maheśvara, pressing down the Lord of Desire and seizing Rati, accomplishing the vajra, accomplishing great awakening, pleasing all the tathāgatas, summoning, causing entry, binding by the commitment, and accomplishing control, it is done by the accomplishment of the great Vajrakrodha, the supreme king. This too he declared.

By reciting once, the supreme is accomplished:
First, the excellent root heart mantra once;
After that, with a wrathful frown,
All that is to be accomplished is summoned.

From the great king of rituals, Śrī Paramādya, this is the extensive rite of the ritual blazing intensely like vajra, fire and sun.

Then, of all the samādhis,
From the nature of reality, supremely pure,
The great Avalokiteśvara
Is the great chief of Vajrasattva.
In order to tame all the wicked,
When precious self-awareness is generated,

The great wrathful one of all the buddhas,
Through no means at all, is itself the means.
The realms of impure beings,
Amassed through desire and the rest:
How to act fully among them
The supreme person knows.
Because they are supremely untamable,
Even the buddhas hold no sway over them.
The supreme of the world in all worlds
Himself enters equipoise in the excellent.

Here, this is the king of samādhis of all the tathāgatas, the samādhi called the Vajra Blessing of the Wisdom of the Nature of Reality in Which All Phenomena Are Pure by Nature. By beholding it, all the tathāgatas came to realize the very lordship over all things in all the three realms.

Proudly holding a lotus in his left hand
And opening its petals,
Through the samādhi of all that he is able,
He looked upon it by its very nature:
"Just as this red lotus
Is unstained by the faults of its dye,
So the three realms, with the manifold
Faults of their abodes, are likewise pure."
Through looking upon this and the rest,
The victors became lords.
Through it Vajrasattva
Became Avalokiteśvara.
Then, when one meditates on this heart of meditation,
Meditating on it purely,
The great Vajradhara
Becomes the holder of the great lotus.
Equal in luster to the great king,
The lord of mountains, of refined gold,
Proudly holding the supreme lotus in the left,
He gazes upon it with the supreme right.
Then on the petals of the lotus,
Holding the supreme great lotus,

The wheels from which buddhas and the rest arise,
The supreme among tamers,
Who tame the manifold beings,
Should be well drawn, seated there,
In the manner of the great maṇḍala.
When, there upon that virtuous lotus,
He was taming them by the method
Of thoroughly purifying all beings,
So that he would teach the supreme lotus family,
The victors made their request.
Then the one who tames all,
The holder of the utterly white Dharma,
Vajradharma, himself the king,
Lokeśvara, declared:
"Outside, in the great maṇḍala,
Draw a lotus of eight petals.
In its center, with smiling eyes,
Lokeśvara should be placed,
Gazing at a lotus like refined gold,
Held proudly in the left hand,
Adorned with every victory banner,
With a supreme buddha form seated on his crown.
On all of its sides
Draw the eight buddha forms,
Gazing upon the samādhi of the great lotus,
Their own samādhi.
Beside the form of Lokeśvara
Are the deities of the family, the buddha and the rest:
Śiva, Nārāyaṇa, Brahmā,
The lotus-bearing form of Desire,
And Hayagrīva, shining at the crown, his neck raised.
Having bound the hook,
Invite them with the words of the Dharma."
Then the heart mantra of the lotus:

sarvatathāgata padma jaḥ hūṃ vajrapadma he padma padma vaṃ ho padmani rāja

Then, in the intermediate directions:

hūṃ padme caṇḍeśvara hūṃ he mahāviśā padma cūrṇe siddha hūṃ maṭa hrīḥ padma padmo hūṃ aho padma aśva krama krama hūṃ jaḥ

In the manner of the great maṇḍala,
Having performed the extensive rite,
With a great lotus flower
One should pay homage with undistracted mind.
Having entered the maṇḍala, one should recite
This dhāraṇī arisen from samādhi:

oṃ viśodhaya manusani śuddha mahāsatva dhātu samaya satva dāgadī pañcayi citta me sarva dha me ṣṭye vajriṇi citta me sarva dha me śya jini

When he has heard the seal of the dhāraṇī,
Delighted, the Lotus Holder is accomplished.
Then bind the fingers into a hook,
And invite him well with the words of the Dharma:

oṃ sarvatathāgata avalokiśvara padmahasta yahi śīghraṃ mame vajramudrā agriśya save samayer vadha viśi komi jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ śodhaya sarva sādhaya va mame mahāvajra dtar stāṃ

Then the supreme Protector of the World,
The Upholder of the World, comes in person,
And surely performs the rite of samādhi
Through which the All-Supreme of all worlds will be accomplished.
Then, likewise, in the extensive rite
Of bringing in the disciples,
They should be trained in the wisdoms
That grant all accomplishments.
The great practice of this heart of samādhi,
Which arose from the very beginning,
The lordship over all worlds,
I shall explain in its proper sequence.
Whether one has entered among women,
Or gone among the wicked,
Or stays wherever one may,
Take up the great lotus.
In keeping with time and strength,
One should practice each day as much as one can.

Through this rite, in this very life,
The supreme will swiftly be accomplished.
Swift in the bliss of every desire,
By mere wish one goes, comes and soars;
A victorious lord of all worlds,
One becomes free of aging and death.
Buddhahood, bodhisattvahood
And the state of Vajrapāṇi,
The supreme, infinite in all accomplishments,
Will be attained in this very life.
Then the practice of the mudrā:
Binding the mudrā and abiding in samādhi,
One attains the great accomplishment itself.
The commitment is through the supreme commitment mudrā;
The activity, through the supreme activity mudrā.

This is the tantra of the rite of the great practice.

Then the activities of samādhi
That draw forth accomplishments not yet attained:
First, the accomplishment of samādhi
I shall explain in its proper sequence.

Namely: for all obscurations, misdeeds, bad dreams, ill omens, epidemics, harm, contagious disease, afflictions, untimely death, fear, terror, disputes, fights, child-seizing grahas, brigands, afflictions, weariness, suffering, unhappiness, poverty, arrogance, pain at a touch, ill fortune, sickness and loss of wealth, it is done by the Peaceful Great Lotus.

For curing wind, bile, blood, phlegm, their combination, indigestion, fever, compounded poison, poison, leprosy, small pustules, itch, sores of the feet, tumors, dropsy, fistula, leukoderma, wasting disease, depletion of blood, depletion of semen, all diseases, harms, harmful spirits, grahas and witches, it is done by the Great Lotus who holds the mudrā of medicine.

For making all into vajra, and for Dharma, armor, the uṣṇīṣa, the crest, the boundaries, the directions, the maṇḍala, the ground, the sky, the vajra seat, the great house, the vajra fence, blazing fire, the enclosure of ash, the vajra, the Unfailing Mountain and the rest, encircling with thread, staking with the kīla, food, drink, clothing, ornaments, mudrā and protection, it is done by the

All-Protecting Great Lotus.

For accomplishing all life, strength, complexion, splendor, radiance, youth, diligence, enthusiasm, health, glory, good fortune, wealth, grain, lordship, prosperity, accomplishment, intelligence, gain, auspiciousness, name, renown, fame, samādhi and supreme wisdom, it is done by the Supremely Accomplished Great Lotus.

From the great king of rituals, Śrī Paramādya, this is the extensive rite of the vajra of the wisdom in which all phenomena are unobscured.

Then the king, the Vajra Holder,
Great space, wholly unchanging,
Who empowers all, the aim of all,
Lord of all, holder of every jewel,
Blessed through samādhi,
Fully awakened the great Rudra.
Through his gazing upon phenomena,
The lord of the aims of all arose from the very beginning,
And, with sun and moon, planets and stars,
Became space itself.
Then the samādhi of the jewel
Is surely declared to be the Vajra Bearer.
Then space-vajra itself,
Equal in luster to blue-green beryl,
The virtuous one holding the vajra jewel,
Truly became Ākāśagarbha.
Then this Blessed One, the first,
Is seated at the place of the ūrṇā of all.
Through his gazing upon samādhi,
Lokeśvara, the lord himself,
All the buddhas together with their heirs,
And likewise the supreme Vajra Holder,
Through that Vajraratna,
Were empowered by all the all-knowing ones;
And so that every intention might be fulfilled,
The All-Supreme, having empowered all,
Spoke this utterance of auspiciousness:

oṃ sarvavajrasatva atipati stvaṃ abhiṣiñcāmi bhur bhuva svaḥ

Then, when the Excellent One had spoken this
And empowered with well-spoken words of auspiciousness,
From that great Vajraratna
He arose as the lord of the Dharma.
Having arisen, he empowered
All beings, each as was fitting.
Having been empowered by all the vajras,
He again sat in the manner of the maṇḍala.
Blessed by all the sugatas,
The unsurpassed Vajraratna,
Supreme among the very great lords,
Spoke the ritual for bestowing accomplishments:
"Outside the great maṇḍala,
Draw a wheel of space, the color of space,
Adorned with the sun and moon, the stars
And the planets.
In its center, Ākāśagarbha,
The self in which all delight, should be placed,
Colored like pure beryl,
Swirling with manifold blazing rays,
His left hand raising a jewel at his heart,
His right bestowing great wealth.
On its sides are the supreme beings,
The four, excellent, with their dhāraṇī goddesses:
Empowerment, Treasure,
The Great Unsurpassed Jewel,
And Perfect Glory of Prosperity,
Worshiped with their own emblems."

Here, these are their heart mantras: vajrasatva jaḥ vajraratna hūṃ vajradharma vaṃ vajrakarma hoḥ.

Then the heart mantras of the dhāraṇī goddesses are taught: oṃ prativajriṇi phaṭ oṃ vajrabrīti hi hi oṃ cintāmaṇi hoḥ oṃ vajra mahāmahe haṃ.

In the manner of the great maṇḍala,
Perform the extensive rite as prescribed.
With the jewel fist make a clear request,
And bow your head to the Sky-Born.
Then, seated, one should utter

The excellent commitment of the one skilled in space:
"You, who arose from space,
Are the fifth of all."

oṃ i siddha bhur bhuga siddha siddha svaḥ siddha mahāvajraratna va va tra ṭvā trāṃ

By merely reciting this,
All the accomplishments of Ākāśagarbha
And every perfection
Will surely be attained; of this there is no doubt.

So spoke the Blessed One, the unsurpassed Vajraratna.

Then one should summon with the hook of the one with the jewel fist:

oṃ bhūrāyahījā bhuva vra viśa hūṃ sva gṛhṇa vaṃ va pa ṭa ṭa siddha ho trāṃ

Then the Blessed One, coming swiftly,
Will cause all accomplishments
And prosperity to stir abundantly,
And one's aims will be fully accomplished.
Then the disciple, by the supreme mudrā
Together with a flower, is brought in.
Having brought him in, have him recite once
The supreme heart of suchness itself, the truth.
Then, examining the supreme of prosperity,
With great offerings of perfect glory,
He attains, like a sugata,
The accomplishments of the supreme of the world.
Then, for this, the practice is explained:
Through the supreme king Vajraratna,
One should practice by countless repetitions.
Through this, in this very supreme birth,
One will come and go as one desires;
A victorious lord of all jewels,
One becomes free of aging and death.

So it is, likewise, with all the excellent accomplishments. The practice of the mudrā is through joy itself. The practice of the commitment mudrā is through the commitment fist. Likewise, the practice of the activity is the unsurpassed accomplishment. This is the tantra of the very practice of the great mudrā.

Then, for this, the vast and excellent cause
Of the activities,
And the great accomplishments in which all is accomplished,
I shall explain in their proper sequence.

Namely: for summoning all prosperity, causing it to enter, binding it, bringing it under control, seizing it, amassing it, taking it, leading it, drawing it in, bestowing it, destroying, hurling, lifting up, bringing down, striking, purifying, finding, buying, selling, distributing everywhere, setting in place, making firm, making it vajra, accomplishing all prosperity, and accomplishing the supreme of all prosperity, it is done by the empowerment of Vajraratna.

For summoning all glory, causing it to enter, binding it, bringing it under control, seizing it, amassing it, taking it, leading it, drawing it in, bestowing it, destroying, hurling, lifting up, bringing down, striking, purifying, finding, buying, selling, distributing everywhere, setting in place, making firm, making it vajra, accomplishing all prosperity, and accomplishing the supreme of all prosperity, it is done by the Glory of Vajraratna.

For summoning all perfections, causing them to enter, binding them, bringing them under control, seizing them, amassing them, taking them, leading them, drawing them in, bestowing them, destroying, hurling, lifting up, bringing down, striking, purifying, finding, buying, selling, distributing everywhere, setting in place, making firm, making them vajra, accomplishing all prosperity, and accomplishing the supreme of all prosperity, it is done by the Perfection of Vajraratna.

For summoning all offerings, causing them to enter, binding them, bringing them under control, seizing them, amassing them, taking them, leading them, drawing them in, bestowing them, destroying, hurling, lifting up, bringing down, striking, purifying, finding, buying, selling, distributing everywhere, setting in place, making firm, making them vajra, accomplishing all prosperity, and accomplishing the supreme of all prosperity, it is done by accomplishing the offerings of Vajraratna. This too he declared.

For the happiness of all beings,
Vajrasattva, rich in great wealth,
Should accomplish his own supreme victor once,
And apply the syllable traṃ.

From the great king of rituals, Śrī Paramādya, this is the extensive rite of the ritual of Vajraratna, which completely fulfills every intention.

Then the Victor, the Vajra Holder,
The three worlds, the three realms,
Who among all the lords of the three worlds
Tames the supreme ones of the three worlds,
Meditated according to the rite,
And for the benefit of beings abides by the rite.
Desire, aversion and delusion
Always remain.
If they are relied upon improperly,
They become poison itself;
If they are relied upon as nectar,
They become nectar itself.
Desire brings forth the supreme Brahmā;
Aversion, through the samādhi of Rudra;
And delusion, having made Viṣṇu firm,
Blessed the three worlds.
Because desire, aversion and delusion
Always remain, the three existences remain.
Relied on with the Dharma, they are the three supreme;
Relied on without the Dharma, the three lower realms.
Desire is called the Honey Maker;
Aversion is called the Victory Maker;
Delusion is called the Accomplisher of Aims:
These are their wholly secret names.
"I alone am the world,
Proclaimed as the three worlds.
I alone am desire:
Brahmā, Rudra and the Eternal One."
Then the supreme of these three,
In order to purify them, the Holder of the purifying vajra:
These three forms themselves
Arose from the self alone.
For these worlds
Always say this:
"Those tamed by Brahmā and the others

Are not vessels for the true awakening of a buddha."
To purify them, the Blessed One,
The great Vajradhara himself,
Took on these three forms,
And afterward his buddhahood does not change.
Then Brahmā, the gods and the other gods,
And Maheśvara, supreme in the three worlds,
Offered that maṇḍala, the secret heart,
For their own accomplishment.

oṃ bhūr bhuva svaḥ

Four-cornered, with four gates,
Well guarded by four gatekeepers,
Well encircled by a rim,
The outer maṇḍala should be drawn.
Within it,
In the bow-shaped maṇḍala,
The Honey Maker and the Victory Maker,
And the Accomplisher of all that is to be accomplished,
In their proper sequence,
Should be well drawn or placed.
Kneeling on both knees, make a clear request there;
Marked with the trident of the commitment,
Having entered and bound the commitment,
One should properly summon.

oṃ bhūr bhuva svaḥ svasti nāma svāhā

By reciting it twenty-one times,
All, surrounded by all,
Come for the accomplishment of all;
Give tormas to them, as many as they are.
The master, having fully entered,
Should bring in all the disciples.
Having told them the secret of suchness,
He should give the supreme commitment:
"If you break the trident,
If you speak the heart mantra to those who are not vessels,

Or if you do not practice here
The teachings just as they were spoken!
Sattva, rajas and tamas,
Brahmā, Rudra and the Eternal One:
These three brothers
Must never be despised."
Whoever trains in meditating on these,
Entering again and again
And worshiping the maṇḍala,
Will attain all accomplishments.
Having trained in one's own mudrā,
With offerings of dance to it
And with the five excellent sense pleasures,
One should always worship the maṇḍala.

This is the tantra of bringing forth the three worlds.

Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
Who guides all beings,
Having brought forth the three worlds to accomplish their aims,
Then brought forth the sisters.
Utter desire, aversion and delusion
Are the cause that makes them firm.
The women, joy and jealousy,
Grant renowned accomplishments.
Those who are proclaimed throughout the world,
The goddesses worshiped by all the hosts,
Are called the Peaceful, the Terrifying, likewise Gold,
The Accomplished and the Peaceful.
For the benefit of beings outside,
And so that the meaning to be realized may be understood,
Their heart mantras,
Their maṇḍala and likewise their commitment are explained.

hrī hūṃ śrī bhyo

The excellent maṇḍala has four gates;
Make the maṇḍala with three threads.
The boundary lines are great pillars,

The four in sequence, as stated.
In its center, the maṇḍalas,
Four of them, are made likewise.
Their own four heart deities
Are placed facing their own gates:
Subhagā, holding a sword in hand;
The sister with a shield, Śivā;
Vārāhī, with treasure in hand;
And Siddhā, full of pride.
Then, into the first maṇḍala,
Having likewise entered completely,
With the sisters' own seals,
In their proper sequence,
Having entered, likewise according to the rite,
One should worship with incense and the rest.
By fully practicing the secret of suchness,
One should summon them from all sides.

oṃ sumabhaga ratiṣṭhamaya hi bhūr rakṣasa mātiṣṣāmaya hi bhūr dhuva barāhā amiryātamaya svāhā siddhike siddhi samaya hi īmāṃ ke mudrābhiḥ hrīḥ hūṃ śrī bhyo

Then, with the whole body,
Likewise sit well,
And then, showing the bound mudrā,
One should utter this supreme secret:
"If you do not guard the secret itself,
Whoever has entered for the benefit of beings
And whoever practices the maṇḍala,
You will have slain them.
For one endowed with the Dharma it is nectar itself;
For one without the Dharma it is worse than poison."
However much one wishes, and according to the time,
Relying on the sense objects
And with the offerings of mudrā and dance,
Always worship as one pleases.

This is the tantra of the four sisters.

Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
Supreme among all the lords of the earth,
The great attainment and the supreme attainment
Of attachment, aversion, and delusion,
In order to destroy the poisons of attachment and the rest,
And to turn them wholly into nectar,
The supreme maṇḍala of the nāgas,
Arising from aversion, comes forth.
Its heart mantra is this: phuḥ

Four-cornered, with four gates,
All its lines should be drawn correctly.
The gateway arches are the supreme hoods of nāgas;
The supreme points of the corners are knotted tails.
In its center, the nāga king
Ananta, together with his hoods,
And the eight families of the nāgas
The wise one should draw all around.
Then, entering in wrath,
By the force of the one who holds the nāgas,
Having entered into that very maṇḍala,
One should summon them with the serpent's hood.

oṃ hrīḥ anīlajavavegapṛthibhinadaṛṣeśāyahi phuḥ sarva nāga kulānyānaya phuḥ samaya praveśaya phuḥ sarvāna sādhaya phuḥ tatasa sarva nāga putraka phuḥ

When this is done, they will be well settled and delighted. Then the master should regard himself as free of poison. From then on, even if he eats any poison whatsoever, it turns into nectar. He sports with Vāsuki. He becomes able to kindle all poisons and to destroy them.

Then one should give the heart of the oath:

"Attachment, aversion, and delusion,
These three are poison in the world.
If you transgress the truth,
They will always slay you.
You must not scorn the lightning,
You must not turn back the hail,
And if you delight in accomplishment,

By no means should you kill a snake."

This is the maṇḍala of the nāgas.

Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
Supreme dispeller of all suffering,
For the happiness of all sentient beings,
Brought forth the maṇḍala of the grahas.
Attachment, aversion, and delusion,
Through misdeeds, become poison itself;
They become grahas, fevers, and evil,
And even become the hells.
Then the heart of the vicious is this: haṃ

Four-cornered, with four gates,
The maṇḍala of the grahas should be drawn all around.
In its center, first, the grahas and the rest
Should be expelled through the elaborate rite.
Then, having entered as was explained,
Laughing, and swiftly, into the maṇḍala,
The Vajra Holder, having entered,
Wrathfully tramples with the left foot.
Then grahas, fevers, and evil,
All the hells, and even those
Who always commit great evil,
Are utterly destroyed by the vajra.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, Vajrasattva. This is the tantra of deliverance from all suffering.

Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
The supreme lord of the All-Supreme,
In order to accomplish the aims of all sentient beings,
Taught all the maṇḍalas.
Their heart mantra is this: oṃ sāḥ hūṃ hrīḥ trāṃ

Then, merely by his uttering this,
The supreme lord of the All-Supreme,
Through all forms, became
The supreme lord of the All-Supreme.
When beings were not tamed

By the five great secrets,
Then he acts on a great and varied scale:
He is the supreme tamer of beings.

Then, for this reason, the great
And supreme maṇḍala shall be properly explained.
Having drawn the great maṇḍala
Of the supreme lord of the All-Supreme,
The manifold, the completely victorious,
In its center, according to the rite,
One should set Vajrasattva,
With the maṇḍala of the host of vajra goddesses.
On all of its sides
Are the bodies of the Lord of the All-Supreme.
Their emblems, together with supreme vajras,
Should be placed, encircled by their own families.
Draw King Vajra Nārāyaṇa
In his form, holding a wheel;
The All-Pervading Lord, the Vajra Bearer, with a vajra;
The Fierce Lord (Caṇḍeśvara), holding a vajra spear;
Vajra Padmodbhava, holding a lotus;
The Vajra Holder, bearing the form of Brahmā;
Ākāśagarbha, in the form of the god of desire,
With a vajra, his weapon of flowers.
In the corners of the maṇḍala
One should draw the goddesses of the families:
Vajraśrī and Gaurī,
Vajratārā and Sky Vajra.

Then the heart mantras of these lords of the maṇḍala shall be explained:

oṃ vajra nārāyaṇa cchinda pratihana vajra cakra tena ho bhagavāna vajra tathāgata jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ vajradhāra taṃ vajra tathāgata hūṃ vajra krodha mahāyogini gaṇeśvara mahāvajra kulogra pane ho bhagavāna vajra caṇḍeśvarāya ha ha ha ha hrīḥ vajra padmodabhava ho bhagavāna vajra lokeśvare mahā prame siddhya oṃ bhūra bhuva svaḥ svasti namaḥ svāhā he vajra kusumāyudha sarva kāma me sādhaya ho bhagavāna vajra ākāśagarbha va va ṭa ṭa traṃ vajra ākāśagarbha aśeṣaṃ mudrā namo yena sādhena bhagavate prajñāpāramitāyudha cchinda vajraṇi cakreṇa tenastyen pāpakana

oṃ dhīḥ śrī śruti smṛti vijaye svāhā vajraparmi oṃ vajra gauri mahāvidya trailokya vijayeśvari vajra krodha agani samaye vajradhari namostute tadyathā oṃ hili mili leli tāli vajra kamukaye svāhā vajra samaya namo yena sādhyena bhagavati buddha bodhirbuddhadhara vajradharma prayogena tenastyena sidhamāṃ oṃ tāre tuttare ture svāhā vajra dhamota oṃ karma vajriṇi sidbhya sidbhya viśuddha sādhya vaha gaganodbhave yogena siddhamāṃ paramakare tadyathā gagana viśuddhe sarva mava priya paripūrni svāhā

In the places of the outer maṇḍala
The Vajra Holders dwell in their own directions.
The lords of the gods, the mātṛkās,
And the world guardians should be set out.
The lords of the hosts, beating
The ten great instruments of the vajra,
Should be drawn at the portals of the outer maṇḍala,
And at its gates and corners as well.
At all of the gates, at the entrances,
Their own mudrās should be placed.
Into the fifth supreme maṇḍala
One should enter through the first union.

Then, being seated in the center,
First, the great Aṅkuśī herself:
Reciting this heart mantra,
One should utter this summons:

oṃ mahāsukha vajrasatva siddhi hūṃ sarva tathāgatan samaya ākarṣaya jaḥ vajra kula dipaṃ damayetva praveśaya hūṃ sarva lokeśvaraṃ praveśaya samaya vanadhana vaṃ samaya sarva ratna dīpaṃ mahāmaṇi rājānāṃ vaśī kuru hoḥ hūṃ āḥ hūṃ hrīḥ trāṃ

Then, by uttering this excellent
Heart mantra of the great secret,
The king, the great Vajradhara,
Together with all the circles,
Is summoned and caused to enter,
Bound by truth and brought under control.
All the supreme kings of maṇḍalas
Will be accomplished with every accomplishment.

Then, in the proper sequence,
One should accomplish all the maṇḍalas,
And all of those accomplishments too
Should be accomplished, every one.
All bliss abides unchanging:
It is called Great Bliss.
This vajra, its accomplishment and the rest,
Will be accomplished in this very life.

Thus has been taught the rite whose aim is to purify manifold aims, which tames immeasurable beings; endless and manifold, unequaled and preeminent, holding all the families of the tathāgatas and the rest, producing supreme bliss, blessed by all the victors, and producing the supreme bliss of existence.

From the Śrī Paramādya, King of Ritual Manuals: the elaborate maṇḍala rite of the supreme lord of the All-Supreme, from the root tantra of the later tantra of all the ritual manuals, is complete.

Then the secret rite of the painted cloth is taught:

The great secret of all the buddhas,
The accomplishment of the supreme samaya,
The celestial palace of great bliss,
Its body formed of every accomplishment,
Adorned with the kings of jewels and the rest
Of the great and supreme tathāgatas,
With songs and music suffused
With the passion of great bliss,
Is utterly worshiped with all the offerings
Of unsurpassed great joy.
In that supreme dwelling of his own,
The abode of great joy and glory,
The supreme king of utter joy,
The supreme unchanging one, is properly seated.
Vajrasattva, my very self,
Utterly joyful, supreme and unchanging;
Samantabhadra, the retinue,
The bodhisattvas and the tathāgatas;

Supreme among all great accomplishments,
Vajra Pride, lord of lords,
The lord of accomplishment, accomplished in accord
With the great passion of the All-Supreme;
Songs and music without beginning or end:
The supreme was proclaimed by the Blessed One.
hūṃ

Then, merely by his uttering this,
From the holder of all vajras,
The great reality of the five secrets,
The goddesses of the mudrās came forth:
Constant passion and great accomplishment,
The victorious, the sovereign, the surpassing goddess,
These are the four supreme mudrās,
Bodies blessed by the sattva.

Then their heart is this:

"The discernment of the All-Supreme,
The supreme bliss of every accomplishment,
The sight of the victory of the All-Supreme,
Or the great worship of the lord of all;
The accomplishments and the perfections,
The joys and the lords,
The vajra goddesses without beginning or end,
Supreme of the body of Vajrasattva."

So it is said.

Then the supremely secret names are these: Kāmavajrī, of the samaya of the joy of the Great Joy, the glorious Vajra Amogha; Vajra Kilikili, of the samaya of passion for the Great Joy, the glorious Amogha; Vijayavajrī, of the samaya of passion for the Great Joy, the glorious Vajra Amogha; and Vajrakāmeśvarī, of the samaya of passion for the Great Joy, the glorious Vajra Amogha.

Whatever wise one, with faith,
Recites these secret names
Becomes the lord, the master,
Of every accomplishment of all the mudrās.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva, the Supremely Secret.

Then its accomplishment shall be explained,
An accomplishment most carefully examined:
Even those who delight in great evil,
And whatever practices have not succeeded,
Just as Vajrasattva has taught,
These too will swiftly succeed.
Each day, or each month,
Or likewise each year,
One should accomplish whatever one wishes for.
With whatever can be obtained, and as is comfortable,
One should draw the Blessed One on cloth.
The lord of all, the lord of the samaya:
Whoever draws him
Attains supreme, everlasting liberation.

Smiling, with the light of the moon,
Blazing with the light of variegated lotuses,
With the consecration of all the buddhas and the rest,
Endowed with various ornaments and garments,
Seated in the sattva cross-legged posture,
Holding the supreme vajra of pride,
His left hand proudly bearing the supreme bell:
Thus should Vajrasattva be visualized.
Those who are seated at his sides,
Resting within the maṇḍala of his light,
With bodies of utter joy and bliss,
The great secret ones, should be set out.
The first is white and red like a lotus;
Another is white like the palāśa;
Another is blue like an utpala petal;
The Vajra Proud One is yellow and holds her emblem.
The first and the second
Rest on the right side;
The third and the fourth
Are seated on the left side.
Vajra Kilikili
Delights her own deity in the center, emanating joy.

At her side, the one intent on fitting
The arrow of the great vajra,
Embracing with a proud hand,
Together with a raised makara banner.
At her side, smiling,
Gazing at the lord with offerings,
Bearing the mark of the jewel consecration of the buddhas,
Looking with the mudrā of all eyes;
With her mind fixed upon the lord in herself,
She is seated, glancing sideways.

By seeing this painting
One will attain everlasting merit.
Through offering and contemplation
One attains the liberation of supreme joy.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

Thus, one who intensely desires supreme joy
Accomplishes the pure and sublime accomplishment of supreme joy.
This great painting of the Victor,
Clear and completely victorious,
With great worship of the all-seeing ones,
One revels here in glory.
Having contemplated that circle,
The supremely secret maṇḍala,
In a secluded house,
Or else in a pleasure grove or the like,
Adorned with the painting of the great and supreme tathāgata,
The king, and the rest,
And, by offering a delightful canopy
Hung with bells, made supreme,
With the offerings of vajra song and the rest,
With displays of song and music,
With flowers, incense and the like well arranged,
And with lamps set out, one should worship correctly.
In a maṇḍala in a three-storied house
One should accomplish the supreme secret.
Or else one should meditate on oneself alone,

The supreme one, as one's own chosen deity.
Then, even without entering the circle,
Having always entered it by oneself,
The master who holds all vajras
Will succeed in every accomplishment.
Having bathed oneself and anointed oneself with fragrance,
Endowed with as many ornaments and garments as one has,
Properly clad in varied clothing,
With a garland, and with fragrant mouth,
Through the yoga of Vajrasattva,
With flowers, incense and vessels of scent,
And with these vajra songs,
One should dance and enter the city.

For this, here is the supremely accomplished worship by the supremely secret song for entering the glorious three samayas of the supreme secret:

"Into the city of liberation, delightful with the bliss of every accomplishment,
The Blessed One, Great Bliss, enters.
Through the sublime accomplishment of supreme bliss,
jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥrab, grant perfect accomplishment!"

Having fully entered, with the left,
With vajra eyes one bows to the Protector:
The left proud, smiling slightly,
Praising, with beautiful eyes half closed.

For this, here is the supremely accomplished worship by the supremely secret vajra song for scattering the flowers of homage of the glorious three samayas of the sublime supreme secret:

"With a mind of supreme bliss, endowed with play,
With a graceful hand, I bow to the Blessed One.
jaḥ hūṃ vaṃ hoḥ hi hi hi hi hi
Protector, please accept this handful of flowers!"

Then, having scattered the flowers,
With the empowerment of Vajrasattva,
Endowed with the mudrā of vajra and bell,
One should bestow the clear meaning.

For this, here is the supremely accomplished worship by the supremely secret vajra song of the empowerment of Vajrasattva of the glorious three samayas of the sublime supreme secret:

"oṃ Endowed with all the buddhas, adorned with supreme jewels,
Together with the crest of the gods, I bow to you.
Through the jewel empowerment of the lord Vajradhara, Vajrasattva, samaya stvaṃ haṃ."

With that very mantra one should take up the vajra
And ring the bell of the Dharma.
With the samaya, having blessed the great mudrā,
One should recite the heart mantra.
By obtaining and holding the vajra and the rest,
One is like a second Vajrasattva,
The king who holds all vajras,
Blessed by the Vajra Bearer.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva taught the supremely accomplished rite of the solitary practice of blessing oneself through the glorious three samayas of the sublime supreme secret.

Then its accomplishment here shall be explained,
An accomplishment that is utterly constant:
Whoever is a sublime practitioner,
And even those who commit great evil,
Just as Vajrasattva has taught,
Even the unaccomplished will be accomplished.
Whether cast or hammered,
Or assembled, or painted,
Having invited the First Being to be seated,
Before him, according to the rite,
Always holding vajra and bell,
One should accomplish the supreme accomplishment:
Summoning all, great worship,
Blessing oneself and the rest are the practices.

For this, the tantra of summoning all the accomplishments of the glorious three samayas of the sublime supreme secret is this:

Out of the yoga of one's own chosen deity,
Through the yoga of summoning all,

With supreme limbs, together with play,
One should dance and should summon.

Then, the worship by the supremely secret samaya song of the supreme accomplishment of all the tathāgatas is this:

"jaḥ Supreme, primordial Vajradhara, Vajrasattva, fully realized in bliss, utterly joyful, you, my lord, discern the buddhas individually.
hūṃ Supreme Vajrakarma, supremely unchanging, inexhaustible, fully accomplishing existence, grant me today bliss, happiness of mind, and the samaya!
vaṃ Supreme, holding my body, raising the victory of all yogas, utterly supreme and pure, O king of lotuses who brings about bliss!
hoḥ Utterly supreme: may I become the sublime lord of all the sublime supreme accomplishments!
You, Ākāśagarbha, who ever increase me,
Bring them down through the practice of hulu hulu!
You who rightly summon through the great samaya,
The samaya of all the tathāgatas,
Supremely joyful, supreme lord!"

For this, what is the rite of the great worship of all the accomplishments of the glorious three samayas of the sublime supreme secret?

In accordance with the yoga of one's own deity,
Worship with all offerings the bodies of the All-Supreme;
Having worshiped, the mantra practitioner
Then worships again with displays of songs and music.

Then, the worship by the supremely secret samaya vajra song of the supreme rite of the great worship of the supreme accomplishment by all the tathāgatas is this:

"Mind of sublime bliss, passionate toward all,
Vajrasattva, you are utter joy.
May clear vision of Great Bliss become firm in me!
Swiftly discerning, accomplish what is intensely desired!"

For this, what is the great practice of blessing all the accomplishments of the glorious three samayas of the sublime supreme secret?

In accordance with the yoga of one's own deity,
Blessed by all the mudrās,
Through the supreme great reality itself
Having accomplished oneself, one should recite the heart mantra.

Then, the supremely accomplished worship by the vajra song of the sublime samaya of the great secret of blessing the supreme accomplishment of all the tathāgatas is this:

"oṃ Because you are born from space and bear the marks,
Supreme, without beginning or end,
Of the nature of the great vajra being,
Vajrasattva, grant me accomplishment!
All-Supreme, the great accomplishment,
Maheśvara, the surpassing god,
Vajra Holder, king of all,
Grant me supreme, unchanging accomplishment!
You who are faultless and everlasting,
Passionately attached through passion,
Great passion, great joy,
Blessed One, by that very nature grant me accomplishment!
Utterly pure, supreme of all,
Tathāgata, liberated from the very beginning,"

Samantabhadra, the self of all,
Grant that I be accomplished as a bodhisattva!
Supreme of all, the great accomplishment,
Maheśvara, the surpassing god,
Through great praise of the accomplished vajra,
Vajra Pride, lord, make me the lord!
You, Blessed One of Śrī Paramādya:
Whoever praises you with meaning and with song
Will accomplish the supreme of all accomplishments,
Maheśvara himself."

Thus the Blessed One Vajradhara taught the supremely accomplished great song, supremely secret, of the supreme reality.

Through this rite of accomplishment
One truly realizes Vajrasattva,
And fully accomplishes the very lordship

Of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme.
Displays of rays of light in every direction and the like,
And the marvels displayed individually,
Through the vajra words, from one's own deity,
Wonders will be seen.
The great variety of all the ritual manuals,
Of the lords of accomplishment and the blissful ones,
Through swiftly blessing oneself,
Is obtained by the vajra master.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva, the Supreme Primordial One.

For this, what is the tantra of the great practice of blessing oneself with all the deities of the glorious three samayas of the supreme secret?

In accordance with the yoga of one's own deity,
Through the bodies that are the self of all the deities,
Through the very self of the yoga of one's own deity,
One should accomplish one's own chosen deity.

Then, here is the elaborate rite, accomplished in accordance, of the sublime accomplishment of the whole host of activities of all the accomplishments, such as the very nature of Maheśvara, the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme, of the glorious three samayas of the sublime supreme secret, and of the sublime accomplishment of all supremely unchanging, sublime, unsurpassed joy, utter joy, bliss and happiness of mind:

In accordance with the yoga of one's own deity,
Through the bodies of the Vajra All-Supreme,
The rite of song and music
Becomes impassioned through the vajra itself.
In accordance with the yoga of one's own deity,
By awakening the root of melody,
The rite of song and music
Is echoed by the bell itself.
In accordance with the yoga of one's own deity,
The supreme lord of the various mudrās:
The rite of song and music
Should be accomplished in accord with the samaya.
Through this, in all the ritual manuals,

Being fully awakened by the descent of the vajra,
The samaya of one's own deity
Will be accomplished fourfold in every case.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva taught the supremely secret, supremely accomplished rite of the great song and of the music of the glorious three samayas of the sublime supreme secret.

Then, following that, according to the place,
With as much as one has and as is comfortable,
Having worshiped with flowers and incense,
In a house, a pleasure grove or the like,
Having fully prepared oneself as one wishes,
Endowed with as many ornaments and garments as one has,
Properly clad in varied clothing,
With a garland of flowers and a fragrant mouth,
Whether cast or hammered,
Or assembled, or drawn as a picture,
Before that primordial circle,
Having invited it to be seated according to the rite,
In accordance with the yoga of one's own deity,
Fully awakening with vajra and bell,
One should accomplish the summoning of all, great worship,
Blessing oneself and the rest.
Having first accomplished this once,
Then, after that, as one wishes,
Whatever one wishes and whatever one says,
One eats everything and does everything.
Whether standing or sitting,
Laughing heartily or speaking,
Just as things are, so, here and there,
One should set them out as one wishes.
The circle of the supreme secret,
Having worshiped it with flowers and the rest,
One should accomplish in accordance, as it is.
Through this one becomes lord of all desires;
One goes and comes, and, if one wishes, flies;
One accomplishes the lordship of all accomplishments;

One becomes a sovereign free of old age and death.
Vajrasattva, the great accomplished one,
Lord, sovereign of all the mudrās,
The king who holds all vajras,
Holds all vajra weapons.
Invincible and unbearable,
Doing all things and the support of all,
The great king of all sentient beings,
He is able to subdue and to take into his care.
The great passion of the All-Supreme,
Fulfillment of desires, supreme bliss:
One becomes accomplished as victorious over all,
The supreme lord of the All-Supreme.
Supreme of all, the great accomplishment,
Abiding in the state of Maheśvara,
The king who holds all vajras,
Will fully accomplish all the buddhas.

Thus, the supremely passionate joy, the great enclosure of lotuses,
Bestows the unsurpassed accomplishment of the supreme secret accomplished.
Whoever relies on it, raising the supreme banner,
Experiences the supreme accomplishment, Maheśvara himself.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

From the Śrī Paramādya: the elaborate rite of the glorious three samayas of the sublime great secret, of summoning all accomplishments, of the great worship, of blessing oneself, and the rest.

The supreme secret, delight,
And what all the buddhas have taught:
Vajrasattva, in his own abode,
The self of all, ever abides.
The being without beginning or end
Is Vajrasattva, great joy,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
In the manner of Vajra Pride, lord of lords.
This is the self-arisen Blessed One,

The surpassing deity, the one alone.

Thus will it be accomplished.

Thus, the supremely passionate joy, the great enclosure of lotuses,
Bestows the unsurpassed accomplishment of the supreme secret.
Whoever relies on it, raising the supreme banner,
Experiences the supreme accomplishment, Great Bliss itself.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

From the Śrī Paramādya: the supremely secret maṇḍala of one's own samaya, the glory of all the tathāgatas, the lord of all yogas, the samaya of the joy of the glorious Vajra Amogha of Great Joy, is complete.

"Then I shall explain the elaborate rite for the disciple of the great samaya of all the tathāgatas, and how to take the disciple into one's care." Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

For this, first of all, one should have the disciple generate the mind of awakening by reciting once this sublime, supremely secret mantra of all the tathāgatas: oṃ sarva yoga cittaṃ udpādayāmi. It is also taught that merely by reciting this, one should be understood to be inseparable from all the tathāgatas, irreversible, a bodhisattva great being bearing the seal that overpowers all māras, and indeed a tathāgata.

Having supremely generated
The unsurpassed mind of awakening,
And having set the vajra at the heart,
surata samaya stvaṃ ho
With the heart mantra one should accomplish the vajra as one pleases.
When the vajra is roused with this,
One will accomplish all that one desires.
By rousing it, swiftly
The unsurpassed mind of awakening,
For the sake of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme,
Becomes Vajrasattva himself.

This supreme teaching was spoken by the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

Having danced, with palms joined at the crown,
Their faces covered with a cloth,
With desire for whatever accomplishment they wish,

All the disciples should be led in.
With the being of whatever accomplishment is wished for,
The disciple should be made to cast a flower.
On whichever mudrā it falls,
That one's goddess should be accomplished.
Then, having removed the face covering,
And having received offerings of every kind,
Through the jewel empowerment of the buddhas
One should clearly bestow the three samayas.

For this, one should empower the disciple with the oath water of the Great Vajra, and should say the following:

"This is your water of hell:
If you transgress the samaya, it burns you.
If you keep the samaya, accomplishment
Is attained through this water of vajra nectar.
The mudrā of vajra and bell:
If, dwelling amid a gathering of people,
You say you have not seen the maṇḍala,
Or, lacking faith, mock and revile it with laughter..."

With these words the oath is proclaimed.

For this, the rite of the jewel empowerment of the buddhas is this. Having empowered the disciple with the vajra water, one sets him in the place of empowerment of the supreme body of all the tathāgatas, and with this mantra, oṃ sarva tathāgata mahāsamaya adhipati stvaṃ abhiṣviñcāmi mahāvajradhara, one should place the vajra in his hand:

"This is all the buddhas themselves,
The vajra of Vajradhara.
The great discipline of Vajradhara
You too must always uphold.
The great and supreme mind of awakening
Of all the tathāgatas
You must never abandon, and must always practice.
This is the utterly secret bliss."

oṃ vajra karmma vādhidhi śrī vajra nāma siddhi samaya stvaṃ bhūr bhuva svaḥ

To the one on whom the vajra name is bestowed, the vocative "O" should be prefixed. That name of his also becomes his name as a tathāgata until he reaches the seat of awakening.

For this, the bestowal of the glorious three samayas of the sublime supreme secret is this:

"The being without beginning or end
Is Vajrasattva, great joy,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
In the manner of Vajra Pride, lord of lords."

Having thus explained the reality of the five secrets, the reality of the supreme person of the Blessed One Śrī Paramādya, one should bestow the vajra.

This is the supreme command of the Dharma properly bestowed by the Blessed One, the sublime lord of existence, the supreme of all, the sublime among lords, the Tathāgata himself:

"Existence is pure by its very nature;
By nature it is made free of existence.
The supreme being, pure by nature,
Brings about supreme existence."

That which brings down the supremely secret nature of reality is the bell. It should be rung when worshiping all the tathāgatas or when accomplishing the deity. Then, through those strokes that fully awaken the reality of all phenomena, all obscurations are completely purified. It will be practiced as that which brings down all vajras, fully accomplishes, brings under control, and fully gladdens.

Then it is said: "One should always rely on the samaya, the great secret of all the ritual manuals, the supreme means of purifying existence."

For this:

"This is for you, today,
So that the bliss of existence comes most swiftly,
In order to purify great suffering,
The sublime means of utter bliss:
Always generate this samaya.
Relying on all the enjoyments of desire
Just as you wish,

Through the yoga of your own deity,
Make offering to yourself and to others."

The yoga of the samaya of the unsurpassed, supremely secret Great Vehicle, greater even than the great, of all the tathāgatas, is the samaya of the Blessed One.

"Since even all the tathāgatas
Never transgress it,
It is proclaimed the samaya of the mudrā,
Because it makes firm the body of the mind."

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva, the Supremely Secret.

For this, one should say the following:

"As long as the supreme sage
Remains in the abode of saṃsāra,
For so long he is able to accomplish the aims of beings without equal,
Not passing into nirvāṇa.
The sublime secret, the means of the samaya,
Accomplished with the blessing of merit:
Always the lord of all accomplishments,
He accomplishes the aims of beings.
One who accomplishes the supreme through this samaya,
Accomplishing it as one pleases,
Even if one commits misdeeds, will not be harmed
In any way by any evil.
Great desire will be accomplished.
The lord of the samaya, the lord of all,
The king who holds all vajras,
Is the supreme lord of the All-Supreme.
Through the accomplishment of the host of activities,
By accomplishing them entirely, one succeeds.
By sealing oneself and all others,
Or else for all that is to be accomplished,
There is supreme accomplishment that is never in vain,
And one accomplishes all yogas in accord.
The glorious one, who steals away all suffering:
The samaya is hard to transgress."

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva, the Supremely Secret.

By obtaining and holding the vajra and the rest,
All the bliss of every accomplishment
Comes down, and the vajra disciple
Experiences it within the maṇḍala.
Then, through the praise of all exalting him,
Being in truth the very self of all the buddhas,
Through the empowerment with a vajra name,
He should be prophesied as a tathāgata.

For this, the rite of Vajrasattva for the prophecy by all the tathāgatas is this:

"The great mudrā of all the buddhas:
Whoever is prophesied with exalting praise,
That one is all the buddhas themselves,
Empowered with a vajra name."

"oṃ! Now I prophesy you:
Vajrasattva, Tathāgata!
Because existence is perfectly accomplished,
I show you the way out of the evil destinies of existence.
he vajra namaḥ tathāgata siddhi samaya stvaṃ bhūr bhuva svaḥ."

Whoever receives this exalting praise and this prophecy as the great mudrā, performed by the supremely secret rite, is prophesied to unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening by all the tathāgatas beginning with Vajrasattva, together with the maṇḍala of bodhisattvas including Vajradhara, speaking with one voice with the masters of the personal pledge (samaya) of all the tathāgatas. That is to say, one should have faith in the great mudrā of this very exalting praise, in this blessing through the accomplishment of the supremely secret and sublime, and in the power of mantra.

Then, to those who have entered in the proper way, one should give the encouragement of the assembly of all the tathāgatas and so forth:

"All the tathāgatas, however many there are, together with Vajradhara and with the maṇḍala of bodhisattvas, all of them, out of attachment to their own pledge, have entered here completely: through the very stability of the entire vajra realm of summoning, causing to enter, bringing under control, accomplishing and further accomplishing, and through the all-pervasiveness of the entire realm of phenomena by which this becomes stable. Through the vastness of the entire element of space they are seated here, and well seated. Each and every one of them, focusing especially on the very state of a tathāgata that depends on the personal pledge of all the tathāgatas, has blessed you with the words, 'This is all the tathāgatas, the master of the personal pledge of all the tathāgatas.' All the tathāgatas, the masters of their own pledge, with the one voice of the pledge, are encouraging you. Have faith!"

This is the supremely secret encouragement of all the tathāgatas:

"By seeing and by entering
The sublime secret maṇḍala,
You are definitively freed from all wrongdoing,
And you abide well in that very place.
From this vehicle of Great Bliss
There is no dying again;
Unassailable and unslayable,
Fearing nothing at all, take your delight!
The reversal of the suffering of existence
Comes because existence is perfectly accomplished;
You, who have become the supreme Teacher,
Are existence perfectly accomplished.
This accomplished pledge and vow
You must always guard.
All the buddhas proclaimed it in harmony;
It is the sublime and eternal command.
The awakening mind, by whose mere arising
Buddhahood is beyond all doubt,
Should never be given up.
Whatever is the mudrā and the vajra,
And the sublime Dharma, do not revile,
And never cast them aside.
Out of ignorance or delusion
You should never revile them.
Do not forsake your own self
And torment it with austerities;
Take bliss, as blissfully as you please:
This one is a perfect buddha yet to come.
The vajra, the bell and the mudrās

You should never abandon.
Do not revile the master,
For he is like all the buddhas.
Whoever reviles the master,
The guru equal to all the buddhas,
Reviles all the buddhas thereby,
And will always meet with suffering:
Tormented by fevers, by poison and compounded poisons,
And by the ḍākinīs,
Slain by fierce grahas and vināyakas,
That being falls into hell.
Therefore, with every effort,
The vajra master of great intelligence,
Who makes no boast of his virtue,
Should never be reviled.
To the guru, with respect,
You should give a fitting offering;
By that, fevers and other harms
Will never arise again.
The master of one's own pledge
Should always be served even with what one would not give,
With sons and wife and one's own life;
What need to mention fleeting wealth?
For he it is who grants to the diligent,
In this very life,
Buddhahood itself, so hard to find
Even in countless koṭis of eons.
Always guard your own pledge;
Always worship the tathāgatas;
Always make offerings to the guru as well,
For he is like all the buddhas.
To give to him
Is always to give to all the buddhas.
To give to him is the accumulation of merit,
And from the accumulation comes the supreme accomplishment.
Therefore, by abiding well in this,
Today your birth has borne its fruit.

Equal to the self-arisen deities of the pledge
Today you will become, beyond doubt.
Since all the buddhas, together with the Vajra Holder,
Have all empowered you today,
You are revealed as the great king of the three realms,
The lord of kings.
Such a one is victorious over Māra
And has entered the supreme city.
That you will attain buddhahood itself
Here today, there is no doubt."

Thus spoke, in supreme truth, the Blessed One Vajrasattva, together with all the tathāgatas, Vajradhara, and the maṇḍala of the retinue of great bodhisattvas.

Then this is the supremely secret encouragement of all the tathāgatas, given by the glorious master of the personal pledge of all the tathāgatas and by the assemblies of disciples:

"Through the mudrā of irreversibility,
Arisen together with the awakening mind,
Buddhahood itself is to be realized."

So it is said. What is the reason for this? It is because the whole being of each of you becomes irreversible merely by the power of having generated the great awakening mind of all the tathāgatas. Because you are irreversible, you abide in the group of those who are certain (niyata), and so you are certain of unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening. It should be understood that you will become fully and perfectly awakened into unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening. So it is said.

Then this is the supremely secret encouragement of the master of the pledge, the glory of all:

"Uniting oneself as Vajrasattva,
Endowed with all the yogas and their subsequent practice,
One is to be realized as buddhahood itself;
This the wise should examine supremely."

So it is said.

What is the reason for this? It is because the whole being of each of you has, beyond any doubt, taken up the personal pledge of all the tathāgatas. You should be understood as tathāgatas, fully awakened into unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening. Through following in practice the glorious personal pledge of all the tathāgatas, those supreme accomplishments should be understood as being all the tathāgatas themselves.

Therefore, in every circumstance, as far as you are able, giving no opening to any suffering or unhappiness, you should guard your own whole being, and you should not destroy it. With all enjoyments and requisites whatsoever, you should make perfect offering through the practice of the pledge of the supremely secret, unsurpassed Great Vehicle of all the tathāgatas, take hold of bliss, and make it increase fully. Just as one strives earnestly for oneself, so one generates the same in return for others.

Because there is the danger of falling into wrong views, into the outer tīrthikas, and into the level of all the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, this body is kept utterly secret; speech, by not speaking at all; and mind, by complete cessation. It was also taught that through this your vajras of body, speech and mind will always come forth as the vajra of body, speech and mind of all the tathāgatas, the supreme and unsurpassed accomplishment of their glorious personal pledge.

"With all the enjoyments of desire,
Fearing nothing at all, take your delight!
This pledge is hard to transgress;
Being without wrongdoing, do not fear!"

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke in supreme truth, and it is the intent of all the tathāgatas together with the maṇḍala of the retinue of bodhisattvas.

"Thus make your mind serene and adamantine;
Show forth your own pledge, inexhaustible, the giver of bliss.
Realize that it brings swift bliss to beings,
Is perfectly equal to Vajrasattva, and is eternal.
Then with flavors, food, conduct, dance and song,
With offerings of music and the like, worship the Protector.
When the great vajra guru has offered these,
Make offerings to yourself and to others as you wish.
Partaking as you wish
Of drinks that intoxicate and that do not,

With the rites of song and music and the rest,
Perform the recitation that follows along accordingly.
With songs, music and dances
Taken up through the rite of one's own secret,
With the offering of the various mudrās,
And with the music of Vajrasattva and the like,
Accompanied by women and others,
Or together with one's own disciples,
By making offerings with enjoyments as one wishes,
One swiftly attains accomplishment."

Thus spoke the supremely secret Blessed One Vajrasattva.

Here the distinctive songs of the secret rite are these:
hūṃ is of the Blessed One, the supreme first Vajrasattva.
a is of the tathāgatas.
hi is of the glorious Victory over the Three Worlds.
oṃ is of the Lotus Essence.
ha is Ākāśagarbha, that is, Ākāśagarbha, king of the great bodhisattvas.
So it was said.

"The songs of one's own secret essence
Are to be performed with the five syllables.
This, taken up through the rite of one's own secret,
Belongs to all the supremely gone ones."

Then the supremely secret offering of vajra song:

"With vajra and bell, cymbals and the like,
Play music in solitude.
Songs sung through the rite of one's own secret
Are fully accomplished with secret music."

Then the supremely and utterly secret offering of vajra dance:

"Having performed the dance
Of the great grasped object together with the grasping subject,
And having performed a dance in the form of the maṇḍala,
Make offering to yourself by circling all around."

Then the supremely secret offering of the various mudrās:

"The rites and magical displays, all of them,
Of the deities, Vajrasattva and the rest:
Whatever dance there is with tales, emblems and mudrās,
That is the music.
With faces of one's own deities
Made of gold, or else of silver,
Or likewise made of wood,
Perform the dances with accomplished mudrās.
Whatever maṇḍala one practices,
Through the offering of the various mudrās,
Have each and every assembly of disciples
Recite, and admit them all in the supreme way.
Through this rite of variety
One is fully freed from all wrongdoing;
All merit too increases,
And one is always protected.
Fevers, grahas, poisons and illness,
Compounded poisons, the harm of ḍākinīs,
Māras and those who kill:
By this they are completely pacified.
Accomplishments become abundant,
And likewise joy and lordship;
And the sublime yoga
That is the nature of all the buddhas is attained."

Thus spoke the utterly secret Blessed One Vajrasattva.

Then, having proclaimed the extensive rite of the offering of the various mudrās and the extensive rite of the vajra-song offering for entering the supreme secret of each and every one of the special deities, there follows what is called the supreme accomplishment of the great pledge of the variety of all the rites, performed with songs and music composed by the vajra master, or with any others one likes.

First of all, the song offering for entering the supremely secret pledge of the Blessed One Śrī Paramādya Vajrasattva is this:

"Mind of sublime bliss, passionately devoted to all,
Vajrasattva, you are the pledge of supreme joy:
May Great Bliss become firm, exalted and clear!

Discerning each one, turn toward me and swiftly accomplish!"

Then the vajra-song offering for entering the supremely secret pledge of the family of all the tathāgatas:

"Through gathering in Vajrasattva,
Unsurpassed Vajraratna;
Through singing of Vajradharma,
Vajrakarma comes to be performed."

Then the vajra-song offering for entering the supremely secret pledge of the entire vajra family:

"hūṃ Vajra with bow and arrow, I bow to you!
Glorious pledge of vajra passion, I bow to you!
khaṭvāṃ, vajra of the time of destruction, I bow to you!
Glory who rings the vajra bell, I bow to you!"

Then the vajra-song offering for entering the supremely secret pledge of the entire lotus family:

"At times a body utterly fierce, robbing the life of savage people;
At times, to tame infinite beings, a body holding a razor-sharp wheel;
At times a body utterly peaceful on a lotus seat, unchanging;
At times, utterly blazing pledge of desire, Lotus King, accomplish me!"

Then the vajra-song offering for entering the supremely secret pledge of the entire jewel family:

"From the sublime Īśvara of all empowerments,
Perfectly accomplished, supreme among inexhaustible treasures;
Through raising the victorious banner of the All-Supreme,
Glorious Vajraratna, you have been well worshipped by me."

Then, of the three brothers: bhūr bhuva svaḥ. Then, of the four sisters: hrī hūṃ śrī bhyo. Then, of the maṇḍala of all the nāga families: phu phu.

Then the vajra-song offering of the maṇḍala of all the wicked ones of Vajrapāṇi, the great general of the yakṣas: sarba maṃga maṇḍal midaṃ vajra ṅharā krama bimarda bikir bhanja udsādaya nāśaya hana daha paca bhasmi kuṃru kroda hūṃkāra mantriṇa.

Then the supremely secret vajra-song offering of the pledge of the great maṇḍala of the sublime Īśvara, supreme among all:

"At times your body is beautiful with the light of a thousand stainless moon disks;
At times your mass of rays, like ten million suns rising at the time of destruction, blazes in great terror;
At times you hold the body of a Victor, radiant and shining, blissful and peaceful;
At times, bearing a supremely beautiful form, you hold a bow together with the supreme arrow;
At times, Vajrasattva, striving to purify those to be tamed, you abide like space.
Since you are the sublime bliss skilled in taming all without exception, may it be accomplished for me!"

Then this is the supreme accomplishment of the vajra-song offering for entering the glorious triple pledge, the supreme secret of the supreme sublime of the supremely secret:

"Into the city of liberation, delightful with the bliss of all accomplishments,
Enters the Blessed One, Great Bliss.
Through the accomplishment of supreme and sublime bliss,
jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥrab: grant perfect accomplishment!"

Then, having proclaimed what is called the utterly supreme accomplishment of the utterly and supremely secret vajra-song offering of the glorious unsurpassed pledge, the unsurpassed, sublime and supremely secret rite of the utterly and supremely secret rite, and having followed it in practice exactly as it is, through the rite of songs and dances of the vajra-song offering of utterly supreme reality, one should practice each in turn. And it was also said, "This is the utterly supreme accomplishment of the offering of the great pledge of the variety of all the unsurpassed and utterly, supremely secret rites of all the tathāgatas."

"Through this rite of variety
Vajrasattva is gathered in,
And the lord of the yoga
Of the great variety of the All-Supreme is fully accomplished."

Thus spoke the utterly secret Blessed One Vajrasattva.

"Thus the extensive rite of the ritual of Śrī Paramādya, with its various tales,
Endowed with the experience of unsurpassed accomplishment, the supremely secret music:

Whoever, bearing the lofty banner of variety, constantly relies upon it,
Truly experiences the supreme accomplishment, Great Bliss itself.
Unfailing and supremely endowed with merit,
The rite is supremely eternal;
The great secret of the All-Supreme
Swiftly brings about all accomplishments.
Those who enter the supreme city
With delight and practice there
Attain, through that bliss, the accomplishment
And lordship of utterly supreme desire.
Those who have not attained accomplishment,
And those who are perfecting merit,
If they fully enter the supreme maṇḍala,
These practitioners become fully accomplished here.
If the supreme Vajrasattva
Has not been accomplished through the heart mantra and the rest,
And even when practiced with the near-heart mantra
Remains unaccomplished, entering here, it will be accomplished.
In the root tantra of Śrī Paramādya
It is likewise swiftly accomplished.
Just as, having dwelt in the first house,
The vajra maṇḍala is accomplished,
So, by the accomplishing of all the maṇḍalas,
Not everything is accomplished in that way.
Just as, by seeing the sublime palace
Of the supremely secret,
Even those who have broken their pledges,
Those veiled by every obscuration,
And those touched by grahas such as Māra
Will attain eternal liberation,
So those who have not entered the maṇḍala,
Or who have not accomplished the maṇḍala,
If they enter once more in the supreme way,
Will swiftly become accomplished.
Here there is nothing at all that is not accomplished.
Accomplishment, action and bliss likewise:
All the accomplishments, in fourfold measure,

Should be accomplished through all the rites."

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

From Śrī Paramādya, the utterly secret rite of the maṇḍala of the glorious great pledge of all the tathāgatas is complete.

Then this is the supreme secret rite of the supreme pledge of the three worlds of all the tathāgatas:

"Buddha, Dharma and Saṅgha:
These are the three great pledges.
On cloth, in the form of supreme bodhisattvas,
One should draw the Three Jewels:
The supreme vajra together with armor,
Well adorned with armor and the rest;
The one who proclaims the vajra weapon;
And the one who holds the lotus and the jewel.
Having fashioned that wheel,
It is the sublime secret maṇḍala.
If one practices it as is fitting,
It will be accomplished threefold."

This is the heart mantra called "the great pledge of all the tathāgatas," which bestows supreme accomplishment without exception: oṃ bhū khaṃ.

"In a house, or else in a grove,
Having adorned it as before,
And having done everything
Through the rite of the supreme weapon, one should recite this:
'Through that very one, the Blessed One,
The bodhisattva and tathāgata,
To benefit those of evil views,
Shows them nirvāṇa.
Striving to tame all without exception,
He has donned firm and certain armor;
Supreme one dwelling fully in existence,
He has donned the armor and the rest.
As Buddha, Dharma and Saṅgha
He has become the Three Jewels,
Supreme maker of the pure glory

Of existence perfectly accomplished.'"

This is the supremely secret vajra of all the tathāgatas.

Then the bell of the supremely secret nature of reality:

"All things have the characteristic of space,
And space too has no characteristic.
Through union equal to space,
The All-Supreme shines forth as sameness."

This is the perfection of wisdom.

Then what is called the vow of the three great pledges:

"When enjoying all enjoyments,
If one partakes of them as one's own deity,
Saying, 'I make the supreme offering to the Three Jewels,'
One makes offering."

This is the accomplishment of the yoga of the Tathāgata.

"Through this rite of skillful means,
If one eats even the five qualities of desire,
Even what is not to be eaten,
One will attain eternal accomplishment."

These are the three great supremely secret pledges of all the tathāgatas.

Having recited this, one should give the heart mantra and have the disciples learn to bind the mudrā, and then accomplish whatever one wishes.

"Then the master, the vajra holder,
Having worshipped with vajra worship,
Through offerings as he wishes
Leads all the disciples in, in the supreme way.
Though one enjoys all enjoyments,
What is offered to the Three Jewels
Through desire, for oneself and for others,
Becomes accomplished as worship itself."

From Śrī Paramādya, the supremely secret rite.

Then the supremely secret rite of the Great Vajra, the king of the wrathful ones:

"On cloth one should draw the Blessed One,
Lord of the entire vajra family,
A vajra blazing like the sun and like fire,
Supremely, according to the rite.
He is seated on a single lotus petal,
Resting in a wheel of his own light.
The ḍākinīs of the great secret vajra yoga
Should be drawn at his sides:
The first, red and white;
The next, white like ash;
The third, white and gazing;
The fourth, stainless like gold.
The accomplished lord of vajra fierceness,
With a vajra khaṭvāṃ raised aloft,
Vajra desire blazing like fire:
At her side place the emblem.
Vajravaiṣṇavī places the vajra wheel,
And likewise the other, the vajra bell or banner.
At her side the one who leans to the left,
Baring her fangs slightly,
Her face laughing, with wrath,
Sets her mind on her own self,
Her body seated facing the corner.
Then its heart mantra is
hūṃ.
Then the near-heart mantra:
Together with vajra, bell and the rest,
Beating music in solitude,
Beating out the song and music of hi,
Fully accomplish the four corners."

This is the rite of recitation here.

"Having shown it in that wheel,
The sublime secret maṇḍala,
Through the rite of the supreme weapon,
Is the full elaboration of all the rites."

Then the giving of the rite of reality, of Dharma and of pledge:

"Wrath arisen from constant passion,
Body that is a mass of vajra fire,
Great blazing Vajrakrodha,
Body that is a host of intense flames,
Great yoga of the blazing vajra:
The ḍākinīs blaze all around."

This is the vajra.

Then the Dharma:

"All things have the characteristic of space,
And space too has no characteristic.
The yogin equal to space
Accomplishes all with utter swiftness.
Through union with the All-Supreme of space,
Declaring all things to be space,
And sealing them with the vajra mudrā,
One devours even the three worlds."

This is the supremely secret pledge of the ḍākinīs of vajra yoga.

"Through this rite, in every way,
One should practice in meditative equipoise.
Through the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme,
The hosts of activities are inexhaustible."

So it is said. Then, having made the dance offering with one's own mudrās through the tathāgata rite, exactly as it is, one will become accomplished.

From Śrī Paramādya, the rite of vajra yoga.

"Then the wheel of ḍākinīs
Of the great accomplished secret yoga
Of the supremely subtle
And utterly excellent vajra is explained.
Having fittingly laid out
The city, the pleasure grove and the rest,
The master of all the vajra holders,
Accomplishing them as prescribed,
Together with the four lovely ones,
Scatters flowers with his own mudrā
And enters the city as is fitting.

Turn the mouth of the left hand upward;
With the great laugh of Vajrarudra,
Through the mudrā of the supreme proclaiming of sound,
Enter and bow to the Protector.
The homage for this is as follows:
Uttering oṃ,
With the breath of utmost joy," ru lu ru lu llaṃ six times, with ru lu ru lu llaṃ in between.

This is called "the supreme proclaiming of the sound of homage of Vajrarudra." Here it is the mudrā of the vajra hand. It is called "supremely accomplished" with regard to all mudrās, to all other accomplishments free of delusion and obstruction, and to all activities. The Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke this utterly and supremely secret teaching.

"Then, with the lovely one who holds the pledge,
Having scattered loose flowers,
Through the empowerment of the vajra lotus
One clearly bestows the three pledges."

Here the mudrā of Vajrasattva is this: it is made from the lotus skull cup, and since that is blessed with the vajra, it is called "vajra lotus." Then the binding of the mudrā here:

"All the fingers joined with one another,
Together with the tip of the All-Supreme,
The thumbs covered by the vajra:
This is accomplished as the 'vajra lotus.'"

With this vajra-lotus mudrā one should perform the application of the empowerment of Vajrasattva and empower with the jewel crown of the vajra lotus. Merely through empowerment with this, the tathāgatas reduce to ashes beings who are utterly vicious, fierce, savage and wicked, and one is blessed by them with the name "all the tathāgatas, wheel-turning monarchs possessed of great power over the three realms without exception, victorious over all," and also becomes a supreme and eternal protection. Thus spoke the supremely and utterly secret Blessed One Vajrasattva.

"By that very one the vajra is held,
And the bell of Dharma should be rung.
Having blessed the great mudrā of the pledge,

Recite the heart mantra.
Take hold of the vajra and the rest as obtained:
One is like a second Vajrasattva,
Accomplished as lord of vajra yoga,
And blessed by the Vajra Bearer.
The women too are made to receive the descent,
And through the bringing down of the Teacher's vajra,
Holding emblems together with the vajra,
They fully become yoginīs."

Here, first of all, is the one called "Great Vajra Blazing Like the Sun and Fire, Utterly Reducing to Ashes," the first supreme lord of the king of the wrathful ones, the Great Vajra of all the tathāgatas, who brings about the true descent. Through the skillful means of the great compassion of all the tathāgatas, he holds the vajra of the blazing fire of vengeful wrath, the banner of the khaṭvāṃ together with a vajra, and the bell joined with a pennant. He is the lord of Vajra Pride who brings down utter wrath, with a frown between his brows that is charming yet utterly terrifying, and with yellow eyes that strike terror. With this mudrā of the gaze of the eyes that terrify with the great vajra terror of all the tathāgatas, one accomplishes it by reciting a hundred thousand times. It is able to bring about the passion, summoning, drawing in, subjugation and descent of all the tathāgatas. There is the samādhi of joining all things to space; and merely by uttering it once, all the māras of the three realms without exception, such as Vajrāmṛta, beings who are vicious, fierce, savage and wicked toward all the tathāgatas, all the fierce ḍākinīs, and even the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas are reduced to ashes; if even they are, what need to mention enemies and others? It is unfailing and unobstructed, and with regard to all accomplishments and all hosts of activities it is supremely accomplished.

Then the recitation of the instruction on this utterly fierce skillful means of great compassion of the Blessed One: with the very subtle breath of the nostrils, through the true vajra word, it is sublimely and supremely accomplished for the hosts of accomplishments of all the activities the mind desires. hūṃ.

Then the great deities, the sovereign ladies of supremely secret vajra yoga, are to be explained.

First of all is the great goddess called "Great Vajra Blazing Fire of Desire." Raising the vajra bow and arrow, her eye glances to the left. With this mudrā of the gaze of the vajra eye she accomplishes everything; merely by sealing with the mudrā of glancing from the corners of her charming, darting eyes, she seals all things; and, unfailing and unobstructed, with regard to all things and all hosts of activities she is supremely accomplished.

Then the recitation of the Vajra Speech Wrathful One, in the voice of a crow's throat, by this Blessed Lady: through the wish of the mind it is supremely accomplished for all accomplishments and all hosts of activities. hrīḥ.

The second is the goddess called "Great Vajra Blazing Fire of Desire, Answer of the Pledge." In the center, praising her own special deity, her face smiling and her small eyes smiling, with this mudrā of the gaze of the vajra eye of great joy she accomplishes everything. Merely by sealing with the mudrā of touch, kissing, embracing and the like, she seals all things; she makes all mudrās hold back; she causes killing through all; and, unfailing and unobstructed, with regard to all accomplishments and all hosts of activities she is supremely accomplished.

Then the recitation of the Vajra Speech Wrathful One, in the voice of a crow's throat, by this Blessed Lady: through the wish of the mind it is supremely accomplished for all accomplishments and all hosts of activities. hūṃ.

The third is the great goddess called "Great Vajra Blazing Fire of Desire, Reducing to Ashes." She holds the great vajra of the Blessed One and the banner of the khaṭvāṃ; with a charming laugh and a frown between her brows, her eyes are wrathful. With this mudrā of the wrathful gaze of ki li ki la, the wrathful one of the Great Vajra, she accomplishes everything. Merely by saying "vajra" and "ru lu ru lu ru lu hni" she conquers all the māras; and, unfailing and unobstructed, with regard to all accomplishments and all hosts of activities she is supremely accomplished. hi.

The fourth is called "Great Vajra Blazing Fire of Desire, Reducing to Ashes, Raiser of the Dead." Her left side in a proud pose, with her right hand she rings the vajra bell on the crown of her own head, and her charming eyes are opened wide. With the mudrā of the gaze of the kindly eye of Vajrarāja she accomplishes everything. By sealing with slaps and the like, with laughter, with striking and with mudrās, she raises all the dead; and, unfailing and unobstructed, with regard to all accomplishments and the hosts of activities she is supremely accomplished.

Then the Vajrakrodha recitation of the bell-sound of this Blessed Mother is supremely accomplished, at the mind's wish, in all accomplishments and in all the hosts of activities. ṣṭa

These and the other boundless supreme ones, equal to the dharmadhātu and unequaled,
countless as the element of space,
arisen from the Vajra Sun,
fully entered into this maṇḍala
that is the state of all of space,
bring down from every side, without exception,
the lords of the yoga of the supreme vajra.

Then that vajra yogin, the teacher, sets the yogins in their own separate places:

In the form of a crescent-moon maṇḍala
they should be arranged within the maṇḍala.
Having arranged them all, one should accomplish
the sublime accomplishment of the All-Supreme.
Through accomplishing the summoning of all, the great offering,
the blessing of oneself, and the rest,
and having examined and accomplished that utterly secret maṇḍala,
the master, Vajra Holder of all,
should bring in the vajra disciples.

Here, first of all, the master brings them in. In the assembly maṇḍala, having set the vajrayoginīs in their separate places through the blessing of the three samayas, he should bring in the men as well, and with the awakening mind have them take the samaya of the wrathful one of the Great Vajra and the samaya vows. Having duly placed the boys and the girls, he himself should enter together with the assembly, and perform all the guarding, protecting, and concealing.

Then here is the extensive rite for bringing in the disciples:

Having supremely generated
the unsurpassed awakening mind,
dancing, and offering with palms joined at the crown,
one should bring in all the disciples.
To produce whatever accomplishment is wished,

have the disciple cast a flower.
On whichever yoginī it falls,
that very goddess will be accomplished.
Then, having untied the face covering,
and having received the fee in every way,
through the vajra-lotus empowerment
one should clearly bestow the three samayas.

Here the swearing of the oath and the empowerment are just the same as before. And here the bestowal of the three samayas is this:

Refraining, and discerning each thing,
and the subduing of all the wicked:
the vajra is the very presence of all buddhas,
the awakening mind, great and steadfast.
That weapon all the victors placed in the hand of Samantabhadra,
so that all the teachings might be accomplished;
therefore he is Vajrapāṇi.

Then the supreme secret of the Vajra Sun Blazing like Fire:

Wrath ever arisen from desire,
Vajrasattva, for the sake of those to be tamed,
is the Vajra Sun blazing like fire,
the one who brings supreme terror.

Then the reality of the supreme secret of the ḍākinīs of the supremely secret vajra yoga:

Arisen from the rising of the Vajra Sun,
this shadow of the tathāgatas,
emanating, drinks the blood of the wicked, Māra and all the rest, without exception.

This is the reality of the supreme secret.

Then here is the bell that brings down the supremely secret nature of reality:

The exceedingly wicked and fierce,
the sons of the lord Rudra,
and those sunk deep in sleep:
of these the holder of the supreme vajra has spoken.

Thus spoke the Blessed One. With the vajra khaṭvāṅga banner and pennant that bring down the supremely secret nature of reality, it brings down all the bells, brings about full accomplishment, fells all, and raises them up.

Then the samaya of the supreme yoga:

Great blood together with camphor,
mixed with red sandalwood:
having fully entered into the assembly,
the Vajra Holder, with his vajra,
with the tips of the ring finger and the thumb,
endowed with the supreme union of all space,
if he tastes it like the drink of the moon,
will attain everlasting accomplishment.
Enjoying all desirable things,
while indulging in whatever one wishes,
through the union of the All-Supreme of space
one will attain all accomplishments.
Through the union of the All-Supreme of space,
saying, "all of space,"
and sealing it with the vajra mudrā,
one should devour even the three worlds.
Accomplishments, activities, and likewise bliss:
in this there is nothing at all that is not accomplished.
Through the accomplishment of the hosts of activities
one will accomplish every accomplishment without exception.
Unfailing and supremely accomplished,
it subdues all the wicked;
glorious, robbing away all suffering,
this yoga performs every activity.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke this supreme secret.

Then, with flavors and foods, conduct, dance and song, offerings of music and the like, worship the Protector.
With what has been offered, one should faithfully honor
the great vajra guru, oneself, and others.
Partaking as one wishes
of intoxicating and inebriating drinks,
one should recite, as is fitting, the accompanying recitations of the Vajra Sun Blazing like Fire and the rest.

With songs, music, and dances
taken up according to one's own secret rite, with offerings of various mudrās,
with all the vast offerings
of Trailokyavijaya and the others,
together with the hosts of women,
and with enjoyments of whatever is desired,
having made offering, one should fully accomplish the practice.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke this supreme secret.

Then one should give the encouragement of the gathering of all the tathāgatas and the rest:

Equal to the finest particles of the realms of all beings is the accomplishment of the king of ritual manuals,
the supreme accomplishment of buddhahood and the rest.
That whose distinctions cannot be apprehended
even by an immeasurable intellect,
the bliss bestowed by the tathāgatas,
is the gathering of all that is sublime.
All that wanes will wane,
all that grows will grow;
by seeing it one becomes invisible;
it makes one fearless from every quarter.
Rudra, Indra, Upendra (Viṣṇu), Candra the Moon,
Sūrya the Sun, and the maṇḍalas of the hosts of ḍākinīs:
enraged, with merely the syllable hūṃ,
one reduces them all to ashes.
Having fully entered and seen
the maṇḍala of the yogic ḍākinīs,
you are utterly freed from every evil,
and all of you abide securely.
Henceforth there is no death for you,
and above all no lower realms.
Others cannot overpower you or kill you;
fear nothing at all, and rejoice!

The accomplishments of utmost existence are the supreme ones that the Teacher reveals.
This accomplished samaya vow
should be guarded at all times.
All the buddhas have spoken it in accord:
it is the command of the sublime ritual manual.

The awakening mind must not be abandoned,
nor the sublime Dharma, nor likewise the samaya;
and the master must not be disparaged,
for he is the Vajra Holder of all.
For the benefit of all beings,
and so that all the vehicles may be accomplished,
"the pure taming of the wicked":
thus the holder of the supreme vajra has spoken.
The exceedingly wicked and savage,
and the lord's companions and sons as well,
through the fierce rite of mudrā yoga
one should cast into deep sleep.
Always guard your own samaya;
always worship the tathāgatas;
always make offerings to the guru as well:
if offered to him, the fruit is great.
To give to him
is always to give to all the buddhas.
Giving to him is the accumulation of merit,
and from that accumulation comes supreme accomplishment.
Today your birth has borne its fruit,
because you are firmly established in this.
As equal to the king of samayas
you have been blessed by all the buddhas.
Since all the buddhas and Vajra Holders have empowered you today,
yours is the great kingdom of the three realms:
you are a wheel-turning monarch of power and glory.
Having seen the secret supreme samaya
of the yoginīs of the highest secret of the sublime vajra,

and having eaten the flesh of Māra and the rest,
having attained union with the tathāgatas, you are accomplished.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

From the Śrī Paramādya: the rite of the maṇḍala of the ḍākinīs of supremely secret vajra yoga, supremely accomplished.

Then the supremely secret rite of noble Avalokiteśvara for taming beings:

On cloth one should paint the Blessed One,
the principal, Padmanarteśvara, Lord of the Lotus Dance.
With the dances of saṃsāra's magical displays,
a wheel of lightning whirling all around,
paint the hand emblems, the lotus and the rest,
with mudrās formed like a wheel.
On every side of him
one should paint Bhṛkuṭī and the others,
Raudrī and the others in the forms of their hand emblems,
and the lotus goddesses together with lotuses.
When that maṇḍala has been laid out,
that sublime secret maṇḍala,
having done everything with each of the supreme weapons, one should recite this:

He himself, the buddha, the Blessed One,
is Avalokiteśvara,
who, pure through the means of taming,
performs the dance of play.

This is the supreme vajra.

Just as a red lotus is not stained by the faults of color
from the various faults of the place where it grows,
so the three realms are pure.

This is the bell of the supremely secret nature of reality.

By whatever rites
beings come to be tamed,
by those very rites the lord of yoga,
pure and supreme as the lotus, should purify them.

This is the Dharma samaya of all the vajras.

Then, as is fitting, one should worship with the offerings of the lotus dance and carry out all the rites in sequence.

Then the rite of the Blessed One Ākāśagarbha for accomplishing all aims:

Having drawn the disk of the sun,
on that painted cloth one of great intellect should paint Ākāśagarbha,
green, like beryl.
In one of his hands rests a lotus.
Set within the wheel of his light are
Empowerment and Treasure,
Supreme Victor, Sovereign, and Great Offering.
Having laid out the wheel
of that sublime secret maṇḍala,
with the application of the supreme weapons,
the extensive rite is as before.

Then the supreme vajra:

This sun is sublime;
it beholds all the tathāgatas.
The Blessed One Ākāśagarbha
fulfills every wish.

Then the bell of the Dharma jewel:

Of all fulfillments of wishes,
fulfillment of the wish for wealth is supreme.
And since that too is fully accomplished at will,
freedom from desire is great bliss.

What is not to be given should be given:
the blisses of every desire,
to oneself and to others,
so that every wish may be fulfilled.

This is the supreme samaya.

Through this samaya, supremely,
O Vajrasattva, Great Bliss, swiftly bring about the accomplishment

of the truly sublime, the supreme, the unchanging.
Thus the ways of the supreme secret are the rites, supremely extensive, as they are;
that great supreme one, the essence of all the ritual manuals,
brings about the special accomplishment.

From the Śrī Paramādya: the rite for accomplishing all the ritual manuals.

Then, the supreme practice of all the great accomplishments,
Great Bliss,
the great mudrā of Vajrasattva,
so that the ritual manual of the All-Supreme may be accomplished:
for beings who are not fit vessels,
who commit every evil,
the great being has acted for beings' sake
through seeing and the rest.
For those blind ones who do not see,
who bear the signs of lacking merit and the like,
the causes that are the means of seeing Vajrasattva and the other supreme beings are the binding of the supreme samaya
by the vajra of body, speech, and mind
of Vajrasattva and the other supreme beings:
a samaya hard to transgress.
Because the stable bodies of Vajrasattva and the other beings
are known as their mudrās,
they emanate them for the sake of all accomplishments.
By merely holding these,
Vajrasattva and the other supreme ones are seen, are directly seen,
and are supremely gathered in.
Because by merely binding the mudrā
they are gathered in,
Vajrasattva and the other beings,
fearing its breach, come to be accomplished.
Just as the seal that marks
the command of kings is hard to transgress,

no one at all is able to transgress a clear seal.
Buddhahood itself, or the state of Vajra Holder,
is not attained, even in ten million eons,
as swiftly as it is through holding the supreme mudrā.
In accord with the world that is to be trained,
accomplishments have been taught.
Their means is the mudrā,
which renders all accomplishments supreme.
By merely binding it,
the assembled ones of great bliss,
Vajrasattva and the others, in an instant
make the blessing firm.

So it is said.

Then, having spoken this, the Blessed One brought about a full awakening through the descents of the vajra of the Blessed One. That vajra is skillful and supremely subtle, profound and vast, inconceivable, supremely pure, without beginning or end, inexhaustible and unending, unfailing and unobstructed. It is the great bliss of utterly supreme joy, entire, and mental happiness, entire. It is the great sovereign of the great accomplishment of all the realms of beings, without exception and with none left out, the supreme of all supremely unchanging accomplishments. He then blessed this supreme weapon called "The Supreme Secret of Amogha, the Vajra Secret of Great Bliss," the supreme of the Later Tantra, the supremely secret rite.

"Next I shall explain the rite of the single practice of blessing oneself by the samaya of all the tathāgatas." Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

Each day, first of all, once,
recite the great mudrā and the heart mantra.
Through the single self-blessing
in which the mudrās of all are perfected, one is accomplished.

This is supreme accomplishment.

Then the supremely accomplished rite of practicing the single, supremely secret self-blessing:

Once, in the supreme threefold samaya,
in the chamber of the sublime secret,
having obtained and taken up the vajra and the rest,
one will be blessed by the Vajra Bearer.

Then the thoroughly accomplished, extensive special rite of practicing the single, utterly and supremely secret self-blessing:

Vajra and bell, the nature of all,
I am endowed with a body of various mudrās;
I, the yogin of all the mudrās, become Vajrasattva himself.
Through this rite of accomplishment
Vajrasattva is truly gathered in,
and one is blessed as the great sovereign
of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme.
Unfailingly, oneself is fully blessed,
by its very nature, in every respect.
In short, all the mudrās
are accomplished by binding them oneself.
Because of the self-blessing, and because it is unfailing,
accomplishments come swiftly and without effort;
by practicing with the hosts of activities,
all accomplishments are swiftly achieved.
Through this there is nothing at all that is not accomplished:
accomplishments, activities, and likewise bliss.
By practicing the blessing of all,
one accomplishes everything, the unchanging.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

From the Śrī Paramādya: the rite of blessing all accomplishments, called "The Supreme Secret."

"Next I shall explain the rite of all the supremely secret yogas." Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

Here, first of all, for the sake of its meaning, comes the verbal root of "yoga." "This is exertion": that is the meaning of the verbal root. If one asks, "Exertion in what?" it is said: it is yoga because one applies oneself to recollecting one's own chosen deity. Further, the other terms "perfect gathering," "perfect complete application," and "perfect union" are synonyms that express yoga. If one asks what perfect complete application is: because one follows the practice of the yoga of recollecting one's own chosen deity, it is called the application of practicing the yoga of one's own chosen deity.

If one asks how it is the yoga of all: the samaya yoga is what is called the yoga of all.

Since even all the tathāgatas
do not transgress it,
the mudrā is proclaimed as samaya,
because the form in the mind is made stable.

This is the meaning of samaya. The yoga of following that practice is the samaya yoga, and it is called the yoga of all. Just as what is called a compound comes about by combining many substances, so, because it is the perfect complete application of the application of the mudrā of the nature of all, the yoga of all is the samaya yoga.

If one asks how it is the yoga of the nature of all:

The perfect union with the self of all the buddhas, endowed with their shapes and bodies just as they are,
one should set within one's very self,
and then follow the practice.

This is one's own samaya yoga, which is called the yoga of all. Its following practice is:

Whatever mudrā
each chosen deity binds, through the yoga of that very deity
one should apply that very mudrā.

So it is said.

Then the supremely and thoroughly accomplished extensive rite of following the practice of the most supreme of the supremely secret:

I am all the buddhas,
and I am also the Radiant One.
Therefore, through the yoga of one's own deity,
one should contemplate oneself.

This is called the supremely secret great yoga of all the mudrās.

Then the utterly and supremely accomplished extensive special rite of following the practice of the supreme of the utterly and supremely secret:

In accord with union with one's own deity,
endowed with the empowerment of the various mudrās,
the lord of all the mudrās, the lord of yoga,
becomes supremely accomplished in the unchanging.

The yoga of the supreme samaya of the variety of all the ritual manuals is called perfect complete application.

Then, further, what is called even more utterly and supremely accomplished than the supremely accomplished extensive special rite of following the practice of the supreme of the utterly and supremely secret:

Joining oneself with Vajrasattva, endowed with his voice and body just as they are,
the lord of all, the lord of the yoga of mudrā,
will accomplish the supreme unchanging.
This, following the clear samaya
of all the buddhas,
is the accomplishment of the lord of all yogas:
clear, and the utterly supreme accomplishment.
Through this there is nothing at all that is not accomplished:
accomplishments, activities, and likewise bliss;
the accomplishment of the hosts of activities
and every accomplishment without exception are swiftly achieved.

This is the yoga of the secret samaya, utterly, supremely, and thoroughly accomplished.

Enjoying all desirable things,
and indulging in whatever one wishes,
with these yogas
one should fully worship one's own self.

This is the utterly secret, unsurpassed yoga of the great samaya of the Great Vehicle of all the tathāgatas. It is the yoga of the own samaya of the glory of all the tathāgatas, the samaya yoga of the joy of glorious Vajra Amogha, the glory of great joy. It is the king of the yogas of the accomplishment of the supreme elixir, unsurpassed among all. It is the Tathāgata, the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

It is the sublime, supreme accomplishment in all of supreme Vajrasattva's life and youthfulness, freedom from illness, form and complexion, splendor, might, strength, and vigor, all the supreme accomplishments, glory, good fortune, great joy, utter bliss, and mental happiness. To the full extent, entirely and with nothing left out, it supremely accomplishes the hosts of activities of all accomplishments, such as the state of great sovereign over all the sublime great accomplishments without exception. Merely by sealing, it is fully accomplished in an instant.

If one asks for what reason, it is this:

Conduct depends upon the mudrā;
the mudrā rests upon yoga;
yoga is to be practiced in its special forms;
yoga accomplishes through the samaya.
The mind is empty, like an illusion;
apart from the body it is not established.
The body too is like a wall,
without activity when bereft of mind.
A body bereft of mind,
and a mind bereft of body,
are not established; and likewise this is declared in the rite of mudrā and yoga.
Just as the body is accomplished by the mind,
and the mind too by the body,
so it is with the mudrā through yoga,
and with yoga, accomplished through the samaya.
Thus, because samaya and yoga accomplish one another,
being mutually and always of one nature,
one comes to be accomplished as a tathāgata.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke this utterly and supremely secret, supreme accomplishment.

If one asks how all the mudrās and the yogas are followed in practice:

Because the mudrā is the body made stable,
it is made stable by bliss;
by suffering it is shaken,
or else it meets with death.

Yoga arises from the mind;
it is perfected through mental happiness;
by unhappiness it is shaken,
or else it comes to cessation.
Therefore, with every effort,
follow the practice of mudrā and yoga.
Without austerities and without fixed restrictions,
one should practice with bliss and joy.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke this utterly supreme secret.

If one asks what the bliss of following the practice of the yoga of all the samayas is:

Enjoying all desirable things,
and indulging in whatever one wishes,
through the yoga of one's own deity
one should worship oneself and others.

So it is said. This is the yoga of the still greater Great Vehicle of perfect awakening, the unsurpassed Great Vehicle, the supreme secret of all the tathāgatas, called "The Blessed One Vajrasattva, Supreme Bliss."

If one asks what the following practice of the yoga of all the samayas is:

Through the unbearable hardships of austerity,
one afflicted with suffering is swiftly withered;
through suffering the mind is distracted and is not applied to yoga.
Therefore, enjoying whatever one wishes,
eating everything, and likewise doing everything,
engaging in whatever acts one wishes,
one practices the conduct as one wishes.
Wherever one walks,
or laughs, or speaks,
wherever it may be, it is just so.
Even one who has not entered the maṇḍala,
or who still has obscurations,
as a yogin of one's own deity becomes so even through words.
Through this very yoga

one should accomplish everything.
No evil conduct or wrongdoing whatever will harm one in any way.
Great desire, the nature of all,
the sublime sovereignty, will be accomplished:
the king of all the Vajra Holders,
the All-Supreme, the sublime sovereign.
If buddhahood and the state of a bodhisattva are easily found through this yoga,
what need is there to speak of the rest,
of accomplishments and the hosts of supreme activities?
Unfailing and supremely accomplished,
it brings about the following practice of all the mudrās.
This glorious yoga, which robs away all suffering,
is the supreme unchanging.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke this supreme mental happiness.

If one asks how all yoga is bound:

Without thinking, one speaks of everything;
and likewise, even having thought of everything,
absorbed in wisdom alone,
one is absorbed in its very nature.

If one asks how the binding and the explanation of all yoga are:

Because through union with one's own deity
one is fully joined with all accomplishments, this union with wisdom alone is here called yoga.

This is called the supremely and utterly secret rite of the yoga of all the mudrās.

Then the Blessed One spoke the binding and the explanation of all-yoga, great yoga, and utmost yoga:

Through joining oneself with Vajrasattva,
and joining in turn with all the offerings,
this full joining with all the yogas should be called yoga.

Of it this should be said:
this great reality is accomplished;
its nature, supreme among the supreme,
is utterly and supremely secret,
and it is not to be told to ordinary people.
The vajra master should apply the rite of all-yoga
to a supreme disciple,
one who follows that reality with faith;
to the others, in stages.
In this there is nothing at all that is not accomplished:
accomplishments, activities, and bliss.
By following the practice of all-yoga,
one accomplishes everything unchanging.
Whoever has even this one clear rite of yoga
cannot be overpowered or slain by others,
and will not be overcome by Māra and the rest.
That one will be fully accomplished
as the king, the Vajra Holder, Vajrasattva, the Tathāgata,
the lord of the yoga of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

From the Śrī Paramādya: the supremely secret rite of all the utterly secret yogas.

"Next I shall explain the supremely accomplished tantra of the mudrās. It fully accomplishes all accomplishments of all the ritual manuals, beginning with the supreme accomplishment, and these are unfailing and unobstructed, supremely skillful, subtle, vast and profound, inconceivable and utterly immeasurable, entire and with nothing left out." Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke the wisdom tantra of all the mudrās.

With the lotus feet placed at ease upon the left lap, binding the cross-legged posture of the sattva,
one holds one's own body upright.
By brandishing the vajra one is victorious over all.

For the sake of all supreme accomplishments,
through the vajra of body, speech, and mind,
one becomes Vajrasattva himself.
Through this, Vajrasattva,
or buddhahood itself, radiance itself,
the sovereign of all accomplishments,
will be accomplished in this very life.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva, the stable nature of all.

Even if one has not entered the maṇḍala,
one who has fully taken up the great mudrā will be worshiped and honored with mudrās
even by the sugatas.
Whoever sees this one and bows,
and offers praise and worship,
sees the Teacher and bows to him,
and thereby worships the Lord.
The great sovereign of the perfect bliss of the great passion of all accomplishments is accomplished through the great mudrā,
like a second Vajrasattva.
All accomplishments, those of the gods and the rest,
and the bliss that comes of all activities,
through the blessing of the great mudrā enter in, especially.
Through it there is nothing at all that is not accomplished:
accomplishments, activities, and likewise bliss.
Blessed by the great mudrā,
by the power of practice everything supreme arises.

Then: the mudrā of the great samaya of all the supreme practices. It embraces the samaya, the Dharma, and the activity of all the great maṇḍalas of all the great beings, Vajrasattva and the rest, who are without beginning or end, and all the practices of summoning, causing to enter, bringing down, attracting with passion, and subjugating, without fail. It is called "The Samaya of the Vajra Secret of Great Bliss." Its binding is this:

Joining all the fingers evenly is called the vajra palms-joined.
Binding all the fingertips inward is explained as the vajra bond.
Within the vajra bond,
join the index fingers and the thumbs.
With the right thumb as the sign,
bend the tip and press.
Having bound the five arrows gathered together,
the middle fingers rest within the bond;
thumbs and little fingers are bound as a vajra:
this is its first, supreme vajra.
Having bound that vajra bond,
with the two middle fingers as vajra hooks,
in that very manner of summoning strike your own heart with the hook.
With this king of hooks,
Vajrasattva, the great king,
is summoned by the hook of the vajra of joy.
Then again, practice the near-heart mantra.
Struck fiercely at the heart,
he is tormented by the fire of passion;
his heart stolen, overpowered and delighted,
he swiftly comes, and accomplishment is won.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, Great Passion and Great Bliss, the Great Vajra, the Blessed One, the great Vajradhara.

Likewise, when sealed, all the tathāgatas, the bodhisattva vajras and the rest, and all things stationary and moving, come and are swiftly accomplished. If they do not come, they will be destroyed. This is the mudrā of the supreme heart called "The Samaya of Great Bliss, Vajra Amogha."

The vajra water offering: the vajra palms-joined, with the palms fully extended.

Then, with the first vajra mudrā, the middle fingers as a vajra holding a flower stalk, one should recite. If one empowers with vajra water and the vajra fist, it serves for all accomplishments, such as lordship over all and the increase of life; and if one drinks it, it destroys all suffering.

Then the mudrā for entering the first maṇḍala:

If one binds the three pennants and the khaṭvāṅga,
one rejoices as far as one is able.
Releasing it, circling in the vajra dance,
the great one holds it, circling all around.
The joining in the form of a kaputa is placed upon the crown and lowered;
then, gracefully releasing the index fingers, the little fingers and the rest,
one offers it to the Vajra Bearer.
Through this, even without entering the maṇḍala,
one attains the state of a vajra master,
because by merely entering oneself
the offering is unfailingly accomplished.
Whether complete or incomplete,
or else, once again, however many flowers and other offerings are signified, the mudrā that grants all common accomplishments is the supreme three pennants and khaṭvāṅga:
gracefully releasing the last fingers and the rest,
whirling supremely like flashing lightning,
that is explained as the vajra dance.
Lāsyā, the joyful vajra one,
is worshiped with the offering of the vajra dance.

By bowing with smiling, graceful eyes, one enamors Vajrasattva and all the tathāgatas, and causes them to bow in return. Circling the vajra palms-joined over all, without exception: this is the mudrā of praising all.

The supreme hook of all the tathāgatas is this. Form the vajra bond with the thumbs extended, seated cross-legged; the two index fingers are bent, the middle fingers even, with an opening like a bud. This supreme limb is placed upon the crown. Then, binding the diadem all around on the right side, in front one makes the gesture of tying a knot with the two vajra fists. Having made the binding of the garland, gracefully releasing the little fingers and the rest, one makes the gesture of tying silk streamers on both sides, and seals with evenly joined palms. By this one receives the empowerment of Vajrasattva.

Then, empowered with the water of the vajra nectar of great bliss, one becomes the vajra master of all and the great Vajradhara. With the vajra fist one should bestow a five-pronged vajra, red in color, its prongs blazing with vajra light. The disciple, too, should offer the fee to the master, and should then receive all the empowerments, of the flower and the rest, from the master of all, with the mudrā of homage made by circling the vajra palms-joined. Such is the rite of all the maṇḍalas.

Then the mudrā tantra for practicing the king, the great Vajradhara, accomplished as sovereign of all accomplishments. With the hook of the great secret of great bliss, by reciting one's own heart mantra once, one invites Vajrasattva. Seated in the cross-legged posture of the sattva, one presents the offering of the vajra dance, a dance like flashing lightning. Holding the vajra fist, one proudly raises the vajra weapon and the rest, and bows with Lāsyā, the joyful vajra one.

Singing songs with vajra song,
reciting for whatever aim one pleases,
and worshiping properly with the offering of vajra dance,
one swiftly attains accomplishment.

Then this secret song of the primal vajra should be sung, beginning with the first line and so on:

Mind passionately attached to the supreme bliss of all,
Vajrasattva, you are utterly joyful.
May I become great bliss, steadfast and outpouring.
Discerning each thing, swiftly accomplishing, I pay homage.

With this very vajra song
one praises Great Bliss once.
Impassioned, he is deeply delighted,
and, having become steadfast, he brings accomplishment.

With the great mudrā one should bless oneself once by means of the heart mantra.

With the tip of the tongue utterly unmoving,
and the teeth and both lips well joined,
vajra speech, free of melody,
brings all the families to full accomplishment.

The ribita and other songs of hūṃ, ornamented, as one wishes and as one is able,
the six-note and other sweet songs,
and songs of grāma and rāga as one wishes:
with the vajra dance of utmost joy

one should sing the supreme gandharva song.

This speech is supremely accomplished: among all recitations, it is the recitation of whatever is needed, as much as one desires. The aim of recitation is to know the near-heart mantra; it is the practice of Vajrasattva. Having blessed oneself with the great mudrā, gazing likewise with the vajra gaze, holding with Vajra Pride, one should accomplish the Blessed One by the syllable hūṃ and the recitation of song. Accomplishing at once is done through the recitation of what one desires, just as it is.

Then, after that, according to one's diligence, as one wishes, as one desires, and as one has been blessed, through the sung recitation of the syllable hūṃ, by the force of the joy of Vajra Amogha, the great joy, one accomplishes all things, Vajrasattva and the rest, just as one wishes and as gives delight.

Next, the great mudrā:
by the vajra of body, speech, and mind,
following the form just as it is,
fully endowed with the mudrā of the sign,
one becomes the great being oneself.

Next, the samaya mudrā is the vajra of great bliss, as explained. From it arise the vajra arrow and the rest. Namely: simply bending the two index fingers, facing outward, is the vajra arrow. Binding the thumbs together is the vajra ki li ki la. Opening the two thumbs, with the tips of the two index fingers, the middle fingers not intertwined, and the ring and little fingers level and opened, is the vajra makara. Circling and resting on the two thighs is Vajrakāmeśvarī. Circling the vajra palms at one's own heart, gazing with flirtatious eyes, bowing with the head, placing them on the crown and lowering them; scattering upward, pouring downward, joining the thumbs and circling, and stretching out fully and anointing: these are declared to be the vajra offerings that present flowers, incense, lamps, and scent.

In the outer corners: circling the vajra palms at the heart is flirtation. Circling them around the mouth and placing them on the crown. With the left hand, its index finger bent, hooked by the right, one plays the vajra lute; this is the praise of vajra song. Dancing with the two vajra fists, and binding the vajra palms at the crown. In the vajra bond, bound inward, the right index finger is Aṅkuśī, the hook. With the two thumbs, the knot. The knot of the index fingers and thumbs. Binding the thumbs within the two.

Next, the secret samayas: the secret hook of the great bliss vajra samaya. What arises from it is this:

Joining thumb and index tip, the tips of the middle fingers are made like eyeballs, holding.
Beneath the vajra of the middle fingers
one should press and squeeze with the thumbs.
Like the vajra guide,
the ring and little fingers opened,
circled and placed on the knees.
All the others are as explained.

Lowering the samaya vajra: if the two index fingers are bent in two, it is the vajra fist.

Next, the karma and samaya mudrās are made with the two fists holding vajras. Namely: the left in pride, the right held at the heart in the manner of brandishing: this is Vajra Pride. Holding at the heart with brandishing. The manner of brandishing the vajra is ki li ki la. Raising the banner. Brandishing both in pride is the vajra sovereign lady of all desires. In the corners, the vajra dancer is as explained. Lāsyā and the others are likewise.

For the vajra gatekeepers: with the knot of the left, the right hand coming above it, one gives the vajra command. With that, the right is brandished. Holding the index fingers and thumbs at the wrists, one knots them and squeezes. It is in the manner of ringing a bell at one's own heart. It is also said: "By these one should summon, bind, and cause all to enter, and accomplish them unfailingly."

These signs of supreme accomplishment, done properly, swiftly bestow the great accomplishment.
Through these virtuous primal mudrās
even those without a maṇḍala succeed.

Next, the binding of the great mudrā that accomplishes even for one without accomplishment: it should be practiced in the manner of a garland of the four mudrās of the primal vajra. Causing to enter, summoning, making steadfast, and the activities are done by gaze. One should place it at the sign, the navel, the heart, the place of empowerment, and the crown. Placing the middle-finger vajra at the heart, the sign, the mouth, and the place of empowerment, one should drink. The vajras of the index, middle, ring, and little fingers. Brandishing at the shoulders, the heart, the tongue, and the crown. Producing in the sky, the index and ring fingers blazing, joy at the heart, and circling around one's own body. Having circled all, one should place it on all the sense faculties. The middle-finger vajra touches all the sense faculties, by performing its own action. Placing it at the place of empowerment, it likewise brings accomplishment. It is done by placing it on the ground. Circling everywhere, one should emanate with the mind. Unsmiling, wrathful, blazing, and moving: thus one gazes with the gaze. Eating, drinking, moving the hips, and commanding with the crown. Circling everywhere, and with mindfulness everywhere. The four vajras of the little fingers, thumbs, and middle fingers are made at the heart. With the two index fingers, together with the syllable hūṃ, one should summon. With the middle-finger vajra one makes an eye horizontally on the forehead.

Binding it at one's own heart, gazing beneath the earth with an unmoving, unblinking gaze, one should say ha hūṃ dhaṃ. Having drawn the faces of yakṣas and the like, one summons them with the vajra. If it is placed in the lower direction, they become constant. If it is placed in the middle of the mouth, they fully enter. If one bows, they make offering. By the heart they are accomplished. Tearing all the fingers apart at once is the action of mind. Having bound it: jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ. Binding it with the middle fingers outside, one circles the crown, the heart, the mouth, and the directions. Placing it at the heart, one meditates on it as one's own vajra. One meditates on oneself as a bodhisattva. One recollects oneself as the Tathāgata. One recollects oneself as the great Vajradhara.

Next, the mudrā tantra for accomplishing the sets of rites. The mudrās arising from the vajra dance are unfailing and unobstructed even by me, Vajradhara, and by all the tathāgatas. The rite of the uṣṇīṣa of the supreme vajra body: squeezing the vajra bond, the jewel of the middle fingers, circling, the vajra of all the fingers, and the wheel of light rays of the remaining fingers. With the two wrathful vajra fists one turns the wheel of the directions, circling. Circling at the mouth. By lowering it to the heart and making it blaze, there is in all directions a fence of blazing vajras, which I too, the great wrathful one, the blazing vajra, am able to enter. One should declare the samaya. One undertakes the practice.

By the seizings of Vajrasattva's vajra gaze, the third-day, the fourth-day, the recurring, the constant, and the immeasurable are fully pacified, with an eye that circles and does not blink. The rite with the two vajra fists, the hook-knot of the little fingers, and the two index fingers level: it is placed firmly at the heart. This is the action. One should press down with the tips of the index fingers. Laughing, with a beaming face. Having circled, one should likewise place it at the ūrṇā between the brows. Binding the vajra with two khaṭvāṅgas, the little fingers in the manner of perfecting the vajra, it is increased. This is the way of the condensed meaning. Lifting with the vajra. Snatching with the palms. Striking with the vajra.

In the vajra bond, the two index fingers bent, made level and placed inside, with the two thumbs opened as fangs: this is the mudrā of Vajrayakṣa. With it, striking the palm on the forehead. Rubbing the nails of the index fingers. Showing the middle-finger vajra. Having done so, one swiftly releases the mudrā. Joining the fingers is the vajra uṣṇīṣa.

Two tripatāka hands, one facing upward and one facing downward, making a knot of the index and middle fingers and bringing those index and middle fingers together: this is the rite of Vajrahūṃkāra. Squeezing the knot. Releasing the mudrā all at once. Squeezing, then tearing apart. Striking with the middle fingers, in the manner of falling from the sky. Also in the manner of raising up. The two tripatāka hands level, the tips of the little fingers forming a vajra, the middle fingers encircled by the knot, one places the tips of the index fingers at the place of empowerment.

Splitting is done with the syllable hūṃ. Freeing from grahas is done with the syllables hūṃ mu. Raising from death is done with the syllable a. Increasing life is done with the song of the syllable hūṃ. Perfect protection is done with the Dharma speech of the syllable haṃ.

Having bound the great lotus, one recites as much as one desires. Or else, with the lotus fist, the left in pride, a fire offering of butter, sesame oil, sesame, rice, and mineral powder is supremely effective:
oṃ ni bar ṇa sarba dharma tā bajra ha ni haṃ
oṃ bi ra jo bi ga ta sarba dha rma bajra ha ri ṇi haṃ oṃ saṃ no pas rba dharma pra ti bi dha bajra ha ri ṇi haṃ oṃ ni ri ti mi ta sarba dha rma tā bajra ha ra ṇi haṃ
oṃ sva bhā ba bha sa ra sarba dha rma ha ri ṇi haṃ

With two ka ta ka hands, in the manner of perfecting the vajra bond, rubbing the nails. Moving the vajra bond downward and upward. Releasing the little fingers and the rest of the vajra bond is dance. The index-finger vajra of the vajra bond brings forth speech. By the samaya hook of Great Bliss, Vajra Amogha, one clearly displays Vajrasattva and the others in all things, stable and moving, in the manner of reflections, and in the manner of echoes one causes all sentient beings and oneself to hear the truth.

Binding the two fists of Vajrakrodha, the rite of the vajra gaze. Namely, giving an unsmiling gaze. Rolling the eyeballs upward. By closing them, the target swiftly falls. Raising from below. Also sweeping. Binding the two vajra fists, bending the index fingers and circling, with a terrifying face, fangs bared, one brings about immobility. All the limbs go slack. One falls into deep sleep with mouth agape. Striking at one's own heart. Swift tasting.

The rite of raising up from below: binding the two vajra fists, the mouth agape, having a terrifying mouth, with a crown whose hair stands on end, it is done with the syllable bho. Pressing with the vajra fist, the threatening forefinger at the head together with the syllable hūṃ, and oneself swiftly enraged: this causes falling.

The mudrā of Vajrayakṣa, with the ring and little fingers level and opened as a banner, and the rite of the armlet of the supreme victory banner: bowing, laughing, lolling the tongue, brandishing the two shoulders in pride, and raising the victory banner.

Seated in the sattva cross-legged posture, by brandishing the vajra itself: blowing breath into the sky, and with a gaze that moves all about and closes, this is the way to bring down rain. And with the recitation of the wrathful Vajra Sun Blazing like Fire, stealing the sight, circling the limbs with cold, and making everything blaze intensely, one brings it down.

In the vajra bond, this is Vajra Mindfulness. In the vajra bond, the left index finger bent as the stick and gathered by the right index finger is the vajra lute. Rubbing the palms of the vajra bond. The middle fingers level like a bud form the tongue. This is the mudrā of the vajra of utmost joy. The rite of the great bliss vajra offering is the recitation of the primal song, as much as one desires.

Unmoving, laughing, and summoning are done by Aṅkuśī of the vajra gaze of utmost joy. Holding one's own lower lip in with the teeth. Moving one's own organ. Through the vajra dance of utmost joy there is also the command one desires in the mind: if even the Blessed One Vajrasattva, when it is applied to him, cannot transgress it, what need is there to speak of other things, stable or moving?

The two thumbs of the vajra palms, in the sattva cross-legged posture, with the index fingers raised: this is the supreme body of the Blessed One Vajrasattva. By holding it for just a single instant one is thoroughly blessed, and having held and worshiped the Blessed One, one accomplishes him; it brings success and serves every purpose among all the accomplishments. Placing it on the crown, one should circle it clockwise above. Placing it on the ground, one should draw it upward with a wrathful frown. If one draws an image of a yakṣa and places it at its heart, it becomes a servant. At a shrine of Maheśvara (Śiva), one should recite wrathfully. At a shrine of the mātṛkās, one should add the syllable bhyo to the binding; then all the mātṛkās with their retinues will render service and carry out every command, such as making music and the like.

With the mudrā of brandishing the vajra and a laughing face joined with wrath, the rite is to be done in this way: when they have assembled, one should accomplish it pressing down with the left foot. One should evoke a maiden in front and apply the two eyes to captivate her. Having drawn a vulva (bhaga), one should gaze at it and practice. Pressing Maheśvara down with the left foot, one should apply the syllable hūṃ. Piercing Kāmeśvara, the lord of desire, with the vajra arrow, one then places it facing downward and brandishes it. This is the explanation called the samaya of great bliss through the secret vajra offering.

Making everything vajra: with the two vajra fists one binds on the armor, placing them two by two at the crown and at the place of empowerment, two at the two sides, and likewise binding silk streamers in the manner of a garland. Shooting the vajra arrow to the left. The Vajra Proud One; also the great mudrā.

This is the extensive rite of the tantra of all mudrās, from the Śrī Paramādya.

Next, the mudrā tantra of all the tathāgatas: it is Sattvavajrī. The fist of all the tathāgatas. When empowerment has been conferred with Vajraratna, one should give the five-pronged vajra with its light rays. The offerings are made with the level palms, by scattering upward and the rest, as appropriate.

Binding the two tathāgata fists: the left index finger, facing outward, is grasped by the right fist facing it. This is called the fist of all the tathāgatas of supreme awakening, the perfect awakening of all the tathāgatas. By binding this unfailing and unobstructed mudrā, one becomes irreversible from unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening, endowed with its fruit, and cannot be overcome by Māra or others. Whoever binds this mudrā realizes the very state of a tathāgata. To worship such a one is to worship all the tathāgatas. Herein is the extensive rite of all the great mudrās.

The samaya mudrā is the great lotus. The vajra mudrā. It brings realization as all the tathāgatas. To worship such a one is to worship all the tathāgatas. The supreme body has been explained. The vajra karma mudrā is explained.

The vajra palms stretched downward, the tips of thumbs and index fingers bound, raised from the heart, with the tips placed firmly at the place of empowerment: this is Ratnavajrī. That same, with the two upward-facing index fingers bent outward, is the vajra lotus. Sattvavajrī is the binding of the middle fingers outside. The Dharma mudrā.

Next, the karma mudrā is explained as the vajra fist. The left hand, together with the robe, is held at one's own heart in the manner of raising, and the right presses the earth: this is called the Complete Victory Maker, and by it the forces of Māra are crushed. That same, turned around and held facing upward, is called Exalting: it raises up from downfalls and bestows prophecy. That same, opening a lotus petal at the edge of the robe, is the source of phenomena (dharmodaya): it purifies all phenomena. That same, held as the tripatāka, is the raising one: it bestows accomplishment without doubt. These perform their actions with the right hand, are unfailing, and succeed merely by being bound. The rest are done by holding them as appropriate.

Next, the karma mudrās: the fist of all the tathāgatas torments with illness. Purifying the eyes. Placing at the heart. Sweeping. Snatching with the fist. Eating. Enraged, one should scatter. Drawing out the kīla. Striking the heel. Having written the syllable oṃ, one should erase it. One should seize with the teeth. One should strike, together with the syllable hūṃ. Having drawn a weapon, one should erase it. One should perform fire offerings everywhere. One should perform a fire offering of dūrvā grass. Placing it on the crown, one should act by the gaze. Holding a khaṭvāṅga above. One should circle it in one's own house. One should place it in one's own house. One should cause it to enter. One should draw it out from the heart. One should circle it around the body. Bringing forth speech. One should squeeze it at the heart.

The great mudrā of all the tathāgatas is the supreme body. One should make it firm. One should place it on the sense faculties. On the mouth. One should circle it right there. One should place it on the forehead. At the heart. On the two shoulders. On the two thighs. Binding a garland. On the sense faculties. On the crown. On the face. Drawing it out from the mouth. One should circle it everywhere. One should circle it in the directions. Recollecting oneself and others as tathāgatas. Recollection from the heart. Placing it at the heart, one should generate joy. One should generate buddhahood itself. Meditating on being all the buddhas. One should place it on the five aggregates. One should spin it like a potter's wheel. Mindfulness of the body. One should place the tongue. One should long intensely with the mind. Recollection of generosity. Moral discipline. Loving-kindness. Diligence. Samādhi. Wisdom. Primordial wisdom. Power. Skillful means.

Definitive expression. Dhāraṇī. The grounds. Conduct. The discriminating knowledges. The unshared qualities. Dharma. Karma. Various bodies. The welfare of sentient beings. The buddhas too are the aim. Body. Speech. Mind. The Great Vajra.

Next, the speech mudrā of all the tathāgatas is the Dharma speech of the mudrā, endowed with a sound of very deep tone; by it the speech of all the tathāgatas is accomplished without obstruction. Then recitation is done through recollection. The same holds for accomplishment. Application to the rites is done by recollecting all the tathāgatas. This is the binding of the mudrās of all the tathāgatas.

Next, the binding of the mudrās of Vajra Sun Blazing like Fire. Here the great mudrā is conformity of one's whole being. The tantra of the samaya mudrā: binding the vajra bond inward and placing the thumb vajra within the blazing circle of all the fingers, one is able to burn, cook, and reduce to ashes the whole of the three realms, and the Blessed One too brings them under control. If, with that same mudrā, the left finger makes the threatening gesture and one summons with the hook of the right, everything is summoned.

The mudrā of Vajrahūṃkāra: with the vajra of the two wrathful vajra fists one binds the hook of the little fingers, and making the threatening gesture with it, one experiences all rites and all accomplishments. Binding the index fingers with the vajra palms, one should set the wrathful frown downward; swiftly radiating sparks and moving: this is the vajra frown. Burning everything, taming everything, and thoroughly subduing: this is the mudrā of the frown.

Turning the vajra palms well, the left index finger is the hook: it is effective for summoning, causing to enter, and all accomplishments. The vajra lotus with the middle fingers level is the treasury of the bud. The vajra lotus cuts through everything. The vajra bond: with a ring of thumb and index finger, the hūṃ of the right grasps the index finger; it summons all, causes them to enter, and is supremely accomplished. Arising from Vajrahūṃkāra: the right index finger grasps the syllable hūṃ of the left. This is called drawing the bowstring; it makes all impassioned and pierces them. From the vajra bond comes the supreme mudrā of Vajrahūṃkāra. In the vajra bond, the left vajra fist is fully grasped by the right, marked with a trident; it tears everything apart.

The little finger of Vajrahūṃkāra's right fist fully extended and placed upon the left hand is the raising of the khaṭvāṅga. It breaks open and tears apart the seals of all the malevolent ones, and all their implements for sealing, killing, eating, and so on are raised with the right hand, in the manner of holding a wheel, and cast away: it cuts everything and causes it to be cut. This is the wrathful vajra of the Great Vajra. Bringing down the right vajra and joining it: the tripatāka with petals radiating and moving. With the thumbs and the two index fingers of the vajra bond, the ring fingers arising from the vajra are joined level and the little fingers opened. It brings every glory, brings complete victory, crushes all the malevolent, and brings everything down.

The empowerment of Vajrasattva is explained.

For all of the vajra family,
making the vajra palms level,
hanging silk streamers with the two index fingers,
and circling the vajra of thumbs and ring fingers,
one confers empowerment.

The blazing five-pronged vajra should be received from the hand. Offering the master a fee with whatever one can afford, one will accomplish the perfect supreme of all accomplishments. So spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

The vajra mudrā arises from Vajra ti rinti ri; it accomplishes everything unfailingly. Next, the four karma mudrās are the goddesses of the samaya mudrās.

Next, the karma samaya of the Blessed One: with the left vajra fist, the pride that accomplishes everything, and with the right vajra fist, brandishing the vajra. By this one accomplishes, for all, making faint, blazing, burning, falling, sealing, killing, raising up, victory over the three realms, firm application to everything stable and moving, accomplishments, and everything supreme.

Next, the karma mudrā: the vajra fist with the index finger in the threatening gesture is the wrathful vajra fist. Their action is the samaya mudrā. With the two index fingers one summons everything. With the other at the heart, and with the right, one cuts down all the malevolent. With the wrist knot, by hooking the right wrathful one, one summons all and makes them fully enter. Shooting the arrow with brandishing. Likewise, through the application of vajra dance of the vajra trident and the rest, one's own mudrā is cast upward. The karma samaya mudrā is cast upward. Making the karma samaya mudrā twofold, the karma mudrā of the vajra palms: the application of vajra dance, casting one's own samaya mudrā upward. Sealing, accomplishing, killing, bringing down, and reviving everything: this is the offering of vajra dance.

Next, the speech mudrā is the wrathful vajra speech, fierce and clear: the hūṃ that resounds like thunder from the clouds, the syllable hūṃ with its subtle sound. One should accomplish the aim of the practice.

Then, if it is not accomplished, one binds the karma mudrā. The practice is likewise to perform the great mudrā once. Firm application to the rites is done with the frown. It arises from Vajrahūṃkāra. The fierce fire offering of sesame oil mixed with mustard seed is done with the right hand. With that same one dispatches. With that same one binds everything. Immobility itself. Displaying sleep. The threatening finger of the wrathful vajra gaze. The mudrā is loosened. Joining the two index fingers well and then opening them. Binding a ring with those same fingers. Squeezing with the fangs. Then tearing apart. Striking with the right. Blazing with the two index fingers. The right index finger, with the left in the manner of falling. Opening the two index fingers as blazing. Cutting. With the two index fingers, cutting the tips of the joined fingers. Rubbing the two hands forcefully. Flinging all the fingers in every direction. Releasing the mudrā all at once. The threatening finger, straight and moving. The threatening finger, the right index finger moving like a serpent's hood. Holding the right index finger with the fangs. Displaying weeping, laughing, running, and the like. Snapping the fingers with the two index fingers. Placing the right close upon the left. Placing it firmly on the ground. One should move it. One should dance. Drawing out. One should bless. One should bless everywhere. Laughing "ha ha." One should summon by circling. One should draw. One should dispatch. Circling it all around, one should make it sink. Then casting away. Casting away swiftly. Likewise, drawing in from all sides. Likewise, drawing upward. One should roar oneself. One should weep. One should strike oneself. One should deliver blows to the heart. One should tear out one's own hair oneself. Binding into enmity. One should brandish one's own clothes. Wrathfully, one likewise displays blazing. The right index finger is the hook. With that same one causes to enter fully. The snap of the right. The snap of the left. Touching the tongue is done with the two index fingers. The hair on the limbs curls clockwise. Causing falling and the like. Meditating at the proper times. With the wrathful gaze, desiring with the mind at the foot of trees. Likewise on the ground. The navel. The eyebrows. The teeth. Blowing. Striking with the mudrā. Raising the victory banner. With a terrifying gaze joined with wrath. With an unsmiling gaze. Likewise, by binding the blazing. Circling the mudrā. One should place the index-finger vajra from the uṣṇīṣa. Likewise at the heart. Releasing that mudrā. Raising the mudrā to the side. Joining the tips of the index fingers firmly. By the gaze, falling from above to below. Drawing from below upward. The wrathful syllable hūṃ. With the terrifying gaze. Tearing with the vajra khaṭvāṅga, wrathfully. Meditating on the vajra at the heart. Tearing with the vajra trident. One should destroy the maṇḍala of the malevolent. With the syllable hūṃ. ha. Exhaling to the right. With that same, brandishing the coin. The wrathful gaze likewise. Pressing with the right fist and seizing the teeth with the left, one should summon. Brandishing the coin is done with both. Tearing the bell of the left. Likewise, the right fist of Vajrahūṃkāra is pressed by the vajra wrath of the left, and one should snatch with the fist whose little-finger ring is released. Tearing the bell of the right. Felling without effort is done by the mind. Tearing the wheel. Tearing the trident. The left of Vajrahūṃkāra is pressed by the right vajra fist, and likewise, releasing the ring, one should snatch. Recollecting the vajra, the bodhisattvas, all the tathāgatas, and the great Vajradhara, one should accomplish it before oneself.

This is the mudrā tantra of the king Vajrakrodha.

Next, the mudrā tantra of noble Avalokiteśvara. The great lotus: the vajra palms turned face down, the middle fingers, thumbs, and little fingers opened as four petals; it attains all dharmatā and makes all impassioned. The great mudrās are likewise. The samaya mudrā is the vajra lotus, as explained. They arise from the vajra bond of the lotus families. Among them, the lotus tathāgatas arise from the inner vajra bond. The mudrā named after a samādhi, like the lotus of the Tathāgata opened upward in the lap, is called the Lotus Eye. The vajra lotus of the great vajra lotus, binding the vajra at the heart, is called the Vajra Lotus Clinging to the Mountain. The index fingers of the lord of the great lotus made level, facing downward, and held in the lap: this is the mudrā called Lotus Tārā. The great lotus holding two jewel banners, and with it the giving of the lotus. These are called: those attained from all dharmatā, making all impassioned, delivering from all the masses of suffering of existence, and the perfect accomplishment that completely fulfills every intention. Tearing with the vajra trident.

Next, the mudrās of the lords of the lotus deities arise from the outer bond. Among them, that of Amogharāja: the two index fingers below, budded, are to be placed at the frown; this is the Lotus Frown Eye. The vajra bond facing upward and blazing is that of Nīlakaṇṭha. The left index finger bent and fully grasped by the thumb in the shape of a conch, the right thumb raised and lifted, the lotus budded with the little fingers level, and the wheel with the remaining fingers fully extended: this is the Lotus Vaiṣṇavī. The hook of the two index fingers bent, arising from the lotus, and the lotus with the remaining fingers opened, is called "arising from the lotus." That of Hayagrīva: the hook with the two index fingers tightly joined, the mouth of the mare stretched fully open, the tips of the ring fingers and the two little fingers fully extended and spread apart, the left moving and held: this is called the lotus hook. Through these, accomplishment in all empowerments, all rites, all liberations, and all summonings is unfailing.

The samādhi mudrā of the supreme body of the Tathāgata is explained.

Then, having bound the karma mudrā, the khaṭvāṅga, it is done by holding the samaya mudrās of the entire lotus family just as they are. Summoning the dhāraṇī through the samādhi of speech is knowing the meaning of recitation with the speech of the Dharma. Having bound the great lotus, one should perform the fire offering with the mind. With the mind one should pacify. One should protect the substances. One should purify. Thus one should accomplish it. This is the collection of mudrās for all rites. This is the tantra of the mudrās of noble Avalokiteśvara.

Then the great mudrā of Ākāśagarbha is likewise. The samaya mudrā is Vajraratna: the tips of the four digits, the thumbs and index fingers, are made even and drawn tightly downward. With the vajra palms joined for empowerment, one obtains all empowerments. With it one confers empowerment just as it should be. That same vajra is placed at the heart, facing upward. That same one, made into a fist: placing the fist at the crown of the head, one should present offerings of flowers and so on. Setting this same one as two, it is held as the karma mudrā. It is perfectly complete for obtaining the offering of the treasure of jewels of all empowerments. The karma samaya of the Blessed One brings clarity to full completion. Pressing the left fist at the heart, the right opens in the gesture of giving wealth. This is done by the jewel fist mudrā itself. The heart speech is recited by the nāga king, and he is commanded and likewise put to work in the rites. If it is not accomplished, Vajraratna, abiding in empowerment, issues commands to all from the sky. This is the collection of all the Dharma mudrās.

Unfailing, unobstructed accomplishment,
The accomplishing of the host of rites,
And the commands of the speech mudrā,
All swiftly arise from the sky.

So spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva. This is the extensive ritual of all empowerments.

Then the outer tantra. The great mudrā is a bowl in the left hand and, in the right, an arrow aimed. Their samaya is made for entering. The thumbs and little fingers of the two hands are bound together like a chain of rings, and the index, middle, and ring fingers are made even, marked with three prongs: this is that of the brothers. Held just so, it is that of the goddesses. In the bound vajra, the tips of the four index and little fingers are joined to the four fingertips of the middle and ring fingers: this is the samaya that the goddesses find hard to transgress. It is the maṇḍala mudrā of the four sisters. When one is unable to carry out the examination of the maṇḍala, then if one binds this and looks, the examination, the seeing, and the worship of the maṇḍala will be accomplished as one wishes.

That of the lords of the hooded ones: binding the thumbs, the fingers facing outward are raised as a hood. This is the samaya for summoning, causing to enter, binding, and bringing under control all the nāgas; if they transgress it, they will die. The mahoraga hand accomplishes everything. By the method of tying the four middle and ring fingers well into a knot, they are raised and drawn together, and one should strike with the two tips of the two little fingers. When it is extended, all poisons blaze. When it is fully drawn in, all poisons are bound. By this same one, all poisons are eaten, transferred, and rendered harmless. A maṇḍala of the malevolent should be swiftly destroyed by the vajra held in the vajra fist, in wrath. This is the tantra of the outer mudrās.

Then the various mudrās of the Blessed One, the All-Supreme, the sublime Īśvara: placing the vajra palms in equipoise,

Three banners are fully held;
This is called Vajra Viṣṇu.
When released, it cuts down all.

With the vajra wheel mudrā, having cut off the heads of all the enemies that are the afflictions, all that is supreme is accomplished.

The little fingers joined with the thumbs,
The two hands above and below,
The three middle fingers marked as three prongs:
This accomplishes what is called Vajradharī.

The vajra samaya mudrā called Vajracaṇḍeśvarī is the unfailing samaya.

Placing vajra and lotus in equipoise,
Whatever is released, just as it is, so it becomes;
Even buddhahood, so very hard to gain,
Is accomplished by the recitation of the practice.

The mudrā called Vajra Dharmatā is Tārā.

The index fingers, bound, are hooked outward,
The thumbs covering the vajra:
It bestows the jewel of the Great Vajra.

This is the mudrā called Vajra Jewel.

Then this is the tantra of the mudrās of the assembly of all the accomplishments accomplished by the sublime Lord of All. There, first of all, the mudrā that accomplishes the first hundred accomplishments becomes the thousand great accomplishing mudrās. Just as they are, through the samaya mudrās and emblems, by the great vajra union of the right and left hands, they become the second thousand, which accomplishes the accomplishments of all rites; this is by binding the vajra bond inward. Thus the mudrās arising from the fist holding one's own emblem and from the vajra dance, the vajra rite-performers that accomplish the hundred groups of rites of the first thousand, are the third. Thus the karma mudrās that accomplish all rites with one or the other of the right and left hands are the fourth thousand. Thus the binding of all mudrās without exception is accomplished by binding all the mudrās with a single hand.

Thus, for the sake of all beings,
Together with retinue, samaya, and rites,
The All-Supreme, the sublime Īśvara,
Was accomplished by Vajrasattva.

Thus this vast and marvelous secret,
Which joins all beings to the supreme,
The unsurpassed highest of the Paramādya,
The clear tantra, I have rightly explained.

From Śrī Paramādya, the King of Ritual Manuals, this is the tantra of the mudrās of all the families.

Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
The steadfast lord of all secrets,
Spoke this sublime weapon
Of the great tantra of the mudrās of reality itself.

Then the Blessed One, the Supremely Secret, said: "I shall explain the supreme host of rites of the secret maṇḍala of all the rites of the Blessed One Vajrasattva: skillful and subtle, vast and profound, inconceivable and immeasurable, clear and unequaled, the unsurpassed highest, bringing about the secret of endless accomplishment, the accomplisher of the rites of all accomplishments, complete and without remainder, unfailing and unobstructed."

Holding the lower lip with the teeth, with great joy, gazing with the gaze of the primal vajra, through these actions one accomplishes all the hosts of rites of all accomplishments, complete and without remainder. This is the mudrā called Vajra Eye, the great secret vajra of Great Bliss.

Laughing with the great laughter of all the tathāgatas, through steadfast, vajra-like actions one accomplishes the rites of all the tathāgatas. This is the mudrā called the Eye of All the Tathāgatas.

With a wrathful frown, the agent endowed with the wrathful vajra gaze, through the syllable hūṃ of the great breath of the nose, is the accomplishment of all vajras. This is the mudrā called the Eye of the Gaze Blazing with Fire like the Vajra Sun.

Then, smiling slightly, through the actions of the vajra gaze of the wisdom of the rites of all accomplishments, one accomplishes the hosts of wisdom of the rites of all accomplishments, such as the vajra of the samādhi of even lips. This is the mudrā called the Great Lotus Eye.

Through a samādhi accompanied by pride, through the actions of a subtly smiling gaze, with a smiling face and with laughter, one accomplishes in the sky the host of rites of all accomplishments. This is the Great Vajra, the mudrā called the Jewel Eye.

Unfailing, unobstructed accomplishment,
The very nature of truth, without fear:
All the buddhas and I as well
Bestow the excellent accomplishment of the secret mudrās,
Even on one who has not entered the maṇḍala.

Then, for that reason, Paramādya,
The Blessed One, supreme Vajrasattva,
First, the exceedingly skillful, subtle, profound, vast, and inconceivable:

The supreme of the supreme, the first,
Supremely secret and sublime,
The host of mudrās such as the smile
Was spoken by Vajrasattva.

The great Vajradhara, the master,
Supremely clear and full of delight,
Even without the heart mantras and the rest,
Swiftly accomplishes everything.

Heart mantra, mudrā, mantra, and vidyā:
This practice is marvelous.
Since it fully accomplishes all accomplishments,
Even what was not accomplished will be accomplished.

If one has not attained accomplishment
And is not endowed with abundant merit,
If one practices the sublime self, Vajrasattva,
It will swiftly be accomplished.

If, though one has practiced
Supreme Vajrasattva
With the heart mantra and the rest and the near-heart mantra,
It is not accomplished,
One should practice with the smile mudrā.

For this reason this secret consort
Brings great delight to Vajrasattva.
Vajrasattva has great joy,
And through that delight it is swiftly accomplished.

This great reality, which is accomplished,
The very nature of the sublime and supreme,
Supremely secret, endowed with merit,
Is not to be told to ordinary people.

Whatever accomplishment of Vajrasattva
Belongs to one who follows the accomplishment of that reality,
If one desires the supreme accomplishment,
One should not likewise give it to others.

To one who has not become accomplished,
To him one should give that reality.
By that very smile, swiftly,
It will be accomplished through blessing oneself.

This great and pure reality
Is the supreme weapon of the Vajra Bearer.

The unsurpassed tantra of mudrās,
Supremely secret, has been explained.

To the vajra master, all-supreme,
Who follows that reality with faith,
If one desires the supreme accomplishment,
One should likewise give it to others too.

Whoever possesses
This single tantra of mudrās
Cannot be overcome or slain
By Māra and the others.

For him the Victor, the Vajra Holder,
The All-Supreme, is asked for every accomplishment;
Asked for all, doing all, in every way,
All his commands will be accomplished.

This is the ritual of the unsurpassed, supremely secret mudrās of the samaya of the very glory of the holy, supreme master of secrets, Śrī Paramādya.

Then the Blessed One Vajrasattva said: "I shall explain the paramādya of the Blessed One Śrī Paramādya Vajrasattva: supremely skillful, subtle, profound, and vast, inconceivable, endless and utterly limitless, immeasurable and incalculable, unsurpassed, unfailing and unobstructed, the supreme heart of reality, the supremely secret heart, called the supremely secret; the sublime and unsurpassed secret of the host of rites of all accomplishments, such as lordship of the great supreme accomplishment of all, which supremely never changes; that which accomplishes all supreme joys and the supreme accomplishment of bliss and happiness of mind; and the tantra of the supreme mudrās."

All the mudrās of the supreme Blessed One and of Vajrasattva, such as kissing and embracing, are what is called the yoga of the samaya of the joy of Great Joy, glorious Vajra Amogha; it is what is declared as the yoga of all. Wherever it is applied, there the Blessed One,

Maheśvara of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme,
The god who surpasses the gods,
Having made the sign of supreme blessing,
Vajrasattva is swiftly accomplished.

Even merely by sealing with touch, such as kissing and embracing, it accomplishes the host of rites of all accomplishments, complete, without remainder and without residue, such as the very nature of Maheśvara, supreme of all, fulfilling the desires of the mind. This is the utterly and supremely secret mudrā.

The mudrā of gazing with the corner of a smiling and moving eye, together with playful display: by sealing with what is called the arrow of Vajra Amogha, the great joy of the Blessed One, one accomplishes the host of rites of all accomplishments desired by the mind, such as making all enamored, summoning, bringing under control, and the supreme accomplishment.

The gaze of eyes that smile and are slightly open is the mudrā called Glorious Vajra Eye of supreme joy, which accomplishes everything; with it one should gaze and drink. This is the mudrā called the Supreme Accomplishment of Rejuvenation through the Joy of Glorious Vajra Amogha, the great and utter joy of the Blessed One. By it, even all whose lifespan is exhausted obtain the youthful age of Vajrasattva, freedom from illness, beauty of form, strength, the power of splendor, vigor, all the supreme accomplishments, glory and good fortune, great joy, all utter bliss, happiness of mind, and the supreme accomplishment. For as long as it lasts, the most sublime host of rites of all the supreme accomplishments is accomplished; merely by the sealing of the Blessed Mother it is accomplished in a single instant.

The left eye, with pride, laughing and raised, is the mudrā called the Armlet of the Supreme Victory Banner of Joy of Glorious Vajra Amogha, the great delight of the Blessed One. Sealing with it makes one victorious over all, makes them bow in homage, and thoroughly accomplishes; for as long as everything supreme is accomplished, it thoroughly accomplishes lordship of the great accomplishment.

The gaze with coquetry, endowed with a smile, with candor and with bowing, is the Blessed One's mudrā of homage among the mudrās; it is the mudrā called the ki li ki la of glorious Amogheśvara of Great Joy. Sealing with it all things stable and moving, Vajrasattva and the rest, they bow down, and then one will be accomplished through the sublime and supreme accomplishment of the host of rites of all accomplishments, such as all the supreme accomplishments.

The smiling face itself, with playful display and coquetry, is the supremely secret vajra smile mudrā called Striving through Joy, of Glorious Vajra Amogha, the great joy of the Blessed One Paramādya Vajrasattva. With it, the song of Paramādya, master of all the blessed Vajra Holders, is:

The great accomplishment of the All-Supreme,
Maheśvara, the god who surpasses the gods,
King of all the Vajra Holders:
The unchanging supreme will be accomplished.

Merely by sealing with the coquettish smile mudrā with playful display, it accomplishes the host of rites of all accomplishments desired by the mind, such as the lordship of Maheśvara, of the great accomplishment of all.

Having recited sarba kuru yathā sukhaṃ, this is the mudrā of all the tathāgatas of the Blessed Vajrapāṇi, king of the lords of the secret Mahāyāna sūtras of all the tathāgatas. This one, called the Secret Vajra Blessing of the Full Awakening of the Mahāyāna of All the Tathāgatas, because it is luminous by nature, accomplishes the hosts of rites of all accomplishments, such as the wisdom that attains the dharmatā of all the tathāgatas, complete and without remainder, the complete purity of all phenomena and so on, the higher knowledges, and the supreme accomplishment.

The mudrā of smiling with playful display, with a wrathful frown of the brows and the vajra gaze, is the mudrā called the Blessed One's wrathful ki li ki la. Sealing with it accomplishes the hosts of rites of all indestructible accomplishments: making enamored all things stable and moving, Vajrasattva and the rest; summoning; bringing under control; bringing down; causing to enter; dance; song; displaying magical display; all words of truth; liberation and the accomplishment of all divinatory descents; displaying each of all illusions and all marvels; showing deeds through all various forms; sealing all; harming; taming; killing; turning all back; accomplishing all; and the supreme accomplishment and the rest.

Through the samādhi of the purity of all,
The form of the sameness of all
Fully enters into various deeds
And blesses the offering.

The one called Vajra Lotus is the mudrā of the Blessed One, noble Avalokiteśvara. Through the samādhi of all the tathāgatas it brings about the limitless accomplishments that fulfill aims, such as purifying all, protecting, thoroughly cleansing, pacifying all fevers, poisons, concocted poisons, grahas, illnesses, and the mudrās of the ḍākinīs, fully restoring the dead to life, obtaining all mastery, and fully entering into all deeds of various forms.

Moving subtly through the sky, playing, one should make all yogas enamored. Here, this is the mudrā of homage called the Vajra Blessing of the Blessed Ākāśagarbha. When one seals with it, the Blessed One is enamored and delighted; and being firmly enamored, because he is the very nature of all space, the very substance of all, it fulfills all intentions and accomplishes the hosts of rites of all accomplishments desired in the mind, such as the supreme accomplishment. This too was spoken.

Paramādya, as the supreme itself,
Has spoken the sublime secret:
The sealing with the mudrās of the eyes and the rest.

Was spoken by Vajrasattva.

Through the kissing, embracing, and so on
Of the master who holds all vajras,
Having practiced all the yogas in turn,
One should swiftly seal them all.

This practice of heart mantra, mudrā,
Mantra, and vidyā is marvelous:
Even for those without accomplishment
It fully accomplishes all accomplishments.

One who has no accomplishment
And who lacks abundant merit,
Being Vajrasattva himself, or sealed,
Will swiftly be accomplished.

If, with supreme Vajrasattva,
With the heart mantra and the rest and the near-heart mantra,
What is to be accomplished is not accomplished,
One should seal with kissing and the like.

Because the secret mudrā
Is the sublime bliss of all accomplishments,
The supreme offering to Vajrasattva,
Through it one will swiftly be accomplished.

This great reality, which is accomplished,
Is the holy nature of the supreme,
Supremely secret, endowed with merit;

It is not to be told to ordinary people.

Vajra master, to the supreme disciple
Who follows that reality with faith,
If you desire the supreme accomplishment,
Give it; do not give it to others.

Whoever possesses
This tantra of mudrās alone
Cannot be overcome or slain
By Māra and all the rest.

Then the King, the Vajra Holder,
The All-Supreme, granting all accomplishments,
Doing all and knowing all,
Brings all to accomplishment.

So spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva. From Śrī Paramādya, the mudrā tantra called the Supremely Secret, the tenfold mudrā, is complete.

Then the Blessed One Vajrasattva of supreme accomplishment said: "This is the explanation of the mudrā tantra called Supreme Accomplishment: supremely skillful, subtle, profound, and vast, inconceivable, utterly limitless, immeasurable, incalculable, inexpressible, and all-pervading."

There, the ten mudrās generate the self of all. The great mudrā of Vajrasattva arises from the samaya of Vajra Amogha of Great Bliss. First of all, it swiftly accomplishes the host of rites of all accomplishments, such as all the first and supreme accomplishments. Here, this is the body mudrā: binding the mudrā of the three banners and the khaṭvāṅga, the left holding a bell and the right held in the manner of raising up, with a dance that releases the fingers and so on with coquetry, Vajrakāmeśvarī is praised. Through the supreme mudrā of Maheśvara, the great accomplishment supreme of all, it is called the Yogeśvarī of Accomplishment, the samaya of delight of glorious Vajra Amogha of Great Joy. When it fully releases the Vajra Proud One, it becomes the four accomplishments. If one seals with that very Vajra Proud One, it is the unchanging supreme state of Maheśvara, the great accomplishment supreme of all. If one seals with the drawing of the arrow, even the vajra goddesses are made enamored, so what need is there to mention other women? If one seals with the vajra ki li ki la, one makes all the women among all the women of the gods and asuras play, and even if it is not accomplished, one is able to accomplish everything. With this mudrā of raising the makara banner, one is victorious over all and kills. Merely by sealing with the mantra and mudrā of Vajrakāmeśvarī laughing fully and casting the garland, one attains mastery over all desires. The mudrā of the supremely secret painting should be explained just as it is. Through the offering of the samaya of Vajra Amogha of Great Bliss, one inexhaustibly obtains all offerings, such as utter joy. With the mudrā of vajra praise, one sets in motion all the three realms of existence and brings them under control. With the mudrā of Vajrahūṃkāra and with the foot, one presses down and seals an image of a god and makes the threatening gesture; by sealing those beings, gods and others, before long they will carry out all commands and rites. Seated on a high seat in the half-crossed posture, pressing down with the left foot an image of Vajrasattva as well, brandishing the vajra and pressing down Vajrasattva, if one experiences all delightful accomplishments and excellences, what need is there to mention gods and other beings? Holding one's own emblem with the left vajra fist, and holding the vajra and so forth in the right in the manner of raising up, one seals all the daughters of the gods whom the mind desires, and by force makes them play, or accomplishes them. This is the great mudrā of Vajrasattva.

Then the samaya mudrās, which arise from the samaya of Vajra Amogha of Great Bliss, are ten: drawing the nails across the heart; striking the hook; inserting the right into the left hook; squeezing the tips of the hooks; the mutual rubbing done at the heart; extending the tongues evenly; placing the vajra firmly at the heart; acting with the vajra; and also the mudrā of play. Through these one unfailingly obtains the accomplishments of all: of accomplishment, excellence, bliss, mudrā, samaya, maṇḍala, Dharma, wisdom, karma, and great bliss.

Then the ten rites arising from the vajra bond of the secret samaya: by the hook of the middle fingers. Within the joined palms, the vajra fingers are the rite of all. The thumb vajra; with it, rubbing on both palms. The index finger vajra; with it, the two hooks. The middle finger vajra; with it one should bind the fingertips. The ring finger vajra; with it, the music of the fingertips. The little finger vajra; with it, squeezing the nails of the two thumbs. By sealing with these one accomplishes all things, Vajrasattva and the rest: making enamored, bringing under control, summoning, play, binding with passion, making all speak, making them dance, making them laugh, and killing.

Then the ten mudrās of the karma samaya: the vajra dance offering. Making all the daughters of the gods and asuras and all young maidens firmly enamored is done by the vajra gaze.

The practice of utter joy is tasting and drinking by moving the lower lip inward. Making passion firm, and the descent, is done by releasing a long breath. Then attaining mastery over all desired rites is done by raising both shoulders. Becoming worshiped by all is done by placing them at the heart. Finding all that exists is done by summoning with the eyes. Arousing desirous passion is done by gazing with a lowered face, together with the middle. The rite of bringing down all is done through the actions of subtly moving one's own heart. Slaying desirous passion is done by making oneself rise through releasing the breath. Performing all rites, such as enjoying all desires, is done by commanding. If these are applied as well to all things stable and moving, Vajrasattva and the rest, then when they are sealed by Amoghasiddhi, in a single instant, with firm and unchanging accomplishment, they will be accomplished. So spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

Then the ten karma mudrās. With the mudrā of the Vajra Proud One, all are accomplished. With the Vajra Weapon Lady come victory over all and making enamored. With the vajra ki li ki la, the touch of utter joy and all accomplishments are blissfully accomplished. By raising the banner comes victory in all battles. With Vajrakāmeśvarī comes great lordship itself. With the offering of the seasons one becomes worthy of worship. By brandishing the vajra, all are tamed. By casting the vajra, all are slain and all are seized. With the left held in pride and through the actions of the right vajra fist, one accomplishes all rites, such as illusion, all miraculous powers, displaying them one by one, stupefying, paralyzing, putting to sleep, making to wander, expelling, causing pustules, inflicting downfall, and bringing under control.

The ten samaya mudrās of Vajrasattva arise from the vajra palms. The vajra supreme body: all accomplishments. With the hook of the two index fingers: all accomplishments. With Vajrayakṣa, which tames the malevolent such as all the māras, that same one covered by the thumb vajra: finding all. That same one with the two thumbs inserted, the uṣṇīṣa vajra: protecting all. By that same one with the thumb vajra inserted within, one accomplishes making enamored, summoning, and bringing under control all beings, Vajrasattva and the rest. The two tips of the two little finger vajra fingers well held by the two index fingers, with the thumb: summoning glory and bringing under control. That same one, the queen of Vajrayakṣa: seizing all wealth and glory. That same one, with the two middle fingers fully squeezing the tips of the two ring fingers: liberation from grahas such as the māras, and, having brought them under control, applying them to all rites. With the vajra of utter joy one accomplishes the supreme of all objects.

Then the secret mudrās arise from the vajra of utter joy. Pressing down the sattva, one makes the vajra goddess play. That too is done by sealing with the great vajra of utter joy. It is done by the vajra of utter joy together with the vajra. It is done by the wheel of all the tathāgatas free of passion: one raises the wheel of the index, middle, and ring fingers, and, with the thumbs and little fingers even, one should spread them apart; it will be sealed and accomplished by that very reality of accomplishing the vajra of utter joy. By squeezing, one fully accomplishes all desires. With the index finger hook one summons the bliss of all desires. With the index finger one fully pacifies the suffering of all desires, such as jealousy. By constantly moving, one brings down utter joy and then accomplishes. By moving the place of birth, in the utter joy of women and men, there is the utterly limitless great bliss of all desires that transcend the world. By squeezing the union, there is also no separation from union for as long as one lives. By rubbing the nail of the sign on the left palm, one becomes attached with utterly firm desire. All women will be accomplished who do not look to the desire of another, do not go to another, and give utter bliss and happiness of mind. By rubbing the nail at the place of birth, it is so for men.

Then the ten secret mudrās of the self of all. There, the mudrā of the whole body: embracing with the two vajra fists, or holding with lips and teeth. Through rapture, one makes them give bliss. Through churning, Vajrasattva will be thoroughly accomplished through the accomplishment of utter joy. Through the accomplishment of Paramādya, saying surata stāṃ to the Blessed One and urging reality, it will be accomplished. Through the wisdom of utter joy, all is accomplished. If the fist of the left hand touches the secret place, all is accomplished. Through the gaze of the Great Vajra arising from the vajra of great bliss, all is accomplished. By raising the eyebrows upward, the descent is drawn up. By tasting one's own lower lip inward, great good fortune is accomplished. By moving one's own tongue, one speaks all one's own truths and reality clearly and without deceit. By bringing down into one's own body, one transforms all forms: one even becomes Vajrasattva or a buddha. By meditating on one's own self as vajra, one travels through the sky.

Then, first, the ten mudrās of all rites: by the vajra palms, the khaṭvāṅga. All accomplishments, by the vajra fists. All accomplishments, by the tathāgata fists. Slaying all, by the wrathful fists. Joining all, by the lotus fists. Seizing all wealth, by the jewel fist. Bringing down all, by the fist that brings down all. Making all dance, by the fists that scatter the khaṭvāṅga. Making all speak, by the tongue fists with even index fingers. Moving all, by the stable fists. Causing all to enter and accomplishing unfailingly, by the vajra hook fist.

Then, with the two vajra fists, there are the ten mudrās of the fingers of the hands, formed as one wishes, which bring accomplishment unfailingly, without obstruction, swiftly, in an instant. They are these: the lute, the flute, the clay drum, the mukuṇḍa, the cymbals, the great drum, the round drum, the paṭaha drum, the guñja, and the timili. When one seals with these, then in every case there is attraction, subjugation, bringing down, release from fevers, poisons, compounded poisons and grahas, slaying, victory in battle, and the attainment of every excellence. Thus it was said.

Because great desire is completely pure,
It is the great Vajrasattva.
The rite of the mudrās has been thoroughly examined.
For the supreme disciple, the vajra master,
To one who follows with faith in this very reality,
By mere understanding, in an instant,
Grants with ease the unfailing accomplishment of all.

So it is said.

The tantra of the mudrās called Supreme Accomplishment, from Śrī Paramādya, is complete.

Then the Blessed One Vajrasattva said: "I shall explain the thousand mudrās of all the assemblies that arise from the vajra dance, called the Supremely Excellent Accomplishment, the assembly of rites of all accomplishments, beginning with the very nature of the great supreme accomplishment, supremely skillful, beyond all extremes, immeasurable and incalculable, entire and without remainder."

Having joined the great mudrā evenly,
By releasing it with grace, with smiles and the rest,
The hundred great action mudrās
Should all be accomplished through dance.

With the secret hook of the vajra of Great Bliss, the binding of the action mudrās in particular: this first hundred, supremely accomplished, are the mudrās of the vajra samaya goddesses.

Having bound the vajra bond,
Shining within in union,
Of the great secret of Paramādya
The action mudrās are another hundred.

These are the mudrās of all the secret vajra goddesses.

With the palms of the great offering of vajra action
Held at the crown of the head,
Since the action mudrās are accomplished,
One should join them with the senses.

These are the mudrās of the goddesses of the great offering of all the vajras.

Dancing as the Vajra Proud One,
Releasing with grace the little finger and the rest,
Binding that very one and dancing,
This latter one arises.

These are the hundred supreme mudrās of Maheśvara, the accomplishment of the samaya of the unfailing action of all the vajras.

Having joined the vajra palms evenly,
All should be accomplished.
This is another supreme mudrā of the great action of Paramādya.

These are the mudrās of all the queens.

Having bound the five arrows gathered together,
The hundred action mudrās of bliss,
Without releasing the supreme delight,
Are applied in bliss itself.

These are the mudrās of the goddesses of desire, the supremely secret ones of all the vajras.

Through the vajra of body, speech and mind,
By joining the supreme mudrās just as they are,
The hundred various action mudrās
Should be discerned as Paramādya.

These are the mudrās of the vajra goddesses of body, speech and mind of all the vajras.

With the khaṭvāṅga of the vajra goddess,
One dances with the whole body

And sings the song of the supreme vajra dance:
This is called the first great mudrā.

As was taught at length above,
The assembly of mudrās of supreme music:
Playing music and singing songs,
The hundred manifestations of all the mudrās.

These are the mudrās of the assembly of the divine maidens of all the vajras, and thus the thousand mudrās are supremely accomplished.

These and other supreme ones without end,
Equal and unequal to the dharmadhātu,
Countless as the reaches of space:
The queen of mudrās grants supreme accomplishment.
For the supreme accomplishment of Maheśvara,
Of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme,
Through the openings of all of space
They fully enter into this maṇḍala.
It brings about supreme and excellent accomplishment.
The supreme and excellent great tantra
Grants supreme and excellent accomplishment.
The vajra master should teach this way of all the mudrās
To the supreme disciple
Who follows with faith in this very reality,
And not to others.

Thus the supremely unchanging bliss of excellent accomplishment,
Supremely pure, the vajra accomplishment of bliss, endowed with fruit without end,
Is the way of the supreme body of the secret reality of Śrī Paramādya.
This way of the supremely permanent rite is brought to its complete conclusion.

The tantra of the mudrās called Supremely Excellent Accomplishment, from Śrī Paramādya, is complete.

Then all the great beings,
The supreme ones, together with the Vajra Holders,
And the sugatas, made request
To the protector, the great Vajradhara, the chief:

"For the full accomplishment of the lord of accomplishment
Of the all-supreme great space,
The reality that gathers together all the rites
Has been spoken by the Great Being.
Among phenomena that are free of conceptual thought,
What is this meaning of 'rite' that is spoken of?
By what means, in this later tantra,
Is there the supreme state of the first?
Likewise, how are Vajrasattva himself,
Supreme delight itself and excellence itself,
And the self of the Vajra Proud One?
How are mind, being and samādhi,
Likewise vajra and the Vajra Holder,
The great Vajradhara himself,
And the conduct of awakening?
How are Māra and victory over Māra,
Awakening and the Buddha?
How are the fierce vajra, Antaka himself,
And Vajrapāṇi?
How did the first family arise,
And how is desire liberation?
How are the three kinds of protector,
And how are you all things?
How did the first heart essence arise,
And how is what is called the near heart?
How is the unfailing samaya
Of Great Bliss, the Great Vajra?
How was what is called a maṇḍala taught,
And what is its ripening like?
Through laying out the lines and through examination,
How was accomplishment taught?
The bliss of the five secrets,
How did it come about, and what is it like?
How are the lords of the maṇḍala
And the manifestation of the families?
The reality of all the empowerments,
The reality of the assembly of hand emblems,

The great offering of summoning and drawing in all,
The great practice of self-blessing and the rest,
That reality and that secret,
And the unfailing, the supreme itself:
In order to accomplish the unchanging excellent,
Please teach all of us."

Thus was spoken the supreme sūtra of the Blessed One, of all the tathāgatas.

Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
The lord of all the rites,
Having heard the host of doubts,
Spoke this answer.

Here, if one asks what the tantra of the meaning of "rite" is:

Among phenomena free of conceptual thought,
Because the aim of beings is fully examined,
It is therefore called a "rite",
Because conception is completely purified.

Then, if one asks what the later tantra is:

Tantra is explained as "continuum".
The later arose truly together with the earlier.
That reality, the secret of the secret,
Together with the later, is held to be tantra.

Here, if one asks what the tantra called "the first state" is:

Abiding fully in all of space,
The supreme nature of the vajra, the All-Supreme,
In that city of Great Bliss and great joy,
Is the unchanging supreme.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke this, which is called the reality of the rites of all rites.

Here, if one asks what Vajrasattva without beginning or end is:

Because its arising bears the mark of space,
It is supreme, without beginning or end.
The nature of the great being and the vajra
Is spoken of as Vajrasattva.

Then, if one asks who the Blessed One is:

Of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme,
Maheśvara, the god above the gods,
The king of all the Vajra Holders,
Supreme delight, unchanging, supreme.

Here, if one asks how the Blessed One is Great Joy itself:

Faultless and utterly permanent,
Passionately attached to all desire,
That very one, through this, is this secret:
Great desire and great joy.

Here, if one asks how Samantabhadra is:

Utterly pure, supreme of all,
Liberated from the very beginning, the Tathāgata,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
The supreme ritual of the bodhisattvas.

Here, if one asks how the Blessed One, the lord of Vajra Pride, is:

Of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme,
The supreme mudrā of Maheśvara,
Because he is greatly praised as Vajra Īśvara,
He is the lord of the lords of Vajra Pride.

This is the Blessed One, the Person of Paramādya.

This reality of Paramādya:
Whatever Vajrasattva proclaims,
The riches of all the accomplishments,
All of them will be accomplished in it.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke the supreme reality.

Then, after that, the Blessed One Vajrasattva said: "I shall explain, through the performance of action, how the Blessed One is the supreme of all."

Here, if one asks how the Blessed One is the being of all:

Inconceivable and vast,
The profound reality, all-blissful, unchanging,
Pervading all and stainless,
The mind of awakening is the steadfast self.

Then the special action of this:

By contemplating the very steadfastness of mind itself,
One rests evenly in that samādhi.
From consciousness, all is vajra;
From the vajra, it becomes the holder.

If one asks how the Blessed One is the Vajra Holder:

The application of the being's blessing
Is to accomplish the supreme blessing of oneself.
If one practices it every day, by that
One will attain the very state of Vajrasattva.

Here, if one asks what the conduct of the Blessed One Samantabhadra is:

Because even through sattva, rajas and tamas
The aim of beings comes about,
Therefore I am Samantabhadra,
Following the conduct of awakening.

Here, if one asks how the Blessed One is Māra himself, and how, through taming, he is the victor:

Mind itself alone is Māra;
Mind itself is the Tathāgata.
In order to tame my own mind,
I have become Māra himself.

Here, if one asks how the Blessed One is perfect and complete awakening, and the Buddha:

Because one discerns one's own mind,
The supreme mind of awakening is the vajra itself.
Therefore that very one is the Buddha himself,
Because the supreme blessing of oneself is accomplished.

Here, if one asks how the Blessed One is Vajrapāṇi:

Indivisible and discerning,
He utterly subdues all the vicious.
The reality of all the buddhas is the vajra;
The mind of awakening is the steadfast self.
Into the hand of Samantabhadra
That weapon was given by the Victors,

In order to accomplish all that is steadfast.
Therefore he is Vajrapāṇi.

Here, if one asks what the tantra of knowing what arose from the first family is:

The perfection of wisdom is the mother;
The father is skill in means.
For the sake of those whom Vajrasattva tames,
The families came forth.

Here, if one asks how the Blessed One is desire and liberation:

The Blessed One is great attachment,
Because he is passionately attached to all accomplishments.
All accomplishments, the unchanging bliss,
Are proclaimed as Great Bliss.

Here, if one asks how the Blessed One is threefold:

Because I am endless in the three times,
Because I tame the three existences,
The supreme of three, for all the three worlds,
I am the three worlds, I am the three realms.

Here, if one asks how the Blessed One is all things:

I myself am steadfast, the bliss of all,
Because I am great, supreme in all merit.
Because what moves is compounded by mind,
I am all illusions.

Thus Vajrasattva spoke the reality of the performance of his own action.

Here, if one asks how one knows the arising of the first song:

For the supreme accomplishment of Maheśvara,
Who has fully accomplished existence,
And so that the Radiant One may act for the benefit of beings,
The Blessed One spoke it at the beginning of the eon.

Then, if one asks what it is:

Great desire, the Blessed One,
Supreme delight, unchanging, supreme:

For the sake of secrecy it is proclaimed as the heart.
The syllable hūṃ is the unchanging supreme.

Then, as for knowing
The reality of the near heart:
That reality, secret and secret,
The heart should be fully proclaimed.
What is accomplished in following the heart
Is called the near heart itself.

Here, if one asks what the explanatory tantra of the samaya of Vajra Amogha of Great Bliss is:

The unchanging bliss of all accomplishments
Is proclaimed as Great Bliss.
The vajra is that reality, accomplished unfailingly;
The samaya is hard to transgress.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke the song of the supreme and excellent.

Here, if one asks how one knows the meaning of the maṇḍala:

How the abodes and the wheels are,
How the beings are to be set in place,
And whatever placement there is together with the retinue:
Such a wheel is emanated by the Supreme.
Then, as for consciousness:
By directly seeing the wheel
Of the deities, Vajrasattva and the rest,
Whatever permanent merit there is,
So it is too if one draws it outwardly.

Then the rite of laying the lines:

The wise one draws the maṇḍala.
Focusing on the equality of all directions,
By laying four lines, to the east and west, the north and south,
There are eight maṇḍalas.
Encircled all around by the vajra line,
Beautified by eight pillars,
It is adorned with four gates, portals and arches,

With nets, half-nets and the rest.

There, as for knowing the meaning of the lord, if one asks what Vajrasattva is like:

Because its arising bears the mark of space,
It is supreme, without beginning or end.
The nature of the great Vajrasattva
Is spoken of as Śrī Paramādya.

Then, if one asks who that Blessed One is:

Of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme,
Maheśvara, the god above the gods,
The king of all the Vajra Holders,
Supreme delight, unchanging, supreme.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the Vajra Holder.

Then, through Avalokiteśvara:
Like the padmarāga ruby,
All-pure and unsurpassed,
Vajrasattva, one's own very self,
Is Avalokiteśvara himself.

Then the reality of the lotus family:

In order fully to accomplish the vajra Dharma,
In order to purify all beings,
The samādhi and wisdom
Of the pure family of the great lotus are gathered in full.

So it is said.

Here, if one asks how Ākāśagarbha is:

All is space, the Blessed One;
Seeing the merit of beings, and great,
Is Ākāśagarbha, the being.
Then, of the jewel family:
Empowerment and treasure,
Vajraketu and the great offering,
The accomplishment of the family of the great jewel,
Is the complete fulfillment of all wishes.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke the great reality of all the maṇḍalas.

Knowing the empowerment of all the vajra families:

For the Buddha, the jewel and the half-vajra;
For Vajraratna, the vajra;
For Avalokiteśvara, the vajra body;
For the jewel, the one who holds the jewel.

Then the reality of the hand emblem of Paramādya:

The great weapon of Maheśvara,
Of the great accomplishment of the All-Supreme,
The great reality of the five secrets,
Is called the five-pronged vajra.

Then, knowing the reality of the hand emblems of all the families:

For all the buddhas, the buddha itself;
For the various deeds, the Vajra Bearer;
For Lokeśvara, the vajra Dharma;
For the jewel, the heaped jewels.

Thus the Blessed One Vajrasattva spoke the reality of the hand emblems of all the empowerments.

Here, if one asks what the tantra of summoning all is:

By the great secret of all the rites,
With the vajra hook together with the bell,
One summons, and then the subsequent practice
Is done by the bell itself.

If one asks what the ritual of all the offerings is:

By the great secret of all the rites,
Having made offering with supreme delight,
With the magical displays of song and music
One makes offering, and again makes offering in yoga.

Here, if one asks what the reality of the great samaya of blessing of all accomplishments is:

By the great secret of all the rites,
Well blessed by all the mudrās,
Through this very great samaya,

Having accomplished oneself, one recites the heart mantra.
The being without beginning or end
Is Vajrasattva, great joy,
Samantabhadra, the self of all,
The lord of the lords of Vajra Pride.

This is the Person of Paramādya.

Here, if one asks what the tantra of the great practice of all one's own supreme deities is:

The stable and the moving,
Whatever is to be accomplished through all the rites,
Through the yoga of one's own supreme deity,
All of these should be accomplished.

Then the tantra of accomplishing everything subsequently:

Having taken up the vajra and bell,
Ringing the vajra bell well,
By subsequently accomplishing all the rites,
The supreme and the rites of action and the rest will be accomplished.

Here, if one asks what the tantra of accomplishing all without effort is:

Having accomplished whatever is to be accomplished, as one wishes,
Afterward, as one wishes,
Engaging in whatever conduct one wishes,
Doing everything and eating everything,
Whether standing or sitting,
Or walking about wherever one may be,
Whether laughing or speaking,
Whatever there is, it is just so.
Whatever comes into the range of whatever sense,
Make each into the nature of that.
Having rested evenly, the yogin
Should apply the yoga of his own supreme deity.
Through this very yoga
All things should be accomplished.
The reality of all the buddhas, all of it,
Will always be seen and accomplished.

That very great samaya:
Whatever wise one reads it with faith,
Being free of all wrongdoing,
Will become the lord of all accomplishments.

This is the reality of the great samaya.

Thus the ritual of Śrī Paramādya, supreme in equality, the guru, has been made clear.
The ritual for accomplishing the Supremely Secret was requested, for the swift accomplishment of supreme bliss.
Blessed by the sugatas and their heirs, together with the supreme vajra holders,
It was spoken by the excellent Great Bliss, the Vajra Holder, the supreme Great Joy.

The ritual of the Supremely Secret, from Śrī Paramādya.

Then the Teacher, the Vajra Holder,
Endless like space, going everywhere,
Having been praised by all the buddhas,
Spoke the meaning of the culmination of the rites.

This, together with my heart, is the great supreme.
Supreme of the supreme Great Bliss, and great attachment,
The constant source of the all-supreme beings,
This lord of all-supreme riches is what nourishes.
That which is endless, without beginning and without end,
The great way of all the great objects of offering,
Equal to space, I ask for the increase of its supreme reality.
That cannot be brought to an end by anyone.
Beings cling to what is lesser and delight in little,
Lacking faith, deceitful, and untrained,
Ever attached, and attached even to freedom from attachment:
In order to benefit them, this is the culmination.

In whose house this abides, or whoever fully practices it,
Or whoever always practices it here just as it was taught,
Through the power of his own direct experience, in every way,
The hosts of Māra's deeds cannot harm him.
Whoever accomplishes the bodies of Vajradhara and the rest,

For images and all the rest were taught here just as they are,
He is endowed with the ability to experience all of them directly;
The hosts of Māra's deeds cannot harm him.
Whoever, as he wishes, accomplishes all of these,
The vajra and the rest, the images and the rest,
Having drawn them, with intense desire, from the syllable hūṃ,
By that the accomplishment he desires is granted and attained.
As for the purification brought about by the kings,
For one in whom every aim is pure, there is nothing it will not bring about.
In this there are not even any obstructing māras.
Through realization, accomplishment increases and is blessed.
I do not become Māra himself; I do not become unsteady.
Because of steadfastness itself, I am the one who makes steadfast.
Whoever accomplishes this permanent great supreme,
For him I swiftly bring about accomplishment.

Toward the great accomplishment all become passionately attached, and it becomes utterly pleasing, utterly steadfast, utterly abundant, and ever vast.

Whoever practices the heart of the supreme king,
All the Victors rejoice, and he delights the Victors.
They attain great renown, and they attain bliss as well.
Therefore one should have faith in this and hold it in reverence.

Then the Victors said "Excellent!" to the Blessed One:

"Supreme father, heir of the buddhas, excellent, excellent!
Supreme heir, heir of the buddhas, excellent, excellent!
Supreme vajra, source of vajras, excellent!
Very self of the sacred Dharma, excellent, excellent!
Truly blessed by the buddhas,
Ever unchanging, the great unfailing accomplishment:
Just as was the first accomplishment,
So later too it will be accomplished in the same way."

Having thus spoken these great words,
The buddhas together with their heirs
Rejoiced in the speech
Of the great Vajrasattva.

The Supreme of All Kings of Rites, from Śrī Paramādya, is complete.

At Tholing, the Heart of the Ground of Sacred Commitment, it was translated, edited and finalized by the Indian preceptor, the paṇḍita and great scholar Mantrakalaśa, and the translator, the divine sovereign, the monk and lama Zhiwa Ö.

When the great translator Rinchen Zangpo
Translated this tantra of Śrī Paramādya,
Since in places no manuscript could be found, those parts were left untranslated.
I sought the manuscripts with effort, found them, and translated them.

Translator's Notes

• The construction of the long closing sentences is loose in the Tibetan; the one consecrated with the diadem is taken to be the Blessed One himself, described by the epithets that precede. □□□□

• The passage is a terse ritual description of hand gestures performed with the middle vajra, that is, the middle fingers; many of its operations are elliptical, and they have been rendered as literally as English allows. "The body of the middle vajra" follows the Tibetan as written, though it may be a slip for "the actions of the middle vajra" (lus for las), as in the parallel sentences. "The wheel" set at the heart is a hand gesture here, not a drawn diagram. In the chapter colophon, brgyud is read as rgyud, "tantra."
• Here rdo rje bsnyems pa is read as "vajra pride," the posture in which the vajra is brandished, as the later verse "holding the posture of vajra pride" shows. It is not taken as the goddess Vajragarvā. The lines "it does not itself impose discipline" (literally "does not itself do taming or discipline") are obscure, and the rendering is tentative. Maheśvara in the tantra's title may be an epithet of the presiding deity rather than Śiva.
• The names of the four inner goddesses are given as the Sanskrit forms their Tibetan names usually render: Vajrarāgā (rdo rje chags ma), Vajravilāsinī (rdo rje rol pa), Vajrasmṛti (rdo rje dran ma) and Vajrakāmeśvarī. The setting-in-place mantras of the first two do not match these names exactly, so the first two identifications are tentative. In "the crests are flowers," the written rtag ("permanent") is read as tog ("crest"), as in the parallel list in the previous piece. The four season goddesses are spring (honey, madhu), the rains (clouds), autumn and winter, matching their mantras.
• "The praise beginning with śara" renders dang po sha ra la sogs pa literally. Which praise this means is unclear, since the hymn of one hundred and eight names that follows begins differently. Vajrasattva is invoked here as Śrī Paramādya, the deity who gives the text its title.
• In "Some people who stay in gatherings," the Tibetan 'du gnang gnas pa is obscure, and the rendering is tentative. "Holding the eye of Vajrapāṇi" renders mig 'dzin pa literally. In the vajra-name rite, the vocative □□□ ("O") corresponds to "he" in the Sanskrit formula.
• The phrase rendered "saying stvaṃ with the mind" reads □□□□□□□□□; □□□□ may be a Tibetan rendering of part of a mantra (as in the familiar pledge formula with sattva or samaya), so the sense is uncertain. Ridhita and gaṇḍe appear to be Sanskrit terms for musical or vocal ornamentation and kinds of song; they are left untranslated. "Endowed with the sense objects" renders □□□□□□□□□□, which in this context may imply practice with the sense pleasures or with a consort.
• "Secondary poison" renders □□□□□□□□□□ (Skt. upaviṣa), here the name of a ritual means or deity of the vajra dance; likewise the other phrases after "of the vajra dance" and "of the first vajra" appear to name particular mudrās or deity forms. Prasena is a form of divination in which a deity is made to descend into a mirror, a child, or the like and give answers.
• "The great Maker of Men" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ (perhaps Skt. puruṣakāra), the name of a vajra-dance form; it could not be identified with confidence. The lines on Śakra having no wheel and becoming "the cause of my own son" are obscure in the Tibetan and are rendered literally. "The Lord of Desire" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ (Kāmeśvara).
• "The Lord, the very substance of all" renders the somewhat obscure □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; the subject of the supplication is not certain. "Lords of the hosts" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ (perhaps Gaṇeśvara), which may be meant either as an epithet of Gaṇapati or as a separate group.
• "The eleven were bound, surely conquered" renders the obscure □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; the eleven are probably the eleven Rudras, but the phrase is uncertain. In "intent on brandishing the vajra," □□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□ ("brandish"), as the text writes it later. □□□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□□, "female singers." □□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□. The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ ("with the body as is fitting, amid the Saṅgha") is obscure and translated literally. "The three brothers" (□□□□□□□□□□□) is translated literally and not identified.
• □□□□□□□□□□, the consort of Śakra seized in the rite, is read as □□□□□□□□□□□□, Śacī. □□□□□□□□□□

("Giver of Wealth") is taken as Dhanada, an epithet of Kubera, and □□□□□□□□□ as Skanda. □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is rendered by its meaning, "the Great Wrathful One of Manifold Accomplishment"; it may name a mudrā or a form of the deity. The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ ("through no means at all, is itself the means") is cryptic and is translated literally.

• □□□□□□□□□□□□ ("buddha hairs") is read as □□□□□□□□□□□□, "buddha forms." □□□□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□□□□, "vajra fence." □□□□ in the list of family deities is taken as Śiva. Several medical terms (□□□□□□, □□□□□□□□□□□□□, □□□□□□□□□□□□□, □□□□□□□) are given their usual senses ("sores of the feet," "dropsy," "fistula," "wasting disease"), and the exact conditions meant are not certain. □□□□□□ is rendered "witches." The names of the four Great Lotus forms that perform the rites are translated by their meaning.

• □□□□□□□ in "make a clear request" is read as □□□□□□. The names of the four beings around Ākāśagarbha (Empowerment, Treasure, the Great Unsurpassed Jewel, Perfect Glory of Prosperity) are translated by their meaning; their Sanskrit forms are not certain. "The Sky-Born" (□□□□□□□□□□) is taken as an epithet of Ākāśagarbha.

• □□□□□□□□□, which stands beside Brahmā and Rudra, is rendered "the Eternal One." It apparently stands for Viṣṇu, perhaps as Acyuta, and it matches the earlier mention of "the three brothers." The names of the four sisters (Subhagā, Śivā, Vārāhī, Siddhā) are reconstructed from the Tibetan and the mantra syllables. The epithets in the line "the Peaceful, the Terrifying, likewise Gold, the Accomplished and the Peaceful" are translated literally. The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ ("the four in sequence, as stated") is obscure.

• The goddess named "Sky Vajra" (Tibetan mkha' rdo rje) is rendered literally, as its Sanskrit form cannot be fixed with confidence; her mantra invokes the sky (gagana). "Kindle all poisons" renders sbar ba literally; the sense may be "activate" or "apply" poisons. "The one who holds the nāgas" (klu 'dzin pa) may refer to the practitioner as nāga-charmer.

• In "the supremely secret persons" the Tibetan reads mi ("persons"); the following line calls these "secret names," so ming ("names") is read. The four consort names are given in reconstructed Sanskrit from their Tibetan forms (Kāmavajrī, Vijayavajrī, Vajrakāmeśvarī); "Vajra Pride" and "the Vajra Proud One" render rdo rje bsnyems pa and rdo rje bsnyems ma literally. The verse on the four goddesses and the description of the attendant figures are terse, and the attribution of some details to particular goddesses is interpretive.

• The verse beginning "Having fully entered, with the left" is terse; "the left" likely refers to the left hand or the left side of the practitioner's posture. The four lines of the samaya song each open with one of the syllables jaḥ, hūṃ, vaṃ, hoḥ, matching the four actions of summoning, drawing in, binding and controlling.

• "The great enclosure of lotuses" renders padma'i ra ba che; the second occurrence reads padma ra ba, which may instead be intended as "padmarāga" (ruby), giving "the great ruby."

• "The group of those who are certain" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ (Skt. niyatarāśi), the class of beings destined for awakening; here □□□□□□ means "group", not "aggregate". The line rendered "Who makes no boast of his virtue" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is somewhat uncertain in sense.

• "The Lotus Essence" translates □□□□□□□□□□□□□, which here names the lotus family's figure among the five syllables; I could not identify it with confidence as a fixed Sanskrit name (possibly Padmagarbha), so it is rendered literally. "Cymbals" for □□□ is a probable sense in this list of instruments.

• "The maṇḍala of all the wicked ones" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; the sense of □□□□□□ here (wicked beings to be subdued) is not certain. The four-line verse "Just as, having dwelt in the first house … Not everything is accomplished in that way" is obscure and is translated literally. In the lotus-family song, the words for "fierce," "infinite" and "peaceful" may also play on the names Rudra, Ananta and Śiva used elsewhere in this text.

• The colors of the four ḍākinīs are obscure in the Tibetan, particularly "white and gazing" for the third, and are translated literally. The instruction "six times, with ... in between" renders the terse □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; its exact sense for the recitation is uncertain. "The one who leans to the left" translates □□□□□□□□□□□□□, which I could not identify as a fixed name.
• "The tip of the All-Supreme" in the mudrā description presumably names a finger, but which one is not stated. "Vajrāmṛta" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, here heading the list of māras; its identification is uncertain. The second goddess's name ends in □□□□□□□□□, rendered "Answer of the Pledge"; the sense is unclear. "Raiser of the Dead" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□, which might also mean "she who rouses death."
• "Great blood" and "camphor" in the samaya of the supreme yoga are the customary tantric code terms for menstrual blood and semen. In the line "by seeing it one becomes invisible," the text reads □□□□□□, taken here as a slip for □□□□□□ ("that which"). The line "Refraining, and discerning each thing" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is terse, and its exact sense is uncertain. So is "the supreme ones that the Teacher reveals" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□).
• Raudrī is taken as the Sanskrit for □□□□□□, the fierce goddess named beside Bhṛkuṭī in Avalokiteśvara's retinue. The goddesses in Ākāśagarbha's wheel of light are given in English, since their Sanskrit forms cannot be identified with confidence: Empowerment, Treasure, Supreme Victor, Sovereign and Great Offering. In "What is not to be given should be given" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□), the Tibetan is terse. It may instead mean that one should give even to those who are not proper recipients.
• Here □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ ("great lord," the same words as the name Maheśvara) is an epithet of the accomplishment and of the practitioner, not the god Śiva. It is therefore rendered "great sovereign." □□□□□□□□□□ (Skt. adhidevatā, the presiding deity of one's practice) is rendered "chosen deity." In the heading of the extensive special rite, □□□□□ is read as □□□□□□ ("utterly"). The closing string of epithets runs on into the next piece.
• Here □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ and □□□□□□□□ ("great lord," "lord") are epithets of the state that is attained, not the god Śiva or Īśvara. They are therefore rendered "great sovereign" and "sovereign." The triad □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ and □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ ("all-yoga, great yoga, and utmost yoga") seems to correspond to sarvayoga, mahāyoga and atiyoga.
• In the description of the vajra bond, □□□□□□□□ is read as "all the tips" (Skt. sarvāgra, with mchog for agra), not as the epithet the All-Supreme. □□□□□□□□ is likewise the hook formed with the fingers, not the goddess Aṅkuśī. Also, □□□□□□□□□□□□ is the idiom "without fail" and has nothing to do with grahas. The mudrā descriptions are terse, and their finer points of finger placement are uncertain. In the empowerment, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as the vajra nectar of the consecrated water, though it could also be the deity Vajrāmṛta. □□□□□□□ is rendered Lāsyā, the goddess of graceful charm.
• The musical terms ribita, "six-note" (perhaps the hexatonic ṣāḍava mode or the note ṣaḍja), grāma and rāga are technical terms of Indian music; their exact sense here is uncertain. The verb stod pa / bstod pa in the mudrā descriptions is rendered "brandishing"; it may instead mean "raising" or "praising," and the terse mudrā instructions throughout are elliptical, so their precise hand positions are uncertain. "The sign" (rtags) as a place on the body probably means the genitals.
• "The third-day, the fourth-day, the recurring, the constant" most likely refers to kinds of fever (tertian, quartan, intermittent and continuous), pacified by the gaze. The clause about the fence of blazing vajras says, as written, that the great wrathful one "too is able to enter" it; one might expect a negative ("not even I can enter"), but the text is translated as it stands. The verb rendered "brandishing" (stod pa / bstod pa) may instead mean "raising." The terse mudrā instructions are elliptical throughout, and "tripatāka" (three-banner hand) and kataka are names of hand gestures. "Vajra Mindfulness" (rdo rje dran ma) is a literal rendering of a feminine mudrā or deity name I cannot identify with confidence.

• The verb rendered "raising" or "brandishing" (stod pa) is uncertain in these mudrā descriptions. Ratnavajrī and Sattvavajrī render rin chen ma and sems ma rdo rje ma / sems dpa'i rdo rje ma, the goddesses of the jewel and sattva families; "Exalting" is a literal rendering of gzengs bstod pa, the name of a gesture. The short items at the end of the passage are elliptical headings in a list of mudrā applications and are translated as they stand.

• The opening items continue an elliptical list of qualities (expression, dhāraṇī, grounds, discriminating knowledges, unshared qualities and so on) and are translated as headings. "Conformity of one's whole being" renders bdag nyid thams cad kyi rjes, whose precise sense is unclear. The clause stating that "the Blessed One too brings them under control" follows the instrumental as written; it could also mean that even the Blessed One is brought under control.

• "Coin" renders dong tse, whose sense as a ritual implement here is uncertain. "Clinging to the Mountain" is a literal rendering of ri chags pa, a mudrā name I cannot identify. The long series of short items in the first paragraph are elliptical instructions in a list of wrathful mudrā applications and are translated as they stand.

• The Tibetan reads mi ba ṭvāṃ ga after "karma mudrā"; this is taken as a garbled transcription of khaṭvāṅga, though the reading is uncertain. In the section on the thousands of mudrās, stong nyid ("emptiness" or "the thousand itself") is read as stong gnyis, "the second thousand", since the passage counts a first, third, and fourth thousand. The repeated phrase "mudrā that accomplishes" in the first of these sentences appears to be a duplication and is rendered once.

• In the phrase "the agent endowed with the wrathful vajra gaze," the Tibetan reads dang bas pa, which is taken as a slip for ldan pa, "endowed with." In the verse on the Vajra Holder, kun gsol ba is rendered "asked for every accomplishment"; gsol could also be read as the honorific "partake of," and the sense is uncertain.

• "Divinatory descents" renders pra dbab pa, the bringing down of a deity into a mirror or medium for divination (Skt. prasena).

• "The descent" renders ltung ba, here in its yogic sense of the descent or fall of the vital essence rather than the monastic "downfall"; the same applies to "the descent is drawn up." In the list of rites, 'bru ("grain") is rendered "causing pustules," reading it as related to 'brum; the sense is uncertain. Near the end of the secret mudrās, bru(ng) pa is taken as brud pa, "rubbing," as in the preceding sentence.

• "One should join them with the senses" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; the plural could alternatively mean "with the Indras", but the sense faculties fit the context of action mudrās better. The phrase "another hundred" reads □□□□□□□ in the Tibetan as brgya ("hundred"), which the parallel lines plainly require. The closing line literally says that "the Blessed One spoke the supreme sūtra of all the tathāgatas"; since the questions are addressed to Vajradhara and are answered in the next section, it is rendered as a statement that this supreme sūtra was spoken. The mukuṇḍa, guñja and timili are musical instruments that could not be identified with confidence and are left in their transliterated forms.

• The answer on "rite" plays on the Tibetan rtog pa, which means both a ritual manual (kalpa) and conceptual thought; the explanation turns on this double sense. "The families came forth" reads □□□ as rigs, "family", which the question about the first family requires. The answer introduced as being about the "first song" corresponds to the earlier question about the first heart mantra; the Tibetan here reads "song", and that is kept.

• The verse on the empowerments of the families (Buddha, Vajraratna, Avalokiteśvara, the jewel) is terse, and the assignment of emblems to each is given as the wording most plainly allows; the exact correspondence is uncertain. In "for the swift accomplishment of supreme bliss" the Tibetan bde mchog is taken as a common noun, not as the deity Cakrasaṃvara, which the context does not support. In the effortless-practice verses dbang po is taken as

"sense faculty", not as Indra.
• In the Victors' praise, don yod grub pa is taken as "the unfailing accomplishment", in keeping with the following lines on accomplishment, rather than as the name of the buddha Amoghasiddhi; both readings are possible. "The Heart of the Ground of Sacred Commitment" renders thugs dam sa'i snying po, evidently the name of the temple at Tholing where the translation was made. "The divine sovereign" renders lha btsan po, the royal title of Zhiwa Ö, a prince of the Gugé royal house who became a monk. The final verse is by an unnamed later reviser.

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
