The Great Tantra of the Empowerment of Noble Vajrapāṇi

Āryavajrapāṇyabhiṣekamahātantra · Toh 496 · Derge Kangyur
འཕགས་པ་ལག་ན་རྡོ་རྗེའི་དབང་བསྐུར་བའི་རྒྱུད་ཆེན་པོ།

The Great Tantra of the Empowerment of Noble Vajrapāṇi, known in Sanskrit as the Āryavajrapāṇyabhiṣekamahātantra and in Tibetan as Pakpa Lakna Dorjé Wangkurwé Gyü Chenpo, is a lengthy scripture of the tantra class, catalogued as Toh 496 in the Kangyur, where it is placed among the tantras of the action (kriyā) class. It opens in the great palace of Vaśavartin, king of the gods, where the Blessed One is seated on a jeweled lion throne amid an assembly of bodhisattvas, and its narrative centers on Vajrapāṇi, the bodhisattva who holds the vajra, and on the empowerment associated with him. Over the course of its chapters it combines teaching discourse and accounts of past deeds with extensive ritual instruction, ending with a series of rites, recitations and fire offerings by which practitioners may gain worldly and spiritual accomplishments, including visions of Vajrapāṇi, Mañjuśrī and the Blessed Lady Prajñāpāramitā. According to its colophon, it was translated into Tibetan by the Indian preceptor Śīlendrabodhi and the editor-translator Yeshé Dé during the early period of Tibetan translation.

In the language of India: ārya vajra pā ṇi a bhi ṣe ka ma hā tantra. In the language of Tibet: The Great Tantra of the Empowerment of Noble Vajrapāṇi.

First fascicle.

Homage to all the buddhas and bodhisattvas.

Thus did I hear at one time. The Blessed One was in the great palace of Vaśavartin, king of the gods, a great mansion that is a king of jewels, brought forth from inconceivable karmic maturation and thoroughly adorned with great kings of jewels that accord with the conduct of all the tathāgatas, the dwelling of the bodhisattva great beings. There he sat upon a great lion throne with a lotus heart, both its sides adorned with great jewels, lords of power, radiant, brilliant and resplendent. Just as, for example, the orb of the sun is radiant, brilliant and resplendent in a cloudless sky, so too the Blessed One sat radiant, brilliant and resplendent upon that great lion throne with a lotus heart, surrounded on all sides by a great host of bodhisattvas. He had attained the supreme perfection of all mastery over mind; he had blessed body, speech and mind as equal; free from all wavering and conceit, he engaged spontaneously in the deeds of a buddha. He was teaching the Dharma, namely the Dharma discourse called The Abode of the Equality of Body, the Dharma discourse called The Abode of the Equality of Speech, and likewise the Dharma discourse called The Abode of the Equality of Mind.

Then, having heard this Dharma discourse, those bodhisattvas obtained the meditative absorption called The Essence of the Array of the Equality of Body, Speech and Mind. As soon as they had obtained that meditative absorption, through the blessing of that very Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Vairocana, they saw tathāgatas as numerous as the atoms in ten buddha fields, each surrounded by a host of bodhisattvas, teaching the Dharma, namely the Dharma discourse called The Array of the Abode of the Equality of Body, Speech and Mind.

Why is that? Whatever bodhisattva great beings there are who are definitely shown throughout these many boundless world systems endowed with the arrayed ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence, generating the mind set on awakening and striving in its conduct, accomplishing the grounds, fully awakening to complete enlightenment, turning the wheel of Dharma, and displaying the great final nirvāṇa, all of that is through the blessing of the Blessed One Vairocana. In short, whatever sentient beings perform wholesome formative actions, all of them too were gathered by the Blessed One Vairocana, when formerly he practised the conduct of a bodhisattva, solely through these four means of attraction, namely generosity, pleasant speech, beneficial conduct, and consistency of aim; and it is through that very cause and those very objects of focus that they perform wholesome formative actions.

Thus those bodhisattvas saw and entered into all that vast great wisdom of the Blessed One Vairocana; they beheld it and contemplated it: however much virtue is performed, it too comes about through that very cause and that very object of focus. Thus those bodhisattvas were amazed and astonished, and, their hearts filled with wonder and longing, they thought, "The Tathāgata is inconceivable!" Falling silent, they gazed upon the Blessed One himself and contemplated him.

Then the Blessed One, knowing the wonder and longing in the hearts of those bodhisattva great beings, sent forth from his throat a light ray called Fully Exhorting All Bodhisattvas, with a retinue of many thousands of light rays. When it had come forth, it illuminated the whole body of the Blessed One

Vairocana, and to all the bodhisattvas endowed with power who dwelt throughout the boundless reaches of space and the oceans of world systems, it gave this exhortation:

"The omniscient, perfectly complete Buddha,
The Blessed One, free of all fevers,
In the palace of King Vaśavartin,
Free of every fault,
Upon a great and delightful lion throne
Three hundred leagues in size,
Is seated there upon a lotus heart,
Surrounded by bodhisattvas.
Whatever the Great Sage has emanated
In that place in a great array,
Their number and their measure,
And whatever their shapes and colors,
Could not be told
Even in countless eons.
Go there and behold the great hero,
The perfectly complete Buddha, supreme among two-legged beings,
Who has cast off wavering and doubt,
Who cuts through all uncertainty!"

Then those light rays, having exhorted all the bodhisattvas, turned back and settled in their own place, in the throat of the Blessed One Vairocana.

Then the Blessed One sent forth again, from the curl of hair between his brows, a light ray called The Essence of the Treasury of the Array of Wish-Fulfilling Jewels, which fully exhorts all the buddhas, with a retinue of a hundred thousand light rays. In all the buddha fields it proclaimed to those buddhas, the blessed ones:

"To behold the Guide, the Blessed Vairocana,
And to make offerings to him,
And, wishing to benefit beings, so that the Dharma may be spoken,
All of you, come here without delay!"

Then those light rays too turned back and entered the very curl of hair between the Blessed One's brows.

Then, as soon as they had been exhorted by that light, those bodhisattva great beings asked their own respective tathāgatas, arhats, perfectly complete buddhas: "Blessed Ones, if we are to go to the great palace of King Vaśavartin in order to behold and pay homage to that Blessed One Vairocana, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha, in which world system is that great palace of King Vaśavartin? What is the name of the world system in which the Blessed One Vairocana fully awakened to complete enlightenment? And what is its seat of awakening like?"

When they had made this request, those tathāgatas, arhats, perfectly complete buddhas declared to their own respective bodhisattvas: "Sons of good family, there are boundless world systems, definitely shown, called the series of world systems endowed with the arrayed ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence. You should understand that each and every one of those boundless world systems that is shown contains many boundless arrays, definitely shown, of linkages of world systems.

"Sons of good family, the measure of those linked arrays is this. That which comprises and includes a hundred koṭis of four-continent world systems, a hundred koṭis of Sumerus, kings of mountains, a hundred koṭis of great oceans, and a hundred koṭis of moons and suns, is a great trichiliocosm. That which comprises and includes a hundred koṭis of great trichiliocosms forms one unit comprised and included within the boundless linkages endowed with the arrayed ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence. That which comprises and includes a hundred koṭis of the boundless linkages endowed with the arrayed ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence is one series of boundless world systems arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence. That which comprises and includes a hundred koṭis of series arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence is one intermediate series of world systems arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence. That which comprises and includes a hundred koṭis of the series of intermediate arrays of boundless world systems is one array of world systems arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence, and it was purified by the Blessed One Vairocana when formerly he practised the conduct of a bodhisattva.

"Sons of good family, in that world system the one and only tathāgata, arhat, perfectly complete buddha is that very Blessed One Vairocana. Through the power of his former aspirations he is surrounded by a host of bodhisattvas; utterly transcending the actions of body, speech and mind, he has blessed space itself as the seat of awakening, and he dwells in that intermediate world system, in the great palace of King Vaśavartin.

"Sons of good family, such is the Blessed One Vairocana that we could not fathom the limit of his qualities, his conduct, his aspirations or his wisdom even in countless eons. Sons of good family, we too were set upon unsurpassed, perfectly complete awakening by that Blessed One when formerly he was a bodhisattva, and we are, every one of us, mindful of the kindness that Blessed One did us and grateful for it.

"Sons of good family, that Blessed One Vairocana has sent forth this great net of light rays because he wishes, beginning from the former conduct and aspirations of the bodhisattva Samantabhadra and the unbroken maṇḍala of the wheel of his speech, that the teaching be made to endure, that the unsurpassed conduct of the Great Vehicle continue unbroken, that it be understood just as it is, and that, to the full extent that the bodhisattva Samantabhadra has blessed it, beginning from the great maṇḍala of vajra wisdom, the boundless and endless world systems be pervaded by the vast maṇḍala of the wheel of manifold speech."

Then, in the east, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Ratnaketu gave to the bodhisattva Ratnamati this heart-essence of the great jewel vajra:

na maḥ s manta mu khe bhyaḥ sarba ta thā ga te bhyaḥ sarba thā ja na

"Son of good family, by means of this heart-essence of the great jewel vajra, abide in that world system!"

Then the bodhisattva Ratnamati took up this heart-essence and vanished from that world system. Surrounded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, in order to make offerings to the Blessed One Vairocana, he manifested a great miraculous display of a bodhisattva and, by means of this heart-essence, great clouds of offerings to the great jewel vajra such as had never been seen before. He went to where the world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence was, and to where the palace of King Vaśavartin was, and on arriving there he covered the whole world system, together with the great palace of King Vaśavartin, with great clouds of jewel and vajra flowers. Likewise he covered them with great clouds of incense, perfumes, garlands, ointments, parasols, victory banners, pennants, powders, garments, ornaments, jewels and vajras. He went also to where the Blessed One Vairocana was, and together with those bodhisattva great beings circumambulated the Blessed One many hundreds of thousands of times. Then, just as he had come, he took his place in the east. There he emanated great multistoried mansions of jewel and vajra, great kings of jewels, vajra staffs, and great lion thrones with lotus hearts, blessed them with the heart-essence of the great jewel vajra, and remained there, filling the ten directions far and wide with the heart-essence of the letters of the great jewel vajra.

In the south, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Saṃkusumitarājendra blessed the youthful Mañjuśrī with the essence of the heart-essence of the great vajra and declared: "Son of good family, go to that world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence, to pay homage to the Blessed One Vairocana, to behold him and to make offerings to him." Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Saṃkusumitarājendra spoke this heart-essence of the great vajra:

namaḥ smanta mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mahā vajrāgra va raṃ hūṃ

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī received this heart-essence of the supreme vajra, and, with the permission of that Blessed One, surrounded and preceded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, he vanished from that world system. Together with those bodhisattva great beings he went to where that world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence was, to where the great palace of King Vaśavartin was, and to where the Blessed One was, and he illuminated this whole world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence with the great light of the supreme jewel vajra. He illuminated the great palace of King Vaśavartin with flowers of the supreme great vajra, with incense, perfumes, garlands, ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory banners and pennants, and with the radiant light of the supreme great vajra and the supreme jewel. With the sound of the supreme vajra of great boon-granting he made it known in the ten directions. And having made it known, just as he had come, he took his place in the south and sat, together with those bodhisattva great beings, upon great kings of lotuses arisen from the supreme great vajra.

In the west, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Amitābha bestowed upon the bodhisattva great being Avalokiteśvara this heart-essence of the supreme lotus of the great vajra, the supreme maṇḍala of the great compassion of all the tathāgatas. Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Amitābha spoke this heart-essence of the power of compassion, the maṇḍala of the supreme lotus of the great vajra:

namaḥ smanta mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā karuṇa bala vajra padmāgra sa

Then the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Amitābha, having spoken this heart-essence and knowing that the time had come for that son of good family, sent the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara forth, saying, "Go to that world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence, to behold the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Vairocana, and to pay homage to him."

Then the bodhisattva great being, noble Avalokiteśvara, surrounded and preceded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, vanished from that world system. Together with those bodhisattva great beings he came to this world system, went to where the great palace of King Vaśavartin was and to where the Blessed One was, and, having arrived, circumambulated the Blessed One many hundreds of thousands of times. Then, just as he had come, he took his place in the west and sat upon a great lotus, a king of vajras; and through the power of the supreme vajra of great compassion he filled and illuminated this whole great palace of King Vaśavartin and the whole world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence with clouds of the intimations of his own body.

In the north, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Akṣobhya bestowed upon the bodhisattva Kṣitigarbha this heart-essence that holds the supreme seat of awakening, which overpowers by the great vajra and sports by the great vajra. Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Akṣobhya spoke this heart-essence that holds the supreme great seat of awakening:

namaḥ smanta mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā varda manra a gri gri

Having spoken this, he sent the bodhisattva Kṣitigarbha forth, saying, "Son of good family, go to that world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence, to where the great palace of King Vaśavartin is, to behold the Blessed One Vairocana and to pay homage to him."

Then the bodhisattva Kṣitigarbha vanished from that world system. Surrounded and preceded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, together with those bodhisattva great beings he went to where the world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence was, to where the great palace of King Vaśavartin was, and to where the Blessed One was, and, having arrived, circumambulated the Blessed One many hundreds of thousands of times. Then, just as he had come, he took his place in the north, blessed it as an array of the ornaments of the great seat of awakening, and filled the ten directions far and wide with clouds of bodies of the supreme seat of awakening.

From the northeastern quarter, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Supreme Jewel Holder bestowed upon the bodhisattva Jewel Crown this heart-essence of the great vajra, the vajra source of the Three Jewels. Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Supreme Jewel Holder spoke this heart-essence of the vajra source of the Three Jewels:

namaḥ smanta mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā oṃ oṃ jaṃ saṃ

Having given him this, he sent him forth, saying, "Son of good family, go to that world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence, to that great palace of King Vaśavartin, to behold the Blessed One Vairocana and to pay homage to him."

Then the bodhisattva Jewel Crown, with the permission of that Blessed One, vanished from that world system. Surrounded and preceded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, together with those bodhisattva great beings he went to where the world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence was, to where the great palace of King Vaśavartin was, and to where the Blessed One Vairocana was. Then, just as he had come, he took his place in the northeastern quarter and sat upon a king of lotuses adorned with the vajra of the Three Jewels, and he filled all the buddha fields far and wide with clouds of the bodies of the Three Jewels.

From the southeastern quarter, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha called Meghaśrī bestowed upon the bodhisattva Meghagarbha the heart-essence called The Essence of the Supreme Vajra Array of Great Clouds. Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Meghaśrī spoke this heart-essence of the supreme vajra array of great clouds:

namaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā mahā vajra megha vikṛḍite viśva sambhava ha

Having given him this, he sent him forth, saying, "Son of good family, go to that world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence, to that great palace of King Vaśavartin, to behold the Blessed One Vairocana and to pay homage to him."

Then the bodhisattva Meghagarbha vanished from that world system. Surrounded and preceded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, together with those bodhisattva great beings he went to where the Blessed One was and circumambulated the Blessed One many hundreds of thousands of times. Then, just as he had come, he took his place in the southeastern quarter. With clouds of the bodily intimations of the supreme vajra of great clouds he blessed clouds of great kings of lotuses, and he remained there, filling all the world systems far and wide with clouds of supreme great offerings.

From the southwestern quarter, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Mahāvajraketu bestowed upon the bodhisattva great being Vajravīra the heart-essence arisen from the vajra. Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Vajraketu spoke this heart-essence arisen from the great vajra:

namaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā vajroddhube svāhā

Having given him this, he sent him forth. Then the bodhisattva Vajravīra vanished from that world system. Surrounded and preceded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, together with those bodhisattva great beings he went to where the world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence was, to where the palace of King Vaśavartin was, and to where the Blessed One Vairocana was, and he circumambulated the Blessed One many hundreds of thousands of times. Then, just as he had come, he took his place in the southwestern quarter, filled all the world systems far and wide with ornaments of the great vajra arisen from the great vajra, and sat upon a great vajra lotus adorned with vajra forms.

From the northwestern quarter, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Sughoṣa bestowed upon the bodhisattva Thunder King the heart-essence that proclaims the vajra voice. Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Sughoṣa, he of the most melodious voice, spoke this heart-essence of the vajra letters:

namaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra rakṣa nirghoṣa vikrānta svāhā

Having given him this, he sent him forth. Then the bodhisattva great being, the great Thunder King, with the permission of that Blessed One, vanished from that world system. Surrounded and preceded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, together with those bodhisattva great beings he went to where the world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence was, to where the great palace of King Vaśavartin was, and to where the Blessed One Vairocana was. Then, just as he had come, he took his place in the northwestern quarter; with endless melodious chants he made this whole buddha field hear, and he sat upon a great jewel lotus that had come forth from his own aspirations.

From the nadir, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Essence of the Pure Jewel Lotus spoke to the bodhisattva Lotus Limb this vajra heart-essence of the king of great conduct:

namaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā haṃ he svāhā

Having given him this, he sent him forth. Then the bodhisattva Lotus Limb, with the permission of that Blessed One, vanished from that world system. Surrounded and preceded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, together with those bodhisattva great beings he went to where the world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence was, to where the great palace of King Vaśavartin was, and to where the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Vairocana was, and he circumambulated the Blessed One many hundreds of thousands of times. Then, just as he had come, he took his place at the nadir. He filled every world system far and wide with manifold multistoried mansions of great kings of lotuses, and he sat upon a great king of lotuses, the heart of a stainless maṇḍala.

From the zenith, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Jinākara bestowed upon the bodhisattva Utterly Victorious in Battle the heart-essence of the power of awakening. Then the Tathāgata Jinākara spoke this heart-essence of the power of awakening:

namaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā bodhyaṃ kara dharmma svāhā

Having given him this, he sent him forth. Then the bodhisattva Victorious in Battle, with the permission of that Blessed One, vanished from that world system. Surrounded and preceded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of bodhisattvas, together with those bodhisattva great beings he went to where the world system arrayed with the ornament of the Flower-Ground Essence was, to where the great palace of King Vaśavartin was, and to where the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha Vairocana was, and he circumambulated the Blessed One many hundreds of thousands of times. Then, just as he had come, he took his place at the zenith. Making known the boundless filling of the realm of phenomena far and wide, he filled all the world systems far and wide, and he sat upon a great lotus arisen from the nature of reality.

Then those bodhisattvas who had gathered from the world systems of the ten directions and taken their places saw, in these fields of the Blessed One Vairocana, arrays of the qualities of a buddha field never seen before. They saw, too, the Blessed One Vairocana, supremely radiant, brilliant and resplendent, free of all thought and conceptuality, primordially at peace like space, fulfilling every wish like a great king of precious wish-fulfilling jewels; and, filled with wonder, with a single voice they spoke these verses:

"Having cast off all conceptions,
Primordially at peace and unborn,
This wondrous and sublime Protector,
How is it that he appears upon the earth?

He performs no activity with his body,
Nor does he act with speech or mind,
Yet he is endowed with the thirty-two marks,
Like utterly pure crystal.

Though with his body he performs
The deeds of a buddha for all beings,
There is no change in his body:
That Sage is free of change.

His speech is like an echo;
Though it cannot be shown and has no form,
Like the great drum of the gods
It satisfies all beings.

His mind is free of conceit,
And for it there are no objects;
Yet though it is free of objects,
It has become the object of beings.

Just so his speech, just so those beings,
Just so his body, just so his mind:
Fully endowed with a single characteristic,
He appears supreme among those who speak.

Since there exists no Tathāgata
Released from the unborn,
Those who know non-arising
Are the ones who know the Guide.

The Protector is ever in meditative equipoise;
Though he is free of body, speech and mind,
Constantly, in the sphere of body and speech,
The Sage appears without cease.

Great bodhisattvas,
Who perform the hardest of deeds,
Search everywhere for such A great blazing wisdom of the Buddha.

In it the eye does not appear,
Nor is there ear or nose;
Tongue, body and mind as well:
Therefore it is not their object.

It is not form, nor is it sound,
It is not smell, nor taste, nor touch;
It is not faculty, nor consciousness:
It is always at peace, in every respect.

Subject and those objects,
When examined, do not exist;
Since the subject does not exist,
Objects cannot come to be.

When things do not exist
In the way the childish imagine them,
Then the Protector comes to exist,

In the manner of what is unimagined.

He, everywhere and for all,
Fulfills their wishes just as they are;
The Teacher, like a wish-fulfilling jewel,
Is present before everyone.

In the manner of a reflection arising,
For those who have mastered samādhi,
By sight, by speech and by every conversation,
He becomes fit for all to enjoy.

Having seen the Protector Vairocana,
At that moment all attained
Samādhi, dhāraṇī, knowledge and liberation,
Inconceivable, all of them.

Having gained mastery over dhāraṇī,
Seeking the wisdom of the Buddha,
All of us without exception
Have come here from the ten directions.

The dhāraṇī of the perfectly complete Buddha
Is the supreme among dhāraṇīs:
May we truly attain it,
Perfectly complete awakening!"

Then, having spoken those verses, those bodhisattvas, since the body has no former limit and no later limit, and likewise speech and mind have no former limit and no later limit, entered into whatever is the body, speech and mind of the Blessed One Vairocana. Why is that? Because through fully understanding essential nature, no former limit or later limit of the body is observed; and likewise, through fully understanding essential nature, no former limit of speech and mind is observed.

From The Maṇḍala of the Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, this is the first chapter, the introduction.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Vairocana, knowing those bodhisattvas who had gathered from the world systems of the ten directions, and knowing too the bodhisattvas seated there who dwelt in the great palace of King Vaśavartin, entered into absorption in the samādhi of empowering the deeds of a buddha, called the Essence of the Ornament of the Array of Illumination, the samādhi by whose power the tathāgatas, arhats, perfectly complete buddhas, in all world systems and in all the maṇḍalas of buddha assemblies, in an instant, a moment, a brief while, display everything from the first generation of the mind up to the culmination of the great parinirvāṇa.

As soon as the Blessed One had entered absorption, those bodhisattva great beings saw the following. In this world system, in all the boundless world systems, in all the arrays of world systems joined one to another, in all other world systems, in all the four-continent world systems, in all the thousandfold world systems, in all the two-thousandfold world systems, in all that belongs to the world systems of the great trichiliocosm, in all the oceans of world systems, in all the established world systems, and here in this world system adorned with the array of the Flower-Ground Essence, the Blessed One Vairocana, through various arrangements of sounds and verbal expressions suited to beings of various dispositions, various hopes, various desires, various modes of vehicle in which they abide, various destinies, various places of birth, various lands, various colors, various shapes, and various kinds, fully displayed the deeds of a buddha, from the first generation of the mind up to the culmination of the great parinirvāṇa. By a buddha form arising from the maṇḍala of the wheel of his own speech and empowered by the ornament of the array of the buddha voice, he fully empowered the bodhisattva great being Samantabhadra. So that the great vajra maṇḍala would be fruitful, so that the teaching would endure, and so that the deeds of a buddha would be handed down from one to the next without interruption, he empowered him to take up births one after another as time required. And they saw him confer the great empowerment of Vajrapāṇi in the maṇḍala of the great vajra enclosure, through the great empowerment of vajra wisdom, the great vajra essence, the illumination that pervades everything with the radiating light of the great vajra, the conduct of the Great Vehicle, and the gateway of pure secret mantra.

Thus the Blessed One Vairocana, being free of all conceptual elaboration, is everywhere without elaboration. Being free of all conceptual thought, he is nonconceptual. Being free of essential nature, he is empty. Being pure from the very beginning, he is utterly pure. Being free of arising, he is unborn. Having utterly transcended the domain of thought, he is inconceivable. Being free of objects, he is without object. Having utterly transcended the path of words, he is inexpressible. On the ground where all sentient beings in every way come together, like the precious wish-fulfilling jewel of the great bodhisattvas, he accords with all, fulfilling every wish; in all world systems, in the form of reflections, he is present before every sentient being. Yet, like a great and priceless jewel wrapped in a soiled cloth, beings do not recognize him, asking, "Whose is this? What is this?" How astonishing this is!

Those whose intelligence is pure, free of hesitation and doubt, who have served the victors of the past, who have generated roots of virtue, who have first generated the awakening mind in the way of secret mantra and conduct of the Great Vehicle, who are blessed by all the vajra holders, and who have been illuminated by the Blessed One Vairocana with the great light rays of the Essence of the Ornament of the Great Vairocana, have entered the tathāgatagarbha. They have the good fortune to hear and to train in this way of secret mantra conduct, to draw the great vajra maṇḍala, and to accomplish the great siddhi.

Then, in this Sahā world system, the Blessed One, under the name Śākyamuni, in Jambudvīpa of the middle four-continent world system, defeated Māra and attained manifest, perfect, complete awakening. Beginning from his dwelling in the abode of Tuṣita, he gradually carried out his deeds, and empowering them up to the culmination of the great parinirvāṇa, he taught the Dharma. That Blessed One Śākyamuni, too, so that the teaching would not be interrupted, gathered the bodhisattvas, the bodhisattva Samantabhadra, Maitreya, Mañjuśrī, Avalokiteśvara, Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin, Ākāśagarbha, Kṣitigarbha, the bodhisattva Sarvāpāyajaha, and others. Then, in the presence of all, the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, mahoragas, and the rest, he drew the great vajra maṇḍala, empowered the bodhisattva Samantabhadra by conferring the great empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, and entrusted the teaching to him.

From The Great Maṇḍala of the Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, this is the second chapter, called the Account of the Perfect Accomplishment of Former Conduct.

The Noble Great Tantra of the Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, second fascicle.

Thus did I hear at one time. The Blessed One was staying in the great city of Glorious Source of Qualities, in the supreme great forest, the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, a forest blessed as the outcome in kind of the play of the former conduct of all the tathāgatas. He was there together with a great Saṅgha of monks, twenty-two thousand five hundred monks. All of them had exhausted the defilements, were free of afflictions, and had gone to the far shore of supreme mastery over the mind in every respect. They were the venerable Subhūti, the venerable Gavāṃpati, the venerable Great Power, the venerable Madhyāntika, the venerable Mahākāśyapa, the venerable Mahāmaudgalyāyana, the venerable Nanda, the venerable Upananda, the venerable Bhadra, the venerable Rāhula, the venerable Aniruddha, the venerable Mahākapphiṇa, the venerable Rāṣṭrapāla, the venerable Gayākāśyapa, the venerable Uruvilvākāśyapa, the venerable Great Tooth, the venerable Mahākauṣṭhila, the venerable Sundarananda, the venerable Dravya Mallaputra, the venerable Khadiravanika, the venerable Piṇḍola Bhāradvāja, the venerable Kāśyapa Son of the Lord of Conduct, the venerable Close Union, the venerable Kumārakāśyapa, the venerable Cūḍapanthaka, the venerable Śāriputra, and others, twenty-two thousand five hundred monks in all.

There was also a great assembly of bodhisattvas, namely: the youthful Mañjuśrī, the youthful Jālinīprabha, the bodhisattva Ratnākara, the bodhisattva Ratnamati, the bodhisattva Ratnapāṇi, the bodhisattva Precious Seal in Hand, the bodhisattva Ever Diligently Abiding in the Dharma, the bodhisattva Distinguisher of the Words of All Dharmas, the bodhisattva Pacifier of All Torments, the bodhisattva Firmly Steadfast Intelligence, the bodhisattva Benefactor through Superior Intention, the bodhisattva Compassionate One, the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, the bodhisattva Mahāsthāmaprāpta, the bodhisattva Gandhahastin, the bodhisattva Gaganagañja, the bodhisattva Kṣitigarbha, the bodhisattva Ākāśagarbha, the bodhisattva Thunder King, the bodhisattva Gadgadasvara, the bodhisattva Vimalamati, the bodhisattva Inexhaustible Intelligence in Conduct, the bodhisattva Intelligence in Conduct, the bodhisattva Supreme Intelligence, the bodhisattva Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin, the bodhisattva Maitreya, the bodhisattva great being Samantabhadra, and others: bodhisattva great beings as numerous as the atoms in ten buddha fields, together with the sixteen excellent beings, Bhadrapāla and the rest. All of them had gone to the far shore of the bodhisattva grounds and perfections, of the dhāraṇīs, the powers, the factors of awakening, and the noble path, of the attainment of mastery, and of supreme mastery over the mind in every respect. They satisfied all sentient beings according to their wishes; they had gone forth in accordance with their former aspirations; they were skilled in making offerings and rendering service to all the tathāgatas; and they were skilled in seeking the sacred Dharma constantly and without interruption.

Surrounded and faced by such bodhisattva great beings, the Blessed One sat upon a great lion throne with a lotus heart, outshining the world with its gods, utterly radiant, brilliant, and resplendent.

The divine sons of the Pure Abodes also gathered and sat there. Brahmā, lord of the Sahā world, surrounded on all sides by the divine sons of the Brahmakāyika realm, also gathered and sat there. Śakra (Indra), lord of the gods, surrounded and faced by many hundreds of thousands of divine sons, also gathered in that assembly and sat there.

The asura lords Deeply Content, Vemacitrin, Supreme Field, Baṭi, Great Drum, Kālacakra, Vimala, Crest, Moon Face, Destroyer, Profound One, Bali, Rāhu, Proud Crest, Virocana, the asura lord Garlanded with Variety, and others, together with a thousand other asura lords, all these asura lords came forth from their own abodes. Through the great might and great magical power of the asuras they emanated flowers, fragrances, garlands, incense, perfumed ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory banners, pennants, ornaments, cymbals, and clappers. They went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni was, and having arrived, they scattered over the Blessed One all the flowers, incense, fragrances, garlands, ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory banners, pennants, ornaments, cymbals, and clappers that they had emanated. Having scattered them, they bowed to the Blessed One and sat down to one side.

The nāga king Sāgara, the nāga king Anavatapta, the nāga king Hundred Rays, the nāga king Lightning Tongue, the nāga king Jewel Crown, the nāga king Takṣaka, the nāga king Without Chaff, the nāga king Vāsuki, the nāga king Moving by Strength, the nāga king Cropped Ear, the nāga king Lotus Bearer, the nāga king Śaṅkhapāla, the nāga king Mahāpadma, the nāga king Kālika, the nāga king Kulika, the nāga king One Head, the nāga king Deceiver, the nāga king Voice of Indra, the nāga king Mighty One, and others, ten thousand nāga kings, came forth from their own abodes. Through the great might and great magical power of the nāgas they emanated clouds of water scented with gośīrṣa sandalwood, and went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they caused the clouds of scented water they had emanated to rain down upon the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees. Having made it rain, they bowed to the Blessed One and sat down to one side.

The great yakṣa general Vaiśravaṇa, the great yakṣa general Āṭavaka, the great yakṣa general Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the great yakṣa general Virūḍhaka, the great yakṣa general Virūpākṣa, the great yakṣa general Pūrṇabhadra, the great yakṣa general Maṇibhadra, the great yakṣa general Lord of Waters Who Holds the Confounder, the great yakṣa general Hundred Hands, the great yakṣa general Pāñcika, and others, ten thousand great yakṣa generals, came forth from their own abodes. Carrying flowers, incense, fragrances, garlands, ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory banners, pennants, and cymbals, they went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they scattered over the Blessed One the flowers, incense, fragrances, garlands, ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory banners, and pennants they had brought. Having scattered them, they bowed to the Blessed One and sat down to one side.

Druma, king of the kinnaras, with a retinue of many kinnaras, many hundreds of thousands of them carrying many kinds of kinnara flowers, incense, fragrances, garlands, ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory banners, pennants, cymbals, and clappers, also came forth from their own abodes and went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they scattered over the Blessed One the flowers, incense, fragrances, garlands, ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory banners, pennants, cymbals, and clappers they had brought. Having scattered them, they bowed to the Blessed One and sat to one side.

The garuḍa lord Vainateya, the garuḍa lord Terrible Goer, the garuḍa lord Hundred Feathers, and the garuḍa lord Crested One, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of garuḍas, also went to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed to the Blessed One and sat down to one side.

The lord of rākṣasīs Wrathful Face, the lord of rākṣasīs Fine Fangs, the lord of rākṣasīs Fierce One, Very Violent, Terrifying to Behold, Frightener, Great Terrifier, Ten-Faced, Yama, Bell of Yama, Utterly Terrifying to Behold, and Moon Host, with a retinue of many rākṣasas, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

The great sage Fire, with many sages, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, he bowed his head at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

The winds, Garlanded with Clouds, the Destroying Wind, the Forming Wind, the All-Sustaining Wind, the Scattering Wind, the Timely Wind, the Scattering Gust, the Gale, and the World-Upholding Wind, also went to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed to the Blessed One and sat down to one side.

The Moon, king of the stars, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of stars, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of great sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, he bowed his head at the Blessed One's feet and sat to one side.

The Sun Garlanded with Rays, the Heater, the Drier, the Smoke-Maker, the Blazing One, and the Sun Delighter, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of divine sons of exalted splendor, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

Varuṇa, king of the nāgas, with a retinue of many nāga kings, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, he bowed his head at the Blessed One's feet and sat to one side.

Viṣṇu with his retinue also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, he bowed his head at the Blessed One's feet and sat to one side.

Rudra, with a retinue of hungry ghosts, also went to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, he bowed to the Blessed One and sat down to one side.

Īśāna, lord of the bhūtas, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of bhūtas, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, he bowed his head at the Blessed One's feet and sat to one side.

The great king of the planets, the Son of the Pleiades, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of planets, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, he bowed his head at the Blessed One's feet and sat to one side.

The cloud gods, the divine son called Gray One, the divine son called Lightning Garland, the divine son called Destroyer of Dense Nets of Cloud, and the divine son called Rain-Bringer, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of divine sons, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

The lightnings called Thickener, Splendid One, Dense Light, Lightning Light, and Beautiful Garland, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of lightnings, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

Sumeru, king of mountains, the mountain king Gandhamādana, the mountain king Himālaya, the mountain king Vindhya, the mountain king Malaya, the mountain king Mahendra, the mountain king Enduring, the mountain king Hundred Peaks, the mountain king Citrakūṭa, the mountain king Vidyādhara, and other mountain kings too went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

Yama, Kālarātrī, the Bearer of the Black Club, the Black Man, the Lord of Death, Glory-Giver, and Kālakarṇī also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

She Who Repels Austerity, Cāmuṇḍā, the wife of Rudra, the wife of Brahmā, the wife of Viṣṇu, the wife of Kumāra, the wife of Kubera, the wife of the Boar, and the wife of the Great Terrifier also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

The great river Gaṅgā, the great river Sītā, the great river Sarasvatī, the great river Vidastā, the great river Candrabhāgā, the great river Yamunā, the great river Viśvāmitrā, the great river Vegavatī, the great river Lake-Reliant, the great river Godāvarī, and the great river Giver of Love also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

The gandharva king Garlanded with Variety, the gandharva king Ravisher, the gandharva king Great Force, the gandharva king Vanquisher, the gandharva king Water-Born, the gandharva king Utpala-Eyed, and the gandharva king Sandalwood Heap also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

The vidyādhara king Crest, the vidyādhara king Lesser Crest, the vidyādhara king Very Fierce, the vidyādhara king Proud One, the vidyādhara king Holder of Force, the vidyādhara king Citrasena, these vidyādhara kings and others too, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of vidyādhara kings, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

The rākṣasī called Toothed One, the rākṣasī called Distractor, the rākṣasī called Night-Roamer, the rākṣasī called Gnasher, the rākṣasī called Bewilderer, the rākṣasī called Wild One, the rākṣasī called Vajra Belly, the rākṣasī called Pot Belly, the rākṣasī called Copper Wing, the rākṣasī called Lightning Tongue, the rākṣasī called Puñcale, the rākṣasī called She-Ass, the rākṣasī called Dreadful One, and the rākṣasī called Vajra Nails, these great rākṣasīs and others, with a retinue of many rākṣasīs, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

The bhūta king Spear Bearer, the bhūta king Plough Bearer, the bhūta king Pestle Bearer, the bhūta king Plough Holder, the bhūta king Summoner, and the bhūta king Stiff Neck, with a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of bhūtas, also went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

All the piśācas, all the vitality-stealers, all the oppressors, all the shadow-oppressors, all the hungry ghosts, all the māras, all the gods of Māra's class, and the mighty Gaṇapati, all of these went to the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees, to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side. The four rākṣasīs, too, came from the four directions, gathered together, and went to where the Blessed One was. Having arrived, they bowed their heads at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side.

At that time the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees became exceedingly vast and wide, and soft to the touch like kācalindika cloth. Its ground was laid out in a checkerboard of vajra, beryl, and musāragalva. It was beautified with gateways, porticoes, and windows on both sides; above, a net of great jeweled bells and tinkling chimes was spread; many pearl necklaces were hung; many silk tassels were spread; cymbals and clappers gave forth sweet and pleasing sounds; and the whole area was strewn with divine flowers, utpalas, kumudas, white lotuses, and supreme fragrances. Thus, through the blessing of the Buddha and the miraculous power of the Buddha, the entire dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees was encircled by the ring of a great vajra enclosure and became the courtyard of a vajra maṇḍala, a million leagues in length and breadth, beautifully adorned with flowers of every season, its every quarter filled with divine water possessing the eight qualities, arising from the karma of bodhisattvas. Just as the abode of the king of the Paranirmitavaśavartin gods, arising from pure karma, abides radiant and resplendent, so too the dense grove adorned with banners of many kinds of sal trees shone in brilliant beauty through the power of the Blessed One.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni, entered absorption in the samādhi called Vajra Source. As soon as the Blessed One had entered meditative equipoise, all the tathāgatas uttered the word "Excellent!" and spoke this heart-mantra called Vajra Source:

"Excellent, excellent, great hero,
Vajra Source of mighty strength!
Over this maṇḍala of the assembly
Of Śākyasiṃha, the protector,
Great vajra strength, keep guard!
namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ svahā"

As soon as this supreme heart-mantra of the Vajra Source was spoken, throughout all the maṇḍalas of the assembly and all the boundless world systems, the heart-mantra of the Vajra Source resounded with a roar, one sound after another, and this was heard:

"Vajra Source, great hero,
Benefactor of all beings!
This maṇḍala of the assembly

Is blessed by the Great Sage.
May all living creatures always
Hold this heart-mantra,
And thereby may all of them here
Attain the siddhi of the great way!"

Then the Blessed One Śākyamuni looked upon the whole assembly and said to the bodhisattvas Samantabhadra, Maitreya, Mañjuśrī, and the others: "Sons of good family, there is the supreme secret called the Maṇḍala of the Empowerment of Great Vajra Wisdom, the Conferral of the Great Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi. It is the former bodhisattva conduct of the Blessed One Vairocana, called the Essence of the Treasury That Enters the Gateway of Purity; it is the entry into secret mantra, the gateway of secret mantra that follows bodhisattva conduct; it is the abode of the Great Vehicle of the bodhisattvas, the secret maṇḍala called the Essence of the Empowerment of Vajra Wisdom, which fully reveals the wisdom of omniscience; like a king of wish-fulfilling jewels, it bears abundant fruit at once; it is the great secret of the bodhisattvas, well spoken by bodhisattvas; it is the magical display of the bodhisattvas, the play of bodhisattva illusion, the samaya of all the tathāgatas. Even all the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas do not fully know it, so what need is there to speak of other beings knowing it? Only bodhisattva great beings who do not depend on others, who are born into the family of the tathāgatas, and who are blessed by all the tathāgatas are the exception."

Then the whole assembly, together with the bodhisattva Samantabhadra and the others, spoke with one voice: "Blessed One, this is the time. Sugata, this is the occasion."

Then the Blessed One entered absorption in the samādhi called the Essence of Accomplishing the Full Display of Former Conduct, and spoke this king of secret mantras, the gateway of purified former conduct, the source of the great vajra:

namaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā khaṃ

As soon as the king of secret mantras had been spoken, the whole assembly, their hearts filled with wonder, spoke with one voice:

"Ah, how great the joy of wisdom!
The supreme bliss of concentration is attained!
All have been brought under its power."

Then the Blessed One, knowing that the whole assembly was single-pointedly absorbed in wonder, sent forth from the śrīvatsa on his chest a light ray called Exhorting All Bodhisattvas. Having gone forth, it illuminated all the abodes of the bodhisattvas, and then it entered back into the Blessed One's śrīvatsa.

At that time the bodhisattva, the great being called Samantabhadra, had made the aspiration to display the former conduct of the Blessed One Vairocana throughout this entire world system called Kusumatalagarbhavyūhālaṃkāra, the Array of Ornaments of the Flower-Ground Essence. Having taken up the power to tame the yakṣas, he was dwelling here in the central Jambudvīpa of the Sahā world, in Alakāvatī, in the abode of the great yakṣa general Āṭavaka. Illuminated by the radiance of that light ray, his eyes and face grew wide with joy, and he gave voice to this inspired utterance; then, bringing to mind the very inconceivability of the Tathāgata, he remained silent.

Then the Blessed One at that time made a sign to the bodhisattva Samantabhadra to come, and he also spoke these verses:

"Pure being, like the moon, come here!
Blessed by the Tathāgata, bent on awakening,
You who have fully realized and understood inconceivable sameness,
Ever grateful to the buddhas, come here!
Ever abiding in the sameness of the three times,
Vajrasattva, supreme vajra, come here!
However many buddhas there are in the ten directions,
Who act for the sake of beings and possess inconceivable forms,
You go before them all in their aims:
Lord of Secrets, supreme being, come here!
Sublime secret one, essence of beings, come here!
You who ever tame the hard to tame, who have gained power, come here!
You are born of what has steadfastly arisen.
Knower of the right time and measure, come here!
You who have attained the sublime, come here!
Bestower of the sublime, come here!
Maker of glory, gatherer of glory, glorious one,
Son of the Sugata, come here!
Excellent being of great strength,
Like a vajra, come here!

Fearless son of the buddhas,
Supreme among the strong, come here!
You who ever gladden the hearts
Of the three realms of existence, come here!
Teacher of the true path,
Abiding in the ten powers, come here!
Pure being of great miraculous power,
Samantabhadra, come here!
All-beautiful one, come here!
Lord of the three realms of existence, come here!
You of lovely form, richly adorned,
You with the ears of an elephant, come here!
You of manifold forms, free from delusion,
A delight to behold, come here!
You whose form soars above beings, come here!
Come here, Nāḍakubera!
Ever wearing garlands of many-colored cloth,
With diadem and necklace, come here!
You who have gained fearlessness, come here!
Terrifier of terrors, come here!
Son of the buddhas, of great miraculous power,
Do not delay, come here!"

Then the Blessed One, having spoken these verses, uttered the queen of vidyā-mantras, the Door of Fearlessness for one who comes:

namaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathagātebhyaḥ sarvathā a bismaye vaiśaradya mukhe bhagabati vajra amalini mābilaṃba svāhā

Having declared this queen of vidyā-mantras, the Door of Fearlessness, the Blessed One remained silent.

Then, urged by the Blessed One through this queen of vidyā-mantras, the bodhisattva Samantabhadra said to the whole host of yakṣas, "Friends, come!" And in order to see that Blessed One, to pay homage to him and to attend upon him, he set out, surrounded by a host of many bodhisattvas, encircled by many hundreds of thousands of śrāvakas, and wholly surrounded and escorted in front by many thousands of koṭis of gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kiṃnaras, mahoragas, humans and nonhumans, toward the dense forest grove adorned with banners of various sāla trees, where the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni was dwelling.

Then that host of yakṣas and the young yakṣas spoke with one voice: "As the great being has commanded, we go to the dense forest grove adorned with banners of various sāla trees, in order to see the Blessed One Śākyamuni, to pay homage to him and to attend upon him, and also to see, pay homage to and attend upon that assembly, complete in every respect."

Then at that time the bodhisattva Samantabhadra entered into the meditative absorption called Various Ornaments, which displays the natural outflow of all conduct.

As soon as the bodhisattva Samantabhadra had entered that meditative absorption, then, in that very instant, there came into being the pavilion called Vairocana's Array of Ornaments. It was as vast and wide as a great trichiliocosm world system. Many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of pillars of great jewels were set up in it. It was adorned with many gateways, porticoes and terraces, and embellished with work in Jambū River gold, fashioned as if into a single sāla tree. It was beautified along all its edges with rows like doves, and hung with nets of both kinds of pearls. Nets of jeweled bells and little bells encircled the sky above it, and it was beautified by many hanging tassels of divine fine cloth and silk. Divine cymbals and chime-stones gave forth sweet and delightful sounds. It was filled with hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of divine maidens who sang, danced, played music and spoke sweetly, adorned with bracelets, earrings and armlets, and possessed of divine bodies. Canopies of great jewels were spread over it everywhere, and its sides were finely embellished with great beryl. It was well adorned with flowering trees of every season, soft to the touch like kācilindika cloth, and embellished with rows of stairways of divine jewels. Geese, swans, ruddy shelducks, jīvaṃjīvaka birds, parrots, mynas, peacocks, cranes and many other flocks of birds gave voice there. It was beautified all around by ponds for the bodhisattvas to enjoy, filled with divine flowers, utpalas, kumudas, white lotuses, saugandhikas, lotuses and kalarakas, and with water endowed with the eight qualities, their beds silted with the mud of divine uragasāra sandalwood. Constantly and without interruption, a rain of divine flowers fell upon that pavilion: māndārava, paruṣaka and great paruṣaka flowers, earth-piercing flowers and great earth-piercing flowers. It was made beautiful by being covered with many clouds of the smoke of black aloewood incense.

Within that pavilion he emanated the individual abodes of all the bodhisattvas, produced by their karma, each just as they had intended. In each of those pavilions, moreover, were set sixteen wish-fulfilling jewels, beginning with the Powerful King of Jewels, and great precious jewels, beginning with the King of Jewels, to be enjoyed just as one wishes, which fulfill the wishes of all sentient beings. All the pavilions of Vairocana's Array of Ornaments were beautified with raised parasols, victory banners and pennants. In those pavilions he also emanated lion thrones with lotus hearts. All the pavilions, too, had the nature of great, clear beryl. Just as, for example, a well-polished mirror is, so the pavilion of Vairocana's Array of Ornaments was by its nature pure and clear; and because the beryl was clear, all the world systems of the great trichiliocosm appeared in it as reflections.

In the center he emanated a lion throne for the Blessed One, made of the king of jewels called Essence of the Array of All Beings. He emanated clouds of all the requisites that sustain sentient beings, raining down constantly everywhere in that pavilion. This was so because the bodhisattva Samantabhadra had practiced the ocean of the Blessed One Vairocana's former conduct.

Having thus emanated it in order to make offerings to the Blessed One, he set out in order to see the Blessed One, to pay homage to him, to attend upon him and to hear the Dharma, together with the great host of yakṣas, surrounded and escorted in front by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of young yakṣas. Through a bodhisattva's great miraculous power and a bodhisattva's great might, he took up that pavilion with both his hands, came down through the sky, and went to where the dense forest grove adorned with banners of various sāla trees was, where the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni was.

The light of that pavilion filled this whole dense forest grove adorned with banners of various sāla trees with a great illumination. The gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, kinnaras, mahoragas, humans and nonhumans who had gathered and were seated in that assembly were lit up by that light, and when they looked about in the four directions, they saw in the sky above, six million eight hundred thousand yojanas up, something blazing like a great mass of fire, gleaming like a thousand suns, splendid and beautiful. Having seen it, their hearts filled with wonder, they looked at one another and sat in silence.

Those bodhisattva great beings who had attained dhāraṇī, attained patience and attained the powers also looked, and saw it blazing like a great mass of fire, gleaming like a thousand suns, splendid and beautiful. Their hearts too filled with wonder, they asked the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni, "Blessed One, what is this that gleams, glows and shines in the sky six million eight hundred thousand yojanas above here, Blessed One, so hard to fathom and hard to describe?"

When they had asked this, the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni declared to those bodhisattvas and that great assembly of gods: "Sons of noble family, this is the bodhisattva great being called Samantabhadra, who has come to see me, to pay homage to me, to make offerings to me, to attend upon me and to hear the Dharma. In order to make offerings to me he has emanated the pavilion called Vairocana's Array of Ornaments. It is a miracle displaying the conduct of all the tathāgatas, the natural outflow of accomplishing former conduct. What gleams, glows and shines there is the light of that thing whose qualities could not be fathomed to their end even in a hundred eons."

"And this bodhisattva great being Samantabhadra will inquire fully into the Dharma discourse called The Pure Abode, the Door of Entry into the Great Vehicle."

As soon as the Blessed One had spoken this reply, the bodhisattva great being Samantabhadra, remaining in the sky at the height of about seven tāla trees, emanated clouds of divine flowers, incense, perfumes, garlands, ointments, powders, garments, parasols, victory banners, pennants and chime-stones, and rained them down over the whole dense forest grove adorned with banners of various sāla trees. Then he descended from the sky above and offered that pavilion to the Blessed One. Having offered it, he praised the Blessed One:

"Through knowing body, speech and mind,
You whose discipline is pure and excellent,
Wholly pure of every conception,
Pure being, homage to you!
With the eye, and likewise the ear,
With the nose, and likewise the tongue,
With the body, and likewise the mind,
I pay homage to the supreme of speakers.

Liberated from every thing
That the subject seeks, form, sound, smell, taste and touch,
To the supreme Victor
I pay homage.
Primordially at peace and unborn,
Through body, speech, mind and the rest,
Like a reflection in the world,
O Lord, you ever take delight.
You are not a sentient being, not a life;
You are not a person, not a ground of all;
You have not arisen from time or from nature;
You are not 'how,' not 'what.'
You are merely dependently arisen;
Like an illusion, you have left behind being an entity.
That phenomena are like illusions
You have understood, supreme among two-legged beings.
You are empty of essential nature,
And emptiness too does not exist;
Liberated from empty and not empty,
Homage to you, who are like space!"

Then the bodhisattva great being Samantabhadra, having praised the Blessed One, circumambulated the Blessed One many hundreds of thousands of times together with his retinue, bowed his head at the Blessed One's feet, and sat down to one side, gazing at the Blessed One.

Then from that pavilion, from those arrays, and from those cymbals and chime-stones, one after another, the sound of the initial conduct of the Great Vehicle rang out, resounding:

"Primordially at peace and without characteristics,
The nature of reality is solely pure.
Abandon your doubts and suspicions,
And oh, strive in this!
This abode of the Great Vehicle
Is the unsurpassed former conduct.
This king of conduct, of great happiness,
May all fully attain it!
Through the cause of wholly purifying

The oceans of former conduct,
The Victor Vairocana
Is ever beautiful here: behold!
The Teacher does not abide anywhere,
And though he does not abide anywhere in conduct,
Those who have trained in the conducts
Will come to abide in them all.
The Lord of beings does not appear
To the eye, likewise to the ear,
To the nose, to the tongue,
Likewise to the body, or to the mind.
When the conduct of first arising
Has been trained in,
Then the Blessed One Vairocana
Is constantly seen by the yogin.
Not far and not near,
Not inside and not outside,
Abiding always like space,
The great one appears to the yogin."

As soon as the bodhisattva great being Samantabhadra had heard these verses, he rose from his seat, draped his upper robe over one shoulder, set his right knee on the ground, bowed with palms joined toward the Blessed One, and said to the Blessed One, "If the Blessed One would grant me the opportunity to ask a question and have it answered, I would ask the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha about a few points."

When he had said this, the Blessed One said to the bodhisattva Samantabhadra, "Son of noble family, ask whatever you wish, and I shall satisfy your mind by answering each thing you ask."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva great being Samantabhadra said to the Blessed One, "Blessed One, what is called 'entering the Great Vehicle, entering the Great Vehicle': of what is this a designation? What is the conduct of entering the Great Vehicle like? And who has realized and understood that conduct?"

When he had asked this, the Blessed One gave the bodhisattva Samantabhadra his approval: "Excellent, great being, excellent! Great being, it is good that you ask the Tathāgata about this matter. Therefore listen well and closely, and keep it in mind, and I shall explain entering the Great Vehicle and the abode of entering the Great Vehicle.

"Son of noble family, here 'Great Vehicle' is a designation for the inconceivable nature of reality. Its entry is awakening. Son of noble family, 'abode' means the ground. It is, moreover, conduct preceded by great compassion: taking up the power to tame all sentient beings, it displays its forms according to place and time.

"Further, son of noble family, the Great Vehicle is of two kinds: that distinguished as conditioned and that distinguished as unconditioned. Of these, what is distinguished as conditioned is conduct in its nature. The Great Vehicle itself, distinguished as unconditioned, is the Great Vehicle.

"Further, son of noble family, the conditioned is what is produced by conditions; it has the characteristic of dependent arising. Son of noble family, the unconditioned is the unborn nature of reality, and emptiness, its own essential nature.

"Further, son of noble family, what is the Great Vehicle that is conduct in nature? Having made emptiness manifest, the tathāgatas, arhats, perfectly complete buddhas, according to place and time, take up the power to tame sentient beings; and it is designated in the manner of being embraced by deeds and actions and set in motion by deeds and actions. Son of noble family, this is the Great Vehicle that is conduct in nature.

"Son of noble family, what then is the Great Vehicle itself as unconditioned? It is a designation for the nature of reality as it abides. Son of noble family, 'the nature of reality as it abides' is a designation for inconceivability itself."

"That which is the inconceivable nature of reality is the unconditioned. That which is unconditioned does not depend on the two extremes; it has no designated essential nature, nor does it have an undesignated essential nature. That which has not even a designated essential nature has no conduct. That which has no conduct cannot be expressed. That which cannot be expressed is free from all entities. That which is free from all entities is undisturbed. That which is undisturbed is the Dharma. That which is the Dharma is the Tathāgata's manifest and perfect awakening. That which is the Tathāgata's manifest and perfect awakening is the truth.

"Son of noble family, that which is the truth exists. That which exists is not false. That which is not false is genuine. That which is genuine is the nature of reality. That which is the nature of reality is non-conceptual and free of conceptualization. That which is non-conceptual and free of conceptualization is wisdom. That which is wisdom is consciousness. That which is consciousness is suchness. That which is suchness is designated. That which is designated is conception. That which is conception is taught to be the conventional. Because the conventional exists, conduct is designated. Because designation exists, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha is shown appearing in the world. The deeds of a buddha, defeating the four māras, turning the wheel of Dharma, and so on up to the great final nirvāṇa, as well as abiding, arising, perishing, birth, aging, sickness, prosperity and decline, are all displayed in the world.

"Son of noble family, taking up the power of time and place for these and the like, they set up the maṇḍala of conduct and teach the Dharma to sentient beings by various kinds of skillful means. That teaching of the Dharma is the genuine culmination: it converges perfectly in a single vehicle and brings about the perfect attainment of a single domain. Why is that? Because the Tathāgata is free from all conception.

"Son of noble family, in that which is the nature of reality there is no designation or cognition, and nothing is apprehended, because wisdom is non-conceptual. In it there is neither conduct nor non-conduct, neither training nor non-training, neither discipline nor non-discipline. In it no engaging or turning back of body, speech or mind is apprehended. In it there is no such thing as 'Tathāgata,' 'buddha,' 'bodhisattva,' 'śrāvaka,' 'pratyekabuddha,' 'Dharma,' 'Saṅgha,' 'god,' 'nāga,' 'yakṣa,' and so on up to gandharva, asura, garuḍa, kinnara, mahoraga, human and nonhuman; nor 'existent' or 'nonexistent,' 'merit' or 'non-merit,' 'saṃsāra' or 'nirvāṇa,' 'bondage' or 'liberation.' Son of noble family, in it there is no such thing as 'time,' 'hour,' 'instant,' 'moment' or 'brief while.' In it there is no such thing as 'moon,' 'star,' 'sun,' 'fire,' 'wind,' 'water,' 'earth,' 'night,' 'day,' 'season,' 'yearly cycle' or 'month.'

"Son of noble family, thus all the doors of conceptual imputation that fall to the extreme of worldly convention, and all the doors of imputation that transcend the world, do not occur in it and do not exist; they are not apprehended there. Why is that? Because the nature of reality has the characteristic of nonduality, and duality does not occur in it. Son of noble family, it is like this: since no second space has ever arisen, the element of space is nondual. Son of noble family, just so the nature of reality too is nondual.

"Son of noble family, therefore those who practice in such a nature of reality are taught to be bodhisattva great beings who practice the conduct practiced by the tathāgatas, arhats, perfectly complete buddhas. Why is that? Non-conduct is the bodhisattva's conduct. Non-training is the bodhisattva's training. Non-attainment is the bodhisattvas' attainment. Non-undertaking is the bodhisattvas' undertaking. Non-discipline is discipline. The undesignatable is designation. Not seeing is seeing the Buddha. Not attending is attending upon the Saṅgha. Not listening is listening to the Dharma. Not understanding is understanding. Not going is going. Not abiding is abiding. Non-emptiness is emptiness. Bodhisattvas have no knowing, no attaining, no clear realization and no direct experiencing.

"Son of noble family, by this enumeration too it should be understood thus: the bodhisattva great being has practiced the conduct. He is not attached to anything. He has no clinging to anything. He has no anger toward anything. He has no aversion toward anything. Free of appearances, undeluded and unerring, he is always in meditative equipoise: non-conceptual, peaceful, well established, without equal, utterly unmoving. He never wearies of working for the Buddha, the Dharma, the Saṅgha and sentient beings, and in all three times he knows no discouragement.

"Son of noble family, it is like this: the element of space is not defiled by dust, smoke or clouds, and it does not become discouraged. Why is that? Because the element of space is non-conceptual. Son of noble family, just so the bodhisattva who has practiced such conduct does not become discouraged and is not defiled."

"Son of noble family, a bodhisattva who abides in such conduct should, through the tathāgatas' conduct arisen from the great vajra, the conduct of the Great Vajra Crest, the ornament that is the array of the great vajra maṇḍala, take up the Dharma discourses on merit and the rest, read them, and also explain them extensively and correctly to others."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva great being Samantabhadra said to the Blessed One, "Blessed One, it is wonderful! Sugata, it is wonderful! Those bodhisattvas in whose ears these Dharma discourses will resound have gained a fine gain; what need is there to speak of those who listen to them, hold them, read them and bring them to mind? Blessed One, they are certain to attain unsurpassed, perfectly complete awakening in the Great Vehicle. Blessed One, they are fortunate enough for the inconceivable way, the abode of miraculous display of the unsurpassed Great Vehicle, the Tathāgata's manifest and perfect awakening. Out of loving concern for me, may the Blessed One please explain the unsurpassed Great Vehicle, which bears abundant fruit at once."

When he had made this request, the Blessed One remained silent and entered the meditative absorption called Great Vajra Source. The moment the Blessed One was in equipoise, then, in that very instant, in all the infinite world systems of every direction, all the tathāgatas proclaimed the sound of the great vajra, and with one voice uttered the syllable of Vajrasattva, the Vajra Source, called Essence of the Radiant Light of the Blazing Great Vajra. They went to where the dense forest grove adorned with banners of various sāla trees was, where the Blessed One Śākyamuni was, and having arrived they sat down with legs crossed on great vajra lotus seats.

Then those tathāgatas inquired after the health of the Blessed One Śākyamuni: "Are you free from harm?" They inquired after his health: "Are you free from illness? Is your movement light? Are you strong? Are you well? Are you living in comfort?"

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni, together with all those tathāgatas, spoke this vajra king of secret mantras that blesses the vajra maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarvathā oṃ vajra kara khaṃ svāhā

Then those tathāgatas, having spoken the secret mantra that blesses the great vajra maṇḍala, remained in equipoise in the meditative absorption called Miraculous Display through the Blessing of the Buddha.

Then that great assembly, complete in every respect, their hearts drawn by the thought, "How great a marvel!", sat gazing at Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta. Then Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta, knowing that the assembly was single-pointedly absorbed in the thought, "How great a marvel!", said to the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni, and to those tathāgatas gathered from the world systems of the ten directions:

"Since, having declared the king of secret mantras,
The guides now do not speak,
It is certain that the Sugata's son
Is to be empowered with the vajra.
The conduct of secret mantra is great wisdom,
The supreme state of the Great Vehicle;
In it are attained omniscience
And the conduct that accomplishes every aim.
The Great Vehicle arisen from the conduct of secret mantra
Is omniscience itself;
The perfect buddhas of the past
Have always taught it in this supreme grove.
The sāla banner, so greatly delightful,
Is the place where true conduct is taught.
What has arisen from former conduct
Is said to arise from knowledge of secret mantra.
All the perfect buddhas who have passed,
Likewise all those yet to come,
And the protectors who have arisen now,
The guides who are present,
All of them, having come here,
Grant to the Sugata's son
This empowerment through the Great Vehicle
That arises from the conduct of secret mantra.
O great sage of the buddhas,
The empowerment of all is mine."

"Because I long to benefit the world,
I make this request of the perfect buddhas:
In order to guard the whole of the teaching
And to make the true Dharma abide forever,
Upon the crown of this great-souled one
May the perfect buddhas confer empowerment.
He has fully understood and realized the Great Vehicle
That arises from the conduct of secret mantra.
His former aspirations have surely come to pass;
He is the buddhas' son of great renown.
This one, surely endowed with primordial conduct,

What is he but the very likeness of a buddha?
The Sugata's son, free of attachment,
Has gained mastery over the culmination of awakening.
Since the protector of secret mantra
Has blessed this assembly in every way,
You who have proclaimed the king of secret mantra,
Why do you now remain without speaking?
All have been seized with wonder
And stay intent on understanding it well.
O great heroes, please dispel their doubts
And likewise their hesitation.
Now that the time has come,
Please make no delay, but explain it."

Then those tathāgatas knew that Mañjuśrī Kumārabhūta had made this request, and the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Śākyamuni, spoke:

"This nature of reality, to which the guides have awakened,
Is singularly supreme.
Those who always rest in meditative equipoise
Should realize it with intense concentration."

Then the tathāgatas, Śākyamuni and the others, blessed into being a dense grove arrayed with banners of many kinds of sāla trees, laid out everywhere with the cloister of a vajra maṇḍala. It was square, with a plinth, and with four doors set facing outward. It was encircled by an outer enclosure of the seven kinds of precious substances, adorned with gateways, archways and terraces, canopied above with jewelled canopies, and hung with threads of the five kinds of jewels from which jewelled bells rang out. In its center was a vajra lotus throne, ringed in the eight directions by garlands of great vajras and encircled all around by a vajra outer enclosure. Beyond that vajra enclosure it was hung with vajra garlands and vajra threads, bound with vajra bonds, and staked with vajra pegs, and they blessed all of it to be of the very nature of vajra. Then from the uṣṇīṣa on the crowns of their heads they sent forth rays of light called Power Unobstructed Everywhere. Having sent forth those rays of light, they illuminated the maṇḍala of the assembly, complete in every respect, and the rays entered the crown of the head of the bodhisattva mahāsattva Samantabhadra.

As soon as those rays of light of the tathāgatas had entered, the bodhisattva mahāsattva Samantabhadra was delighted, pleased and overjoyed, and he spoke the heart mantra called Unobstructed Power:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyo viśva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā apratihata bala mahā vajra ājñā karaṇa namo stute svahā

Then, as soon as the vajra heart mantra of Unobstructed Power had been spoken, those tathāgatas blessed into being a vajra whose form was produced by meditative absorption, dhāraṇī, the powers, the factors of awakening, the path, the noble truths, emptiness, and the unshared qualities of the buddhas, fashioned from the limit of great emptiness, and generated by the six perfections, namely generosity, discipline, perfect restraint, gentleness and the rest. This they placed in the hand of the bodhisattva Samantabhadra.

As soon as those tathāgatas had placed the vajra in Samantabhadra's hand, throughout the boundless world systems of the ten directions and in all the maṇḍalas of the buddhas' assemblies, all the tathāgatas, all the bodhisattvas, all the śrāvakas, all the pratyekabuddhas, and all the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kiṃnaras, mahoragas, humans and nonhumans proclaimed with one voice, "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva is Vajrapāṇi! He is Vajrapāṇi!"

The Noble Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, the third fascicle.

Having blessed this sacred pledge, those tathāgatas again spoke this heart mantra called Secret Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā guhya vajra dhara svāhā

Then, as soon as the heart mantra of the Secret Vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the maṇḍalas of the buddhas' assemblies the cry "Lord of Secrets! Lord of Secrets!" resounded with a roar from one to the next. And so, through the might of this heart mantra and the power of the blessing of all the tathāgatas, the perfect mind and wisdom of all the tathāgatas directly entered the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra called the Dhāraṇī of the Great Vast Vajra, the heart that guards the teaching everywhere and fully protects beings:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dhara pira vira pikira svāhā

As soon as the heart mantra of the Great Vast Vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the maṇḍalas of the buddhas' assemblies, Vajrapāṇi, the crowned one who arises from the Great Vast Vajra and who knows the rite of perfectly displaying every form, appeared everywhere: in all the buddha fields and all the boundless world systems, at the feet of all the tathāgatas, before all the bodhisattvas, all the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, those who have first generated the mind of awakening, and beginners, and behind and before sentient beings, whether they were awake or asleep, teaching the Dharma, attaining complete and perfect awakening, working for the benefit of beings, or producing emanations. In the presence of all of them he appeared.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the supreme vajra heart mantra called Binding the Directions with the Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā dig vajra ṭa ṭa ṭa ṭa ṭaṃ svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of binding the directions with the vajra had been spoken, all the malevolent beings in the ten directions appeared bound with vajra bonds.

Then, again, those tathāgatas spoke the vajra heart mantra called the Vajra Peg of the Earth:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ṭha ṭha ṭha ṭha ṭhaṃ svāhā

As soon as this vajra heart mantra of fixing the earth had been spoken, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra that Fixes the Earth!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the supreme heart mantra called the Vajra Beneath the Earth:

namaḥ sarva tathagatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvatha yaṭa yaṭraṃ svaha

As soon as this heart mantra of the Vajra Beneath the Earth had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the realms beneath the earth, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra Beneath the Earth!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra called Cutting Off the Movements of All Vidyādharas:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā cchinda sarva vīryā ntu raga dim pravar mala bdha vijaya svāhā

As soon as this supreme heart mantra of cutting off the movements of the vidyādharas had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the vidyādharas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the one who cuts off the movements of the vidyādharas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Great Vajra that Crushes the Yakṣas:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra yakṣaṇi gṛhadata svāhā

As soon as the heart mantra of the yakṣa vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the yakṣas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Yakṣas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra called the Crest Banner Proclaiming the Nāga Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hara hara nāga vajra svāhā

Then, as soon as this heart mantra of the nāga vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the nāgas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Nāgas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Great Gandharva Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā matha matha vajra gandharvahṛd ya svāhā

As soon as the heart mantra of the Great Gandharva Vajra had been spoken, at that very moment, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the gandharvas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Gandharvas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Great Vajra, Lord of the Garuḍas:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra pita tadhara kara haṃ ha svāhā

Then, as soon as this heart mantra of the Great Vajra, Lord of the Garuḍas, had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the garuḍas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva, the great Vajrapāṇi, is the Vajra of the Lord of the Garuḍas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Great Kinnara Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra kinnara danda vijaya śapta svāhā

Then, as soon as this supreme kinnara heart mantra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the kinnaras, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Kinnaras!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Vajra of the Great Mahoragas:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā mahorga vajra jvālāya svāhā

Then, as soon as this heart mantra of the Vajra of the Great Mahoragas had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the great mahoragas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Great Mahoragas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Great Rākṣasa Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra rākṣasa krura daha paca ṭuṃ ṭuṃ ṭuṃ svāhā

Then, as soon as this heart mantra of the Great Rākṣasa Vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the rākṣasas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Rākṣasas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra called the Great Ḍākinī Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra hṛda heha svāhā

Then, as soon as this heart mantra of the Great Ḍākinī Vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the ḍākinīs, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Ḍākinīs!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Great Bhūta Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hale hūle vajra maha bhyateśvara svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of the Great Bhūta Vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the bhūtas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Great Vajra of the Bhūtas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Great Piśāca Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā mahā vajra piśāceśvara viśvara viśvahṛdaya gaṃ mici mici maṭa maṭa vajra svāhā

As soon as these heart mantras of the Great Piśāca Vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the piśācas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Piśācas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Great Piśācī Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dūti piśāci kiri miri mile svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of the Great Piśācī Vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the piśācīs, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Piśācīs!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Rākṣasī Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra karāli rākṣasi hāri miri svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of the Rākṣasī Vajra had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the rākṣasīs, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Rākṣasīs!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Great Vajra of the Oppressor Spirits:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ostāraka vajra hisi svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of the oppressor spirits had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the oppressor spirits, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Oppressor Spirits!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Vajra that Terrifies the Shadow Oppressors:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kili kili vajra vidhahini svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra that terrifies the shadow oppressors had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the shadow oppressors, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Shadow Oppressors!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Vajra that Halts the Apasmāra Grahas, the spirits that cause loss of memory:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā graṃ graṃ spharaṇa vajra svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of the Vajra that Halts the Apasmāra Grahas had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of the apasmāras, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of the Apasmāras!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Then, again, those tathāgatas spoke this heart mantra of the Vajra that Repels All Grahas:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vira vajra sarva graha nikṛntan jāṭi valaṃ podara raṭa raṭa svāhā

As soon as these heart mantras of the Vajra that Repels All Grahas had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the abodes of all the grahas, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra that Repels All Grahas!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the vajra heart mantra of all the gods and the rest:

namaḥ sarva tathagatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvatha varjraṃ varjrasaṃ saṃ svāhā

As soon as this vajra heart mantra of the gods and the rest had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in the abodes of all the gods and the rest, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra Heart of the Gods and the Rest!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Vajra that Crushes All the Grahas of Disease:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhaiṣajya vajra amṛta bhava svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of the Great Vajra of the Great Medicinal Elixir had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems and in the places of the great medicinal elixirs, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra of Medicinal Elixir!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Vajra that Dispels the Grahas of Disease:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā traṭa traṭ vajra svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of the Vajra that Dispels Disease had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra that Completely Pacifies Disease!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Vajra that Halts the Grahas of Old Age:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā amṛtodbhava vajra la la la la svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra that halts old age had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems the words "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra that Halts Old Age!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Vajra that Completely Pacifies Death:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kati vajra jaya ha ha svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of the Vajra that Completely Pacifies Death had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra Victorious over Death!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke this heart mantra of the Vajra that Repels the Grahas of Misfortune:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā parma vajra sarva śriyaṃ abhudayanda da mahā kāruṇika dhaka dhaka svāhā

As soon as this heart mantra of the Vajra that Halts All Misfortune had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is the Vajra that Halts All Misfortune!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Then, again, those tathāgatas spoke the vajra heart mantra of the Unobstructed Power of the Great Cakravartin:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā oṃ vajra cakravarti hūṃ svāhā

Then, as soon as this king of secret mantras of the Great Cakravartin had been spoken, throughout all the boundless world systems, in all the maṇḍalas of the buddhas' assemblies, in all the abodes of the bodhisattvas, and in all the abodes of the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, mahoragas, rākṣasas, bhūtas, piśācas and the rest, the cry "This bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi is the Cakravartin of the Great Vajra!" resounded with a roar from one to the next.

Again, those tathāgatas spoke the heart mantra of the Cakravartin of the Great Vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jī śrī hūṃ svāhā

Then those tathāgatas gave the heart mantras of the Great Vajra, the Great Cakravartin and the others, to the bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi. Having given them, they illuminated, with a great net of dense clouds forming a maṇḍala of a great net of light rays, the world system complete in every respect, the dense grove arrayed with banners of many kinds of sāla trees, and the maṇḍala of the assembly complete in every respect. Then, through the power of the blessing of the three dharmas, they blessed the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, and within the maṇḍala of the dharmadhātu they transformed themselves into the very nature of the dharmadhātu and vanished.

At that time the Blessed One Śākyamuni also said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, "Son of noble family, all the tathāgatas have empowered you, in the great vajra maṇḍala of the maṇḍala of the Great Cakravartin, with the empowerment of the vajra in your hand. They have given you a vajra made of many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of meditative absorptions. You have been blessed by the vajra of the great cakravartin king. All the vajra heart mantras have been taught to you. All the tathāgatas have entrusted you to accomplish the aims of the entire teaching and to protect it. Your great former aspiration has been completely fulfilled. Son of noble family, now display your own miracle of magical power! Son of noble family, proclaim the great maṇḍala of the Vajrapāṇi Empowerment!"

When he had spoken thus, Vajrapāṇi said this to the Blessed One: "Lord of the Dharma, I shall do just as you have commanded. Blessed One, that I have attained the supreme wonder and attained the victorious true Dharma is because the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha, has shown me loving kindness."

Then, at that time, the bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Heart that Proclaims the Great Vajra Peak. And as soon as Vajrapāṇi had entered into equipoise in the meditative absorption called the Heart that Proclaims the Great Vajra Peak, at that very time all the world systems and all the fields moved in six ways and shook violently everywhere. This entire great trichiliocosm, too, moved in six ways: it moved, moved strongly, and moved strongly everywhere; it trembled, trembled strongly, and trembled strongly everywhere; it quaked, quaked strongly, and quaked strongly everywhere; it rocked, rocked strongly, and rocked strongly everywhere. When the east rose, the west sank; when the west rose, the east sank; when the south rose, the north sank; when the north rose, the south sank; when the center rose, the edges sank; when the edges rose, the center sank. A great radiance appeared in the world as well. Even the regions between the worlds that lie in gloom, darkness and pitch blackness were illuminated by that light, so that the beings who had been born there looked at one another, and seeing one another they thought, "Look, other beings have been born here too! Look, other beings have been born here too!" As they looked, the bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi taught the Dharma of the dhāraṇī of the heart of the vajra letters.

Having heard that Dharma, they gained faith, and when they died and passed on they were born among the gods. Then they went to the dense grove arrayed with banners of many kinds of sāla trees, wherever it was, in order to see, pay homage to, and make offerings to the bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi, who had been empowered with the great Vajrapāṇi empowerment.

Even the hot hells of sentient beings were cut off in that instant, in that moment, in that second. At that time not even the name of the animal realm was heard. All the abodes of the pretas, too, became encircled on every side by walls of the seven kinds of precious substances, and came to be endowed with divine food, drink and every requisite in full, and with divine bodies. This entire dense grove arrayed with banners of many kinds of sāla trees was illuminated by a great radiance. Even the two sons of the gods, the sun and the moon, of great miraculous power and great might, no longer shone out or blazed forth; apart from the light of the tathāgatas and the light of the bodhisattvas who have attained the ten grounds, every other light grew dim.

As soon as the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi had entered into equipoise in this very meditative absorption, wrathful kings emerged at that moment from all the pores of his body. They proclaimed the great sound hūṃ, held vajras in their hands, and creased their foreheads into wrathful frowns. With a single voice they made this entire great trichiliocosm hear them, and they uttered this inspired utterance:

"Hey! You savage rākṣasas,
Ancestral spirits and piśācas,
Mātṛkā grahas and bhūtas,
Apasmāras, siddhas and serpent seizers,
Oppressor spirits, obstructors, vināyakas and the rest,
All you hosts of grahas,
Give up your avarice entirely,
Settle in equipoise with tamed minds,
And, being wise, go for refuge
To the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha.
This glorious vajra holder,
Who holds a brilliantly blazing vajra,

Dwells in a lovely many-storied house
In a delightful, sublime grove.
Go, and from that protector
Receive the sacred pledges in full;
Rid yourselves of pride and of clinging to self,
And then roam through all the lands.
Otherwise, this very day,
By those blazing, wildly raging vajras,
Blazing and greatly terrifying,
Your heads will be utterly smashed.
Thus the wrathful kings
Throughout this whole world system
Have made it known in words that need no seeking:
Go before the vajra holder!"

At that time all the hosts of bhūtas sought this teaching of the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and went for refuge to the Buddha, went for refuge to the Dharma, and went for refuge to the Saṅgha. They also paid homage to the bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi.

Then, at that time, the bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi spoke his own heart mantra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā caṇḍa mahāroṣaṇa vajrapāṇi hūṃ phaṭ

As soon as the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi had spoken his own heart mantra, throughout all the boundless world systems, in all the maṇḍalas of the buddhas' assemblies, and in all the abodes of the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, mahoragas, humans and nonhumans, the cry "Oh! This bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi is Fierce Vajrapāṇi! He is Fierce Vajrapāṇi!" resounded with a roar from one to the next. Hearing it, they made fervent aspirations toward the great way of the bodhisattvas.

Then the bodhisattva mahāsattva Vajrapāṇi, having spoken this heart mantra of the Fierce Vajra, and with the permission of all the tathāgatas, looked upon all the maṇḍalas of the assembly, complete in every respect, and proclaimed the great maṇḍala:

"Now, the master of secret mantra
Is skilled in the meaning of reality and possessed of moral discipline,

Skilled in the arts,
Compassionate by nature and possessed of patience,
His mind set on the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha,
Steadfast, and knowing the right time,
Neither distracted nor listless,
Of great radiance, devoted to the profound Dharma,
Always diligent in recitation,
And delighting in the practice of meditative concentration.
A mantra practitioner who, on hearing the name of Vajrapāṇi,
Always sheds tears, his hair standing on end,
Who even in dreams has no hesitation
Or doubt regarding Vajrapāṇi,
Who knows the right time and likewise the right measure,
Who is grateful and likewise speaks the truth:"

Such a master should go before a stūpa containing relics or before an image, or enter a river that flows down to the ocean, and there recite each of the heart mantras mentioned above a hundred thousand times. After that, with the heart mantra of Fierce Vajrapāṇi, he should perform a fire offering ten thousand times with white mustard seed mixed with the three sweet substances. After that, seated in the center of the great maṇḍala of the Cakravartin, he should recite the mantra of the Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin. With the great fierce heart mantra he should perform the rite of purifying and protecting the disciples.

After that the ground should be examined. Ground without stones, gravel or potsherds, free of such flaws as living creatures and anthills, is auspicious in every case. If one begins the work there when the planets are not in a fierce position, on a date that is not inauspicious, avoiding unfavorable ingressions and conjunctions, when the day, the karaṇa, the muhūrta, the lunar mansion and the planets are manifestly favorable, it will be auspicious.

Red, yellow, white and black,
And mixed is the fifth.
In whichever of these grounds it be,
The wise one should dig a pit about a cubit deep;
Then the mantrin should fill that pit
With that very same earth.
If there is earth left over, it is supreme in every way;

If it is just level with the rim, it is said to be middling;
Ground that does not fill the pit should be abandoned:
The wise should not begin the work there.
White ground is taught to be for pacifying;
Red is held to be for the purpose of subjugation;
Yellow should be known as for increase;
Black, know it to be for fierce activity.
There, having carefully offered
Offering water, torma, lamps,
Scents and incense, one should guard the place,
And, settled in equipoise, address the earth.
That night, upon that ground,
One should sleep on a spread of kuśa grass.
If the ground proves suitable,
One should carefully draw the maṇḍala there.
The buddhas of the past, supreme among humans,
Have declared that such ground is free of obstructors.
Otherwise, one should not draw there;
With obstructors present, one will come to ruin.

Then, having risen, the mantrin,
The wise one, on that day,
In order to take full possession of the ground,
Should perform this fire offering:
Honey and milk
Mixed with butter make the best fire offering.
With a peaceful mind, the oblations
Should be offered twenty-one times.
Then the mantrin digs the ground
And fills it again with that same earth.
Or else, at the time of the maṇḍala rite,
The mantrin fills the ground with fragrant substances.
It should be well pounded, made level and smooth.
The quarters and the gates,
All of them, in every way,
Should be beautified with the five kinds of precious things.
In particular, in the center of the ground,

The five precious things should be placed.

Then disciples endowed with good qualities
Should be instructed and accepted.
With recitation and fire offerings, all of them,
One should carefully protect them.
Those who are to recite this secret mantra
Of the wise Vajra, the bestower of the supreme,
Should first be examined
By investigating their faults and qualities.
Those who possess these qualities
Should be accepted after thorough examination:
Those excellent in touch and in shape,
Bright, disciplined and diligent,
Endowed with wisdom, steadfast and grateful,
Devoted to the Three Jewels,
Beautiful in form, with all limbs complete;
Those who delight in the Great Vehicle,
And who toward all bodhisattvas
Are always truly respectful;
Respectful to father and respectful to mother,
Zealous in honoring the guru;
Those who, in acting for the benefit of others,
Always engage in it from the heart;
Those who are honest and gentle,
Without guile and diligent in the Dharma,
Pure in body, speech and mind:
These should be closely examined and accepted.
Those who from the heart have faith
In this world and in the world beyond,
Brahmins, kṣatriyas, vaiśyas
Or śūdras who are diligent in the Dharma
And who wish to understand the Mantra Vehicle:
These should carefully be accepted.
Not those of the Śrāvaka Vehicle,
Nor those of the Pratyekabuddha Vehicle;
The one-eyed, those with crippled hands, eunuchs,

Hunchbacks, the deaf, dwarfs,
Those who have flat noses,
Likewise the squint-eyed and the guilt-ridden,
The miserly and the ungrateful,
Those whose minds are proud of their learning, and the crooked,
Those with no devotion to the Mantra Vehicle,
The vehicle of great beings:
These should never be accepted.
They have no fortune in this teaching.
Those ignorant of the treatises are not to be accepted,
Nor those who grasp only scattered bits and pieces,
Nor likewise those without respect for the guru:
These contemptible ones should be shunned from afar.
Those whose limbs are incomplete,
The lame and the crippled,
And those who have extra limbs,
The wise should carefully reject entirely.

The disciples as described
Should then be examined according to the rite.
Even if there is only one, he should be accepted;
Or else four disciples may be accepted.
Then, having made them keep a fast,
One should honor them with scents and flowers.
On the ground inside the maṇḍala
A mat of kuśa grass is spread,
And the disciples, gentle and composed,
Should lie there together the whole time.
The master, moment after moment,
Should at that time fully explain
To the disciples this Dharma
Of the profound and vast Great Vehicle.
It is beneficial to describe in full
All the qualities that arise from reciting secret mantra.
The miraculous powers and so forth of the bodhisattvas
Should be described in full,
And their compassion for the continuum of others:

These he should speak of moment after moment.
When a quarter of the night remains,
If they dream good dreams,
Then, at daybreak, those devoted to the Three Jewels,
Sitting properly before the Buddha,
Are told: "You should relate them."
To be seated upon a lotus is supreme;
Holding or seeing one is likewise;
To dream of seeing the ocean,
And of swimming in it and drinking it, is likewise.
Seeing a buddha gladdens the heart;
Bodhisattvas, those weary of the world,
The pratyekabuddhas of the world,
The śrāvakas, and the learned:
Seeing these gladdens the heart.
A mass of fire, and renown,
A bull, a proud elephant,
And a horse that is white:
To see these and to ride them,
And a herd of cattle too, is auspicious.
Brahmins and kṣatriyas,
A king renowned for virtue,
Dear kinsmen and siddhas,
The sun and the moon:
To see these will be auspicious.
In a dream, to speak and tell tales,
To cut off one's own head,
To eat human flesh,
To bathe in blood,
Likewise to sink into filth,
To eat curd and cooked rice,
To drink liquor,
And to have one's hair shaved off: these are supreme.

For one's teeth to fall out,
And a pine tree or a nyagrodha tree:
To climb these will be auspicious.

To hear words such as "Excellent, son!" or "Wise one!",
A lovely woman,
Making love in the daytime,
Brahmā, Rudra, the sun,
Viṣṇu and the moon,
Kubera and Dhanada,
Śakra (Indra) and Varuṇa:
If one sees them, speaks with them,
Or converses with them, one will certainly succeed.
Other dreams like these as well
Should be taken up by those who seek accomplishment.
Dreams contrary to these
The fearless should not take up.
Running and leaping on the ground,
Dancing and singing,
Laughing, and riding
A donkey or a camel are very bad.
Anointing the body with sesame oil,
Talking with naked ascetics,
Meeting the one-eyed, the lame, hunchbacks
And the ugly,
Pigs and dogs,
And likewise donkeys,
Buffaloes, camels and jackals:
To see them in a dream is always deplored.
Those brandishing tridents, raised tridents,
The red-eyed and the utterly terrifying,
The naked and the flat-nosed,
Fearsome ones making threatening gestures,
Those black in color and greatly ferocious,
Those clad in blue and ugly in appearance:
Whoever dreams of these,
For him there will be no accomplishment.
To hear harsh cries such as "Seize him! Beat him! Crush him!" or "Eat him!",
To hear fierce, terrifying, wrathful words,

To hear "ruin" and "not found";
The cry of vultures, white birds,
Owls, crows, cats,
Rats, scorpions, weasels and snakes,
And any other malicious creatures:
If one sees these in a dream,
Or even touches them, it is inauspicious.

Then on the following day the master should empower the five products of the cow with mantra, using the vajra heart mantra. He should summon the disciples and purify them by sprinkling, using the fierce vajra heart mantra. He should give it to them in a vessel, a cone of aśvattha leaves or their cupped palms, and instruct them: "Today you must observe moderation in food." When the sun has set, he should make a fire offering with the Queen of Knowledge Mantras, the Fearless One, offering oblations and twenty-one sticks of firewood.

Then, from aśvattha wood,
Or else from udumbara,
Tooth sticks eight finger-widths long should be made.
The first one is adorned with flowers.
Having empowered them with the fierce vajra mantra,
He should give them to the disciples to chew.
Facing toward the east,
Or else facing north, they should set them down.
Recollecting the Lord of Secret Mantra,
One should know the outcome by the direction each stick points.
Then, on the following day,
Having made the disciples keep a fast,
That called Vajra Invincible Fire,
Which bewilders the three realms of existence,
So that they keep it constantly in mind,
He should give them this stainless dhāraṇī.
He should proclaim the pledges dear to the heart,
And proclaim them all the more to those who have broken them.
It thoroughly pacifies wrongdoing
And brings supreme good fortune.
It is the mother

Of all wise bodhisattvas,
The purifier of all wrongdoing:
It should always and everywhere be kept in mind.

The master, at every point,
With a mind always settled in equipoise,
Takes up an excellent marking cord
Made of threads of five colors,
And carefully, across this whole ground,
Should strike the lines well.
Sitting in the center of the maṇḍala,
The mantrin recollects the tathāgatas,
And likewise Vajradhara,
And the Cakravartin;
Having meditated on himself as that deity,
He recollects its mantra in his mind.
Then, facing east,
He strikes the line in the east.
Then, turning round again,
Sitting facing west,
He strikes the line in the west.
Then, turning, the wise one
Faces toward the north
And strikes the line in the north.
Then, turning round again,
Facing toward the south,
He who knows the divisions
Strikes the line in the south.
In this way the inner maṇḍala
Should be made with eight sections.
Then, in this same manner,
Going round all four directions,
One should very carefully strike the lines
So that it is square on every side.
Coming out from the central position,
Standing in the quarter of Agni (the southeast),
The mantrin, according to the mantra rite,

Strikes the line of the eastern side.
Then the one who knows the rite
Respectfully goes to the quarter of Īśāna (the northeast),
And, facing west,
Strikes the line of the northern side.
Going on from the quarter of Īśāna,
Standing in the quarter of Vāyu (the northwest),
And there facing south,
He strikes the line of the western side.
Coming out from that place,
He goes to the quarter of Nairṛti (the southwest),
And as far as the quarter of Agni
He should strike the marking cord well.
Having thus made the place
Square on every side,
Then likewise on the outside,
According to the rite, eight sections should be made.
The measure is sixteen cubits,
By the master's own cubit.
Then, coming out, the wise one
Should make the further sections.
On the outside, together with the ground,
The count is twenty-five cubits.
There too, just as before,
It should be divided into eight sections.
Taking from the eighth,
The mantrin, everywhere,
Should strike the lines of the retinue's area.
In the three tiers, without fail,
The first gate should be opened
In the size that suits the eight sections.
For the middle tier of the maṇḍala,
Knowing the gate to be double the former,
And triple for the third tier,
The wise one should make all the gates.
The measures of the porticoes
Should be made equal to the central section.

For the chief deities too
Gates should be made.
Having thus divided it well
Into three tiers and laid out the maṇḍala,
Sitting at the place of the Lord of Mantra,
The wise one should draw the maṇḍala.
As colors here, in particular,
The five precious substances are preferred.
Flour of ground śāli rice is also acceptable;
Or it may be made with whatever is at hand.
Wearing white clothes, having made himself clean,
Disciplined, with a cloth tied over his mouth,
Carefully, starting from the northeast corner,
He should pour out the colored powders,
In the manner of the vajra fist,
Or else with the hook mudrā,
Or in the manner of the vessel mudrā,
Or with the hand held as in reciting the Veda.

First the white should be poured;
After that the red is poured;
After that the yellow is poured;
After that the green is poured;
And inside all of them
The mantrin pours the black color.
Of what was taught as the eight sections,
The parts of the central section
Belong to the perfect buddhas;
They are held to be in the manner of the vajra binding.
Their seat is taught to be a lotus,
Supremely white and beautiful.
Upon it a vajra is placed,
And likewise a vajra uṣṇīṣa;
At its heart make a blaze of flames.
In short, it should be furnished with the seed syllable.

There, in the east, the tathāgata Ratnakusuma should be placed. In the south is the tathāgata Saṃkusumitarājendra. In the west is the tathāgata Amitābha.

In the north is the tathāgata Akṣobhya. In the northeast corner is the tathāgata Śikhin. In the southeast corner is the tathāgata Vipaśyin. In the southwest corner is the tathāgata Viśvabhū. In the northwest corner is the tathāgata Krakucchanda.

In short, the lotus in the center
Is said to have eight petals:
The petal in the east is white,
In the west it is red,
In the north it is yellow,
And in the south it is black.
All the remaining petals
The victors have declared to be mixed.
In the center of its heart
Draw a vase like the light of the moon.
Above it draw the great wind,
Blazing and bearing a banner,
Shaped like a half moon and fierce,
Its light like the color of summer clouds.
Above the wind draw fire;
Its shape is triangular,
Its emblem a three-cornered fruit,
Like the fire at the time of destruction.
In its center draw a lotus,
Its light like the fire at the end of time.
In the center of its heart
The Cakravartin should be drawn.

There that Blessed One should be placed as a form, as a mudrā or as a syllable, as is fitting.

If the mudrā is placed, it is the vajra,
And carefully it should be furnished with the seed syllable.
The sections outside it,
The eight of them, are as before:
The mantrin, according to the rite,
Should arrange the deities.

There, in the east, in a wheel maṇḍala, seated in the middle of a fire maṇḍala, one should draw the Vajra Bestower of the Supreme with his retinue, with the mudrā of the vajra utpala. In the southeast corner, in a vajra maṇḍala, one should draw the bodhisattvas Samantabhadra and the rest with their retinues, with the mudrā of the wish-fulfilling jewel. In the south, in a vajra-wheel maṇḍala, one should draw Vajrapāṇi with his retinue, together with all the vajra holders, with the vajra mudrā. In the southwest corner, in a vajra-wheel maṇḍala, one should draw the bodhisattva Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin with his retinue, with the mudrā of the wish-fulfilling jewel. In the west, in a vajra-wheel maṇḍala, the bodhisattva Ākāśagarbha should be set out with his retinue, with the sword mudrā. In the northwest corner, in a lotus-vajra maṇḍala, one should draw the bodhisattva Maitreya with his retinue, with the mudrā of the water flask. In the north, in a great lotus-vajra-wheel maṇḍala, the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara should be set out with his retinue, with the lotus mudrā. In the northeast corner, in a great vajra maṇḍala, the bodhisattva Kṣitigarbha should be set out with his retinue, with the mudrā of the great jewel.

In the four directions one should draw the four world protectors with their retinues, contained within the great vajra maṇḍala. There, the mudrā of Vaiśravaṇa is the club; the mudrā of Virūḍhaka is the cudgel; the mudrā of Virūpākṣa is the vajra; and the mudrā of Kubera is the noose.

The outer maṇḍala of the great enclosure is square and even, with four gates opened, with gate chambers, porticoes and terraces well laid out, and it is surrounded by a great enclosing wall. Within it one should draw the worldly gods with their retinues. There, in the east, one should draw Śakra (Indra), lord of the gods, with his retinue, with the vajra mudrā. To his north one should draw Brahmā with his retinue, with the lotus mudrā. To the north of Brahmā one should draw Sarasvatī with her retinue, with the mudrā of the vīṇā. Near her one should draw Pṛthivī, the earth goddess, with her retinue, with the vase mudrā. To her north one should draw Mahāśrī with her retinue, with the lotus mudrā or the mudrā of the wish-fulfilling jewel. In the quarter of Īśāna one should draw Īśāna, lord of the bhūtas, with his retinue, with the trident mudrā. To the south of Śakra one should draw Sūrya, the sun, with his retinue, with the chariot mudrā. In the quarter of Agni one should draw the sage Agni with his retinue, with the mudrā of granting fearlessness. In the south one should draw Yama with his retinue, with the mudrā of Yama's cudgel. To his east one should draw the bell of the Lord of Death. For Kālarātrī it is the crest. For Kālī it is the noose. For Raudrī, the consort of Rudra, it is the trident. For Brāhmī, the consort of Brahmā, it is the lotus. For Vaiṣṇavī, the consort of Viṣṇu, it is the wheel. For Kaumārī, the consort of Kumāra, it is the short spear. For Vārāhī, the consort of Varāha, it is the hammer. For Cāmuṇḍī it is the skull. For Aindrī, the consort of Indra, it is the vajra. For Kauberī, the consort of Kubera, it is the club. To the west of Yama one should draw the pretas with their retinues, with the mouth mudrā. The piśācas should be drawn with the mudrā of the vajra net. The oppressor spirits should be drawn with the mudrā of the iron vajra. The shadow oppressors should be drawn with the mudrā of the vajra parasol. The apasmāras should be drawn with the mudrā of the hands pressed to the chest.

The ḍākinīs should be drawn with the mudrā of the pressed-down hand. The rākṣasīs should be drawn with the mudrā of the vajra fangs or the mudrā of the vajra tongue. The piśācīs should be drawn with the hand mudrā of the carelessly held vajra. In the quarter of Nairṛti one should draw Nairṛti with his retinue, with the sword mudrā. To the south of the western gate one should draw Varuṇa with his retinue, and the nāga kings, Sāgara and the rest, with their retinues, with the noose mudrā. Then, near the gate, one should draw Maheśvara (Śiva) with the trident mudrā. Near him one should draw the Averter of Austerities with the mudrā of the raised trident. On the northern side of the gate one should draw Gaṇapati with his retinue, with the axe mudrā. To his north one should draw the asura kings, Vemacitrin and the rest, with their retinues, with the mudrā of the club and vajra. In the quarter of Vāyu one should draw Vāyu, the wind god, with his retinue, with the banner mudrā. In the north one should draw the yakṣa kings, Vaiśravaṇa and the rest, with their retinues, with the mudrā of the club bearing a vajra. To their east one should draw Viṣṇu with his retinue, with the wheel mudrā. Below him one should draw the garuḍas with their retinues, with the mudrā of wings. To their east one should draw the gandharva kings, Possessor of Many-Colored Garlands and the rest, and the kinnara kings, Druma and the rest, with their retinues, each with their own mudrā. There, the mudrās of the gandharvas are small drums and cymbals. The mudrās of the kinnaras are the vīṇā and other instruments, played and held aloft. Then one should draw the great mahoragas and the great rivers with their own mudrā of flowing water. Then one should draw Prajāpati, Lord of Creatures, with the mudrā of the hand reciting the Veda. To their east one should draw the moon with his retinue, with the mudrā of the white lotus and the vase.

At the western gate one should draw Kīlikīla's own mudrā; he should be drawn with the mudrā of the fierce vajra. At the northern gate two gatekeepers should be drawn: there, the yakṣa king Vaiśravaṇa should be drawn with the club mudrā, and the son of the nāga king Vāsuki should be drawn with the noose mudrā. At the eastern gate two kings of wrath should be drawn: there, Trailokyavijaya should be drawn with the vajra mudrā, and Nīladaṇḍa should be drawn with the cudgel mudrā. At the southern gate one should draw Durdharṣa with the hammer mudrā. Facing them one should draw the vajra mudrā.

On the lower side should be drawn the ocean, and on the shore of the ocean the four sisters, each with her own mudrā. There, the mudrā of Tumburu is the club; the mudrā of Jayā is the three-pointed short spear; the mudrā of Vijayā is the lotus; the mudrā of Ajitā is the wheel; and the mudrā of Aparājitā is the vajra. To the south of the four sisters one should draw Kārttikeya, son of the Pleiades, with his retinue, with the mudrā of the short spear. To the north one should draw the kings of the vidyādharas with the mudrās of the sword, the cloth and so on.

The places of all the retinue are drawn as circles. All those others thus mentioned are made as circles, and all of them are done after being consecrated with the fierce vajra. Whatever maṇḍala activity is to be done, all of it is done after being consecrated with the fierce vajra heart mantra.

From the Vajrapāṇi Empowerment, the rite for laying out the maṇḍala.

The one who knows the rite, having in this way
Drawn the supreme vajra maṇḍala,
And having performed the consecration,
Should very carefully make offerings.
Then vases whose bases are not black,
Whose mouths have a lustrous rim,
With long necks and large bellies,
Twenty-five of them, should be obtained.
They are filled with seeds and the five precious substances,
And filled to the brim with scented water;
Their mouths are covered with ornaments of leafy twigs,
And likewise their mouths are filled with fruits;
They are bound with cords about their necks,
And arranged in colors as is fitting.
At all of the four gates
The vases, as before,
Are said to be eight.

The ninth is for sprinkling:
With the fierce vajra, in every way,
It should carefully be empowered with mantra.
The tenth should be known to be in the center:
It is offered to the Cakravartin.
The porticoes are beautiful,
Made of the four kinds of precious materials,
Or else made of lovely wood:
Sandalwood, or any other will do,
Not in pieces, not broken,
Without cracks and without knots;
Varuṇa wood and śamī,
Or salakrī and kaṅkata will also do.
Precious bells are hung from them,
And they are adorned with silk, cloth and so on.
They are eight, seven or six cubits high,
And are to be furnished with garlands of flowers.
Above, a precious canopy is stretched,
And ornamental garlands of pearls are hung;
Silk and cloth should be hung as well;
It should be larger than the maṇḍala.
Banners of various colors
Should be hung in the four directions,
Strung upon threads,
And furnished with sweet-sounding bells.
Parasols of various colors
Should be drawn as is fitting.
Made of the four precious materials,
Or, lacking these, made of copper,
Four vessels of offering water
The wise one should set out.
The various scents that are taught
Are saffron and sandalwood,
Spṛkkā and the like: any of these will do;
Nothing from any part of a living creature is allowed.
Having offered various kinds of incense,
Aloeswood and resinous pine,

Camphor and śrīvāsaka,
Cepok and costus,
The resin of the sāla tree,
Or else pine resin should be offered.
One should recite the Vajrodbhava spell
Or the fierce vajra mantra.
Utpala and the supreme lotus,
Campaka and nāga tree,
Kesara and mallikā,
Aśoka and kyanar,
Tagara and punnāga,
And the beautiful dongka flower,
Karavīra and kumuda,
Jasmine and the flowers of dhanukari:
Flowers should be offered as is fitting.
Likewise various foods for the deities:
Milk porridge, curd and cooked rice,
The very best butter and honey,
Breads and laḍḍus,
Sweetmeats steeped in honey,
Aśovarti and venaka,
The offering known as khaṇḍa,
Śirebhedaka and modaka,
Garbhodakaraka,
Berek and dvetse,
Śaṣkula and parpaṭa,
Grain broth and drengbu,
Shunthapālikā,
Ghārikā and svastika cakes,
Peas, chickpeas and zhuteu,
Roots and tubers,
And various fruits should be offered.
Colorful pulse dishes
And moist sgeu should certainly be offered;
Pulse balls large and small,
Bhegana and saṃbhadhi,
Infusions mixed with molasses,

Prepared with great care,
And various boiled molasses confections:
All kinds of these should be offered in every way.
Curds of various kinds,
And churned curd with ground molasses, should certainly be offered;
Milk that has been well strained,
And likewise drinks, should be offered as well.
Foam of khari, sugar,
Butter, molasses, sesame oil,
Honey and salt,
Known as wholesome, should be offered.
Drinks that have been infused,
Betel and bedding,
Fine and beautiful utensils,
And medicinal ointments of various kinds,
Very carefully, according to the rite,
Should be offered to the bodhisattva protectors.
Then also to each one
A pair of cloth garments should be offered.
Mirrors, lovely eye medicine,
Conch shells and likewise gorocana,
In order to complete the accumulations for awakening,
Should be offered to all the protectors.
Having thus worshiped the protectors well
In every way,
The mantrin should then perform the fire offering;
He should do so with the heart mantra according to the rite.
Twenty-one oblations
Should be offered in the fire according to the rite:
Pleasing substances that accomplish everything,
Curd, milk and honey.
Four readers of texts as well
Should be stationed in the four directions.
There, what is placed in the east
Is the noble Perfection of Wisdom.
The sūtra placed in the north
The holy ones hold to be the Sublime Golden Light.

What is to be placed in the west
Is the Secret of the Tathāgata.
The great Array of the Stem
Should be known to be on the southern side.
Just as for the deities of the maṇḍala,
These too should be respectfully honored.
This reading of the holy Dharma
Is the best of all protections.
Then all the gods
Are delighted at that time,
And those in the world who are unruly
Go off in every direction.
Therefore, in every way,
The holy Dharma should be read at that time.

Having summoned all the disciples,
He should give them the three refuges,
And tell them to commit no wrongdoing.
He should have them take up the vows as well,
And the wise one, according to this rite,
Should have them generate the mind of awakening.
Then, with the water of the fierce vajra mantra,
He should sprinkle them all.
Having fully proclaimed the pledges,
The wise one goes inside,
Has them change all their clothes,
And should directly empower them with mantra.
Then the compassionate one
Covers the faces of those disciples,
And the mantrin has them bind
The pledge mudrā of the Cakravartin.
Having placed flowers in their hands,
He then imagines a syllable at their hearts,
And before all the protectors
He has them cast those flowers.
The wise one places at the disciple's
Right ear the vajra bell,

And at the left the great goddess Called Vajra Drum.
Wherever the flowers fall,
That deity is held to be his.
Having thus brought the disciples in,
He should then teach them the pledges.
In order to bring about pacification, the wise one Should perform the fire offering thoroughly, as follows.

Then Mañjuśrī, in youthful form, spoke these words to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi:

"Pacification and enrichment,
Subjugation, and likewise fierce conduct:
The rites of fire offering, in brief,
Great being, please declare.
Please speak too of all the rites in full,
And likewise of their distinct actions.
Great being, at what place
Is the hearth pit for the fire to be made?
Of what kind is the kindling wood,
And what action is to be undertaken?
All-pervading Lord, please explain the hearth pit,
And please dispel my doubts."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, spoke these words to Mañjuśrī, in youthful form:

"Excellent, excellent, excellent, great being!
Whatever questions you have asked,
All of them I shall declare.
Listen with an undistracted mind.
In the center of the second maṇḍala
Make the pit of the fire-offering hearth.
As for fixing its measure,
It is stated to be about one cubit.
Having dug it about a span deep,
A vajra should be placed in its center.
A rim too is made there,

And the wise one should make it beautiful in form.
Kuśa grass, its tips bound with its roots,
Is spread out there.
Thus, well and all around,
The mantrin should spread it thoroughly.
Not too near and not too far,
Having made the fire-offering hearth,
And having done so properly,
Then begin the fire offering there.
Seated on a mat of kuśa grass,
Having called the tathāgatas to mind,
Then kindle the fire,
And merely sprinkle it to purify it.
After that, into that fire
A single flower should be placed.
Then the mudrā should be bound;
With his own mudrā he is summoned.
Here the mudrā of fire is this:
Extend the right hand straight,
And set the thumb near the little finger.
With this mantra he should be summoned:
namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā agnaye hā vya kā vya vā ha na ya svāhā
Then the intelligent one, with the vidyā-mantra,
Makes the fire offering of oblations.
Having given the oblations to him,
The disciples should be placed on the left.
And for the sake of each one of them
Burn twenty-five oblations apiece.
Rites of many various kinds
Are performed in this way:
Pacification and enrichment,
Subjugation and fierce conduct.
The fire offering for pacification is with milk:
Butter, milk, and honey.
For enrichment, curd and cooked rice,
And whatever is taught elsewhere.

For fierce conduct, thorns are prescribed.
For subjugation, as before.
Those who desire the rite, the fearless,
Should perform the fire offering as is fitting.
From each of them, according to what is fitting,
The offering fee is drawn forth.
Or else, whatever one has in mind,
Let that be given as one pleases.
At that time, to the master
The disciples offer the fee.
If it is not given, the pledge is broken,
And accomplishment will not be attained.
Just as the sun and the moon, the pair,
Are held by the wise to be the eyes of the world,
So too for these people
The master is held to be like an eye.
Just as the element of fire
Burns up all firewood,
So should the master be known:
He burns the firewood of ignorance.
Just as the element of water
Cuts off all the torment of the world,
So too the master
Should be known to cut off all torment.
Just as the element of wind
Always sustains the whole world,
So the master, for the disciple,
Brings virtue fully about.
Just as, for all embodied beings,
The earth is renowned as their support,
So too the master
Is held to be the support of the Dharma.
Just as the Blessed One Vairocana
Has realized and fully understood all dharmas,
So should the master be known.
Just as the glorious Vajradhara
Holds all secrets in harmony,

So too the master
Here holds the secret of mantra.
He always speaks
The praises of the Three Jewels,
And he speaks as well the great praises
Of all the bodhisattvas.
Just as the Buddha is like an eye,
Showing the true path,
So too the fearless mantrin
Shows this abode of the Great Vehicle.
As I am, so is the mantrin;
As the master is, so is the Victor.
Hold to the master's good qualities;
Never take up his faults.
Holding to good qualities, one becomes accomplished;
With faults, accomplishment is lost.
If one disparages the master,
One is short-lived in the world,
And likewise goes to the lower realms,
And is born into castes such as fishermen.
This is the source of every wrong;
The wise do not slander the guru.
Those who desire the Dharma
Should always and continually please the master.
Wherever a child of the Victors dwells,
That ground is like a stūpa.
There all the children of the Victors,
And I as well, are lesser than his heart.
This supreme rite of fire offering,
Hero, that is declared to you,
Was taught in former times by the protectors,
Wishing to benefit sentient beings.
Whoever, in the rites of fire offering,
Understands them in this way,
Will, just as the buddhas have taught,
Swiftly attain accomplishment."

From the Vajrapāṇi Empowerment, the analysis of the words on fire, arranged as a chapter.

The Noble Vajrapāṇi Empowerment, the fourth fascicle.

Then the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, spoke these words to Mañjuśrī, in youthful form:

"I shall declare the empowerment maṇḍala
Praised by the buddhas of the past.
Having set down one measure of three cubits,
The outer maṇḍala should be drawn.
Its measure is four cubits,
And one faces toward the side of the maṇḍala.
There too the mantrin, making the parts equal,
Should make it perfectly square all around.
The mantrin, abiding in the way of mantra,
Takes his seat in the quarter of fire, the southeast,
And then, facing north,
Snaps the chalk line according to the rite.
Leaving his former place,
He takes his seat in the quarter of Īśāna,
And as far as the region of the wind's quarter, the northwest,
Strikes the line of the northern side.
Seated in the quarter of the wind,
Facing toward the southern side,
As far as the quarter of Nairṛti,
He strikes the line of the western side.
Likewise, leaving the quarter of the wind,
He takes his seat in the quarter of Nairṛti,
And then, facing east,
The mantrin, recollecting the secret mantra,
As far as the quarter of fire,
Strikes the line of the southern side.

In accordance with this rite, all of it
Should be made perfectly square.
The wise one, at the very beginning,
Having divided the inner tier into eight parts,
Following the manner of a wheel maṇḍala,

Should then make the second tier.
The lotus in the center, to state it briefly,
Has eight petals together with their anthers;
In all the spaces between the petals
Vajras should be drawn.
On them, too, draw the heart mantras.
Having urged them on with their own heart mantras,
The eight guardians of the directions as well
Should be arranged in their proper places.
There, in the inner corners,
The world protectors are arranged.
In order to pacify all obstructors,
Set Amṛtakuṇḍalin at the gate.
Just as for the deities of the maṇḍala,
There too make offerings in full.
Cloths, canopies, and bells,
Parasols, and flowers should also be offered.
Garlands of pearls and the like, and garlands of flowers,
Should be offered as far as one is able and one's means allow.

In its center draw the image of a vajra that fully fills the ten directions. With vases of the four kinds of precious substance, filled with jewels and with all medicines, blessed by Ratnakusuma, Saṃkusumita, Amitābha, Akṣobhya, Samantabhadra, Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin, Maitreya, and Kṣitigarbha, one confers empowerment upon the crown of the head.

The mantrin, having placed the disciple well
Upon that sacred lotus,
Himself makes offerings with flowers and incense,
And should offer lamps and offering water.
With parasols, victory banners, and flags,
With the sounds of cymbals raised,
And with the sounds of music and many cymbals,
Having made him truly and openly rejoice,
In the presence of all the protectors,
With full attention he confers the empowerment.
Just as the lord of the four continents,
The Cakravartin king, is empowered,

So the mantrin confers empowerment
With wonders and with every auspicious thing.
With flowers and with incense,
And with the finest fragrances he again makes offerings,
And, placing a vajra in the right hand
And a wheel in the left,
He speaks to the disciple thus:
"You will become a vajra master.
From now on, you who possess the vajra,
Proclaim the vajra Dharma.
All the buddhas have placed in your hand
The vajra from which samādhi arises.
From this day forth, for the whole world,
You are a Vajrapāṇi of great miraculous power.
To cut down those who are hostile,
And to tame those
Who do harm to the teaching,
The guides have given you the vajra.
Just as a Cakravartin king
Is empowered so as to be made sovereign,
So, to empower a king of Dharma,
The wise one proclaims the vajra empowerment."
With the mudrā of the vajra wheel
Protection should be made for him.
The disciple proclaiming the vajra Dharma
Is taken by the hand,
Led into that great maṇḍala,
And the pledges are announced:
"You must not give up the mind of awakening.
You must never abandon loving-kindness, compassion,
And the wheel in your hand.
O intelligent one, the methods
And the vajra that has been placed with you
You must never give up.
O intelligent one, this is the pledge
Of the bodhisattvas and the buddhas.
Just as one guards one's own body,

So must you guard this.
Doing so, you repay the kindness of the buddhas,
And are called a child of the buddhas.
Otherwise the pledge is broken,
And you will not become a vajra-bearer.
Of all the vajra-holders
The family is the mind of awakening;
Their sign is said to be compassion;
Method is taught as mastery.
Having placed the vajra, you have donned the armor;
You bear the vajra weapon.
The gods bow down to you;
You provide protection everywhere.
The buddhas and bodhisattvas, too,
Protect you in every way."

From the Vajrapāṇi Empowerment, the section on the stages of empowerment is complete.

Then the glorious Mañjuśrī,
His eyes wide with wonder,
Spoke these words to the Vajra Holder:
"Excellent, hero of great splendor!
The maṇḍala that you have explained,
The sacred, supreme vajra maṇḍala
Through which accomplishment is attained,
Please teach it too, together with its great secret.
For all the deities, each in turn,
And for the wise bodhisattvas,
Their mudrās together with their mantras,
And their thorough application in the practices;
The firm establishment of meditative concentration, the instructions,
And the Dharma of the vidyās: please speak of these too.
Observances, conduct, and signs,
Every aspect of place and time,
Pacification and enrichment,
And likewise fierce conduct,
The summoning of bhūtas,

And the summoning of wealth too,
The general characteristics of secret mantra
And its particulars as well: please explain them.
Who in this world is cast aside?
Who goes elsewhere? Please tell.
The results in this world and in others,
Hard to find, which the Victor has taught,
And how an action done by one
Has its result experienced by another,
And the result of this maṇḍala and of the mantras:
Please explain these to me.
The appearance of a buddha is hard to find;
A human body too is hard to find;
The appearance of secret mantra is hard to find;
Perfect faith is hard to come by.
All the buddhas today intend that you,
Vajrapāṇi of great miraculous power,
Should hold the great secret
For the work of this teaching.
So please explain in full
The rites throughout this maṇḍala."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, spoke these words to Mañjuśrī, in youthful form: "Excellent, Mañjuśrī, excellent! These words of your question are well spoken. Therefore, Mañjuśrī, listen carefully and keep it in mind. Mañjuśrī, the great secret of the maṇḍala is this: whatever the deity is, that is I. Whatever I am, that is the maṇḍala. Whatever is the abode of the deity, that is my abode. Whatever is my abode, that is the maṇḍala. What abides in the maṇḍala is secret mantra; without the maṇḍala there is no secret mantra. Furthermore, Mañjuśrī, there are maṇḍalas with form and maṇḍalas without form. Of these, the one with form is drawn as a picture; the one without form is not drawn. Furthermore, what is to be drawn is what may properly be drawn; what is not drawn is what may not properly be drawn. Young one, of these, by the one that is not drawn all actions are performed.

The one that is drawn is no more than a cause for rites and actions; it serves to arouse faith in others. By the other, one blesses the abode of the deity: it is the maṇḍala that accomplishes both aims, the maṇḍala possessed of the maṇḍala in which rite and yoga are not separate. A master who possesses action, rite, time, agency, capacity, retention, what is to be done in meditative concentration, the instructions, and all the yogas, having himself obtained empowerment, should draw the maṇḍala.

Young one, if you ask what the instructions are, they are these: the master and the disciple. The master is one endowed with the qualities of a master. The disciple follows his conduct, acts according to his words, and does not deceive. That valid authority is the instruction. Mañjuśrī, in youthful form, if you ask further what valid authority is: having first understood the undeceiving meaning of the sūtras and of secret mantra, one tastes its flavor; and since that meaning is extremely subtle, one does not fall away from it but becomes steadfast in it; to designate that as "the nature of reality" is the explanation of the instructions. Whatever the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha has taught is just so and does not become otherwise; therefore it is the valid authority for the world with its gods; it is undeceiving. Its realization, its direct actualization, and the attainment of its result: that is the nature of reality. Furthermore, the very application to the yoga that brings about the attainment of that nature of reality is the method of reasoning.

Mañjuśrī, furthermore, a mantrin endowed with qualities such as these is regarded by the Victors as a master of the maṇḍala.

This great secret of the maṇḍala
Was taught by the Victors of old.
Otherwise, mere drawing
Is devoid of cause and result.

Mañjuśrī, furthermore, the deity is of two kinds: of the nature of the result, and of the nature of maturation. Of these, the nature of the result is the realization of the nature of reality. Whatever is the direct attainment of that nature of reality is the result. Whatever is the result is maturation. Whatever is maturation is an entity. Whatever is an entity has fallen into convention. Whatever has fallen into convention and whatever has the nature of convention is designated. That is activity. Whatever is activity is karma. In whatever is the nature of reality there is no result, no realization, no direct actualization, and no purification; yet the buddhas, the blessed ones, and the bodhisattvas who abide on the ground of karma and maturation teach result, attainment, realization, and purification. They speak of them, they express them, they designate them, they establish them, they elucidate them, they explain them; with various modes of teaching they apply conventions.

Mañjuśrī, furthermore, the buddhas, the blessed ones, and the bodhisattvas who abide on the ground free of karma and maturation designate what is called "this world," what is called "the world beyond," "birth," "old age," "death," "sickness," "decline," "prosperity," "the conditioned," "the unconditioned," "going," "coming," "knowledge," "ignorance," "the wise," "realization," "the attached," "aversion," "delusion," "bondage," "liberation," "self," "no-self," "craving," "suchness," "the true," "the undeceiving," "eye," "ear," "nose," "tongue," "body," "mind," "form," "sound," "smell," "taste," "touch," "Buddha," "Dharma," "Saṅgha," "śrāvaka," "pratyekabuddha," "stream-enterer," "once-returner," "non-returner," "one who has entered upon realizing the fruit of stream-entry," "once-returner," "one who has entered upon realizing the fruit of once-returning," "non-returner," "one who has entered upon realizing the fruit of non-returning," "arhat," "free from attachment," and "one who has seen the truth"; and, Mañjuśrī, furthermore, they designate what is called "god," "nāga," "yakṣa," "gandharva," "asura," "garuḍa," "kinnara," "mahoraga," "human," "nonhuman," "man," "woman," and "neuter." Mañjuśrī, in this way the buddhas, the blessed ones, and the bodhisattvas who abide in freedom from karma and maturation make designations in accordance with the differing dispositions of sentient beings.

Mañjuśrī said, "How do they designate, or make known, that dharma which is like space?"

Vajrapāṇi said, "Mañjuśrī, they designate it, or make it known, on that very ground free of karma and maturation. Mañjuśrī, freedom from karma and maturation is emptiness, and even upon that emptiness one designates 'one' or 'two.' Look at how they make designations in this way, by indications of number and by the conventions of names. Mañjuśrī, furthermore, although the element of space is free of karma and maturation, one still designates space as 'blue,' 'yellow,' 'red,' 'narrow,' 'vast,' 'pure,' and 'impure.' Mañjuśrī, in the same way the buddhas, the blessed ones, and the bodhisattvas who abide on the ground free of karma and maturation make designations. And although those designations are made by what is free of karma and maturation, childish ordinary beings, who are in error, simply fail to understand them. As the doorway for leading them to see correctly, just as things truly are, the Victors have taught this maṇḍala.

From the coming together of three,
The arising of mantra is here taught.

The mudrā, too, arises in the same way:
It has no form and cannot be shown;
At all times, throughout the three worlds,
It is unobstructed and uninterrupted.
Just as, relying on a base board,
When the fire drill is twirled,
From the cause, a person's effort,
A powerful fire arises,
So, from the coming together of three,
Secret mantra and the five great mudrās
Come to arise; and once arisen,
They perform the actions conceived in the mind.

Mañjuśrī, for example, the moment vidyādharas think of them, divine food, drink, ornaments, horses, elephants, chariots, women, houses, celestial palaces, and all such things arise. Mañjuśrī, in the same way, from the coming together of secret mantra, mudrā, and deity, everything arises. Mañjuśrī, it is like this: for example, so long as the precious wish-fulfilling jewel, free of every flaw, has not ceased to exist, whatever one thinks of will all arise. Mañjuśrī, the way of mantra too should be understood in the same way. Mañjuśrī, when one has wholly given up one's own form and attained the divine pride that is free of doubt, then that nature of reality of secret mantra reveals the nature of reality; and then, when it shows its aspect through words, it becomes capable of action. Mañjuśrī, see how the nature of reality, when relied upon, becomes able to perform actions.

Mañjuśrī, it is like this: for example, relying on a seal, the raised impression of the seal comes about. Without the substance, the impression of the seal does not come about; and even if the substance is there, without the act and the action of pressing, the impression of the seal does not come about. Mañjuśrī, this is because the two depend on each other. From the effort a person makes, is it the substance that comes about here, or is it the act of the action that comes about? Which is it? Because before and after contradict each other, nothing comes about apart from the mere arising, in dependence, of secret mantra or mudrā.

Mañjuśrī, as many afflictions as sentient beings have, so many applications should be seen that other bodhisattvas cannot overcome. If one asks who is able to prevail over these, it is the dharmadhātu endowed with mudrā and secret mantra that prevails. Mañjuśrī, it is because the dharmadhātu itself is conceived in many aspects that the tathāgatas and the bodhisattvas establish: "This is secret mantra; this is mudrā; this is the deity." That dharmadhātu is formless and cannot be shown; it is not graspable and cannot be disturbed. It is established by the Tathāgata's establishing it as dependent origination. Because it is dependent origination, it performs every action.

Mañjuśrī, furthermore, as to what was asked, "How is it that when one person performs an action, another enjoys its fruit?": Mañjuśrī, it is like this. For example, a sovereign son of the gods who has gained mastery over his own mind enjoys various pleasures just as he wishes. That is, having emanated divine houses, celestial palaces and so on, horses, elephants, chariots, women, food to eat and to chew and so on, he both enjoys them himself and gives them to others as well. Why is that? Because he himself has accomplished that mantra. Mañjuśrī, in the same way, what is done by one is enjoyed by another. Mañjuśrī, there is also the case in which one acts and many enjoy, as with a Cakravartin king or a farmer.

Mañjuśrī, furthermore, as to what was asked, "Who casts aside this world, and who goes elsewhere?": Mañjuśrī, when the assemblage of mind and mental factors abides in the conditioned element, that is this world. When that same assemblage of mind and mental factors comes to abide in the unconditioned element, then the tathāgatas, the arhats, the perfectly complete buddhas designate it, saying, "He casts aside this world and goes to the world beyond." This is a figure of speech for a person who has realized the nature of reality. Why is that? The nature of reality abides in the unconditioned element; it is never stained by the impurity of the conditioned. It is like this: for example, a vajra is not stained by any of the flaws of the impurity of murky mud. In the same way, that nature of reality is not stained by any of the flaws of the conditioned.

Mañjuśrī, childish ordinary beings, who belong to the conditioned element, have fallen into an afflicted continuum; born into existence through volition arising from grasping at "I" and "mine," they bring about what is afflicted. When the time of their death draws near and this assemblage of formations ceases, the very pride that thinks "I am a god" or "I am a human" attaches itself to that continuum. It is like this: for example, a person looking at his face in the disk of a well-polished mirror thinks, "My face is handsome, with such and such special qualities," or "It is not handsome." Although the reflection is neither different from him nor not different, yet because of confusion, grasping at "I" arises in his mind.

Mañjuśrī, what is the visible result? It is this: the removal of poison, fever and the like by means of secret mantras. What is the result not of this life? It is the attainment of the fruit of realizing meditative concentration, which is direct and free of the net of conceptual thought. The result is taught as established by trustworthy scripture, wholly beyond the domain of logic, of inference and of what is to be inferred; as endowed with yoga and reasoning; and as having the aspect of one's own experience. This is the result not of this life.

Mañjuśrī, furthermore, as to what was asked, "Speak of the actions of fierce conduct": since they come to be necessary, one should undertake wrathfulness itself. With a peaceful mind, with compassion, with a nature of loving-kindness, and looking to the result of one's own action, one joins the form of the deity and one's own wrathful form so that they are not different; by this, the fire too is in wrathful form, and the other as well is in wrathful form.

Having summoned the target by means of the wrathful one who wields mastery, in the form of the mantra, one swiftly presses down with the left foot on the chest, or the heart, or the head, or the belly, or the waist, or the calf, or the foot, or the back. Then, whether any living being is laughing, or making love, or playing, or staying put, or traveling on the road, or lying down, or sitting, or standing, or dwelling a hundred leagues beyond a river, or even protected by gods and the like, one kindles the fire within oneself and performs a fire offering of twenty-one oblations. For the peaceful it is declared to be peaceful; for the unpeaceful it is declared to be unpeaceful.

Then Vajrapāṇi, in order to accomplish the maṇḍala of the wheel of unobstructed speech and to make the teaching fully fruitful, again entered into the samādhi called Essence of the Array of the Buddha's Speech. As soon as the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi had entered into that samādhi, at that moment, with unequaled power, he spoke the secret mantra of the great pledge that enters the dharmadhātu:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra samaya dhṛke

As soon as the secret mantra of the vajra of the pledge had been spoken, throughout all the maṇḍalas of the buddhas' assemblies and throughout all the infinite world systems, a vajra sound that enters the pledge rang out with a roar.

Hearing this, the bodhisattvas,
In that very instant,
In the presence of all the buddhas,
Obtained the dhāraṇī of supreme vajra power.

Again he entered into the samādhi called Blessing of Vast Expanse That Defeats the Four Māras, and spoke this secret mantra, the great protection, mighty, arisen from the splendor of the ten powers:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra gini vajra śu u la ni vajra mu ta re va li nam agra mahā va le hi li hi li mi li mi li śi lo śi lo ṭi lo ṭi lo ṭa ṭa le mahā caṇḍi ku ruṃ gho na śve ta padma mā li ni hi hi he he rakṣa rakṣa mahā sa ma ya a nu ga te svāhā

Then that entire assembly spoke these words with one voice:

"Oh! This sacred protection
Vajrapāṇi has proclaimed
For the sake of all beings
Who follow the practice of secret mantra."

Then Vajrapāṇi again spoke the treasury of secret mantras for all the methods of the maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra agra dha ra a na lo vi śva saṃ bha va svāhā

This is the mantra of the great blazing vajra flame.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ śca ṇḍi vajra a rci spha ra ṇa svāhā

This is the mantra of the great vajra radiance.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ mahā caṇḍa vajra ka va ca vi sphu ra vajrī ga svāhā

This is the mantra of the vajra armor.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ mahā vajra agra dha ri te jo dag te svāhā

This is the mantra of the crown of the head of the supreme vajra.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ vajra ananta ga ti hi svāhā

This is the mantra of the great vajra uṣṇīṣa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ tathāgate ā śā pa ri pūr cintā ma ṇi rā ja vajra hūṃ svāhā

This is the mantra of the vajra ūrṇā, the curl between the brows.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ tathāgate lo ca na jñā na vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of the vajra eye.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ oṃ vajra ā na naṃ svāhā

This is the mantra of the vajra mouth.

namaḥ sarva ta thī ga te bhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva tathāgate sa tya dharma pra tiṣṭhi te vajra ga pu ru sa ra sva sti vu ha a laṃ kā ra garbha vajra ji hvā hūṃ bha ga va ti sarva sa tva santo ṣa ṇa ka ri svāhā

This is the mantra of the vajra tongue.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ vajra agra sa me bhyo vi śva rū pa dha ra svāhā

This is the mantra of the vajra body.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ argha vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of the offering water.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ gan dha a va bhā sa na svāhā

This is the mantra of scent.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ puṣpa vajra agra dha ra ka svāhā

This is the mantra of flowers.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ jñā na vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of incense.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ akṣa ya dharmma dhā tu spha ra ṇa vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of the food offering.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ tathāgate cakṣur vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of the lamp.

This is the treasury of mantras for the methods of the maṇḍala.

The bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, again paid homage to all the tathāgatas, arose from that samādhi, and entered into the samādhi called Lofty Vajra, Crest of the Lofty Secret of the Great Vajra. As soon as the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, was settled in equipoise, all the tathāgatas gave him the vajra-syllable heart mantra called Power of the Splendor of All the Tathāgatas, which bears the words "Vajra Upsurge":

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ t ṭa ta ṭa spho ṭa ya vajra saṃ kṛ ta vi dyu ji hvā du rdānta da ma ka da ha si ta laṃ vo dar ka ha ka ha cu lu cu lu muñca aṭṭa hā sa na dā ra vi dā ra vajra vaktra vajra aṃ ga vajra nai tra vajra śro tra vajra ghrā ṇa vajra daṃ ṣṭa a nu ca ra kiñci rā ya si pra vi śa vajra pā ṇi hṛ da yoṃ ā vi śa ā vi śa ghurṇa ghurṇa ghrurṇā pa ya ghurṇā pa ya sarva ta thā ga ta ā jñā ka ra pra va ra dharmma labdha vajrā ya hūṃ kṛ ta svāhā

As soon as all the tathāgatas had spoken the vajra heart mantra called Upsurge, the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was satisfied and gratified, overjoyed and delighted, and at that moment he entered into the samādhi called Vajra Fire. As soon as the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was settled in equipoise in this samādhi, at that moment all the world systems moved, moved strongly, moved strongly everywhere; they quaked, quaked strongly, quaked strongly everywhere. All the great oceans were stirred, strongly stirred, strongly stirred everywhere. All the Mount Merus, kings of mountains, quaked, quaked strongly, quaked strongly everywhere.

There was rumbling, strong rumbling, strong rumbling everywhere. All the world systems blazed, blazed strongly, blazed strongly everywhere, and appeared to have become a single mass of flame. The bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi too blazed, blazed strongly, blazed strongly everywhere, and, taking on the form of a Great Terrifying One, he illuminated the ten directions with rays of blazing flame from his vajra eyes. Then he brought forth the wrathful one called Vajra Great Terrifying One, blazing, strongly blazing, spreading and blazing strongly everywhere, become a single mass of flame, three-eyed, four-fanged, laughing with a horse's neigh, wearing on his body the bloody hide of a great elephant, and holding a vajra in his hand.

Furthermore, from all the pores of his body and from all the joints of his limbs he manifested all the vajra wrathful ones, of unlovely and terrifying form, holding vajras in their hands; of various colors; making their sound heard throughout all the world systems; holding tridents in their hands; terrifying all who are hostile; destroying all the abodes of Māra; gnashing, laughing, giving out booming sounds and rumbling sounds; brandishing tridents in their hands; holding waisted pestles; holding clubs in their hands; holding swords in their hands; holding hammers in their hands; holding axes in their hands; holding in their hands single-pointed spears, lances, great arrows, wheels, iron arrows, nooses, staffs, iron chains, needle-like weapons, ploughs, drums, gongs, bells, and great drums; outshining the splendor of all who possess splendor; and intent on watching over the pledge of the tathāgatas.

Again, from his crown protuberance he manifested the king of wrathful ones called Trailokyavijaya, arisen from the domain of all the tathāgatas, ablaze with blazing flames, with a topknot and a pendulous belly, having a body the size of ten great trichiliocosms, like the fire at the time of the world's destruction, his forehead creased with rows of wrathful furrows, wearing a lower garment of the bloody hide of the king of beasts, seated and ready to receive commands.

Again, at the center of his forehead he manifested everywhere another great king of wrathful ones called Wrathful Candratilaka, with many hundreds of thousands of arms, three-eyed, four-fanged, uttering the sound of a horse's neighing laughter, resembling Yama in form, accompanied by a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of wrathful attendants, holding various weapons in his hands, wearing a skirt of tiger skin, and bringing all sentient beings under his power.

Again, Vajrapāṇi arose from that samādhi and manifested the wrathful one Vajra Mahādaṇḍa, his belly like the belly of a wolf, with red eyes, full of wrath, blue like sapphire, holding a club in his hand, fierce and terrifying, wearing a skirt of scorpion skin, and making the threatening gesture.

Again, he entered into equipoise in the samādhi called Supreme Strength, and having done so, he manifested the great king of wrathful ones called Mahābala, four-armed, his hair standing on end, with yellow eyes and four fangs, like a summer cloud, holding a club in his hand and holding an axe in his hand, pot-bellied, three-eyed, wearing a skirt of tiger skin, dwelling amid the blazing flames of his own body.

Again, Vajrapāṇi entered into equipoise in the samādhi of overpowering with the stride of the Tathāgata, and manifested the wrathful one called Great

Vajra of the Stride, his hair loose and standing on end, resembling Yama in form, his face and forehead creased with rows of wrathful furrows, with red eyes, laughing loudly, his mouth gaping, four-armed, holding in his hands a trident, a vajra, a wheel and a sword, gazing in the ten directions.

Again, Vajrapāṇi entered into equipoise in the samādhi called Arising of the Fierce Vajra, and manifested this great queen of knowledge, Vajraśṛṅkhalā, unfailing and unobstructed, who utterly bewilders the three worlds, who produces fearlessness in all sentient beings, arisen from all the tathāgatas, dark blue in color like the priyaṅgu flower, bearing the vajra emblem, ablaze with garlands of flame, her face as if her mind were enraged, holding a vajra chain in her hand, intent on obeying commands, and accompanied by a retinue of ten thousand messenger women.

Again, he manifested Vajra Peak, who has definitively realized all phenomena, of unobstructed power, who tames all hostile sentient beings, of great power, holding a vajra peak in her hand, her face creased with rows of wrathful furrows, of the age of a woman in her middle years, six-armed, holding in her hands a noose, a pestle, a hammer, a waisted pestle and a thorn, and accompanied by a retinue of ten thousand messenger women.

Again, he manifested the queen of knowledge Vajramuṣṭi, arisen from the Dharma fist of all the tathāgatas, bearing the vajra emblem, blazing intensely, with light like the rays of the autumn moon, three-eyed, a goddess with a topknot, wearing a skirt of white cotton, who utterly crushes all the gods and asuras who are hard to subdue.

These are the heart mantras of those wrathful ones:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra jvāla anala sambhava traṭa traṭa sphoṭaya sphoṭaya hūṃ krodha svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Great Terrifying One.

namaḥ sarvathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he trailokya vijaya ha ha svāhā

This is the mantra of Trailokyavijaya.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kaṭa kaṭa maṭa maṭa matha matha krodhendu tilka svāhā

This is the mantra of Wrathful Candratilaka.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathāte nīla vajra daṇḍa kiñci rāyasi hana daha bhañja tathāgata samayamanusmaraṇa svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Nīladaṇḍa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā mahābala rakṣa avalokita vajra adhika hana vidhvanasaya hūṃ hūṃ svāhā

This is the mantra of Mahābala.

namaḥ sarva tathagātebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā tathāgata nodārya ana avalokite vajra mardha vajroṣṇīṣa hūṃ hūṃ prajvālita mūrdhi svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajroṣṇīṣa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhagavate vajraṃ śṛkhale bandha bandha moṭṭa moṭṭa saṃkocaya saṃkocaya sarva sandi hri varade svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajraśṛṅkhalā.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhinda bhinda sarva duṣṭa namaḥ sarvatra apratihate bhagavati vajra acivara he helini svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Peak.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā gatodbhave jātini trilocane sarva dharmandhir dhani kiti saṃkarani svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajramuṣṭi.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra patāṃke vajra manase svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Banner.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he vajra mālani vajra pāṇaye bahu rājā mayi svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Garland.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra kula sundhari vajraṃgi citariṇi purari svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajrakulasundarī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ajā jālini vajra triśūlini hi hi he he svahā

This is the mantra of Vajra Trident Bearer.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ākarṣaya sarvama bhagavate vajrāṃkuśi kiri kiri miri miri he hale svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajrāṅkuśī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā tathāgate vāgatra sambhave vajra daṃṣṭro khādaya sarva kuru tathāgata ājrāṃ ritini svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Fang.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā sarva dharma prabhedana kara vajra mudgara hili hiṭha svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Hammer.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra prākāra tathāgate bhañjanaka kuru kuru cakreṇa svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Fence.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā tathāgate viskambha vajra kīla kīla kara svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Dagger.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra pañjarani ka kṣipa gagana khaṃ svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Net.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hāsa vajra jala jala jala svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Laughter.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra vilāsa lalita ananta svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Charm.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvatha tathāgata nirghoṣa vajra dundubhi hās svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Great Drum.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra ghaṇṭe bhagavatijñāna rasmis bhūte hari svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Bell.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra roma mani niritini svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Body Hair.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra buli nakhi śikhini svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Clawed One.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dhara dūti cipita mukha gaccha gaccha kuru tathāgata ājñā svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Messenger.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrod bhave vajra vajra śikha vicitri śvari svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Crown.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhagavati vajra karāli vajra piśāci jijiri svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Piśācī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vasta karāla vajra ānan vajra piśāca raṃ kuru svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Piśāca.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra rakṣasi khādaya sarva tathāgata saṃbhave śamakari vajra cana svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Rākṣasa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā amahā vajra khaḍga cchinda sarva gacaṃ sarva satvānāna tathāgata saṃga saṃbhana svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Sword.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā tathāgata koṣa saṃbhava bhūta vaśi prāpta svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajrodbhava.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra anala bindu jihvā vajra rākṣasi svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Rākṣasī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā cchāya gata sarva gati tathāgata cchāya saṃbhava rakṣasa vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Shadow Oppressor.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā antattaya vināśāna vikṛta rauṃ drakśa vajra satva svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Oppressor.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hara hara vajra vajra tila piṃgala locana kāla kāla svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Apasmāra.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā devaṃ ga bu gata tathāgata ājñā kara piva tha se pithā vajra satvā svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Deva.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra nāga mukhi gauri nīla titi nī svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Nāga.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā dhara dhara vajra dhara yakṣa kula sundhara svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Yakṣa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vikara vajra śikhara gagana cariṇi svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Gandharva.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā tana saṃbhava vajra mathana ṭema bhici svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Asura.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā khana jaritire reṭiri vajra mukha svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Garuḍa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra gauri ṭikiṭini svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Mahoraga.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā rāga dārāyāna na jaliva vajra rakṣa mālyaṃ vara dhara vajra pāṇi priya svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Red Body.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvatha kili kili kalo karālā vagra sara sara gṛhṇa gṛhṇa svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Kīlikīla.

namaḥ sarva tathagatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra vidār pūraya pūraya vaha vaha svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Destroyer.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he laṃgili kurdani ha he kihi svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Glider.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā halahu narakupara vadhara dhara vidhara vidhara kadha kadha kathā vajrapāṇi vajrapriya kaha kaha ha ha he he kiñca rāyasi sahasra bhuja sahasra ānana bindu daṃṣṭra durdānta damaka prajvalita keśa nakharo madśana dali bindu sūrita jihva candra ātitya mukuṭa goti vircita śikhara vajra gada keyūra kuṇḍalaṃ alaṃkṛta śarīra vajra nakha vajra aṃgulaṃ vajra hasta vajra carana vajra gātra vajra netra nīla vajra vajra gata vaḍava mukha gani gambhāṃra hūṃkāra ratita sata hasita lambodara grasa grasa praviśa āviśa āviśa ghurṇa ghurṇa ghurṇapaya ghūrṇāpaya sarva satva bhūma bhūma bhūmaya bhūmaya sarva duṣṭa paca paca daha daha matha matha hūṃ hūṃ vajrapāṇi ājñāpayati svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Nadakubera.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā pracala mobuli vidhara vajra kriha nakha vajrasatva svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Vidyādhara.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā śuddha vajra prākṛti śuddha śodhaya sarva svāhā

This is the vajra mantra that purifies all substances.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra agni vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Fire.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra anala pracala mauli thiddya dar svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Wind Blaze.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajraṃga vajra dhara jina ādhara svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Earth.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā viraje vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Free of Dust.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā smṛti nadada vajrasatva svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Mindfulness.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā padma vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Lotus.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva ṭra vajrottama karuṇa agadhari kāruṇa maṇḍala svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Compassion.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā maitryudgata sarva satva hitaṃkata svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Loving-Kindness.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā pāramitā garbha sarvatra apratihata vajra cinta svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Perfection.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā sarva śūnyatā vajra nita viśuddha satva averya vajra hṛdaya svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Emptiness.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dhāraṇī śvara dhara vajra svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Dhāraṇī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra bodhyaṃga dṛḍha āśāya sarva buddha svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Limb of Awakening.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā mārga viṣadhaka dhaka dhaka cara cara svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Path.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā satya vajra samuṅgata buddha rūbadhar svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Truth.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā avenika vajra saṃbhava buddha putra svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Unshared.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā abhīṣa radva vajra mārga nidariṣaka svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Fearlessness.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā triratna sarva paka buddha rūpaṇi dara svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Three Jewels.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā dṛḍha mūla vajra vṛkṣa bodha nidada svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Tree of Awakening.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā aparājita vajra jitari la bhadrānu jñāna svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Aparājita.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra ratnākāri svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Ratnākara.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā pralaya vajra jva jvala dhaka svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Traceless.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra vivadhaya sarva hūṃ hūṃ svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Formation.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā saṃbhyaḥ sarva vajra vajrottama karuṇa māya svāhā

This is the mantra of Terrifying by the Vajra.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā saṃpatti vajra samaya svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Excellence.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra kumāra vajra hasta svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajrakumāra.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kāma vajra vilasini takiti svāhā

This is the mantra of Kāmavajra the Coquette.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kāma vajra vidyādhari kumude svāhā

This is the mantra of Kāmavajra the Vidyādhara.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā rakṣa vajra nika manda de kāma yakṣaṇi svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Yakṣiṇī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra mataṃgi khiri khiga kharika svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Caṇḍālī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā rudhira priya rudhira vetāli lihi laha liligini vajra mathini rahi

This is the mantra of Vajra Blood Vetālī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra pitāli kali māli nava māli luśudha svarihe svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Vetālī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dunte vajra śītike udpādani pāda mā vilamba vajrapāṇi ājñāpayati svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Wrathful One.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kunakhi kunakhi vajrapāṇi priye hiti hide svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Kunakhī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrāṃgi kuruṃgani vajra tundeke svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Plumed Lady.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dhavali dhalitaṃgi vajra bhramarike svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Bee.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra śavari śavari rūpa dhāraṇi ghini ghiniṇike svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Śabarī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra vasanatike vajra kusum hasta vajra kusuma sambhave svahā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Flower.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hāsa hāsa vajra hasantu nṛtya nṛtya svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Laughter.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hi mada valige vajra madava vajrapāṇi manusmara svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Taste.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra vajra kukku rima samukhi vajrod bhave auya kiṃ dande devi vajra pataki svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Bitch.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrodpi lakehi nadandi vini vikuni svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Utpalā.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra mālini khailanatike cala cala vicala vicala ruṭṭu lalu ru svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Playful Lady.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra haraṇa khādaya sarva dura nivariṇi hare svāhā

This is the mantra of Vajra Doe.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra maṃkati rakta mukhi rakta akṣi vajrotti kadda kadda ma pilamba vajrapāṇi rājñāpayati svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Monkey.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dharaṇi dhara dhara saṃdhara svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajradharā.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra kālike drametiko randika haṭa huṭe svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Kālī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā thalaṃva vigalita mahā maṇi kutvaṃsa svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Seated in Pride.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā pracaṇḍa vajra dharaka nirdayi daha daha bhañja bhañja samayamanusmara svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Pracaṇḍa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra lalita vajrapāṇi priya sarva satva vaśaṃkari svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajralalita.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra candra mukhe kha kha khāhi khāhi smara vratijñā svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Moon Face.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra gona durdānta damaka vimala mukha jahi jahi svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Stainless.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra baladhari sisimi svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Strength Holder.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā khecara vajra gamana he ha ha svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Sky Goer.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajraṃ gato tara tara duvar vara cara cara kama kama svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Noble.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrottama svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Supreme.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra vāktra duha duha svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Face.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dandura capiṭa vajra rana silada hari lambodara dhara dhuvara svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Tooth.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā raṃ jaya jaya vajra rutra jaya jaya caṇḍa roṣaṇa svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Wrathful One.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā trailokya grasana vajra duha vajra pāśa hasta ānaya ānaya kiñci rāyasi tathāgata samayam nusmara svāhā

This is the mantra of the messenger Vajra Three Worlds.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā caṇḍala vajra kiṃkara kuru sarvaṃ kiñci rāyasi vicitra phatiṅ parite svahā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajra Caṇḍa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra piṅgala lalita keśa prajvalita śarīra hā kadhaka kuru kuru svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajra Piṅgala.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra ketu kiṅkara dhara dhara thara thara kara kara svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajraketu.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā te gadhilaka kiñca rāya lalita veṣa dhari dhāraṇi dhāraṇi pratijñā muhu muhu muñca dahasaṃ svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajra Great Time.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra kula ājñā kara rata rata riṃvi svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajra Doer of Commands.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ha kṛtānda śamana bhañja kalaha priya hili hili lalita dusta sarva hṛdaya svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajra Lover of Strife.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra śikhara mulu mulu helu helu svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajra Peak.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kata kaṭa matha maṭa hūṃ hūṃ vajra kula sundhara dhara hara hara svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajrakulasundara.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hala hala ṭara ṭara luntana vajra kiṅkara svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajra Ruiner.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dhatañjaya jaṃkara butantara hva svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajra Victor over Wind.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvatha kotina jaya kiñca rāyasi gṛhṇa gṛhṇa koti tiṅgati gata svāhā

This is the mantra of the attendant Vajra Victor over Extremes.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā capalike capala vajrīṇi svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Capalā.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā su vajrīṇi vajra dutike svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Excellent.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra pañjarike vajrini svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Net Lady.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ratna mālike vajrapāṇi priye svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Jewel Garland.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra mālini dapala mukhi vajrīṇi svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra White Lady.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra lambike svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Lambikā.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra suganatige vajragi vajra dayitaka svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Beloved.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā sutiṣṭha vajrīṇi vajrapāṇi hṛdayaṃ game svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Well-Abiding.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra dukula bhakṣe śu harani svahā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Wearer of Dukūla Cloth.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra karalike vartike svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Even Lady.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra jayakari vajra śarīrāṇi svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Jayakarī.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra karabhi vajra atiśanike svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Threatener.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra vajriṇi vajra vadhike svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Slayer.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā mekhala lalita keśa vari vajra gandhari svāhā

This is the mantra of the maidservant Vajra Word Holder.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā susiddhi kara vajra sādhakayi sarva vajrapāṇi rājñā kuru svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Susiddhikara.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ratna māli vajra dhara svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Three-Pointed Jewel Diadem.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vidyottama cinta vajra hūṃ

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Vidyottama.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bala kilikila vajra makuṭa dhara svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Bala Kīlikīla.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathāratna keli kila ratna makuṭa dhara svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Ratna Kīlikīla.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā surūpa māla vajra vajra hitaṃkara svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Surūpa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra viṃnadu gata vajra dhara svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Vajra Bearer.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā lalita vajra puruṣa mahā yakṣa rūpa dharas rasara svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Vajralalita.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā gaja karṇa vajra locana caṃna calakā svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Gajakarṇa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā traṭa vajra kañja hūṃ svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Fair Harmer.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhīṣaṇa vajra bhīma vajrapāṇi rājñāpayati svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Bhīṣaṇa.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hariti sarvatra me pratihata tara tara svāhā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Vajra Seizer.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hāsa vajra dhara sutānu sarva arta sartaka hi hi ri svahā

This is the mantra of the king of knowledge Vajrahāsa.

The Tantra of the Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, the fifth fascicle.

Then again Vajrapāṇi entered into equipoise in the samādhi called Source of All Limbs, and through the power of that samādhi, sons born of his heart and issuing from his mouth emerged from his mind and from all his limbs. From his two hands came the youth Subāhu. From his mouth came the youth Vajrasena. From his vajra diadem came the youth Vajra Diadem. From the crown of his head came the youth Vajra Crown-Born. From the vajra flowers came the youth Vajra Flower. From the vajra flower chaplet came the youth Vajra Flower Chaplet. From the vajra chest came the youth Vajra Chest. From the vajra heart came the youth Vajra Dear One. From the vajra forehead came the youth Vajra Moon. From the vajra eyebrows came the youth Vajra Eyebrow. From the vajra ears came the youth Vajradhara. From the vajra eyes came the youth Vajra Single Eye of the World. From the vajra nose came the youth Vajra Bearer of Force. From the vajra cheeks came the youth Vajra Support. From the vajra chin came the youth Vajra Holder of the Cherished. From the vajra teeth came the youth Vajra Fang. From the vajra neck came the youth Vajra Song. From the vajra armpits came the youth Vajra Splendor of Blazing Fire. From the back came the youth Vajra Yoke Bearer.

Thus these and the other wrathful youths, sons of the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, bearing vajras in their hands, with minds devoted to the welfare of sentient beings, arisen from the maṇḍala of compassion, drawn forth by the aspiration of Vajrapāṇi, who in various world systems have fully and perfectly awakened to supreme and highest awakening, whose bodies are produced from meditative absorption, dhāraṇī, liberation, the grounds, the perfections, the powers, the limbs of awakening, the noble path, and great emptiness, and who fulfill the wishes of all sentient beings, were every one of them dear to the heart of Vajrapāṇi.

Then Vajrapāṇi, Lord of Secrets, arose from that meditative absorption and spoke these secret mantras:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrasenoddhava vajrapāṇipriya svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Army.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrapahūdbha vajrabahuśuraṃgama svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Subāhu.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bicitra vajraśekhara vajraśikharāpilambita hara svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Flower Chaplet.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kiriṭi vajradhari viśuddha aṃgara svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Diadem.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajramūrbha agita hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Born from the Crown.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kusuma acidrata vajramurti vajrasvabhāva svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Flower.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajravaradhari uravajrotatama svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Breast.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrahṛdaya vajrapāṇipriya satvahitaṃkara svāhā
This is the mantra of the youth Vajra Dear One.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā candravajra aṃgasundhara svāhā
This is the mantra of the youth Vajra Moon.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajracakramaṇḍala saṃbuta vajrabhruva svāhā
This is the mantra of the youth Vajra Eyebrow.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra aṃkudhari śrutādhara dhara nirdada svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Holder of the Supreme Ear.

namaḥ sarvatathagatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajralocana jñānacakṣurdada svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Eye.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajravegadhari manojavedhara dhara svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Bearer of Force.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā uddhara vajrasamayamnupālaya svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Support.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajradhara dhara jvālitamūrti svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Holder of the Cherished.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajra aṃkura vajraketu sara sara svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Fang.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā saṃbodhi vajradharapriya vajragīti svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Song.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrajvalita vajramūrti vajradhara svāhā
This is the mantra of the youth Vajra Blazing.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā teja avalambita mūrti dhaka dhaka svāhā
This is the mantra of the youth Vajra Yoke Bearer.

Then Vajrapāṇi, who carries out the command of all the tathāgatas, empowered the meditative absorption of Māyā, arisen from the vajra, the mother of all buddhas and bodhisattvas; and, bearing the great cord of bodily protection that wards off all harm, he uttered the sound that declares "mine," as one who says, "Let it never be done!"

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he vajraśūlini vajramataṃgi anantamukha vajrahili jayantiṃ ruti mukhati si sphuranti svāhā
This is the mantra of Māmakī.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bubimo vajramālīni vajra adabhūte sañcaya samantaśītiśama vajrarandhanena ghudhu ghudhu jahi jahi māmilamda bhagavate bārāhī smara smara vajrasaṃgīti svāhā
This is the mantra of the vajra boundary.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajramahāmaṇḍa darśaya vajrī bikrama svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Holder of the Essence.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrasitātapatre jvakṛta svāhā
This is the mantra of the Vajra White Parasol.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bitata mahāvajra bidana raṃga raṃgāpaya svahā
This is the mantra of the Vajra Great Jewel Banner.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ratnakūṭa jvalita vajrodabhava svāhā
This is the mantra of the Vajra Multistoried Mansion.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrapadmoddhava vajra āsana vajranadada svāhā
This is the mantra of the Vajra Lotus Seat.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā smṛti vajradharaka svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Mindfulness.

namaḥ sarvatathagatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvatha bodhi bibodhana vajra bama bamaba svahā
This is the mantra of Vajra Awakening.

namaḥ sarvatathagatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvatha pimati haraka vajraratna dhama dhama svaha
This is the mantra called Vajra Cutter of Doubt.

namaḥ sarvatathagatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jñānavajra svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Giver of Knowledge.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvatha amṛtavajrapa svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Nectar.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā pravartaya vajrajñānasāgaraṃra svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Proclaimer of the Dharma.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrasaṃsathāpriya birāgakoṭi svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Free of Attachment.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā śūnyatākoṭi vajrasaṃdharaka svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Emptiness.

namaḥ sarvatathagatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā sarvadharmma samatā prabaka vajrasatva svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Equality.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā gagana gañja nitara śiśaya makhaṃ vajra svāhā
This is the mantra of Vajra Gaganagañja.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrayakṣaṇi vajradade atcipara ṇi manasi vajramālini svāhā
This is the mantra of the Vajra Yakṣiṇī.

Then Vajrapāṇi arose from that meditative absorption, and again he entered into the meditative absorption called Burning Koṭis with the Host That Strikes at the Life of All Sentient Beings, the śrāvakas, all the pratyekabuddhas, the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kiṃnaras, mahoragas, humans, nonhumans and the rest. Then he spoke this supreme vajra essence called the Great Fire of Destruction, which blazes like the seven suns that appear at the time of the great destruction of the world, and which, like the plume of fire in the great island of the ocean, devours the minds and the hosts of mental factors of all sentient beings:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā phaṭ hūṃ

As soon as the essence of the Great Fire of Destruction had been spoken, that entire assembly shook like a grove of plantain trees cut at the root, as if tossed by a great and violent wind, and from all their seats they were thrown face down onto the vajra maṇḍala of the great wheel. Only the bodhisattva great beings who abide on the ten grounds were excepted. Through the might of Vajrapāṇi, that entire assembly saw this whole buddhafield, Meru and great Meru, the Cakravāla range and the great Cakravāla range, blazing and become a single flame, and all the oceans and great oceans dried up, utterly burned, and turned to ash.

From the heart of Vajrapāṇi there then came forth the king of wrathful ones called the Great Flame of Destruction. Letting out a great, loud horse-laugh, he gathered up the hearts of the entire assembly, became equal to space, and entered the maṇḍala of Vajrapāṇi's heart. And Vajrapāṇi, abiding in the maṇḍala of great compassion, at that time abided in the abiding of equality with all the tathāgatas.

Then those tathāgatas said to Vajrapāṇi, "Excellent!" and declared:

"This essence of the ocean of mantra conduct,
Possessed of great power,
Protects this teaching,
And in this abode of the Great Vehicle
Ever tames those who are hard to tame:
Great hero, you have spoken it."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī, knowing that the entire assembly had fallen onto the vajra maṇḍala of the great wheel, felt great compassion arise. Gazing long with both his eyes, he blessed them with this great gift, the sacred essence of Vajra Supreme. Looking upon the great vajra maṇḍala for the sake of the maṇḍala of supreme great conduct, he said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, who has attained victory in the supreme sacred Dharma of all the tathāgatas: "Son of good family, grant this assembly some small door for entering the pledge. Through it they will gain hope of life in this teaching, gain faith, and come to offer each their own secret mantra essences."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva great being Vajrapāṇi said to the youthful Mañjuśrī:

"You who have gained mastery over meditative absorption,
Unattached like space,
Who always fulfill the aspirations
Of all the buddhas everywhere:
Tell the conduct of all secret mantras,
And likewise the accomplishment of secret mantras,
The observances, the signs and the forms,
The times, the places and the rites."

At that time he gave that vajra, together with the dhāraṇī of the power of Vajra Supreme, to the youthful Mañjuśrī:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ehi mahāvajrakoṭi kuṭila pāpaka aṃkula śikhe kabila keśī taṭi taṭi koṭi koṭi karkkaṭi muṭi mahāthindud lolo duka duka sama sama sara sara bisara bisara sphura sphura uddhotite hari piṃgale caṭi bicaṭi jvāle bijvāle vajraghoṇa vajrasara dṛṣṭa praharaṇe matibhūte ratnatraya atitale vajradhara biśāsma apratihata pramardani svāhā

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said to that assembly: "Sons of good family, keep in mind this queen of knowledge, Invincible Vajra Who Utterly Stupefies with Fire, and it will bring you benefit and happiness and the gaining of life."

As soon as Vajrapāṇi had spoken this great knowledge mantra, the Vajra of Sacred Giving blessed that assembly, and they spoke with one voice: "Homage! Homage to the Blessed Invincible Vajra Who Utterly Stupefies with Fire!" In that very instant the assembly rose and, gazing at the bodhisattvas Samantabhadra and the others, at the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and at the youthful Mañjuśrī, they spoke these words:

"Oh, the wisdom! Oh, the joy!
Oh, the knowledge of mantra, beyond conception!
Through it all of us
Now have a protector and the joy of meditative concentration.
With minds at peace and free of knots,
We have taken the Buddha's teaching earnestly to heart.
Into the presence of the buddhas
All of us have come,
And in this king of rites, this great system,

We now offer our essences."

Then Brahmā said to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, I too offer my own essence here, in these many graded divisions of the maṇḍala of the great empowerment of Vajrapāṇi.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā oṃ

Blessed One, this is my supreme essence. It proclaims the four Vedas, establishes the four castes, and lays out the great arrangement endowed with tones. Blessed One, from this the Vedas arise, and the mantras and the rites such as sacrifice arise; like the great ocean, it is the ground of all phenomena."

Vajrapāṇi said:

"Vajrasattva, the great vajra,
Is what is called the vajra oṃ:
Born of love and meditative absorption,
Excellent, utterly free of pride."

Then Śakra (Indra), lord of the gods, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, please accept this essence of mine, which grants power over every kingdom:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bidarāya mauli mauli pihu bihu svāhā

Blessed One, through this essence I act as lord of the gods. Blessed One, if anyone who has entered this great maṇḍala of the vajra wheel wishes to accomplish this essence of mine there, he should first recite it three hundred thousand times before Vajrapāṇi. At the end he should make ten thousand fire offerings of pine kindling sticks together with butter and honey. Blessed One, I shall accomplish all of that for him. After he dies and passes on, he will be born in the higher realms. If he recites it constantly, he will prosper. If, gazing upon Vajrapāṇi and without taking food, he recites it a hundred thousand times, he will gain a kingdom; but one whose pledge is broken is the exception, for he will not succeed."

Then all those nāga kings said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, there is a nāga essence, and through it all of us come under control. We shall grant accomplishments. We shall protect. We shall remove poison.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā re re rātiṃ nāgale liri phudta rijihe svāhā

To accomplish this essence, one should enter a river that flows into the ocean, or a great lake, and recite it ten thousand times. Then, if one sees some nāga coming toward one, or the lake is stirred up, and one remains unafraid of it, one will succeed. Or else, at the end, one should recite it ten thousand times while offering kindling sticks of khadira wood dipped in white mustard seed oil; in that way too one succeeds. Poisons, whether of moving or unmoving things, will then be removed by mere thought, and the practitioner's various other activities will also be done by mere thought."

Then Vaiśravaṇa, the great general of the yakṣas, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, I too offer here, in this great maṇḍala of many graded divisions, this essence of mine, which grants practitioners every excellence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā yakṣaśara kiñcirāyasi samayamanusmara debhīme vaiśravaṇapriya svāhā

Blessed One, whoever accomplishes this essence should go alone to a stūpa that holds relics and recite this essence five hundred thousand times. At the end, having made offerings with whatever he can afford, if throughout the night he makes thirty thousand fire offerings of black sesame mixed with curd, honey and ghee, whatever he wishes will be granted. If, without taking food, in secret and in solitude, he keeps a yakṣiṇī in mind and recites it ten thousand times for seven days and nights, a yakṣiṇī will be granted. If he remembers it every day for one year, I shall grant him a treasure."

Then Āṭavaka, the great general of the yakṣas, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "I too offer my own essence here, in this maṇḍala of many graded divisions:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā khimisiri smaśri paripūrayana pratijñāmantake svāhā

Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence of mine in mind, I shall always follow after him. If he wishes to accomplish it, he should go to a mountain peak and recite it three hundred thousand times; and if he makes a hundred thousand fire offerings of white mustard seed mixed with curd, honey and ghee, I grant whatever he wishes."

Then Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the great general of the yakṣas, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, I too offer this essence of mine here in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bidhara dhari gandharirisi svāhā

Blessed One, whoever keeps this essence in mind will not meet an untimely death, and will always be surrounded by good fortune. If he wishes to accomplish it, then from the first day of the month until the full moon he should make ten thousand fire offerings each day, with flowers as the oblation. Then, on the day of the full moon, having made offerings with whatever he can afford, if throughout the night he offers rice porridge in the fire, he will succeed, and I grant whatever he wishes."

Then Virūpākṣa, the great general of the yakṣas, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, I too offer my own essence here in this great maṇḍala, in order to fulfill every wish:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā śrīdhi dharaya birūpākṣa svāhā

Blessed One, whatever son or daughter of good family constantly keeps this essence of mine in mind, I shall always follow after him, and I shall fulfill all his wishes. If he wishes to accomplish it, he should go to a mountain peak and recite it three hundred thousand times. Then, on the day of the full moon, having made offerings with whatever he can afford, if throughout the night he makes ten thousand fire offerings of guggulu kindling sticks dipped in honey and ghee, he will succeed, and I grant whatever he wishes. Even if he does not succeed, I grant him five fine districts."

Then Jambhala Jalendra said to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, I too offer here in this great maṇḍala the supreme accomplishment of all the aims of practitioners:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kuru curu muru jaṃbha jalodbhava svāhā

Blessed One, whoever constantly recites this essence of mine, I shall accomplish whatever he wishes."

"If he wishes to accomplish it, he should go to a mountain peak at the time of the solstice and recite it a million times; then I grant a kingdom or a great treasure. If he enchants gorocanā by reciting it once and anoints his eyes, whoever he looks at will come under his control. If at night he recites it over his face, keeps something in mind and lies down, he will see in a dream whatever he had in mind. If he wants clothing, then whatever the color of the flower he throws into water, he will obtain clothing of that same color. If he wants small livestock, then for three weeks he should throw flowers, enchanted once with the mantra, so that they strike the reflection of the sun, and he will obtain them. If he recites it constantly, his fortune will grow great."

Then Eight Arms said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, it is like this: I too shall offer my own essence here in these many great maṇḍalas, in order to fulfill every desire:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā cakra dvadva bāhurāja svāhā

Blessed One, whoever accomplishes this essence of mine should perform the protection and then, in a clean spot in a park, beneath an aśoka tree, recite it three hundred thousand times. At the end, having made offerings to the youth with whatever he can afford, if he burns agaru incense throughout the night and recites, I shall reveal myself to him at midnight or at dawn. I grant whatever excellent thing he wishes. If he recites it a hundred thousand times without taking food, a yakṣiṇī will come right there, and she will grant whatever he wishes. If she does not come, she will perish."

Then Pāñcika, the great general of the yakṣas, bowed and said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, I too offer my own essence here in this great maṇḍala, in order to protect, guard and shelter practitioners who strive to accomplish secret mantras:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā pañcala pañcamukha pañcikha hrīṃ hrīṃḥ rakṣa rakṣa svāhā

Blessed One, if any son or daughter of good family who has received the pledge in this great maṇḍala wishes to accomplish secret mantras, he should recite this essence of mine once at the very beginning. Then, to protect, guard and shelter him, I shall come into his presence with my retinue of five hundred sons. The sign that I am coming is this: the sweet fragrance of divine incense will waft from the practitioner's body, his strength of enthusiasm will be complete, and, free of all obstructors, he will gain accomplishment with little hardship.

If he wishes to accomplish this essence of mine, he should recite it three hundred thousand times in the presence of the Buddha, the Blessed One. At the end, he should place the butter of a reddish-yellow cow in a copper vessel and recite until it smokes or blazes; if he then drinks it, he will rise up into the sky. If it smokes, he will retain whatever he hears. Even if he does not succeed, all people will be pleased with him. If he recites it constantly, wealth will gather. If he makes a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground, imagines himself in the presence of the Blessed One and recites it a hundred thousand times, he will succeed, and it will not be otherwise."

Then the asura kings, Vemacitrin and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence here in these many great maṇḍalas:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā traṃgi nibodede mālini jatimi hūṃ svāhā

Blessed One, whoever accomplishes this supremely secret, great, fierce and sacred essence of ours should go to the gate of the Glorious Gate and recite this essence six hundred thousand times. At the end, if he makes a hundred thousand fire offerings of poison mixed with blood and mustard seed, all the abodes of the asuras will be left without bolts and without mechanical devices. Then we shall serve him and let that son of good family dwell there. We shall grant him every requisite, and we shall also grant him every elixir practice with mercury and medicinal essences."

Then the gandharva kings, Variegated Garland and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer this essence of ours here in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā madta mataṃgi svāhā

This is our essence, and through it we grant accomplishments. Through it we are called the gandharva kings. We enjoy the various pleasures of the gods. In short, we are able to do all that is to be done. We dwell in all the abodes of humans and nonhumans. If anyone wishes to accomplish it, he should first make offerings in a mountain cave with whatever he can afford and recite this essence a hundred thousand times; then he will succeed. At the end, if he kindles a fire with turuṣka oil and makes ten thousand fire offerings of agaru kindling sticks, we shall then fulfill his wishes. If he enchants gorocanā with the mantra and makes a mark on his forehead, all people will be pleased with him. If he enchants his palm with the mantra and passes it over his face, all people will be pleased with him."

Then the kiṃnara kings, Druma the kiṃnara king and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer this essence of ours here in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā titiliphu svāhā

Blessed One, this is our essence, and through it we are called the kiṃnara kings. Sounding cymbals, beating drums and making music, we go everywhere, throughout all world systems, to the feet of all the tathāgatas. In all the abodes of gods and nāgas we are honored by all. Through this essence one forgets nothing at all. If anyone wishes to accomplish it, he should live alone in the wilderness, eating alms food, and recite this essence two hundred thousand times."

"At the end, he should smear a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground, mixed with the five products of the cow, make offerings with whatever he can afford, and make ten thousand fire offerings with saffron as the oblation. Then he will succeed: in all the abodes of the kiṃnaras he will be honored by all, and he will do whatever he wishes."

Then all the garuḍa kings, Son of Māra and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer this essence of ours here in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā raṅkāri biṣari biṣeṣaṇi kṛntani kumārikeha svāhā phu phu svāhā

Through this essence of ours we shall establish all the nāgas in their own pledge. Merely by hearing the name of this essence, all the nāgas become our servants: they become frightened, cowed, trembling and without hope. Left without poison, they flee in every direction. Blessed One, if any son or daughter of good family wishes to accomplish this essence, he should enter a great lake and stand submerged up to the throat. If he recites this essence a hundred thousand times, then that lake will dry up in a single day. All the abodes of the nāgas will blaze, and they will show their own forms. They will also make hundreds of other obstructions, but he should not be afraid of them.

Then, when those signs have appeared, at the end he should smear a maṇḍala on the shore of the ocean with that same cow dung that has not fallen to the ground, make offerings to the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi with whatever he can afford, fashion eight nāga kings out of all the poisons and secondary poisons, and then make fire offerings of mustard seeds, smearing each seed with blood. Then all the nāgas will come and say, 'Take what is excellent!' He should not be frightened. He should say this: 'Become my servants!' They will say, 'So be it!' and vanish, and from then on they will do whatever he wishes."

Then all the rākṣasa kings, Terrifying and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence here in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kāṃ'ariṇi luṇḍini svāhā

Through this essence of ours we shall steal the splendor and strength of all humans, and we shall tame all sentient beings. In short, Blessed One, in the three worlds with all that moves and does not move, there is nothing at all that is hard for us to obtain. Blessed One, whoever wishes to accomplish this should, in a charnel ground where smoke is rising, eat meat as his food, wear blue clothing, hold a sword in his hand, and recite this essence a hundred thousand times. At the end he should make a torma offering for all the bhūtas. Having made offerings with whatever he can afford, he should recite until midnight. Then some lord of the rākṣasas will come. Without fearing him, he should offer him water for the guest and say, 'Grant me the accomplishment of taking whatever form I desire.' The rākṣasa will take that sword and give it back to him, and he will then be able to travel as the gods do and will perform various wondrous deeds."

Then the great sage Agni said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, I too offer this essence of mine here in this great maṇḍala, to benefit practitioners:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kapīla jyotiniraṇada biṅgala locana svāhā

This essence of mine fulfills every hope. Through it I too am summoned and come under control. I shall increase good fortune and grant wealth. If one recites it constantly, wealth will gather. If with this essence one constantly makes fire offerings of food, food will appear. In short, whatever substance one offers in the fire, that substance will appear. If he wishes to accomplish it, he should go to a mountain peak, eat alms food, and recite this essence three hundred thousand times. At the end, having made offerings with whatever he can afford, he should prepare a fire pit and make ten thousand fire offerings of juniper kindling sticks dipped in curd, honey and ghee. Then he will succeed and will perform the rites as he pleases."

Then the wind gods, Cloud Garland and the others, bowed with joined palms toward where the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was and said to him: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence here in this great maṇḍala. We shall fulfill all the wishes of practitioners who wish to gain accomplishment:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhramara bhramare capali capalike herambini svāhā

This is our supreme essence, and through it we carry out the command of the tathāgatas. We shall act in accordance with the scriptural instructions given to bodhisattvas who engage in bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra. We shall bring about benefit and happiness. If one who engages in bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra first recites this essence three hundred thousand times, we shall then permit him every activity. If anyone wishes to accomplish it, he should recite it ten thousand times without taking food. At the end, having made offerings with whatever he can afford, he should make five maṇḍalas with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground and set up seven banners of various colors. Then, if he recites until the banners stir, he will succeed, and he will perform at will rites such as raising and stopping the wind."

Then the Moon, king of the stars, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, I too offer my own essence here in this great maṇḍala, which completely pacifies all torment and firmly establishes good fortune:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā candrakānati biśuddha haṃga svāhā

Blessed One, this essence of ours completely pacifies all the torments of those who engage in bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra."

If one recites it constantly, it dispels everything inauspicious. It increases glory. It constantly bestows good fortune. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should take milk as one's only food, enter a lotus pond, and recite this essence a hundred thousand times. At the end, one should make a moon out of moonstone or out of butter, place it among the petals of a lotus, and recite throughout the night. Then, at midnight or at sunrise, rays of light will appear, and once they have appeared they will enter the practitioner's mouth. Then, circling round and round like a wheel, they will come to rest all about him. Then he will succeed: he will be free of torment and will travel through the sky, and he will dwell for an eon in my celestial palace, abiding in the bliss of the gods. Glory too will be his, and whatever he desires, kingship and the like, will be granted."

Then all the planets, the Sun and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we have an essence called All Splendor and Strength. For the benefit and happiness of practitioners, and to give them long life and freedom from illness, we offer it here in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā siddhabedyodana svāhā

Blessed One, whatever practitioner recites this essence, no illness at all will arise in him. If he recites it constantly, he will become splendid. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should set up a lamp with five wicks on the sand of a riverbank and recite this essence a hundred thousand times. Then one should make a fire offering into the fire and recite until the sun sets. Then one of the suns will come. One should present him with the guest-water offering and the rest, and when he has accepted whatever he wishes, he will say, 'So be it,' and depart, and he will do whatever one desires. One may then go to any celestial palace whatever."

Then Varuṇa, king of the nāgas, together with many nāga kings, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā apamapati biraja svāhā

Whoever engages in bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra and recites this essence will become completely pure by nature. His understanding will become directly evident in all pure conduct. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should enter the great ocean until submerged up to the throat and recite this essence one million two hundred thousand times. Then, at the end, one should make a nāga out of the four kinds of precious substances, worship it with whatever one can afford, and recite until some nāga king or other is present. Then one should present the guest-water offering and say, 'Grant me whatever I wish.' From then on he will do whatever he is commanded. Entering that very place, one will dwell there for many years."

Then Viṣṇu, bowing with palms joined in the direction where the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was, said: "Blessed One, we too offer this our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā eka eka bara bara jvāla jvāla biṣṇabe svāhā

Blessed One, this is my essence. With it I repel all who are hostile. I destroy them. I put an end to all epidemics and all harms. Whoever remembers it constantly, his intelligence will not decline. If one wishes to accomplish this essence, one should go to a mountain peak and recite it five hundred thousand times. At the end, with earth from the top of an anthill mixed with the five products of the cow, one should make an image of Viṣṇu with four arms: in one left hand a discus, in one right hand a club, in the other left hand a conch, and the other right hand granting the supreme boon. One should make a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground, worship with whatever one can afford, sit facing west, and recite until the image of Viṣṇu moves or the sound of a conch arises. Then one will succeed, and he will accomplish every purpose one has in mind."

Then Rudra, king of the hungry ghosts, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, I have a supremely secret essence, and it is because I perform fierce deeds that all sentient beings call me Rudra, the Fierce One. Blessed One, with this essence I bring ruin upon the three worlds with all that moves and does not move. I bring them under my power. Blessed One, I offer this my essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hūṃ phaṭ

Blessed One, this essence of mine is a treasure for all. If anyone who engages in bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra keeps it in mind, I will always follow after him. Together with all the hosts of hungry ghosts I will do as he commands. The three worlds too will come under his power. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should, in a charnel ground, smear the body with ashes, wear as an ornament a garland of human skull cups, hold a trident in the hand, and carry a khaṭvāṅga staff. One should wear a tiger-skin skirt, eat whatever alms food comes one's way, and recite this essence four hundred thousand times. Then, in a charnel ground where smoke billows, one should make a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground, set down the trident and the khaṭvāṅga, make whatever offerings one can afford, burn human flesh as incense, and recite throughout the night. Then Rudra himself, surrounded by many hungry ghosts, will come in a terrifying form, dreadful to behold. One should not be afraid of him, and should present the guest-water offering. Then one will succeed. He will accomplish every purpose. He will follow after one and be eager to carry out one's commands."

Then Īśāna, lord of the bhūta spirits, bowed to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and said: "Blessed One, I too offer my essence in this great maṇḍala.

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ponnete datta bhūta adhipati svāhā

Blessed One, this essence of mine bestows every excellence. If any son or daughter of good family constantly keeps this essence in mind, I will always follow after that person. I will protect them. I will increase their glory. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should stay in a secluded garden, eating only in the evening, and recite this essence a hundred thousand times. At the end, one should make offerings with whatever one can afford, burn sandalwood incense, offer a vast torma, and offer eight butter lamps as well, and recite from sunset until midnight. Then one will succeed. All one's purposes will be accomplished. He will also bestow the elixir of rejuvenation."

Then the goddess Umā bowed to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and said: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā umaye svāhā

Blessed One, this essence of mine brings about every good fortune. One should recite the mantra once over flowers, incense, eye salve, or bezoar, and then recite it. If one recites it constantly, one will become fortunate. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should accomplish it by applying the rite given for the essence of the Auspicious One in full, but doubled."

Then the great planet Kārttikeya, son of the Pleiades, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, I too, with a mind full of joy, offer my own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he kumāra jvalita mūrti caru citra mabara svāhā

This essence of mine strikes terror into all. If anyone constantly keeps it in mind, no fear at all will arise for him. None of the grahas that seek an opening will find one. One should empower a peacock's tail feather with the mantra and use it to treat someone seized by a graha; if one also burns it as incense, he will recover. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should first honor eight young boys with great respect and give them a morning meal, giving them whatever food they crave. Then, in a shrine of the mātṛkās, holding a short spear in one's hand and in the guise of a youth, one should recite this essence a hundred thousand times. At the end, in that same maṇḍala of the mātṛkās, one should make offerings with whatever one can afford, make an image out of clay taken from both banks of a river, plant the short spear in its heart, and recite until a sound rings out from the earth saying, 'He is dead!' or 'His back is broken!' Then one will succeed. From then on he will do whatever one wishes."

Then the god White Cloud, together with all the cloud gods, bowed with palms joined toward where the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was, and said: "Blessed One, we too offer this our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā gulu gulu garja garja mahāsbudbhaba bara bindu tutmāla dar dar pura pura kasa kasa svāhā

This essence of ours benefits all beings. By means of it we cause the expanse of the sky to be covered with a vast, dense net of clouds and bring all crops to ripeness. We also satisfy this great earth with a great stream of rain. Blessed One, if any bodhisattva who engages in bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra constantly keeps it in mind, he will have no fear of lacking water. No illness at all will arise in his body. All his wishes will be completely fulfilled. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should, filled with loving-kindness, recite for six months, from moonrise until moonrise. When the six months are complete, one should make offerings with whatever one can afford, take water from the four great oceans, and fill a vase whose base has not been blackened. One should worship it with perfume, flowers and incense, and recite until foam rises from the water and sprays upward and a rumbling sound or the sound of thunder rings out. Then some rain-cloud god or other will come and scatter the water into the sky. Then one will succeed, and he will accomplish every purpose as one wishes."

Then those called Cloud-Crushing Lightning, Lightning Splendor, Lightning Radiance, and Lightning Fine Garland bowed with palms joined toward where the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was, and said: "Blessed One, in order to pacify all harms, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā dhāraya dhāraya sphura sarva mahāpritikara svāhā

Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence in mind, we will protect him. We will shelter and conceal him. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should light lamps in the four directions, fumigate the four directions with incense, make offerings with whatever one can afford, place four vases in the four directions, each of the color proper to its direction, and recite throughout the night. Then, when lightning appears in the four directions, one should not be afraid, and if one presents the guest-water offering to all of them, one will succeed. They will lead one to their own abode and protect one. They will accomplish whatever one has in mind. They will grant whatever supreme thing one desires."

Then the great kings of mountains, Meru, king of mountains, and the others, bowed with palms joined toward where the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was, and said: "Blessed One, for the sake of the bodhisattvas who engage in bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā cala cala mahīdhara ratnadhara svāhā

Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence of ours in mind, when he goes into the wilderness we will protect, shelter and conceal him. We will also provide all the requisites for his comfort.

If one wishes to accomplish it, one should climb to a mountain peak and recite this essence a hundred thousand times. Then one should make offerings with whatever one can afford and perform a fire offering ten thousand times with oblations mixed with milk, curd, honey and butter. Then one of us mountain kings will come and say, 'Son, come here! Let us go to our abode. I will give you whatever you wish.' And the practitioner should say, 'Whenever I need you and call you to mind, come to me!' Then he will say, 'So be it! I will do everything. Do not beg from anyone else.'"

Then Yama, Kālarātri, Kāladaṇḍa, Kālapuruṣa, Kālakarṇī and Glory-Giver bowed to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and said: "Blessed One, we too offer each our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vaibhāsatvāya svāhā

Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence of ours in mind, I will not send my servants and retinue to kill him or to summon him. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should fast on the fourteenth or the eighth day of the waning fortnight, make from the flour of ground śāli rice an image of Yama, eight or six finger-widths high, together with his retinue, and place a buffalo and a club on either side. Then one should make offerings with whatever one can afford and recite throughout the night. At midnight or at sunrise, the buffalo will make a sound or the club will move. Then one should present the guest-water offering and the rest, and ask what one wishes. Then one will succeed. He will perform the actions one desires."

Then Kālarātri spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bikarāle rātrimāte svāhā

"Whoever constantly keeps it in mind, I will protect him. If one wishes to accomplish it, it is as before."

Kāladaṇḍa too spoke his own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā tamodabhavā kālapāśaga svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps it in mind, I will not go near him. I will also bring him benefit. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should accomplish it as before, and I will completely fulfill all his wishes."

Then Kālapuruṣa spoke his own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā uttamaburuṣa svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence of mine in mind, Blessed One, I will not go near him, but will bring him benefit. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should accomplish it as before. There is this slight difference: one should set out two nooses made of hair. All one's wishes will be completely fulfilled."

Then Mṛtyu, Lord of Death, spoke his own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā apratihatakade karmmabaśa abukedebe barade svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence of mine in mind, I will not go near him, except as his past karma decrees. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should accomplish it as before, and set out a bell."

Then the Hero-Maker spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bākṛti mahātraitye bhagavati muti mukhi svāhā

"Whoever constantly keeps it in mind, I will not go near him, except for one who slanders the noble ones, rejects the true Dharma, or reviles the guru. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should accomplish it as before, and set out salted rice porridge. She will bestow every excellence."

Then Kālakarṇī spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kālacakraṇi svāhā

"Whoever constantly keeps it in mind, I will not go near him, except for one who has displeased his father and mother. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should accomplish it as before. In particular, one should set out a brazier holding a fire of chaff. Whoever does this, I will always follow after him."

Then all the mātṛkās bowed with palms joined toward where the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was, and said: "Blessed One, we fierce mātṛkās too, in order to benefit the world, will dwell in every village and every region. We offer each our own essence in this great maṇḍala."

Then the consort of Brahmā spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā oṃ brahmapatini svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence in mind, I will always follow after him. All the mātṛkās too will rejoice and always protect him. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should visualize the syllable oṃ at one's heart and recite a hundred thousand times. Then one should make a maṇḍala of the mātṛkās, worship with whatever one can afford, and count the mantra throughout the night. Holding a jewel and a round water pot in one's hands, one should recite until the sound of the syllable oṃ rings out. Then one will succeed, and she will perform whatever action one wishes. She will grant whatever one wishes."

Then the consort of Rudra spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hrīḥ phaṭ svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever continually keeps this essence of mine in mind, I will always follow after him and do as he commands. I will grant whatever he has in mind. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should eat alms food, stay the night in a charnel ground, and recite two hundred thousand times at the right side of an image of the Great God (Śiva). At the end, one should worship with whatever one can afford, and perform a fire offering of forty thousand datukeraka flowers dipped in curd, honey and butter into the fire of the charnel ground. At midnight the sound of a bull or the sound of the syllable oṃ will ring out, and then all the mātṛkās will have been accomplished.

Then the consort of Viṣṇu spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā nārayani jagadathi hari bala badi jaye svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence in mind, I will always follow after him in order to protect, conceal and shelter him. If one wishes to accomplish this essence, one should recite it fifty thousand times at a place where merit flows down. At the end, on the twelfth day of the last month of autumn, one should worship with whatever one can afford and perform a fire offering ten thousand times with mandārava flowers dipped in butter. Then one will succeed, and she will grant whatever one wishes. One will gain the pledge of all the mātṛkās."

Then the consort of Kumāra spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kumāri mayūra citriketagadre śaktidhāriṇi bitci svāhā phu svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever keeps this essence in mind, I will follow after him and accomplish all his purposes. If one wishes to accomplish this essence, one should face south, hold a short spear in the left hand, and recite it four hundred thousand times. Then one should likewise worship with whatever one can afford and perform a fire offering throughout the night with grain sweetmeats each the size of a juniper berry. At midnight or in the morning, Kaumārī will come and stand before one, and one should present her with the guest-water offering. From then on one will have succeeded, and she will do whatever one wishes."

Then Cāmuṇḍī spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā rudhirabetāli ākarṣaṇi mahākṛtte cchinda cchinda bhinda bhinda camuṇḍi bitce svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever keeps this essence of mine in mind, I will always follow after him and accomplish every purpose he has in mind. If one wishes to accomplish this essence, one should wear blue clothing, hold a human skull in one's hand, eat meat as one's food for one month, and recite in a charnel ground or in a maṇḍala of the mātṛkās. At the end, in that same place, one should worship with whatever one can afford and perform a fire offering ten thousand times with oblations of human flesh dipped in white mustard oil. Then, uttering the sound 'ha ha,' licking her lips, and holding a human skull in her hand, she will come. One should present her with the guest-water offering in a human skull filled with blood. Then she will say, 'Excellent!' and, after circumambulating the practitioner, she will vanish. From then on she will always follow after one and do whatever one desires."

Then the consort of the Boar spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajragoṇinibīdavajrotirabīrabīralihūṃkari svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever keeps this essence in mind, I will always follow after him and accomplish all his purposes. Blessed One, if one wishes to accomplish this essence, one should recite it a hundred thousand times. At the end, one should perform a fire offering a hundred thousand times in a maṇḍala of the mātṛkās with oblations of mustard seed mixed with beer. Then, at midnight, the consort of the Boar herself will come in the form of a cat. Or else the fragrance of divine incense will arise. Then one should know that one has succeeded, and from then on she will perform every action as one wishes."

From the Noble Vajrapāṇi Empowerment, the sixth fascicle.

Then the consort of Kubera spoke her own essence:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā cidariṇi kurabinde dāndrapāṇi svāhā

"Blessed One, whoever keeps this essence in mind, no fear at all of royal punishment will arise for him. Day by day all his wealth will increase. My four handmaidens will always remain with him as servants. Every purpose he has in mind will be accomplished. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should eat alms food, hold a club in one's hand, stay at the foot of a solitary tree, and recite this essence thirty thousand times. At the end, in that same place, one should worship with whatever one can afford and perform a fire offering a hundred thousand times with oblations of puffed rice mixed with curd, honey and butter. Then one will succeed, and from then on she will do whatever one wishes."

Then the consort of the Great Dreadful-Looking One bowed to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and said: "Blessed One, I too offer my own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he kunkhi mahānakhi śakuni ulūkamukhi yamadūtī bitace svāhā

Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence in mind, all his wishes will be completely fulfilled. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should eat alms food, stay at a crossroads or at the foot of a solitary tree, and recite this essence a hundred thousand times. Then one should worship with whatever one can afford and perform a fire offering a hundred thousand times with oblations of ash from a childbirth. Then the consort of the Great Dreadful-Looking One will come, assuming the form of a pūtanā demoness, and one should offer her incense of owl feathers. Then one will succeed, and she will do whatever one wishes."

Then all the great rivers, the great river Gaṅgā and the others, bowed to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and said: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā manasi manonuge gali bimale svāhā

Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence in mind, no fear of water at all will arise for him. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should enter water deep enough to cover the throat and recite this essence a hundred thousand times. Then one should worship with whatever one can afford, make figures about six finger-widths in size from flour of ground śāli rice kneaded with curd and honey, and perform a fire offering eight thousand times. Then one will succeed, and from then on, even if one enters rivers, no fear will arise. One may dwell with them for as long as one wishes; they will care for one as for their own child and grant whatever one wishes."

Then all the gandharva kings, Variegated Garland and the others, bowed with palms joined toward where Vajrapāṇi was, and said:

"Blessed One, we too offer this our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhagabate gandharbarājapriye svāhā

Whoever keeps this essence of ours in mind, we will always follow after him. With joyful minds we will grant him permission for all his purposes. We will remain all around him. Even at the time of his death, we will play cymbals and drums, hold a canopy above him, and grant him the recollection of the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should first go into a great wilderness, eat fruit as one's food, and recite this essence two hundred thousand times. Then one should worship with whatever one can afford, burn incense of turuṣka, and recite throughout the night, reciting until some gandharva king or other comes and places a garland of flowers on one's head. Then one will be honored by all among the gandharvas, and even if one enters any of the abodes of the gandharvas, one will never fall from one's state. In short, they will grant whatever one wishes."

Then the kings of the vidyādharas, the vidyādhara king Crest and the others, bowed with palms joined toward where the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was, and said: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā gaganasaṃbhabe gaganagauri utpattike hiri khiri khiri sanasara bahaṃ gami svāhā

Blessed One, this is the essence of all vidyādharas. It is by this that we are called kings of the vidyādharas. It is by this that we are called those who make offerings and render service to all the tathāgatas. In short, by merely wishing, we accomplish every purpose. Blessed One, if anyone who engages in bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra constantly keeps this essence in mind, we will bring about for him accomplishments, might and steadfast strength. If one is to accomplish this essence, one should go to a mountain peak and, following the previous rite, recite it a million times. Then one should worship with whatever one can afford, smear a maṇḍala with cow dung, and perform a fire offering a hundred thousand times with oblations of butter. Then one will succeed. One will go wherever one wishes without obstruction."

Then all the great rākṣasīs, the Toothed One and the others, bowed with palms joined toward where the great bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was, and said: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā krekari kotare pitike svāhā

Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence in mind, whether he is in a great wilderness, in a charnel ground, in water, in fire, in the ocean, or among rākṣasīs, we will protect him. We will bring him peace and well-being. We will also turn away from him every punishment and the like. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should go alone to an empty house or a great charnel ground, riding a donkey, eating only food that has not been begged, holding a knife in one's hand, and wearing a skirt of jackal skin or cat skin, and recite the essence a hundred thousand times. At the end, one should worship with fish and whatever else one can afford, burn incense of cow dung, and recite throughout the night. One should recite until the birds called bheruṇaṭika cry out in the four directions, or until blazing flames come from the donkey's mouth. Then, without fear, one should say, 'Welcome!' and present the guest-water offering. She will say, 'Excellent!' and vanish. Then one will succeed, and she will do whatever one wishes. Riding the donkey, one will go wherever one likes."

Then all the kings of the bhūtas, the bhūta king Heaped and the others, bowed with palms joined toward where the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi was, and said: "Blessed One, for the sake and benefit of the bodhisattvas who engage in bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hisi hisi misi misi gili gili bhūteśvari svāhā

Blessed One, whoever constantly keeps this essence in mind, we will do as he commands. In particular, if he offers us the first portion of his food, we will accomplish all his aims. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should make a torma for all the bhūtas at the foot of a pati tree. One should burn sandalwood incense and, without eating any food, recite until all the bhūta kings arrive and give one gold, jewels, pearls and the like. Or else they will lead one to their own home and entertain one with every kind of thing. They will grant whatever one wishes. They will also perform various other kinds of actions."

Then all the piśācas, Gopāla and the others, bowed to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and said: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvatha mici mici khisi khisi svāhā

Blessed One, whoever keeps this essence in mind, we will always follow after him. We will grant him permission for all his purposes. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should recite this essence three hundred thousand times in an empty house. At the end, one should worship with whatever one can afford and perform a fire offering ten thousand times with oblations of grit or oblations of lac. Then some piśāca or other will come and entertain one with fine things. One should ask for whatever one wishes, and one will succeed. He will do whatever one wishes."

Then all the oppressor spirits, the oppressor Shaker and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā guru guru svāhā Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence constantly in mind, no fear of bhūtas at all will arise for them."

Then the shadow-oppressors, the Sprawler and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala. namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ginija miñji svahā Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence constantly in mind, no fear of shadow-oppressors at all will arise for them."

Then all the luster-stealers, Timiṅgila and the others, bowed to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and said: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala. namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā gili gili svāhā Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence in mind, we will not steal their luster."

Then all the hosts of hungry ghosts, Durmukha and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala. namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhimiri bhimiri durlabhe svāhā Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence in mind, we will do everything they need, just as they command."

Then all the young gods of Māra's class, Fine Victor and the others, said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer in this great maṇḍala the essence called All the Power of Māra. namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā taṃgira svāhā Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence constantly in mind, we will protect them and not come before them.

"If one wishes to accomplish it, one should first of all make oneself clean and put on clean clothes. Then, in a pleasure garden or at a shrine of the Great God (Śiva), with people singing, dancing and sounding the music of instruments, one should recite this essence four hundred thousand times with a joyful mind. Then, in that very place, one should make lavish offerings with every kind of requisite, fashion an image of Kāmadeva, the god of desire, out of every kind of incense, and set out a hundred butter lamps. If one then recites all night long to the six-toned song or to the melody of the hundred-feathered one, at midnight he will come together with Rati and Prīti. At that time he grants the supreme gift: the state of a vidyādhara, or becoming invisible, or else having him follow one as a companion. If one does not succeed, he grants eight excellent villages. One will possess the highest good fortune and will roam the earth like a second Kāmadeva."

Then the four great sisters, Jayā and the others, came from the four directions and sat down, and they said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Blessed One, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala."

Then Jayā spoke her own essence: "namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā caye cayodbhave svāhā Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence of mine in mind, I will always follow after them. I will protect them. I will increase their glory. I will give them many sons. I will grant them good fortune. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should recite this essence a hundred thousand times, whether standing in a river that flows into the ocean or staying on a mountain peak. At the end, alone, in a clean and secluded place, one should smear a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground and light a lamp of butter from a tawny cow. If at midnight one performs a fire offering with white mustard seed, one will then succeed. One will become dear to the hearts of all people, will go wherever one wishes, will take on whatever form one desires, and will be endowed with glory."

Then Vijayā spoke her own essence: "namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jayottare jaya vijaya ninandani svāhā Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence of mine in mind, I will always follow after them. I will grant them long life and perfect freedom from illness. I will protect them. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should again, as before, recite it two hundred thousand times. At the end, one should carry out the accomplishment as before. Even if one does not succeed, one will become dear to the hearts of all people, will possess great wealth, and will be quick in reply."

Then Ajitā spoke her own essence: "namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā anta ajite svāhā Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence of mine constantly in mind, I will always follow after them in order to fulfill all their wishes. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should recite this essence three hundred thousand times as before. At the end, one should make offerings with whatever one can afford, burn guggulu incense all night long, and at midnight perform a fire offering with black sesame. Then one will succeed, and she will do whatever one wishes."

Then Aparājitā spoke her own essence: "namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā annarjave akutile aparājite svahā Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence of mine in mind, I will always follow after them in order to protect them. If one recites this essence, one will become dear to the hearts of all people; one's words will be heeded and one will have good fortune. If one wishes to accomplish it, one should recite this essence four hundred thousand times as before. At the end, one should make offerings with whatever one can afford and perform a fire offering a hundred thousand times with nāgakeśara flowers mixed with ghee. Then one will succeed: one will accomplish rites by mere words, and it will not turn out otherwise."

Then Tumburu bowed to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and said: "Blessed One, for the sake of the bodhisattvas who engage in the bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra, we too offer our own essence in this great maṇḍala.

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā oṃ he jaṃbe oṃ he mohe svāhā Blessed One, this essence of mine is the Four-Faced One, arisen from the four directions, abiding among creatures, bringing forth prosperity and gathering it in.

Grain, purity and auspiciousness,
Glory and abundant wealth increase;
It is endowed with many wonders;
This is the supreme elixir of rejuvenation.

Blessed One, if anyone keeps this essence in mind at all times, I and my retinue will follow after them. If one wishes to accomplish it, whether standing, sitting, lying down or walking on the road, one should bind the Person just as it has been set out on oneself. Having laid out the Four-Faced One, one should bind the mudrā. One should do this from the first day of the month until the full moon. Then, having made offerings with whatever one can afford, one should make from śāli-rice flour an eight-petaled lotus together with its pericarp, and set out the essence syllables oṃ and ja in the east. One should set out bā in the west. One should place mā in the north. Having placed hā in the south, the one who seeks accomplishment should sit on a spread of kuśa grass. If in a single night one performs a fire offering of ten thousand oblations of salt, then in the morning the fruit of whatever accomplishment one wishes is granted. When one recites it, one should know the syllables in their proper order."

Then Vajrapāṇi looked at that all-inclusive assembly and gave his approval, saying "Excellent!": "Friends, that you have thus spoken and offered your own essences in this great maṇḍala, and have rejoiced, is excellent, friends, excellent! These essences are drawn forth by the supreme essence. Therefore, since they are held by the supreme essence, they will bestow accomplishments. If anyone transgresses this teaching, the supreme essence, Vajra Blazing, spreading everywhere and blazing, will shatter his head; it will not be otherwise."

Then that entire assembly spoke with one voice: "May it be just as the great bodhisattva has declared!"

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī entered the samādhi called Arising from the Radiating Light Rays of Great Vajra Wisdom. With his hand he took the vajra from Vajrapāṇi, brought forth a stainless utpala lotus arisen from wisdom, and placed the vajra upon that utpala arisen from great wisdom. The very moment he placed that great vajra there, throughout all the boundless world systems and in all the maṇḍalas of the buddhas' assemblies, the sound "Oh! This youthful Mañjuśrī is Vajra of Sacred Giving!" resounded from one to the next with a roar. At that time, from the heart of the youthful Mañjuśrī there emerged the supremely secret essence: namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā mañjuvajra jaya rati tapilasa hūṃ kṛdana kumāra svāhā

The very moment the supreme vajra essence called hūṃ emerged, the buddhas, the blessed ones dwelling in the world systems of the ten directions, while remaining where they were, stretched out their right hands, stroked the head of the youthful Mañjuśrī, and declared:

"Great vajra, excellent, excellent!
Mighty one, Vajra of Sacred Giving,
In the Vajrapāṇi Empowerment
Explain within this teaching
The extensive accomplishment of siddhis."

Having spoken thus, those buddhas of great miraculous power,
While still remaining where they were,
Drew their hands back again
From the crown of the youthful Mañjuśrī's head.

Then, with the permission of those tathāgatas, the youthful Mañjuśrī at that time set out the stages of accomplishing siddhis: "First of all, in front of a stūpa containing relics, or an image, or a volume of the sacred Dharma, one should recite any essence whatsoever at length, please the master, and make this request: 'Master, in order to attain the wisdom of omniscience, please grant me the secret mantra.' Having made this request of the master, one should join one's palms, set one's kneecaps on the ground, and, with hands that are not empty, receive whatever mantra one wishes, saying the words: 'Until I abide at the seat of awakening.' If one takes a mantra by oneself in any other way, it will not succeed.

"Next, this is the general accomplishment of siddhis for these essences spoken by the Buddha. One should stay on a mountain, in a forest, in an empty house, in a cave, in a charnel ground, by a river, or in any secluded place whatsoever. Whether eating alms food or food that has not been begged, one should keep oneself clean and wear clean clothes, bathe at the three times of day, change one's clothes three times, and recite any one essence three hundred thousand times. Then, whether one has washed the substance with realgar, collyrium, bezoar or the five products of the cow, or has placed it on a heap of cow dung, one should leave it there from the first day of the waxing moon until the full moon. Making one's own deity and one's own form inseparable, one should recite until signs appear. The signs are these: one will hear teachings never heard before, see light, hear pleasing sounds, feel as though experiencing the perfection of the tathāgatas, gain confidence in oneself, and other such signs will appear.

"Then at the full moon, having made offerings with whatever one can afford, one should place the substance in the palm of one's hand and recite all night long. At midnight or at daybreak the substance will blaze, give off smoke, or grow warm. If it blazes and one anoints one's body with it, one will become a vidyādhara, with the color of the rising sun, living for an eon, moving without obstruction, roaming all the other world systems, and going wherever one wishes. If it gives off smoke and one marks oneself with three lines, one will become invisible. If it grows warm, one will gain power over all beings. If one does not succeed, one will become capable in every task and will obtain the office of a great minister."

"For one month one should practice recollection of the Buddha, make offerings before the Blessed One with whatever one can afford while using any essence whatsoever, and, gazing at an image of the Buddha, recite all night long. Then that image will be accomplished. Likewise, if one practices the accomplishment before any bodhisattva whatsoever, it will succeed in the same way and will do whatever one wishes. Even if one has not done the preliminary practice, one will succeed without doubt.

"In this regard, in the central country the cakravartin, the Blessed One, Great Rudra, is accomplished. In the southern region the fierce Vajrapāṇi is accomplished. In the land of the Soaring Ones the king of vidyā-mantras, the Soaring One, is accomplished. In the northern region the bodhisattva Padmapāṇi is accomplished. In the eastern land Vajra of Sacred Giving is accomplished. In great pleasure groves the hosts of yakṣas and the yakṣiṇīs are accomplished. In empty houses the piśācas and piśācīs are accomplished. In charnel grounds the mātṛkās, the ḍākinīs, the rākṣasas, the rākṣasīs and the like are accomplished. On mountains the vidyādharas and the kinnaras are accomplished. In great wildernesses the gandharvas are accomplished. In rivers the nāgas are accomplished. In great halls and at the foot of banyan trees the bhūtas are accomplished. In the northern region the great yakṣas and Kubera are accomplished. In the great ocean the four sisters are accomplished.

"Furthermore, sons of noble family, in great cities the queen of vidyā-mantras Tārā and Bhṛkuṭī are accomplished. At the confluences of rivers Brahmā is accomplished. In charnel grounds frequented by jackals Rudra is accomplished. In the abode of the Great Person, Viṣṇu is accomplished. In the northern region the Sun is accomplished. On snow mountains the Moon is accomplished. In the southern region Kārttikeya is accomplished. In mountain ravines the asuras are accomplished.

"Sons of noble family, in the great oceans the great mahoragas are accomplished. In the land of Magadha the great sages are accomplished. In deserts the hungry ghosts are accomplished.

"Furthermore, sons of noble family, in mountains jewels are accomplished. In rivers the great rivers are accomplished. In the land of Kaliṅga Īśāna, king of the bhūtas, is accomplished. In pits the oppressors are accomplished. In the spaces between houses the shadow-oppressors are accomplished. At shrines and dwellings the apasmāra grahas, which bring forgetfulness, are accomplished.

"Furthermore, sons of noble family, in the land of Laṅkā and on Mount Malaya, Yama together with his retinue is accomplished. Furthermore, the great rākṣasas are accomplished in the land of Laṅkā and on Mount Malaya. Furthermore, all the lords of the garuḍas are accomplished in the great ocean. Among the snows the young gods of the summer clouds are accomplished. Furthermore, on the summit of the eight-peaked mountain the seven winds are accomplished.

"Sons of noble family, in this way, because the intentions of sentient beings differ, the tathāgatas, the arhats, the perfectly awakened buddhas take account of place, and according to time they designate and establish the accomplishment of secret mantra."

Then the bodhisattva mahāsattva Śāntimati said to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, of what is this word 'time' a synonym?"

When he had said this, Mañjuśrī said to the bodhisattva mahāsattva Śāntimati: "Son of noble family, this word 'time' is a synonym for the appearance of a buddha. Why is that? It should be understood that for as long as a tathāgata, an arhat, a perfectly awakened buddha remains and lives, for so long does secret mantra succeed.

"Śāntimati, it is like this: in the great ocean there is a great precious jewel called Essence of the Array of All Beings. As long as that great king of great precious jewels remains in the great ocean, the water does not dry up, and many great precious jewels come forth. That great ocean, in turn, becomes the livelihood of the humans and nonhumans who live on dry land and in the water. Some it sustains by drink, some by dwelling places, some by everything from filling them with jewels to every other kind of thing, and it never fails to sustain them. If that great king of great precious jewels were gone, then because there would be no water and nothing at all, the great ocean would not be the livelihood of any living creatures.

"In the same way, Śāntimati, as long as the Tathāgata remains, secret mantra succeeds, for the Tathāgata bestows accomplishments taking into account the different intentions of all beings. When the Tathāgata has passed into complete nirvāṇa, that accomplishment no longer sustains them.

"Look, Śāntimati: as long as there is wood, so long does fire blaze; when there is no wood, fire does not blaze. In the same way, Śāntimati, it should be understood that as long as the Tathāgata remains, so long does secret mantra succeed. Śāntimati, this is what time is.

"Furthermore, Śāntimati, the bodhisattva who engages in the bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra should strive always and without interruption for the appearance of buddhas. Śāntimati, in this regard, the bodhisattva who engages in the bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra should become skilled in the preliminary practice of secret mantra.

"Son of noble family, what is the practice of secret mantra? It is this: with a mind that never grows weary, with enthusiasm, and steadfast in one's commitment, one should practice the foundations of secret mantra one by one. Whether walking, sitting or lying down, one engages with a mind that is single-pointed alone, never divided in two. Alone, without a companion, in a secluded and delightful place free of bustle, staying in one's own region, one should first perform the approach.

"Then one should do this from the first day of the month until the full moon. Next, one should take any one of these: a sword, a wheel, collyrium, bezoar, or the like. One should smear a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground mixed with cow urine, and draw the maṇḍala of accomplishment. If one is accomplishing a wheel, one should draw the vajra maṇḍala of the wheel. If one is accomplishing a sword, one should draw a vajra maṇḍala. If one is accomplishing collyrium, bezoar or the like, one should draw a vajra maṇḍala of the trident. One should make offerings with whatever one can afford, from the time the setting sun turns red until sunrise. Having paid homage to all the tathāgatas, with the awakening mind as one's starting point, having performed the protection, one should take up the substance with a mind of loving-kindness. If one recites all night long, at midnight or at daybreak the substance will certainly blaze.

"If it blazes, all the vidyādharas, Citrāṅga and the others, will come. They will empower one according to one's merit, and one will become a king of vidyādharas, going wherever one wishes. One's mind will be intent on making offerings to all the tathāgatas, on roaming many other world systems, and on bringing all sentient beings to maturity.

"Bezoar and the rest should be accomplished in the same way. If it blazes, one will travel through the sky, move about in the world system of the four continents, live and roam for an eon, and go unhindered wherever one wishes; and after death and transmigration one will be born in a pure buddha field. If it gives off smoke, one will become invisible, take whatever form one desires, roam Jambudvīpa at will, and take a sixth share of wealth; and after death and transmigration one will be born among the gods of Tuṣita. If it grows warm, one will gain power over all beings, retain whatever one hears, and know all the arts; and after death and transmigration one will be born in this very Jambudvīpa, in Alakāvatī, the palace of the yakṣas, obtaining the body of a young yakṣa. Even if one does not succeed, one will certainly obtain a domain."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī spoke again to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Son of noble family, listen to the accomplishment of the Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin, the lord of secret mantra, who is higher and higher above all secret mantras, mundane and supramundane, and whose power and might in overcoming others are immeasurable.

"Śāntimati, first of all, one who has done the preliminary practice, who has seen the maṇḍala, obtained the samaya, received permission, and been empowered in the maṇḍala of the Great Vajra Cakravartin, should draw the maṇḍala of the Blessed One and be empowered on the crown of the head with sixteen spouted vases filled with jewels, incense and every kind of medicine, over which the mantra of the Great Cakravartin has been recited one hundred and eight times. At all times one should behold the form of the deity.

"Then one should go to a mountain peak, eat alms food, bathe at the three times of day, change one's clothes at the three times of day, and stay silent like a tree. Maintaining perfect purity and pure conduct, one should recite the Blessed One, the great king Cakravartin, a hundred thousand million times. Then one should recite the essence of Fierce Vajra four hundred thousand times.

"Then one should have a goldsmith who is keeping the poṣadha vows forge a golden wheel with eight or six spokes, with a hub of sunstone jewel, and encircled by blazing rays of light. Then, having washed it with scented water, one should generate its splendor with the mantra of the Vajra of Supreme Giving. Then one should rouse it with the essence of Fierce Vajra. Having roused it, with the mantra of the Cakravartin one should place it inside a sandalwood casket set in the center of the maṇḍala.

"Then one should make a stūpa of the Sugata a span in height as its seat. Then, from the first day of the month until the full moon, one should do this, burning aguru incense. Reciting countless times and eating food that has not been begged, one should make offerings with whatever one can afford, smear a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground, and draw the maṇḍala of the Cakravartin in the center of a vajra maṇḍala. Taking in one's hand the wheel that lies there, one should recite all night long until rays of light come forth from the wheel.

"Those rays illuminate the practitioner, and his body is transformed. At midnight or at daybreak the earth will quake. The sound of divine music will arise. A rain of flowers mixed with divine scented water will fall from the sky. All the vidyādharas, mundane and supramundane, will gather and empower him, and a great celestial palace of divine jewels will appear. Together with those whom he sees and those who see him, he rises up into the sky.

"He is endowed with a splendor surpassing a thousand suns and possesses the swiftness of thought. Making offerings to all the tathāgatas and endowed with the fortune of a great cakravartin, he becomes a vidyādhara higher and higher above all the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, great mahoragas, śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, with an entourage of many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of divine maidens. Praised by those who make sweet and pleasing sounds with divine cymbals and clapping, he mounts that wheel and travels in order to attain the unsurpassed activity of making great offerings to the tathāgatas. In the maṇḍalas of the assemblies of all the buddhas, for the sake of making offerings, in every single instant and at all times, he offers all flowers, all incense, all garlands, all fumigants, all cloth, all garments, all powders, horses, elephants, chariots, all celestial palaces, all pleasing sounds of music, all foods both hard and soft, all food and drink, all divine maidens, divine wish-fulfilling trees, divine medicinal trees, all garlands of gold, jewels and pearls, and divine multistoried pavilions. Among the hungry ghosts he emanates clouds of food, clothing and ornaments. He goes wherever he wishes. He has attained the immeasurable ground of the Victor's children, the ground of conduct through aspiration. He is possessed of great renown. Apart from the tathāgatas, the arhats, the perfectly awakened buddhas, and the bodhisattva mahāsattvas who have attained the generation of the powers, there is no one at all who equals or surpasses him in splendor, power, wisdom, array, miraculous power, magical display, form, glory or eloquence."

Śāntimati said: "Mañjuśrī, how wondrous is the way this Great Cakravartin, through his array, his accomplished miraculous power, his meditative concentration, and his inexhaustible intention, fulfills every hope! How wondrous the degree to which this Blessed One, the great cakravartin of secret mantra, is the equal of the unequaled! Mañjuśrī, those who constantly recollect the one of great miraculous power will themselves come to possess immeasurable masses of good qualities."

When he had said this, the youthful Mañjuśrī said to the bodhisattva mahāsattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, so it is. So it is; it is just as you have said. The Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin, possesses immeasurable masses of good qualities.

"Śāntimati, it is like this: this great earth sustains all sentient beings, yet this vast great earth does not conceive and does not discriminate. In the same way, the Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin, does not conceive and does not discriminate. Why is that? Because the great earth is free of discrimination.

"Śāntimati, it is like this: this great earth gives rise to all crops and fulfills all the hopes of all sentient beings. In the same way, Śāntimati, the Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin, through hearing, reflection, meditative concentration, recitation and accomplishment, fulfills in every way all the intentions of those who engage in the bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra.

"Śāntimati, those who, speaking truly, have said, 'The Tathāgata is inconceivable, the nāgas are inconceivable, meditative concentration is inconceivable, Māra is inconceivable, karma is inconceivable,' are, speaking truly, speaking of this very Great Cakravartin. Why is that? Because all these inconceivables arise from him.

"Śāntimati, whatever mundane or supramundane meditative concentrations there are, the accomplishment of meditative concentration, Māra, the lord of the desire realm, the nāgas, and the buddhas, the blessed ones endowed with inconceivable qualities, are all blessed by this very Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin. He also displays various miraculous transformations. Śāntimati, by this explanation too you should understand how this Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin, is the master, the chief and the sovereign of all secret mantras, and that there is no supreme state other than this.

"Just as with the wheel, one should accomplish the sword, the trident, the raised trident, the javelin, the hook, the axe, the single-pointed lance, the plowshare, the noose, the kaṇaya dart, the iron arrow, the iron chain, the bow, the club, the spear, the pestle narrow at the waist, and staffs of various kinds. One should also accomplish various substances such as collyrium, bezoar and realgar, and their accomplishments too are likewise threefold.

"If one wishes to accomplish pills, one should recite the mantra of the Blessed One, the king Cakravartin, three hundred thousand times. Then one should mix together equal parts of realgar, collyrium, adamagupta root and andhapuṣpikā root, make pills the size of a juniper berry, and encase them in the three metals. Holding a wheel or a sword in one's hand, before a stūpa containing relics or an image, without eating, one should put a pill in one's mouth. From the time the red of the evening sky has faded, one should recite until blue or yellow-tinged rays of light come forth from the wheel or the sword. They illuminate the practitioner and he succeeds: he takes on the color of the rising sun, travels like the wind, lives for an eon, becomes invisible, and assumes whatever form he wishes; and after death and transmigration he is born in the abode of the king of the Vaśavartin gods.

Whether it is done with a painted image or without an image, when one practices, he bestows accomplishment.

If one wishes to practice with a painted image, have a beautiful brahmin or kṣatriya girl, complete in all her limbs, who has taken the poṣadha vows, spin cotton that was bought without haggling over the price. On an auspicious lunar day, half-day division, and moment, have a weaver who is complete in all his limbs weave it. Smear a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground, and worship with perfumes, flowers, incense, and so on. The cloth should be free of hair, even, and smooth. The weaver's weaving implements are also to be washed with the five products of the cow and with scented water. Śāntimati, all of them should also have their bodies protected with the heart mantra of Fierce Vajra.

The painter should be one who has taken the poṣadha vows, who is skilled, endowed with faith and compassion, free of avarice, and complete in all his limbs. In a secluded place free of smoke, clean, and strewn with flowers, burning agarwood incense, have him paint with fresh colors not mixed with glue. Śāntimati, or else the practitioner should paint it himself. Raising parasols, victory banners, and flags, one should make offerings with cymbals, many delightful sounds, vast auspicious songs, and recitations of words of good fortune.

Śāntimati, the practitioner, endowed with a mind of loving-kindness, his head-cloth bound and with a rosary for counting mantras hanging from his hand, should sit behind the painter and visualize the form and color of the Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin. Visualizing also the mudrās and the syllables, one should paint the Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin. Paint him seated on a white lotus, golden in color, ablaze with blazing flames, with his hair in a topknot, wearing a lower garment of silk or cotton and an upper robe of silk, absorbed in meditative absorption, his face gently smiling, and endowed with all the major marks.

To his right paint Vajra of Sacred Giving, saffron in color, with five locks of hair, holding in his left hand a blue utpala lotus together with a vajra, adorned with all ornaments, wearing a lower garment of silk or cotton and an upper robe of silk, surrounded by blazing flames, seated on a white lotus, and smiling.

To the left of the Blessed One, the Great Cakravartin, not very far from him, intent on gazing at his face, paint the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, adorned with all ornaments, wearing a crown, the crown swaying, wearing a short garment, kneeling, his palms joined together with a vajra, receiving the command.

Before the image, as before, one should recite a million times. At the end, making offerings with whatever one can afford, holding a sword or a wheel in one's hand, one should perform a fire offering throughout the whole night with sticks of agarwood smeared with curd, honey, and ghee. Then at midnight or at sunrise, rays of light will certainly come forth from the painted image. Illuminated by them, he succeeds, and as before he goes wherever he pleases. By merely seeing that painted image one will be freed from all evil.

By the power of seeing the painting, the deeds of the five acts of immediate retribution and the rest, whatever evil was done before,
all of it will be purified.
That the Cakravartin of great splendor,
the protector, as soon as one wishes to recall him, performs the activity that accomplishes
the aims of all the world, what need is there to say?
If the mantra practitioner, before the painted image, performs a hundred thousand fire offerings of lotuses, Śrī, who grants the supreme accomplishment as one wishes,
will be seen face to face.
The mantra practitioner, wherever he may be,
will see inexhaustible treasures,
and will travel even through the sky;
he obtains what he desires according to his wish.
Bezoar and realgar,
and likewise collyrium:
abstaining from food and having purified himself,
the wise one should recite over them a hundred thousand times.

Even without the preliminary approach practice,
the mantra practitioner will succeed, without doubt.
He becomes invisible in the three worlds,
and cannot be overcome by any person.
He roams throughout all the lands together with their mountains and forests.
He lives for an eon with great splendor,
and is wholly free of old age and death.

Śāntimati, further, this is the practice of the Great Rudra Vajrapāṇi. Staying in one's own country, having purified oneself and made one's mind endowed with the awakening mind, one should go to a mountain peak. Eating alms food, changing one's clothes three times, bathing at the three times of day, restrained by the bodhisattva vow, respectful and wearing attire suited to that, one should recite a million times in silence.

After that, take a sword, a wheel, a club, a noose, an axe, a pestle, a hammer, or a short spear. Wash it with the five products of the cow and also with scented water, and, holding it in one's hand together with its sheath, whether standing, sitting, or walking, one should recite for one month. Even when lying down, one should be protected by the Great Cakravartin.

Then in the following month, from the first day until the full moon, one should give away all one's possessions. Then on the day of the full moon, making offerings with whatever one can afford, smear a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground. On that same mountain peak, before a stūpa containing relics, set up an image of the Sugata a span in height, make offerings, and to one side draw the maṇḍala of accomplishment. In its east place the king of vidyādharas Citrāṅga. In the south place the king of vidyādharas Viśvasena. In the west place the king of vidyādharas Crest-Bearer. In the north place the king of vidyādharas Kīlikila. In the four corners place three-pronged vajras of four colors, with blazing flames. In the center draw an eight-petaled lotus with its anthers, and on its center draw whatever is being accomplished. On top of that, place whatever substance is to be accomplished upon a leaf of the aśvattha tree. Leaving a space of about a cubit from the lotus, draw a crossed vajra, sit on it, protect oneself, and recite until it blazes. Having blazed, it will move. Or else it will resound with the sound of a great drum. Or else a rain of flowers will fall. Śāntimati, or else the practitioner will be illuminated by a great light.

Or else the flower garland will move. If one then offers guest water and takes up the substance, one will succeed. One will have the color of the rising sun, be as swift as thought, roam through many other realms, make offerings, be skilled in worshiping and serving all the tathāgatas, attain the station of all the lords, and go wherever one wishes. If one constantly recollects him, no fear of nonhumans will arise. One will know one's own death. Vajrapāṇi will show himself. And after death and transmigration, one will obtain the body of a youth in the house of Vajrapāṇi in Alakāvatī.

If every day one drinks water over which this heart mantra has been recited one hundred and eight times, all illnesses will disappear. If one enchants bezoar once and applies it to the eyes, whoever one looks at will come under one's power. If one enchants a tooth stick once with the mantra and cleans one's teeth with it, one will obtain the food one desires. Whatever the color of the flower one throws into water, one will obtain clothing of that color. If one enchants one's mouth with the mantra, whoever one speaks with will come under one's power. Binding the hook mudrā and saying hūṃ, one removes poison. If one threatens with a wrathful finger, they will be cowed. For someone seized by a graha, binding the vajra mudrā, threatening with hūṃ, and merely making it blaze with raṃ, the graha flees, without doubt. For someone seized by a graha, if one visualizes the syllable hā on the palm of one's hand and strokes him, he will recover. If one enchants flowers, perfume, or incense with the mantra, whoever one gives them to will come under one's power. All fierce grahas, too, will flee by this very rite.

If a mantra practitioner with a tamed mind, eating alms food and having made protection, recites three hundred thousand times at a lake of the nāgas, the nāga will appear and grant whatever is asked. If one enchants a blue thread with the mantra and ties it around the neck of someone struck by fever, he will at once be freed from the fever. For diseased eyes, take a shoot of the karavīra tree, enchant it once with the mantra, rub it in a copper vessel, and apply it to the eyes; they will at once be cured. For all diseases of the head, enchant guggulu with the mantra, cover the whole body with it and hold it to the head; the disease of the head will disappear. If food is not digested, drinking seven handfuls of water enchanted with the mantra will cure it. For a pain in the belly, enchant a red thread together with the root of the tnasuci plant and tie it around the waist; the disease of the belly will be cured.

Śāntimati, I shall declare this king of incenses, which pacifies all illnesses and dispels all grahas.

Śāntimati said, "Mañjuśrī, on what grounds are these taught to be accomplished? Or are they not accomplished?"

Mañjuśrī said, "Śāntimati, this king of vidyās is always accomplished. Śāntimati, unless one is separated from the awakening mind, there is no need for prior practice and no need for prior approach. So that bodhisattvas may dwell happily in this very life, I have taught these practices, declared especially for bodhisattvas who are diligent in the yoga of their own deity and who practice the bodhisattva conduct by way of the gateway of secret mantra.

"Incense made of the root of the white arka tree, the root of white girikarṇikā, the root of white karavīra, uśīra, bālaka, sandalwood, black pepper, nirguṇḍī, and guggulu, mixed with ghee, destroys all grahas. It thoroughly pacifies all illnesses. It makes one glorious, long-lived, and fortunate.

"Śāntimati, long ago, in the past, within the teaching of the perfectly complete Buddha Vipaśyin, there was a brahmin called Matimān, learned in the Vedas and the meaning of the Vedas, with full knowledge of all crafts and arts, and skilled in the meaning of secret mantra. On the peak of a certain mountain he undertook diligent effort and practiced this king of vidyās, Great Fierce Vajra, again and again. As he practiced, he was harassed by vicious obstructors and vināyakas, so he went to where the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha Vipaśyin was. Having arrived, he bowed his head at the Blessed One's feet and sat down to one side. Seated to one side, the brahmin Matimān bowed with joined palms toward the Blessed One, related his situation, and said, 'Blessed One, here on the summit of a mountain called such-and-such, I undertook diligent effort and practiced the king of vidyās, Fierce Vajra, again and again. Yet, Blessed One, I have not found, obtained, or perceived its accomplishment, and whenever I practice even a little with substances, all of it is stolen by the obstructors. How, then, should I practice?'

"When he had said this, the Blessed One, the perfectly complete Buddha Vipaśyin, taught the brahmin Matimān this incense and also spoke these words of secret mantra: syādyathedaṃ ruru lele buddhamataṃgi pukkasi śabarika gṛhṇa khādaya svāhā.

"Śāntimati, if you suspect or doubt that the brahmin called Matimān, who at that time practiced this king of vidyās, was someone else, you should not regard it so. Why is that? Śāntimati, it is the one called Vajradhara Abiding

Without Elaboration, who has gathered right here in the courtyard of this maṇḍala of the assembly. Skilled in the vast, boundless, endless expanse of elaboration, he has now once again found this secret mantra and incense and practiced them.

"If one wishes to practice with a painted image, then, as before, a painter who has taken the poṣadha vows should, with colors not mixed with glue, paint Vajrapāṇi on cloth, dark blue like the color of an utpala petal, or dark blue like the color of priyaṅgu, or dark blue like the color of emerald. He is turned to the side, half of him visible, adorned with all ornaments, his face slightly wrathful, wearing a short garment, seated properly and auspiciously in a jewel cave on a jewel rock in a half cross-legged posture, swaggering and haughty, with a garland of blazing flames, brandishing a blazing vajra in his right hand."

Above him, to the right of his head and not very far from it, paint the Tathāgata Glory of Fragrant Light, seated cross-legged on a white lotus, endowed with all the major marks, giving encouragement to the king of vidyās. On the left, paint the Tathāgata Utterly Crushing with the Firm Vajra, giving encouragement as before. Below Vajrapāṇi, on the right, paint an attendant wearing a soiled garment the color of chaff smoke, his tawny hair standing on end, his eyes red, his forehead furrowed with rows of wrathful frowns, holding a noose and a sword in his hands, eager to receive commands, kneeling on both knees. On the left, paint a female attendant, kneeling, dark blue in color, holding in her hands a single-edged sword with a hilt and a noose, as before.

In a secluded place free of smoke, before the image, eating the three white foods and changing one's clothes at the three times of day, one should recite three hundred thousand times. At the end, making offerings with whatever one can afford, if one performs a fire offering throughout the whole night with sticks of agarwood smeared with curd and honey, then at midnight or at sunrise rays of light will come forth from the painted image. Or else the painted image will move. Or else the flower garland will move. One will succeed as before, and will also perform all rites. If one always recites one hundred and eight times before the painted image, one will possess the very best of good fortune, be freed from all illnesses, and be rid of all fears.

Śāntimati, furthermore, this is the practice of the great heart mantra of the Terrifying Fire, of immeasurable power and might in overcoming adversaries, worshiped by gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, great mahoragas, gods, and asuras, and blessed by all the tathāgatas. There is no need to choose the lunar day or the constellation, nor any need to fast. Go to a mountain peak and recite three hundred thousand times. At the end, making offerings with whatever one can afford, if one performs a fire offering three hundred thousand times with oblations of mustard seed mixed with poison, blood, and salt, then in the night a great sound of hūṃ will resound, and one will succeed as before. Once one has succeeded, one roams through many world systems, is as swift as thought, and has unequaled splendor; apart from the buddhas and bodhisattvas, there is no one who surpasses him. If one recites constantly, one becomes invincible to all bhūtas.

If one goes to the entrance of an asura cavern and, in a wrathful state, recites ten thousand times and also performs the fire offering as before, all the abodes of the asuras will be utterly overthrown. One may then enjoy them as one wishes, and whatever one desires will appear of itself. One performs all rites.

If one wishes a great treasure to emerge, one should recite this heart mantra ten thousand times without eating, and at the end strike the spot three times with a shoot of the karavīra tree; the treasure will emerge of itself. If one constantly recollects him, one will delight all people. If, before someone who is angry, one binds the mudrā and recites twenty-one times, he will become calm. All children seized by grahas will be freed merely by seeing it. For all great grahas, make an effigy, press it down with the left foot, and recite one hundred and eight times; that graha will burn, cry out, and flee. Asked a question, it will speak at once.

If one wishes to harm another, take sticks of bibhītaka wood six fingers long, pronounce the person's name over each one, and enchant them one hundred and eight times with the mantra. If at midnight one plants them on the roof or inside the doorway, great harm will befall that household. A great epidemic will also break out. By intention, one pacifies it again.

If one practices with a painted image, then on cloth paint the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, his radiance the color of a summer cloud, without ornaments, his eyes red, wrathful, biting his lower lip with his teeth, his forehead knit with rows of wrathful frowns, standing with his left foot pressing down the ground, as though stamping with his right foot, as though threatening with the forefinger of his left hand, and with his right hand as though hurling the terrible wrathful vajra. One who has made protection, who has transformed himself into the form of Vajroṣṇīṣa, who is always in meditative equipoise, possessed of compassion, and whose mind is endowed with the awakening mind, should make extensive offerings in a secluded place free of smoke and have a painter who has taken the poṣadha vows paint it. One should have it painted by someone who has been empowered in the great vajra maṇḍala, has obtained the samaya, and is full of enthusiasm, and by no one else. Śāntimati, if anyone who does not know the samaya and has not seen the maṇḍala sees the painted image, he will at once be struck by two kinds of illness. What are the two? They are a violent fever and a great wasting disease.

Śāntimati said, "Mañjuśrī, oh, how wonderful is this supreme heart mantra, endowed with great meaning and endowed with great power, by which such distinctive qualities are revealed! Mañjuśrī, this supreme heart mantra, what is it? What is its name?"

Mañjuśrī said, "Śāntimati, there is no end to the qualities and power of the firm heart of all the tathāgatas. Śāntimati, this Vajrapāṇi is called the Vajra Arisen from the Terrifying Fire of All the Tathāgatas. He tames all who are untamed. He fulfills the aspirations of all the tathāgatas and all the bodhisattvas. He has made the aspiration to protect the supreme teaching everywhere. He fulfills the wishes of all beings, whatever they may be. He enters the gateway of proclaiming the aspirations of all the tathāgatas throughout the boundless oceans of world systems. He runs ahead in all things.

"Before the image, making offerings with whatever one can afford, if one performs a fire offering of one hundred thousand pills of guggulu, each the size of a juniper berry, one will succeed and will do whatever one wishes. Go to a mountain peak or to the shore of the ocean, paint the image, and, eating alms food or food that was not begged for, enter the water up to the throat and recite three hundred thousand times."

At the end, making offerings with whatever one can afford and holding a sword or a wheel in one's hand, if one performs a fire offering thirty thousand times with poison, blood, and white mustard seed mixed together, one will succeed. A sound will come forth from the ocean, and it will dry up. Mountains, too, will shake or crumble. One will become able to perform all rites. Even a hailstorm or a lightning strike will vanish merely by threatening it once.

For all bondage, all contagious diseases, and all harms that arise, paint the image at a crossroads, at a place with a single tree, on the bank of a river, at a place with a single landmark, or at a three-way junction in a town. Make extensive offerings, and fill with white mustard seed a vase that has been worshiped with incense and flowers. Recite the mantra of the Cakravartin, place the heart mantra at one's heart, and gladden the painted image directly by uttering vast, auspicious, and pleasing words; then one should perform the empowerment. Those mustard seeds dispel all harms, all contagious diseases, and all forms of death. If all the beings dwelling within a league see that painted image, they too will be pacified at once.

The Noble Vajrapāṇi Empowerment, the seventh fascicle.

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī spoke these words to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, listen to the stages of the general practice of these kings of vidyās, set out in order.

"Śāntimati, a practitioner who wishes to practice any king of vidyās whatever should take up the vidyā-mantra as follows. On an auspicious lunar day, half-day division, and moment, having fasted, lighting butter lamps and making offerings with whatever one can afford, one should recite the king of vidyās fearlessly throughout the whole night before a stūpa containing relics or an image. In the morning, having bathed, anointed oneself with fragrant scents, put on clean clothes, and eaten the three white foods, with clear faculties, remaining in an ordinary frame of mind, with a mind endowed with the awakening mind, one should join one's palms, kneel, and make a request to the compassionate master, the unsurpassed object of offering, saying: 'Master, in order to attain unsurpassed wisdom, please bestow the king of vidyās upon me. I shall practice it until I abide at the seat of awakening.' And the master, compassionate toward all and free of avarice, should give it to that disciple.

"Having thus received the vidyā-mantra and the samaya, in places such as those described, one should change into attire suited to the practice. On a mountain peak, on the bank of a river, in a forest, at the edge of a spring, or in any pleasant and secluded place, eating the three white foods or drinking milk, if one recites a million times, the preliminary practice will have been done.

"Then take a sword, a vajra, a short spear, a club, a trident, or a wheel made of the three metals. Smear it with the five products of the cow, place it on a heap of cow dung, and protect it with the heart mantra of Great Fierce Vajra. Then one should recite from the first day of the month until the full moon. Then take whichever implement it is and wash it with scented water. Smear a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground, draw the maṇḍala as before, make offerings with whatever one can afford, place the implement on a leaf of the aśvattha tree, and recite throughout the whole night. Then at midnight or at sunrise it will certainly blaze, and all the vidyādharas will gather and empower one in accordance with one's merit. One becomes a vidyādhara, assumes whatever form one wishes, roams through many world systems, and makes offerings to all the tathāgatas. If one does not succeed, then as long as one's discipline has not lapsed, by practicing in the same way three times one will certainly succeed, even if one has committed the five acts of immediate retribution.

"If one recites constantly, one will become long-lived. If one recites over medicine and drinks it, one will be free of illness. If one enchants ghee with the mantra and drinks it just before eating one's meal, one's body will become firm for a full year. If one closes one's eyes before an image of the Blessed One and recites one thousand and eight times, the image of the Tathāgata's body will declare what is virtuous and what is nonvirtuous. Likewise, if one covers one's ears and recites, one will hear everything. If, on going to bed, one lies down after enchanting one's eyes one hundred and eight times, one will see light and see everything. As it is by day, so it is by night. If one enchants a tooth stick once and cleans one's teeth with it, one will obtain food when one begs. If one enchants collyrium and bezoar once with the mantra and applies them to the eyes, all people will be delighted. If one recites over perfume and anoints oneself with it, whoever smells its scent will come under one's power. If one sees an enemy, binding the mudrā and reciting once, one will be parted from the enemy. If one enchants perfume, flowers, and so on once with the mantra, whoever one gives them to will be brought under one's power.

"If one wishes to enter battle, one should perform the binding on a man; if he then enters the battle, he will win the battle. If one wishes to paralyze an army, kindle a fire of vikaṅkata wood and perform a fire offering ten thousand times with fuel sticks of grutsal wood; the army will be paralyzed. For all harms, if one performs a fire offering thirty thousand times with oblations of the three sweet substances, they will be pacified. With ash one cuts off hailstorms. With a stick or with pigment one turns back lightning strikes. With a blue thread one pacifies the influence of bhūta grahas. If one makes an effigy and strikes it with ash or with a shoot of the karavīra tree, the spirit will release its victim. One should do the same for great grahas.

"If a child is seized by a graha, make an effigy from ground śāli rice, mix it with mustard seed and salt, and perform a fire offering in a fire of husks; then at all times, merely at the name, all grahas will flee. For someone struck by fever, enchant one's left hand with the mantra and place it on his head; this dispels the fever. If one wishes to dispel all illnesses, gather all the medicines, kindle a fire of bibhītaka wood, and perform a fire offering with oblations twenty-one times; from then on, one will dispel them all."

If one wishes to practice with a painted image, then on uncut cloth free of hair, as before, have a painter who has taken the poṣadha vows paint the king of vidyās with colors not mixed with glue. He is adorned with all ornaments, wears a swaying crown, sits on a white lotus, and bears the attire of a great king. He is ablaze all around with garlands of blazing flames. He holds a vajra in his left hand, and his right hand makes the gesture of supreme giving. He is seated cross-legged, his face gently smiling, gazing at the practitioner. Below him, paint the practitioner holding a censer in his hand, intent on gazing at his face, in attire suited to the practice, kneeling. If one recites a million times before the image, one will succeed as before. This is the general practice of the kings of vidyās.

Śāntimati, furthermore, this is the general practice of the daughters of Vajrapāṇi, who have gained mastery over the great aspiration and who abide in equality with all the tathāgatas. As before, having received any secret mantra whatever by the rite of the Great Cakravartin, go from among the places described to the bank of a river that flows into the ocean and recite a million times; the preliminary practice will then have been done. Then, from the first day of the month, take whatever substance is to be accomplished and recite until the full moon. Then, making offerings with whatever one can afford, smear a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground and make protection. If one performs a fire offering throughout the whole night with fuel sticks of guggulu smeared with curd, honey, and ghee, then at midnight or at sunrise one will certainly succeed, and the substance will blaze. If one takes it, one obtains the body of a vajra youth in the vajra family. One obtains the great dhāraṇī. If one wishes, one may go. Even if one does not succeed, one will become able to perform all rites. And after death and transmigration, one will be born in Alakāvatī or in a house of great wealth.

If one recites constantly, all people will be delighted. If one recites while gazing at Vajrapāṇi, all evil will be purified. If one strokes the whole body and then sleeps, one will see the buddhas, the blessed ones, in a dream, and will obtain the dhāraṇī right there. When the moon is seized by the wolf, take ghee from a yellow cow whose calf has the same color of coat as she does, put it in a copper vessel, make a maṇḍala of sandalwood, and place the vessel on it. Without looking at the moon, recite until the three kinds of accomplishment appear, and if one then drinks it, one will retain whatever one hears. If it blazes, one will travel through the sky. If it smokes, one will become invisible. If it becomes warm, all beings will come under one's power.

If one wishes to practice with a painted image, then according to the former rite have a painter who has generated the mind set on awakening paint any one of the youths on cloth free of hair, with colors not mixed with glue. He is adorned with all ornaments, his head adorned with three locks of hair, seated on a white lotus in the midst of a sword blazing with light, holding a vajra in his left hand, smiling, encouraging the practitioner with his right hand, the color of gold or dark blue like the color of priyaṅgu. If, before the image, one makes great offerings and undertakes the practice, one will succeed as before.

Śāntimati, furthermore, this is the practice of Nalakūbara, son of the lord of the yakṣas, who is dear to Vajrapāṇi. There is no need to choose the lunar day or the constellation, and no need to fast. Holding a club in one's hand, one should enter a great wilderness. Without straying from the path and without speaking, wearing an elephant hide on one's body, changing into attire suited to the practice, and having made protection with the heart mantra of Fierce Vajrapāṇi or with the Great Cakravartin, eating alms food or not eating at all, if one recites three hundred thousand times, Nalakūbara himself will come and offer a boon, and he will grant whatever boon one wishes. If one enters a lake of the nāgas and recites ten thousand times, a nāga will appear and grant whatever one wishes. If one recites a hundred thousand times at the entrance of an asura cavern, an asura maiden herself will appear and lead one inside, and she will grant whatever one wishes, such as the rejuvenating elixir. If one does not wish to go, one may stay right there together with them, will obtain the bliss of all the lords, and will live for an eon. With that very body one will see the perfectly complete Buddha Maitreya and also hear the Dharma. And after death and transmigration, one will be born in a pure buddha field. If one recites constantly, then at the mere sight of one, all rākṣasas, pretas, piśāca grahas, and the like will flee farther than far.

Śāntimati, in short, however one may practice, even if one practices by the detailed rites found elsewhere, one will certainly succeed.

Next is the practice of Trailokyavijaya. At a place with a single liṅga or in a charnel ground, smear one's body with ash, hold a trident or a vajra in one's hand, and eat alms food. Wandering through the country, wandering without a fixed dwelling, being pure, patient, delighting in inner purity, free of avarice, and heedless of body and life, wearing a lower garment of lion skin, one should recite this heart mantra three hundred thousand times. Then the mantra practitioner should go, in order to practice, to a place with a single liṅga, to a charnel ground, or else to a place with a single tree.

On the full moon, as before,
in a pure spot within a house,
one should recite through one whole night.
At midnight or at sunrise,
through that substance one is wholly transformed into a youth,
with light like a garland of blazing flames.
Once accomplished, one ranges through the sky,
great in yoga, one lives for an eon,
one roams throughout all the worlds,
and one makes great offerings.

Śāntimati, in the three worlds there is no one equal to one who has accomplished the secret mantra. Even without having practiced, the rites will succeed. If one binds the mudrā and looks at any graha, the graha will at once let go of its victim. If one looks at someone struck by fever, he will recover from the fever.

For every purpose, whether one performs it by one's own detailed rite or by another's detailed rite, by whichever one, it will certainly succeed.

Furthermore, Śāntimati, this is the practice of the wrathful one Candratilaka, beloved of Vajrapāṇi. On a mountain peak, or in the great ocean, one enters the water until it reaches the throat. One eats food that has not been begged, keeps silent like a tree, and wears a lower garment of tiger skin. Without turning aside from the path, holding in one's hand a wheel, a sword, a trident, or a raised three-pointed spear, one should recite a hundred thousand times for each of the mantra's syllables. At the end, one makes offerings with whatever one can afford. On the full moon, one binds on a head-wrap and performs the protection. If one then recites throughout the night, at midnight or at sunrise one will certainly succeed, and one will travel through the sky. One's splendor will be without equal, and from then on all accomplishments will long abound. Yakṣas, rākṣasas, piśācas and the like will not overpower one.

If someone has been bound by a ḍākinī's seal, draw the image of the seal inside two clay bowls joined mouth to mouth, empower it with the mantra, and show it to the sick person; the seal will be broken.

If someone is seized by the graha of a brahmarākṣasa, draw its image or its name with charcoal from a charnel ground and beat it with a switch of śalātaka wood. Or, if one threatens it with a cord of cow-tail hair together with the syllable hūṃ, at once it will weep with a loud cry and flee. It will tell whatever it is asked. Whatever rite one applies, it will succeed in this way; even if one performs the set of another's detailed rites, it will succeed without doubt. Whether one recites it once, or does not recite it at all, it succeeds by recollection alone.

Furthermore, Śāntimati, this is the practice of Mahābala, who arose from the power of all the tathāgatas, whose strength and power to overcome adversaries are immeasurable, and who is born in the family of Vajrapāṇi. There is no need to choose the date or the constellation. There is no need to fast; one may be impure or not impure, bathed or not bathed. Wearing a garland of human skulls, holding a khaṭvāṅga staff, dwelling in a charnel ground, and with one's body smeared with ashes, in any place whatever one should recite this heart mantra three hundred thousand times. At the end, in that very place, one should smear a maṇḍala with cow dung and perform the protection. Taking any substance whatever, if one recites throughout the night, at midnight or at sunrise it will blaze. Holding it, one becomes a vidyādhara who moves without obstruction, and none of the vidyādharas can overpower his strength. Apart from bodhisattvas dwelling on the ten grounds and accomplished vidyādharas who have attained the conduct, there is no one equal to him. If one constantly recollects it, one becomes powerful. In the face of every graha, every harm and every fear, by recollection alone one pacifies them all.

One who wishes to enter an asura cave should hold a club of śamī wood and recite three hundred thousand times at the entrance of the asura cave. At the end, one makes offerings with whatever one can afford, mixes poison, blood and mustard seeds, and performs a fire offering ten thousand times; then all the abodes of the asuras will blaze like the fire at the end of an eon. If one empowers that club seven times with the mantra and strikes the door with it, all the asura maidens will come forth, and they will lead the practitioner into their own homes. They will give him everything, elixirs of rejuvenation and the rest. He may do whatever he wishes. It succeeds by another's detailed rite as well. This king of wrathful ones is accomplished by its very nature; by recitation alone it accomplishes everything.

Furthermore, Śāntimati, this is the general practice for all the servants (ceṭas). Eating at night, wearing dirty clothes, with one's pride broken, despised, assuming the guise of a madman, and skilled in laughter, dance and cymbals, in an empty house or where there is a single tree, whether walking, standing, sitting, lying down, singing or dancing, one should recite these heart mantras three hundred thousand times. At the end, one should smear a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground, strew flowers, and make offerings with whatever one can afford. Holding a sword of hammered iron shaped like a crow's beak, and a noose of human hair twelve cubits, three cubits, or one cubit long, if one recites throughout the night, at midnight or at sunrise it will certainly blaze. Holding it, one becomes a vidyādhara. One will carry out the command of all the tathāgatas. One will take whatever form one wishes, and one could bind even the three worlds and lead them here, to say nothing of ordinary beings. If one constantly recollects it, the servant will always follow behind one and will do as one commands. After death and transmigration, one will be born among the gods, and one will surely be bent upon awakening.

Furthermore, Śāntimati, this is the general practice for the female servants (ceṭīs) born in the family of Vajrapāṇi. Alone, without a companion, in an empty house, a dwelling, or a solitary cave, undisturbed, one should recite the mantra of any one of the female servants three hundred thousand times. At the end, one makes offerings with whatever one can afford. Holding in one's hand a knife whose handle is like a crow's beak, and a noose, if one recites throughout the night, at midnight or at sunrise one will succeed, and one becomes a vidyādhara who ranges through the great trichiliocosm world system and takes whatever form one wishes.

Make an image out of salt and worship it with perfume, flowers and incense. Place it in a secluded spot, undisturbed, and, alone, throughout the night, striking it on the breast with one's hand while reciting, one will certainly succeed in the same way, and she will grant whatever excellent thing one desires. If one empowers a tooth stick of thorny apāmārga once with the mantra and chews it, one will obtain food without begging. In short, by whatever rite one practices, by that very rite it will succeed. These are accomplished by their very nature; by mere wishing they bring complete fulfillment.

Furthermore, Śāntimati, this is the general practice for all the messengers. Eating alms food and entering a river that flows into the ocean, one should recite three hundred thousand times.

At the end, one makes offerings with whatever one can afford, and likewise, if one performs a fire offering ten thousand times with karavīra flowers dipped in ghee, one will succeed and will do whatever one wishes.

Another practice is this. Make an image from fresh butter and worship it with perfume and flowers. On the full moon, smear a maṇḍala with sandalwood, and, without looking at the moon, recite until it blazes. If one then takes it, one becomes a vidyādhara. If smoke rises from it and one drinks it, one becomes invisible, ranges through the great trichiliocosm world system, and takes whatever form one wishes. If it grows warm and one drinks it, one retains what one hears and obtains the dhāraṇī that retains everything heard. One is freed from all diseases. One becomes supremely fortunate. One takes whatever form one wishes. After death and transmigration, one is born among the gods or in Alakāvatī. Śāntimati, these are accomplished by their very nature; they bring wishes to perfection, and they succeed simply by being recited.

Furthermore, Śāntimati, this is the general practice for the female messengers who work for the benefit of all beings. Make an image from the earth of an anthill or from earth taken from both banks of a river. In a secluded, undisturbed garden, worship it with whatever one can afford and recite the vidyā three hundred thousand times. At the end, on the full moon, make an extensive torma offering, smear collyrium, gorocanā or realgar mixed with perfumed water, place it in the image's hand, and recite until it blazes. If it blazes, one becomes a vidyādhara. If smoke rises, one becomes invisible. If it grows warm, one gains control. One will range through a thousand world systems, with a color like the rising sun; one will move like the wind, work for the benefit of beings, and uphold the true Dharma. Even without having accomplished it, it serves for the rites. If one empowers gorocanā once with the mantra and smears it on one's face, one becomes fortunate. If one empowers collyrium with the mantra and applies it to one's eyes, whoever one looks at comes under one's control. If one empowers one's mouth with the mantra, whoever one speaks with comes under one's control. If one empowers flowers, incense and the like with the mantra, whoever one gives them to comes under one's control. If one sits in a solitary spot on a road, pronounces the name of the one one wishes to bring under control, places one's hand at one's heart and recites the vidyā one hundred and eight times, that person comes under one's control within seven days. If one empowers water with the mantra and washes one's face, one becomes fortunate. If one performs a fire offering of salt oblations one hundred thousand times, one becomes supremely fortunate. If one wants small livestock, one empowers karavīra flowers fumigated with agaru, each one once with the mantra, and casts them for seven days into water that flows into the ocean; one will certainly obtain them. If one empowers goat's milk with the mantra and drinks it, one will likewise obtain them. If one wants a son, one performs a fire offering for seven days with kindling sticks of pine dipped in the ghee of a yellow cow, and one will have a son. Śāntimati, in this way, through this set one performs a thousand rites; it bestows accomplishments and increases prosperity as well. These great vajra female messengers succeed simply by being recited.

Furthermore, Śāntimati, listen to the practice of the servants who arise from the vajra family. Sleeping wherever one happens to be, in a monastery, a hermitage, a village or a town; with one's pride broken no matter who mistreats one; taking on the appearance of a servant; wearing dirty clothes; staying amid a rattling noise; not bathing, and of a grimy color, one should recite any one of the heart mantras three hundred thousand times at the crossroads of a great city or in a woman's house. At the end, in that very place, one smears a maṇḍala with cow dung and makes offerings with whatever one can afford. Taking sandals made of the three metals, or wooden sandals made from wood split by lightning, if one recites throughout the night, at midnight or at sunrise they will certainly blaze and the practice will succeed. Wearing the wooden sandals, one goes wherever one wishes. One takes whatever form one wishes and travels like the wind. Even if it is not accomplished, it serves for the rites, and if one recites constantly, the servant will always follow behind one. If one ties a black thread on someone struck by fever, he will recover from the fever. For every disease and every harm, if one sprinkles white mustard seed or perfumed water, the person will recover. If one performs a fire offering thirty thousand times in front of Vajrapāṇi with black sesame mixed with curd, honey and ghee, even one who commits evil will become able to perform every rite. Why is that? Because these are accomplished by their very nature. Śāntimati, there is nothing at all that the servants will not do. They guard the sacred commitments, they work for the teaching, and when they are practiced they open the doors to accomplishments of many kinds. Whether one performs another's detailed rite or whatever one can manage, it will certainly succeed.

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī also spoke these words to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, there are female servants, together with their secrets, who are the heart essence beloved of Vajrapāṇi, accomplished by their very nature, who fulfill every wish and perform various rites, and by the mere remembrance of whom no fears arise. This is their practice. There is no need to choose the date or the constellation. There is no need to fast. Eating at night, eating food that has not been begged, wearing a guise suited to this, and holding in one's hand a single-edged sword with its hilt, one enters water that flows into the ocean up to the waist and should recite three hundred thousand times. At the end, in that very place, one makes offerings with whatever one can afford, and if throughout the night one performs a fire offering three hundred thousand times with white mustard seed mixed with saffron, at midnight or at sunrise one will certainly succeed. Holding it, one becomes swift as thought; in many boundless world systems one makes great offerings in the maṇḍalas of the assemblies of all the buddhas; one travels without obstruction; one benefits all sentient beings; and one fulfills every wish.

"There is another practice as well. Going to a mountain peak, one should likewise recite three hundred thousand times. At the end, one makes offerings with whatever one can afford, and if one performs a fire offering of milk oblations three hundred thousand times, even one who commits evil will certainly succeed."

Even without a painted image or a statue, it will succeed for one who has generated the mind set on awakening, who has seen the great vajra maṇḍala and been authorized by the guru, who is free of avarice, endowed with faith, devoted to the Three Jewels, full of enthusiasm, steadfast in the pledged deity, always in meditative equipoise, skilled in the meaning of the reality of the secret mantra, and respectful toward the guru. Otherwise, even if the great Śakra (Indra) himself were to practice it, the secret mantra would not grant accomplishment. For one endowed with the qualities just described, it will certainly succeed.

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī spoke these words to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, there is another quality of these male servants, female servants, male attendants, female attendants, male messengers, female messengers and the rest, described as follows: the power to become invisible. Grasp it well and thoroughly, and I shall explain it to you."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva Śāntimati spoke these words to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, this is the time; this is the occasion. Mañjuśrī, if you know that the time for it has come, please speak."

"Śāntimati, for this, one who has done the preliminary practice according to the previous rite and keeps the observance of the vidyā takes any one of spikenard, orpiment or realgar, puts it into a copper amulet box, and seals it so that its scent does not escape. During the waning moon one fasts for three days, and then, at a shrine of the Great God (Śiva), upon the right flank of the Great God's body, one recites throughout the night until smoke rises from it. If one smears one's body with it, one becomes invisible.

"Take ashes from a house where a child has been born and hold them in one's cupped hands. Likewise, during the waning moon, recite upon the right flank of the Great God's body until smoke rises. If one draws the three lines on one's forehead with it, one becomes invisible.

"On the eighth or the fourteenth day of the waning moon, when the constellation Puṣya and the planet Moon coincide, put bibhītaka wood into the fire in which a dead man is being cremated in a charnel ground; let it burn, and quench it with one's own blood. Taking that charcoal, in an empty house, secluded and undisturbed, make a forehead mark with it mixed with cow bile; if one recites throughout the night, one becomes invisible.

"Take collyrium and recite three hundred thousand times according to the previous rite. At the end, make offerings with whatever one can afford, and perform a fire offering one hundred thousand times with the ghee of a yellow cow. Then, on the full moon, recite until it is accomplished; if one anoints one's eyes with it, no one at all will see one's body.

"Again, Śāntimati, take the root of the plant ātmaguptā according to the previous rite and recite three hundred thousand times. During the waning moon, recite throughout the night at a shrine; if one puts it in one's mouth, one becomes invisible.

"With the root of white sweet flag and the root of rgya spos, recite as before until one becomes invisible.

"When the moon is in Puṣya, take a blue utpala and grind it with goat's milk. When the moon is seized by the wolf, put it into a copper vessel or between two aśvattha leaves joined face to face, and recite until the moon is released. If one drinks it, one becomes invisible.

"Furthermore, Śāntimati, grind saffron, turuṣka and lotus stamens with the ghee of a yellow cow whose calf has the same color as she. As before, when the moon is seized by the wolf, recite until the moon is released; if one drinks it, one becomes invisible.

"Śāntimati, grind flowers of the asana tree and flowers of the deva tree with the blood of a black deer. When the moon is seized by the wolf, recite until the moon is released; if one drinks it and also smears it on one's body, one becomes invisible.

"Furthermore, Śāntimati, take black agaru together with the eyes of a black snake and, as before, recite upon the right flank of the Great God's body until smoke rises. If one makes a forehead mark with it, one becomes invisible.

"Furthermore, Śāntimati, take what has been seized by the two-mouthed nāga king and grind it together with black sesame. On the eighth or the fourteenth day of the waning moon, fast for one day and night, and with that sesame oil make lampblack. If one empowers it with the mantra and anoints one's eyes, one becomes invisible.

"Furthermore, Śāntimati, extract the kernel from the stones of the harītakī fruit, grind it together with honey,
and place it between aśvattha leaves.
The wise one, at a confluence of waters,
within a pure hollow,
if he recites throughout a single night,
will succeed at midnight;
of this there is no doubt.
If, with a steady mind, he makes a forehead mark,
his body then becomes invisible.

"Collyrium and spikenard,
bought without haggling over the price,
placed in copper vessels joined face to face:
if one recites the mantra according to the rite,
it will succeed at midnight;

of this there is no doubt.

If one smears it on one's body,
one will travel through the sky.
Having seized a sixth part of the world,
it then becomes an act of merit.

I shall explain the accomplishment of pills;
Śāntimati, listen to it.
Vermilion, and likewise spikenard,
the root of ātmaguptā,
and the tail feathers of the kurya bird:
the wise one mixes them together,
makes pills the size of juniper berries,
takes the pills and presses them firm.
The mantrin, abiding in the way of mantra,
should wrap them in the three metals.

In a charnel ground, before a stūpa containing relics or before a statue, one makes offerings with whatever one can afford and recites throughout the night.

At midnight, or else
at the time of sunrise, that substance is wholly transformed and blazes with garlands of flame.
If the mantrin puts it in his mouth,
he will travel through the sky,
with a color like the rising sun,
taking whatever form he wishes, fearless,
unassailable by any bhūta;
he will live for an eon and have great splendor,
he will work for the teaching and be glorious,
and he will be wholly free of aging and death.

Śāntimati, there is another pill as well.
Taking the heartwood of bakula,
the wise one takes cassia flowers,
collyrium and spikenard,
in equal parts,

wraps them in the three metals,
and, for one night, in a charnel ground,
at a solitary tree, or in caves,
should practice when the summer retreat begins.

Śāntimati, for this, the bodhisattva who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra smears a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground and makes offerings with whatever he can afford. He places a vajra in the center, and on it, upon a leaf of the aśvattha tree, he places the pill. He protects himself and the substance with the heart mantra of Great Fierce Vajra or with Vajroṣṇīṣa. He performs a fire offering a thousand times without interruption with ghee from a reddish-yellow cow mixed with honey, and recites throughout the night. Then, at midnight or at sunrise, the substance is transformed. If he puts it in his mouth, he will have a color like the rising sun, live for an eon, be wholly free of aging and death, range through many other world systems, and work for the benefit of all sentient beings. If he takes it out, he becomes invisible and swift as thought, and after death and transmigration he will be born in the world system Sukhāvatī.

There is another pill as well.
Roots of balā and atibalā, likewise gold and silver,
collyrium and sweet flag,
and likewise azurite flakes:
these are taken in equal parts,
made into a dry powder,
kneaded with rainwater,
and made into three pills.
The mantrin wraps them in copper foil and sets them out as before.
When the moon is seized by the wolf,
he fasts for a single day,
then puts the accomplished pill in his mouth and becomes permanently invisible.

There is another pill as well. Grind flowers of the tilaka tree, the heart of a black cat and the dried heart of a bat; the pill kneaded with rainwater is likewise made as before, and one becomes invisible.

There is another pill as well. Seeds of the panasa tree, seeds of jīvanta, flowers of the agasti tree, coral, brass and flowers of the kāñcana tree, in equal parts, are likewise made as before, and one becomes invisible. Crystal, lhang tsher, seeds of the varuṇa tree and seeds of drisanta, in equal parts, are likewise made as before, and one becomes invisible.

There is another pill as well. The center of a conch shell, agnijāla and realgar, in equal parts, are likewise made as before, and one becomes invisible.

There is another pill as well. Poison, aconite, lāṅgalī and the root of turuṣka, in equal parts, are likewise made as before, and it will succeed.

There is another pill as well. The heartwood of the madhuka tree, the heartwood of the yellow sāl tree and lodestone, in equal parts, are likewise made as before, and one becomes invisible.

Śāntimati, these were taught and blessed by the tathāgatas of the past for the benefit, welfare and happiness of all sentient beings. Śāntimati, when any bodhisattva great being who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra constantly and earnestly strives to accomplish these pills, he may expect two things in this life. What are the two? They are these: all people will be delighted with him, and he will be blessed by all the tathāgatas so that it is his nature never to decline. There are two more: in this life he will surely be bent upon accomplishment, and after death and transmigration he will obtain the body of a youth in the vajra family. And two more, namely: he will be freed from all diseases, and he will be rid of evil.

Furthermore, Śāntimati, the bodhisattva who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra should apply himself to the domain of the body, speech and mind of the tathāgatas, be free of wavering and doubt, hold the right view, be endowed with loving-kindness, be compassionate, and keep a mind endowed with the awakening mind.

Then the bodhisattva great being Śāntimati spoke these words to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, how is the bodhisattva who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra endowed with moral discipline? How does he abide in the observances? How does he practice the conduct? Mañjuśrī, abiding in what will the bodhisattva who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra come to have a nature that never declines, attain accomplishment in the secret mantras, and never fall away from the Great Vehicle?"

When he had said this, the youthful Mañjuśrī spoke these words to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Excellent, Śāntimati, excellent, excellent, and again excellent! Śāntimati, therefore listen well and keep it in mind, and I shall explain it to you."

"Śāntimati, when one who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra makes himself into the form of his own deity, gives rise to that pride with a mind free of doubt, and, whether walking, standing, sitting or lying down, always and at all times remains unmoving even as he moves, then, Śāntimati, the bodhisattva great being who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra is endowed with moral discipline. When he acts in harmony with the manner of what the omen has indicated, adopts its forms and strives in yoga, then he abides in the observance. When, within that observance, he performs the activities of recitation, fire offering and the rest, then he practices the conduct. When he strives in the yoga of being inseparable from that deity's form, fully takes up the bases of training as well, and practices the Great Vehicle, then he attains accomplishment in the secret mantras.

"Furthermore, Śāntimati, the bodhisattva great being who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra should always abide in signlessness. Śāntimati, if one asks how one who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra abides in signlessness: Śāntimati, if he cultivates the awakening mind, he abides in signlessness. Śāntimati, that is where signs do not arise, where they are in every way nonexistent and are not apprehended. Śāntimati, because the mind is not apprehended, the essential nature of the mind's prior limit and later limit cannot be apprehended. Therefore the bodhisattva who practices the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra should strive always and without interruption to purify the awakening mind completely.

"When one abides in the observances, the moral discipline, the conduct and the bases of training laid down by the perfect Buddha, who wishes to benefit sentient beings,
then the mantrin will in this way accomplish the mantra.
Wisdom free of conceptual thought is what the victors of the past fully awakened to.
In that which is free of conceptual thought,

secret mantra is taught to succeed.
Its result, wholly pure,
becomes luminous by its very nature.
Whoever dwells in conceptual thought will not gain accomplishment.
Therefore, abandoning conceptual thought,
one should contemplate the form of the mantra."

Then, for the benefit, welfare and happiness of the bodhisattvas who practice the bodhisattva conduct through the door of secret mantra, the youthful Mañjuśrī entered the samādhi called Treasury of the Utterly Pure Dance of a Child's Playful Conduct. As soon as the youthful Mañjuśrī had entered that samādhi, the entire assembly spoke with one voice:

"Homage, supreme vajra who grants the highest,
gentle-voiced Mañjughoṣa of great strength, great hero, widely renowned,
who always tames the untamed!
The conduct of mantra and secret mantra, child's play in every form,
samādhis and dhāraṇīs,
all meditations and all who meditate:
out of love for us,
please explain this maṇḍala,
the Vajrapāṇi Empowerment,
the source of great knowledge of secret mantra,
foremost among great maṇḍalas,
the basis for teaching every conduct."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī entered the samādhi called Unborn from the Very Beginning and spoke the syllables of his own heart mantra, the great vajra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā varad vajra maṃ

As soon as he had spoken this great heart mantra of the Vajra of Sacred Giving, the entire assembly was amazed and said with one voice, "Oh! This Vajra of Sacred Giving has arisen from his past conduct."

Then Mañjuśrī spoke the vajra syllables of his own vow:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he he kumāraka vajra vajra smara smara pratijñā svāhā

Mañjuśrī also spoke the secret mantra that is the basis for the perfect accomplishment of his own speech:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vākye da tāre kumāra rūpa dhara svāhā

Mañjuśrī also spoke the secret mantra that is the door to the perfect accomplishment of his own speech:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vākye da vajra he svāhā

The youthful Mañjuśrī also spoke the secret mantra that accomplishes the aims of his own speech:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vākye da vajra kovida svāhā

The youthful Mañjuśrī also spoke the great king of wrathful ones, Vajra Free of Extremes:

namaḥ sarva tathagatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvatha taṃ vajra hī svaha

The youthful Mañjuśrī also spoke the heart mantras of his own host of female messengers:

namaḥ sarva tathagatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrob kiṣini svāhā

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā vajrotakrakeśiṇi svāhā

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā sumati vajrīṇi svāhā namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā citrākṣi vajriṇī svāhā

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ākarṣaṇi vajrotagi svāhā

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī spoke his own maṇḍala of the supreme vajra:

"The great vajra maṇḍala is square and even on every side, marked with the emblem of the vajra.

What is made at its center is a triangle;
it should be laid out as a triangle.
Draw the maṇḍala that arises from fire,
its color red throughout,
marked with a blazing vajra.
Having laid out its three portions,
draw the form of an utpala,
and on it draw a vajra,
blazing and adorned with dots.
What is made all around at the outer edge is a garland of utpala forms.
At its center the mantrin should place one in the form of a young child, with five locks of hair on his head and a complexion the color of saffron.

"In his left hand he holds an utpala together with a vajra, and with his right he grants the highest. Or else one places the form of his hand emblem, or else his syllable.

To draw his emblem:
an utpala, most excellent,
and on it draw a vajra,
blazing and marked with dots.

To its right place the heart mantras. To its left place the female messengers. Below it is the king of wrathful ones, Vajra Free of Extremes. In the south is the bodhisattva Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin. In the west is Ākāśagarbha. In the north is the bodhisattva Kṣitigarbha together with his retinue. They should be placed just as they appear in their attire. Or else their emblems. Or else their syllables.

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī spoke of the practice of this supreme heart mantra: "Having generated the mind set on awakening, having received empowerment, entered the maṇḍala and taken the vows, one who keeps the observance of the vidyā should recite this heart mantra three hundred thousand times, in a dwelling or a secluded cave, without slackening.

"Then take any one of these: a chisel, a trident, a sword made of sandalwood, a wheel, a hook, a club, a battle-axe, a short spear, a noose, or a great arrow. Wash it with the five products of the cow, wash it again with scented water, place it on a heap of cow dung, and protect it with the Great Cakravartin. At the end, having made extensive offerings right there, smear the maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen to the ground. Abiding in the maṇḍala of Vajra of Sacred Giving, perform a fire offering throughout the whole night with kindling sticks of agaru smeared with curd and honey. At midnight or at sunrise great signs will appear, the substance will be transformed, and it will be accomplished.

"Holding it, one becomes a vidyādhara, a holder of spells: one is swift as thought, roams through many other world systems, makes offerings to all the tathāgatas, attains the dhāraṇī of the limbs of awakening, has a complexion like the rising sun, is free of old age and death, and works for the benefit of all sentient beings. Except through the power of aspiration, with that very body one holds sway over the earth until one abides at the seat of awakening.

"He is a vidyādhara with the form of a youth, bearing the mark of Vajra of Sacred Giving, to whom all the gods and others pay homage; one who tames the untamed, like a jewel of manifold forms; attended by a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of vidyādharas, dwelling in a great mansion born of mind. Seeing him, the vidyādharas think of themselves as like paupers, and they make the aspiration, 'May we too become like that!'

"Even without performing the practice, it takes effect: if one recollects it every day, even deeds such as the five of immediate retribution will be purified.

"If every day at sunrise one binds the mudrā and recites it one hundred and eight times, in six months it bestows a district.

"If one casts the mantra once on each of a number of karavīra flowers and strikes an image of the Sun with them, in one month it bestows eight excellent villages.

"If one goes to a lotus pond, enchants the lotuses with the mantra a hundred thousand times, offers them to the Blessed One Vajra of Sacred Giving, and with that same supreme heart mantra performs a fire offering of rice porridge a hundred thousand times, it bestows a kingdom.

"If one enchants one's face with the mantra, whoever one looks at comes under one's power.

"If one binds the mudrā toward someone who is angry and recollects the heart mantra, he will become gracious.

"If one sees a river full of crocodiles, enchants a stone with the mantra and throws it, all that move in the water will be paralyzed.

"If one ties a knot at the hem of one's garment and puts the garment on, the mouths of others will be bound. Likewise, where there is danger in the wilderness or from bandits, if one ties a knot in the same way, they will be paralyzed.

"For one seized by venom, if it is set at the doorway or on the neck, he will be free of poison. If one visualizes the supreme heart mantra with its dot from the soles of the feet upward, one will be free of poison.

"For one stricken by a ḍākinī, visualize it at one's own heart and visualize one's own form at the head of the sick person; he will recover at once.

"Likewise for all grahas and all bhūtas: bind the mudrā, enchant ashes or white mustard seed seven times with the mantra and strike the head with them, and they will all flee.

"If one sees a great wind rising, enchant water with the mantra and scatter it, and it will immediately subside.

"If one sees lightning striking, enchant the forefinger of the left hand with the mantra and make the threatening gesture with it, and it will be turned back; there is no doubt.

"If one wishes to pin down with a kīla one who brings death, enchant a kīla of khadira wood or of iron eight hundred times with the supreme, most fierce heart mantra. Take earth from both banks of a river and make an effigy eight finger-widths in size. Take thread from a bier on which a corpse has been laid, bind its major and minor limbs, and strike it at the heart with that kīla. It is then pinned by the kīla and can do nothing at all. To release it, pull out the kīla and fill the place with butter and honey, and the kīla will have been withdrawn.

"rājānam baśikartu gamola baṇma yiṃ prakṛtri rakṛttva rahāsa babigta parpata ākre bata kṣiṇa cara nad abarbhyaḥ yathā bibothā pūja kṛtta chittva jusū yattṛtsa badha rājas paribāro baśaṃ agacchati

"If one wishes to make someone fortunate, perform a fire offering of oblations of salt every day for twenty-one days, and among all two-footed and four-footed beings he will become the most fortunate of all.

"If one performs a fire offering of food, food will appear.

"If, gazing at Vajra of Sacred Giving, one recites a hundred thousand times without eating, he will bestow whatever supreme thing one desires.

"Make a maṇḍala at the foot of a nyagrodha tree, strew flowers and perform the protection. Burning agaru incense, without eating, and keeping the yakṣiṇī in mind, if one recites a hundred thousand times, the yakṣiṇī will come and give whatever is asked of her.

"If every day one makes offerings, takes hold of the hand of Maṇibhadra, and recites one hundred and eight times, in six months he will bestow a hundred dīnāras.

"If one takes hold of the big toe of the foot of the Buddha, the Blessed One, and recites with eyes open from sunrise until sunset, the past karma of beginningless time will be purified.

"If one gazes at Vajra of Sacred Giving and recites without closing the eyes, one will become long-lived.

"If one gazes at the noble Avalokiteśvara and constantly recollects him three times every day, he bestows the supreme.

"If one takes hold of the vajra in the hand of Vajrapāṇi and, without eating food, recites three hundred thousand times, one will be led to his own abode, and one will obtain the body of a youth of the vajra family. Likewise, if one gazes at the bodhisattvas Samantabhadra, Maitreya and the rest and, without eating, recites three hundred thousand times, one will be led to the abode of each of them.

"If the rain does not fall, perform a fire offering of eight thousand kindling sticks of gla ba wood dipped in milk, and the rain will fall.

"If one holds one's breath and recites one hundred and eight times in the water, in six months one will obtain dhāraṇī.

"If one faces the sun, turning as it moves, and recites three hundred thousand times, one will obtain the office of a great minister or a great treasure.

"If one carries a trident in one's hand, eats food gained by begging, makes offerings in a shrine of the mātṛkās with whatever one can afford, and recites three hundred thousand times, all the mātṛkās will be accomplished and will do whatever one wishes.

"Incense of guggulu dispels all grahas.

"Sesame oil enchanted with the mantra one hundred and eight times dispels pain in the belly.

"For severe diarrhea, enchant a blue thread with the mantra and tie it around the waist, and the severe diarrhea will be cured.

"For pain in the head, grind the fruit of the bilva, enchant it twenty-one times and smear it on, and it will be cured.

"For pain in the eyes, enchant the juice of wheat flowers once and pour it into the nose, and it will be cured.

"If one enchants a paste of sandalwood one hundred and eight times, it dispels burning fever.

"Incense of agaru or incense of guggulu dispels the quartan fever.

"Boil rice porridge over bandhūka wood and give it to drink to a man or a woman who is childless, and a son will be born even without union with a man.

"Make a torma of four colors, enchant four vases of four colors with the mantra a hundred times, and at a crossroads or at the foot of a solitary tree bathe a eunuch or a barren woman, and a son will be born.

"If one wishes to defeat an army, combine Keśinī with the supreme heart mantra and recite it one thousand and eight times; then bind the mudrā of the life-pole and threaten with the forefinger, and the army will be paralyzed.

"If one wishes to make it fall back, with a mind of loving-kindness bind the mudrā of Vajra of Sacred Giving on the head and contemplate, and the enemy will be made to fall back in retreat.

"If one wishes to destroy an enemy, having performed the practice, at midnight loosen one's hair, press the right foot with the left, and sit squatting. Looking off to the side, take an oblation of poison, blood, salt and mustard grains mixed together and, with Great Vajra Free of Extremes, perform a fire offering twenty-one times into a fire of bilva wood kindled by blowing. The enemy will be destroyed; of this there is no doubt.

Whether it be a god, a nāga or a human,
or Brahmā, lord of the Sahā world,
or Śakra, lord of the yakṣas,
he will die; of this there is no doubt.

"Śāntimati, in short, whatever rite one accomplishes it by, through that very rite it bestows accomplishment.

"Śāntimati, twenty-one eons ago I pleased the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly awakened Buddha Fully Blossomed Flower, Lord of Victors. Śāntimati, seeing me practicing extremely difficult austerities, he blessed me through the power of his great compassion and gave me this supreme heart mantra.

"Śāntimati, as soon as I obtained this supreme heart mantra, I obtained samādhis as numerous as the atoms of ten buddha fields, ten hundred thousand great dhāraṇīs, and ten koṭis of hundreds of thousands of great superknowledges. Tathāgatas as numerous as the atoms of ten buddha fields came and appeared before me, and those tathāgatas taught me this Dharma discourse called Wholly Transcending the Three Times. Through the power of the blessing of this very supreme heart mantra, I retained and took up that Dharma discourse in an instant, a moment, a mere second. And why? Śāntimati, at the very moment I obtained this supreme heart mantra, Śāntimati, I obtained countless hundreds of thousands of gateways of dhāraṇī, such as the Ornament Arranging Melodies with the Melody of the Buddha.

"Śāntimati, by this enumeration too you should understand it thus: whatever bodhisattva great beings dwell in the boundless world systems of the ten directions, correctly teaching the secret mantras, accomplishing the gateways of samādhi and dhāraṇī, and freed from aging, sickness and death, all of them, blessed by this very supreme heart mantra, all become of manifold colors, take on the form of youths, and perform miraculous displays of every kind.

"Śāntimati, this Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly awakened Buddha Fully Blossomed Flower, Lord of Victors, too is accomplished by his own nature, without the rite of the youth, without implements, and without a painted image.

"If one wishes to accomplish it through a painted image, on a lunar date, a karaṇa and a moment known to be auspicious, buy thread without haggling over the price. Having performed the rite of protection with the heart mantra of Great Fierce Vajra, make a maṇḍala with cow dung and strew flowers. Then have a weaver whose limbs are complete, who bears an auspicious name, who keeps the poṣadha, eats the three white foods, has restrained senses, is endowed with Dharma and always delights in the Dharma, weave a cloth of five or six cubits, with no hair falling into it, using weaving implements smeared with the five products of the cow. Having bathed, anointed with unguents, bound on a headband, and made fragrant and scented, make extensive offerings, burn incense of agaru, give the weaver a generous fee, and take the cloth down from the loom.

"Having taken it down, consecrate it with the mantra of the Great Cakravartin. In a clean place strewn with scattered flowers and perfumed with fragrances and incense, put it into scented water and leave it for seven days. Then take it out and dry it in the sun. Then rub the cloth many times with a fine powder mixed with camphor and saffron. It should also be rubbed with flowers such as nāgakesara, campaka and skya snar.

"Having kept a fast, on a lunar date, karaṇa and moment that are auspicious, free of bad dates and of the faults of inauspicious conjunctions, while the sounds of many kinds of music ring out and verses of good fortune are recited, make extensive offerings in a maṇḍala strewn with flowers. Having paid homage to all the tathāgatas and made supplication, as before, a painter who has entered the great vajra maṇḍala, who has generated the mind set on awakening, who is compassionate, skilled and free of laziness, endowed with faith, dressed in clean clothes, eating food in moderation, and who has been given protection, using new brushes and colors not mixed with glue, should paint here the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the perfectly awakened Buddha Fully Blossomed Flower, Lord of Victors. He is seated on a seat of white lotus, golden in color, endowed with all the major marks, absorbed in samādhi, encircled all around by rays of light of many colors, a great light shining forth from his uṣṇīṣa, and his face should be made gently smiling.

"Below him paint Vajra of Sacred Giving, the color of saffron, wearing a lower garment of silk or cotton and an upper robe of fine silk, with five locks of hair on his head, kneeling on a seat of white lotus, adorned with every ornament. With his right hand he pays homage to the Blessed One, and in his left he holds an utpala together with a vajra. He has the form of a youth. The rays of light of the Tathāgata fall upon his head and make their bodies shine, and he sits in the midst of a net of his own light, gazing at the Blessed One. Paint him seated in a jewel cave on a great jewel mountain. Paint that jewel mountain adorned with trees that flower in every season. Below, paint the great ocean.

"On another cloth, paint Vajra of Sacred Giving seated with legs crossed in a jewel cave on a great jewel mountain, absorbed in samādhi, in the form of a youth, wearing a skirt of silk or cotton and an upper garment of fine silk, holding in his left hand an utpala together with a blazing vajra, seated within a net of his own light, adorned with every ornament. At his heart paint the heart mantra in a peaceful guise, blazing with tongues of flame, like the rays of the autumn moon, granting the supreme with the right hand and holding a vajra in the left, dressed in white, with a stream of water flowing from the fingers of the right hand. Below him, paint the practitioner, in whatever attire he wears. Paint him holding an incense bowl in his hand and kneeling.

"In solitude, make extensive offerings before it with whatever one can afford and recite three hundred thousand times, and the preliminary practice will have been accomplished.

By merely seeing this painted image one is freed from all wrongdoing.
Whatever the substances for accomplishment,
all of them will surely be accomplished.
Even someone who, through his evil deeds, has been born into an outcaste's birth is at that very moment freed from all his former evil deeds.
In front of this painted image
all rites will be accomplished.
In this world and in the next,
nothing is hard for him to obtain.
If one always sees the painting,
one will be endowed with long life, and likewise with splendor, with wealth and with renown,
and will become fortunate and wise."

Śāntimati said, "Vajra of Sacred Giving, sentient beings who have faith in this painted image are extremely rare. Vajra of Sacred Giving, if those who listen to and enter this very mode of the Dharma discourse that is the gateway into the great maṇḍala will have honored many buddhas, then what need is there to speak of those who have received the great Vajrapāṇi Empowerment and have entered this great vajra maṇḍala? They are certain to attain unsurpassed, perfect awakening."

Mañjuśrī said, "Śāntimati, it is so; it is just as you have said. Those who listen to this mode are Vajrasattvas. Śāntimati, those who have not produced roots of virtue will not even see, or hear with their ears, the great maṇḍala, the great realization of the wheel maṇḍala. Śāntimati, it is like this: the great precious wish-fulfilling jewel that fulfills every wish does not come within sight of those with inferior roots of virtue so as to fulfill all their wishes. But, Śāntimati, that precious jewel, king of jewels, makes those sentient beings who possess many roots of virtue fortunate ones whose wishes it fulfills, just as they intended, merely by being seen and touched. Śāntimati, this Dharma discourse should be regarded in just the same way."

The Noble Vajrapāṇi Empowerment, fascicle eight.

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī again spoke these words to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, furthermore, this is the practice of the king of secret mantras of my own pledge. Following the rite as before, go to the summit of a mountain and remain in one's own dwelling. Keeping silent, bathing at the three times of day and changing one's clothes three times, one should recite the syllables three hundred thousand times.

"At the end, on the full moon, make offerings with whatever one can afford, take any one substance at all, and recite throughout the whole night, and one will certainly accomplish it. As before, one is surrounded by many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of vidyādharas, while a thousand koṭis of divine maidens display cymbals and phegdo. One roams through many world systems, makes offerings to all the tathāgatas, produces many emanations, works for the benefit of all sentient beings, is like a wish-fulfilling jewel, goes wherever one wishes, is born with certainty from aspiration, obtains the dhāraṇī of the melody that proclaims infinite sounds, fully realizes the five superknowledges, has a complexion like the rising sun, and becomes swift as thought. In the manner described before, whatever one wishes will certainly be accomplished.

"If one wishes to accomplish it through a painted image, following the rite as before, paint the Blessed One dwelling in the world system Endowed with Flowers, having entered the supreme seat of awakening, seated with legs crossed and teaching the Dharma, golden in color, endowed with all the major marks, illuminating everything with the rays of light that come forth from his uṣṇīṣa. At the foot of the tree of awakening, the whole tree of awakening, made of gośīrṣa sandalwood, should be beautifully adorned like a great wish-fulfilling tree. Paint the world system beautifully adorned with arrays of every kind.

"To his right paint the bodhisattva called Golden Flower Heap, golden in color, wearing all the ornaments, holding a yak-tail fly whisk in his hand and dressed in a garment of fine cloth. To his left paint the bodhisattva called Sandalwood Heap, wearing a garment of fine cloth dark blue like the priyaṅgu flower, adorned with every ornament, holding a yak-tail fly whisk in his hand. Below, paint the eight great śrāvakas: Steadfast Gift, Vast Gift, Essence Gift, Jinamati, Vimaladatta, Buddharakṣita, Community Gift and Sumati. On the right side paint eight bodhisattvas adorned with every ornament, of different shapes, different attire and different colors. Above, paint vidyādharas with their bodies enveloped in clouds, letting fall a rain of flowers.

"Below the Blessed One paint a vidyādhara taking the form of a youth, sturdy, adorned with every ornament, holding an utpala in his hand, kneeling, with five locks of hair, receiving commands, ablaze, his face gently smiling, encircled by the light rays of the very being of the Tathāgata.

"Before it recite a million times, and combine it, as before, with the rite of the supreme heart mantra. In the same way one performs all the rites. If one recites constantly, the power will not decline; it is not otherwise.

"Śāntimati, if one who wishes for the conduct of a bodhisattva, the wealth of a bodhisattva who practices by way of the secret mantra, wishes to accomplish any heart mantra at all, then one who has seen the maṇḍala should take any one of them, following the rite as before. Bathing at the three times of day, changing one's clothes three times, washing and then anointing oneself, one should recite it six hundred thousand times with a mind full of joy. Then, at the end, make offerings with whatever one can afford, and perform a fire offering throughout the whole night with śuti dipped in curd, honey and butter, and one will obtain the office of a great minister. If one does not accomplish it, it will become effective in the rites, and it bestows a district.

"If one enters water that flows into the ocean until it is up to the throat and recites three hundred thousand times together with the supreme heart mantra, one will see a treasure.

"If one performs a fire offering of eight thousand kindling sticks of guggulu dipped in butter, it bestows eight excellent villages.

"If, at the entrance of an asura cave, without eating, one performs a fire offering a hundred thousand times of an oblation of mustard grains and salt, together with the heart mantra of Vajra Free of Extremes, asura maidens will come out, lead one inside, and give whatever one desires.

"If one wishes cattle to appear, at an anthill or at a confluence of waters, eating the five products of the cow every day and binding the vajra mudrā, one should recite this heart mantra thirty thousand times. Then make offerings with whatever one can afford, make a cow with her calf, four finger-widths in size, out of the flour of sāli rice, kindle a fire of varuṇa wood, and perform the fire offering fifty thousand times. At midnight or at sunrise, a cow will appear right there, playing about with one. If one sprinkles it with water enchanted with the heart mantra of Fierce Vajra, it will stay without wandering off. Buy, without haggling over the price, a cow to which one has given the name Fragrant, and groom it every day. If every month one fills a vase with water mixed with ground pine and worships the cow with offerings of incense and flowers, the cattle will increase to a hundred thousand; of this there is no doubt.

"Likewise, if one wishes horses, elephants, camels, sheep or buffaloes to appear, kindle a fire of gla ba wood every day and perform a fire offering of barley, milk and so forth, and they will appear. If one performs a fire offering of food, food will appear. If one performs a fire offering of rice mixed with butter, inexhaustible food will appear. Likewise, if one performs a fire offering of every kind of grain, every kind of grain will appear: whatever one makes the fire offering of, that will appear.

"If one enchants one's face with the mantra, one will always have an answer ready.

"When the moon is seized by the wolf, make offerings, take white sweet flag and put it in the mouth, and gazing at the moon, recite until the moon is released; if one then eats it, one will retain whatever one hears.

"When the moon is seized by the wolf, take the milk of a tawny cow whose calf is of the same color, smear a maṇḍala with cow dung, make offerings with whatever one can afford, and gazing at the moon, churn it until butter appears; if one drinks it, one will retain whatever one hears, and one will be free of timidity in all the treatises.

"If one enchants goat's milk mixed with honey eight hundred times and drinks it, a great chronic illness will be healed.

"If one enchants butter eight hundred times and drinks it, one will be freed from all diseases.

"If one enchants any medicine at all once with the mantra and eats it, one will be free of disease.

"If one recites it every day, one will become fortunate.

"If every day one performs a fire offering of one hundred and eight oblations of apāmārga, all people will be pleased.

"Enchant incense or flowers with the mantra, and whoever they are given to will come under one's control.

"atha rājanima baśvakartu kamo gaura sariśapa kukuma saṃmiśira nirahāro lakkhaṃ juhūyad rāja baśi bhabati

"If one wishes to bring a woman under control, speak her name, enchant a palmful of water once with the mantra, and if she drinks it she will come under one's control.

"If one wishes for small livestock, perform a fire offering of śuti one hundred and eight times at the three times of each day, and one will obtain small livestock.

"If one wishes to cross water, perform the binding of the person and then cross, and all that move in the water will be paralyzed.

"If one wishes to paralyze an army, make a club sixteen finger-widths long from a saptaparṇa tree, worship it with incense and flowers while speaking the army's name, and plant it in the ground knee-deep. Over it, for seven days, perform a fire offering a hundred thousand times of turuṣka fruit mixed with white mustard seed, and the army will be paralyzed.

"Śāntimati, even without performing the practice, it will become effective for such rites as these.

"Śāntimati, furthermore, this is the practice of Vajra Free of Extremes. There is no need to choose a lunar date or a constellation, and no need to keep a fast. Go to a great wilderness or a great charnel ground, wear blue clothes, eat food gained by begging without straying from the road, and, having set aside pride, first recite the supreme heart mantra a hundred thousand times. By this, the preliminary approach of this great wrathful one will have been done ten million times. Then go to the summit of a mountain and recite a hundred thousand times. Then on the full moon make extensive offerings and recite throughout the whole night, and at sunrise the king of wrathful ones himself will come.

"The signs of his coming are these: rays of light come forth from the practitioner's body, both eyes quiver, and the hands and feet move. When these occur, one should make offerings of flowers and incense. Then a great sound of drums arises in the north. After the sound of the drums, the king of wrathful ones himself will come, baring his fangs terrifyingly, his hair standing on end, as if threatening the practitioner. The practitioner should not be afraid. By merely seeing that wrathful one, one becomes a vidyādhara, surrounded by many koṭis of vidyādharas and surrounded by many koṭis of divine maidens. With drums beating, one will go to honor the buddhas. If one does not accomplish this, he bestows the five supreme things: kingship, invisibility, the wish-granting cow, the excellent vase, and the wish-fulfilling jewel. If one goes to a mountain and recites a hundred thousand times, he bestows whatever one wishes.

"rājānama baśikadurgamo salakṣa mekanda rājā baśo bhabati ādambhidtya ipa ājñā karoti

"If one wishes to make it descend into a vessel, recite a hundred thousand times, and it will descend into the vessel. If one wishes to bring out a treasure, recite three hundred thousand times, and it will bring out the treasure.

"If one accomplishes pills, grind lac and realgar with coriander oil, make pills, and then wrap them in copper. Having wrapped them, leave them for seven days and offer two or three pills to the Buddha, the Blessed One. If one holds one in the hand, one will become invisible.

"This king of wrathful ones possesses the splendor of immeasurable qualities: he tames the untamed, and is great in diligence and in overpowering adversaries. If one recites his mantra, even transgressions of the four root downfalls are purified, and the five deeds of immediate retribution are also purified without remainder. What need is there to speak of those who do just as has been taught? If even those who merely hold his mantra will have produced roots of virtue under many hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of buddhas, what need is there to say that everything contemplated by those who recite it and practice it will be fulfilled? Whoever keeps a fast on the fourteenth or fifteenth day and recites it casts off four eons of saṃsāra.

"Son of good family, the very name of this king of wrathful ones, who is worshiped by a hundred thousand koṭis of buddhas, is meaningful: by holding his name, all sentient beings become irreversible. This king of wrathful ones is accomplished by recitation. Through him all the buddhas have brought about deliverance.

"Take a man's corpse, and at midnight go to a riverbank, wash it with water, adorn it with flowers and so forth, and lay it with its head pointing east. The practitioner, together with a good companion, sits on a spread of kuśa grass. Enchant white sweet flag seven times with the mantra, put it into the corpse's mouth, and recite the king of vidyās until the corpse's mouth makes a sound. Then the practitioner, without fear, presses its chest with his left foot. Even though a fierce sound arises, he should not be afraid of it either; the vidyādhara should recite the vidyā until smoke arises. Then strike its head with white mustard seed over which the mantra has been recited seven times. As soon as it is struck, a snake appears from the corpse's mouth. Without being afraid of this either, recollect the vidyā and touch it. As soon as it is touched, it becomes a sword. Recollecting the heart mantra, take it up. As soon as one has taken it, one's hair becomes coiled into locks. One becomes like a sixteen-year-old. One becomes the lord of all vidyādharas. One goes about without obstruction. One lives for sixty thousand years.

"The practice of the short spear is this. The practitioner, taking milk gruel as his food, goes to the summit of a mountain and recites the vidyā three hundred thousand times. Then the vidyādhara kneads ash from a charnel ground and earth from an anthill with milk and makes a short spear one sugata-span in length. It is painted with colors not mixed with glue. Then go to a charnel ground, smear a maṇḍala with cow dung, make offerings of perfume, flowers, incense and the rest, and offer all the tormas for the bhūtas. Having made oneself clean and put on clean clothes, sit on a human skull, place the short spear on another human skull, and recite the vidyā until the short spear blazes. Then offer the guest water with flowers that other mantrins cannot overcome.

Or else, if one recites the vidyā one hundred and eight times, beings will come from all directions. Without becoming afraid, one should call to mind the heart mantra of the King of Wrathful Ones and touch the short spear. As soon as it is touched, it turns into a woman and says, "Son, what shall I do?" One should say to her, "I go to you for refuge." Then she vanishes into the palm of the mantrin's hand. At that very moment his hair becomes coiled into a topknot, and he becomes like one sixteen years old. Holding the short spear in his hand, he becomes a vidyādhara, and except for the Cakravartin, the vidyādharas come under his power. All those he looks at touch their heads to his feet.

If one would accomplish wealth, by offering eight thousand fire sticks of bilva wood in a fire offering one obtains a hundred dīnāras. By offering in the fire a hundred thousand pills of guggulu the size of a juniper berry, one obtains a thousand stamped coins. Having made a fire of agaru wood, by mixing the fruit of the pata tree with curd, honey and ghee and offering it a thousand times in the fire, one obtains a dīnāra every day without asking for it. If one wishes to bring a woman under one's power, by offering eight hundred oblations of chaff in the fire, she comes under one's power. rājāmatyabaśikaranebalanahūtinan aṣṭasahasranjuhūyaṅbaśobhabati. Entering water that flows into the ocean, if one scatters a hundred thousand flowers of various colors, without asking one obtains a pair of cloths every day. Going to a charnel ground and making a maṇḍala, if one offers human fat in the fire for seven days, one who has been seized by a piśāca is released merely by being looked at. By offering mongoose hair in the fire six thousand times, all piśācas come under one's power, and all bhūtas too come under one's power. By offering black sheep's wool smeared with ghee in the fire a hundred thousand times, a woman comes under one's power.

If one wishes to see the piśācas, one should make a maṇḍala the size of a cowhide in a charnel ground and make tormas of fish and the like. Facing east, if one offers human hair smeared with blood in the fire a hundred thousand times, all the piśācas will come. One should not be afraid, and one should not perform protection. One should say, "You will come under my power." They say, "So be it," and vanish. Every day they give him five dīnāras each, and these too should be spent.

By enchanting one's finger seven times, one turns back the clouds. By enchanting ash seven times, speech is paralyzed. By enchanting white mustard seed seven times, a mountain shakes. By enchanting a mālatī flower or a kuṭaja flower seven times, the woman who holds it, or to whom it is given, or on whose head it is placed, comes under one's power.

If one wishes to bring a yakṣiṇī under one's power, one should eat alms food in a charnel ground and recite the mantra. There, on dry ground, one should make a maṇḍala the size of a cowhide and make an extensive torma. Then, when the vidyādhara offers in the fire seven thousand fire sticks of arka wood smeared with blood, a yakṣiṇī in a hideous form will come. Without being afraid of her, recalling the vidyā, one should say, "Stay! Stay!" She grants one of three excellent things: she becomes a mother, a sister or a wife. If she becomes a mother, she does everything he needs, as for a son. If she becomes a sister, she gives him a dīnāra every day. If she becomes a wife, she takes her pleasure with him. He becomes able to live for five hundred years.

Then the vidyādhara is to accomplish the wheel. Having done the preliminary practice, he should have a smith who is clean, keeping the poṣadha, and not lacking any limb make a hammered wheel eight finger-widths across, encircled with blazing flames. Then the vidyādhara places that wheel in the five products of the cow and leaves it there for one day. Then he takes it out, washes it, anoints it, wraps it in clean cloth, and sets it down below and in front. He makes offerings and tormas, takes up the vessel of guest water, and with the root mantra invites all the deities. Having offered them guest water as well, again with the root mantra he should request them to depart. By casting the mantra seven times on ash, it becomes a fence of ash. By enchanting a grass fire seven times, it becomes a fence of fire. Then, having made protection according to the rite, he binds the ground by enchanting white mustard seed seven times, and binds the sky by enchanting water seven times. Then the mantrin fills the vessel of guest water with scented water and puts white flowers in it. With the root mantra he invites his own deity, offers guest water, places the deity on a seat, makes the offerings complete, and first offers in the fire seven oblations of ghee, honey and milk. Then the mantrin takes up the wheel with both hands and recites until it blazes.

Then the sound of drums resounds. The thunder rumbles, "diriri." The flames of the lamps grow long. The wheel also moves. From the sky too a voice resounds: "Son of noble family, excellent, excellent! It is excellent that you have accomplished this wheel, that you have entered the path of awakening, and that you have crossed the ocean of existence!" Then the mantrin should recite again and again until Vajrapāṇi comes. When Vajrapāṇi has come, he says to the practitioner, "Son, it is excellent that you have conquered the army of Māra and entered the path of awakening." Then Vajrapāṇi strokes the crown of the practitioner's head with his right hand. The moment he has stroked it, there before that son of noble family is a celestial palace a thousand yojanas in extent, hung with nets of bells and small bells, festooned with golden threads and strings of pearls, beautified with sapphires, great sapphires, rubies, great emeralds, the finest perfumes and other special jewels, strewn with arrays of various vajras, and adorned with hosts of divine maidens, vidyādharas and others; and they too are singing, and playing sweet-sounding lutes, drums and flutes, and clapping their hands.

Then, through the power of the King of Vidyās, noble Vajrapāṇi himself takes the practitioner by his right hand, leads him into the celestial palace, and says, "Son of noble family, go forth to the infinite buddha fields!" Then, as a cakravartin of the vidyādharas whose movement is unobstructed, through the power of that great King of Wrathful Ones he becomes lord of all the cakravartins of the vidyādharas. Then Vajrapāṇi places that vidyādhara in the celestial palace and vanishes. Then the king of the vidyādharas, surrounded by a retinue of many koṭis of vidyādharas, with many kings of vidyādharas paying homage, showing reverence and making offerings, goes forth, the cakravartin of the vidyādharas at the front giving commands to all.

This wrathful one is supreme and glorious, always follows all the buddhas, and performs every activity: by merely being recited he performs every activity. He terrifies all bhūtas. He summons them. He brings them under control. He dries them up. He harms them. He accomplishes whatever all vidyādharas desire.

If one wishes to accomplish a mount, then one should make a goose, a bull, a peacock, a garuḍa, an elephant, a horse, or whichever of these one likes. One should have a painter who keeps the poṣadha paint it, and set the painted figure down facing west. Having made extensive offerings of guest water, offered lamps as well, and performed the rite of protection too, one should burn fire sticks of udumbara wood and make a fire offering a thousand times. With scented water one should invite the deity, request the deity to depart again, and offer guest water. Having offered guest water, one should press down with one's hand on whichever mount it is and recite until it blazes. Then the mantrin should recite again and again. If it is a goose, the sign of its accomplishment is that the goose cries out. The bull bellows. The peacock calls, "lhung lhung." The garuḍa flies. The elephant makes the sound "ngur ngur." The horse neighs, "tsererere." These are the signs for these.

If one rides the goose, one becomes a second Brahmā, lord of the Sahā world, and is able to live for an eon, and even beyond that. If one rides the bull, one becomes a second Great God. If one rides the peacock, one becomes a second Kārttikeya, son of the Kṛttikās, brave and possessed of great power to vanquish opponents, and is able to live for a great eon. When he dies and passes on, he is then born into a brahmin family and remembers his former lives. If one accomplishes the garuḍa and rides it, one becomes a second Viṣṇu and is able to live for an eon. When he dies and passes on, he is then born into a family like a great sāl tree and remembers his former lives. If one accomplishes the elephant and rides it, one comes to have the diligence of Śakra, rules as a king of the gods, is free of illness and handsome, and sports with the goddesses. When he dies and passes on, he is then born into a family like a great sāl tree and remembers his former lives. If one accomplishes the horse and rides it, one becomes a second Sun, of great power, and is able to live for an intermediate eon. When he dies and passes on, he is then born into a family like a great sāl tree and remembers his former lives.

If one wishes to accomplish a vajra, one should have a smith or a carpenter who keeps the poṣadha make a single-pointed vajra eight or sixteen finger-widths long, of copper, agaru, sandalwood, red sandalwood, pine, khadira, banda wood, nimba wood, crystal, or torch wood. One should anoint it with the five products of a tawny cow, and on the fifteenth day of the waxing moon, before the Blessed One, make extensive offerings and give tormas as well. Having washed the vajra with scented water, one should offer oneself to all the bodhisattvas, make aspirations, recite the heart mantra of the Wrathful One, invite the deity with guest water, offer guest water and a seat, and make a fire offering of seven oblations of ghee and honey. Then the mantrin should take the vajra in his right hand and recite until it blazes and crackles. Then the mantrin should recite again and again until, from the east, the King of Wrathful Ones, Vajra Free of Extremes, comes, surrounded by all the perfections and surrounded by nine koṭis of vidyās. Each of those vidyās in turn is surrounded by a retinue of five hundred koṭis. That King of Vidyās holds a vajra in his left hand, and with his right hand and a sweet, deep voice he reassures the practitioner. Blazing with splendor like the sun, honored by all the gods, who rain down showers of flowers, he comes. Then the practitioner should offer guest water to the one who has come, and offer a seat as well. Having made aspirations, he should make this supplication: "Blessed One, please be compassionate! Please grant me accomplishment!" Then the great bodhisattva touches the practitioner's head with his right hand and says, "Son, what shall I do?" Then the practitioner offers guest water, kneels on both knees, and says, "Please grant me the vajra accomplishment. Let it be known that through it, by your kindness, I shall have great diligence and great strength, become a king of vidyādharas, and be lord of all the vidyādharas." Then the Blessed One says to the practitioner, "Son, you have accomplished this vajra. You will have diligence and the power to vanquish opponents, and will become the great king of all the kings of the vidyādharas." Just as with the vajra, so too is the accomplishment of the short spear and the rest.

The unobstructed detailed rite of the Blessed One Vajra Free of Extremes is complete.

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi said this to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "O great being, there is a maṇḍala called Vajra Empowerment, and the Blessed One explained it to me alone.

At the time of his great parinirvāṇa, he entrusted to me this supreme secret as well: the teaching and the most secret of secrets, the great and sacred secret which even all the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas do not comprehend, let alone other, worldly people. Śāntimati, what is the supremely secret great maṇḍala? It is this: it is called Vajra Empowerment. It pervades all of this without remainder, with everything moving and unmoving. Śāntimati, there is not even a buddha field that it does not pervade."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva Śāntimati said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "O great being, please explain that supremely secret maṇḍala, so that bodhisattva great beings, having heard such supremely secret maṇḍalas, will act for the benefit of sentient beings, and so that, with regard to the people of the future, the teaching will endure."

When he had said this, Vajrapāṇi said this to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, listen to that supremely secret maṇḍala by which bodhisattvas who practice the bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra accomplish great benefit by easy means. Śāntimati, first of all the master should take possession of any suitable ground and draw the maṇḍala. That ground should be purified with the awakening mind.

Whatever mantrin, while abiding in the way of focusing,
acts in some other way,
will not swiftly gain accomplishment,
nor will he attain accomplishment at all.

Śāntimati, listen.

The laying out of the king of maṇḍalas,
the sacred maṇḍala, by seeing which accomplishment is attained,
I shall explain to you, O you of excellent vows.
For the sake of the samaya, to embodied beings
the buddhas of the past have taught it.
I shall explain the rite for drawing it;

listen with complete attention.
With an enclosing wall five cubits all around,
set out four doors with porticoes.
Then what the mantrin does is to divide the maṇḍala into two tiers.
One should enter by the western door,
or else enter by the northern door.
With a mind endowed with compassion
one should make the enclosing wall likewise.
Having entered within, the mantrin calls the tathāgatas to mind and, to bring benefit to sentient beings, draws the king of maṇḍalas.

Śāntimati, listen.

The laying out of the king of maṇḍalas,
just as the Buddha taught it,
I shall relate to you in full;
listen with an undistracted mind.
In its center the wise one draws a supremely beautiful mudrā:
a great lotus with eight petals,
held to be variegated and beautiful.
The eastern petal is white,
and in the west it is green;
in the north one draws it red,
and in the south it is black.
The remaining petals, it is said,
the Victors have taught are to be drawn.
In its center, its heart,
one should draw an upright vase;
upon it a great lotus,
and on the lotus an upright vajra.
At its outer edge one draws a most beautiful circle of light rays.
Whatever maṇḍala it may be,
one should furnish it with its seed syllable.

Upon that the wise one sets a beautiful wheel of Dharma upon a white lotus,
and surrounds it with a ring of vajras.
In the northeast the learned one draws a supremely excellent mudrā:
on something like a lunar disk
he places a disk of a wish-fulfilling jewel.
Upon that one draws a supremely beautiful white lotus, peaceful and encircled with garlands of flames;
draw it as ever praised by the buddhas.
In the north one draws a conch,
and makes it white and brilliantly shining;
it is like Lokeśvara, Lord of the World;
draw this beautiful mudrā.
On the conch one draws a vajra,
and on the vajra a lotus.
Going to the south,
one should carefully draw a mudrā resembling a disk of wind,
and on it place wind.
Upon that is a lotus;
draw it with light like the fire at the end of time.
Upon that the wise one draws the vajra of Vajrapāṇi.
Going to the west,
one draws a most beautiful mudrā
called the utpala,
and places it upon a lotus.
This is the bodhisattva of great power called Mañjughoṣa.
Going to the southwest,
one should draw a single sword,
place it upon a white lotus,
and encircle it with light rays.
On both sides of the door, right and left,

one draws two kings of wrathful ones:
the protector Trailokyavijaya and the wrathful Candratilaka.
The wrathful Candratilaka holds a hammer;
Trailokyavijaya holds the vajra.
Then the mantrin, settled in equipoise, draws on the outer tier.

There, in the east, one draws Īśāna, lord of the bhūtas, with his retinue. In the north one draws Śakra, lord of the gods, with his retinue. In the south one draws Yama with his retinue. In the west one draws the Four Great Kings with their retinues. To the right and left of the door one draws the two, Durdharṣa and Abhimukha. In the four directions one should place the four great protectresses, namely: in the east, Abhayaṃdadā; in the north, Aparājitā; in the south one draws Marīcī with the mudrā of the noose; in the west one draws Bhayabhairavā with the mudrā of the club. Then in the four directions one places four vases with neck ribbons, and in the center one places a single vase.

Then the master,
in the manner of the former rite,
takes the disciple with great care,
and, just as in the section on the earlier maṇḍala, should give perfume and flowers.

Then the bodhisattva Śāntimati, his heart moved with longing by wonder, sat gazing at the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and spoke these words:

"How wonderful, great being, you who in all the buddha fields have shown a great proclamation!
What is the conduct you practice?
Having seen a maṇḍala such as this,
by which accomplishment is achieved,
you have taught this supreme and sacred Vajra Empowerment, most marvelous."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi said this to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, excellent, excellent! These words you have spoken are good. Śāntimati, the Tathāgata himself said this: 'Vajrapāṇi, this maṇḍala of Vajra Empowerment is supremely and most secret.'"

When he had said this, Śāntimati said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Oh, great being, how is what is called Vajra Empowerment taught?"

When he had said this, Vajrapāṇi said this to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, excellent, excellent that you have asked this! Śāntimati, listen to the far-reaching power of the Vajra Empowerment. Śāntimati, leave aside this maṇḍala: all the tathāgatas also gave me a vajra that has emerged from many samādhis and is accompanied by a retinue of many dhāraṇīs. This wisdom of all the tathāgatas is more ancient even than the buddhas. Śāntimati, this wisdom vajra the mantrin should give to any son or daughter of noble family with whom he is pleased, imagining it upon the head; this itself is their samaya. Therefore it is called Vajra Empowerment. Why is that? Because this vajra of the lord gives supreme protection, guards the teaching everywhere, is itself the Tathāgata, and destroys all obstructors. Therefore the mantrin should never, in any way whatsoever, give up the vajra praised by all the buddhas."

When he had said this, Śāntimati said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Vajrapāṇi, excellent, excellent that, wishing to benefit sentient beings, you have explained the maṇḍala of the supreme great secret!

This unsurpassed wisdom vajra,
the very self of the tathāgatas, abiding in the form of wisdom,
the foolish do not know."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi said this to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, I shall explain the great secret to you. Śāntimati, do not show this king of maṇḍalas to anyone who lacks faith. Do not give this samaya to anyone except those who are completely pure."

This concludes the section on the Vajra Empowerment from the Vajrapāṇi Empowerment.

Then at that time the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi surveyed the maṇḍala of the entire assembly and said to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, in the true teaching of what is meaningful in the vajra maṇḍala for bodhisattvas who practice the bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra, there are vast arrays of mudrās. They are the signs of the definitive emergence of meaning; they have arisen from the supreme vajra and manifest in various kinds of shapes; they fully satisfy the realms of sentient beings, with their differing dispositions, just as they are. Emanating bodily forms adorned with variety, in the differing destinies, families, places of birth, colors and shapes, the differing conducts, the differing dispositions, the differing modes and etymological expressions, and the differing paths of speech, they bring beings definitively into the sameness of body, speech and mind in the infinite, vast world systems that are definitively taught. They possess bodies generated by the dharmadhātu, and they arise from the magical display of the bodhisattvas. For the sake of bodhisattvas who practice the bodhisattva conduct through the gateway of secret mantra, I shall explain them to you; listen."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said to the bodhisattva great being Vajrapāṇi: "Son of noble family, this is the time for it; this is the occasion for it. Son of noble family, please explain the vast array of mudrās of the gateway of the ornament of the heart of all the tathāgatas." Then that entire assembly spoke with one voice: "Bodhisattva, if you know that the time has come, this is the time, this is the occasion."

Then at that time the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi entered into equipoise in the samādhi called the Ornament Essence of All the Tathāgatas. As soon as he had entered into equipoise, the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi at that time spoke the vast array of mudrās that arise from the natural outflow of the wisdom of all the tathāgatas and are the ornament of all the tathāgatas:

First, join the two hands with hollowed palms, place the two ring fingers inside, and put the two middle fingers side by side and raise them upright. Place the two index fingers level with the third joint, held just short of touching. Raise the two little fingers and the two thumbs upright as well, inclined toward them. This is the vajra mudrā of all the samayas, and its mantra is namaḥsarbatathāgatesamayabajrahūṃ.

Then all the tathāgatas and all the bodhisattvas, their eyes opened wide with wonder, said, "Great sage, this samaya of all the buddhas and bodhisattvas is marvelous!

Likewise the śrāvakas of the Victor, and whatever pratyekabuddhas there are in the world,
solitary like the rhinoceros,
those of great magical power such as Brahmā, whatever gods of the world there are,
and the others, the yakṣas, gandharvas,

garuḍas, kinnaras and the rest,
rākṣasas, pretas, oppressors,
and those known as shadow-oppressors and causers of forgetting,
all of them spoke these words:
"The sacred samaya is marvelous!
Those who transgress this samaya of all the buddhas, the protectors, those possessed of hostile minds, their heads
the glorious Vajradhara, who benefits all sentient beings,
always crushes with the vajras,
fierce in their wild garlands of flame.
Those who transgress the samaya will surely go to the lower realms and the like.
Having displeased the protectors, the bodhisattvas,
and the perfect buddhas,
they have no accomplishment in this life,
nor any fruit here in other lives.
If you desire the supreme fruit,
therefore, in every way,
the intelligent should make a firm effort and guard this samaya."

From this very mudrā, joining the two index fingers in that same position is the mudrā of all the Vajradharas. Swiftly spreading the two index fingers apart again is the mudrā of Vajra Jhigara. Spreading the two index fingers out sideways is the mudrā of the all-proclaiming fire. From this very mudrā, placing the two thumbs inside is the mudrā of the vajra fence. From that very mudrā, bending the two index fingers, pointing them downward and placing them together with the thumbs is the mudrā of the vajra kīla. From this very mudrā, bending the two little fingers and keeping the rest as they were is the mudrā of the vajra net. From that very mudrā, bringing all the fingers together in the manner of a blossom just opening is the mudrā of the vajra utpala. From the mudrā of the vajra utpala, embracing all the fingers with the two index fingers and pressing the two thumbs at the base of the index fingers is the mudrā of the vajra bracelet. From the mudrā of the vajra bracelet, pressing the two thumbs against the sides of the index fingers is the mudrā of the wrathful

Vajra Mouth. From that very mudrā of the Vajra Mouth, placing the two index fingers on the inner side and raising them is the mudrā of the vajra fang. From that very mudrā, drawing the two thumbs slightly in along the sides of the index fingers is the mudrā of the heart of all the tathāgatas. Bending the two little fingers inward and raising the two ring fingers upright side by side is the mudrā of all the bodhisattvas. From that very mudrā, embracing the two ring fingers crosswise with the two little fingers and keeping the rest as they were is the mudrā of the vajra that fully protects all beings. From this very mudrā, embracing the two ring fingers with the two middle fingers and keeping the rest as they were is the mudrā of the Blessed Lady Māmakī. From that very mudrā, pressing the two thumbs at the base of the ring fingers is the mudrā of Vajra Grace. From this very mudrā of Vajra Grace, spreading the two index fingers is the mudrā of the vajra flower.

Making both hands into fists and bending the two index fingers in the shape of a vajra, with the two middle fingers side by side, is the mudrā of the vajra trident. Likewise, interlacing the fingers of both hands in reverse, with the two index fingers side by side, is the mudrā of the vajra tip. From this very mudrā, pressing down the right thumb with the left and keeping the rest as before is the mudrā of the vajra chain. From this very mudrā, spreading the two middle fingers side by side and placing the two thumbs facing their sides is the mudrā of the vajra source. From this very mudrā, extending the two ring fingers is the mudrā of the Vajra Clawed One. From this very mudrā, extending the two little fingers and hiding the two thumbs is the mudrā of the Vajra Beauty of the Family.

Placing the two hands side by side at the heart, putting the two thumbs inside and extending all the rest is the mudrā of the vajra canopy. From this very mudrā, bending the two ring fingers and the two little fingers inward as well is the mudrā of the vajra crest. From that very mudrā, placing the two index fingers on the tips of the two thumbs and keeping the rest as before is the mudrā of the vajra hand. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, shaping all the fingers like a bell, and placing the two ring fingers inside and moving them is the mudrā of the vajra bell. Likewise, making both hands into fists and raising the two little fingers side by side is the mudrā of the vajra great drum. From that very mudrā, raising the two thumbs and bending the two little fingers inward is the mudrā of the vajra hammer. From that same mudrā, raising the two middle fingers side by side in the manner of an embrace and bending the two thumbs slightly is the mudrā of the vajra club.

From this one, placing the two thumbs inside is the mudrā of the Blue Club. From that one, bending the two index fingers in against the sides of the middle fingers and pressing them close is the mudrā of Vajra Red Body. Likewise, making both hands into fists, squeezing them in a circling motion and raising the thumbs is the mudrā of Vajra Kīlikīli.

From that very mudrā, bending the two thumbs inward, raising the ring fingers and bending them at the third joint in a beckoning gesture is the mudrā of the youth Subāhu. From that very mudrā, putting the two index fingers side by side and bending them at the third joint is the mudrā of the youth Vajrasena. From this very mudrā, raising the two middle fingers side by side and keeping the rest as before is the mudrā of the youth Vajra Uṣṇīṣa. From this very mudrā, bending the left index finger inward is the mudrā of the youth Vajra Diadem, the playful servant. Likewise, turning both palms upward, raising the two ring fingers and the two thumbs, and bending the tips of the two middle fingers in the center is the mudrā of Nalakūbara. From that very mudrā, bending the two little fingers inward and extending the two ring fingers straight out is the mudrā of the wrathful Candratilaka. Making the right hand into a fist and placing it between the eyebrows, setting the index and middle fingers against the forehead in the manner of eyes, is the mudrā of Vajra Fearsome Gaze. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms and embracing the two middle fingers, placed side by side, with the two index fingers is the mudrā of the wish-fulfilling jewel of Samantabhadra and the others.

Clenching both hands into fists in the manner of a bracelet, extending the two index fingers and bending them just slightly, is the mudrā of the club of Mahābala. From that very mudrā, joining the tips of the two index fingers to make a circle is the mudrā of the vajra noose. Crossing those same index fingers and joining them is the mudrā of the vajra bracelet. From that very mudrā, bending the left index finger just slightly is the mudrā of the vajra shaft.

Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, bending the two index fingers into the palms, and bending the two middle fingers at the third joint so that they point downward is the mudrā called Vajra hūṃ. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, bending the two ring fingers and the two little fingers inward, and embracing the two thumbs with the two index fingers is the mudrā of the vajra uṣṇīṣa. Gathering in all the fingers of the right hand and extending the middle finger just slightly is the mudrā of all the vajra uṣṇīṣas.

From this very mudrā, extending the two index fingers is the mudrā of the vajra boundary. From this very mudrā, raising the middle and index fingers side by side is the mudrā of the vajra sword. From this very mudrā, bringing them close to the two thumbs and keeping the rest as before is the mudrā of the vajra female messengers.

Likewise, clenching both hands into fists, holding the left fist as though poised to strike, and bringing the right fist close to the chest while threatening with the index finger is the mudrā of Abhimukha. Clenching both hands into fists as if whirling them, stretching out the legs, and raising the fists upward as if about to strike is the mudrā of Durdharṣa.

Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms and bending the two little fingers and the two thumbs inward is the mudrā of the cudgel of Vaiśravaṇa. From that very mudrā, forming the two index fingers into the loop of a noose is the noose, the mudrā of the son of Vāsuki. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms and embracing all the fingers with the two index fingers is the mudrā of the wish-fulfilling jewel of Kṣitigarbha. From this very mudrā, joining the two index fingers in the shape of a sword is the mudrā of the sword of Ākāśagarbha. From the sword mudrā, bending the two ring fingers inward is the mudrā of Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin. From that sword mudrā, bending the two thumbs inward is the mudrā of the Victor Śāntimati.

Likewise, holding both hands with the palms turned up and raising the two ring fingers is the mudrā of the flower. From this very mudrā, bringing the two middle fingers to the palms is the mudrā of scented ointment. From that very mudrā, bringing the two thumbs to the two middle fingers is the mudrā of incense. From this very mudrā, embracing the two thumbs with the two little fingers is the mudrā of the water offering. Extending the two thumbs is the mudrā of the lamp. Hiding the thumbs and drawing in the index fingers is the mudrā of giving the torma.

Likewise, joining both hands together, joining the thumbs and index fingers together, and extending the two ring fingers is the mudrā of Vajra Sarasvatī. From the mudrā of Vajra Sarasvatī, bending the two index fingers inward and turning the two little fingers toward the thumbs is the mudrā of vajra laughter. From the mudrā of vajra laughter, raising the two little fingers is the mudrā of the vajra eyebrow. From the mudrā of the vajra eyebrow, bending the two index fingers in the shape of eyes and setting them against the sides of the middle fingers is the mudrā of the vajra eye. From the mudrā of the vajra eye, extending the two middle fingers is the mudrā of the vajra ear. From the mudrā of the vajra ear, bending the left middle finger is the mudrā of the vajra navel. From the mudrā of the vajra navel, bending the right middle finger and extending the left is the mudrā of the vajra cheek. From the mudrā of the vajra cheek, extending the two index fingers, bending their tips and joining them is the mudrā of the vajra portico. From the mudrā of the vajra portico, raising the left thumb and bending the right is the mudrā of the vajra waist. From the mudrā of the vajra waist, separating the two ring fingers and spreading them outward is the mudrā of the vajra sign. From the mudrā of the vajra sign, bending the two ring fingers just slightly and pointing them downward is the mudrā of the vajra thigh. From the mudrā of the vajra thigh, extending the left ring finger just slightly is the mudrā of the vajra calf. From the mudrā of the vajra calf, extending the right ring finger and bending the left inward is the mudrā of the vajra foot.

Crossing both hands and binding them in the manner of the vajra bond, and holding the two index fingers in the threatening gesture, is the mudrā of the vajra hand. From the mudrā of the vajra hand, bending the left index finger is the mudrā of all the male servants. From this very mudrā, bending the right index finger is the mudrā of all the female servants. From that very mudrā, opening out and extending the right middle finger is the mudrā of all the male messengers. From this very mudrā, opening out and extending the left middle finger is the mudrā of all the female messengers. Forming both hands into the vajra bond as before and raising the left thumb is the mudrā of all the male doorkeepers. From this very mudrā, extending the right thumb is the mudrā of all the female doorkeepers.

Likewise, opening both hands, joining the palms as though they meet, and placing them on the crown of the head is the mudrā of the Youth Born from the Crown. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms and extending the right thumb is the mudrā of all the vajra gods. From this very mudrā, drawing in the right thumb and extending the left is the mudrā of vajra song. As before, joining the hands with hollowed palms and bending the right index finger is the mudrā of the vajra yakṣa. From the mudrā of the vajra yakṣa, bending the two middle fingers and extending the two index fingers is the mudrā of all the vajra yakṣiṇīs. From that very mudrā, extending the two middle fingers is the mudrā of the vajra gandharva. From the mudrā of the vajra gandharva, bending the right ring finger is the mudrā of the vajra asura. From that very mudrā, extending the right ring finger is the mudrā of the vajra garuḍa. From this very mudrā, bending both little fingers is the mudrā of the vajra kinnara. From that very mudrā, bending the left index finger is the mudrā of the vajra mahoraga. From that very mudrā, extending it is the mudrā of vajra fire. From that very mudrā, bending the two middle fingers is the mudrā of the vajra rākṣasa.

From that very mudrā, extending them is the mudrā of the vajra rākṣasī. From this very mudrā, bending the two ring fingers is the mudrā of the vajra ḍākinī. From that very mudrā, extending them is the mudrā of the vajra subduer. From that very mudrā, bending the two little fingers is the mudrā of the vajra shadow-subduer. Extending them is the mudrā of the vajra apasmāra.

Joining both hands back to back in the manner of hollowed palms, raising all the fingers, and setting the two thumbs against their respective palms is the mudrā of the Great Fierce Vajra. From that very mudrā, placing the right thumb in its own position is the mudrā of the vajra that stops birth. Likewise, placing the left thumb in its natural position is the mudrā of the vajra that stops aging. Likewise, raising the two thumbs is the mudrā of the vajra that stops sickness. From that very mudrā, placing the two thumbs beside the two index fingers is the mudrā of the vajra that stops poverty. From this very mudrā, opening the two index fingers and joining them with the two thumbs is the mudrā of the vajra that stops decline. From that very mudrā, embracing the left index finger with the right thumb, and likewise embracing the right index finger with the left thumb, is the mudrā of the vajra that stops death.

Joining both hands with hollowed palms, raising the two middle fingers side by side, embracing the ring and little fingers with the index fingers, and placing the two thumbs beside them is the mudrā of the uṣṇīṣa of the perfect buddhas. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, bending the two ring fingers and the two little fingers inward, setting the middle fingers side by side, bending the two index fingers and joining them at the sides, and placing the two thumbs beside them is the mudrā of the uṣṇīṣa of all the buddhas. From this very uṣṇīṣa mudrā, extending the two index fingers is the mudrā of the vajra of supreme knowledge. From this very mudrā, raising the two ring fingers is the mudrā of Śumbha, the King of Vidyās. From that very mudrā, bending the two index fingers and holding them so that they do not touch the middle fingers by about the width of a barleycorn is the mudrā of Susiddhikara.

Likewise, joining both hands together and spreading all the fingers in the manner of a bell is the lotus mudrā of Avalokiteśvara. Forming both hands like an opened lotus, as though meeting, is the mudrā of Pāṇḍaravāsinī, the White-Robed One. Forming that same mudrā as though slightly opened is the mudrā of Mahāsthāmaprāpta. As before, joining both hands together, bending the middle, ring and little fingers inward, setting the two index fingers side by side, and joining the two thumbs beside them is the mudrā of noble Tārā. Likewise, joining both hands back to back, embracing each other, the fingers interlocked and bound in the manner of a chain, is the mudrā of the vajra chain.

The Empowerment of Noble Vajrapāṇi, the ninth section.

Then all of them, the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, mahoragas and the rest, bowed to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi and said, "Blessed One, for the sake of the bodhisattvas who practice the secret mantra door of bodhisattva conduct and strive to accomplish the siddhis, we too shall offer in this great maṇḍala our own mudrās, which serve as signs. Through them, those sons and daughters of good family will swiftly attain the siddhis."

When they had said this, the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, said to that entire assembly, "Sons of good family, you have set out for the benefit of many beings. Excellent, excellent! Therefore, sons of good family, declare your own mudrās in full."

Then Brahmā, lord of the Sahā world, declared his own mudrā: "One makes the right hand into a fist, extends three fingers, and joins the index finger and thumb together. Blessed One, this is my mudrā of Brahmā's club."

Then Śakra (Indra), lord of the gods, declared his own mudrā: "One joins both hands with hollowed palms, puts the ring and little fingers inside, raises the two middle fingers side by side, and places the two index fingers and thumbs beside them. This is my vajra mudrā, which accomplishes the aims of all rites."

Then the Four Great Kings declared their own mudrās: "One clenches both hands into fists and raises the two thumbs; this is the mudrā of the cudgel of the great Vaiśravaṇa. From this very mudrā, placing the two index fingers above the two thumbs is the mudrā of the club of Virūḍhaka. From the club mudrā, forming the two little fingers in the manner of a noose is the noose mudrā of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. From the noose mudrā, bending the two thumbs inward and raising the two index fingers side by side is the vajra mudrā of Virūpākṣa."

Then Pāñcika said this: "Clenching both hands into fists and raising the two middle fingers side by side is the mudrā of the spear of Pāñcika. From this very mudrā, raising the two thumbs and the two little fingers as well, in the manner of a spear, is the mudrā of the trident of Āṭavaka. Clenching the fists as before and raising the two thumbs is the mudrā of the hammer of the Eight-Armed One. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, joining the two middle fingers back to back, bending the two index fingers and joining them to the third joint of those same fingers, joining the two thumbs to the sides of these two, and placing the remaining fingers side by side is the mudrā of Jambhala Varuṇa. From this very mudrā, bending the two thumbs inward is the mudrā of all the yakṣas. Raising those same thumbs is the mudrā of all the yakṣiṇīs. From that very mudrā, placing the two index fingers above the thumbs is the mudrā of all the gods. From that very mudrā, opening the two middle fingers and joining them on the inner side is the mudrā of all the gandharvas. Bending those same fingers inward is the mudrā of all the vidyādharas. Raising them, separating them in the manner of tongues of flame, and bending the two little fingers inward is the mudrā of all the asuras.

From this very mudrā, separating the two ring fingers slightly as well and keeping the rest as before is the mudrā of all the rākṣasas. Covering the face with the left hand and licking the palm with the tongue is the mudrā of all the ḍākinīs. Likewise, joining both hands together, interlacing all the fingers and raising them is the mudrā of all the asuras. Turning both hands palm upward and making them into a curved shape is the mudrā of all the nāgas.

Likewise, joining both hands back to back with the two thumbs embracing each other is the mudrā of the discus of Viṣṇu. Clenching both hands into fists and raising the two middle fingers side by side is the mudrā of the spear of Śaṃkara. From the spear mudrā, putting the two index fingers and the two ring fingers inside and raising the rest is the mudrā of the brandished trident of the Averter of Austerities. Clenching the fists as before, setting the middle fingers side by side and bending them at the third joint is the mudrā of the short spear of Kārttikeya, son of the Kṛttikās. Clenching the right hand into a fist and raising the thumb in the ordinary way is the mudrā of the club of Yama. Likewise, clenching the fist and extending the index finger is the mudrā of the short spear of Raudrī, the consort of Rudra. Forming that same hand as though holding a lotus and placing the index finger at the tip of the thumb is the mudrā of the lotus of Brāhmī, the consort of Brahmā. Touching the thumb to the little finger and forming the remaining three fingers like a banner is the mudrā of the vajra of Aindrī, the consort of Indra. Turning that same hand downward in the manner of a bell is the mudrā of the bell of Kālarātrī, the Black Night. Likewise, clenching the fist and raising the index finger is the mudrā of the crest of the Lord of Death. Clenching that same hand into a fist and raising the thumb slightly, curved, is the mudrā of Vārāhī, the consort of the Boar. Raising that same hand forcefully is the mudrā of the skull of Cāmuṇḍī.

Likewise, clenching the right hand into a fist and setting the ring finger and thumb side by side is the mudrā of the shadow-subduing grahas. From that very mudrā, setting the thumbs side by side is the mudrā of the female shadow-subduers. From this very mudrā, joining the little finger as well is the mudrā of the apasmāra graha. Joining the index finger there as well is the mudrā of the subduing grahas. From that very mudrā, drawing out the little finger is the mudrā of the graha of sorcery. "Clenching the left hand into a fist and raising the thumb in the ordinary way is the mudrā of the cudgel of Tumburu," so the Victors have taught.

Likewise, clenching the fist, putting the thumb inside and extending the index finger is the mudrā of the spear of Jayā. Likewise, clenching the fist and raising the middle finger is the mudrā of the sword of Vijayā. Likewise, clenching the fist and raising the ring finger is the vajra mudrā of Ajitā. Likewise, clenching the fist and raising the little finger is the mudrā of the wheel of Aparājitā.

Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, extending all the fingers like feathers, raising the two thumbs in the middle and holding them unmoving is the mudrā of the wings of the garuḍa Vinata. From this very mudrā, raising the right index finger is the mudrā of the son of Vāsuki, king of the nāgas. Likewise, the mudrās of all the nāgas should be applied in sequence as is fitting; these are the mudrās of all the nāgas.

Turning the faces of both hands toward oneself and, in the manner of lightning flashing out, touching the fingertips together and scattering them in the four directions is the mudrā of all lightning. Likewise, joining both hands together and holding them in the manner of a garland is the mudrā of all the clouds of the rainy season. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms and touching the tips of the two middle fingers is the mudrā of the noose of Varuṇa. From that very mudrā, putting the two thumbs inside is the mudrā of the Moon. From this very mudrā, raising the two middle fingers is the mudrā of the Sun. Putting the two little fingers inside is the mudrā of Sarasvatī. From this very mudrā, putting the two ring fingers inside and raising the two little fingers is the mudrā of all the great rivers. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms and then separating them, holding the left hand as though holding a water flask and placing the right in the gesture of granting fearlessness, is the mudrā of Agni. Showing the right hand while first uttering oṃ is the mudrā of all the sages. Raising both hands and bending the index and little fingers just slightly is the mudrā of all the mountains. Likewise, joining both hands, crossing the two thumbs and crossing the two index fingers as well is the mudrā of the great encircling mountain range.

Seated on a yogic seat, one who is wise places both hands at the level of the navel as though holding an alms bowl; this is the mudrā of the alms bowl. Likewise, raising the right hand in the manner of granting fearlessness is the mudrā of granting fearlessness. Likewise, turning the right hand palm upward and holding it in the manner of granting the supreme is the mudrā of granting the supreme. Clenching the right hand into a fist, extending the index finger and holding it at the forehead with a wrathful frown: this mudrā is the mudrā that terrifies Māra. Likewise, clenching the right hand into a fist, raising the middle and ring fingers and placing the thumb beside them is the mudrā of the eye.

Likewise, joining both hands, interlacing them, clenching the fingers into fists, raising the two index fingers, bending them and joining them in the shape of a circle: this is the mudrā of the noose. Likewise, joining both hands, clenching them into fists, raising the index finger, bending its first joint, and holding the rest crossed is the mudrā of the hook. From that hook mudrā, bending the two middle fingers and holding them against it is the mudrā of the tathāgatagarbha. From that very mudrā, extending the ring finger and keeping the rest as they are is the mudrā of the navel of the tathāgatas. From that very mudrā, extending the little finger and keeping the rest as they are is the mudrā of the waist. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, bending the two index fingers and putting them inside, bending the two ring fingers, the two little fingers and the two thumbs just slightly, and setting the two middle fingers side by side: this is the mudrā of the sheath.

From this very mudrā, raising the two ring fingers upward is the mudrā of sealing the great vajra boundary. From that very mudrā, bending the two middle fingers and extending the thumbs is the mudrā of the great protection. Likewise, extending the two index fingers and putting the two thumbs inside is the mudrā of the vajra blazing all around. Likewise, clenching both hands into fists, extending all the fingers and embracing them from the sides with the two index fingers is the mudrā of the vajra armor. From that very mudrā, joining the two ring fingers and the two thumbs is the mudrā of the vajra tongue. From that very mudrā, bending the two index fingers and the two ring fingers and joining them inside, raising the two thumbs and bending them just slightly, holding the middle fingers turned toward the sides, and keeping the two ring fingers as before is the mudrā of the vajra mouth. From that very mudrā, putting the two index fingers inside, bending them and raising them is the mudrā of the vajra fangs. From that very mudrā, spreading the two index fingers and bending the first joint is the mudrā of the vajra of the discriminating knowledges.

Likewise, joining both hands in the manner of hollowed palms and putting the two thumbs and the two little fingers inside, joined together, is the mudrā of the vajra that holds the ten powers. From that very mudrā, bending the tips of the two thumbs and joining them is the mudrā of the vajra of the applications of mindfulness. From that very mudrā, placing the two ring fingers above the two thumbs is the mudrā of the vajra that realizes all wisdom. From that very mudrā, bending them and placing them beside the two index fingers is the mudrā of loving-kindness. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, embracing the two ring fingers with the two middle fingers, placing the two index fingers above the two thumbs, and keeping the rest as before is the mudrā of the vajra of granting the supreme.

Clenching the left hand into a fist, bending the index finger and bringing the ring finger close to it is the mudrā of the vajra hook of all the female doorkeepers. From that very mudrā, bending all the fingers just slightly and raising the middle finger is the mudrā of the utpala vajra. Likewise, clenching the right hand into a fist, raising the index and middle fingers and making them slightly curved is the mudrā of the single-edged vajra sword with a hilt.

Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms and bending the first joint of the two index fingers is the mudrā of Gaganāmala, Stainless as the Sky. From this very mudrā, crossing the two thumbs is the mudrā of Born from the Feet of the Tathāgata. Putting those same thumbs inside is the mudrā of the Wearer of Variegated Robes. Likewise, putting the two index fingers inside is the mudrā of Entering and Abiding in the Equality of All Phenomena. From this very mudrā, holding the two middle fingers crossed is the mudrā of Abiding Free of Elaboration. Likewise, joining both hands and joining the two thumbs and the two little fingers is the mudrā of Born from the Armor of the Tathāgata. From this very mudrā, raising the middle and ring fingers is the mudrā of the Great Proclaimer. Likewise, joining both hands, interlacing the fingers, forming them like the moon and binding them, and setting the two thumbs against the sides is the mudrā of Gaganāmala, Stainless as the Sky. From this very mudrā, drawing out the two little fingers and touching their tips to the two thumbs is the mudrā of Emerging from the Ten Powers. From this very mudrā, drawing out the two ring fingers and keeping the two little fingers as before is the mudrā of Overcoming Infinite Space.

From the mudrā of the vajra of granting the supreme, placing the two thumbs in the palms is the mudrā of Delightful to Behold. Drawing out the thumbs and bringing them close to the index fingers is the mudrā of Cāritramati. From this very mudrā, joining the middle fingers and the thumbs is the jewel mudrā of Sthiramati. From this very mudrā, extending the two index fingers is the mudrā of Ratnākara. From this very mudrā, touching the tips of the thumbs and ring fingers and extending the middle fingers is the mudrā of Ratnamudrāhasta. From this very mudrā, joining the thumbs and little fingers and bending the index fingers is the mudrā of Ever Abiding in Diligence.

Likewise, joining both hands, putting the two ring fingers inside, pressing the tips of the two middle fingers with the two index fingers and joining the two thumbs at the sides is the mudrā of the wheel of the Blessed One, the great king, the Cakravartin. From this very mudrā, putting the two thumbs inside is the mudrā of Great Laughter. From this very mudrā, extending the index fingers is the mudrā of the great blazing light rays of this same Blessed One. Embracing the two middle fingers with the two index fingers in the manner of armor is the mudrā of the armor of the Blessed One. Bending the right index finger is the mudrā of the ears of this same Blessed One. Bending the right index finger and extending the left is the mudrā of his eyebrows. Bending both index fingers is the mudrā of his nose. Likewise, embracing the two middle fingers and the two ring fingers with the two index fingers in the manner of armor, bending them just slightly and bringing the two thumbs close to them is the mudrā of the uṣṇīṣa of the Blessed One, the great king, the Cakravartin. Turning that same mudrā downward and placing it between the eyebrows is the mudrā of the ūrṇā hair of the Blessed One. Likewise, extending the index fingers, raising the thumbs and bending them is the mudrā of the mouth of the Blessed One. From this very mudrā, putting the two thumbs inside and raising them again is the mudrā of the fangs. From that very mudrā, putting the two ring fingers inside and raising them outward is the mudrā of the tongue. From this very mudrā, joining the two index fingers at the sides in the manner of a ring is the mudrā of the cheeks. From this very mudrā, putting the two index fingers inside and joining them beside the two middle fingers is the mudrā of the kosko. From the uṣṇīṣa mudrā, raising the two little fingers and placing them at the heart is the mudrā of the śrīvatsa. Likewise, joining both hands in the manner of hollowed palms and joining the two index fingers in the manner of rings against the sides of the two middle fingers is the mudrā of the eyes of the Blessed One. From this very mudrā, putting the two middle fingers inside is the mudrā of the navel.

Putting the two ring fingers inside as well is the great mudrā of the speech of the Blessed One. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, bending both index fingers inside the two little fingers and holding them in the shape of a vajra is the mudrā of Born from the Vajra of the Blessed One. From that very mudrā, keeping the two little fingers as before and placing the two index fingers at the sides in the shape of a vajra is the mudrā of Born from the Vajra Limbs. From this very mudrā of Born from the Vajra Limbs, bringing the two thumbs close to the two middle fingers and keeping the rest as before is the mudrā of Hard as a Vajra.

Likewise, crossing both hands, turning the left downward and the right upward, touching the tips of the thumbs and the two little fingers, and holding the remaining fingers in the shape of a trident is the mudrā of the vajra of both. From this very mudrā, binding the little fingers and thumbs in the manner of the vajra bond is the mudrā of the vajra bracelet, which is the mudrā of sealing the boundary. From this very mudrā, drawing in both the right and left index fingers is the mudrā of the vajra that binds the ground. From this very mudrā, extending the index fingers as before and bending the middle fingers of both the right and left hands is the mudrā of the vajra garland. From the mudrā of the vajra garland, extending the middle fingers and bending the right ring finger is the mudrā of the vajra that holds the whole body. From that mudrā of the vajra that holds the whole body, extending the ring finger and bending the first joint of the index finger is the mudrā of the vajra that destroys the sky. Likewise, placing the index finger of the left hand also in the palm in the manner of a peg is the mudrā of the kīla vajra. From the mudrā of the kīla vajra, drawing in all the fingers is the mudrā of vajra auspiciousness. From the mudrā of vajra auspiciousness, raising all the fingers and holding them so is the mudrā of the vajra canopy. From that very mudrā, holding the fingers apart is the mudrā of the vajra trident. From that very mudrā, gathering them together in the manner of a pestle is the mudrā of the vajra pestle. From the mudrā of the vajra pestle, bending the middle and ring fingers of the right hand and raising the index finger in the manner of a club is the mudrā of the vajra club. Joining the middle finger to it as well and extending it is the mudrā of the vajra sword. From the mudrā of the vajra sword, bending the first joint is the mudrā of the wheel vajra. From the mudrā of the wheel vajra, bending the two index fingers behind the middle finger and joining them is the mudrā of the vajra iron arrow. From the mudrā of the vajra iron arrow, joining the ring finger to it as well is the mudrā of the single-pointed vajra. From the mudrā of the single-pointed vajra, raising and extending the middle finger and bending one of them in the shape of a noose is the mudrā of the vajra noose.

Likewise, gathering three fingers of the left hand together is the mudrā of the vajra tortoise. From the mudrā of the vajra tortoise, raising the index finger is the mudrā of the vajra that destroys all the machines of the asuras. From this very mudrā, extending two fingers and drawing in the index finger is the mudrā of the vajra that summons and paralyzes. Likewise, joining both hands with hollowed palms, embracing the two ring fingers with the two middle fingers, and joining the two thumbs and the two index fingers at the sides is the mudrā of the vajra abode. From that very mudrā:

Extending both little fingers
And raising the two thumbs:
This is the pestle with a slender waist,
Held to be unobstructed everywhere.

From this very mudrā, bending the two index fingers close beside it is the mudrā of the vajra-adorned limbs.

Then the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, in order to accomplish fully the maṇḍala of the Unfailing Vajra, also began to explain the mudrās of great secrecy, the limbs and those arising from the limbs. They are an easy means of accomplishing siddhis for the bodhisattvas who practice the conduct of bodhisattvas through the door of secret mantra and are blessed by the vajra. They know the conduct of all the buddhas, and they are the nonconceptual, manifest, perfect awakening. Apart from those blessed by Vajrasattva, those who have served the Victors of the past, those who have fully realized the Great Vehicle, and those blessed by Vajradhara who have heard or retained them, not even all the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas can know them, let alone others, worldly people and non-Buddhists (tīrthikas), knowing or cognizing them.

Then Vajradhara gazed upon the maṇḍala of the entire assembly with the two eyes of great love and great compassion, blessed it with the blessing of the maṇḍala of the Unfailing Vajra, and said, "Sons of good family, there is a Dharma door called the Vast Maṇḍala of Mudrās Arising from the Wisdom That Understands the Tathāgata from a Mere Hint, which liberates the infinite realm of beings."

When he had said this, at that moment a light ray called Protecting All Beings, together with a retinue of many hundreds of light rays, came forth from between his eyebrows. Having come forth, it stirred the aspirations of all beings throughout all the oceans of world systems that extend as far as the realm of space, and blessed the realm of beings with the vajra blessing of the Three Jewels. Then it circled the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi once more and entered the ūrṇā hair itself.

Then the entire assembly spoke with one voice: "Great being, this is the time; this is the moment. Therefore we shall bestow siddhis on the bodhisattvas who practice the conduct of bodhisattvas through the door of secret mantra. We shall bestow protection, perfect splendor and the rest."

Then Vajradhara spoke of the mudrās of the limbs, together with the great secret:

The wise one should first bind
the mudrā called samaya, then call to mind the heart-essence of the buddhas and move the right hand.

oṃ The wisdom mudrā of the perfect buddhas destroys the city of ignorance; it is called the mudrā of the setting out of vajra wisdom.

Raising the right hand,
if one moves it all around toward the upper direction,
the hostile will be driven away,
and even those who stir will be made to tremble.

Having formed it in the manner of a closed fist and raised the right hand,
the yogin should place it at the crown of the head.
The syllable kha, with a garland of blazing light and with a bindu as well, should be set upon the top of the head,

with a garland of flame tongues blazing all around,
radiant everywhere in the ten directions.
The uṣṇīṣa mudrā, the great mudrā,
abides upon the uṣṇīṣa.

The mantra is: vajra ho khaṃ svāhā

With that same hand, the index finger raised, lifting it, on both eyebrows
the mantrin should set the syllable ha
furnished with the double mark.

The mantra is: vajra ho tu ma svāhā This is the vajra eyebrow mudrā.

In the manner of raising the middle finger,
lifting that same hand,
one should set on both eyes the syllable ha
furnished with the double mark.

The mantra is: vajra ho hrīḥ svāhā This is the vajra eye mudrā.

Lifting that same hand,
the powerful syllable ha,
in the manner of raising the little finger,
should be set upon the vajra nose.

The mantra is: vajra ho ha svāhā This is the vajra nose mudrā.

In the manner of raising the little finger,
lifting that same hand,
the mantrin should set on both ears
the syllable he.

The mantra is: vajra ha ho svāhā This is the vajra ear mudrā.

Raising the thumb, with that same hand lifted, on both cheeks
the one who keeps the vows should set the syllable ha with the double mark.

The mantra is: vajra ho ho svāhā This is the vajra cheek mudrā.

The mantrin, joining middle finger and thumb,
lifting that same hand,
should set the syllable ha with the double mark upon both lips.

The mantra is: vajra ho hūṃ svāhā This is the vajra lip mudrā.

The knower of mantra, raising the thumb,
lifting that same hand,
should set the syllable ha with a bindu at the place of the tongue.

The mantra is: vajra ho haṃ svāhā This is the vajra tongue mudrā.

Lifting the left hand,
the mantrin should set on both breasts
the syllable ra,
furnished with the double mark.

The mantra is: vajra ha hor svāhā This is the vajra breast mudrā.

That same left hand should be placed at the throat;
the syllable ra with the double mark should be set there with the tip of the index finger.

The mantra is: vajra ho hri svāhā This is the vajra śrīvatsa mudrā.

Lifting that same hand,
the wise one should place it toward the armpits;
the syllable ra with a bindu should be properly set there.

vajra ho ra ma svāhā This is the vajra armpit mudrā.

Lifting that same hand,
in the manner of the ring finger,
two syllables ra, one stacked upon the other,
should be set upon both hands.

vajra ho rā rā svāhā This is the vajra virtue mudrā.

Lifting that same hand,
the mantrin should set upon the heart,
just as it should be,
the syllable ra bearing the vowel sign o.

vajra ho ro svāhā This is the vajra heart mudrā.

Forming the right hand in the gesture of granting the supreme,
the wise one, with the index finger, should set the syllable ba with the double mark
two finger-widths from the place of the heart.

vajra ho bha svāhā This is the vajra limb mudrā.

Lowering that same hand,
with the middle finger, two syllables pa,
furnished with the double mark,
should be set on the left flank.

vajra ho bhi bi svāhā This is the vajra flank mudrā.

Lifting that same hand,
the wise one, on the right flank, should set the syllable ba with a bindu with the little finger.

The mantra is: vajra ho paṃ svāhā This is the vajra mudrā of the right flank.

Lifting that same hand,
with thumb and middle finger together,
the syllable ba with a bindu, marked with the vowel sign o, should be set at the navel.

The mantra is: vajra ho baṃ svāhā This is the vajra navel mudrā.

Lifting that same hand,
two finger-widths below the navel,
two syllables ba with a bindu should be set with the tip of the index finger.

The mantra is: vajra ho baṃ baṃ svāhā This is the vajra mudrā of the lovely Moon.

Lifting that same hand,
the intelligent one should set at the waist,
in the manner of the middle finger,
the syllable ba furnished with the double mark.

The mantra is: vajra ho bhau svāhā This is the vajra waist mudrā.

Turning the left hand face down,
and laying the right upon it face up,
joining the two hands crosswise,
thumbs and little fingers to one another,
one forms the manner of a vajra binding.
Raising the index fingers, one circles from the left with all the fingers in the manner of putting on armor. This is the vajra armor mudrā. The mantra is: vajra haṃ ha svāhā

Opening the two thumbs,
one casts it all around toward the right side.
If it drives away even gods such as Brahmā,
what need is there to speak of the hostile-minded?
The supreme Victors have declared
it to be the vajra wheel mudrā.
By the way of setting this in place,
one becomes a supreme Victor.

The mantra is: vajra ho baṃ ba svāhā

Bending the index fingers inward, set the rest as before.
Raising the middle fingers upward,
one should place it on the ground below.

The mantra is: vajra ho haṃ svāhā This is the vajra limb mudrā.

Knowing all of these,
one becomes firm in a vajra body.
If even obstructors are pacified by one's gaze,
what need is there to speak of harm from others?
By one's gaze all illnesses
and all the hostile are made to fear.
If one recites the mantra together with the mudrā,
gods and the rest come under one's power.

Then the disciple should be examined.
Through the rite and the act of seeing,
one should choose one whose limbs all bear good marks,
whose limbs are complete, and who is suitable.
Those of impaired sight and those who look askance,
the savage and dwarfs, should be rejected.

In particular, the gaze should be examined,
for the gaze accomplishes all aims.
Fierce, gentle and intermediate:
the gaze is taught to be of three kinds.
Expelling and killing, and likewise drying up and bringing to ruin, subjugating the savage
and cutting them down are taught as fierce.
The gentle gaze makes things gentle;
it brings all beings under control.
With a mind vast in accomplishment,
one of gentle gaze speaks pleasantly.
Endowed with compassion and skillful means,
with the mind of awakening and without fear,
if it tames the hosts of Māra, great in might,
and all who are untamed, what need is there to speak of all obstructors and vināyakas and of all the hostile?
Therefore, in every way,
one should examine the gentle gaze.
With a mind even toward friend and foe,
having wholly given up the acts to be performed,
the mantrin who abides in the intermediate,
if he is skilled in means,
by merely thinking it in his mind will accomplish all that is needed.
Therefore, in every way,
apply this gaze.
To one whose gaze is fully pure and whose mind likewise is wholly pure,
for the sake of vajra wisdom,
the one who holds the vows teaches the supreme.

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, "Son of good family, as I understand the meaning of what you have explained, I think that the bodhisattva should purify the mind."

When he had said this, Vajrapāṇi said to the youthful Mañjuśrī, "Excellent, Mañjuśrī, excellent! You have spoken these words well, for the sake of purifying the mind. Therefore, Mañjuśrī, listen. I shall explain to you the Dharma door called the purification of mind, endowed with which the bodhisattvas who practice the conduct of bodhisattvas through the door of secret mantra attain the secret siddhi in the secret mantras.

"Mañjuśrī, in this regard, a son or daughter of good family who has seen the maṇḍala, who has generated the mind set on awakening, whose mind is endowed with compassion, who is skilled in means, and who is skilled in the teaching of the way of the letters of the door of secret mantra, should think thus: 'There is no mind apart from speech, and no speech apart from mind. There is no form of the deity apart from mind. Mind itself is speech and speech itself is mind; the form of the deity itself is mind, and speech itself is the form of the deity.' If one is thus convinced that they are not to be made separate, the mantrin attains the purification of mind. When one endowed with the purification of mind always, in every way, sees his own body and the form of the deity, his own speech and the speech of the deity, his own mind and the mind of the deity, as equal, then he is in meditative equipoise.

"When, always and in every respect,
the mantrin is in meditative equipoise,
then he enters the state of the sameness of body and the rest.
For one who abides in the state of sameness, however many movements of the limbs there are and however many words are spoken,
so many are secret mantras and mudrās.
The mantrin is everywhere without foes;
he always abides unshaken in bliss.
He attains the rank of every lord and dwells in the state where desires are fulfilled.
He is cool and free of torment, restrained in a discipline endowed with patience."

Then the bodhisattva Śāntimati said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, "Son of good family, it is wonderful how greatly this Dharma discourse on the door of the purification of mind benefits the bodhisattvas who practice the conduct of bodhisattvas through the door of secret mantra! Son of good family, it is like the great earth, which benefits two-footed and four-footed beings. Son of good family, in the same way this Dharma door also benefits the bodhisattvas who practice the conduct of bodhisattvas through the door of secret mantra. Son of good family, those bodhisattvas who strive earnestly in this Dharma door have the good fortune for the state of accomplishing the siddhis of secret mantra."

Vajrapāṇi said, "Śāntimati, it is so; it is just as you have said. They are destined for unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening. They have the good fortune to enter, to hear, and to uphold the great vajra maṇḍala."

Then the entire assembly said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, "Blessed One, those sons of good family who strive earnestly in this Dharma discourse on the door of the purification of mind are worthy of homage. All of us, gathered together with our servants and our retinues, will honor them with clothing and food. We will hold them as teachers, show them reverence, and make offerings to them. Whether they dwell in a town or in a hermitage, we will avert all harm. We will bring about what benefits them. As long as we have not fulfilled all the hopes of those sons or daughters of good family who strive constantly and without interruption, we will not fully awaken into unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening."

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi said to the entire assembly, "Excellent, excellent! Friends, it is like this: one in whose hand the door of the purification of mind rests holds the awakening of the tathāgatas. That is to say, one who practices the door of secret mantra and holds perfect and complete awakening should be honored and revered; this alone is what is to be done."

Then at that time the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, in order to protect those who practice the conduct of bodhisattvas through the door of secret mantra, spoke the words of secret mantra of the infinitely pure state:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva bhaya bhi kha tebhyaḥ sarvathā hūṃ ca pa li ni ka ke ka rakṣa rakṣa dā ke bhya darma ṣa tāṃ gi caṇḍo li ṣa pa do li tiratna ha ma ba yi ni ma ni sam ma ma hā ya na si svāhā

If any teacher of the Dharma recollects it three times by day and three times by night, no fear or harm of any kind will arise for him.

Likewise, joining the two hands, bending the two middle fingers and putting them inside is the vajra mudrā of subduing at the seat of awakening. From this mudrā, bending the first joints of the two ring fingers is the vajra mudrā of rousing Māra. From this mudrā, drawing the two middle fingers out again and placing them as before is the mudrā that terrifies the army of Māra. From that mudrā, placing the two ring fingers side by side, bending the two thumbs and putting them inside is the mudrā that crushes the hosts of Māra. From that mudrā, drawing out the two thumbs, bending the two index fingers and putting them inside is the mudrā that tames Māra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he he svāhā

From this mudrā, pressing the right thumb with the left thumb is the mudrā that cuts down all grahas. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hi svāhā

From this mudrā, pressing the left thumb with the right index finger is the mudrā that cuts down all rākṣasas. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā te he re ṭe svāhā

From this mudrā, rubbing the palm of the right hand with the ring finger of the left hand is the mudrā that crushes the hearts of all ḍākinīs. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he raṅgi ṇi he he svāhā

From this mudrā, forming it as a cupped handful, with the two index fingers and the two thumbs shaped like a conch, is the vajra conch mudrā; it crushes the hearts of all nāgas. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jaṃ gi ri phutta re re svāhā

Likewise, joining the two hands and crossing the two middle fingers is the mudrā that cuts down all yakṣas. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jiṃ gi ri ṇi hūṃ na de ke svāhā

From this mudrā, putting the two little fingers inside and placing the two middle fingers as before is the mudrā that cuts down the gandharvas. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he ri ge bhyaḥ svāhā

From this mudrā, forming the two index fingers as if embracing is the mudrā that utterly crushes the asuras. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ

From this mudrā, embracing and raising the two thumbs and extending the remaining fingers is the mudrā by which all garuḍas perform any task whatever, like servants. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ha ri piṅgo li mu khi svāhā

Likewise, joining the two hands, turning the left hand face up and the right face down, and touching the palm of the left hand with the ring finger is the mudrā that cuts down the kiṃnaras. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ja ya ja ya ni svāhā

From this mudrā, touching the palm of that same hand with the index finger is the mudrā that cuts down the great mahoragas. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ga ra li ni hūṃ ka ri ṇi svāhā

Likewise, joining the two hands and crossing the two hands is the mudrā that wards off all the hostile. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he caṇḍi he ri bi ke svāhā

With those same hands, interlacing the fingers each with the other and placing the two hands as before is the mudrā that burns the hearts of all rākṣasas. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā keṅ ka ri ṇi jhaṃ ka ri ṇi ke svāhā

From this mudrā, bending the two thumbs slightly is the mudrā that bewilders the hearts of all rākṣasas. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kar na ji te bi kha la mu ki svāhā

From this mudrā, opening the two index fingers and placing the thumbs as before is the mudrā that tames the piśācas; so the supreme Victors have always taught. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā mi ci svāhā

From this mudrā, opening the two middle fingers and placing the two index fingers as before is the mudrā that bewilders the hearts of all piśācīs. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā pi śā ci ni svāhā

From this mudrā, opening the two ring fingers as well and placing the two middle fingers as before is the mudrā that brings all bhūtas under control. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā guṃ guṃ svāhā

From this mudrā, opening the two little fingers as well and placing the two ring fingers as before is the mudrā that summons all bhūtas. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā gu mi gu mi hi li ge svāhā

From this mudrā, extending the left thumb and placing the rest as before is the mudrā that terrifies all shadow-seizing spirits. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā chā yā li svāhā

Likewise, extending the left thumb and placing the right hand as before is the mudrā that frightens all shadow-seizing spirits. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jo la ni ja ti ke svāhā

From this mudrā, opening the two index fingers, bending them so that they cross, and placing them on top of the two thumbs is the mudrā that destroys all apasmāras. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā laṃ bod ra ṇī bhri bhri śi ni svāhā

From this mudrā, opening and raising all the fingers is the mudrā that terrifies all female apasmāras.

The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā be ratni ulka mu gi ci phu ri re svāhā

Likewise, bending all the fingers and putting them inside, and raising the two thumbs: this is the mudrā that dries up the hearts of the kṛtyās. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā khi khi ri hṛ da ya bi dā ra ṇi svāhā

From this mudrā, bending the two thumbs and putting them inside, and raising the two index fingers: this is the mudrā that binds fast the hearts of all kṛtyās.

The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bis ri ṇi svāhā

Then again Vajrapāṇi, for the sake of those bodhisattvas who practice the conduct of bodhisattvas through the door of secret mantra, who possess the power of the ten powers, and who arise from vajra wisdom, spoke the door that teaches the vast secret of the mudrās that arise from the heart-essence of all the tathāgatas.

First one pays homage to all the buddhas, makes the mind of awakening manifest, and pervades the realm of beings with the eye of great love and great compassion. Then, anointing the hands with perfume and facing east or north, one should properly bind the mudrā.

Joining the two hands in a cupped handful, praising, and setting them down is the mudrā of the Tathāgata Ratnaketu. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā tri ratna nirjāta hūṃ hūṃ svāhā

From this mudrā, bending the two thumbs and placing them against the sides is the mudrā of the Tathāgata Saṃkusumitarājendra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jñāna sambhava svāhā

From this mudrā, bending the two index fingers in the manner of a vajra and placing them directly against the sides of the middle fingers is the mudrā of the Blessed One Amitābha. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā a mi todbha be jñā na pa ri ṇi svāhā

From this mudrā, bending the two index fingers and making their tips touch the middle fingers is the mudrā of Akṣobhya. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhi ga da jvā jñā na saṃ bha va svāhā

Clenching both hands into fists, with the two index fingers embracing the two thumbs, is the mudrā of the Blessed One Vipaśyin. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ka na bi cu ti ta jñā no da ya svāhā

From this mudrā, raising the two middle fingers side by side is the mudrā of the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Śikhin. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatibhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jñā na śi khi saṃ bha va svāhā

Likewise, clenching the fists as before and raising the two ring fingers side by side is the mudrā of the Blessed One Viśvabhū. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bi śuddha ga ta jñā na bi de svāhā

Clenching the fists in that way as before and raising the two little fingers side by side is the mudrā of the Blessed One Krakucchanda. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ji ma svāhā

Likewise, clenching the fists and bending the two thumbs and the two index fingers inward is the mudrā of the head of the Blessed One, the great Cakravartin. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kha tra mi svāhā

From this mudrā, drawing out the two middle fingers and raising them side by side is the mudrā of the uṣṇīṣa of the Blessed One, the great Cakravartin. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jāṃ

From this mudrā, drawing out the two index fingers, bending their first joints, and joining them to that same place is the mudrā of the eyes. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā dri

From this mudrā, bending the two thumbs slightly, turning them toward the two index fingers, and placing the rest as before is the mudrā of the wheel of the Blessed One. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā aṃ

As before, clenching both hands into fists, spreading the two index fingers outward and extending them with the first joints bent, and spreading the two thumbs outward and extending them, is the mudrā of the śrīvatsa of the Blessed One. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā śrīḥ

From this mudrā, spreading and extending the two middle fingers and putting the two thumbs inside is the mudrā of the navel of the Blessed One. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hriṃ

As before, clenching both hands into fists, drawing out the two little fingers and spreading them: this is the mudrā of the feet of the Blessed One. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hraṃ

These are the mudrās of the Blessed One, the great Cakravartin; they accomplish every aim that is needed.

Whoever, through inner purity,
holds these mudrās,
that mantrin will become free of evil; of this there is no doubt.
All the Vajradharas,
and the bodhisattvas,
and all the gods of great miraculous power protect that intelligent one.
Therefore, in every way,
one should revere the great-souled one.
If one constantly recites the vidyā-mantra,
siddhi will not be difficult for him.

The mantras spoken by the Victors will be accomplished in this very life.
Whatever worldly mantras there are,
they all come under his power;
saying, "What command shall we carry out?"
they become his retinue on his right and left.
Nonhuman divine maidens too
come under his power and remain with him.
When the mantrin, abiding in the way of mantra, comes to cast off his body,
then he will be born in the supreme abode of the Vaśavartin gods.
Where the powerful Blessed One,
the great Vairocana, dwells,

there the son of the Victors, as he wishes,
will take birth.
Until he attains awakening,
his conduct will not decline.
All the Vajradharas
bless him in every way.

Likewise, joining both hands, putting the two ring fingers inside, bending the first joints of the two index fingers, placing the two middle fingers side by side so that they are kept apart by about the width of a barleycorn, and placing the two thumbs beside them is the mudrā of the Great Fierce Vajra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā caṇḍa mahā ro ṣa ṇa hūṃ

From that mudrā, embracing the raised middle finger with the right index finger: this is the mudrā of the head of the Great Fierce Vajra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā maṃ

Embracing the raised middle finger with the left index finger, opening the right index finger, and placing it with its first joint bent as before is the mudrā of the uṣṇīṣa of the Great Fierce Vajra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā jī

Likewise, embracing the raised middle finger with the two index fingers is the mudrā of the armor of the Great Fierce Vajra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ā

Likewise, opening the two index fingers and extending them in the manner of flashing lightning is the mudrā of the great blazing vajra flame of the Fierce Vajra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā kśaṃ

From this mudrā, bending the right index finger and placing it beside the thumb is the mudrā of the forehead of the Great Fierce Vajra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ni laṃ ba ti ka ti svāhā

Likewise, placing the left index finger beside the thumb, bending the first joint of the raised middle finger and lowering it slightly is the mudrā of the breasts of the Great Fierce Vajra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā ha sa ha sa dha ka dha ka ca ra ca ra haṃ pra caṇḍa pajra svāhā

Likewise, from the breast mudrā, bending the two index fingers, spreading and extending them, and putting the two little fingers inside is the mudrā of the śrīvatsa of the Great Fierce Vajra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā pi phu la vajra caṇḍa svāhā

From this mudrā, drawing out the little fingers and placing them as before is the mudrā of the feet of the Great Fierce Vajra. The mantra is:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bi ci tra ga ti svāhā

Thus these vast mudrās are blessed by all the tathāgatas and abide in manifold forms. They are applied to the many realms of beings in the many world systems. Their power is unobstructed in the three times. They arise from the realization of the dharmadhātu. Blessed by all the tathāgatas, they cut off the destinies of gods, nāgas, yakṣas, gandharvas, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, great mahoragas, humans and nonhumans. They bring about the attainment of the realization of the tathāgatas. They establish the display that reveals the array of the body, speech and mind of the tathāgatas. They bring wishes to complete fulfillment just as they are intended. They accomplish the array of the maṇḍala of the Unfailing Vajra. They are, without exception, the eye of the bodhisattvas who practice the conduct of bodhisattvas through the door of secret mantra, and of the world with its gods, humans and asuras.

This completes the vast mudrās, as many as there are, from the array of the great maṇḍala of the Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, from the teaching of the outcome that accords with the past conduct of the tathāgatas, and from the state of miraculous display.

The Noble Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, section ten.

Then again Vajrapāṇi entered the samādhi called the Emanated Array That Defeats All Māras.

As soon as the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi had entered absorption, all the tathāgatas of the ten directions stretched out their right hands, stroked

Vajrapāṇi's head, and gave their approval, saying "Excellent!":

You who benefit all sentient beings,
Great hero, excellent, excellent!
For the sake of the vajra stances
That arise from the practice of secret mantra,
You have entered this samādhi
That terrifies hostile beings.
The sequence of the rite of the vajra stances,
Great being, you shall teach.
The stances of vajra arising
Are common to all the kings of mantra:
Sitting and going,
Rising and scattering,
Summoning and stretching out,
Binding with the feet and drawing in,
Shifting and setting down,
Seizing with a clenched fist,
Tormenting and smashing with the vajra,
Nailing down with the vajra mudrā,
Leaping like a lion,
Threatening with hūṃ,
Ears drawn up and lip pressed down,
Gazing with a wrathful frown upon the brow,
Making the eyebrows move,
Likewise opening both eyes wide,
Distinguishing the various stances,
Joining the two hands,
Likewise moving the hands,
Leaping with both feet,
And also displaying the body
In particular with a haughty bearing,
Cutting, chopping and laughing,
Devouring and laughing aloud,
Resounding all around and roaring forth,
Acting fiercely and binding,
Crushing all the hostile,
Paralyzing and stupefying,

Leaping upward and striking,
Graceful stances and whirling,
The preliminary practice at the outset of accomplishment,
Likewise the approach to the deity,
The mantrin's maṇḍala,
Whatever kinds of accomplishments there are,
Protecting and guarding in every way
The realm of sentient beings,
All these, O hero,
And whatever else the mind desires,
And likewise restoring again
Those who are possessed of hostile minds:
All these, at length,
Proclaim, wishing for the liberation of beings!

Then, so that victory might be won by means of the stances, those tathāgatas spoke this secret mantra:

namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ sarvamukhebhyaḥ sarvathā hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ caṇḍavajraprajvalitamūrti svāhā

Then Vajrapāṇi, having heard this secret mantra, was delighted and pleased, and with a mind full of joy he looked over the entire assembly and said, "O friends, listen! So that the teaching of the Teacher may long endure, from this day forward protect any beings who have gone for refuge to the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha, and those bodhisattvas who engage in the conduct of secret mantra and strive in the way of secret mantra. Honor them! Hold them in esteem! Make offerings to them!"

Then that entire assembly spoke with one voice, saying, "We shall do as the Lord of the Dharma has commanded," and sat in silence.

Then Vajrapāṇi again addressed the circle of the entire assembly: "Sons of noble family, if in time to come anyone who strives to accomplish the protection of the maṇḍala of the past conduct of the tathāgatas transgresses the commitments of the bodhisattvas who practice the conduct of bodhisattvas through the door of secret mantra, the fierce king of knowledge will split his head into seven pieces with a vajra that blazes, flares, spreads in every direction and burns intensely."

Then the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, spoke thus to the bodhisattva Śāntimati: "Śāntimati, listen as I explain the characteristics of the stances taught by the buddhas of the past.

Having taken a fitting stance
And bowed to the tathāgatas,
The mantrin, facing east,
Stands and places his joined palms at the crown.
With supreme grace befitting the secret mantra
He dances in the manner of the vajra stance,
And, lowering his joined palms from the crown,
In the manner of placing them at the heart,
He should turn toward all the directions.
Holding the vajra fist,
He raises the right hand
And places the left behind the waist.
Lifting the right foot,
He should bend the right one well;
Raising the left up high,
He should threaten all the hostile.
He stretches out the right leg,
Both hands holding the vajra fist,
Draws himself up with a wrathful hūṃ,
And strikes with the vajra blow.
Turning in the vajra dance,
He bends the left leg,
And likewise in the four directions
He treads the vajra's trampling gait.
Joining the vajra palms,
He places them at the waist.
Standing in the posture with heels together,
He should cast his eyes downward.
When he strikes with the vajra dagger,
The seven underworlds will quake.
With a hūṃ like rolling thunder,
Like the blazing Vajradhara,
He should thrust the vajra upward
And join his palms behind his back.

Then, performing the vajra dance,
He places it at the navel.
Having stood in such a posture,
One well trained in swift movement sets it down.
However many weapon mudrās there are
Of the buddhas and bodhisattvas,
Of the wrathful ones, the attendants and the maidservants,
The vajra, the club and the cudgel,
The short spear, the great arrow and the wheel,
The single-pointed vajra, the pestle and the rest,
And whatever messengers there are, male and female,
They turn back the obstructors and the like.
Whatever other hosts of mudrās have been taught
For the destruction of obstructors,
By those to whom this maṇḍala
And its general rite have been shown in full,
The trained mantrin utterly destroys
The gods, the asuras and the guhyakas.
Even if, to obstruct the maṇḍala,
From those reaching up to Brahmā's pillar
Down to the gods who dwell upon the earth,
All gathered together and came,
The mantrin who knows the rite of the stances,
By means of hūṃ,
Will scatter them all
Like tufts of cotton scattered by the wind.
Becoming the fire of the blazing vajra,
Rising up like the fire at the end of the eon,
With vajra feet
He destroys everything with the vajra mudrā.
With the vajra's trampling,
Having crushed them with the vajra mudrā,
If the mantrin can lay waste the three worlds,
What need is there to speak of obstructors and vināyakas?

This stance of the great vajra mudrā
Is the general one.

If it accomplishes even aims beyond accomplishing,
What need to speak of what comes from the detailed rite?
As for the supreme vajra arising,
Having first performed the binding,
One should then bind the other arisings as well
From the supreme vajra knowledge.
From this come the secret mantras
And all the kinds of stances.
Therefore, in every way,
The mantrin should train with diligence.

This is the root stance of the great commitment, vajra arising.

Seated in the vajra arising,
Like a lion he overpowers the adversary;
With the vajra mudrā he destroys all.
He should stretch out the vajra foot,
Proclaiming the sound of hūṃ.
Having crushed them with the vajra mudrā,
If even all the lands are made to quake,
What need is there to speak of guhyakas and nāgas?
When he has leapt in the manner of a lion,
Whatever obstructors have forms like lions,
Elephants, chariots, monkeys and horses,
And whatever other four-footed ones there are,
Will then flee in all directions
Or else die, without a doubt.
Even obstructors sent by Brahmā
Are swiftly destroyed in that instant.

This is the stance of overpowering the adversary like a lion.

Again seated in the vajra arising,
In the manner of crossed feet,
He should place both vajra fists
At the waist.
Uttering hūṃ with the sound of clearing the throat,
He dances with the vajra dance.
Lifting the left foot,

He plants its tip upon the ground;
Lifting the left foot,
With the hand raised holding the vajra,
And placing the left hand at the heart,
The mantrin turns like a wheel.
Transformed into the fire of the blazing vajra,
Possessed of the eyes of the vajra sun,
With the vajra sound of clearing the throat
He should fill all the directions completely.
Focusing on the abode of the obstructors,
Swiftly, with the vajra stride,
In the position with the right leg extended,
He destroys all with the vajra mudrā.
Likewise the directions and the intermediate directions
He should thoroughly destroy on every side.
The great and terrible hosts of Māra,
And all that arise from every direction,
Applying the stride with the right extended,
He destroys all with the vajra mudrā.
If all the three worlds are made to quake,
What need is there to speak of obstructors and vināyakas?
On seeing the vajra mudrā,
All the obstructors and vināyakas
And the rākṣasas of terrible form
Flee in every direction.

This is the vajra right-extended stance.

Seated in the vajra arising,
He joins the vajra palms at the crown.
Circling the hands that hold the vajra,
He should pervade everything like clouds.
Dancing with the vajra dance,
He should press his lip with his teeth.
He should raise the left fist
And place the right at the heart.
Lifting the left foot,
He should twist it toward the right.

Uttering hūṃ like rolling thunder,
Pressing down with the foot in the left-extended stance,
He should strike with the vajra foot,
And with the right he should pierce.
When the vajra foot strikes
The underworld, it makes everything quake.
The nāgas who dwell beneath the earth,
With the guhyakas, asuras and rākṣasas,
All saying, "What is this shaking?",
Their minds seized with amazement,
With amazement in their hearts,
Ask one another,
"Oh, what will become of all of us?
Surely the eon has not come to its end?"
Moving once more from that place,
Possessed of blazing vajra eyes,
Uttering hūṃ with the vajra mudrā,
He should strike with the vajra foot.
All the nāgas and guhyakas,
And whatever others dwell upon the earth,
All gather at the place
Where the mantra holder sits,
And, utterly scorched by the blazing vajra,
They await his command in full:
"Lord, what is it you seek?
Quickly grant us your command!
Is it an elixir, or mercury,
Or the substances of eye ointment?
Or yakṣas, male and female, as your subjects?
Or do you wish for kingship?
Or do you wish for the door to fortune?
Or if you wish for other lands,
Tormented as we are by the blazing vajra,
We shall fulfill all that you wish."
The mantrin should accept some of these
And show loving-kindness toward them.
Performing the vajra dance well,

He should withdraw that mudrā,
And by the procedure seen in the rite
He should set them in the vajra place.
Otherwise the guhyakas
And all the rākṣasas will do harm:
Watching for an opening and seeking faults,
Those tormented ones will do harm,
And, having found an opportunity,
They will harm the mantrin.
Therefore, in every way,
The practitioner endowed with intelligence,
Having come to know the vajra place,
Should apply the practice of the stances.

This is the stance of the left-extended leg.

Seated in the vajra arising,
He should join his palms at the forehead.
Having performed the vajra dance,
He should place his palms at the heart.
Having taken the stance of Brahmā,
He should open out the lotus palms.
Holding both hands in fists,
He should stretch the right one upward,
And, placing the left one at the heart,
Draw himself up in wrath with hūṃ and phaṭ.
Having pressed his lip with his teeth,
Possessed of the eyes of the vajra sun,
His face furrowed in a wrathful frown,
In the manner of one who dances
He should draw in the right foot,
And likewise draw in the left.
With the mudrā of the raised vajra
He should lift his hand upward.
Looking upward, fiercely
He should strike with the vajra mudrā.
When he strikes with the vajra mudrā,
All, with Brahmā and with Śakra,

Together with their abodes, are shaken.
They look at one another
And all say to one another,
"Friends, is the eon in turmoil?
Or has some great being appeared?
Or has a buddha come forth?
What is it?"
Utterly bewildered, they gaze
At one another and in the ten directions.
Since they are tormented by the blazing vajra,
They go from that place
And await his command, saying,
"Speak, Vajra Bearer: what is your wish?
We have committed no offense,
Nor have we acted against your command.
Tormented by the blazing vajra,
Quickly grant us your command!"
The vajra holder gazes constantly
At the vajra without blinking.
Those other ordinary gods as well,
Brought to a hundred straits by the blazing vajra,
Say to the one possessed of the supreme vajra,
"Take whatever is in your heart!
Or if you wish for kingship,
Or likewise wish for humans and gods,
Or for proud daughters of the gods,
Or wish for the pleasures of the gods, as your mind desires,
Whatever your heart desires,
All of that we shall offer."
Then the many gods of great miraculous power,
Their minds filled with delight,
Tormented by the blazing vajra,
Swiftly make offerings to the practitioner.
Then, with a mind of loving-kindness,
The mantrin should look upon them and let them go.
Otherwise those tormented ones,
Finding an opening, will do harm.

Again seated in the vajra arising,
He should perform the vajra dance intently.
Joining his palms at the crown,
He should open them out toward all the directions.
In the manner of shifting the feet,
He lifts the right, and likewise the left.
In the manner of the vajra fist
He should raise the right hand upward,
And, placing the left at the heart,
Drawing in and moving the eyebrows,
When he looks at the obstructors with his eyes
And urges himself on with hūṃ,
Even if it were Brahmā himself,
Even if it were Viṣṇu himself,
Even if it were fierce Śakra himself,
His gaze swiftly makes them afraid.
If he wishes to bring Viṣṇu and the fierce ones
Under his own power,
In the manner of moving all around,
With the eyes of the vajra sun,
In the manner of the feet joined in method,
He should strike with the vajra mudrā.
When he strikes with the vajra mudrā,
All the lands shake violently.
Then Śakra and the gods,
And the asuras, rākṣasas and guhyakas,
Fall from their seats of their own accord
And faint away, unconscious.
Then Viṣṇu and the fierce ones,
Their minds stunned,
Go with joined palms to where
The one endowed with the great vajra yoga is,
Saying, "Though we have committed no offense,
Your mantra torments us terribly."
All those tormented gods
Lose their composure upon their seats,
And sit gazing with reverence for his command,

Saying, "Tell us how, and what, we are to do."
When he has shown loving-kindness to all
And taken up a single intention in his heart,
At that very moment they,
Delighted and pleased, grant it.
The mantrin, resting in equipoise,
Releases them with the king of mudrās,
And in the manner of shifting the feet
He should set himself in the vajra place.
For all the vajra holders,
The vajra place is defined from the waist.

Seated in the vajra arising,
He stands firm in the posture of Mahendra.
Having joined his palms at the crown,
He should open them out toward all the directions.
In the manner of shifting the feet,
Holding the vajra fist,
With the hand of one who dances
He should threaten the forms of the obstructors.
Likewise with the right and with the left
He should do so until they leave their place.
If the great, fiercely hostile obstructors,
Though threatened, do not go away,
He should quickly take a vajra stride,
Move his hands all about above him,
Slap both hands upon the ground,
And utter hūṃ like rolling thunder.
The wise one of secret mantra, bending his legs,
Turns his body in every way.
Then, in a hostile manner,
Stretching out the right vajra hand,
With the mudrā of the vajra hook
He should summon all the obstructors.
In the manner of right and left,
Performing the action of Brahmā with each,
Urging them on fiercely with hūṃs like rolling thunder

And with phaṭs,
With the mudrā of the vajra torment
He should torment all the obstructors.
Apart from the state of the Sugata,
If the vajra bearer, the wheel bearer,
Or any other child of the buddhas
Pays no heed to his own body,
Gods, gandharvas, guhyakas,
And whatever nāgas there may be
Are scattered like tufts of cotton by the wind:
When he utters hūṃ they grow afraid, needless to say.
What need is there to speak of what befalls
Asuras, savage rākṣasas,
Pretas, kumbhāṇḍas and servants,
Māra and the messengers of Māra?
Resting in equipoise in a mind of loving-kindness,
And resting in equipoise in compassion as well,
The mantrin, mindful of the mind of awakening,
Should begin to withdraw the mudrā.
For the sake of some slight fault
One should not harm the obstructors.
Only when one knows them to be extremely hostile
May one harm the obstructors.
Toward the extremely hostile and fierce
One should not act with gentleness alone.

If one acts with gentleness alone,
At that very moment they do harm.
First one should apply gentle means;
The second time, strive to divide them;
The third time, taking up a welcome offering,
And holding flowers in cupped hands,
One should then make offerings to the obstructors.
When one gives the torma that benefits all bhūtas,
One should speak these words:
"Since I have honored you today,
Go, great obstructor, be on your way!

From now on, do not act like this!
I have seen your strength and prowess:
You are able to obstruct.
You are an emanation of the gods;
It is not that you cannot obstruct.
Since you had not received offerings before,
And today I have made you offerings,
Now take your offerings,
Lord of obstructors, and go!" So one should say.
If he remains yet does not obstruct,
That is good conduct.
But if the obstructor, though fit to be honored
By the mantrin, goes on obstructing,
One should say, "May the buddhas of the ten directions,
Who have attained mastery, the supreme among humans,
Take note! Though I apply the practice
To punish the obstructor, I commit no fault.
I do not act against the command
Of the buddhas and the buddhas' children,
The bodhisattvas."
To the gods, asuras and guhyakas,
To the gandharvas of all ten directions,
And to whatever planets and kiṃnaras there are,
To the protectors and the great protectors,
One should proclaim the harm done by the obstructor:
"If it is asked, 'Protect even a little!',
Then swiftly give full protection!"
If, having heard this proclamation,
The one who obstructs becomes peaceful,
One should then make offerings
To the gods of all the directions.
If he does not stay so,
One should strongly urge the buddhas and the rest
With flowers, joined palms and welcome offerings,
And punish him.
Toward the fierce one of extremely hostile mind,
Who goes against the command

And violently robs others of their lives,
The buddhas too do not turn away,
Knowing that it benefits him, thinking,
"Otherwise, for many tens of millions of eons
He would be born in the hells
And undergo much suffering."
Just as a physician heals
The illnesses of sentient beings,
So I incur no fault by tormenting him;
The wise have not rejected this.
Thus, with the mind in equipoise
And a heart possessed of compassion,
Making the mind of awakening firm,
One undertakes to punish him.
Just as a skilled physician
Does not abandon one who is ailing,
So too one skilled in method and wisdom,
If, though skilled, he does not act, is at fault.
Just as an unskilled physician,
Lacking method and wisdom,
Abandons the patient
And does not perform the rite of healing,
So too, one devoid of knowledge,
Even if he strives to heal,
Lacking method and wisdom,
Is not praised by the buddhas.
When a physician gives medicine
To each of the sick,
Even if it is hot, bitter or astringent,
The world does not revile him.
In the same way, by the particulars of discipline,
One should heal each as is fitting.
The buddhas do not scorn or revile
Hostile sentient beings.
In times gone by, long ago,
There appeared a most wondrous Victor.
In the scriptures of the tathāgatas

The way of the world is described thus:
At that time there arose
All beings of fierce and extremely hostile mind.
Seeing them to be extremely fierce,
He did not employ gentleness alone.
The Tathāgata Vajrasattva,
Courageous in wisdom and method,
His courage of compassion turned to wrath,
Benefiting sentient beings,
Then, by overpowering the adversary,
Overpowered many realms of beings.
By the force of stern means free of evil,
One should bring them all under control.
By the method of the family of overpowering the adversary,
As he aspired to awakening,
He brought the many realms of beings,
All of them, under his control.
The great vajra master
Likewise subdues the vināyakas and obstructors.
If he meditates, mindful of the mind of awakening,
He is not stained by fault.
Therefore the mantrin, in great wrath,
With power like the fire at the end of the eon,
Should cut down all the obstructors
With the mudrā of the vajra sword.
With that very manner of the feet,
Dancing with the vajra dance,
Stretching out the left foot, he casts it down;
Relying on the position with the right foot extended,
Striking at the place of the waist,
He should put the sword into its sheath.
In a manner that does not press down,
Clenching the hand forcefully to the ground,
In the manner of shifting the feet,
He holds it as if drawing the sword.
To set it in the form of the sword,
He should put the index and middle fingers together.

Then, with the left hand,
To make the sword's sheath,
With the little finger, the ring finger
And the thumb he should make the sheath of the sword.
Then with the right foot
Drawing the form of the obstructor on the ground,
Pressing his lip with his teeth in wrath,
Blazing with the sun of his own vajra,
He presses the head down with his foot,
And having drawn the sword with his hand,
With the vajra stride
He moves all about in the manner of a dance,
And with the mudrā of the vajra sword
He should cut down all the obstructors.
Whomever that vajra bearer strikes down,
He has no regard for that one's life.
Then they will become peaceful,
Or else die, without a doubt.
Even an obstructor equal to Śakra
Will be destroyed at that very moment.
Then the great vajra master,
Possessed of a mind of compassion and tender love,
Should show him tender love
So that he may be born again.

This is the stance of the vajra sword.

Then the great vajra master
Performs the act of chopping with the vajra:
With the mudrā of the vajra wheel
He chops up all who intend harm.
Seated in the vajra arising,
Taking up the vajra's might,
In the manner of lifting and setting down the feet
He should perform the vajra dance intently.
In the sequence of spreading out the wheel,
Joining the lotus palms,
Having set the feet apart,

He should hurl the wheel upon the ground.
Remaining in the posture with heels together,
Uttering hūṃ like rolling thunder,
In the manner of clapping the palms
He should strike the ground with the wheel.
Reversing it and doing so again,
In the manner of joining the hands,
Making them like a wheel,
He should hurl it upward and destroy.
Drawing it back, pressing the head down with his foot,
He should strike at the obstructors.
Then either they will become utterly peaceful
Or else they will die, without a doubt.
By this method, in this sequence,
One should harm the obstructors.
Unless they are harmed for their evil,
Even when urged, they will not become well.

If the great Vajrasattva,
Being possessed of a mind of compassion,
Wishes to make the obstructor peaceful,
He should act in the manner of this rite.
From cow dung
He should make a form resembling him,
And the mantrin, with a peaceful mind,
Should wash it with milk;
At once he will become just as he was before.
Thus with all the obstructors,
With each, one should act according to the rite.
In the manner of this sequence
One should apply it to the secret mantras too:
Whether they have been cut off or suppressed,
Or blocked or bound,
If one wishes to accomplish them,
They then become just as they were before.
Or else, for the secret mantras
In particular, one should use incense,

Or make a fire offering
Of the milk of a tawny cow, or of butter.
Or else with a hundred and eight
Fire offerings, all will be pacified.
With a peaceful mind, pacifying;
With a joyful mind, increasing;
And whatever is a fierce, violent activity,
That one should undertake in wrath.
Just as each action is fitting,
So the mantrin should apply it to the secret mantras.
Otherwise he should not do it,
For the action will bear no fruit.

This is the stance of the vajra wheel.

Then again, in the vajra manner,
Having assumed the vajra arising,
Joining his palms at the crown,
He should perform the vajra dance intently.
In the manner of the posture with heels together,
Moving his eyebrows, he should touch with his foot,
And smear both hands upon the ground.
Likewise in the four directions too,
In the manner of circling with the mind,
He turns his feet like a wheel.
Placing both hands at the waist,
Bursting into vajra laughter,
He should raise his right hand
And threaten fiercely with the vajra finger.
He should utter hūṃ while drawing himself up.
When the one possessed of the eyes of the vajra sun
Has threatened with the vajra finger,
Even the lord of Māras himself,
On seeing it, flees at once,
Like a crow seeing a stone being thrown.

This is the vajra laughter.

Then the great vajra mantrin,
Having assumed the vajra arising
And taken an uneven stance,
Crosses his hands and makes fists.
Raising the thumbs upward,
He should put the middle fingers together and raise them,
And raise the two index fingers as a pair.
This is called the vajra mouth.
He should lift the right foot,
And plant the left, and do likewise.
The vajra tongue blazes like fire;
He should make it manifest like the mare's mouth.
Uttering hūṃ like rolling thunder,
He should place it directly before his mouth.
If it can drink the waters of all four oceans
Of all the four directions,
What need to speak of all the hostile ones
Who appear before his eyes?
When he does this, in all four directions
All that arises on every side dries up.
All the whirlwinds, the thunderbolts,
And the clouds gathering from every side
Are utterly dispersed
By the opening and the scattering of the vajra mouth.
Whatever omens have arisen in the world,
Whatever has come to settle on every side,
The mantrin, transforming them into flames
Like the flames of the vajra fire, pacifies them all.
With the mudrā of the vajra mouth
He should devour all the obstructors.
With the mudrā of the blazing vajra
He should chew up all the obstructors.

This is the stance of the gaping vajra mouth.

Then the great vajra yogin,
Having transformed the vajra wisdom,
Restores the obstructors;
In this there is no fault.

Since the vajra master born
From the wisdom of the Victors restores them,
He is praised as being like myself:
As the mantrin is, so is the Victor.
He should make firm compassion for all beings
And the mind of awakening,
For by method one attains the supreme
In all the magical displays.
Otherwise the buddhas
Dwelling in the directions will not praise him.
One devoid of the mind of awakening
Is not worthy of the worship of the gods.
The children of the Victors who are devoid of method and wisdom,
The śrāvakas,
And whatever pratyekabuddhas there are,
Abide in the state of austerity,
And, having minds bent on benefiting their own aims,
Have no part in this.
The mind of awakening, born
Of method and wisdom, is compassionate.
Relying on the chariot of the mind of awakening,
The reins of loving-kindness and compassion,
The grounds and the perfections,
The vajra of the four means of gathering,
The ground of omniscience,
And the limbs of the factors of awakening,
The children of the Buddha
Play in the delight of benefiting beings.
In the same way the master Vajradhara,
Skilled in method and wisdom,
Should thoroughly restore
The minds of all the hostile ones.

Then again, in the vajra manner,
Having assumed the vajra arising,
Setting the feet in an even position,
And joining the vajra palms,

Having performed the vajra dance,
He raises his right hand upward.
Resting the left upon the hip,
He puts the middle and index fingers together
And spreads apart the little finger and the thumb.
With the right forming the gods' triple banner,
Pressing down with the right extended foot,
In the manner of vajra laughter he says,
"Ah! I myself am the vajra bearer;
I abide in my own nature!"
Uttering hūṃ with haughtiness and wrath,
He should send it forth with the vajra dance.
This mudrā threatens with the vajra.
When he threatens with vajra laughter,
Gods and asuras, together with guhyakas,
At the time of the maṇḍala or of accomplishment,
Will not come to obstruct.
Bound first by the vajra holder,
Even the one who arose from the crown
Will not come to obstruct.
Knowing the vajra holder directly,
The obstructors speak to one another,
And for the sake of protection all of them
Go together before the maṇḍala.
Since they are urged on by the vajra stance,
To the greatly fortunate vajra master
Who has gathered the accumulation of merit,
All the others pay homage.

Then once again, in the vajra manner,
Having fully performed the vajra dance,
And having joined the palms in the lotus way,
One should spread them out toward all directions.
Taking the stance with the right leg extended,
Like the light of the fire at the eon's end,
In the manner of clapping the palms together,
One should strike the hands together in wrath.

With both hands in the vajra manner,
Joining the little fingers and the thumbs,
Resting the left hand at the hip
And raising the right hand upward,
Urging them on by uttering āḥ hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ,
The mantrin also utters the all-pervading sound.
When the vajra sound has arisen,
All who are hostile are brought to ruin.
Śakra, Brahmā, the Moon and the rest,
And even the great planets of great magical power,
Upon merely hearing it, are all shaken,
And by the all-pervading sound their minds give way.
At that time they join their palms and bow.
To wherever the great vajra sound may be
They all come together,
And, tormented by the vajra sound,
Their minds fallen from their seats,
They say, "Lord, what task do you require?
Give us your command quickly!"
And so they receive their instructions from the mantrin.
When the mantrin, having reflected, performs the dance,
The gods are swiftly set free.
Then, generating a mind of loving-kindness,
The one who keeps the observance releases the mudrā.
This is the vajra sound that resounds everywhere.

Seated in the vajra-arising posture,
Having made the vajra dance blaze forth,
And having joined the palms in vajra fashion,
Spreading them out toward all directions,
Taking up the uneven stance of the feet,
Crossing the hands and clenching them into fists,
Raise the two thumbs side by side;
Place the two middle fingers side by side,
Bend the index fingers at the middle joint,
And join them to the two middle fingers.
By forming the vajra mouth,

All who are hostile are pacified.
If it is placed directly before the mouth,
The vajra sound will also arise:
"I am the one who has the great vajra,
Endowed with the power of vajra wisdom.
hri ha hūṃ hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ."
In the manner of the vajra stride,
With the steps of vajra trampling,
Moving by setting the feet down and lifting them,
One should recite this toward the four directions.
Urged on by the arising vajra sound,
The great obstructors, the renowned ones,
And also the gods of great magical power
Go before him, saying:
"We are burned by the vajra sound!
Because the vajra sound has urged us on,
We are shaken from our own abodes.
Lord of the vajra, give your command quickly!
Do you wish for the door to fortune?
Kingship, mercury, eye ointment,
Or do you wish to behold treasures everywhere?
Give your command!" So they speak.
Having joyfully given these to the practitioner,
They pay homage, make offerings, and depart.

Then once again, in the vajra manner,
The vajra master of great might,
Having fully performed the vajra dance,
Binds the mudrā as the vajra bearer.
Setting the foot against the knee,
Clench both hands into fists;
Raising the two middle fingers,
Join the two index fingers to their sides.
Taking the stance with the right leg extended,
Swiftly, with the vajra stride,
One should strike all the devices
And open all the doors.

The asuras, the yakṣa kings,
And the rākṣasas of great magical power
Are all shaken from their own abodes,
Thinking, "Has the eon come to its end?"
Struck by the vajra mudrā,
Their minds become dazed,
And to wherever he may be,
The one greatly endowed with vajra wisdom, they draw near:
"We are burned by the blazing vajra!
Does the mantrin wish for the door to fortune,
Or does he wish for the elixir of mercury?
Lord of the vajra, give your command quickly!"
Having spoken, all of them at once
Grant whatever the mind desires.
If one wishes to employ
Gods, asuras and guhyakas,
By that wish they are summoned,
And they carry out tasks as one wishes.
As for those who act against the command,
If, though bound by their pledge, they do not come,
The master, the vajra holder,
Fully endowed with the vajra mudrā,
Wrathful, pressing his lip with his teeth,
Terrifying like a blazing fire,
Swiftly, with the vajra stride,
Should strike the ground everywhere.
Taking the stance with the right leg extended,
If, though bound by their pledge, they do not come,
He should strike with the vajra mudrā.
When struck by the vajra mudrā,
They cry out, "a la la!"
Their bodies too are cast down from their seats,
Their bodies blaze fiercely with fire,
And to wherever he may be,
The great vajra yogin, they draw near:
"Greatly fortunate one, protect us!
Give us your command quickly!"

The nāgas, guhyakas and asuras
At once do as they are commanded.
Having accomplished what they were commanded,
They go each to their own abode.
"If it is so, you lords among the gods may go;
If it is not so, I will not let you go."
Then, having done as they were commanded,
They swiftly go to their abodes.
The master, the vajra holder,
Then releases the mudrā,
And in the manner of the vajra dance
Should place the hands at the waist.

Then once again, in the vajra manner,
Having fully performed the vajra dance,
With the mudrā of the vajra noose
One should bind all who are hostile.
Having urged them on at the four times,
If they contravene the command,
One should summon them with the vajra hook
And bind them with the vajra noose.
This is the manifold vajra sound.

Having joined the palms in vajra fashion,
And standing in the even stance,
One should strike behind with the hand
And toss the vajra upward.
Then, gazing at the vajra,
Uttering hūṃ like slow thunder,
In the manner of shifting the feet,
Shift the right and likewise the left.
Joining the index finger of the left hand
With the thumb, make a noose.
With the index finger of the right hand,
Its tip bent as a hook, hold it firm.
With eyes proud as a vajra,
Wrathful, pressing the lip with the teeth,
Wherever the obstructors may be,

Go there swiftly with the vajra stance,
And taking the stance with the right leg extended,
With the mudrā of the vajra hook
One should summon all the obstructors
And bind them with the vajra noose.
Even if it be the Wheel-Bearer (Viṣṇu),
Or the mighty Rudra together with Brahmā,
Even if Vajradhara protects them,
The mantrin draws them out from their very ground and summons them.
Having summoned them and bound them with the vajra,
One should put them in a vajra cage,
And keep them there
For as long as it takes for the wish to be fulfilled.
If they do not heed the command,
And the wish is not fulfilled,
Then, wanting one's own wish to succeed,
One should inflict punishment on them.
Having made an effigy of the one concerned,
If one torments it with the vajra foot,
Crying out, "a la la!"
Even the lord of the gods will come.
Then give him the command as well.

Then once again, with the vajra dance,
Having firmly joined the palms,
And standing in the Mahendra stance,
One should spread them out toward all directions.
In the manner of shifting the feet,
Shift the right and likewise the left.
Joining the two hands,
Cross them over each other and clench them into fists;
Placing the two middle fingers side by side,
Fix the index fingers against them.
"This vajra mudrā of mine
Is the pledge of all the obstructors."
With the stance as before,
Having summoned the obstructors with the mudrā,

With this vajra of the wrathful one
One should give them the pledge.
Bind the mudrā of the vajra stance,
And sending forth the sound hūṃ,
Transforming oneself into a vajra,
One should summon all the obstructors.
If they do not give an answer,
They should not be released.
If they say nothing at all,
One should inflict punishment on them:
From tree poison, buckthorn,
And white mustard seed mixed together,
Having made an effigy of the one concerned,
If one casts it into the fire,
Even if Brahmā protects him,
That obstructor will come that very instant.
The mantrin should give him the command,
And then should make him flourish.
Generating a mind of loving-kindness,
If one thinks of releasing the mudrā,
Those tormented, bound and summoned
Are freed and dwell at ease.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Wholly intent on great wisdom,
Out of compassion for the welfare of beings,
Again transforms into the vajra itself.
Taking the even stance of the feet,
Having fully performed the vajra dance,
And having joined the vajra palms well,
One should spread them out toward all directions.
In the manner of shifting the steps,
Shift the right and likewise the left.
With the hands in the manner of dancing,
Then join the palms firmly.
In the manner of moving the steps,
The wise one turns toward the four directions.

With the mudrā of vajra paralysis
One should paralyze all the obstructors.
Swiftly, with the vajra step,
One should make the directions rigid as a vajra.
One should visualize great Meru with its eight peaks
As marked with a vajra.
Below, the hand holding a vajra,
Above, the right hand too holding a vajra;
Performing the vajra paralysis,
If one turns toward all directions,
Whatever obstructors have hostile minds
Will all be paralyzed.
Because the vajra paralysis has been performed,
The obstructors will not do harm again.
If one visualizes a vajra
Set firmly on the crown of their heads,
From as far as the abode of Brahmā
Down to the seventh underworld,
They are paralyzed by the vajra paralysis,
Stupefied and without consciousness.
For as long as the skilled mantrin wishes,
So long does he keep them paralyzed.

Then once again, in the vajra manner,
Having fully performed the vajra dance,
Having joined the palms in a cupped hollow,
If one spreads them out toward all directions,
Even the waters that arise on every side
The mantrin is able to dry up.
Taking the even stance of the feet,
Drawing in the vajra palms,
One should stretch the right hand upward
Holding the noose.
Likewise, the left leg
Should be raised together with the left hand.
Likewise, toward the four directions too,
In the manner of taking steps,

Manifestly like the fire at the eon's end,
Wrathful, pressing the lip with the teeth,
Gazing with the eyes downward,
Go swiftly with the vajra step,
And bending the left leg,
One should set it on the summit of Meru.
The lower hand thrusts forth forcefully,
And the right likewise from above;
Joining the stance of the feet for offering,
One should remain in the manner of a mouth.
In the manner of the mouth of the mare,
One should drink up the waters of the ocean.
If the mantrin is endowed with the meditative concentration Taught by the vajra bearer,
The waters, sounding "a la la,"
Gather together from every side;
What need is there to mention streams, rivers,
And what comes from the clouds?
If he sets to it, even what arises
From the waters of the ocean of milk will dry up.

Then once again, in the vajra manner,
Join the vajra palms in a cupped hollow,
And spreading them out toward all directions,
One should expand them fully like a cloud.
Taking the Mahendra stride,
In the manner of shifting the feet,
One should lift the left foot
And then set it on the ground.
Having lifted the right foot,
One should turn toward the right.
With both hands in the manner of fists,
Raise the right hand holding the vajra,
And resting the left against the cheek,
Whirl it all around like a wheel.
Likewise, having set the right hand down,
Whirl all around with the left hand;

Resting the right against the cheek,
Raise the left hand holding the vajra.
Go swiftly with the vajra step,
And with the stride of the extended right leg
Set the foot on the summit of Kailāsa.
In the manner of the joined stance of the feet,
Having bowed the body,
Applying the root of paralysis,
Wrathful, pressing the lip with the teeth,
Oneself become like fire,
Of great power, with a mighty sound,
The great fierce one who subdues adversaries,
Circling above in the vajra manner,
One should surely take up the trampling.
The mantrin, fearless in mantra,
Wherever he casts his wrath,
In the manner of that vajra trampling,
Planting the left foot,
When he strikes with the vajra trampling,
Even Mahendra is crushed to powder.

When he strikes with the vajra trampling,
All the lands shake violently.
When Meru, Mandara and Kailāsa
And the encircling mountains are shaken,
What need is there to mention the gates of the asuras?
So it is, as taught by the vajra bearer.
Through the strike they shatter into a hundred pieces,
Like a handful of chaff scattered by the wind.

The master, the vajra holder,
To undertake the purification of the ground,
Having joined the vajra palms,
Should place them at the heart and spread them out.
Having joined the heels of the feet,
With the hands performing the dance,
And in the manner of setting down the feet,
One should set down the right and the left.

Having moved the feet,
Then join the heels once more,
And with that same manner of dancing
One should turn all around toward the four directions.
Wrathfully, to the central place
Go swiftly with the vajra step.
Having joined the vajra palms,
With the middle fingers embracing the ring fingers,
And both clenched into fists,
With the stance of joined heels,
Set the feet on the ground and lift them,
And extending fully to the right,
One should clear away all disturbances.
Uttering, "Fire! Fire!"
Whatever there may be within,
The mantrin should clear it all away.
The secret mantra with hūṃ and with phaṭ
The wise one should recite.
Below and on the surface of the ground
All disturbances are pacified,
And when no obstructors remain anywhere,
The mantrin should perform the rites in meditative equipoise.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Well trained in setting down the vajra,
Having fully performed the vajra dance,
And taking the Brahmā stance of the feet,
Having joined the lotus palms,
Should circle them directly before the heart.
In the manner of dancing, both hands
Should be clenched into vajra fists.
The left should be stretched out to the left,
The right should be stretched out to the right.
Taking the even stance of the feet,
Uttering the sound hūṃ,
The mantrin whirls about like a wheel.
Go swiftly with the vajra step,

And in the manner of the step with the right leg extended,
In the manner of setting down the feet,
With that very movement he whirls again.
Sending forth the sound hūṃ,
Likewise toward the four directions too,
By whirling the vajra fists
All the obstructors are made to tremble.
If the one endowed with vajra intelligence
Wishes to gather up the ground and cast it away,
With the gait of setting down the steps,
Swiftly extending the right leg,
He sets one foot on the summit of Mount Meru
And the other on the summit of Kailāsa.
Setting the stance of the feet in this way,
He fully performs the casting away on every side,
The left hand beneath the ground,
The right above the ground,
And sending forth the sound "a la la,"
If he hurls away all the world systems,
What need is there to mention other obstructors?
What need is there to mention hurling
The fierce and hostile vināyakas
From this human world to somewhere else?
If he wishes to burn up
Even the world systems entirely,
With that same manner of stance
He enters the four directions.
Going swiftly with the vajra step,
In the manner of the stance with the right leg extended,
Like twelve suns,
Unbearable, with garlands of flames,
Making the left foot firm,
The vajra holder raises his hand.
Having bowed the body,
And lifting the right foot,
The mantrin whirls about like a wheel.
Gathering in all the winds as well,

And transforming the sky to be like fire,
He enters in like the eon of burning.
Visualizing the vajra held in his hand
As entirely like Mount Meru,
Pressing down with the sound hūṃ,
When he hurls the vajra downward,
All the lands, together with
Their mountains and forests, are thrown into turmoil.
Then they turn to nothing but ash,
Like cotton put into fire.

The master, the vajra holder,
Then undertakes the gathering.
The manner of the stance is the same;
In particular, the hand is raised.
Going swiftly with the vajra step,
Having leapt and circled about,
One should take the posture of the mudrā.
In the manner of the posture, from behind,
One should go to the central place.
Likewise toward the four directions too,
One should beat with vajra strikes.
With that same manner of posture,
The intelligent mantrin, by the movement of the hand,
Takes up all the lands
And sets them down in that very place.
Gathering them in from every side,
The wise one recites the secret mantra,
And as the vajra bearer has taught,
One should set the lands down everywhere.
By this very sequence
The wise one sets everything in place.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Well trained in the vajra noose,
Should set down and tame
Hostile gods, asuras and humans.
Well trained in the vajra wisdom

That arises according to the power of intention,
One should thoroughly tame
All the diverse hosts that are to be tamed.
A world that is to be tamed by torment
Is brought to accomplishment by torment itself.
In the manner of right and left,
One should perform the five heroic postures throughout.
Taking the even stance of the feet,
One should press down with the stance of the extended right leg.
In the manner of setting the stance of the feet,
Looking at the target, one releases with the hand.
Joining the ring fingers and little fingers,
Make the two hands into a chain.
Join the left middle finger with the thumb;
The index finger of the right hand
Made in the manner of being extended:
This is what is called "the bow and arrow."
Behind the middle finger
Place the index finger in the manner of an arrow.
In the manner of the posture with the right leg extended,
Reciting with hūṃ, shoot so as to strike.
Whether one dwells beneath the earth,
Or dwells in the abode of Brahmā,
Or even is protected by Rudra,
When the vajra has been shot,
If he is struck by the vajra arrow,
He cannot be thought to survive.
This is the posture of shooting.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Becoming skilled in knowing the means,
Well trained in the manner of shooting,
Should tame hostile beings.
Then the master, the vajra holder,
Well trained in the vajra noose,
With a body that pervades the three realms of existence,
Should tame all the obstructors.

Taking the even stance of the feet,
In the manner of setting the feet,
With the right hand and the left
One should join the palms with a hollow between them.
Having bound that mudrā,
If one circles it toward all directions,
Even the three realms of existence are summoned;
What need is there to mention the vināyakas and obstructors?
This is the vajra mudrā of summoning.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Taking the even stance of the feet,
And having joined the lotus palms,
Should spread them out toward all directions.
In the manner of setting the stance of the feet,
Swiftly taking up his position,
He places the vajra fist at his heart,
And wrathfully uttering the sound hūṃ,
He should strike with the vajra hand
At the nāgas of the four oceans.
The nāgas, terrified, with joined palms,
Come forth out of the ocean.
Those who dwell beneath the earth,
The asuras, rākṣasas and guhyakas,
With minds eager for the command,
Take their seats, saying, "Ask for whatever you seek!
We are tormented by the blazing vajra.
Is it a yakṣiṇī, or a rākṣasī,
An asura woman, or a nāginī,
An elixir, or mercury,
Precious jewels, or the king of gems,
Fortune, or abundance as you desire?
Whatever it is your heart may wish,
Give us your command quickly!"
The mantrin, accepting whichever he pleases,
Should set the guhyakas to their tasks on every side.
If they contravene the command,

If, though commanded, they do not come,
With that same manner of stance,
One should press down with the stance of the extended left leg.
Setting the foot upon Meru,
With the hand held in the manner of a staff,
Roaring aloud, one should press down
All the abodes beneath the earth.
Sending forth the sound "ha ha,"
Whoever contravenes the command
Is seized by all the others
And led forth with great swiftness.
The mantrin should punish that one alone
And let all the rest go.
Having set him to the command,
The wise one should train him well.
Toward all the guhyakas and rākṣasas
One generates a pleased mind once more,
And having given them the pledge,
One should release them all.

The Noble Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, the eleventh fascicle.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Possessed of a mind of affection and compassion,
Sees those who harm sentient beings,
Humans, nonhumans and the like,
Gods who do great harm,
Asuras together with guhyakas,
And other hostile grahas and the rest,
By means of diseases, snakes, poisons and so on;
Those who do not abide by their pledges,
Who have arrogant minds,
Who harm sentient beings
Through disease, famine and the like,
Who delight in harming others,
Who are without compassion,
Who act against the teaching,
And who are exceedingly given to arrogance.

Having seen them, in order to subdue them,
The one skilled in mantra should apply the rite.
Those who do not reflect within themselves,
"This will become a sin for me,"
Who have themselves entered a wrong path,
And bring ruin upon one being after another:
Toward those who harm others,
The mantrin should show no forbearance.
He should terrify them and bind them,
He should cut them down and slay them.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Well trained in the vajra noose,
Leaving no room in space,
Transforming himself into the form of a vajra,
With reverent concentration and grace,
With a smiling face and a proud bearing,
Having fully performed the vajra dance,
With the movement of the hands
One should dance toward all directions,
Taking up the form in accord with the actual deity,
And setting the mind in meditation.
With a body firm, of vajra nature,
In the manner of the uneven stance of the feet,
The vajra holder raises his hand,
And gazing everywhere with vajra eyes,
He presses down all of the three realms of existence.
Standing in the hero's position,
In the manner of the raised foot,
Uttering hūṃ, fearsome and terrifying:
One should imagine his two eyes as the Sun and the Moon,
His mouth as the mouth of the mare,
His navel as Nanda and Upananda,
His belly as the ocean.
Meru should be made his head;
Likewise his arms are the encircling mountains,
The earth is his two legs,

And Vāsuki, an emanated son, is kept at his secret place.
The wind is his two ears,
His hair is fire,
His tongue the lightning of great terror,
And he has the great sound "a la la."
Sending forth the thunderous sound hūṃ,
He circles fully toward all directions.
Then, intensely urged on,
Knocked down by the vajra sound,
The nāgas, gandharvas and rākṣasas,
The gods, the asuras and all the rest come.
Terrified by the uttering of hūṃ,
They will die, without doubt.
Burned by the vajra sound,
Dazed, and looking abject,
To wherever he may be,
The one greatly endowed with vajra yoga, they draw near:
"Great vajra one, give your command!
Do not treat us all in this way!"
Then, having established the pledge,
One should release all the gods.

The vajra terror, greatly fierce,
Great terror that terrifies,
Producing fear in those to be terrified,
Wondrous and worthy of worship by the great:
Against great terrors for humans and nonhumans,
Ill omens and great calamities,
Gods, nāgas and piśācas,
Planets and merciless mātṛkās,
Disease, famine and the like,
Disturbance of the country and death-dealers,
The māras and the vināyakas,
Pūtanas, rākṣasas and so on,
And many other harms as well
Arising from one's own country or another's:
In order to destroy them utterly,

One should apply the vajra terrifier.
In the manner of spreading the feet wide,
When one utters the sound hūṃ,
Urged on by the vajra terror,
All are swiftly brought to destruction.
This is unfailing and unobstructed,
The unbearable vajra terror.
When the mantrin applies it everywhere,
Even the three realms of existence come under his power;
What need is there to mention
Making the human world his servant?
By urging them even slightly with words,
Those who are exceedingly haughty,
The rākṣasas, asuras and guhyakas,
All come under his power.
Well trained in vajra wisdom,
He attains all lordship and all qualities,
And becomes the king of all the gods.
The wise one establishes them under his power.
In the abode of the nāgas he becomes the lord
Of the nāgas, the yakṣa kings and yakṣas,
And the gandharvas.
In the abode of the asuras, of the asuras,
In the abode of the garuḍas, of the garuḍas,
He becomes the lord, and of the kinnaras.
Gods and asuras, together with humans,
With reverent minds, as he commands,
All come under the power
Of the one possessed of the great sound of vajra terror.
This is the mudrā of the great sound
Of vajra terror.

The vajra that displays its magic to all
I shall explain next.
The glorious one who makes offerings
Offers in every way to the buddhas
Who dwell in the ten directions.

For the great-souled ones in existence
There is nothing that is not an inconceivable offering.
Smiling, with eyes wide open,
In the manner of right and left,
Having joined the vajra palms,
He bows in every way to the ten directions.
Having joined the palms at the forehead,
And circling fully toward all directions,
One should pay homage to all the buddhas
Who abide throughout the three times.
One should pay homage to all the sugatas and make offerings.
The offering that tames beings
Proceeds according to their dispositions.
The realm of beings has differing dispositions;
Various dispositions proliferate,
Various dispositions, conceptualizing.
With this and that unattached intention,
The mantrin should tame in every way
The many realms of beings.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Arisen as the great knowledge of all,
With the erotic, the heroic, the compassionate,
The comic, the wrathful, the terrifying,
The dreadful, the wondrous and the peaceful,
With passionate intention contemplates the nine modes.
Then the master, the vajra holder,
Who causes wisdom to arise for all,
With the right foot and the left
Graceful in their steps,
And with the right hand and the left
In the manner of dancing,
Joining the tips of the index finger and the thumb,
Should look toward the left.
In the manner of joining right and left,
Smiling, expansive, with reverent concentration,
Brandishing the vajra in his hand,

He should dance with passion.
All the gods and the guhyakas,
The asuras and the humans,
The sovereign lord of the desire realm,
And those who dwell in the three worlds he enamors,
And with sidelong glances and gazes
All of them come under his power.
When he summons all the three worlds,
What need is there to mention the humans on the earth?
Having summoned the king of the gods and the rest,
He places them under the power of the one who holds the vows;
All of them do as he commands,
And he establishes them as his servants.
The one greatly endowed with the vajra, knowing all,
Should sing the vajra song.
When they are urged on by the vajra song,
Passion and great passion arise.
With devotion to Vajrasattva
One should sing and dance.
With passionate intention multiplied a hundredfold,
One should enamor the realm of beings.
This is the vajra song:

"You whose body blazes in the three worlds, who tames by enamoring,
Possessed of a thousand rays sharper than ten thousand suns,
Who with forms of many guises enamors the beings who wander,
Vajrasattva, supreme lord, beautiful and powerful, please dance!"

When songs such as the ṣaṭaba
Are performed with the vajra dance,
And he summons all the three worlds,
What need is there to mention the humans on the earth?
This is the mudrā of the vajra dance.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Again transforming into the vajra itself,
With the practice of the vajra dance
Should become a dancer before all.
With all his steps graceful,

He makes the mudrā of summoning with the right hand
And the mudrā of releasing with the left.
With sidelong glances and gazes,
And with the right hand and the left
Endowed with the gesture of embracing,
He brings Brahmā and the other gods
Under his power in every way;
They serve him fully as servants,
Diligent in the command of the vajra bearer.
Enamored by the vajra passion,
The gods, humans and guhyakas
Intoxicated with pride through intense passion,
Those who are to be won over, the mantrin wins over.
Through complete attachment to the vajra body,
All desire is entirely abandoned.
With the melodious vajra song
One should enamor the realms of beings.
Because they are enamored by passion,
All the gods come under his power.
With all the melodious sounds of the vajra song,
Vajrasattva, pure by nature from the very beginning, is urged on.
With many illusory things,
And with that very melodious sound,
And with all the magical displays of the buddhas,
He brings them under his power, and then the buddhas appear.
He guides all the worlds,
He tames all the māras,
He purifies all consciousness,
He brings all beings to maturity.
When one sings this song
And fully performs the vajra dance,
The gods and whatever yakṣas there are,
And the asuras together with the nāgas, are all won over.
This is guiding by the vajra song.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Again transforming into Vajrasattva,

Wholly impassioned with great heroic intention,
The hero should display the five postures.
Taking the even stance of the feet,
With the right leg extended he subdues adversaries;
In the manner of the extended left leg
He should swagger like a lion.
Standing once again in the Brahmā posture,
With the vajra snapping of the fingers,
And in the manner of the vajra striking posture,
One should gather in Brahmā and the rest.
Singing the vajra song:
"Possessing a body that blazes in the three worlds,
Equal to the blaze of ten million suns,
Equal to space, and without equal,
Chief of the Dharma and of the supreme victors,
I bow to that supreme body of the Buddha."
Pressing the lip hard with the teeth,
With eyes on every side, as if frowning in wrath,
Resting the vajra at the waist,
One should gaze toward all the ten directions.
In the vajra manner with the right hand,
Proclaiming loudly to all directions,
Terrifying to behold, blazing with rays,
Like another eon of burning,
The vajra blazing with fire, brought to accomplishment,
Unbearable like a great terror,
Should be applied to the obstructors.
It crushes the three worlds to ash.
Except for a grave offense,
This mudrā should not be applied.
When the need is extraordinary,
It should be applied at the last resort.
Even if they are protected by Vajradhara,
By the uttering of hūṃ they are crushed to ash.
Unbearable like the fire of destruction,
This is the mudrā of the great vajra.

Then the master, the vajra holder,
Well trained in vajra wisdom,
Having placed the two vajra fists at his heart,
Should reflect in this way:
"Hell beings, pretas and animals,
And whoever else suffers suffering,
By the gesture of drawing them up with my hand,
I shall furnish them with every happiness.
Rains of food, drink and the like,
And rains of clothing and precious ornaments
I shall let fall upon them everywhere."
Having furnished them fully with whatever brings them ease,
Like Avalokiteśvara, lord of compassion,
One should spread out fully everywhere,
And one should think, "May all beings Attain unsurpassed happiness."
This is the mudrā of compassion.

Then the vajra master,
Well trained in vajra wisdom,
Should bind the vajra mudrā
And join the palms at the crown of the head.
With a movement of raising and of grace,
He should then swiftly lower them.
With this mudrā of great vajra laughter
One laughs just like Vajradhara himself.
This is the mudrā of great laughter.

Then, raising the right hand,
Place the left at the side of the waist.
Having taken the stance with the left leg extended,
Then join the palms once more,
And, sounding forth a terrifying sound,
Bow down with palms joined.
This is the mudrā of the great terrifying sound.

Taking the stance with the right leg extended,
With both hands behind the back
One should hold two fists.
In order to make all obstructors tremble,

The neck must be bent down,
And when one utters a great sound,
Through the application of this mudrā
All the obstructors will tremble.

Having taken the even stance,
Join the palms at the crown of the head
And place both hands at the belly.
With the stance of the right leg extended,
The mantrin should whirl them round like a wheel,
Adorned with ha ha.
This mudrā is vast:
Since it crushes mountains to powder,
What need is there to speak of hostile beings?
It turns out just as the mantrin wishes.

Having taken the even stance,
Raise the hands upward
And bind the bracelet mudrā.
Likewise press the lower lip with the teeth.
With the left leg extended and well applied,
One should strike at all the obstructors.
This mudrā is the great sound;
It turns back all the obstructors.
By applying this mudrā well,
All of them are turned back.

Having taken the even stance,
From joining the two hands at the chest,
Raise the right hand,
And with the left leg well extended,
By the mudrā of the hammer
Strike, even if it be Vajradhara himself.
Since one strikes with the vajra hammer,
In that very instant he turns to powder.
This is the hammer stance.

Joining the right and the left as well,
Place the hands in the armpits.

With a gaze like the blazing Sun,
Uttering huṃ, look down with pride.
Transforming into Vajrapāṇi himself,
And letting out a terrifying sound,
One should make all the lands,
Together with the oceans and Mount Mandara, shake.
Pressing the lip with the teeth,
One should strike with the vajra foot.
By applying this mudrā well,
All of them will tremble.

Having taken the stance with the right leg extended,
With both hands in the manner of holding fists,
Place the left at the chest.
Raise the right upward,
And swiftly raise the index finger;
When one lets out the vajra sound,
Even were they buddhas themselves,
All obstructors shall be thrown down.
So the Vajra Holder has declared.
What need is there to speak of hostile beings?
When this mudrā is set in motion,
All of them are tamed.

Having taken the even stance,
Raise the right hand upward
And extend the hand with the palm open.
Place the left at the chest.
With a swift striking motion of the hand,
Strike the ground together with hūṃ.
Like the sky ablaze with fire,
Bind the sword mudrā
And cut all the obstructors to pieces.
So the Vajra Holder has declared.

Having taken the even stance,
Put the hand underneath,
Grasp the foot at its middle,
And lift it upward.

With the vajra sound hūṃ,
Wrathful and with a frowning brow,
Strike down again with that foot,
And imagine the obstructors there.
When one strikes with the vajra foot,
Even Mount Merus are crushed to powder.
This is the vajra-foot stance.

With the stance of the right leg extended,
Stretch out both hands in the manner of a wheel.
Wrathfully pressing the lip with the teeth,
Hurl the wheel in every direction.
The buddha fields abiding
In all directions will be destroyed.
From the fields being destroyed
Even the holy Victors come forth,
And the bodhisattvas of great miraculous power,
Those who have fallen under another's power,
Dazed, those wise ones
Went before Vajrapāṇi:
"For our lives to end would not be right.
O only son, what are we to do?
Whatever you wish,
We shall swiftly accomplish."
So saying, from the wise Vajrasattva
They fully received his command.

Become like the fire at the end of the eon,
Having taken the stance with the right leg extended,
By applying well the blazing mudrā,
One should set all three worlds ablaze.
Seeing the three worlds ablaze,
Those who always harm mantrins,
The greatly savage obstructing ones,
The hostile rākṣasas, are terrified.
Having seen such a mudrā,
They then become pacified.

Having taken the even stance,
Then, taking it up for the decisive strike,
The mantrin should fling it upward.
Then, pressing the lip with the teeth,
And swiftly taking a single step,
When one strikes with the decisive strike,
The hostile, obstructing rākṣasas
All turn to powder.
With the mudrā of the decisive vajra strike
One should turn them all back.

Abiding in the posture of Mahendra,
Raise both hands,
Take up Meru, king of mountains,
And, having placed it in both hands,
Strike the hostile beings
Who obstruct the mantrin.
Struck, they are utterly destroyed
And die, without a doubt.
When some obstructor creates obstacles
For a mantrin devoted to yoga,
Then the mantrin of great power
Should apply this mudrā.
Seeing this mudrā fully applied,
They will tremble.

Then the master Vajradhara,
Well trained in vajra wisdom,
Having paid homage to all the Victors,
Explained the method of the diadem stance.
The mantrin, facing east,
Places the right hand at the crown of the head
And places the left at the side of the waist.
Letting out the sound hūṃ,
With a mudrā like slow-rolling thunder
He should turn toward all directions.
And in the manner of the right leg extended,
Through the application of the swan's prowess,
When the right hand is raised aloft,

Even the oceans are lifted up.
This is the mudrā of the swan's prowess.

Raising the right foot,
Plant both hands upon the ground;
Adorned with a la la,
When one lifts up all three worlds,
Even Mount Meru together with the oceans,
All of it, is lifted high.
Mount Mandara and Kailāsa,
And whatever other mountains there may be,
When struck by the mudrā of ha la ha la,
Do not form again.

Joining the right and the left as well,
Place both hands at the belly.
Uttering hūṃ, look down with pride,
And press the lip with the teeth.
By the vajra diadem mudrā
One should devour all the obstructors.
With the posture of the left leg extended,
At that moment raise the left,
And by setting down the foot in wrath
One should draw in all three worlds.
This is the mudrā of the summoning diadem.

Having taken the even stance,
Raise both hands,
And, binding all the obstructors,
Whirl them toward the directions like a wheel.
By applying this mudrā well,
They are bound and tormented.
It dispels all the obstructors;
The Vajra Holder himself declared it.
This is the mudrā that terrifies the obstructors.

Seated on the yoga seat,
Raising the right foot,
Make both hands in the manner of a wheel,

And whirl the one foot all around.
By the wheel diadem mudrā
One should throw down all the obstructors.

Having taken the even stance,
In the manner of joining the palms in the flower gesture,
At that moment place them on the ground,
Then swiftly raise them again.
Since one makes offering with this,
Nothing at all creates obstacles for the mantrin.
This is the mudrā of the offering diadem.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Lord of the Guhyakas, there is a stance called the Terrifier. When I was a bodhisattva, at that time, in that age, countless eons ago, I heard it from the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Buddha Ornament Melody. Listen to it well and thoroughly and keep it in mind, and I shall explain it to you.

Terrified by it, the obstructors,
All the vināyakas, are tormented.
They flee in all directions
And die, without a doubt.
Crossing the two hands over one another,
And applying fully the left leg extended,
One should whirl toward all directions,
Then press down once more with the foot.
This Terrifier is a great terror;
It turns back all the obstructors.
Through terror they are utterly destroyed
And die, without a doubt.

Then, in the manner of the foot as well,
Cast the eyes downward,
Raise the right hand,
And bring the left close to the chest.
Slapping the hand upon the ground,
One should strike with the vajra palm.
This is the vajra-palm stance.

Seated once more on the yoga seat,
Join the palms at the crown of the head,
And, raising the right foot,
Whirl it all around like a wheel.
This is the great binding of the wind,
Taught by the Victors of the past.
Even should a scattering wind arise,
It too will remain unmoving.
This is the stance of binding the wind.

Well trained in the manner of dance,
And shifting the feet as well,
Lower the hands downward,
Touch the thumbs and ring fingers of both hands together,
Apply well the left leg extended,
And dance with the right hand.
Through the dance all the obstructors
Come to feel the greatest joy,
And out of joy, from then on,
They create no obstacles for that mantrin.

Having taken the even stance,
Raise the right hand,
Make the left in the manner of a sword,
And join the two together.
Even were it Vajradhara,
One should draw in all the obstructors.
Having drawn them in thoroughly from every side,
Then one should release the mudrā.
When they are bound with the vajra noose,
Harmed on every side,
Crying out the sound a la la,
With minds gone dazed,
They fully receive the command
From the wise Vajrapāṇi.
"From now on make no obstacles!"
So Vajrapāṇi commanded them.
This is the mudrā of vajra torment.

Just as the mantrin wishes.
Then, once more generating compassion,
The mantrin, in meditative equipoise, upon the ground,
Joins the palms in the flower gesture,
And at that time, to them,
When the mantrin rests in equipoise,
He should say, "Making no obstacles,
Go now to your own abodes!"

Having taken the stance with the right leg extended,
One should raise the hand upward.
In the manner of the right and the left as well,
Place the fists in both armpits.
With the sound hūṃ,
The mantrin, performing the fierce rite,
In every direction, on every side,
Should torment them with the vajra torment.
"Whatever other vināyakas and obstructors there are,
Whatever rākṣasas are renowned,
And in the gaping mouth of the mare,
May all of them be tormented!"
Tormented by the mudrā of vajra torment,
They come, and
Trembling unbearably,
Saying, "For our lives to end would not be right;
Quickly tell us whatever command you wish,"
They receive the instruction he commands.
If they receive the instruction
According to whatever the mantrin wishes,
Then they will be set free;
Otherwise, never.
Because they are tormented unbearably,
"Whatever you desire,
That we shall do; grant us your command!"
So they speak at that time.
Having placed the vajra palms at the crown of the head,
One then gives them the pledge.
Drawing the figure of the obstructor on the ground,

And pressing it down with the right leg extended,
With the vajra-sword mudrā
One should cut all the obstructors to pieces.
Being cut to pieces, they all
Go to him for refuge.
Then, with a mind endowed with compassion,
One should release the mudrā,
And with a compassionate mind
One should say to them, "Do not be afraid!"
Just as the mantrin wishes,
They then seek their own abodes.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana said to the whole assembly: "Sons of noble family, there are three mudrās. When I practiced the conduct of a bodhisattva for ninety-one eons, at that time I obtained three mudrās from the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Essence of the Ornament of Conduct. For many eons, merely by displaying them, I was not harmed by the obstructors. So focus your minds one-pointedly and listen to them.

Having taken the stance with the right leg extended,
Place the left hand at the heart,
And with the right, together with a dancing gesture,
Place it well at the crown of the head.
This is declared to be the pledge
That always destroys the obstructors.
Merely by displaying it,
They flee, without a doubt.

Having performed the turning back once more,
One should slap the hand upon the ground.
Raising both hands,
At that time puff out the cheeks.
By binding the vajra mudrā,
The obstructors are then destroyed.
If even the Vajra Holder himself
Would be destroyed by the vajra mudrā,
What need is there to say that all the obstructors
Are ruined merely by seeing it?

The mantrin, seated facing east,
Rests the right hand on the hip,
Extends the left well,
And with the left should summon them all.
Summon even all who abide on the ten grounds.
Having summoned them from every side,
One should strike with the vajra mudrā.
Since one strikes with the vajra mudrā,
In that very instant they turn to powder."

Then the Blessed One Vairocana said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Vajrapāṇi, apart from my disciples, you should not explain this to anyone. Why is that? Because those faithless beings do not trust this way, and they will say, 'This was not spoken by the Buddha.' It should not be proclaimed even within their hearing, so what need is there to speak of the mudrās? Lord of the Guhyakas, the master should bestow it only after knowing the characteristics of the disciples, and not otherwise."

Then Vajrapāṇi touched the feet of the Blessed One and said this to the Blessed One: "Blessed One, what is the karmic ripening of those who show contempt for the master?"

The Blessed One said: "Vajrapāṇi, do not say that, for the world with its gods would be terrified. Yet, Lord of the Guhyakas, I shall say a little. Hero, gather your attention and listen.

The unbearable hells I have taught,
Those of immediate retribution and the rest,
Are declared to be their abode,
And there they stay for endless eons.
Therefore, in every way,
One should never show contempt for him.

Lord of the Guhyakas, if you ask how a disciple should regard the master: just as one regards the Buddha, the Blessed One.

When his mind is like this,
Joy will always arise,
And he will become a buddha
Who benefits the whole world."

This completes the section on the sequence of stances from the Vajrapāṇi Empowerment, the king of the lords of discourses.

Then the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, his very being expanded by the great and utterly vast wisdom of all the tathāgatas, entered by focusing on the vast expanse of phenomena, in order to enter the maṇḍala of the wheel of their speech. Having blessed himself as the Blessed One Vairocana, and manifesting the arising of buddhas, he entered into equipoise in the samādhi called Essence of the Ornament Arrayed with the Melodious Speech of the Buddhas. The moment the Blessed One had entered into equipoise, in that very instant, tathāgatas as numerous as the particles in the atoms of ten buddha fields, having understood this, for the sake of accomplishing immeasurable and utterly vast wisdom, stretched out their hands while remaining right where they were, and placed them on the crown of Vajrapāṇi's head. Having placed them there, they spoke these words to Vajrapāṇi:

"Excellent, excellent, great being,
You who bring vajra wisdom to perfection!
You repay what the buddhas have done,
Son of the buddhas, of great miraculous power.
The supreme wisdom of omniscience,
The holy secret: you are to speak it.
Set it forth in the manner of dhāraṇī-mantras,
And explain here the maṇḍala
Upon entering which, at once,
All misdeeds cease to be."

Then all those tathāgatas, as numerous as the particles in the atoms of ten buddha fields, drew back their hands.

Then Vajrapāṇi arose from that samādhi and spoke this supreme great dhāraṇī-mantra, which gives birth to all the tathāgatas, purifies all misdeeds, fully pacifies all illnesses, utterly destroys all obstructors, and gives birth to every excellence:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he buddha matiri sarva vāpaniṣaṇi garja garja bhañja bhañja marda marda gambhīri gambhīra hasa hasa dama dama matha matha vidhvanasya vidhvanasaya sarva śatrūṃ taramati vimale pūraya pūraya pratijñāna sarva bhūta rūpasite bhagavati gana gana jahi jahi vimalasani kramaṇi hadavani ramaṇi mataṃgike svāhā

As soon as Vajrapāṇi had spoken this secret dhāraṇī-mantra, in that very instant this great earth quaked. It rumbled, it rumbled violently; it heaved, it heaved violently. When the south rose, the west sank; when the north rose, the east sank. The Sun and the Moon too fell to the ground, and the vidyādharas fell as well. Even those bodhisattvas who had gained mastery over all dhāraṇīs were stupefied. That whole assembly too was bewildered, and remained bowing in their minds to the youthful Mañjuśrī.

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī, seeing that the assembly was bewildered, said to them, "O friends, call to mind the great dhāraṇī-mantra of empowerment into great wisdom!"

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, "Vajrapāṇi, since this dhāraṇī has great power, how should one understand the power of any practitioner who retains it, keeps it in mind, and makes offerings to it?"

When he had said this, the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi said to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, what is the power, the potency, the majesty of this dhāraṇī-mantra like? Mañjuśrī, in the eastern quarter there is a world system called Stainless Light Rays. In that world system the Tathāgata, the arhat, the perfectly complete Buddha called Stainless Light Rays appeared in the world, and that Blessed One gave this dhāraṇī-mantra, called Source of All, to the bodhisattva, the great being Vajraketu, so that he would retain it. As soon as it had been given to that bodhisattva, in that very instant, by the power of this dhāraṇī-mantra, forms of buddhas came forth from all his pores and entered them again, so many that no one could reach their end. Apart from those blessed by the Buddha, even the bodhisattva great beings who have gained mastery over all dhāraṇīs cannot show what this is like. Those forms of the tathāgatas remained, filling the sphere of space like a pod full of sesame seeds, and those forms of the tathāgatas empowered that bodhisattva great being with light rays and dissolved into that very body. Why is that? By the power of this very great dhāraṇī-mantra."

When he had said this, the youthful Mañjuśrī said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Great bodhisattva, since you have been empowered by all the tathāgatas as lord of all phenomena, you too, in order to reveal the maṇḍala of the great dhāraṇī-mantra, explain the maṇḍala of the great dhāraṇī-mantra!"

When he had said this, the bodhisattva, the great being Vajrapāṇi, said to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, so that it may be accomplished to good purpose, listen to those wisdoms of all the tathāgatas that abide in the form of dhāraṇī-mantras and are blessed by all the tathāgatas. What are they?

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā amari amari ṭata vañja jha jha mici mici sphoṭa sphoṭa mata mata duradānta damka svāhā

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhya sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā he he kaṇiṭi kaniti sarva tathāgata vanake bodandide traṭaṭa traṭaṭa hūṃ phaṭ hūṃ phaṭ garja garja varmati vihūṃrika svāhā

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā bhagavate prajñāpāramitā ā sarva pāpakṣayaṃkari jñāna apaspharaṇi bhañja bhañja matha matha dama dama ānaya ānaya sara sara māraya māraya sarva bhūte janatriye svāhā

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā garja garja matha matha hāma hāma bhañja bhañja dundubhisvara nirghoṣe hana hana vidhvansaya vidhvansaya moṭya moṭya daha daha vipula nirmala nirajāte āhara āhara āgaccha āgaccha sarva buddha sarūpapite mā vilaṃba svāhā

Mañjuśrī, this great dhāraṇī-mantra is called Dhātvīśvarī of All the Tathāgatas. It gives birth to all the tathāgatas, it reveals the essence of awakening, and it is the unerring speech of all the tathāgatas."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī, gazing unblinking at the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, said: "Son of noble family, you too should be regarded as a tathāgata. Why is that? Because you keep in mind this dhāraṇī-mantra endowed with empowerment into great wisdom, so that the great wisdoms of all the tathāgatas never seen before, and the deeds of the buddhas such as the pledges, may continue unbroken from one to the next."

Then, in that very instant, the youthful Mañjuśrī realized the vajra of great wisdom that arises from ninety-nine koṭis of wisdoms, such as the dhāraṇī-mantra of great empowerment. As soon as he had realized the vajra of great wisdom, great clouds of offerings arose in the maṇḍala of the assembly of all the tathāgatas. "How wonderful! Through empowerment into great wisdom, this Mañjuśrī has been empowered!" This sound rang out with a roar throughout all the world systems of the great trichiliocosm.

By its power, the youthful Mañjuśrī saw forms of the tathāgatas, as numerous as the particles in the atoms of ten buddha fields, entering into a great utpala. As soon as the forms of the tathāgatas had entered, then, by the power of realizing the dharmakāya, in that very instant forms of the tathāgatas came forth from and entered into all the spaces between the pores of the youthful Mañjuśrī, his diadem, his ornaments, his limbs and all his lesser limbs. Since even the bodhisattva great beings abiding on the ten grounds, who have obtained every mastery of mind, could not fathom the extent of even a single pore, what need is there to speak of the śrāvakas, the pratyekabuddhas and other worldly beings?

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī let go of that attention and, once more gazing long and unblinking at the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, uttered this inspired utterance:

"These fields are to be fully purified;
The power of the aspirations of all the Victors' heirs is to be fulfilled.
For the benefit of beings, with tender love, free of sickness,
Teach the wisdom, the peaceful nectar so hard to find.
Having gained this precious and holy wisdom,
Beings by the koṭis of niyutas from the buddha fields,
Countless, as you have declared, you are to set free.
You are to make the teaching of samādhi supreme."

Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi said to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Excellent, Mañjuśrī, excellent! Mañjuśrī, these words you have spoken are most weighty, and you too are excellent. Mañjuśrī, in keeping in mind the bases of the secret mantra of such a great dhāraṇī-mantra, you are doing something extremely difficult. Moreover, Mañjuśrī, those great bodhisattvas who keep such great wisdoms in mind, who retain them, accomplish them, and, having made them into a volume, pay homage to them every single day, are doing something extremely difficult. They will certainly attain unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening. When the time of their death draws near, tathāgatas as numerous as the particles in the atoms of ten buddha fields will grant them the sight of themselves, and they will always be blessed by the tathāgatas."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Great being, explain the maṇḍala of the dhāraṇī-mantra of empowerment into great wisdom, the turning of the wheel of Dharma that has never occurred before, through which those who, having understood here this Dharma way of the bodhisattvas, strive earnestly to attain the state of omniscience, come to attain that state."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi said to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, listen to the arrangement of the maṇḍala of the dhāraṇī-mantra of empowerment into great wisdom, merely by entering which the five deeds of immediate retribution are completely purified, all aims are achieved, all glory is produced, and one is fully liberated from all misdeeds. Mañjuśrī, I shall explain the maṇḍala. Mañjuśrī, I shall explain the maṇḍala that bears the names of these dhāraṇī-mantras of all the tathāgatas: it holds the great secret for all embodied beings, it is the supreme great secret of the masters, and it is more secret even than the secret.

Mañjuśrī, as for the measure of the maṇḍala:
Its measure is a full eight cubits,
Made with the master's own cubit.
In that maṇḍala, source of wisdom,
One should make three divisions.
In the three divisions the wise one
Should make the gateways there,
And there open four doors,
Square, with its borders and portals.
As before, in the three divisions,
One should make eight parts each.
Having made the eight parts, the skilled one Should enter the central part.
Contemplating, moment by moment,
That all phenomena are unborn,
One should draw the king of maṇḍalas,
Which brings about every excellence.
In its center the mantrin
Draws a supremely beautiful lotus,
Entirely like emerald;
It is said to have eight petals.
Upon it is a vase,
And upon the vase an utpala.
Upon the utpala draw a conch,
Beautiful, wreathed with garlands of flame.
That Perfection of Wisdom
Is endowed with empowerment into great wisdom.
The eight parts that have been mentioned
Also arise from the central part.
Drawing them too in the manner of dhāraṇīs,
One should make them accord with the sequence of the rite.

Then, in the east, one should draw the Blessed Lady Mahāpratisarā, abiding in the maṇḍala of Mahendra, in the form of the utpala emblem. One should spread utpalas around the edges and set her in the center of a maṇḍala of blazing flames. This is the dhāraṇī-mantra of the Blessed Lady Mahāpratisarā:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathārā oṃ bhagavati sarva tathāgati janike surāya pratin tataṭaṭa marda marda āhara āhara hūṃ hūṃ jahi jahi svāhā

In the direction of Īśāna, one should draw the dhāraṇī called the Blessed Lady Invincible Vajra Flame:
In the center of a water maṇḍala
Draw a most beautiful lotus;
Upon it is a wheel,
Beautiful, wreathed with a garland of flames.
Its dhāraṇī-mantra is this:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvatha huṃ hriḥ sarva padma ta hrīḥ bhañja bhañja matha matha damamani dammani garghari garghari hrīḥ svāhā

Resting in the direction of Agni, one should draw the dhāraṇī called the Blessed Lady Who Abandons All Misdeeds:
One should draw the forms of the emblems
Endowed with water and with Mahendra:
Upon a lotus is a vajra,
Most beautiful amid the flames.
Its dhāraṇī-mantra is this:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā traṭa traṭa muhū muhū sarva pāpaṃ śodhane svāhā

In the south one should draw the dhāraṇī called Hard to Tame:
Endowed with fire and with wind,
An utpala is to be drawn there.

Upon it is a jewel
That fulfills every wish,
With a dense and peaceful garland of flames,
Encircled all around by lotuses.
Its dhāraṇī-mantra is this:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā dhaka dhaka moṭa moṭa daha daha sarva tathāgata jñāna nirjūte svāhā

In the direction of Nairṛti one should draw the dhāraṇī called Destroyer of All Māras:
Its maṇḍala is a maṇḍala of fire,
Set in the center of a lotus.
Upon it the mantra practitioner
Should draw a most beautiful hook.
Vajras linked one with another
The wise one should set out there.
Its dhāraṇī-mantra is this:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā haha mihu mihu dama dama khāhi khāhi dhuna dhuna mici mici durdāntadmani svāhā

In the north one should draw the dhāraṇī called the Blessed Lady Who Accomplishes the Infinite Gateways:
The maṇḍala to be drawn for it
Is like the disk of the moon.
Upon it is a lotus
Whose light is like the fire at the end of time.
Upon that is a sword,
Encircled all around by rays of light.
With utpalas bearing dense garlands of flames
It should be filled on every side.
Its dhāraṇī-mantra is this:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā mici mici garja garja sphoṭaya sphoṭaya matha matha dama dama svāhā

In the direction of the wind one should draw the dhāraṇī called Ratnākara:
Its maṇḍala is a maṇḍala of wind;
Upon its three portions rests an uṣṇīṣa.
All of it should be covered with hooks
And furnished with a garland of blazing flames.

In the west one should draw the Blessed Lady Who Impels:
Its maṇḍala is that of Īśāna,
And on it a vajra is well placed.
Upon that is a great lotus,
And upon that a rosary;

These are entwined with garlands of flames,
And above, they are covered with lotuses.

Then in the third tier
The bodhisattvas of great miraculous power
Should be drawn by the mantra practitioner as is fitting,
And in the eight directions as before.
There in the east the yogin
Should draw Lokeśvara of great light;
A most beautiful lotus
Is declared to be his mudrā.

In the direction of Agni one should draw the mudrā of the bodhisattva, the great being Samantabhadra, a wish-fulfilling jewel. In the direction of Īśāna one should draw the mudrā of the youthful Mañjuśrī, an utpala. In the south one should draw the mudrā of Vajrapāṇi, a vajra. In the north one should draw the mudrā of Maitreya, a water flask. In the direction of the wind one should draw the mudrā of Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin, a lotus. In the direction of Nairṛti one should draw the mudrā of Ākāśagarbha, a sword. In the west one should draw the mudrā of Kṣitigarbha, a lotus.

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Vajrapāṇi, excellent, excellent! Vajrapāṇi, it is excellent indeed that you, for the benefit and happiness of all sentient beings, have proclaimed the maṇḍala of the great dhāraṇī-mantra of empowerment by great wisdom."

When he had said this, Vajrapāṇi said this to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, whoever holds in hand this great maṇḍala of empowerment into great wisdom will become free of afflictions. He will become free of fear and of enemies. Whether he stays among bandits, among rākṣasas, among enemies, or in the midst of battle, weapons will not wound his body. He will not be overcome by bandits, nor harmed by rākṣasas and the like. No fear of untimely death will arise for him. He will always be endowed with glory. All his misdeeds will be thoroughly purified. The roots of virtue he has accumulated under hundreds of thousands of koṭis of niyutas of buddhas will become manifest to him as though in a single day. At the time of death, too, he will be watched over by the buddhas and bodhisattvas, and after death he will be born in Sukhāvatī. That being so, what need is there to speak of one who holds it, reads it, keeps it in mind, or retains even just its name? All his obscurations will be cleared away. He will close the doors to the lower realms, and the lower realms and the bad destinies will become far distant from him.

The person who rises in the morning
And recites it a single time
Will be freed from the misdeeds
Committed amid the perils of existence."

The Noble Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, the twelfth and final fascicle.

Then the bodhisattva, the great being, the youthful Mañjuśrī, said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Lord of the Guhyakas, if someone draws this king of maṇḍalas and enters it, how great will his heap of merit be?"

Vajrapāṇi said, "Mañjuśrī, I am not able to set forth the measure of his heap of merit. Nevertheless, Mañjuśrī, you should know that the heap of merit of that son of good family or daughter of good family is as great as the number of particles of dust in the earth. Mañjuśrī, in the future there will be sinful beings who have no faith in this way. Mañjuśrī, those beings who are full of doubts, whose nature is given to all kinds of conceptual thought, who are in the grip of unwholesome friends, who are disrespectful to their fathers and disrespectful to their mothers, who revile their masters and gurus, and who seek out faults in their gurus, must not be allowed to hold in their hands this maṇḍala of the dhāraṇī-mantra of empowerment into great wisdom. It should not even be allowed to reach their ears. Mañjuśrī, one should not even talk about it in front of them. Even when it is written in a volume, it should not be opened in their presence, for if those sinful beings reject it even slightly, they will swiftly go to the lower realms, to the hells. They will say, 'This was not spoken by the Buddha,' and so they ruin themselves and ruin others as well. I declare that for beings who act in this way there is no accomplishment of secret mantra. The buddhas and bodhisattvas, too, will always turn their backs on them, and once these have turned their backs on them, there is no deliverance at all and no accomplishment of secret mantra."

When he had said this, the youthful Mañjuśrī said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Those bodhisattva great beings who have faith in this way of secret mantra are doing what is extremely difficult."

"Mañjuśrī, it is just as you have said. They are certain of unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening, and the tathāgatas will bless them."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "How great should one understand the heap of merit to be of a great bodhisattva who writes out in letters, reads and retains this great maṇḍala of the great dhāraṇī-mantra of empowerment into great wisdom?"

Vajrapāṇi said, "Mañjuśrī, as great as the heap of merit of as many tathāgatas as there are minute particles of dust in ten buddha fields, so great should his heap of merit be understood to be. Why is that? Because the Tathāgata himself abides as the very nature of this dhāraṇī-mantra, but those fools who have not understood this way do not know it.

"Moreover, Mañjuśrī, all the bodhisattvas who have attained dhāraṇī and attained mastery over all sentient beings, who perform various feats of miraculous power and wondrous display, and who display clouds of offerings of every kind in the maṇḍalas of the assemblies of all the tathāgatas, all of that, too, is the power of these dhāraṇī-mantras. Those great bodhisattvas who defeat Māra, who fully awaken to perfect awakening, and who turn the wheel of Dharma, that, too, is the power of these dhāraṇī-mantras.

"Mañjuśrī, whoever is empowered in this maṇḍala of secret empowerment into great wisdom has entered into all the samayas. Why is that? Because the Tathāgata himself abides as such a nature, as the nature of the dhāraṇī-mantra, or as the nature of the maṇḍala. Therefore, apart from this maṇḍala of the dhāraṇī-mantra, there is no other. Why is that? Because this maṇḍala is the nature of the Tathāgata. Therefore, whoever is empowered here has received the empowerment of all maṇḍalas.

"Mañjuśrī, in whatever place this maṇḍala of the dhāraṇī-mantra of empowerment into great wisdom is made, or whoever holds it in hand, or for whose sake it is written, or whoever rises in the morning every day and recites it once, for him fears will not arise. All the tathāgatas, too, will look upon him every day. At the moment of death, too, all the tathāgatas will reveal their bodies to him.

"Mañjuśrī, look: all the trees and forests that stand upon the earth, if there were no earth, they too would not exist. Mañjuśrī, in just the same way, all the tathāgatas and the great bodhisattvas who have attained mastery over mind abide in these dhāraṇī-mantras. Blessed by them, they find the state of omniscience. They are victorious over Māra. They turn the wheel of Dharma. They fully awaken to perfect awakening. Then they also accomplish the aims of sentient beings in many different ways. All of this is the power of these dhāraṇī-mantras.

"Therefore, Mañjuśrī, you too should take it up! Read it! Keep it in mind! Teach it correctly and extensively to others! By that, benefit and happiness will come to all sentient beings.

"Mañjuśrī, the place where this great maṇḍala of the great dhāraṇī-mantra of empowerment into great wisdom is made will become like a stūpa. And toward the mantra practitioner who holds it in hand, one should give rise to the perception that he is the Teacher. Mañjuśrī, all the tathāgatas will always bless that mantra practitioner. That mantra practitioner, too, should always guard this great maṇḍala of the great dhāraṇī-mantra like a casket of jewels. Why is that? Because, Mañjuśrī, there are beings whose nature is to lack respect for the buddhas and bodhisattvas and who seek out faults in their master. Mañjuśrī, if for such as these one should not recite it even in the slightest in conversation, nor even show them the volume, what need is there to speak of forcibly empowering them in the maṇḍala, having them read it, or having them look at it? Mañjuśrī, to let such people see it and to let it come out in words is that bodhisattva's error. Mañjuśrī, it should be understood as a great heedlessness on the part of the bodhisattva. It is a great error and an exceedingly great wrong.

"Mañjuśrī, to deceive the buddhas and great bodhisattvas is a light matter, but rejecting these words of the dhāraṇī-mantra is not so. Mañjuśrī, the appearance of buddhas is rare, like the udumbara flower. Rarer still than that is the teaching of dhāraṇī-mantras such as this. Rarer still than that is practicing it with diligence. Rarer still than that are those beings who hold it in hand, who listen to it, read it and retain it, or who draw the maṇḍala. If even the limit of the heap of merit of these beings cannot be fathomed, what need is there to speak of those who rise in the morning and recite it once? Their five acts of immediate retribution and the rest will be completely purified. No fears of any kind will arise for him. No untimely death of any kind and no fear of adversaries of any kind will arise. No diseases of any kind will arise in his body.

"Suppose someone, in a place secluded from activity, smears a maṇḍala with cow dung, offers flowers, and on an auspicious lunar date, at midnight, at an auspicious moment and a good time, writes it on birch bark; or else, on the eighth or the fifteenth day of the waxing moon, offers incense, flowers, fumigants and food offerings for the deities, sets out eight butter lamps and five golden vases, writes it on birch bark, and ties it on the neck, the upper arm, the wrist or the waist. Then even if he goes into the midst of battle, sets out on the road, or goes to a king's palace, none of these fears will arise for him."

"Mañjuśrī, this is the supreme protection for sentient beings. In whatever house, monastery or dwelling these dhāraṇī-mantras are kept, it becomes the supreme protection in that place. Mañjuśrī, in the world with its gods and its māras I have not seen anyone who would transgress against a protection made with any one of these dhāraṇī-mantras. I, Vajrapāṇi, will crush his head with a vajra blazing all over and become a single mass of flame.

"Mañjuśrī, when the rain does not fall, one should recite these dhāraṇī-mantras. When enemy armies approach, one should recite them. When harm from human epidemics has arisen, if they are recited, all fears will be completely pacified; they will be pacified at once."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Great bodhisattva, this exceedingly vast maṇḍala of the great dhāraṇī-mantra, this exceedingly profound one, hard to fathom, more secret even than the secret, not fit to be taught to sinful beings: Vajrapāṇi, what you have spoken is something exceedingly rare. Since it has never been heard before, to what sort of beings should it be explained?"

Vajrapāṇi said, "Mañjuśrī, there are those who have embarked upon cultivating the awakening mind, and when their awakening mind has become accomplished, then, Mañjuśrī, those bodhisattvas who practice the conduct of a bodhisattva through the gateway of secret mantra should be brought into the maṇḍala of the dhāraṇī-mantra of empowerment into great wisdom. But those whose awakening mind has not become complete should not be brought in; they should not even be allowed to look at the maṇḍala. Neither the mudrās nor the secret mantras should be shown to them.

"Mañjuśrī, listen, and I shall explain the great mudrā by whose mere binding, in order to bless this maṇḍala of the great dhāraṇī-mantra, everything becomes blessed. Joining the two hands and bending the right middle finger is the mudrā that summons all the dhāraṇī-mantras. Its secret mantra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvatha āgaccha punitti bari pūraṇi sami sami maṃgali maṃgali hūṃ phaṭ

"If that same middle finger is placed as before, the dhāraṇī-mantras will bestow their blessing in the maṇḍala.

"The mudrā of the bodhisattvas: if both hands are clenched into fists and the two index fingers are bent, all of them will be summoned. Its secret mantra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā tathāgata bodhisatva madhari āgaccha āgaccha sanidadhaṃ kuru kuru hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ

"Then one should bind the mudrā from which supreme offerings arise. Joining the two hands and extending the two index fingers is the mudrā from which offerings arise; with it one should bless the supreme offerings. Its secret mantra:

namaḥ sarva tathāgatebhyaḥ sarva mukhebhyaḥ sarvathā mahābūja pravartani hūṃ phaṭ pravartaya pravartaya sarva tathāgata samaye svāhā

"Mañjuśrī, then the master should take the disciple into his care according to the rite, as before. To one who has accomplished the cultivation of the awakening mind he should show this maṇḍala and the mudrās. Anyone else, who is not such, should not even be allowed to look at the volume.

"Mañjuśrī, if a bodhisattva who practices the conduct of a bodhisattva through the gateway of secret mantra shows the maṇḍala or shows the mudrās to a being who does not know the samaya, he will have deceived the buddhas and bodhisattvas. He will also be committing the five acts of immediate retribution. Mañjuśrī, for a bodhisattva to commit the five acts of immediate retribution is a light matter, but to teach it to one who does not know the samaya, whose body has not been thoroughly purified, and who has not accomplished the cultivation of the awakening mind is not so. Mañjuśrī, one should never speak of it in words in front of such beings. Why is that? Because those sinful beings are ungrateful toward the buddhas and bodhisattvas and are without faith."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī was filled with wonder at this in his mind. Thinking, "This domain of the buddhas is inconceivable," he fell silent.

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Great bodhisattva, great being, to hear these dhāraṇī-mantras, to enter the maṇḍala, to read them and to keep them in mind, or at the very least merely to have them reach one's ears, is exceedingly difficult."

Vajrapāṇi said, "Mañjuśrī, so it is. It is just as you have said. Mañjuśrī, you should know that those beings who make offerings to this dhāraṇī-mantra and write it out in letters are exceedingly rare. Whoever writes it on birch bark or on something else and wears it on any limb or lesser limb, for him no fears of any kind will arise, he will be freed from all misdeeds, and every day his roots of virtue will be accumulated as though from a thousand buddhas. Mañjuśrī, the place where this teaching of the maṇḍala of the great dhāraṇī-mantra abides, or the spot where it is in someone's hand, will become like a stūpa."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Great bodhisattva, whoever holds, reads and recites these dhāraṇī-mantras, I will make offerings to him and serve him with reverence. I will always follow after him as well. When the time of his death comes, I will be his spiritual friend then too, and I will always show him the path to awakening."

"Mañjuśrī, excellent, excellent! These words are well spoken. Mañjuśrī, I too will make offerings to him. I will always follow after him as well. I will always protect him too. At the time of his death, too, I will give him a prophecy."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī said this to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi:

"Great bodhisattva, explain in detail the analysis of the stages for accomplishing the siddhis of those dhāraṇī-mantras: by accomplishing which the bodhisattva great beings who practice the conduct of a bodhisattva through the gateway of secret mantra will be born into the family of the tathāgatas, and by accomplishing which dhāraṇī-mantras the mantra practitioner will obtain in this very life whatever accomplishment his mind desires."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi said this to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, listen, and I shall explain the practice of these dhāraṇī-mantras just as the buddhas have taught it. There is no need to match it to the lunar date or the constellation, and no need to fast. Nor will obstructors arise, for at the time of practicing the dhāraṇī-mantras one will always be blessed by all the buddhas of great miraculous power.

"Mañjuśrī, first of all, here is the rite of the painted image for these dhāraṇī-mantras. One should buy cloth at the price asked and see that it is free of hairs and the like. Then one should wash it with the five products of the cow and anoint it with scented water. Then, on an auspicious lunar date, at midnight and at a good moment, the painting should be made: one should have a painter who keeps the poṣadha vow draw it. That painter, too, should be protected with the Cakravartin. Every day one should also present food offerings for the deities and other offerings.

"Then in the center the painter should draw the Blessed Lady Prajñāpāramitā, seated cross-legged, with her hair in a topknot, absorbed in samādhi. To the left of the Blessed Lady he should draw Mahāpratisarā, seated upon a great king of utpalas, absorbed in samādhi, with her braided locks hanging down. On the right side is Vajrājitā, seated upon a white lotus, her body adorned with ornaments of every kind, holding a wheel in her left hand, her right hand paying homage to the Blessed Lady. In the upper part, too, he should draw two vidyādharas sending down a rain of flowers. In the lower part should be the practitioner, holding an incense bowl in hand, gazing at the Blessed Lady, holding a flowering branch, and seated cross-legged.

"Then the bodhisattva who practices the conduct of a bodhisattva through the gateway of secret mantra should stay in a clean place, a solitary place, on a mountain, in a forest, in a monastery, or wherever is agreeable to his mind. Eating alms food and keeping inner purity, before that painted image he should take up any one of the dhāraṇī-mantras and perform four hundred thousand recitations. At the end, on the day of the full moon, he should make offerings as best he can afford, and if he recites throughout the whole night, then in the morning, at sunrise, signs will appear. Rays of light will appear on the body of the mantra practitioner, and a rain of flowers will fall upon the image. The vidyādharas will raise a clamor. Thunder will roar. And the Blessed Lady will speak these words: 'Child, I have been accomplished; receive it!'

"Then the vidyādhara should present an offering of water and say this to the Blessed Lady: 'Fulfill my wishes!' Then the Blessed Lady takes the vidyādhara by the hand and places him in the maṇḍala of the assembly of all the tathāgatas. Through the power of the Blessed Lady, in an instant, a moment, a second, he accomplishes there the offering to all the tathāgatas, and in each instant he brings joy to all the realms of sentient beings. He will abide with many attendant vidyādharas in the maṇḍala of the assembly of all the tathāgatas.

"Mañjuśrī, this sūtra of the extensive rite of the painted image of the Blessed Lady accomplishes every aim, utterly removes all misdeeds, utterly purifies all fears, and utterly pacifies every untimely death. Mañjuśrī, whoever sees this painted image and makes offerings to it, in whose hand it is, and whoever writes it out in letters, to him the bodhisattvas will show the path to awakening, and he will become free of all misdeeds. He will be born from the merit of all the tathāgatas. He will become free of all fears. He will not be harmed by the evil māras. At the time of death he will see the Buddha."

"Vajrapāṇi, so it is. It is just as you have said. Great bodhisattva, whatever son of good family or daughter of good family sees this painted image, paints it, or has it in hand will be endowed with immeasurable qualities. He will be certain of unsurpassed, perfect and complete awakening, and he will not go to the lower realms and the bad destinies. He will always be born into the family of the tathāgatas, and all his aspirations will be completely fulfilled."

Then the youthful Mañjuśrī made this request to the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi: "Great bodhisattva, tell the analysis of the stages for accomplishing the general siddhis of these dhāraṇī-mantras, by which those who practice the conduct of awakening through the gateway of secret mantra will, with little trouble and little time, please the buddhas and bodhisattvas, will perform miraculous displays of many kinds, and in the maṇḍala of the assembly of all the tathāgatas will free all sentient beings from all suffering."

When he had said this, the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi said this to the youthful Mañjuśrī: "Mañjuśrī, listen, and in order to benefit sentient beings I shall explain the analysis of the general practice of these dhāraṇī-mantras. Mañjuśrī, any bodhisattva at all who practices the conduct of awakening through the gateway of secret mantra should set up the painted image and contemplate the Blessed Lady in his mind as form, as color, as shape or as letters. If he meditates in this way for six months, he will become capable of every rite. Poison will flee at his mere glance. When someone is seized by a graha, it will flee at a mere threat. Whatever else has seized someone will also let go at his mere glance. Even while staying beyond a hundred yojanas, he performs every rite. Against all fears, protection is made with a thread over which the mantra has been recited one hundred and eight times.

Against all obstructors, protection is made with water. Practitioners, or those who practice the rites of vetālas, should with any one of these secret mantras protect themselves, protect others, bind the directions, and seal the boundary of the maṇḍala.

Then, if one wishes to make the body invisible, under the constellation Puṣya one should buy realgar at the price asked and steep it in one's own blood. Then one should take it out and place it before the painted image. Then, eating a gruel of milk and flour as one's food, for seven days one should recite the mantra one hundred and eight times at each of the three times of day. Then, on the eighth day of the waning fortnight, without eating any food, one should place it in the left hand and recite the mantra of the Blessed Lady, and it will be accomplished. When a tilaka is made with it, the body becomes invisible, and one will have a form that changes at will, lasting five thousand years.

If one wishes to see the Blessed Lady, one should eat alms food for one month, go to a mountain peak, and recite the mantra of the Blessed Lady. Then one should fast for three days, and on the day of the full moon, at the foot of a bodhi tree, present food offerings for the deities as best one can afford, make offerings, and recite the mantra of the Blessed Lady. Then at midnight the Blessed Lady herself will come, and one should present her with an offering of water together with white flowers. Then the Blessed Lady strokes the crown of the practitioner's head and says, "Child, excellent! What boon shall I grant you?" When she says this, one should ask for whatever one wishes. If one wishes, one should ask for a mount, the state of a vidyādhara, invisibility, going beneath the earth, or anything else at all that one's mind desires; all of that one should ask for.

If one wishes to accomplish a haṃsa, one should make the figure of a haṃsa out of red lead and place it before the painted image. One should make an extensive offering with kunda flowers, and if one recites the mantra of the Blessed Lady throughout the whole night, then in the morning, at sunrise, it will be accomplished. Mounting it, one rises into the sky and becomes a second Brahmā.

If one wishes to accomplish a peacock, one should make the figure of a peacock out of clay and place it before the painted image. After reciting the mantra of the Blessed Lady for six months, at the end, on the day of the full moon, one should make offerings as best one can afford, and if one recites throughout the whole night, then at sunrise it will utter the cry of a peacock. As soon as the cry has sounded, the mantra practitioner should take it up. By merely taking it up, the mantra practitioner becomes like the son of the Pleiades (Kārttikeya). If, by the same rite, one accomplishes the son of the earth-protector (Airāvata), one becomes like Śakra (Indra).

If one wishes to accomplish invisibility, one should take a human skull and grind it finely together with licorice. Finally, on the eighth day of the waxing fortnight, one should kindle a fire of arka wood, present extensive offerings to the painted image, and perform a fire offering throughout the whole night. In the morning, if one marks the fingernails with its ash, the body becomes invisible, and one becomes the king of all who are invisible.

There is also another application. One should cook red lead together with butter and then place it in a copper vessel. Having made extensive offerings to the painted image, one should recite throughout the whole night until it blazes like crystal. Then it will be accomplished. If a tilaka is made with it, the body becomes invisible, lasting five thousand years.

If one wishes to accomplish an eye ointment, one should take jasmine flowers and ligbu mik and grind them finely. Then, as before, one should place them in a copper vessel, make offerings, and recite for one month. Then, when it has turned blue, if one anoints the eyes with it, whatever direction one looks toward will come under one's power. If one anoints the eyes with it, the king, the ministers, the chief queen, the princesses, and anyone else at all whom one looks at will come under one's power.

Then, if one wishes to accomplish the supreme eye ointment, on the eighth day of the waning fortnight one should take a corpse without wounds and present food offerings for the deities together with red sandalwood. Then one should place the eye ointment in the corpse's hand and recite. When one has recited, the eye ointment lying in the corpse's hand will move. Then it will be accomplished. If one anoints the eyes with it, whoever one looks at will come under one's power.

If one performs a fire offering with eight thousand jasmine flowers, all rites will be accomplished with ease.

If one enters a river that flows down to the ocean, beginning on the eighth day of the waning fortnight, and, eating alms food, recites the mantra a hundred thousand times, then on the eighth day of the waxing fortnight one will be granted a realm.

If on the eighth day of the waxing fortnight, eating alms food, one recites the mantra one thousand and eight times before the painted image, enemy armies will be completely pacified. Then, if, drinking milk as one's food, one recites it a hundred thousand times, the enemy army will be scattered.

If on the eighth day of the waning fortnight one fasts for one day, makes an extensive offering before the painted image, and recites throughout the whole night, then rays of light will come forth from the painted image. Then it will be accomplished: rajyaṃ dadāti, and it lasts for five hundred years.

If one enters a river that flows down to the ocean, recites the mantra a hundred thousand times, and drinks only water as one's food, then a sword will appear, held in the sky. One should present an offering of water and take it. By merely taking it, one's hair coils into locks, one comes to look like a youth of sixteen, and one goes about surrounded by many vidyādharas, with music played on many cymbals and drums. Every day one will see many buddha fields. Everywhere, too, one brings about clouds of offerings of every kind. And when one dies, one will be born in the pure buddha fields and born into the family of all the tathāgatas.

If one wishes to accomplish a sword, one should go to a solitary place and, drinking only water, recite the mantra for one month. After that, on the day of the full moon, one should make an extensive offering before the painted image as best one can afford, and if one recites throughout the whole night, then the sword will blaze. By merely taking it up, one becomes a vidyādhara, and one becomes the king of all vidyādharas.

…one will live for sixty thousand years. One will also make offerings, and one accomplishes every need just as one wishes. When one dies, one gains mastery of the first ground.

If one wishes food to arise inexhaustibly, one should take the root of the spoma plant and make a fire offering of it together with guḍūcī; then one's food will be inexhaustible.

If the eyes are diseased, one should enchant ground rock salt seven times and cover the eyes with it; the eye disease will then be cured.

If one grinds the root of the kalapiṅka with water free of living creatures and smears it around the navel, a woman will give birth with ease.

When the moon is seized by the wolf, one should put the butter of a tawny cow into a copper vessel and recite until it sizzles with a sound of "tsiriri." If one then drinks it, one will retain whatever one hears.

Having kept the fast of the poṣadha, beginning from the sixteenth day, if one makes a fire offering of sesame mixed with honey, rājyaṃ pratilabhyate. If one recites ten million times before the painted image, one will see the Blessed Lady Prajñāpāramitā, and she will teach one the Dharma. By hearing it, one will also become irreversible.

If one makes a vajra of red sandalwood, sets it at one's side, and recites until it blazes, then merely by touching it one becomes king of the four continents.

If one makes a fire offering of the fruits of the paṭa tree, whoever's name one pronounces will come under one's control. Juniper berries are the same:

whoever's name one pronounces while making the fire offering will come under one's control. Or else, if one makes a fire offering of nimba fruits, whoever's name one pronounces will come under one's control.

If one makes a fire offering of bibhītaka flowers, one will obtain a great territory. If one makes a fire offering of mallikā flowers, one's food will never run out. If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand karavīra flowers and fruits, one will obtain a hundred thousand dīnāras. If one makes a fire offering of ten thousand jātī flowers, one will become the foremost royal chaplain. One should place the juice of brama together with honey in a copper vessel and recite until one obtains a dīnāra. By a fire offering of guggulu one will obtain a minor kingdom.

If one kindles a fire of bilva wood and makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand mallikā flowers, all the nāgas will come under one's control. If one kindles a fire of bibhītaka wood and makes a fire offering of ten thousand kindling sticks of aloeswood, all the yakṣas will come under one's control.

If one goes to a shrine of the Great God (Śiva), makes a maṇḍala with cow dung that has not fallen on the ground, and offers one thousand and eight arka flowers, one will see the Great God, and he will grant whatever accomplishment one desires. If one draws the painted image at a shrine of the Great God and recites a hundred thousand times, one will see the Husband of Umā, and he will grant whatever accomplishment one desires.

If one draws the painted image in a great charnel ground and recites one hundred and eight times, one will see a great vetāla. Even if he appears baring hideous fangs, like a great mass of fire, one should not be afraid of him; binding the mudrā, one should strike him, and he will fall down. When one then asks him for a boon, whether a kingdom, a treasure, invisibility, a land, or the power of travel on foot, he will grant any one of these five boons.

By a fire offering of salt one summons the women of the gods. If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight unopened jātī flowers, one will obtain one dīnāra every day. If one wishes an enemy to be deprived of life, one should make a fire offering of a hundred thousand oblations of salt, and he will be deprived of life.

If one wishes to accomplish a garuḍa, one should make the form of a garuḍa out of anthill clay and smear it with the five products of the cow. Then one should place that form of the garuḍa before the painted image and recite a hundred thousand times. It will then be accomplished, and mounting it, one goes wherever one wishes. It also procures all one's requisites. One will be free of all fears, and all the nāgas will come under one's control.

If one wishes to accomplish the Cakravartin, one should make a wheel of iron, wash it with scented water, and anoint it with saffron. Then one should place it on aśvattha leaves, set it out before the painted image, and recite three hundred thousand times. It will then be accomplished, and merely by holding it, one becomes a vidyādhara cakravartin, the king of all vidyādharas. Surrounded by many koṭis of vidyādharas and surrounded by many koṭis of divine maidens, one travels through the sky within a divine palace and constantly makes offerings.

If one wishes to accomplish the Blessed Lady, one should recite six hundred thousand times before the painted image. One will then see the Blessed Lady directly, and merely by seeing her one will follow in the conduct of the tathāgatas. One will also attain meditative absorption, and one will gain the companionship of the bodhisattvas.

If one wishes to pacify, one should offer one thousand and eight unopened lotuses, and the one for whose sake they were offered will be pacified. If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight jātī flowers, all of that person's illnesses will vanish. If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight bibhītaka flowers, there will be no untimely death, and one will be embraced by good fortune. If one makes a fire offering of ten thousand unopened atimuktaka flowers, then whatever graha has seized the person for whose sake it is done will release him at merely a glance.

When the moon is seized by the wolf, one should place butter in a copper vessel and recite until smoke billows from it. If one then drinks it, one will retain whatever one hears.

If one wishes to accomplish a peacock, one should take earth from both banks of a river, mix it with sandalwood, and make the form of a peacock. Then one should place that peacock before the painted image and recite until it utters the cry of a peacock; it will then become an accomplishment.

If one wishes to accomplish wealth, one should offer a hundred thousand karavīra flowers, and one will obtain five dīnāras every day. If one enters water up to the throat and recites a hundred thousand times, one will find a treasure. If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand unopened jātī flowers, one will obtain whatever woman one desires.

If one offers ten thousand atimuktaka flowers, whatever illnesses are in the body will all be swept away, and they will not arise again. One will also become long-lived, good fortune will arise in one's body, and one will live for a hundred years.

If one wishes to destroy a hostile army, one should enchant one's finger seven times and threaten with it, and the army will flee. If one wishes them to fight, one should make a fire offering of a hundred thousand owl feathers, and they will fight. If one wishes to ruin an enemy, one should make a fire offering of a hundred thousand mustard seeds, and the enemy will be deprived of life. If one makes a fire offering of ten thousand juniper berries dipped in ghee with the three hot spices, no obstructors will harm one. If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight bibhītaka fruits dipped in white mustard oil, the enemy will be ruined within five days.

For bringing under control, one should make a figure out of śāli rice flour, cut it into pieces, and make a fire offering of it; within seven days even Śakra will come under one's control. If one makes a fire offering of unopened karavīra flowers, the yakṣiṇīs will come under one's control. If one makes a fire offering of jātī leaves, one drives mad whomever one wishes. jatikalikanan lakṣaṃ juhuyad rājānaṃ baśikaroti. If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight atimuktaka flowers, the land will come under one's control. By a fire offering of ghee, quartan fever will vanish. If one makes a fire offering of jātī flowers mixed with honey, one will obtain one dīnāra every day.

Next, one who wishes to accomplish the nāgas should make a fire offering of a hundred thousand unopened mallikā flowers. All the nāgas will then be accomplished, and all of them there are will accomplish whatever one wishes. If one makes a fire offering of ten thousand unopened aśoka flowers, all the yakṣiṇīs will be accomplished, and every day they will present food and clothing for five hundred servants. If one wishes to bring the yakṣiṇīs under control, one should make a fire offering of a hundred thousand kindling sticks of aloeswood; all the yakṣiṇīs will then come under one's control and will accomplish whatever one wishes.

If one wishes to accomplish Vajrapāṇi, one should recite four hundred thousand times before the painted image. Finally, on the full moon, one should make offerings of utpala flowers as best one can afford and recite through the whole night. Then in the morning, at sunrise, Vajrapāṇi will come, and having come he will touch the head of the vidyādhara. Merely by that touch, one becomes endowed with the five superknowledges. One will obtain the state of a vidyādhara itself, or anything else whatsoever, and by this one will obtain all that one wishes.

If one offers a hundred thousand kiṃśuka flowers before the image of Vajrapāṇi, one will obtain a thousand dīnāras. If one takes hold of the hand of the image of Vajrapāṇi and recites for one month, it will give one dīnāra every day. If one places the image of Vajrapāṇi on lotus petals and offers ten thousand unopened jātī flowers, it will give one kārṣāpaṇa every day.

If for one month one rises at midnight, makes a maṇḍala with gorocanā every day, and recites the mantra of the Blessed Lady, one will become able to perform every rite, and obstructors will not harm one. If for one month one smears the maṇḍala with red sandalwood and recites the mantra of the Blessed Lady, all the piśācas will come under one's control and will do whatever one wishes. If one smears the maṇḍala with one's own blood and recites for one month, all the ḍākinīs will come under one's control and will do whatever one wishes.

If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand pieces of white calamus, all the mātṛkās will be accomplished and will accomplish whatever one wishes. If one makes a fire offering of a thousand ligadur seeds, one will obtain a full vessel every day. If one makes a fire offering of the root of the geushar plant, one will obtain four kārṣāpaṇas every day. If one makes a fire offering of ten thousand apāmārga kernels, inexhaustible wealth will arise. If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight peppercorns, takes the ash, makes a mark with it, and scatters it into heaps of peas, lentils, and the like, they will become inexhaustible.

If one wishes to accomplish Mañjuśrī, one should smear a maṇḍala with gorocanā mixed with aloeswood, place the image there, and recite for one month. One will then see Mañjuśrī himself, and he will teach one the Dharma. On seeing him, one will retain whatever one hears, and one will also attain the state of a vidyādhara; he fulfills it for as long as one wishes. If one offers one thousand and eight white lotuses, Mañjuśrī will be accomplished for one, and he will grant any one of five boons: kingship, entry into the underworld, invisibility, retention of what one hears, or rejuvenation through elixirs.

If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight kindling sticks of āmalaka, all the yakṣiṇīs there are will come under one's control and will accomplish whatever one wishes. If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand bilva fruits, all the Śrīs there are will be accomplished and will accomplish whatever one wishes. najyadima prayadcanti. If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand bibhītaka seeds, all the Sarasvatīs will be accomplished, and through their accomplishment one's speech will become unimpeded. If one makes a fire offering of ten thousand unopened priyaṅgu flowers, one will obtain five kārṣāpaṇas every day.

If one wishes to put everyone to sleep, one should draw a painted image of the god who is lord of the city, make a fire offering of mustard seed, carry its ash into the city, and scatter it. They will all fall asleep and remain so, and one may do whatever one wishes. Just as for a city, one should do likewise for a country.

One who wishes to dry up a pond should make a fire offering of ten thousand oblations of mustard seed smeared with one's own blood, take its ash, and scatter it in that pond. The pond will dry up, and the nāgas who dwell there will present jewels to one, just as one wishes.

If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand kindling sticks of apāmārga, one will see the goddess Śrī. sa ca rājyama prayacchati. If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight bilva fruits, one will become the royal chaplain of a great king. If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand kindling sticks of aśoka, all four-footed creatures will come under one's control. If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand jātī flowers, one will become worthy to have one's words heeded in the circle of the royal palace. If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand jātī flowers, all women will be brought under one's control. If one makes a fire offering of a hundred kindling sticks from the mustard plant dipped in honey, all the grahas will become peaceful toward one.

If one scatters rice porridge and honey into flowing water, all the nāginīs will come under one's control, and they will even lead one to their own abodes. If one wishes to accomplish the vināyakas, one should scatter a hundred thousand atimuktaka flowers, and all the vināyakas will grant accomplishments. If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight aśvattha leaves dipped in honey, all the yakṣiṇīs will present that vidyādhara every day with a full vessel of whatever he wishes. If one makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight peacock feathers, all the harms of Māra will be dispelled.

With aloeswood: mardanaṃ astahasasran juhuyāda rāja baśo bhavati. With kindling sticks of priyaṅgu: mahārāja gramahiśi baśo bhavati.

If one kindles a fire of aloeswood kindling sticks and makes a fire offering of ten thousand sesame seeds, the land will come under one's control. If one kindles a fire of milky-sapped wood and makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand sesame seeds, all the piśācas will come under one's control and will do whatever one wishes. If one kindles a fire of madaka wood and makes a fire offering of one thousand and eight peppercorns, all the bhūtas will come under one's control, and each of the lords of the bhūtas will also give food and clothing for a hundred servants every day. Wherever one wishes to go, one goes there riding on their shoulders. If one makes a fire offering of a hundred thousand peas, all the bhūtas will come under one's control, and they will procure all the requisites of that vidyādhara.

Mañjuśrī, whatever rite one applies within the practices of these dhāraṇī-mantras, beginning with these, it grants the accomplishment of that rite. Whether the aims and the rites differ, and whether the rites are many or few, it accomplishes them. Furthermore, Mañjuśrī, obstructors have no opportunity against those who hold and practice these secret mantras.

From the Vajrapāṇi Empowerment, the ritual for accomplishing the attainments of the mothers of all the tathāgatas is complete.

The great king of tantras, The Noble Empowerment of Vajrapāṇi, is complete.

This was translated, edited, and finalized by the Indian preceptor Śīlendrabodhi and the chief editor-translator, Bandé Yeshé Dé.

Translator's Notes

• "Vaśavartin" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, the lord of the Paranirmitavaśavartin heaven. "Great jewels, lords of power" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, which may denote a specific gem (possibly sapphire, indranīla). "Throat" renders □□□□, which here appears to be the bodily point from which the rays issue and to which they return. □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is read as the evident □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, "hearts full of wonder," matching the preceding sentence.

• "Linkages" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□, the junctions by which world systems join into ever larger groupings in this cosmology. In the last sentence the phrase "heart-essence of the letters" is written twice in succession (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□

• Several names of buddhas and bodhisattvas here could not be identified with confidence and are translated by meaning: Thunder King (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□), Essence of the Pure Jewel Lotus (□□□) and Lotus Limb (□□□□□□□□□□□□). The southwestern buddha is called Mahāvajraketu and then Vajraketu, and the northwestern buddha is called Sughoṣa and then "most melodious of voice"; these appear to be variant forms of the same names.
• The name of the bodhisattva of the zenith (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ instrument not securely identified. □□□□□□□ ("earth-piercing") is a divine flower whose Sanskrit name could not be identified with confidence and is translated literally.

• The opening sentence is taken as the close of the Buddha's preceding reply, foretelling Samantabhadra's question. □□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□ ("what is it?"), which the context requires; the phrase "embraced by deeds and actions" appears twice in the Tibetan, apparently by repetition, and is given once. "It is good that you ask" renders □□□□□□□□□, read in the sense of approval.
• In the list of what is absent from the nature of reality, the phrase "neither training" occurs twice in the Tibetan, evidently by repetition, and is given once. The first □□□□ in the list of natural phenomena is taken as "moon" and the last, after "yearly cycle," as "month."
• □□□□□□□, describing how Śākyamuni and the gathered tathāgatas spoke the mantra, is unclear; it is rendered "together with" from context. The last verse line, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, may also mean "I am the one for the empowerment of all."
• The architectural term rendered "with a plinth" is uncertain; it is taken as a variant of the term for the ledge running around a maṇḍala palace wall. The lines "You who have proclaimed the king of secret mantra, why do you now remain without speaking?" could also be read as addressing the Buddha as "king of secret mantra."
• The rare term rendered "fixing the earth" and "the Vajra that Fixes the Earth" is taken as referring to the vajra peg that stakes down the ground, as named in the heading of that mantra. The phrase rendered "whether they were awake" reads literally "not lying down."
• Two classes of spirit could not be identified with a standard Sanskrit name and are translated by meaning: the "oppressor spirits" and the "shadow oppressors." The spirits "that cause loss of memory" are taken as the apasmāras, the standard Sanskrit equivalent of the Tibetan term.
• "The three dharmas" through whose blessing Vajrapāṇi is blessed are not specified in this passage. The opening of Vajrapāṇi's reply is read as "Lord of the Dharma" addressed to the Buddha.
• "Ancestral spirits" renders a term read as the spirits of the paternal ancestors; "siddhas" and "serpent seizers" in the same list are classes of graha translated as they stand. "Words that need no seeking" renders a literal phrase whose sense seems to be plain, unmistakable speech.
• "Mixed" reads □□□□□□□ for the written □□□□□□□, which makes no sense in a list of soil colors. "Śrāvaka Vehicle" reads □□□□□ for the written □□□□ ("rope"). "Honor them" reads □□□□ for the written □□□□□. "The vehicle of great beings" takes □□□□□□□□□ as □□□□□□□□□; the reading is uncertain. "Human flesh" renders □□□□□, literally "great flesh," the standard tantric term. "The wise Vajra, the bestower of the supreme" (mchog sbyin rdo rje blo ldan) appears to be an epithet of the tantra's presiding deity, presumably Vajrapāṇi.
• "That called Vajra Invincible Fire" and "the Queen of Knowledge Mantras, the Fearless One" translate names I cannot identify with confidence. "It is the mother of all wise bodhisattvas" reads ma yin te as "is the mother"; the words could also mean "is not of all," but that makes poor sense here. The bird called bzhad, read here with the preceding word as "the cry of vultures," and the "white birds" are uncertain identifications. "Dhanada" (□□□□□□□□□) is normally another name of Kubera, who is also listed. The text gives both.
• Among the four world protectors, Kubera (□□□□□□) stands where Dhṛtarāṣṭra, guardian of the east, would be expected, since Vaiśravaṇa is listed separately. The translation follows the text. "Mixed" for the remaining petals reads □□□□□□□ for the written □□□□□□□, as in the preceding piece. The tathāgatas of the four intermediate directions are identified by the standard Tibetan renderings of their names: gtsug tor can as Śikhin, rnam par gzigs as Vipaśyin, thams cad skyob as Viśvabhū and 'khor ba 'jig as Krakucchanda. "Iron vajra" (lcags kyi rdo rje) may be a slip for lcags kyu, "hook."
• "The carelessly held vajra" renders rdo rje bab col, and its exact sense is uncertain. Some names could not be identified with confidence and are translated by meaning: "the Averter of Austerities" (dka' thub zlog pa) and the gandharva king "Possessor of Many-Colored Garlands" (sna tshogs phreng ba can). "Cymbals" for pheg is a tentative rendering. The text speaks of "four sisters" but gives mudrās for Tumburu, their brother, as well as for the four.

• The lists of woods, incense, flowers and foods contain many words that Tibetan transcribes from Indian terms, and I cannot identify some of them with confidence. These are given as transcribed (salakrī, cepok, kyanar, dongka, dhanukari, aśovarti, venaka, śirebhedaka, garbhodakaraka, berek, dvetse, drengbu, shunthapālikā, zhuteu, sgeu, bhegana, saṃbhadhi, khari). The four texts read are identified by their Tibetan titles: the Prajñāpāramitā, the Suvarṇaprabhāsottama, the Tathāgataguhya and the Gaṇḍavyūha ("Array of the Stem"). "Protectors" reads skyob pa for the written sdzob pa. The text gives twenty-five vases but accounts explicitly only for eight, a ninth and a tenth.

• The line "and I as well, are lesser than his heart" renders the Tibetan literally; the sense appears to be that where a bodhisattva master dwells, even the bodhisattvas and Vajrapāṇi himself are of less account than him, but the exact force of "heart" is uncertain. "The offering fee is drawn forth" renders □□□□□□□□ literally; it refers to the dakṣiṇā due to the master.

• "Amṛtakuṇḍalin" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, taken as a variant name for the wrathful guardian usually called □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; a literal reading would be "a nectar hearth arrangement." "Ratnakusuma" and "Saṃkusumita" render □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ and □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, read as names of buddhas heading the list of eight blessing deities (one for each lotus petal); they could alternatively be read as "jewel flowers and fully blossomed flowers" among the contents of the vases.

• In the first statement about the buddhas and bodhisattvas teaching result, attainment and purification, the Tibetan reads "abiding on the ground of karma and maturation," whereas every later parallel reads "the ground free of karma and maturation"; it is translated as written, though a negative may have dropped out.

• In the passage on who casts aside this world, the first sentence reads "abides in the unconditioned element," which contradicts the following sentence; it is translated as "conditioned," taking the negative syllable as a copyist's slip. "A seal" renders □□□□, read as □□□□□ ("relying on a seal"), which the following references to the seal's impression require. The final sentence is terse; "the other" may refer to the target of the rite.

• "Vajra Upsurge" and "Upsurge" render □□□□, a word suggesting a sudden blazing or surging up; the intended Sanskrit name is uncertain. The opening sentence is elliptical: the being summoned and pressed down under the left foot is understood to be the target of the fierce rite, and "kindles the fire within oneself" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, which may instead mean simply that one kindles the fire oneself.

• The name rendered "Vajra Great Terrifying One" (rdo rje 'jigs 'jigs lta chen po, literally "great one of terrifying appearance") could not be matched to a Sanskrit form with confidence and is translated by meaning. The same applies to "Great Vajra of the Stride" and "Vajra Peak." The wrathful one manifested as "Vajra Mahādaṇḍa" (great club bearer) is the figure whose mantra is labelled the mantra of Vajra Nīladaṇḍa (blue club bearer). In the list of Vajra Peak's six-armed attributes only five objects are named; the last, kha ba, is taken in its sense of "thorn," which is uncertain.

• Several of the deities named only in these mantra colophons are given in English by meaning (Vajra Banner, Vajra Garland, Vajra Trident Bearer, Vajra Fang, Vajra Hammer, Vajra Fence, Vajra Dagger, Vajra Net, Vajra Laughter, Vajra Charm, Vajra Great Drum, Vajra Bell, Vajra Body Hair, Vajra Clawed One, Vajra Messenger, Vajra Crown, Vajra Red Body), since their Sanskrit names cannot be fixed with confidence; Vajrakulasundarī and Vajrāṅkuśī are supported by their mantras.

• Most deities named only in these mantra colophons are given in English by meaning, since their Sanskrit names cannot be fixed with confidence. "Vajra Nadakubera" keeps the Tibetan transcription of the name (na da ku be ra), which probably stands for Nalakūbara or Naḍakūbara. The colophon rendered "Vajra Wind Blaze" (rlung tshig) and "Vajra Formation" ('chags pa) are uncertain in sense.

• Most of these deities are named only in the mantra colophons and are given in English by meaning where no Sanskrit form can be fixed with confidence. "Vajra Plumed Lady" (sgros ma), "Vajra Taste" (rdo rjer ro ma) and "Vajra Great Time" (dus po che) are uncertain readings of obscure names. "Vajra Doe" (sha bkra mo) follows the mantra's haraṇa, apparently for hariṇī, "doe". "Attendant" renders phyag brnyan (Skt. kiṃkara), which the mantras themselves echo.

• Many deities named only in the mantra colophons and in the list of youths are given in English by meaning where no Sanskrit form can be fixed with confidence; the Sanskrit is given where the mantra or a standard rendering supports it (Susiddhikara, Vidyottama, Gajakarṇa, Bhīṣaṇa, Subāhu, Vajrasena). The body part kos ko, rendered "chin," is uncertain. "Maidservant" renders bran mo.

• The sentence introducing Māmakī's mantra is obscure: Vajrapāṇi utters the sound "mine" (Tibetan bdag gi, evidently Sanskrit mama, punning on the name Māmakī, "She Who Says Mine"), together with the phrase rendered "Let it never be done!", whose exact force is uncertain. Several of the youths' names (Vajra Army, Vajra Breast, Vajra Holder of the Supreme Ear, and the like) are rendered from their Tibetan meaning, in keeping with the style already used for this list.

• "The plume of fire in the great island of the ocean" renders the Tibetan literally; it probably alludes to the submarine fire (vaḍavāgni) said to devour the ocean's waters. In the assembly's verse, "free of knots" renders a word (tshigs, "joints, knots") whose exact sense here is uncertain. The name of the queen of knowledge is rendered from its Tibetan meaning, as its Sanskrit form cannot be identified with confidence.

• The text calls the Four Great Kings here "great generals of the yakṣas." Tibetan □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as Jambhala Jalendra, "Jambhala, Lord of Waters," which the mantra's "jaṃbha jalodbhava" supports. □□□□□□□□□ is identified as the yakṣa general Āṭavaka.

• "Eight Arms" (□□□□□□□□□□) and the gandharva king "Variegated Garland" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) are rendered from their Tibetan meaning, as their Sanskrit names cannot be identified with confidence. "The youth" to whom offerings are made in Eight Arms' rite is unspecified in the text. "The gate of the Glorious Gate" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is rendered literally; it seems to name an entrance to the asura realm. The doubled word for "poison" (□□□□□□□) is rendered once.

• The garuḍa king "Son of Māra," the rākṣasa king "Terrifying," and the wind god "Cloud Garland" are rendered from their Tibetan meaning, as their Sanskrit names cannot be identified with confidence. "Raising and stopping" the wind is inferred from the context of the wind gods' rite; the Tibetan says only "producing and stopping and so on."

• "Moonstone" renders zla ba nyal shel, read as a variant of zla ba chu shel (candrakānta). In the Sun's rite, the verb bus with the five-wicked lamp is unclear (perhaps for byas, "make"); rendered "set up". The khri'i zur shing ("bed-corner post") is taken as the khaṭvāṅga. The preta king Drag po is rendered Rudra, given the Śaiva attributes (ash, trident, khaṭvāṅga, tiger skin) and his stated etymology "the Fierce One".

• The goddess dKa' thub zlog ("She Who Averts Austerities") is taken as Umā, whose name is traditionally etymologized as "u mā," "do not [practice austerities]," and whose mantra here reads umaye. "The Auspicious One" renders bzang ldan, whose referent I could not identify with confidence; the phrase "la sa cho ga" is read as "las cho ga," "the rite from." The "great planet, son of the Pleiades" (smin drug gi bu) is taken as Kārttikeya (Skanda). The cloud god "White Cloud" and the four lightning deities are translated literally, as their Sanskrit names could not be identified with confidence. "Eye salve" renders lig bu mig (añjana); "bezoar" renders gi wang (gorocanā).

• The names in the list of Yama's company are taken as Kālarātri (mtshan mo nag mo), Kāladaṇḍa (be con nag po can), Kālapuruṣa (skyes bu nag po) and Kālakarṇī (rna nag mo). dPal sbyin ma ("Glory-Giver") in the opening list and dPa' byed ("Hero-Maker"), who later speaks in her place, could not be identified with confidence and are translated literally; they may be variants of one name. 'Chi bdag is rendered Mṛtyu. In Yama's rite, bri bar bgyi'o ("should write") is read as dri bar bgyi'o, "should ask." The flower da tu ke ra ka is unidentified (possibly dhattūra or ketaka).
• The goddesses are identified from their husbands: the consorts of Viṣṇu, Kumāra (Kaumārī, gzhon nu ma), the Boar (Vārāhī) and Kubera (lus ngan). The husband of the goddess whose mantra names Yamadūtī, 'jigs 'jigs lta chen po ("the Great Dreadful-Looking One"), could not be identified with confidence and is translated literally. "A place where merit flows down" (bsod nams 'bab pa) may mean a sacred bathing place (puṇyatīrtha). Srul po is taken as a pūtanā demoness.
• Several names could not be identified with confidence and are translated literally: the vidyādhara king Tog ("Crest"), the rākṣasī So can ("the Toothed One"), the bhūta king brTsegs pa ("Heaped"), and the gnon po spirits ("oppressors") with their leader 'Gul po ("Shaker"). Ba lang skyong ba is taken as Gopāla. The bird bheruṇaṭika (perhaps the bhāruṇḍa) and the pati tree are unidentified. Gzegs ma, rendered "grit," is uncertain.
• The names of the leaders of the shadow-oppressors (rnam par 'byam pa, rendered "the Sprawler") and of the young gods of Māra's class (legs rgyal, rendered "Fine Victor", possibly Sujaya) could not be identified with confidence and are translated by meaning. The one who comes with Rati and Prīti at midnight is presumably Kāmadeva, whose image is worshiped; Rati and Prīti render dga' ma and sdug ma, his two consorts. "The six-toned song" and "the melody of the hundred-feathered one" (glu drug ldan, 'dab brgya ma) are uncertain musical terms, possibly the ṣaḍja note and a bird's song. Jayā, Vijayā, Ajitā and Aparājitā are the four sisters associated with their brother Tumburu.
• The sentence rendered "one should bind the Person just as it has been set out on oneself" is obscure; the written □□□□□ is read as □□□□, "set out", and the "Person" and the "Four-Faced One" (often an epithet of Brahmā) appear to name mudrās or arrangements of the essence. The substance rendered "collyrium" (lig bu mig) is uncertain.
• "The Soaring Ones" and "the Soaring One" translate 'gro lding, a land and a vidyā king that could not be identified with confidence. "Banyan trees" reads shing pa ta as the vaṭa tree. In "the great yakṣas and Kubera", the written nad ("illness") before ku be ra is taken as a slip for dang ("and"). "Pits" for stor khung is uncertain.
• The "seat" of the wheel renders mchod rten khri, read as a stūpa of the Sugata a span high serving as a throne or stand; the phrase is terse.
• "The abode of the king of the Vaśavartin gods" renders rgyal po dbang sgyur gyi gnas, presumably the Paranirmitavaśavartin heaven. "Juniper berry" for rgya shug gi tshig gu is a probable reading.
• "Not mixed with glue" reads □□□□□ ("giving") as □□□□□ ("glue, size"), which the context plainly requires; the instruction parallels the standard rule that image colors be free of hide glue. The place described as □□□□□□□□□□ is rendered "free of smoke"; the word is uncertain. The vidyādhara in the east is written □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; it is taken as the Citrāṅga named earlier in the text. □□□□□□□, the vidyādhara of the west, could not be identified with confidence and is translated literally as "Crest-Bearer". "Śrī" (□□□) is most likely the goddess Śrī (Lakṣmī), to whom lotus fire offerings are typically directed. □□□□□□□□□□ is rendered "collyrium" (añjana), as the third of the usual triad of bezoar, realgar, and collyrium. "Short garment" for □□□□□□□□□□ is tentative.
• "Glue" again reads □□□□□ as □□□□□ ("size, glue"), as in the earlier instruction on paints. The plant □□□□□□□□ (tnasuci) could not be identified and is kept as transliterated. □□□□□□□□ is the Tibetan placeholder "such-and-such", so the mountain is left unnamed. Vajradhara Abiding Without Elaboration (□□□) is given in English, as no Sanskrit form could be identified with confidence. □□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as Matimān.

• The names of the two tathāgatas, Glory of Fragrant Light (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) and Utterly Crushing with the Firm Vajra (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□), could not be identified with confidence and are translated literally. The heart mantra is called □□□□□□□□□□□□ ("fire of destruction") in the prose and □□□□□□□□□□□□□ ("terrifying fire") in Mañjuśrī's answer. These are taken as the same name and rendered "Terrifying Fire" both times. In Śāntimati's question, □□□□□□□□□□□□ is read as an address to Mañjuśrī.

• "Perform the binding on a man" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is literal. It probably refers to tying a protective cord or amulet on the warrior, but the text does not specify. The wood called □□□□□□□ (grutsal) could not be identified. In the rite of taking up the vidyā, □□□□□□□□□□ is read adverbially ("fearlessly"), not as the name of the king of vidyās.

• "When the moon is seized by the wolf" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) evidently refers to a lunar eclipse. □□□□□□□□□□□□, the son of the yakṣa lord Kubera, is identified as Nalakūbara. "A place with a single liṅga" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, taken as the familiar siddhi site of a solitary liṅga shrine (ekaliṅga). The same expression with □□□□□□ in the previous passage was rendered "a single landmark".

• □□□□□□□□ ("peaceful") in "another's □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□" is read as □□□□□□□, "detailed rite," which the same passage later spells out (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□). The phrase □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is rendered "beloved of Vajrapāṇi"; it might instead be part of the deity's name. □□□□□□□□□□□□ is uncertain and is rendered "head-wrap". In "a sword shaped like a crow's beak", the Tibetan says literally a crow's "tooth". In the apāmārga rite, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, "if one chews it, without begging".

• In the servants' practice, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is uncertain; it is rendered "staying amid a rattling noise". □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is taken as wood split by lightning.

• "When the moon is seized by the wolf" translates the Tibetan literally; it evidently refers to a lunar eclipse, with the moon "released" when it ends. □□□□□ is taken as spikenard, and □□□□□□□□ is left untranslated (rgya spos) because it cannot be securely identified. In the verse, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is read as ...□□□□□□□□, "placed between aśvattha leaves". The lines □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ and □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ are obscure; "at a confluence of waters" and "within a pure hollow" are tentative. "The two-mouthed nāga king" is a literal rendering; it probably names a kind of snake.

• The line □□ is obscure and is translated literally ("a sixth part" may allude to the king's sixth share). □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is tentatively taken as the tail feathers of a bird called kurya. □□□□□□□□ and □□□□□□□□□ could not be identified and are left as "lhang tsher" and "drisanta". □□□□□□□□□ is taken as brass, and □□□□□□□□□ as azurite flakes.

• "Gives rise to that pride" refers to the divine pride of identifying with the deity. "What the omen has indicated" translates □□□□□□□□□□□ literally; it presumably means the sign received in the preliminary practice. In the hymn, □□□□□□□□□□□□ is an epithet of Mañjuśrī ("of great strength"), not the deity Mahābala.

• "Without slackening" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□, understood as qualifying the recitation; it could instead name a third kind of place. "At the doorway" renders □□□□□□, read as □□□□□□□; the meaning is uncertain. "Holds sway over the earth" renders □□□□□□□, literally "presses the earth." "One who brings death" renders □□□□□□□□□, which may refer to Yama (Antaka) or to a murderous enemy.

• "Gla ba wood": □□□□ ordinarily means the musk deer, which does not fit kindling sticks; the word is kept as written and the intended plant is uncertain. The buddha's name □□ could not be identified with confidence and is translated literally as "Fully Blossomed Flower, Lord of Victors." The speaker addressing Śāntimati in the first person is presumably Vajrapāṇi. "Great Vajra Free of Extremes" here refers to that deity's mantra used for the oblation.

• The buddha's name is spelled here □□□□□□□□□□□□□□, read as □□□□□□□□ as in the previous piece, and is kept as "Fully Blossomed Flower, Lord of Victors." "Colors not mixed with glue" reads □□□□□ as □□□□□ (glue); "inferior" reads □□□□□□ as □□□□□□. "Skya snar" is a flower that could not be identified with confidence and is left untranslated.

• "The moon seized by the wolf" refers to a lunar eclipse. Several names could not be identified with confidence and are translated literally: the world system "Endowed with Flowers" (perhaps Kusumavatī), the bodhisattvas "Golden Flower Heap" and "Sandalwood Heap," and the śrāvakas "Steadfast Gift," "Vast Gift," "Essence Gift" and "Community Gift." "Phegdo" (□□□□□□□), apparently a musical instrument, and "śuti" (□□□□□), apparently a substance or wood for the fire offering, could not be identified. "Gla ba wood" is kept as in the previous piece.

• "Until the corpse's mouth makes a sound" renders the obscure □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; the exact sense is uncertain. "Flowers that other mantrins cannot overcome" may refer to the aparājitā ("invincible") flower. "The binding of the person" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) before crossing water is unclear in its exact sense. "Colors not mixed with glue" reads □□□□□ as □□□□□ (glue), as in the earlier painting rite. "Through him all the buddhas have brought about deliverance" renders the terse □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□.

• The phrase rendered "if one scatters ... without asking" reads gtor nam blangs par, taken as gtor na ma blangs par, matching the parallel "without asking" earlier in the passage. "Human fat" renders mi shas, read as a ritual substance of human origin; the exact substance is uncertain. "Hammered wheel" renders ur mo'i 'khor lo; the sense of ur mo here is uncertain. "Again and again" renders la gor la gor du, whose meaning is uncertain. The tree name pata is given as spelled.

• "And even beyond that" renders the obscure tshe bskal pa mchog pas kyang mchog thub pa. "Intermediate eon" takes che bar gyi bskal pa as bar gyi bskal pa; the reading is uncertain. "Again and again" renders la gor la gor du, whose exact sense is uncertain. In the sentence about the vidyādhara king's procession, the Tibetan does not mark clearly who pays homage to whom; it is taken as the many vidyādhara kings honoring him. Banda wood and torch wood (sgron shing) are uncertain identifications; nima pa is taken as nimba.

• The line about the remaining petals reads 'dren mar, taken here as "to be drawn"; the intended color or sense is uncertain. The line on Candratilaka reads thob ste, which makes no sense here; it is taken as tho ba, "hammer," pairing with Trailokyavijaya's vajra. The door guardians thub dka' and mngon du gyur pa are rendered as Durdharṣa and Abhimukha, and the protectress 'jigs pa 'jigs byed as Bhayabhairavā; these Sanskrit forms are probable rather than certain.

• "Held just short of touching" renders gang tsam gyis ma reg tsam, literally "not touching by about a measure"; the exact distance is not specified.

• In the verse, gnon po ("oppressors"), grib gnon ("shadow-oppressors") and brjed byed ("causers of forgetting") are classes of harmful spirits rendered by meaning; brjed byed probably corresponds to apasmāra. Several mudrā names cannot be identified with confidence and are rendered by meaning: kun du brjod pa'i me ("all-proclaiming fire"), rdo rje kha ("Vajra Mouth"), rdo rje sen mo can ("Vajra Clawed One"), rdo rje rigs mdzes ma ("Vajra Beauty of the Family"), rdo rje lus dmar ("Vajra Red Body"), rdo rje 'jigs 'jigs lta ("Vajra Fearsome Gaze"), and dbu rgyan rtse bran ("Vajra Diadem, the playful servant"), where rtse bran is especially uncertain. Vajra Jhigara is given as the Tibetan spells it.

• "Vajra shaft" renders □□□□ (handle, shaft) literally. In the sequence of body-part mudrās, "vajra sign" renders □□□, which here most likely denotes the private parts rather than a major mark, and "vajra portico" renders □□□□□□, whose sense in this series is unclear. "The Victor Śāntimati" takes □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ as Śāntimati with the epithet Jina; it could also be read as "the victory mudrā of Śāntimati". "The Youth Born from the Crown" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is translated literally, as the figure could not be identified with confidence. "Doorkeepers" renders □□□□□□□□ (Skt. pratihāra).

• Several names of mudrās and spirit classes are uncertain. "Vajra subduer" (□□□□□□□□) and "vajra shadow-subduer" (□□□□□□□□□□) are rendered literally; "apasmāra" takes □□□□□□□□□□ as the standard rendering of that class of seizing spirits. Śumbha for □□□□□□□□□, Susiddhikara for □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, Āṭavaka for □□□□□□□□□ and Pāñcika for □□□□□□□□ are identifications by standard equivalence. "The Eight-Armed One" (□□□□□□□□□□□□) is rendered literally. The name □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is unclear; it is given as "Jambhala Varuṇa", but it might name two figures or a holder of Jambhaka. The line marking the ninth section (bam po) of the text is kept as it stands. Pāñcika's speech continues into the next piece.

• "The Averter of Austerities" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□ literally; the deity could not be identified with confidence. Raudrī, Brāhmī, Aindrī, Vārāhī, Cāmuṇḍī and Kālarātrī are identified as the mother goddesses named here by their husbands or by standard Tibetan renderings. "The Lord of Death" renders □□□□□□□, kept distinct from Yama (□□□□□□□□). "The garuḍa Vinata" for □□□□□□□□□□□ is tentative. "The eye" (□□□□) may refer to the goddess Locanā. "Grahas of sorcery" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□. The attribution "so the Victors have taught" closes the mudrā of Tumburu as the text has it.

• Most names in the bodhisattva series are translated literally (Born from the Feet of the Tathāgata, the Wearer of Variegated Robes, Overcoming Infinite Space, Delightful to Behold, Ever Abiding in Diligence and the others), since their Sanskrit forms could not be fixed with confidence. Gaganāmala, Cāritramati, Sthiramati, Ratnākara and Ratnamudrāhasta are given by standard equivalence. Gaganāmala is named twice, for two different mudrās, as the text has it. □□□□□□ is taken as "loving-kindness" in a series of qualities, though it could name Maitreya. □□□□□, a part of the Buddha's body in this series, could not be identified and is kept as "kosko".

• "The Unfailing Vajra" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ (Skt. perhaps Amoghavajra), the name of the maṇḍala. "The vajra that summons and paralyzes" renders the unclear □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□. "The vajra of both" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ literally.

• The passage describes the setting out (nyāsa) of seed syllables on the parts of the body. The phrase rendered "with the double mark" is literally "with two increases" and most likely refers to the visarga, written as two dots; this identification is uncertain. "Powerful" (literally "endowed with strength") qualifying ha at the nose may likewise denote a written mark. The term rendered "breasts" is unusual in form and may refer to the breasts or the area around them. The mantras do not always match the syllables named in the verses; they are given as the text spells them.

• The assembly addresses Vajrapāṇi as "Blessed One," as the Tibetan has it. The phrase rendered "great in might" qualifying the hosts of Māra is the same expression elsewhere used as the name Mahābala; here it reads as an epithet rather than a name.

• "Shadow-seizing spirits" renders a Tibetan term literally meaning "shadow-pressers," apparently a class of graha that seizes through the shadow (cf. Skt. chāyāgraha); the Sanskrit identification is not certain. "Apasmāra" renders the Tibetan "those who cause forgetting," the usual equivalent for spirits causing seizures and loss of memory.

• "Kṛtyās" renders the Tibetan term for malevolent sorcery and the spirits that carry it out. The Tibetan names of the tathāgatas are given in their standard Sanskrit forms: Ratnaketu, Saṃkusumitarājendra, Akṣobhya, Vipaśyin, Śikhin, Viśvabhū and Krakucchanda. "Praising" in the Ratnaketu mudrā follows the Tibetan as written; its sense in this gesture is unclear.

• "Vaśavartin gods" renders the abode of those who exercise power over others' emanations

(Paranirmitavaśavartin heaven). The statement that the mudrās "cut off the destinies" of gods, nāgas and the rest follows the Tibetan literally; it may mean that they sever rebirth in those states or that they hold sway over those beings.

• Several lines of the stance list and the instructions are terse and uncertain: "ears drawn up and lip pressed down" renders a line that reads literally "rising from the ears, pressing the lip"; "restoring again" those of hostile mind renders □□□□□□□□□□, which may instead mean "retaliating against"; "with supreme grace befitting the secret mantra" renders the obscure □□□□□□□□; and "Brahmā's pillar" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, apparently the summit of the world reaching to Brahmā's realm. "The gods, the asuras and the guhyakas" takes □□□□□ as the class of guhyakas.

• The passage begins mid-sentence, completing a phrase from the previous piece. The line "Lifting the left foot" occurs twice in succession in the Tibetan, and is kept as written. The line "with the right he should pierce" renders a line one syllable short in the Tibetan (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□). "Set them in the vajra place" is uncertain: the object may be the mudrā rather than the spirits.

• Several lines are terse and their sense uncertain. "Brought to a hundred straits" renders □□□□□□□□□□□, probably meaning "in dire distress." "The posture of Mahendra" takes □□□□□□□□□□□□□ as the name of a stance. In "the vajra bearer, the wheel bearer," these may refer to Indra and Viṣṇu or to deities of the vajra and wheel families; the sense of the whole stanza ("if ... pays no heed to his own body") is uncertain. "The vajra place is defined from the waist" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□ literally.

• The passage is terse throughout, and several lines are uncertain in sense, in particular the proclamation "If it is asked, 'Protect even a little!' ...", and the lines on forming the sword and sheath with the fingers. "The family of overpowering the adversary" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ literally.

• "The mare's mouth" (□□□□□□□□□□) refers to the mare-headed submarine fire of Indian myth (vaḍavāmukha), which drinks up the ocean. "Restore" renders □□□□, which can also mean "heal" or "nourish." "The gods' triple banner" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) appears to name a hand gesture (perhaps tripatāka); "hip" for □□□□□□□ is uncertain. "The one who arose from the crown" (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) is unidentified and rendered literally.

• The phrase rendered "resting the left hand at the hip" (ko skor brten) is uncertain; ko skor is not a common term, and the sense of placing the left hand at the hip or in a circle is inferred from the context of the dance gestures. "The renowned ones" (grags rnams) may possibly be a slip for the planets (gza'), who are named alongside the obstructors elsewhere in the passage, but it is kept as written. The lines "This is the vajra sound that resounds everywhere" and "This is the manifold vajra sound" appear to be labels naming the preceding mudrā sequences.

• The term rendered "cupped hollow" (mtshog ma) for the joining of the palms is uncommon; the rendering is inferred from context. "The mouth of the mare" refers to the mare-headed submarine fire (Vaḍavāmukha) said to drink up the ocean's waters. The Mahendra stance and stride (dbang chen) are named postures of the ritual dance. "Then should make him flourish" renders rgyas par bya literally; it may refer to a rite of increase performed for the subdued obstructor.

• "Disturbances" renders bar bur, an uncommon word; in the context of purifying the ground it may refer to uneven or obstructing matter, but the pacification later in the passage suggests obstructions in general. "Fire! Fire!" takes me me as the Tibetan word for fire uttered as a cry; it could conceivably be a Sanskrit syllable string. "The five heroic postures" renders dpa' bo lnga po, literally "the five heroes"; the exact reference is unclear.

• "Should set the guhyakas to their tasks on every side" renders gsang ba kun du gtad par bya; it could also be read as entrusting something secret, and the sense is uncertain. The line about Vāsuki (nor rgyas bu sprul gsang bsrel yin) is obscure; it is rendered as Vāsuki, an emanated son, kept at the secret place, but the meaning is doubtful. The passage includes a fascicle marker, "the eleventh fascicle," which is part of the text.

• The nine modes listed are the nine sentiments (rasas) of Indian dance and drama, here given as the erotic, heroic, compassionate, comic, wrathful, terrifying, dreadful, wondrous and peaceful. "Hell beings" renders sems dmyal, evidently short for the beings of the hells. In "let fall" the text reads da bab, taken as dbab, "to cause to fall."
• "Behind the back" reads □□□□□□□□ for the written □□□□□□□□, which makes no sense here. "The swan's prowess" in the verse reads □□□□ for the written □□□□, following the closing label of the same mudrā. The lines describing the buddhas and bodhisattvas (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) are obscure: □□□□□□□ is taken here in its ordinary sense, "under another's power" (that is, overpowered by Vajrapāṇi), not as the doctrinal "dependent nature", and □□□□ is taken as "dazed". □□□ here is rendered "command" in the narrative sense, not "scripture".
• "Buddha Ornament Melody" translates the name of the tathāgata literally, since its Sanskrit form cannot be identified with confidence. In the prose, the written □□□□ is read as □□, "I", which the sentence requires. In the offering-diadem verse the line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is a syllable short and is read as □□□□□□□, "place them on the ground".
• The written □□□□□ is read as □□□□□□, "receive", which the parallel lines require. "Essence of the Ornament of Conduct" translates the name of the tathāgata literally, since its Sanskrit form cannot be identified with confidence. The line on "the gaping mouth of the mare" is obscure; it may refer to beings dwelling in, or likened to, the mare's mouth, the submarine fire.
• The world system and the tathāgata are both named Stainless Light Rays; the name is translated literally, since its Sanskrit form cannot be identified with confidence. Source of All is likewise a literal rendering of the dhāraṇī's name.
• The line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ is obscure; "with its borders and portals" is a tentative rendering of the maṇḍala's architectural features. "Invincible Vajra Flame", "Who Abandons All Misdeeds" and "Hard to Tame" translate the goddesses' names literally, since their Sanskrit forms cannot be identified with confidence. "The maṇḍala of Mahendra" and "water", "fire" and "wind" refer to the elemental maṇḍalas on which the emblems are placed.
• "The Blessed Lady Who Accomplishes the Infinite Gateways" renders a Tibetan name that matches the title of the Anantamukha dhāraṇī; "the Blessed Lady Who Impels" is translated from the Tibetan meaning, as its Sanskrit form cannot be identified with confidence. The phrase rendered "as though in a single day" could also be read as "day after day."
• "Birch bark" reads the Tibetan as written, "grog" (and "grogs") as a slip for "gro ga," birch bark, the usual surface for amulet writing; as written it would mean "ant" or "friend," which do not fit. In "ten buddha fields," the instrumental particle after "buddha" is read as a genitive. A stray syllable "naṃ" after "that mantra practitioner" has no sense in context and is left unrendered. The reply beginning "Mañjuśrī, it is just as you have said" carries no named speaker in the Tibetan; from context it is Vajrapāṇi.
• The reply beginning "Mañjuśrī, excellent, excellent!" carries no named speaker in the Tibetan; from context it is Vajrapāṇi.
• "At the price asked" takes the Tibetan "kha thabs bzhin du" as buying the cloth without haggling, the usual rule for ritual materials; the phrase is uncertain. "Protected with the Cakravartin" most likely refers to a protective mantra or deity of that name used in the rite. The Tibetan "rdo rje mi pham pa'i me" before "white lotus" is read as a slip for the feminine name "rdo rje mi pham pa ma," Vajrājitā, which fits the following feminine attributes; this identification is tentative.
• In the first invisibility rite the Tibetan as written says the body "becomes visible" (lus ni snang bar 'gyur); since the rite is explicitly for invisibility, it is read as "invisible," the negative evidently lost. "Dang pa" is read as a slip for "ngang pa," haṃsa, which fits the mount that makes one "a second Brahmā." "Zho" in the list of boons is read as "zhon," a mount; as written it means curds. "Nad par" is read as "nang par," in the morning. "Ligbu mik" (lig bu mig) is an ingredient that could not be identified with confidence and is given in phonetics. The Sanskrit phrase in the second-to-last rite means "it grants kingship."

• The Sanskrit phrase rājyaṃ pratilabhyate, left untranslated in the Tibetan, means "one obtains kingship." "When the moon is seized by the wolf" (written □□□□□□□, read as □□□□□□□) evidently denotes a lunar eclipse. The plant names spoma (□□□□□), kalapiṅka, paṭa and brama (□□□□) could not be identified with confidence and are given as they stand. "The Husband of Umā" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, literally "the husband of the one turned back from austerities," a Tibetan rendering of Umā's name; it refers to Śiva. □□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□□, "unopened," as elsewhere in the passage. The exact sense of □□□□□□□□□□□ (rendered "iron") and of □□□□ ("at one's side") is uncertain.

• □□□□□□□□□ ("they will fight") is unclear in its first element; the sense of strife is evident. □□□□□□□□□ is taken as a variant name of the aśoka tree. The plant names ligadur (□□□□□□□□) and geushar (□□□□□□□□□□) could not be identified with confidence and are given phonetically. □□□□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□□□, "unopened." "All the Śrīs" renders □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, taken as forms of the goddess of fortune parallel to the yakṣiṇīs, mātṛkās and Sarasvatīs in the surrounding lines. The Sanskrit line after the jātī-leaf rite concerns bringing a king under control by a fire offering of a hundred thousand oblations; the one after the bilva rite appears to concern bestowal of kingship.

• The romanized Sanskrit lines are left untranslated in the Tibetan; they concern, respectively, the bestowal of kingship by the goddess, bringing a king under control by a fire offering of eight thousand oblations, and bringing a great king and his chief queen under control. "Milky-sapped wood" renders □□□□□□□□□□□ (Skt. kṣīravṛkṣa); madaka (□□□□□□□□□) is given as transcribed.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.