འཕགས་པ་ཕྱོགས་བསྒྲོལ་མ་སྟོབས་ལྡན་ཞེས་བྱ།

The Noble Averter Called the Powerful One, known in Sanskrit as Ārya Balavatī Nāma Pratyaṅgirā, is a short protective dhāraṇī text whose Tibetan title carries the same meaning. It opens with homage to the Three Jewels and to the bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, praised for his great compassion and love toward all beings. It then presents an averting spell to be recited for the protection of life and vital force. The spell is said to halt harmful spirits, turn back epidemics and untimely death, overcome the malign influences of planets and lunar mansions, destroy the abodes of the māras, and subdue enemies. It is Toh 960 in the Kangyur and belongs to the class of dhāraṇī and protective incantation literature.

In the language of India: ārya balavatī nāma pratyaṅgirā
In the language of Tibet: The Noble Averter Called the Powerful One.

Homage to the Three Jewels.

Homage to the noble Avalokiteśvara, the bodhisattva, the great being, endowed with great compassion and loving toward all sentient beings.

To protect life and to protect the vital force, one should recite this averting spell. It stops all bhūtas, turns back all epidemic diseases, and turns back every untimely death. It utterly vanquishes the grahas of the planets and the lunar mansions and all the grahas of the bhūtas. It destroys every abode of the māras, and it paralyzes every enemy, one by one.

Translator's Notes

• The word rendered "punishment" in "Please avert punishment" is the same word the glossary gives as "annihilation" in philosophical contexts. In this protective petition, set beside weapons, it plainly means punishment, such as a judicial penalty. "Averter" renders the Sanskrit pratyaṅgirā, a protective spell that repels harm.
