Toh 631 in the Kangyur is a dhāraṇī text known in Sanskrit as the Ārya-Acalā-nāma-dhāraṇī and in Tibetan as Pakpa Miyowa Zhejawa'i Zung, meaning "The Noble Immovable One." It belongs to the dhāraṇī section of the Kangyur, a class of canonical works centered on sacred ritual formulas understood to carry protective and purifying power. The text opens in the heaven of the Thirty-Three Gods, where the Buddha is surrounded by an assembly of great bodhisattvas, including Maitreya, Mañjuśrī, Avalokiteśvara, and Vajrapāṇi, all of whom have attained the tenth bodhisattva ground. The bodhisattva Maitreya initiates a dialogue concerning the harms inflicted on human beings in Jambudvīpa by malevolent spirits, gods, and nāgas, providing the narrative occasion for the Buddha to impart the dhāraṇī and its associated benefits.

In the language of India: Ārya-Acalā-nāma-dhāraṇī. In the language of Tibet: The dhāraṇī called "The Noble Immovable One."

Homage to the Three Jewels.

Thus did I hear. At one time the Blessed One was dwelling in the Palace of the Thirty-Three Gods. At that time those gathered in the Blessed One's retinue were exclusively bodhisattvas who had reached the tenth ground: Samantabhadra, Ākāśagarbha, Kṣitigarbha, Sarvanivaraṇaviṣkambhin, Mañjuśrī, Avalokiteśvara, Vajrapāṇi, Maitreya, and others.

Then the bodhisattva Maitreya rose from his seat, arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, placed his right knee on the ground, and addressed the Blessed One in these words: "Blessed One, the gods, nāgas, yakṣas, and malevolent flesh-eating spirits dwelling in Jambudvīpa bring forth human disease, livestock disease, epidemic disease, harm, untimely death, hatred, bad dreams, unseasonable winds, hail, earthquakes, and the like. Please, Blessed One, pacify all of these."

When this request was made, the Blessed One, without speaking a word, entered into meditative absorption in the samādhi called "The Gate of Perfect Purity." From the pores of his body there blazed forth flaming rays of light, and they became a single mass of blazing fire reaching throughout the desire realm, the form realm, and the formless realm. At that time even the light of the sun, the moon, and the rest was dimmed and extinguished, and the light of the gods too was dimmed and extinguished. The nāgas, yakṣas, flesh-eating spirits, and the like were as trees shaken by a fierce wind.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption in the samādhi called "The Non-Conceptual Basic Space of Phenomena." Breaking the mudrā of equipoise, he struck the earth with the knee of his foot. From this there arose wrathful ones of the stable body of the essential nature of mind, seated with one leg extended and one drawn in. Together with immeasurable emanations of wrathful ones born from skillful means, they filled all of space with light. Within maṇḍalas of light there dwelled Brahmā, Viṣṇu, the Great God (Śiva), and the four great fierce ones — emanated ones who terrify with the cry "Ha! Hūṃ! Hrīḥ!" and who destroy attachment, aversion, delusion, and miserliness. And emanated ones who terrify nāgas, yakṣas, flesh-eating spirits, hungry ghosts, and the like with the cry "Haṃ! Maṃ!" were also sent forth. There were also emanated wrathful ones of the stable body of the essential nature of speech, seated with one knee and one thumb placed upon the ground, one leg raised with the knee set down — the stable-bodied wrathful ones; and those of the essential nature of wisdom, filling space with light from a sword blazing with fiery radiance — these too were emanated.

Then the Blessed One spoke the mantra of the wrathful ones born from his blessing:

Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇāṃ. Acala-kaṇa-caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa-sphoṭaya hūṃ vajra-dhṛk khaḍga. Hūṃ maṃ hūṃ maṃ.

The mudrā is this: the right hand forms a fist, with the ring finger and little finger extended upward — this is the sword mudrā; one traces a boundary in a clockwise direction.

Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇāṃ. Acala-kaṇa-caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa. Sphoṭaya hūṃ. Amṛta hūṃ hūṃ.

The mudrā for this: the fingers are extended and the little finger is pressed down by the thumb — this is the three-pointed vajra mudrā; one circles clockwise and dispels obstacles.

Then the Blessed One spoke the protection through the samādhi of perfect purity: Visualize the red syllable Raṃ at the crown of the head. Having been stabilized by this syllable of perfect purity —

Visualize the body as a vajra and sword, together with blazing fire and light.

The mudrā for this: join the palms in the vajra gesture, place the two index fingers crossed behind one another at the middle knuckle, and position them at the center of the brow.

Then the Blessed One spoke the protection through the great awareness of the awakening mind. Look with the form of the syllable Hūṃ as ground.

Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇāṃ. Acala-kaṇa-caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa-katebhyaḥ. Sarva-vigatebhyo. Viśvamukhe-bhyaḥ. Sarva-tathāgata hām māṃ rakṣa mahābale. Sarva-tathāgata-prameni-ragardha hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ tratha tratha. Apratihate svāhā.

The mudrā for this: join the palms in the vajra gesture, curve the two index fingers inward, touch the tips of the two middle fingers together, extend the two ring fingers straight out, bend the two little fingers slightly inward, and hold this at the heart. This is the protection of the mother. Any obstacle-maker, misleading spirit, or harmful force whatsoever will be scattered merely by remembering it.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption in the samādhi of loving-kindness, and blessed the various foods — those eaten in mouthfuls, those taken as meals, those licked, those drunk, those tasted, and so on — as well as forms, sounds, smells, and tastes of all kinds:

Oṃ sarva-dharmatā-sita hūṃ — by this they were purified.

Oṃ amṛta oṃ hūṃ hrīḥ — this is for the fulfillment of desire.

Oṃ namaḥ sarva-tathāgata-avalokite. Saṃbhara saṃbhara hūṃ — this is recited seven times seven times, and having dedicated the merit, all will be satisfied.

The mudrā is the mudrā of supreme giving.

Then the Blessed One spoke again: If one wishes to rise, one should recite this mantra.

Namo ratnatrayāya. Nama Ścaṇḍa-vajrapāṇaye. Namō vajra-krodhāya. Daṃṣṭrodkaṭa-bhairavāya. Asi-musala-paraśu-pāśa-hastāya. Tadyathā: Oṃ amṛta-kuṇḍali. Kha kha khāhi khāhi. Tiṣṭha tiṣṭha. Bandha bandha. Hana hana. Gṛhṇa gṛhṇa. Gardha gardha. Visphoṭaya visphoṭaya. Sarva-vighnaṃ vināyakānāṃ mahā-gaṇa-pati jīvita-antakaraṇa svāhā.

Clasp both hands into fists with the palms facing inward, extend the index fingers, cross them at the chest, and bind them in this mudrā. This same mudrā is also used when casting a torma offering and when departing.

For the touching and the bathing: into fragrant water placed in a precious vase, recite seven times seven times:

Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇāṃ. Acala-kana-ya amṛta.

Then, holding the vase with the left hand, bend the middle finger and ring finger of the right hand slightly inward, visualize the syllable Aḥ inside the vessel, pour in the water, and bathe with:

Oṃ śuddha-dunte śodhanaye svāhā.

Thus did the Blessed One declare — and this was addressed to the bodhisattva Maitreya.

Then the four great kings, together with their retinues, and the gods of the Heaven of the Thirty-Three, the gods of the Heaven Free from Strife, the gods of Tuṣita, the gods of Nirmāṇarati, and the gods of Paranirmitavaśavartin, bearing flowers, drums, incense, divine foods, and divine sons and daughters adorned with jeweled ornaments, along with immeasurable chariots and immeasurable articles of offering, made vast offerings and circumambulations to the Blessed One, and then took their seats alongside the bodhisattva Maitreya.

Then the bodhisattva Maitreya, filled with joy, looked to the Blessed One. The Blessed One, knowing Maitreya's intention, entered into meditative equipoise in the first dhyāna, having relinquished the pleasures of desire, remaining only in joyful discursive thought. Then, from the first dhyāna, he entered into meditative equipoise in the second dhyāna, having relinquished the discursive engagement of one-pointed focus, remaining only in joy and bliss.

From the second dhyāna he entered into meditative equipoise in the third dhyāna, having relinquished discursive thought and examination, remaining only in bliss. Then from the third dhyāna he entered into meditative equipoise in the fourth dhyāna, remaining only in the bliss of feelings drawing near to stillness.

Then the Blessed One declared: "When one is endowed with these meditative absorptions, there is perfect purification. Through loving-kindness, compassion, joy, and equanimity, the continuum of the awakening mind is cultivated. Likewise, all phenomena are, like space, freed from the four extremes.

Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇaṃ. Dharmadhātu-svabhāva-ātmako'ham."

Having said these words, the mudrā is as follows: each hand separately forms a fist, the two thumbs are tucked inside, and the two forefingers are raised upright.

This concludes the first chapter, the chapter of introduction, from the noble dhāraṇī of Acala.

Then the Blessed One declared: "Sitting in the vajra cross-legged posture, visualize at the heart a solar maṇḍala bearing the mind-seed, its light filling all of space. From that seed, all phenomena radiate and gather back with light-rays expanding and contracting, accompanied by the sound of the words: 'beyond the path of speech.' From lotus flowers of various colors, rising stainless and fully bloomed upon the seat of the lord of the assembly, together with seven-horsed sun-discs radiating light in all directions from which they spring, through a mind of sky-blue color, identical in essence with existence itself, filling the entire expanse of space with light — there arise blue wisdom-swords. From these, as the great wrathful one who conquers all māras and all that is malign, who utterly vanquishes all conceptual thought, there is a form stainless and youthful.

This form is youthful and of full and rounded body, like a vigorous young man in the flush of youth. His body color is deep dark blue, like the color of a dark rain-cloud in summer. He fills all of space without remainder with light, like the sun with its seven horses illuminating every continent. His hair is bound together in a single topknot and stands upright, like the fruit of the āmalaka tree. His body is slightly swaying and moving, like a wishing-fulfillment tree bent by the wind at a meeting-place of all. He stands with one leg extended and one drawn up, like the gait of a great athlete. His three eyes are very red, like the flower of the palāśa tree. His gaze directed upward and downward burns away the obstructions above and below, like an asura who does not eat the scattered food-offerings. His fangs are bared, like a half-moon. His tongue moves with great swiftness, like lightning across the sky. His brows are drawn into a fierce frown, like the leaves of the palākṣa tree. In his right hand he holds a sword, like the falling light of a great planet. In his left hand he holds a serpent-lasso, like the gall-bladder of the ocean.

With such a form he brings under his power Brahmā (Brahmā, lord of the highest heavens), Śakra (Indra, king of the gods), the four great kings, the guardians of the directions, and all the rest. He subdues malignant gods, nāgas, rākṣasas (flesh-eating spirits), piśācas (carnivorous demons), kumbhāṇḍas, serpents, and all the like.

His mantra, as proclaimed by the Blessed One, is to be recited thus: Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇāṃ traṭ. Amogha-caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa. Sphoṭaya hūṃ. Tramaya tramaya hāṃ. Tratahaṃmaṃ.

By this mantra, all injury and violent harm, hatred and fierce enmity, evil possession and perverse leading astray, rākṣasas, gods, nāgas, kumbhāṇḍas, piśācas, and all the rest shall be pacified. Disorders arising from wind, disorders arising from bile, disorders arising from phlegm, tumors, swellings, itching, leprosy, pox, small pox, fever lasting one day, fever lasting two days, fever lasting half a month, fever of exhaustion, intermittent fever, and chronic fever — from all of these one shall be freed. From harm caused by lions, tigers, bears, brown bears, wolves, venomous snakes, insects, mosquitoes, and bees, one shall be freed. From royal punishment and the terror of armies, one shall be freed. From thieves, slaves, and those who quarrel and dispute over food, one shall be freed. From the terror of water, the terror of fire, the terror of earthquakes, and the terror of lightning strikes, one shall be freed. From the terror of swords, śaktis (throwing spears), battle-axes, lances, arrows, great arrows, wheels, and weapons, one shall be freed. From death and untimely death, one shall be freed. All sins, including the five acts of immediate retribution and the like, shall be purified. One shall not be reborn in the hells, among hungry ghosts, in the realm of animals, in border regions, lacking the sense faculties, among gods with very long lives, holding wrong views, or in places where no buddha has appeared.

This dhāraṇī mantra was taught by all the buddhas of the three times, and even reciting it once causes all sins to be purified. The person who recites it shall swiftly attain the vajra-like path of the nature of reality (dharmatā).

Then, upon the syllables arrayed in pure rows within a seven-horse chariot, visualize the letters filling the entire sky with light. To look with a gaze of loving-kindness, visualize the yellow syllable Hāṃ at the eyes. At the channel of vitality, visualize the black syllable Maṃ. At the crown, visualize the syllables of pure reality, and recite this mantra: Namaḥ samanta-vajrapāṇi caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa hūṃ. Then join the palms together. Raise the middle fingers upright with the remaining fingers curved slightly inward at the back, and do likewise with the little fingers — this is the vajra mudrā. By its blessing, ignorance is vanquished and one is consecrated into the very body of primordial wisdom.

Into a vessel of gold or the like, pour a variety of foods — barley, rice, wheat, barley flour, sesame, and the like, along with yogurt, milk, honey, molasses, gold, silver, copper, pearls, and coral. Consecrate them with the mantra of the three grains, and recite this mantra: Namaḥ samanta-tathāgatebhyaḥ. Viśvamukhebhyaḥ. Sarva-thā kham utgate. Spharaṇa imaṃ gagana kham. The mudrā for this is the mudrā of supreme giving.

Reciting Namaḥ sarva-tathāgata-avalokite. Oṃ sambhāra sambhāra hūṃ, make offerings to all spirits.

Then recite this secret mantra: Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ. Caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa asame trisame mahāsamaya. Sarva-pāpaṃ svāhā. Join the palms together in supplication and restore the sacred commitments (samaya).

This is the second chapter of the noble dhāraṇī of Acala.

Then these are the sacred commitments: The buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha are distinguished as fruit, path, and practice. Beginning from whence one starts, one shall honor them with distinction and never be separated from them. One shall continuously cultivate the stream of immeasurable awakening mind and make vast aspirations. One shall continuously uphold and never be parted from the mantras, mudrās, and their supports. One shall abandon from the heart any agitated mind toward the gods, the lama, and companions on the path to awakening. Preceded by loving-kindness and compassion toward all sentient beings with breath, one shall abandon harm and harm and never abandon it. One shall abandon miserliness and practice generosity toward sentient beings. One shall uphold the ethical conduct that abandons harm and injury to sentient beings. One shall be patient toward those who harm oneself. One shall never abandon diligence in accomplishing the benefit of oneself and others. Abandoning distraction, one shall enter into meditative concentration. In sleeping and rising, at all times, one shall not be distracted from the meaning of naturally purified awareness. To those without sacred commitments (samaya) and who do not abide by them, one shall not teach or expound meditative concentration, meditative absorption, mantras, mudrās, and the like. Killing, taking what is not given, sexual misconduct, and false speech are to be abandoned by one who wishes to practice and live the holy life of celibacy. One shall be respectful toward monks, toward those who have generated awakening mind, and toward those who hold their sacred commitments, and one shall not despise them. One shall be endowed with the preparatory practices at the session intervals.

Anger, offensive speech, belching and passing wind, foul odors from bodily excretions, and the unclean things such as unwashed hair and nails — all of these, together with foul and unpleasant odors, stench and malodor — all of these shall be abandoned entirely. As for one's dwelling, it should be a pleasing incense-perfumed house, clean and unstained, its auspicious door facing east — a house with a skylight, or a brahmin's home, or the pleasure grove of the Saṅgha, or a temple, or a mountain peak, or a place where birds call, or a hermitage, or a forest edge, or a pleasant meadow — there, having cleaned and sprinkled it with fragrant water, one shall spread a grass seat and dwell. One shall avoid sitting on a high throne. With fasting, one shall eat curds, milk, butter, molasses, flatbread, sesame oil, barley flour, rice, and rice dishes and the like. Meat, alcohol, garlic, and all pungent foods shall be entirely abandoned. With regard to months, stars, the count of days, and so forth, during the bright fortnights one shall make prayers to the Three Jewels and accomplish the practice. What is not appropriate is to proceed with hope, cunning, or roughness. There is no contradiction in proceeding gently and with dark earnestness for the sake of desire's aim. Always, in order to generate faith in the meditational deity (yidam), one shall accomplish the practice while maintaining a loving intention.

The emanated wrathful one Vajra-Power (Vajraugha) is deep black in color, his very nature being the ego and ego-clinging, bearing a meteor-iron wheel. Vajra-Great-Passion (Vajramahārāga) is red in color, his face a bow that attracts and causes attraction. Vajra-Sharp (Vajratīkṣṇa) is green, his nature being grasping and utter grasping, holding an iron hook. Vajra-Blazing (Vajrajvāla) is red in color, his nature being ignorance and the destroyer of ignorance, holding a vajra-cliff. Vajra-Wrathful (Vajrakrodha) is yellow, bearing a flaming sword, his nature being wrath and the wrathful. Vajra-Great-Fierce (Vajraṇḍamahā) is dark green in color, his nature being equanimity and the state of equanimity, holding a cloud-lasso. Vajra-Hearth-Lord (Vajrāgnikuṇḍa) is smoke-colored, his nature being action and the agent of action, holding a clay drum. Vajra-Great-Power (Vajramahābala) is dark blue, holding a meteor-iron wheel, his nature being the inferior and the nature of the inferior. Vajra-Causal-Power (Vajrahetu-bala) is dark red, his nature being dependent origination and arising through dependent origination, holding a trident. Vajra-Great-Discerner (Vajravibhāga) is of variegated activity-color, his nature being freedom from extremes and liberation from extremes, holding a single-pointed vajra. These ten, of the nature of ten, radiate forth brilliantly from a body ablaze with fire.

This is the third chapter of the dhāraṇī known as "The Noble Immovable One" (Ārya Acala).

Then the Blessed One, in order to demonstrate this in a manner held in common, declared to the bodhisattva Maitreya the ritual procedure for it.

On ground that is pleasant and fragrant, one should make a maṇḍala the width of an arrow's span, perform the protection ritual of the five aspects, and scatter blue flowers.

Then one should take a vase made of gold, silver, or copper, fashioned to the measure of a monk's bowl. Into it one should place five kinds of precious substances: gold, silver, copper, coral, and pearl. One should also place inside it honey, molasses, raw sugar, yogurt, milk, and butter. One should place inside it barley, rice, wheat, sesame, wheat grain, and kuśa grass. One should place inside it long pepper, saffron, nutmeg, cardamom, kakola, and cloves. One should also place inside it fragrances such as sandalwood, aloeswood, bdellium resin, musk, benzoin, and camphor. One should also pour in water drawn from an ocean, a lake, a marsh, a flowing stream, and unspoiled, clear springs. Having then bound the neck of the vase with a silk or cotton cloth purified with scented water, one should set it in place. A tree adorned at its crown with fragrant substances, flowers, and fruits should be prepared, and one should also arrange perfume, incense, flowers, lamps, unguents, food offerings for the gods, and the sounds of music. For the torma of all spirits, one should offer seven portions, or five, or however many are appropriate.

To bind the boundaries one should recite: Namaḥ samanta vajrāṇām, acala caṇḍa mahāroṣaṇa, sarva vighnan sphoṭaya, vajra dhṛk khaḍga hūṃ.

Likewise, one should complete the protective ritual procedure. Having fastened a cord of dhāraṇī to the vase and transformed it with pure syllables, from the seed syllable Bhruṃ there arises a vase endowed with proper color and measure. From the seed syllable of the mind, the Blessed One — dwelling in meditative equipoise in the very reality of suchness, accompanied by bodhisattvas, pratyekabuddhas, and noble persons — is envisioned as seated upon a lion throne, upon a variegated lotus and moon disk seat. One should meditate upon the Blessed One by way of six aspects possessing the nature of reality: the nature of reality, mind, the mental aspect, sound, echo, form, and reflected image — in this form seated upon a lotus and moon disk, and atop Gaṇapati the elephant-faced one. From the seed syllable of the mind, a sword wreathed in flames of fire fills all of space.

From that, one should visualize the form of the Blessed One as the Tamer of Māras, and make offering to the Blessed One with offerings.

One should recite: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, oṃ āḥ hūṃ, pravarṣad kara pratīccha hūṃ.

One should recite: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, oṃ āḥ hūṃ, sarva devātā acintyāmṛtadhārāya svāhā.

One should recite: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, āhara bhagapāna, sarva vidyādhara pūjite svāhā jite svāhā.

One should recite: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, oṃ āḥ hūṃ, dharmadhātu anugate dhūpe hūṃ svāhā.

One should recite: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, oṃ āḥ hūṃ, mahāmaitribhyo gate puṣpe hūṃ.

One should recite: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, oṃ āḥ hūṃ, sarva tathāgata aciprana abhāva gagana bhyānirya āloke hūṃ svāhā.

One should recite: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, oṃ āḥ hūṃ, gagana samaya gandhe hūṃ svāhā.

One should recite: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, āhara sarva tathāgate naivedye pūjana spharaṇaye hūṃ svāhā.

One should recite: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, abhismāraye, spharaṇa himaṃ gagana khaṃ, dharmadhātu, ākāśāya, samantraya, sarva tathāgata pariśuddha maṇḍale, mama praṇidhi pūjana ma belena dharmadhātu, adhiṣṭhāna pāca hūṃ svāhā.

One should then ring the vajra and bell together.

One joins the palms, bends both index fingers slightly back behind the middle fingers, interlaces the ring fingers and little fingers, and bends the thumbs slightly inward: this is the mudrā of water for offering. With the fingers resting on the middle fingers and bent slightly inward, and the middle fingers raised upright: this is the mudrā of incense. The fingers are interlaced and tucked inward, and the index fingers are pressed down by the thumbs: this is the mudrā of flowers. The tips of the thumbs and middle fingers are brought together, and the remaining fingers are held in a fist: this is the mudrā of lamps. The fearlessness mudrā, with the left hand lifting at the wrist: this is the mudrā of perfume. The palms are joined at the edges, the two little fingers are crossed and raised upright: this is the mudrā of food offerings. One circles the hands above the crown of the head, joins the palms hollow, and then releases them: this is the great offering, by which the offering substances are purified by the goddesses of intrinsic purity.

One recites: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, abhāva svabhāva mudgatānāṃ, namaḥ pratyeka buddha ārya śrāvakānāṃ, namo bodhisattvānāṃ daśabhūmi pratiṣṭhita śaraṇānāṃ, bodhisattvāya mahāsattvānāṃ, tadyathā: oṃ kha kha khāhi khāhi, duṣṭa svāhā, kāmakra asi musa la paraśu pāśa hastāya, catur bhujā catur mukha ṣaṭ caraṇa, gaccha ya gaccha ya, sarva vighnān ghāta vikṛtīnānāṃ, sarva bhūta bhayaṃkara aṭṭahāsa ninīte byāghra carma nivāsani, kuru kuru sarva dharmānāṃ, chinda chinda, sarva mantra, bhinda bhinda, para mantra, ākarṣaya ākarṣaya, sarva bhūta, niramatha niramatha, sarva duṣṭaṃ, praveśaya praveśaya, maṇḍala madhye bhaivas tvājī vitinta, kara kara, kuru kuru, mama sarva kāryaṃ, daha daha, paca paca, mā vilamba, samayaṃ anusmara, hūṃ hūṃ, sphoṭaya sphoṭaya, sarva ṣaṭ paripūraka, he bhagavān, kañci rāyasi, mama sarvārthaṃ sādahaya, amogha, caṇḍa mahāroṣaṇa sphoṭaya hūṃ, trama trama haṃ maṃ.

This is to be recited seven or twenty-one times. One visualizes paying homage to all buddhas and bodhisattvas, and recites it while visualizing the pacification of karma and karmic maturation, destruction, harm, injury, illness, and the like.

Then, when one wishes to perform the torma offering, at the time of recitation one should present it in accordance with the instructed manner.

This is the fourth chapter of the noble dhāraṇī of Acala.

Then the Blessed One taught the ritual of the painted cloth. One should take extremely pure cotton and have a brahmin or someone of pure conduct wash it, then pray to the Three Jewels and examine it. Cloth from low castes and common people and the like is to be rejected. The cloth should be washed clean with a solution of saffron, musk, and aloeswood and the like. One then writes this mantra on birch bark or on the cloth and affixes it.

A ā, i ī, u ū, ṛ ṝ, ḷ ḹ, e ai, o au, aṃ aḥ, ka kha ga gha ṇa, ca cha ja jha ṇa, ṭa ṭha ḍa ḍha ṇa, ta tha da dha na, pa pha ba bha ma, ya ra la va, śa ṣa sa ha kṣa.

Having written these, one places them.

Then one recites this mantra seven times: Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, caṇḍa mahāroṣaṇa sphoṭaya hūṃ, tra tha haṃ maṃ, oṃ vākye daṃ namaḥ — through which all activities are accomplished. One then recites praises over a solution of saffron, sandalwood, and musk and scatters it.

Then the painter is to be ritually bathed and purified, and one of the brahmin lineage is to do the painting. For pigments, one may paint with gold, silver, copper, or iron on their own, or alternatively with white chalk, vermilion, red ochre, orpiment, yellow earth pigment, indigo bark, lac dye, charcoal, ink, and other such pigments — to which are added aloeswood, white pine resin, sandalwood, musk, camphor, and spikenard — these are to be mixed together with the pigments, and then this mantra is to be recited seven times before the painting begins: Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ, caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa sphoṭaya hūṃ, tra thā haṃ maṃ, vākye hūṃ, oṃ āḥ vira hūṃ, khe cara maṃ. After reciting this, the painting is to be executed. At an especially auspicious time, food is to be offered to someone who is endowed with moral discipline and pure, and one is to invite the eyes to be opened. The painting itself proceeds in the same manner. At the time of opening the eyes, this mantra is to be recited: Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ, caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa sphoṭaya hūṃ, tra thā hāṃ māṃ, gagana vara lakṣaṇa, karuṇā maya, sarva tathāgata cakṣuḥ, oṃ āḥ hūṃ svāhā. This is recited, then applied with a golden stylus smeared with honey, anointing three times.

When the sacred image has been completed to the proper proportions and is fully finished, it is to be given to the artist as desired — whether made of gold, silver, copper, horn, or stone, one proceeds in the same way. The distinctions between form and the special features of the image are to be differentiated as those belonging to intrinsic nature and those not belonging to intrinsic nature. In order to pacify obstacles for one who possesses that intrinsic nature, it is to be ritually blessed by transformation from the form body. Then, at an especially auspicious time, the chamber is to be smeared with the five kinds of cow-products. The cloth painting, thangka, loose folios, bound texts, and the like are to be ceremonially seated upon the maṇḍala. Incalculable special offerings of incense, flowers, lamps, perfumes, food offerings to the gods, and the like are arranged, and the torma offerings likewise. Parasols, victory banners, pennants, and ribbons are also to be hung. Then, by one bearing the body of the wrathful deity, this mantra is to be recited: Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ, amogha ehi apratihata, acala ceta enam takāṇam, tiṣṭha tiṣṭha, curu curu, tadi tadi, taṭa taṭa, vighān ghātaya, māraya, khādaya, sphoṭaya, satam ca me, anubhandhaya, ājñi kuru, adha ha dhahanaṃ kra, kata kata, mata mata, haṃ haṃ maṃ maṃ, ete bala ete pala, ehi mahā nuni biśana, naṭṭa naṭṭa, āveśaya āveśaya, acale ceha, taṭ taṭ, dama dama, phaṭ phaṭ. This is to be recited one hundred thousand times. For the two deity images, it is ten million times. The peaceful form is the emanation body — this is to be understood as applying from the outset in the same way.

Into a solution made of aloeswood, white pine resin, sandalwood, camphor, musk, and spikenard water, one recites this mantra: Namo ratna-trayāya, namaḥ Śākyamunaye, tathāgatebhyaḥ, arhatebhyaḥ, samyaksambuddhāya, tadyathā, muni muni mahāmuni, oṃ jaye jaye, vākye śe svāhā, oṃ vākyevaṃ jaya, oṃ vākye niṣṭheye, oṃ vākye namaḥ, oṃ vākyedaṃ namaḥ, oṃ āḥ hūṃ haṃ maṃ. With this the image is to be ritually bathed.

Then music is to be sounded, and after reciting the mantra twenty-one times over the substances, one recites: Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ, haṃ maṃ, oṃ ādyānutpannatvāta prabhāsvara-subiśuddha, dharmadhātu, svabhāva ātmako'ham. Then immeasurable offerings are made. This is the dhāraṇī mantra taught as the sacred pledge of all the Tathāgatas: Namas traya-dhvikānāṃ, sarva tathāgata ni, caṇḍa caṇḍa, bala pala, bata batra, śānte śānte, hala hala, para bara, marāṇa marāṇa, vajra dala sphoṭama, liti taśikhaṃ, samanta vajra ni jvala jvala, namo stu te, amogha caṇḍa mahāroṣaṇa sa saṃraṇa raṇa, haṃ hūṃ la vajra sphoṭamaṃ svāhā. Namas tvai ya-dhvikānāṃ tathāgatānāṃ sarvatra apratihata-dharmavālināṃ, aṃ a, sama sama samanto ananta tā vāpti śāsani, hara hara, smara smaraṇa pigata rāga, buddha-dharmate, sara sara, sama balā, hasa hasa, traya traya, gagana matā vara lakṣaṇe jvala jvala na sāgare svāhā. Namaḥ samanta-buddhāya, namaḥ sarva-buddha-bodhisatvānāṃ, oṃ araje vireja, mahā viraje.

This is the dhāraṇī of the perfectly pure body, speech, and mind of all the Tathāgatas. By the mere recitation of it once, all deities, mantras, and mudrās are completely purified. By this dhāraṇī, which is endowed with the three pledges of all the Tathāgatas, those who are bound by deities, mantras, and mudrās will be rendered capable and empowered. The deities, mantras, and mudrās will become free from all obstacles arising from omens and signs. In the evening and at dawn, one should recite in succession this dhāraṇī of the pledges of all the Tathāgatas. One should strive in this ablution of the arranged three pledges of all the Tathāgatas.

namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ, tadyathā, oṃ i ho śuddhe śuddhe, maṃ ho śuddhe śuddhe, raṃ ho aṃ śuddhe śuddhe, aśu maṃ viśuddhe śuddhe śuddhe śuddhe samaya svāhā.

This is the dhāraṇī of the arranged three pledges of all the Tathāgatas. If one recites the mantra over water and performs ablution, all misdeeds will be completely purified. Evil dreams, evil omens, evil signs, and untimely death will not occur. One will be freed from epidemic illness, smallpox, heavenly plague, abscesses, ulcers, infectious disease, and all harm.

This concludes the fifth chapter of the noble dhāraṇī of Acala.

Then the Blessed One, in order to subdue the gods (deva), nāgas, yakṣas, rākṣasas, kiṃnaras, and great serpents and the like, taught the form of the maṇḍala wheel. First, there is the sky in the form of the syllable E, which has the intrinsic nature of the dharmadhātu. The blue wind maṇḍala, like a bow with a banner, arises from the syllable yaṃ. The white, round water maṇḍala, resembling snow, with a vase shape, arises from the syllable baṃ. The golden-colored, square earth maṇḍala with a vajra arises from the syllable laṃ. Above that is Mount Meru, made of four precious substances, possessed of the proper measure, arising from the syllable oṃ. The red, triangular fire maṇḍala with flames arises from the syllable raṃ. Within it, from the syllable bhrum of various colors, arises a multi-storied square palace with four doors, built of five precious substances: crystal, lapis lazuli, coral, sapphire, and gold. Within that is a lotus seat of eight multicolored petals. The eastern petal is made of crystal. The southern petal is made of lapis lazuli. The western petal is made of coral. The northern petal is made of sapphire. The intermediate petals are likewise made of crystal, lapis lazuli, coral, and sapphire. In the center, on the back of Gaṇeśa, the lord of hosts in his elephant-headed form, is a seat of a multicolored lotus and sun disc. In the east is Śakra (Indra). In the south is the Great God (Śiva). In the west is Viṣṇu. In the north is Kubera. In the southeast is Brahmā. In the southwest is Kumāra. In the northwest is Nandī. In the northeast is Vijaya. Above these eight great gods is a seat of lotus and sun disc. From the syllable raṃ arises a sun, and from the syllable māṃ arises the symbol of wisdom bearing the mark māṃ, from which the Blessed One, the self-nature of the Tathāgata, Acala, sky-colored, the essence of the sun, dwells with his knees touching the ground. The Blessed One, adorned with precious ornaments, fills all of space with his radiance. In his right hand he holds a sword. In his left hand he holds the noose of the king of nāgas. He makes the sound "phu phu." In the east, from the syllable caṃ, the Blessed One of the vajra lineage, bearing the wisdom symbol caṃ, the Blessed One of the vajra lineage, Acala, crystal-colored, the essence of the sun, dwells with his knees touching the ground, adorned with precious ornaments. The Blessed One fills all of space with his radiance. In his right hand he holds a sword. In his left hand he holds the jewel of the nāgas. He makes the sound "phu phu."

In the south, from the syllable dhīḥ, the Blessed One of the jewel lineage, bearing the wisdom symbol dhīḥ, arises the Blessed One of the jewel lineage, the self-nature of Acala, lapis-lazuli-colored, the essence of the sun, dwelling with his knees touching the ground, adorned with precious ornaments. The Blessed One fills all of space with his radiance. In his right hand he holds a sword. In his left hand he holds the noose of the king of nāgas. He makes the sound "phu phu."

In the west, from the syllable māṃ, the Blessed One of the lotus lineage, bearing the wisdom symbol māṃ, arises the Blessed One of the lotus lineage, the self-nature of Acala, coral-colored, the essence of the sun, dwelling with his knees touching the ground, adorned with precious ornaments. The Blessed One fills all of space with his radiance. In his right hand he holds a sword. In his left hand he holds the water deity of the nāgas. He makes the sound "phu phu."

In the north, from the syllable haṃ, the Blessed One of the karma lineage, bearing the wisdom symbol haṃ, arises the Blessed One of the karma lineage, the self-nature of Acala, indranīla-colored, the essence of the sun, dwelling with his knees touching the ground, adorned with precious ornaments. The Blessed One fills all of space with his radiance. In his right hand he holds a sword. In his left hand he holds the nāga of noble lineage. He makes the sound "phu phu."

In the southeast, bearing a trident (triśūla) marked with the syllable raṃ, one-faced and four-armed, the Conqueror of the Three Realms: in his first right hand a trident, in his first left hand the son of the nāga Ananta, and in his lower right and left hands a vajra and a skull.

In the southwest, bearing a club marked with the syllable ṣaṃ, one-faced and four-armed, the fierce Yamāntaka, lapis-lazuli-colored: in his first right hand a vajra club, in his first left hand the nāga Nandaka, and in his lower two hands a hammer and a phurba.

In the northeast, bearing a spear marked with the syllable hūṃ, one-faced and four-armed, Amṛtakunḍalin, indranīla-colored: in his first right hand a spear, in his first left hand the nāga Balacārin, and his last two hands, right and left, are crossed in a threatening gesture.

In the southeast corner stands the goddess Dhūpā, dark-blue in color, holding a censer bowl. In the southwest, the goddess Puṣpā, white in color, holding flowers. In the northwest, the goddess Dīpā, red in color, holding a lamp. In the northeast, the goddess Gandhā, green in color, holding perfumed water.

These are to be generated from the syllable hūṃ as beautiful ones, youthful and in the bloom of their prime.

In the east, the goddess horse-faced, white in color, holding an iron hook. In the south, a goddess golden in color, holding a noose. In the west, a red goddess holding iron chains. In the north, a green goddess holding a bell.

These are to be generated from the syllable phaṭ, with a slightly wrathful aspect, and one should meditate on them as abiding fully in the intrinsic nature of the dharmadhātu.

Then the Blessed One proclaimed this dhāraṇī of perfect utterance:

Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ. Oṃ caṇḍa-mahā-roṣaṇa hūṃ phaṭ. Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇāṃ. Trailokya-vijaya hūṃ phaṭ. Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇāṃ. Akrote yamāntaka hūṃ phaṭ. Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇāṃ. Vajra-krodha hayagrīva hulu hulu hūṃ phaṭ. Namaḥ samanta-vajrāṇāṃ. Tratha amogha amṛta-kunḍali hūṃ phaṭ. Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ. Tratha vajra. Acala-ceta daha daha hūṃ phaṭ. Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ. Tratha ratna-acala paca hūṃ phaṭ. Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ. Tratha padma-acala cala bandha hūṃ phaṭ. Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ. Tratha amogha-karma acala hana hana hūṃ phaṭ.

Having thus spoken, it pacifies gods, asuras, kiṃnaras, great serpents, devas, nāgas, the malevolent and hostile ones, and purifies all acts of lesser evil and sin.

This is the sixth chapter of the noble dhāraṇī of Acala.

Then the Blessed One proclaimed this dhāraṇī mantra in the midst of the assembly:

Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ. Caṇḍa-mahā-roṣaṇa acalakāna. Caṇḍa caṇḍa. Naṭa naṭa. Maṭa maṭa. Moṭata moṭata. Śata śata. Ṭata ṭata. Hana hana. Daha daha. Moha moha. Moha sarva-pāpaṃkara. Hasa hasa. Haṃ haṃ maṃ maṃ phaṭ phaṭ hūṃ. Namaḥ samanta-vajrānāṃ. Tra amogha caṇḍa-mahā-roṣaṇa sphoṭaya hūṃ. Tramaya tra mahā hūṃ traṭ. Haṃ maṃ. Oṃ balimṭate jvāliṃ svāhā. Namaḥ samanta-buddhānāṃ. Caṇḍa-mahā-roṣaṇa. Acala-ceta. Sphoṭaya sphoṭaya hūṃ. Asamantikatra tat. Mahā-bala. Śaṭ-pāramantraṃ. Aṃ aṃ haṃ haṃ. Śuddha trailokya tuṣyetu vajra. Apratihātā vibhyaḥ. Namo jvalaya trata. Aṭṭahāsa namaṃ haṃ svāhā.

The moment this was spoken, all the gods, asuras, devas, nāgas, yakṣas, rākṣasas, kiṃnaras, great serpents, and all others dwelling in Jambudvīpa were scorched and fell to the ground.

Then the ritual procedure was proclaimed: a sword three cubits in length, made of the five metals, is to be fashioned with the mantra garland of maṃ haṃ inscribed upon it. An incense maṇḍala one cubit in breadth is to be made, and perfumed water with the requisite offering substances set out. If this dhāraṇī mantra is recited and repeated one hundred thousand times, the sword will rise up into the sky. Then, if one enters into battle, it will cut even the wish-fulfilling tree into pieces, and it grants victory in battle.

An alms bowl made of the five metals is to be fashioned with the syllables haṃ maṃ inscribed upon it. Upon vessels made of gold, silver, and copper, parasols, victory banners, auspicious knots, flowers, wheels, fish, and right-coiling conch shells, and coral inlays — or copper with coral inlay — are to be fashioned, and this dhāraṇī mantra written on cloth or silk and worn against the stomach or tied around the neck. When the dhāraṇī mantra has been recited ten million times and the alms bowl rises up into the sky and one makes supplication, whatever desired qualities one wishes will arise, like a wish-fulfilling tree.

The tongue of a sky-faring kite, the two eyes of an owl, an equal measure of both, and powder of three-pointed iron — with these, seven or twenty-one pills are made using crow's blood. These are placed inside a single skull fragment, and with the dhāraṇī mantra haṃ maṃ recited while circumambulating a lotus, if the dhāraṇī mantra is recited ten million times, the lotus will rise up into the sky. Then, combined with the breath-vapor from the heart's blood of one who has just died, and with one's eyes imagined as luminous and the mudrā of the sword applied to the eyes and ears, one will see and hear everything; and if it is placed in one's mouth, oneself will become invisible to everyone.

Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ. Sarva tathāgata vyavalokite jaya jaya. Vākye daṃ navani cakṣur viśodhāya svāhā.

Vulture fat is to be rubbed onto a piece of drum-skin, softening it, and sandals are made. The syllables haṃ and maṃ are written on the soles of one's own feet, and when the dhāraṇī mantra is recited ten million times the sandals will rise up into the sky. If vulture fat is smeared on the feet and they are put on, one may go wherever one wishes.

Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ. Oṃ brum mahāye gr̥ta svāhā.

By this one travels and rises up through the sky like a vulture.

The flesh of one who died in the seventh birth, the flesh of a vulture, the flesh of a crane, and honey are mixed together and made into an ointment. The dhāraṇī mantra is recited ten million times, the body is anointed, and the ointment is combined with the oil of the rāmanya, nyeyu-wood, and pramakara plants; into each portion, one srang each of honey and the milk of a tawny cow are added. If this is accomplished over one month, there will be no obstruction in the sky.

The two eyes of a black horse that are white, or the two ears of a black mouse that are white, or a white flat stone, or an animal born in the womb with white hair — these are placed in a peacock's crop and poured into a bowl, the dhāraṇī mantra is recited ten million times and poured over them, and the two eyes are extracted without error. They are dried in the shade until desiccated, and the powder, undecayed, is consecrated with this mantra. If applied accurately to the left and right, one will become omniscient. One will come to possess the noble vision of an ārya.

Mon-pos incense, bezoar (gorocana), tigress skin, fish bile, costus (ruṣṭa), the eyes and tongue of a tawny owl, go-ro-tsa-na, and brain matter are made into pills. For each pill placed in a Khamba amulet box, the dhāraṇī mantra haṃ maṃ is recited, and when the amulet box rises up into the sky and the mantra Namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ. Namaḥ yaṃ namahāri vini nāta hrīḥ is recited seven times and it is given, whatever one desires will come under one's power.

Vultures, ravens, hawks, tigers, wolves, and foxes — their fangs, claws, and the ash of a brahmin's bones — the dhāraṇī mantra is recited over these and the accomplishment is performed; if they are scattered upon unseasonable clouds and hail, the clouds will be dispersed and the hail, thunder, lightning, and so forth will be pacified.

All predatory beasts, all flesh-eaters, dogs, pigs — mixed with the brain of a female animal and gugula resin, and fumigated with smoke — all bears will be put to flight.

This has been the seventh chapter of the noble dhāraṇī of Acalanātha.

Oṃ caṇḍa mahāroṣaṇa hūṃ phaṭ.

This dhāraṇī mantra is the king of mantras. Even a single recitation will pacify all gods (deva), nāgas, yakṣas, and so forth throughout Jambudvīpa. From a one-day fever, a half-month fever, a one-month fever, a debilitating fever, a chronic fever, and a brief fever, one will be freed. Poxes, smallpox, shingles, fire-blisters, and scabies will be pacified. Even a single recitation will pacify sins such as those of immediate retribution (anantarya) and others. As for the first verse of the Vedic utterance and what is joined with the beginning of the second —

The third has the fifth. The fourth has its own fourth, and the fifth its own fifth. The fourth of the aspirate class, and the second at the end, is to be written marked with the letter o. The second of the aspirate class, the fifth letter of the fourth, and the fourth letter of the aspirate class are adorned with the letter u and accompanied by a dot.

The first letter of the fifth group being removed, and joined with the beginning of the fourth, these are the tenth letters of the heart.

Write the name of the object to be accomplished along with the ten-spoked wheel, place it inside the skull of a black dog, recite the dhāraṇī mantra one hundred and eight times, and sprinkle it with white mustard seed.

Then carry it to a place where nāgas dwell, anoint one's own body with elecampane, place the skull in a spring, and recite this dhāraṇī mantra:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namaś caṇḍa mahāroṣaṇa hūṃ phaṭ. Namō bhagavate buddha vīrāya. Tadyathā: phuṭa phuṭa, bhara bhara, mili mili, hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ.

The mudrā for this is: extend the fingers, bend the little finger, press it down with the thumb, rotate, then rise.

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namaś caṇḍa vajra krodha hayagrīva nami mili cili dhoṃ. Bandhaya. Krodhaya. Vajra lamaya. Makanaya. Oṃ jvala jvala, prajvala prajvala, sphuṭa sphuṭa, sarva nāga bandha bandha, nāga ni sara sara, viser sarva duṣṭāṃ hr̥daya, śoṣaṇa hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ.

The mudrā for this is: press the two sides of the hands together, cross the two ring fingers behind, press down with the two index fingers, extend and raise the two little fingers, press together the two middle fingers and thumbs, place this on the crown of the head, recite the mantra seven times, then rise.

If one blends bdellium resin (guggul), white mustard seed, asafoetida, the great fragrance, fish bile, garlic, and white aconite, and anoints the body with this, it becomes a material protection. If burned and fumigated over a fire of Chinese acacia, hail and untimely winds will be pacified, and malevolent spirits will flee.

Pouring yogurt, milk, butter, honey, molasses, raw sugar, rice, conch, vermilion, ocean foam, and the like into a copper vessel, recite this dhāraṇī mantra over white mustard seed and make offering to the nāgas:

Namo ratnatrayāya. Namaś caṇḍa vajra krodhāya hūṃ hūṃ. Tadyathā: oṃ Anantaka, Takṣaka, Śaṃkhaṇḍa, Vāsuki, Mahāpadma, oṃ gata balāvata, Karkoṭa phu svāhā.

By reciting this, all the nāgas will be filled with ease and well-being.

If one wishes to bring down rain, make a maṇḍala of fragrant water, fashion twenty-five nāga figurines in wax, scatter flowers upon the maṇḍala, hang the dhāraṇī cord upon it, and set it in place. Write the preceding syllable sequence in ox-bile ink on a piece of cloth, insert it against the chest, worship day and night, and stroke it with a Nepalese cat's tail, then recite this dhāraṇī mantra:

Oṃ suṃ supratī vajra dunte mili mi mili variṣāya variṣāya svāhā.

Having recited this, one should remain in fasting retreat. If the nāgas still do not send rain, the heads of the nāgas will split open like water-pots of arjaka plant.

Make a maṇḍala of incense, heat an effigy in a fire of Chinese incense, and recite the dhāraṇī mantra: this is the rite of banishment.

With an oblation of molasses, honey, raw sugar, sesame, and so forth, poured as a fire offering into a fragrant flame, make offering to the Blessed One by reciting:

Oṃ caṇḍa mahāroṣaṇa hūṃ śāntiṃ kuru svāhā.

This is the eighth chapter of the noble dhāraṇī of Acala (the Immovable One).

Then, upon a lotus of many-colored petals arising from the mud, there is a water maṇḍala born from the syllable Aḥ. Upon that, from the seed syllable Muṃ — the wisdom-symbol bearing the syllable Muṃ — arises the body of the noble lord Mañjuśrī, appearing as a youth of sixteen years, golden-hued or the color of saffron, with one face and two hands, seated in the bodhisattva posture of royal ease. In his right hand he raises a sword aloft into the sky; in his left hand he holds a book against his heart.

On the eastern petal of the lotus is Mañjuśrī the Courageous, whose body is white like snow dusted with saffron, with one face and two hands, seated in the bodhisattva posture of royal ease. In his right hand he raises a sword aloft into the sky; in his left hand he holds, at his heart, a blue lotus together with its stalk.

On the southern petal of the lotus is Mañjuśrī the Lord of Speech, blue in color, with one face and two hands, seated in the bodhisattva posture of royal ease. In his right hand he raises a sword aloft into the sky; in his left hand he holds a wheel at his heart.

On the western petal of the lotus is Mañjuśrī the Sharp, whose body color is like polished coral, with one face and two hands, seated in the bodhisattva posture of royal ease. In both hands he holds two blue lotuses.

On the northern petal of the lotus is Mañjuśrī of the Wisdom Sword, green in color, with one face and four hands, seated in the bodhisattva posture of royal ease. His first right hand raises a sword aloft into the sky; his first left hand holds a blue lotus together with its stalk against his heart; his lower right hand holds an arrow; his lower left hand holds a jeweled bow.

These bodies are forms that fill all of space with light, dispelling the entire darkness of ignorance without remainder.

By reciting Oṃ dharmadhātu vāgīśvari muṃ, one will be endowed with wisdom, will retain what one has heard, and one's mind will become bright and clear.

Into a full precious vase pour fragrant water mixed with saffron, aloe wood, white sandalwood, musk, and the like.

Then recite: Namaḥ sarvatathāgatebhyaḥ, arhate bhyaḥ, samyaksaṃbuddhebhyaḥ. Tadyathā: Oṃ kumārabhūtāya, dhāraṇī, viśvasaṃbhava, āgacchaya āgacchaya, hulu hulu, brum brum brum, hūṃ hūṃ jinajik, mañjuśriye, suśri, ye taraya maṃ haṃ, sarvaduḥkhebhyaḥ phaṭ phaṭ, amṛtodbhava samaya samaya, udbhava, sarvapāpaṃ me nāśāya svāhā.

Recite this dhāraṇī mantra seven times over the water in the vase and then bathe with it: all sins will be purified. The faculties will become sharp and one will retain what one has heard.

Namaḥ sarvatathāgatāya, arhadte bhyaḥ, samyaksaṃbuddhāya. Namo mañjuśriye, bodhisattvāya, mahāsattvāya. Tadyathā: Oṃ mañjughoṣa, hana hana, paca paca, maṭa maṭa, matha matha, vidhvaṃsaya, kara kara, tutra tutra, bhañja bhañja, āviśaya āviśaya, tutra tutra, tuṭa tuṭa, sphuṭasa sphuṭasa, hṛdayasādhani, namaḥ saṃbodhani praveśaya, lau huta lau huta, kraite kraite, prabandha prabandha, āveśaya āveśaya, haṃ maṃ sarvavighnān hūṃ hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ svāhā.

With this mantra, apply it to a sick person by touching them with a rice stalk or sesame, and then bathe them. By bathing through the recitation of this dhāraṇī mantra, one will be liberated from karma, from mental afflictions, and from the suffering of karmic maturation. If one makes a fire offering with kara wood, peace will likewise be achieved. If one applies it to a sword and enters into battle, one will be victorious. One who keeps the fasting retreat should perform the practice before an image of the deity and offer supplication to the noble one.

Write it on cloth or linen and place it on one who is tormented by suffering. Recite the dhāraṇī mantra into a cord, tie it in knots, and fasten it on one who is afflicted by existence, then offer supplication to the noble one. If sons and daughters of good family abide in the fasting retreat and recite it as their commitment, no possession by gods, nāgas, yakṣas, hungry ghosts, flesh-eaters, or similar spirits will arise. They will be freed from planets, stars, falling tongues of fire, and the lord of untimely death. Harm from animals such as tigers, bears, and yaks, along with wind, hail, and untimely earthquakes, will be pacified. One will become inclined toward steadying the mind, retaining what one has heard, and abandoning the habitual tendencies of mental affliction. One will behold the bodies of all noble ones with unobstructed sight. If sons and daughters of good family recite this once, or three times, or seven times, or twenty-one times, or one hundred and eight times, then leprosy, eye-tumors, tumors of the flesh, scrofula, mange, disease of the inner shoulder-blade, and ailments of the eyes, ears, and teeth, among others, will not arise in their bodies, it is declared.

Then the Blessed One smiled, and entered into meditative absorption in the samādhi called "Light Entering Through All the Gates of Liberation," causing light to pervade the worlds of hell-beings, hungry ghosts, animals, and the humans of the four continents. Then he caused it to pervade downward through the realms of the Four Great Kings, the Heaven of the Thirty-Three, the Heaven Free from Strife, the Joyful Heaven, the Heaven of Delighting in Emanations, and the Heaven of Mastery over Others' Emanations. He then entered into meditative absorption in the samādhi of the first dhyāna (Skt. dhyāna). Rising from the first dhyāna, he entered into meditative absorption in the second dhyāna. Rising from the second, he entered into meditative absorption in the third dhyāna. Rising from the third, he entered into meditative absorption in the fourth dhyāna. Rising from the fourth dhyāna, he entered into meditative absorption in the sense base of infinite space. Rising from the sense base of infinite space, he entered into meditative absorption in the sense base of infinite consciousness. Rising from the sense base of infinite consciousness, he entered into meditative absorption in the sense base of nothingness. Rising from the sense base of nothingness, he entered into meditative absorption in the sense base of neither-existence-nor-non-existence. Rising from that, he entered into meditative absorption in the samādhi of suchness.

Then the Blessed One arose from that samādhi, and rejoiced in the bodhisattvas Samantabhadra, Ākāśagarbha, Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin, Mañjuśrī, Avalokiteśvara, Vajrapāṇi, Maitreya, and the others. The world together with its gods, humans, asuras, garuḍas, kinnaras, and gandharvas was filled with joy and praised what the Blessed One had declared.

This is the ninth chapter of the noble dhāraṇī of the Immovable One.

The noble dhāraṇī called the Immovable One is complete.

Translated and edited and definitively established by the Indian preceptor Dharmaśrīmitra and the Tibetan translator, the monk Chökyi Zangpo.

Translator's Notes

- The passage contains Sanskritized Tibetan transcriptions of mantras and Sanskrit deity names. The mantras are rendered in their reconstructed Sanskrit form as they appear in the text, preserving the standard liturgical spellings.

The description of the wrathful emanations involves a threefold division corresponding to body, speech, and mind, which is a standard tantric structural scheme; the translation preserves this without flattening it.

The "Palace of the Thirty-Three Gods" renders brtsegs pa, literally "the tiered or stacked palace," referring to the Trāyastriṃśa heaven atop Mount Meru, which is a multi-tiered celestial palace. This is standard cosmological usage.

The passage ends mid-sentence in the source text, and the translation reflects this.

- The Tibetan phrase rendered as "protection of the mother" refers to the mudrā being classified as the mudrā of the Prajñāpāramitā or feminine principle in tantric ritual contexts; "mother" here is a technical term for this category of protection rather than a literal maternal reference.

The mantra line "Sarva-tathāgata-pramēni-ragardha" is phonetically transcribed from a partially corrupt Tibetan transliteration and the underlying Sanskrit is uncertain; the rendering here follows the Tibetan syllables as closely as possible.

The five desire-realm deva realms listed follow the standard Abhidharma cosmological sequence; the Tibetan names are rendered by their standard Sanskrit equivalents: Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarati, and Paranirmitavaśavartin, with the Heaven of the Thirty-Three (Trāyastriṃśa) being the second.

- The passage transitions mid-sentence at the very end, breaking off at a list of medical conditions; this is clearly a continuation into the next passage and the translation reflects that open ending faithfully.

The description of the wrathful deity is Acala (Caṇḍamahāroṣaṇa, also known as Acalanātha), the immovable wrathful one central to this dhāraṇī text. The epithet "stainless and youthful form" (dri ma med cing gzhon nu'i sku) is a standard descriptor of Acala in tantric literature.

The phrase rendered as "lord of the assembly" for tshogs kyi bdag po follows the standard reading in this liturgical context, referring to the presiding figure at the center of the maṇḍala assembly.

The simile of the asura who "does not eat the scattered food-offerings" is an unusual image for a wrathful gaze; it likely refers to the asuras' deprivation or their fierce, consuming nature, but the Tibetan is read straightforwardly here without emendation.

- The passage describing the visualization on the "seven-horse chariot" is technically dense and likely refers to a solar-chariot diagram or a ritual yantra; the exact visualization context is specialized tantric instruction and the Tibetan is slightly compressed. The rendering follows the most natural reading.

The mudrā description — raising the middle fingers with the ring fingers slightly bent and the little fingers the same — is a standard vajra-fist gesture; the Tibetan grammar at this point is terse, and the exact finger configuration rendered here is one plausible reading of the text.

• The passage lists ten wrathful vajra-beings with their colors, natures, and implements. The Sanskrit reconstructions given for their names are interpretive renderings based on the Tibetan; the original Sanskrit titles of these figures may differ in attested Sanskrit sources. The term rendered "meteor-iron wheel" for རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཁོར་ལོ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ literally means a wheel of sky-iron or meteoric iron, a standard tantric implement. The phrase rendered "fasting" for རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་ (smyungwa) more precisely refers to the Nyungné fasting practice, but in this context it functions as a general ascetic dietary qualifier, hence "with fasting." The phrase རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་འཁོར་ལོ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ (Vajra-Causal-Power) and its implement རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་ are uncertain; རྩམ་ཆེན་པོ་ may denote a mace or trident, and the rendering is tentative.

- The passage contains a technically complex ritual section with a sequence of Sanskrit mantras transliterated through Tibetan. These mantras are rendered here in reconstructed Sanskrit, preserving the syllables as faithfully as possible from the Tibetan transliteration, though several individual syllables are corrupt or unclear in transmission — particularly in the longer mantra beginning "sarva tathāgata aciprāṇa" and the final mantra — and their precise Sanskrit originals cannot be established with certainty from the Tibetan alone. This is a ritual context where corrupted mantra strings are common and expected.

The phrase rendered "Gaṇapati the elephant-faced one" translates རྒྱལ་པོ་ལ་མེད་པའི་ཁ་ལྔ་པ་ལྟ་བུ་ལྷ་པོ་།, literally "the lord of the assembly with an elephant snout," a standard Tibetan rendering of Gaṇapati or Gaṇeśa.

• The text ends mid-sentence as it is an excerpt; the pigment list continues beyond the supplied passage. The series of Sanskrit syllables in the middle of the passage constitutes the Sanskrit alphabet (vowels followed by consonantal groups), written in Tibetan transliteration, and is rendered as a straightforward transcription. The colophon phrase "fourth chapter of the noble dhāraṇī of Acala" marks the end of a discrete textual unit before the new section on the cloth ritual begins. The phrase rendered "water for offering" is literally "the mudrā of offering water," and the sequence of six mudrās that follow corresponds to the standard set of offering mudrās for water, incense, flowers, lamps, perfume, and food in tantric ritual.

• The passage contains extended runs of Sanskrit mantra syllables in Tibetan phonetic transcription. These have been transliterated back into standard Sanskrit phonetic form to the best extent possible; some syllables remain uncertain in their exact Sanskrit reconstruction and may reflect Tibetan phonetic adaptation of the original. The rendering is consistent with the parallel mantra corpus of the Amoghapāśa and related dhāraṇī cycles.

The phrase rendered as "one hundred thousand times" and "ten million times" for the two deity images follows the standard Tibetan numerical convention of 'bum for one hundred thousand and bye ba for ten million.

The phrase "smeared with the five kinds of cow-products" refers to the standard purification mixture of the five products of the cow used in Indian and Tibetan ritual consecration.

- The palace described here uses five precious substances identified in the text as crystal (shel), lapis lazuli (baiḍūrya), coral (byi ru), sapphire (indranīla), and gold (gser). These are standard tantric correspondences and are rendered accordingly.

The sound "phu phu" is an onomatopoeic utterance associated with Acala's wrathful blowing or breath, a standard iconographic detail in this text tradition.

The eighth cardinal figure "Kundu Gyalwa" (kun du rgyal ba) in the northeast is rendered here as Vijaya, a recognized deity name in this context, though the exact identification of all eight directional gods in this list follows the sequence standard to this class of ritual text rather than the more common Lokapāla arrangement.

- The term rendered "jewel of the nāgas" in the east direction for the vajra-lineage Acala's left-hand object is འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་, which may refer to a specific nāga called Norgyé or to a jewel associated with the nāgas; the context is ritual iconographic description and the precise identity of the nāga-object differs slightly from the standard "noose of the king of nāgas" given in adjacent descriptions.

The Tibetan འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་ in the west direction is literally "nāga water-deity" or "nāga water-god," a somewhat unusual epithet; it may refer to a specific nāga deity associated with water rather than a generic category.

The Tibetan འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་འཕྲུལ་ in the north is literally "the nāga of noble lineage" or "the nāga possessing lineage"; this may be a name or epithet of a specific nāga-deity rather than a generic descriptor.

- The mantra passages are transliterated directly from the Tibetan phonetic rendering of Sanskrit dhāraṇī syllables. Some syllables are formulaic wrathful mantra seed-syllables and vocatives rather than grammatically complete Sanskrit, which is normal for this genre. The rendering follows the standard phonological conventions for Tibetan transcription of tantric Sanskrit. The phrase rendered as "incense maṇḍala one cubit in breadth" reflects the Tibetan khru do, meaning a maṇḍala of one cubit's measure. The list of offering items at the very end is incomplete as the Tibetan passage itself breaks off mid-enumeration.
- The text contains several obscure material substances whose Tibetan names resist certain identification. "Rāmanya" and "nyeyu-wood" are local plant names without confident Sanskrit equivalents in context. "Go-ro-tsa-na" may be a variant of gorocana (bezoar) appearing again separately from the earlier giuwang, or a distinct substance; left in transliteration. "Pramakara" is likewise rendered from transliteration.

The phrase "tawny owl" renders phug-ron, a night bird, though the precise species is uncertain.

The final line breaks off mid-sentence and is rendered as such, as it is a transition introducing quoted or cited verse from the Vedas or a similar canonical source.

- The opening section on letters — "the third has the fifth," "the fourth of the aspirate class," and so forth — describes a cipher or phonological encoding system for writing a syllabic formula (likely the ten-syllable heart mantra referred to as the "tenth letters of the heart"). The exact phonological mapping is a specialized topic in tantric orthographic convention and is rendered here as literally as the Tibetan permits, without interpretation of the specific cipher's output.

The term rendered "elecampane" for གླ་རྩི་ (gla rtsi) may also refer to musk or costus root depending on the tradition; here the aromatic medicinal plant interpretation is followed.

The instruction to write something "in ox-bile ink" renders གི་ཁ་འཕྲུལ་ (gi'u wang), which is a classical Tibetan term for ox or bull gall used as ink or pigment.

- The maṇḍala description presents Mañjuśrī in five forms corresponding to the center and four cardinal directions. The central figure's age is given as "sixteen years" in the Tibetan, though some parallel texts read "eight years old" or "sixteen years old" for the youthful Mañjuśrī; the Tibetan here reads lo brgyad gnyis lon pa, literally "one who has reached eight times two years," i.e., sixteen, which is a recognized iconographic age for Mañjuśrī. The form called Mañjuśrī the Courageous on the east petal has a body described as white like snow with saffron scattered over it, indicating a pale golden-white blend. The mantra passages have been transliterated as they appear without emendation, as dhāraṇī syllables of this kind are traditionally preserved intact.
- The term rendered "falling tongues of fire" translates lce 'bab pa, which in contexts like this refers to lightning or fire falling from the sky; some interpreters understand it as meteors or shooting stars. The precise referent is contextually uncertain but the sense is a dangerous atmospheric phenomenon.

The name Sarvanīvaraṇaviṣkambhin (sgrib pa rnam par sel ba, "Remover of All Obscurations") is a bodhisattva commonly appearing in such lists; the Sanskrit reconstruction is standard.
