Toh 366 in the Kangyur is a Vajrayāna tantric scripture known in Sanskrit as the Śrī Sarvabuddha Samayoga Ḍākinījāla Saṃvara Uttara Tantra and in Tibetan as the Dpal sangs rgyas thams cad dang mnyam par sbyor ba mkha' 'gro ma sgyu ma bde ba'i mchog, rendered in English as the Subsequent Tantra of the Glorious Union with All Buddhas, the Illusory Net of the Ḍākinī, the Supreme Bliss. It belongs to the class of Highest Yoga Tantras and is presented as a "subsequent" or continuation tantra, meaning it elaborates on and supplements a root tantra of the same cycle devoted to the union of all buddhas. The text centers on Vajrasattva as the embodiment of all buddhas, on the figure of the Ḍākinī as the supreme illusory expression of non-dual bliss, and on the esoteric principle that the illusory net of feminine energy is the highest vehicle transcending both attachment and renunciation. As a canonical Vajrayāna tantra, it is placed among the Anuttarayoga tantric scriptures of the Kangyur, the collection of translated words of the Buddha in the Tibetan Buddhist canon.

In the language of India: Śrī Sarvabuddha Samayoga Ḍākinījāla Saṃvara Nāma Uttara Tantra. In the language of Tibet: the Subsequent Tantra of the Glorious Union with All Buddhas, the Illusory Net of the Ḍākinī, the Supreme Bliss.

Homage to the glorious Vajrasattva.

The bodhisattva, the very substance of all buddhas, Vajrasattva, the Supreme Bliss, abides forever as the self of all in the delight of the supreme secret.

This is the self-arisen Blessed One,
the god uniquely and supremely distinguished,
the union of all buddhas,
the illusory Ḍākinī of supreme bliss.

Neither devoid of attachment nor bound to it, nor yet is the Middle Way apprehended.
The illusory net of all women is this supreme vehicle of non-duality.

Among all illusions whatsoever,
the illusion of woman is pre-eminent.
Through the power of essential nature,
it is accomplished through intrinsic nature itself.

By this woman, in all three worlds,
those who pay reverence are transformed.
Through gain and pleasure and every joy,
even base conduct is accomplished.

When one thoroughly transforms one's own nature,
it is accomplished through the illusion of all women.
This wondrous illusory mudrā (Skt. mudrā) is taught under the designation ḍākinī.

The syllable ḍā is explained as "moving in the sky," discerned directly from the element.
She who accomplishes movement throughout all space
is renowned as ḍākinī.

Through the mudrā of all without remainder,
through the supreme bliss of all without remainder,
she who is the union of all buddhas
is renowned as ḍākinī.

She is called "moving in the sky," discerned thoroughly from the buddha-element.
She who is accomplished as pervasive throughout all is the ḍākinī who is the self of all buddhas.

The syllable śaṃ is explained as bliss,
the great bliss of all buddhas.
She who perfectly unites all illusions, supremely blissful, is the Supreme Bliss.

Entirely and from every side, in all things,
as the self forever, in all aspects,
she has become the very substance of all things — buddhas and all else, stable and moving.

Mind, the samādhi of the bodhisattva,
and the manifold conduct of awakening, likewise the māras and the conqueror of māras — that is awakening, that is a buddha.

Vajra and vajra-holder alike, likewise lotus and lotus-bearer, jewel and jewra-bearer alike —
these too are the families thereof.

That very reality is attachment and freedom from attachment, it is desire and it is liberation.

The three times, the three existences, the three supreme ones,
the three worlds, the three realms,
all that abides in its various, distinct forms —
all of that is suchness itself.

All beings without remainder in every respect become this.
All that is supreme and boundless, beginning with that —
the dharmadhātu, equal and unequal,
all things that are the limitless expanse of the sky —
all that is precisely that.

At every moment throughout all space, the glorious Vajrasattva, the Tathāgata,
the union of all buddhas,
the illusory ḍākinī of supreme bliss.

That which all buddhas have not attained throughout innumerable tens of millions of aeons — through whichever mudrā rituals it shall be attained in this very life — that I shall now investigate.

The Lord of all buddhas, the Supreme Bliss, attained through thoroughly accomplishing one's own nature:
he is the Lord of all buddhas, the Supreme Bliss.

Yogīs whose minds are not authentic,
who meditate upon a deity by fixing the mind upon it — yoga arises as the reflection's own nature, in traditions such as the imitation and the like.

Yogīs of supremely authentic mind
who meditate upon a deity by fixing the mind upon it, who unite themselves with their own samaya (Skt. samaya) — they will accomplish the immutable, the holy.

In practices such as the reflection tradition and the like, yoga will not arise.

But if one strives with diligence in the awakening mind, from that, the yogī becomes divine.

The awakening mind is the vajra,
it is the very nature of all buddhas.
Therefore, by uniting oneself with all through it —
one will attain all buddhas.

I myself am all buddhas, and all heroes (vīras) am I.
Therefore, by uniting oneself with the divine,
one should accomplish oneself completely.
By this, all buddhas
and all heroes,
and all vajra-holders —
in this very life they will be accomplished.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva, on that ground.

This is the first reflection of the wisdom seal (jñānamudrā), which enters into the sacred domain of the luminous suchness of the supreme yoga of the union of all buddhas, the illusory ḍākinī of supreme bliss.

This is the yoga of the Blessed One,
Vajrasattva the Tathāgata,
the union of all buddhas,
the illusory ḍākinī, the supreme bliss.

By uniting oneself with Vajrasattva,
all that is to be accomplished is perfectly achieved.

The union of all buddhas,
the lord of yoga, the great bliss —
by that very bliss
all the bliss of buddhas is obtained.

The union of all buddhas,
the lord of yoga, the great bliss —
in this, bathing and vows are not needed, nor is the practice of severe austerities required.

Without austerities, without vows, through bliss and through joy it is accomplished.

Therefore, conduct oneself as one desires, eat all things, likewise act in all ways.

Do whatever one wishes to do, move about as one pleases.

Whether rising or sitting, walking or remaining in whatever position — whether laughing or speaking at length, wherever one is, however one conducts oneself —

even one who has not entered a maṇḍala, or one who possesses every obscuration:
if one unites oneself with one's own deity,
even with little merit, accomplishment will come about.

Indeed, through this yoga, which accomplishes all things,
by all manner of inferior food and inferior conduct,
no faults whatsoever will arise.

All the holy buddhas
whom one could not attain in a billion aeons — if accomplished through the rites of the seal, they will all be attained completely.

This, which is the supreme means of accomplishing oneself, is what I must examine.

The union of all buddhas,
the illusory ḍākinī, the supreme bliss —
by uniting oneself with Vajrasattva,

through transforming one's dress and appearance accordingly,
one becomes the lord of all the various seals.
Even with little merit, accomplishment will come about.

Simply by accomplishing this seal,
all buddhas bestow their blessing.
When one is utterly blessed,
all buddhas will assemble.

By uniting equally with all buddhas,
one becomes equal to all buddhas.
Because one is equal to all buddhas,
all buddhas will be accomplished.

Whoever sees the one who possesses this and venerates them in every way — by that, all buddhas too will be seen and venerated.

Through seeing and touching
both this one and all buddhas, even one who has not entered the maṇḍalas will come to see the truths.

Through seeing and touching,
through hearing and through recollecting,
one is freed from every sin,
and all the accomplishments (siddhis) of the buddhas are achieved.

Through the full yoga-union with this one and with all buddhas, even women will be liberated and will touch the awakening of the buddhas.

Everywhere, from all sides, in all things,
in every aspect of oneself,
one will come to see one's own nature
as the actual accomplishment of all buddhas.

Because this abides as the very self of all,
through vast and boundless masses of offering clouds arranged in infinite assemblies,

the Tathāgatas are offered worship.

The splendour of union-worship as one's own self,
the supreme Vajrasattva,
is the intrinsic nature of all buddhas —
the supreme bliss will be obtained.

By the full union of all yogīs — splendour becomes the ground, and accomplishment is achieved.
All yogīs are the Blessed One,
Vajrasattva, the Tathāgata.
His union encompasses
all three realms without exception.

Through the enjoyments of all yogīs, resting in bliss just as one wishes,
and through the yoga of one's own deity, one makes oneself utterly supreme.

Through sequential union one performs worship, and if one continuously savours
all the bliss of every yogī as one's own self, through most refined union it will be accomplished.

By this rasāyana bliss of the essential nature of all buddhas, the splendour, life, and youth of Vajrasattva, freedom from illness, and supreme bliss are accomplished.

Everywhere, from all sides, in all things,
the union of all buddhas —
the supreme bliss of the ḍākinī illusion — will always be accomplished.

Thus did the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva, declare.

This is the second chapter, the tantra of total union, from the Glorious Union of All Buddhas, the Supreme Bliss of the Illusory Ḍākinī.

This is the yogī, the Blessed One,
Vajrasattva, the Tathāgata,
the union of all buddhas,
the supreme bliss of the illusory ḍākinī.

The yogī of Vajrasattva, glorious, resting in one's own sacred pledge, the great bliss of the yoga-sovereign
of the union of all buddhas —

Through the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
by that very power, throughout all things,
all the great-bliss mudrās
will each individually arise of themselves.

Through the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
by that very power, throughout all things,
all the blissful intoxications of yoga
will each individually arise of themselves.

Through the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
by that very power, throughout all things,
all the accomplishments of blissful intoxication will individually arise of themselves.

Through the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
by that very power, throughout all things,
all the sovereigns of blissful intoxication
will individually arise of themselves.

Through the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
by that very power, throughout all things,
the boundless expanse of space will give rise to the supreme women.

Arising from that sacred pledge,
the beloved sacred pledge follows me.
Refined union and great union —
the supreme sacred pledge of all as oneself.

Acting as one with one another, delightfully following through shared activity —
the union of all buddhas,
the supreme illusory ḍākinī blazes forth.

All the mudrās of complete joy are the great bliss.

The supreme worship of the ever-perfect goddess-queen is the highest of all worships.

Through Vajrasattva's union and the gathering of all goddesses, every auspicious fortune without exception is accomplished individually through bliss.

By the seal impressed through this mudrā, Vajrasattva, the great deity, and all the great-bliss goddesses of the boundless expanse of space —

All are intoxicated with the bliss of yoga.
By the force of faultlessness, openly manifest, they delight one another with great joy and rejoice in the manner of heroic beings.

Through what arises from all the senses, through the array of all vast offering clouds spread in infinite assemblies, one performs worship as the nature of all.

The empowerment of supreme great bliss arising from all the bliss of yoga — by all the assembled jewels, empowerment is conferred in utter rapture.

The enjoyments of all the goddesses are to be enjoyed just as one wishes.
By uniting myself with the great deity,
I myself offer worship to myself.

Through the sequential union of all the bliss of yoga,
worship is performed,
and when one continually savours it,
through most refined union it is perfectly accomplished.

By that rasāyana bliss of the essential nature of all buddhas, the splendour and life of Vajrasattva — youth, freedom from illness, and supreme bliss are accomplished. The great body of all buddhas, the melodious speech of all buddhas, the great mind of all buddhas, the great worship of all buddhas, the great sovereignty of all buddhas, the lord of all vajra-holders, the foremost among all lords of the world, the lord of all jewels — when one revels in joy with these, one moves, comes and goes, and soars according to one's wish. All the goddesses accomplish the great siddhi. The wheel-turning sovereign is perfectly accomplished. Equal to the dharmadhātu and yet unequal to it, boundlessly extending to the limits of the expanse of space — intoxicated by the bliss of all siddhis, there is no other supreme vastness beyond that. The union of all buddhas, by that great bliss of the sovereign of yoga, in this very lifetime, without anything whatsoever remaining unaccomplished in any respect — intoxicated by the bliss of all siddhis, equal to the dharmadhātu and yet unequal to it, boundlessly extending to the limits of the expanse of space, intoxicated by the bliss of all sovereigns — there is nothing whatsoever that is a higher vastness. The union of all buddhas: by that supreme bliss of the ḍākinī illusion, in this very lifetime, there is nothing that remains unaccomplished in any respect.

Thus did the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva, declare.

This is the third chapter, called "The Auspicious Vajra Samaya Cognition of Supreme Auspicious Fortune of the Union with All Goddesses," from "The Supreme Bliss of the Ḍākinī Illusion, the Union with All Buddhas."

This is the Blessed One of yoga, Vajrasattva the Tathāgata, the union of all buddhas, the supreme bliss of the ḍākinī illusion, the union with all goddesses — the wish of supreme auspicious fortune, the one who savours the bliss of genuine union, deep and unwavering in attachment. The great form of all buddhas, and melody, fragrance, taste, and the supreme tactile bliss of all buddhas — these are fully enjoyed as one's own experience. The perfections of all buddhas accomplished, and the dhāraṇīs and grounds likewise — one who delights in these: what need is there to speak of the auspicious fortune of gods, humans, and women? The joy of divine siddhi, the great bliss of the awakening of all buddhas — by savouring auspicious fortune and bliss, each one will be spontaneously accomplished. All that arises from siddhi, the splendour of all Tathāgatas, all the enjoyments of auspicious fortune — these are enjoyed as one's own experience. The supreme accomplishment of the vajra-holder, the splendour of the first lord of the world, the supreme bliss in which buddhas rejoice — having seized it, one makes full use of it. All the great buddha-sovereignties of the entire three realms without remainder — by the force of splendid power, having seized them openly, one makes full use of them. The great siddhi of all buddhas, the supreme and sacred lords of excellence — if one seizes all of these and enjoys them, what need is there to speak of other enjoyments? The auspicious stability that arises from mighty power, joy from what is seized through recollection, and the delight of the siddhi — and further, having seized them by the force of splendid power, one bestows them upon the faithful. The entire sovereignty of the three worlds without remainder, together with all lords of the world — having seized them by the force of splendid power, one bestows them upon the faithful. Brahma's entrance-dispelling great lord, the supreme and sacred lords of excellence — if all are seized and swiftly bestowed, what need is there to speak of other enjoyments? There is nothing he does not bestow. There is nothing whatsoever to be done for the sake of the buddhas that is not done. It is also generosity and the act of giving. Buddhas and bodhisattvas too — if one seizes them and bestows them, what need is there to speak of other supreme deeds, vast merit, and other siddhis? The supreme siddhi is certain. The vanquisher of all hosts, the great siddhi of all buddhas —

The perfection of the wheel-turning sovereign, the union with all buddhas — through the supreme bliss of the illusory ḍākinī, the great miraculous power of all buddhas fully enters into wondrous manifestation. In some cases, there is the arising of the great awakening mind; in some cases, conduct proceeds harmoniously; in some cases, there is the supreme transference from among the Tuṣita gods; in some cases, birth is utterly pure; in some cases, the definitive going-forth (pravrajyā) is clearly accomplished; in some cases, one proceeds toward great awakening; in some cases, māra is thoroughly vanquished; in some cases, awakening is directly and fully realized; in some cases, the wheel of Dharma is set in motion; in some cases, the tīrthikas of the opposing shores are brought to account in accordance with the Dharma; in some cases, one is victorious over the three worlds — the lord of all attainments. In some cases, the supreme of all conceptions, the unsurpassed lord of siddhi. And so on, and on, limitlessly and supremely — through the supreme bliss that is the master of all buddhas, the definitive dance of skillful means for taming beings is enacted with delight in wondrous emanation. The supreme of all great siddhis, the master of the great lord of stability — form, long life, complexion, and strength — like the glorious Vajrasattva, are to be served by beings, and are venerated by all Tathāgatas. The supreme and glorious one among all goddesses is perfectly accomplished in Vajrasattva. All the many realms of sentient beings, without exception, are sealed with the mudrā. The hardships of the gods and of awakening are firmly ripened within sentient beings. Through the supreme bliss that is the master of all buddhas, the welfare of all sentient beings is accomplished, and, without remainder and without exception, one abides throughout all aeons in existence.

Thus did the Blessed One Vajrasattva declare these words.

This is called the supreme siddhi of the highest excellent fortune of all the various kinds, from the Supreme Bliss of the Illusory ḍākinī, the Union with All Buddhas — the fourth chapter: the Reflection on the Glorious Samaya.

This Blessed One of yoga, Vajrasattva the Tathāgata, the Union with All Buddhas, the supreme bliss of the illusory ḍākinī — he alone is perfectly and truly accomplished. Applied just as one desires, in all the ritual procedures of reflection, he is the supreme of the supreme, the highest siddhi. Through the engagement in the various activities of karma and through rites of many kinds, in order to tame sentient beings according to their wishes and to accomplish all their happiness — this very Blessed One of yoga, emanating as all the buddhas, when he manifests emanations for the welfare of all sentient beings, swiftly and perfectly accomplishes everything. Whether day by day, month by month, or year by year, having bestowed blessings accordingly, the dance of Buddha Supreme Bliss is performed.

From all the essences of the elements, and likewise arising from the vital breath and the channels, one performs the sealing mudrā of accomplishment in the guise of one's own deity. Whatever maṇḍala one relies upon, through offerings of the various mudrās, one makes offerings to each and every assembly of disciples there, and through that accomplishes the aim. Beyond that as well, the emanations of all buddhas throughout all reflective rituals — having made whatever emanations are fitting — their accounts are to be fully expounded.

The bodhisattva, the very reality of all buddhas, Vajrasattva of supreme bliss — when he delights in the supreme secret, all dwell permanently as that very nature. This Blessed One of yoga is the true, supreme, stable, and enduring one — ever arising, as though in the present moment — whose essential nature is difficult to transcend. For all those who desire the various rites, through the various engagements of activity, this has been done for the sake of taming such as Buddha Vajradhara and the rest. All beings, from buddhas onward, whether animate or inanimate — everything becomes this very reality. The Union with All Buddhas, the supreme bliss of the illusory ḍākinī — through this union of illusion —

The supreme among all the various forms, the supreme aims of all sentient beings —
these are accomplished through taming, beginning with the buddhas.
This is the relief breathed forth by glorious Vajrasattva.

In a past time, what arose before — the permanence of the Great Self — within the noble speech of the Tathāgata, the way of beings, what arose before:
at that time all sentient beings,
striving ardently in profound emptiness, engaging with the nature of reality that is cessation,
ceased and passed utterly into nirvāṇa.

That very Blessed One of yoga, Vajrasattva, the Tathāgata —
for the complete purification of all who are liberated, gives rise to all buddha emanations everywhere.

Neither empty nor non-empty,
nor is the Middle Way itself found as an object.
Engaging in the Perfection of Wisdom, skillful means and compassion are the very self of all —
and therefore that is the method of compassion, made luminously clear as the Perfection of Wisdom.

Among phenomena free of conceptual thought, having thoroughly examined for the sake of sentient beings, and having committed oneself to non-conceptuality — all things are to be examined through examination.

Like the sound of an echo from a cliff, that becomes the words of the Dharma.
And from that, by the song of the true and expansive qualities of the Great Vehicle, the three commitments of the three times praise all the Tathāgatas.

Peerless, unmoving, possessed of the nature of reality that is the supreme without equal — whose very nature is compassion, dispelling the suffering of beings.
The bestower of limitless qualities and all attainments, stainless, unmoving, possessed of the supreme Dharma of the incomparable and holy.

Even with respect to the most subtle fraction of qualities, there is no measure nor can sky itself serve as an analogy to be compared.

Those limitless attainments, peerless and beyond example — bestow assuredly the supreme attainments upon the realm of sentient beings.

Always arising from the power of stainless compassion, possessed of the nature of reality in which fulfilled aspirations are unceasing — accomplishing the welfare of beings with utterly boundless endeavor, the great compassion itself, its very nature, ever appears in all its forms.

Immeasurable, and transcending measure — supremely and perfectly complete — even having attained the noble state of the Sugata (the Well-Gone One),

the supreme attainments are bestowed constantly upon all three realms.

The activity of compassion is immovable and will never cease.

How wondrous — endowed with the supreme nature of reality of the utterly good!

Having attained the highest rank among all those who bestow supreme gifts,

the supreme attainments are bestowed constantly upon all three realms.

The Protector who knows the three times without obscuration — grant to me the supreme and holy attainments of the three supreme commitments.

This is the vast and authentic quality of all buddhas.

By uttering it even once,

all buddhas will be accomplished.

By engaging with the identity of all buddhas,

through this very king of praises,

all the Victors of the three times will be accomplished through the three commitments.

The form (kāya) that the eyes can never tire of beholding — having revealed the identity of all things, saying "Excellent!" (sādhū), the supreme attainments,

all of them, are fully ripened.

The joy of accomplishing the identity of all things, and all aspirations are completely fulfilled.
All the supreme accomplishments of awakening, and true yoga as well, are bestowed.

Then, through that accomplishment, and the utterly stable attainments — whoever attains truly stable attainments in this very existence, it is said, should embrace all buddhas with the vajra-interlocking gesture (vajra-añjali).

Having placed the palms together well, clap the joined palms three times.
Whatever faculty becomes a path,
make that into that very identity.

Through utterly equalized meditative engagement, enter into union with all buddhas.
According to whatever inclination and attachment one has,
with the hexasyllable (ṣaḍakṣara) mantra and others —
so that there is absolutely no weariness at any point — always recite without measure.

Entirely, on all sides, all things — oneself always in every aspect,
accomplishing attainments through all buddhas, supremely beholding and achieving the highest — through this, all buddhas, likewise all the heroes (vīras),
and all the vajra-holders (vajradhāras):
in this very lifetime they will be accomplished.

Singing just once the king of praises — the vast eulogy extolling the qualities of all buddhas —
one attains the supreme and inexhaustible bliss-attainment, the permanent supreme yoga of universal pervasion.

By this king of praises,
the supreme sovereign of all, oneself, taming all through manifold means —

all Tathāgatas are accomplished.

Therefore, through the three pledges (samaya) and so forth, and through all supreme unconceptualized contemplations, the realm of sentient beings as vast as the boundless expanse of the sky is fully liberated.

This was breathed forth by the glorious Vairocana.

In the past, what arose long ago — the great self, the eternal — according to what arose before, in the manner of transmigrating beings, within the transmitted word of the Tathāgata:

at that time, all sentient beings
become exceedingly fierce and cruel.
Through being extremely cruel and fierce,
they will fall into shrieking and crying.

Then, having transmigrated, those sentient beings,
through the linking of habitual tendencies, become supremely and utterly ferocious.

The mind, blessed by māra, becomes epidemic, poison, weapon-poison and disease,
female demons (piśācīs), yakṣa-spirits, māra itself and the perverse misleading spirits —
all become supremely and utterly ferocious.

They terrify all three abodes and devour even accomplished practitioners.
They cause gods and others to transmigrate,
and they destroy the teachings as well.

Then the gods with Indra at their head draw near to Brahmā.

And Brahmā with the gods and Indra draw near to Viṣṇu (Indrajit) seeking refuge.

And Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and all the gods draw near to the Great God (Śiva).

Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and the great Indra seek refuge with Vajrapāṇi.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi,
through the engagement of the vajra-bodhisattva,
with the vajra-interlocking mudrā, summons all buddhas.

Through the engagement of the vajra-bodhisattva,
both shoulders are bound with vajra-bonds.
When the vajra-interlocking gesture is struck and all buddhas are summoned thereby — mere words of command send trembling through all the bound hosts and assemblies of cyclic existence.
If all buddhas are to depart —
what need is there even to speak of others?

Through the force of the vajra-interlocking gesture, throughout the entire world-realm without remainder, buddhas together with vajra-holders pervade everything like sesame seeds.

Toward those who are utterly fierce and ferocious, pacification is of no benefit.
Therefore all Tathāgatas take on wrathful form — the wrathful one, in the nature of wisdom and skillful means.

Even a single wrathful one of wrathful aspect can set the three worlds ablaze — so when all buddhas are wrathful, what need is there even to speak of the three realms entire?

Then, at the tip of the nose, hold the mind steadily and precisely.
From the long, warm exhalation of the breath through the nose, the Victor manifests the engagement of the mudrā.

That very Blessed One, the yogin, arising as the vajra-wrathful one, is the glorious great Vajra Heruka — blazing, utterly shattering to ash.

The bodhisattva blazing in blue, blazes in a maṇḍala of red light.
Fierce as the time of great destruction,

like the fire of the charnel ground.

Great blazing, sound of blazing, adorned with a crown of many skulls,
fierce as the time of great destruction,
utterly terrifying like the charnel ground.

Possessed of aspects including the wrathful,
the faces displaying many transformations, with brows furrowed in a wrathful scowl —
by dancing with a blazing gaze,

Śiva (the mighty lord of horses, Indra, and his retinue), the sun, the moon, Yama, and Brahmā — having set all three abodes ablaze, utterly shatter them to ash.

Vajra, vajra, khaṭvāṅga —

With the chilling sound of the bell, having struck all down, once again
even those reduced to ash are brought back to life.
From that blazing, a shadow born of the sun — unbearable, intolerable — is generated, and without exception is able to drink the blood of māras and all harmful beings.

That king sports together with all of these
in the charnel ground.

Through the blazing maṇḍala of the ḍākinīs, the union of all in vajra — the realm of sentient beings who are supremely malicious and fiercely wrathful is thoroughly purified,
and in the pure buddha-fields buddhas and bodhisattvas are arrayed in awakening.

Through all the supreme cognitions of Vajra Desire and the rest,
the realm of sentient beings extending to the boundless limits
of the expanse of space
is thoroughly purified.

This is the liberation breathed forth by glorious Heruka.

In a time gone by, long ago,
in the scriptural word of the Tathāgata who is the great eternal self,
there occurred the manner of beings' conduct in former times.

At that time all sentient beings
dwelt in wrong views.

Through those extremely corrupt views,
they fell into great weeping and wailing.

That very yogin, the Blessed One,
in order to purify the awakening mind,
through union with the lotus as the application, abides in the Dharma of the vajra.

Just as this red lotus
is unstained by the faults of pigment, so too the habitual tendencies of the three realms are thoroughly purified of their manifold faults.
By this all-seeing one,
one becomes the Victor, the sovereign lord.

Glorious Avalokiteśvara, the sovereign,
the Tathāgata Vajrasattva —
through the purification of all attachment, the Blessed One, the supreme bestower of the highest, delights in taming the many through manifold means of taming.

The sovereign Avalokiteśvara, lord of all, becomes the lord of the Lotus Dance.
The king of the lotus in union —
through that illusory dākinī of supreme bliss, through all the supreme cognitions of the Lord of the Lotus Dance and the rest,
the realm of sentient beings extending to the boundless limits
of the expanse of space
is thoroughly purified.

This is the liberation breathed forth by glorious Padmanartteśvara.

In a time gone by, long ago,
in the scriptural word of the Tathāgata who is the great eternal self,
there occurred the manner of beings' conduct in former times.
At that time all sentient beings

became supremely malicious and consumed by craving.
Through becoming utterly afflicted by this,
they fell among the hungry ghosts and into the hells.
Passing from there, once again
they were born in extreme poverty.
Through the faults of hunger and thirst,
they slew one another.

In order to purify extreme malice,
that very yogin, the Blessed One,
arose as the great jewel of the supreme meaning, the Vajra Sun.

By means of Ākāśagarbha (the essence of space), all directions and every hope of all are completely fulfilled.
The supreme jewel of women and all others —
all jewels rain down from the sky.

For those who are supremely malicious and wrathful,
the peaceful approach brings no benefit;
through the sun of wisdom and skillful means,
fully accomplishing the scorching of all,
and especially through enactment, reversal,
and seizure,
having conquered, the wealth of all three abodes is gathered in full.

Through all the supreme cognitions of the Conqueror of the Three Worlds and the rest,
the realm of sentient beings extending to the boundless limits
of the expanse of space
is thoroughly liberated.
This is the liberation breathed forth by glorious Vajrasūrya.

In a time gone by, long ago,
in the scriptural word of the Tathāgata who is the great eternal self,
there occurred the manner of beings' conduct in former times.
At that time all sentient beings
became extremely deficient in diligence.
Through such extreme lack of diligence,

they fell into the Avīci hell.

That very yogin, the Blessed One,
the Tathāgata Vajrasattva,
in the mode of the application of fierce activity, arises as the supreme glorious permanence.

Through devotion to the purity of all,
one comes forth with the power of sinlessness.
By the skill that overpowers the other shore,
the elemental constitutions of the many kinds of sentient beings who are exceedingly vicious, wrathful, and fierce thoroughly destroy every world.

The great thieving rat thoroughly purifies all.
By enchantment, illusion,
and likewise by the power of bringing forth with sinlessness, having crossed beyond by means of the five enemy-weapons,
one is then victorious over the three worlds.

All wandering beings who abide in their stations are entirely tamed, and accomplishment is achieved.
Through the various skillful means of taming,
the sovereign realm of one's own is forever guarded.

To the playful, one becomes playful.
To the wrathful, one becomes supreme wrath.
To the peaceful, one becomes supreme peace.
The fierce are overpowered through fierceness.
With the power of sinlessness, coming forth,
the supreme lord is utterly subdued,
the goddess Bhīmā is seized,
and thenceforth her wealth is enjoyed as one's own.
With the power of sinlessness, coming forth,
even the greatly powerful one is utterly subdued, Rudrāṇī too is seized,
and thenceforth her wealth is enjoyed as one's own.
With the power of sinlessness, coming forth,
the lord of all born beings is utterly subdued,
the goddess of supreme peace is seized,

and thenceforth her wealth is enjoyed as one's own.
With the power of sinlessness, coming forth,
the god of desire is utterly subdued,
the mistress of pleasure and pain among humans,
the sovereign lady, is seized, and thenceforth enjoyed near at hand.

And so on, boundlessly supreme —
equal and unequal with the dharmadhātu,
to the limitless expanse of the sphere of space —
the one who supremely vanquishes by vajra-activity.

In every moment of the sky, the glorious
Vajrasattva abides supremely.

Through accomplishment by skillful means and power,
when one practices by applying fierce activity,
the entire sovereign realm of the three realms, without remainder,
is obtained by that holder of the vajra,
and the supreme boundless bodhisattva achieves accomplishment through fierce application.

Through devotion to the purity of all,
with the power of sinlessness, coming forth,
by skill that overpowers the other shore,
one thoroughly unfolds the awakening of buddhas.
The hard-won divine accomplishment (siddhi)
and the great bliss of buddha-awakening, the eternal permanences of the supreme rank — having obtained these through one's own yoga, one seals, without remainder,
the many elemental realms of sentient beings completely, and bestows firmly upon all sentient beings
the difficult immortal awakening.

Through the supreme emanated horse, remaining in existence through all the aeons without remainder, with no remainder left, one also accomplishes the benefit of all sentient beings.

Thus through all the highest conceptions of glorious Ucchaiṣravas and the rest,

the elemental realms of sentient beings extending to the boundless limits of the expanse of space are thoroughly accomplished.
This is the liberation breathed forth by glorious Ucchaiṣravas.

And so on, boundlessly supreme,
equal and unequal with the dharmadhātu,
to the limitless expanse of the sphere of space —
the token of the discourse of the self-arisen ones.
In every moment of the sky, the glorious
Vajrasattva abides supremely.
Through the perfect accomplished lord of attainment,
all are caused to enter into the self.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

This is the fifth section, called "The Mudrā of Discourse," from the Union of All Buddhas, the Ḍākinī's Illusion, the Supreme Bliss.

Then, further, everywhere, arising supremely in various forms —
the Union of All Buddhas,
the supreme bliss of the Ḍākinī's illusion, is taught.

The glorious reality of all buddhas, Vajrasattva, the source of bliss —
in the delight of the supreme secret
the all-self ever dwells.

The glorious samaya of all buddhas, Vajrasattva, luminous and blissful — adorned with the supreme divine treasure of the Tathāgata, with precious ornaments and the like,
bearing the bell and the supreme victorious banner —

When the supreme and precious samaya is entered into, with vajra song, offerings, and all such things — varied songs and instruments magically displayed, the practice of flowers and incense, butter lamps, fragrance, and the like — one accomplishes the Union of All Buddhas, the supreme bliss of the Ḍākinī's illusion. Or one may accomplish this in one's own sacred place, or in a garden grove, and the like.

There, first, a seat is arranged: soft, pleasant to the touch, covered with variegated lotus cloth — this is the utterly pure seat of all. Through the manifold magical displays of the Lord of Union, the Union of All Buddhas, Vajrasattva, the glorious deity, performs magical emanations there. All such seats are to be set out in accordance with how they are arranged — a square form with four gates, made beautiful with four archways, adorned with vajras, jewels, lotuses, and the like, and provided with gatekeepers.

Women resembling one's own deity, well-accomplished, are to be distinguished by their auspicious emblems and mudrās, and the maṇḍala of the feast assembly is to be examined.

The vermillion accomplished from a human being is declared to be called "the Great Red." By the power of essential nature and by its arising from intrinsic nature, that is accomplished.

Accomplishing the Great Vermillion with vajra water and with the vajra: it is supremely accomplished by means of power, and is then placed within a vessel of lotus. The Blessed One of great passion, Vajrasattva the Tathāgata, the vajra-mind of all buddhas — this samaya is difficult to transgress.

The vermillion of that one, and the vital essence, and the accomplishing of the Great Vermillion: since they arise from great passion, they are declared to be called "the Great Red." The Great Red combined with camphor, mixed into red sandalwood, and placed in the center of the feast assembly — this arouses the rasāyana. One who has the union of one's own deity, when one tastes it gently as a peaceful drink, with the ring finger and the tip of the thumb, attains the eternal siddhi.

By this rasāyana of bliss — the essential nature of all buddhas — one accomplishes the life of Vajrasattva and other qualities: freedom from illness and the attainment of supreme bliss.

In the Union of All Buddhas, the supreme bliss of the ḍākinī's illusion: those who have entered into that assembly may go, come, and fly as they wish. From every direction and in all respects, one's very self, always and in every form — all of it, buddhas and all beings animate and inanimate — becomes the true nature of all.

By guarding this one becomes glorious, and comes to be like Vajrasattva. Through the supreme bliss of the yoga ḍākinī, one accomplishes the essential nature of all buddhas.

Then, having bathed and having a fragrant body, with whatever robes and ornaments are available, dressed in varied and excellent garments, adorned with a flower garland and sweet-smelling fragrance, by one auspicious and possessed of all these varied qualities, entreating gently and slowly, through the practice of covering with robes, one should arouse one's own element.

Seeing the fully awakened buddhas — the sun and moon — arising, one is freed from all misdeeds and all merit is accomplished.

Possessed of the certain path and fully endowed with all qualities, adorned with complete transcendence, firm and accomplished, arousing inspiration — the bliss of total arousal: by the power of the yoga of emptiness, supremely present and beyond existence and non-existence, the samaya dwells near as the very nature of space. I beseech the Sugata, the Well-Gone One, to arise. Vajrasattva, you who are auspicious and glorious — I and these:

When these very songs are taken up as verses, even one who has passed utterly into nirvāṇa, even one who has died, will be revived — what need is there to speak of rebirth?

Endowed with the four paths,
made beautiful by complete transcendence, supremely accomplished, drawing all varieties along,
supremely accomplishing the three worlds, worshipped by the three worlds, Teacher of the three worlds, granting joy to the three worlds —
the three worlds are accomplished in me.

Vajrasattva in glorious union, consorting with all the goddesses —
the good fortune of every variety:
through Arali, all is accomplished.

In the boundless expanse of space,
drunk with bliss in the company of all goddesses, Vajrasattva perfectly and completely — sun and moon shine forth with clarity.

Vajrasattva in perfect union:
from the illusory ḍākinī arises supreme bliss.

Even from a single moment of visualization,
all the spiritual accomplishments of bliss arise, rousing what is stable and what is to be achieved.
Drawing along every variety, in just that way, through the diverse songs of the gandharvas and the ṣaḍavas, all is accomplished through song.

Then, by that very sacred reality,
the glory of the identity of Vajrasattva, which deludes all liberation —
by this song one should rouse it.

The lotus of variegated joy, beloved and attached to — having worshipped and vividly honored it with pure offerings, accomplish bliss through the bliss of supremely constant yoga.

O wondrous! — the essential nature of the pledge of supreme bliss, supreme bliss, excellent in yoga, rejoicing in the best of good fortune — play and play within your own vow, immaculate and pure! Ho!

O wondrous! The sovereign of supreme secrecy: your own pledge is precisely why the goddesses are the most supremely secret ones.
Know clearly the skillful means of taming the various streams of beings throughout existence.

All pledges have become the essential nature of every thing, both stable and moving.

The identity of all the Victors — the yoga of bliss, the illusory ḍākinī! Ho!

O wondrous! The sacred one reveals the perfect accomplishment of the great permanent attainment.

Jaḥ Hūṃ Baṃ Hoḥ — E ma o! Lead into supreme bliss, into bliss.
Manifest in emanation — Hūṃ — make it luminous.
Alalā Ho!

All the Tathāgatas' illusory ḍākinīs of every kind —
I entreat you to lead the disciples within.

These, the sovereign songs, abide in the glory of Vajrasattva.

The supreme bliss of the illusion of all — without remainder, leaving nothing out, is accomplished.

When these songs are taken up,
in every variety of maṇḍala,
all the buddhas, manifesting in emanation, appear without remainder, leaving nothing out.

Skilled in taming, without remainder and without exception, all sentient beings through the stream of desire in its many forms — the supreme bliss of the illusion of all the Tathāgatas: emanate, fully emanate and manifest through illusion!

Tena Te Te Hūṃ.

Skilled in taming, without remainder and without exception, all sentient beings through the stream of great joy in its many forms — the supreme bliss of the illusion of all the Tathāgatas: fully emanate, play and emanate through illusion!

Hūṃ Hūṃ Hūṃ.

Skilled in taming, without remainder and without exception, all sentient beings through the stream of wrath in its many forms — the supreme bliss of the illusion of all the Tathāgatas: fully emanate and manifest through illusion!

Ru lu ru lu Hūṃ bhyo Hūṃ.

Skilled in taming, without remainder and without exception, all sentient beings through the stream of vitality in its many forms —
the supreme bliss of the illusion of all the Tathāgatas: fully emanate and manifest through illusion!

Hūṃ Śibhiṣ.

And so forth — the supreme that is without end,
the ocean of songs of the self-arisen ones
in the boundless expanse of space, where the dharmadhātu is equal and unequal alike —
the splendor of every space of sky abides in Vajrasattva.

Through the sovereign lord of accomplishment, the supremely accomplished, all become accomplished as one's own identity.

When these songs are taken up
and all the goddesses have given their urging,
through the illusory ḍākinī of supreme bliss,
the identity of all buddhas is accomplished.

The great cloud of offerings arising from all the senses, arranged and spread out in full — through all the infinite assembled hosts, worship of the identity of all is performed.

In union with all buddhas,
through the illusory dākinī of supreme bliss,
the body that is the identity of all things is accomplished without remainder, leaving nothing out.

By the descent of the Teacher's mudrā —

The women too, having been accomplished, take on the vajra-bearing signs and marks,
and become supreme yoginīs.
They, blessed and accomplished in likeness to their own deities, shall be perfected through the unprecedented music of the dance with its melodious instruments, arising through magical emanation.

Intoxicated with bliss through the divine form, sound, fragrance, taste, and touch,
one sees one's own identity as one's own deity and performs acts of worship.

The worship of the gods performed in union —
by one of supreme good fortune who holds desire — in every respect accomplishes, by the bliss of auspiciousness, the perfectly authentic bliss.

Blessed by the illusory emanation of the buddhas, through the union with Vajrasattva, the blisses of all accomplishments are experienced in the maṇḍala that is difficult to behold.

By the very power of Vajrasattva's union, in all respects and throughout,
the auspiciousness of all variety is accomplished through one's own bliss.

Through the great form, melody, fragrance, taste, and bliss
of all buddhas,

one with clear vision in the identity of Vajrasattva performs worship.

All worship performed in union,
by one of supreme good fortune who holds desire,
accomplishes without remainder, leaving nothing out,
all the accomplishments of the identity of all buddhas.

Through the illusory ḍākinī of supreme bliss
in the union of all buddhas, the dance of the identity of all buddhas appears in its supreme manifestation.

Then, through true and utterly secret means,
with the four women
and through the mudrā of the dance as offering,
all offerings are presented.

Homage to the god of supreme joy!
May the noble Tathāgata's accomplishment be perfected.
Om Hūṃ. May the perfection of the supreme samaya vow be granted.
Om Hūṃ. May all the great offerings be purified.
Om Hūṃ. May all the great offerings be accomplished.

This glorious mudrā of song
abides in Vajrasattva
and may be applied as well to the infinite activities of all offerings, without remainder and without omission.

For those who have not yet accomplished and whose offerings are insufficient, if worship is performed with this mudrā,
all offerings will swiftly be accomplished.

With these preparations for worship and through the four goddesses, making offerings of flowers and so forth,
all disciples are to be gathered.

By one who desires accomplishment, wishing whatever they wish,
one stirs all with the dance of cupped hands, then covers their beautiful faces with a cloth and takes hold of them.

To attain accomplishment according to one's desire,
the disciple is caused to scatter flowers.

Whichever goddess the flower falls upon,
that deity's accomplishment shall be attained.

Then the covering of the face is removed and the supreme gift is received.

Through the precious empowerment of the buddhas, empowerment is conferred accordingly.

Vermillion mixed with camphor and red sandalwood combined — these are set in the midst of the assembly.

Taking hold of the vajra with the signs in the left hand, endowed with the yoga of one's own deity, if one tastes gently, in the manner of a peaceful drink,
with the ring finger and the thumb,
the permanent accomplishment will be attained.

Even by the host of illusory ḍākinīs
of the union of all buddhas,
one will not be corrupted, will not be bewildered,
and will not be harmed.

Then, having proclaimed the oath,
and in accord with all the buddhas, what is proclaimed as supremely and permanently valid —
the samaya vow — is to be conferred.

You who violate the vow
of the union of all buddhas —
however many buddhas, bodhisattvas, and Vajradhāras there are,
gods and humans alike,
and likewise accomplished yogins —
from their very hearts, as though drinking the great blood from the heart, for the sake of benefiting without remainder all classes of sentient beings, in order thoroughly to purify existence, through the union with the nature of reality that cannot be blocked,

this is to be accomplished as the everlasting itself.

Completely relinquishing the notion of a self,

do not torment yourself with austerities.

Dwell in ease, just as is comfortable.

This is the future buddha.

In all the enjoyments of yoga, take delight without fear of anything.

Because there is no wrongdoing, you need not be afraid.

The samaya vow is difficult to transgress.

The accomplished one practices alone with the single one;
concurrent practice and subsequent practice are excellent.

The buddhas and the unsurpassable awakening — always rely upon these truly, in very reality.

Vajrasattva is the Tathāgata.

In this way declared the Glorious One, and the perfectly complete buddhas and the Vajra-holder proclaimed it.

Having sealed the wisdom of one's self with yoga and with secrecy,

by dancing in whatever fitting and proper manner,

one confers bliss upon the disciples.

Thereafter, the excellent disciple, having received the seal of mudrā wisdom, accomplishes the nature of self through all the buddhas, supreme like Vairocana.

Then offering up food, drink, and lodging, songs and music and the like — present these to the protectors.

To the great vajra guru

and to oneself and others, worship with all desired things.

The abundant fruit of desired aims is thereby accomplished.

Then, having thoroughly accomplished the nature of self, firmly established as the teacher of all,

by entering in whatever fitting and proper manner,

one shall proclaim the Dharma of truth.

The glorious nature of Vajrasattva, thoroughly perfecting all conceptualities and supremely engaging with them all — by reason of that essential nature, the great supreme — through the diverse karmic practices of engagement and by the diverse natures of discipline, in order to tame sentient beings one teaches in forms different from that.

That very yogin, the Blessed One,
Vajrasattva the Tathāgata,
in order thoroughly to purify all liberation, will arise as the ḍākinī of beings.

Through resemblance to one's own deity
and in order to accomplish the seal of one's own blessing, by the mudrā practice befitting a mirror's image,
one shall perform the dance that accomplishes the buddha emanation.

Furthermore, the yogin Blessed One,
in order thoroughly to purify aversion to the samaya vow —
the supreme sovereign of all yoga — will arise as the vajra ḍākinī.

Furthermore, the very great yogin,
in order thoroughly to purify the entire lotus family,
the immutable, supremely fortunate one,
will arise as the illusory lotus.

Furthermore, the yogin Blessed One,
in order thoroughly to purify through the supreme jewel,
the great lord of all space,
the glorious Vajra Sun will arise.

That very yogin, the Blessed One,
in order to purify the engagement of wrathful force, Hayagrīva, supreme subduer of the other side,
will arise as the supreme horse.

Through resemblance to one's own deity,
and in order to accomplish the seal of one's own blessing, by the mudrā practice that engages with the mirror's own form, one shall perform the dance.

When one thus conducts oneself through the many aspects of the samaya vow,
the illusory dākinī of the union of all buddhas —
the supreme bliss — is accomplished.

Everywhere, through everything, through all the magical displays of the buddhas, the self, always and in every aspect — all the buddhas and so forth, whether still or moving — all things become that.

Everywhere, through all the buddhas, through all the magical emanations of the buddhas,
the self displays varied magical forms.
Gathered together with all the goddesses,
one accomplishes the buddha emanation in every single buddha field.
Through the illusory buddha emanation one performs the deeds of the buddhas.

By the dancing of the illusory dākinī in the union of all the buddhas,
all three realms without exception become in their entirety that.

The illusory lotus, manifesting in varied forms, through its successive transformations into buddhas, Vajradhāras, and so forth, brings joy to all beings.

The great sovereignty of the three realms — battles are won through their resolution — through the illusory emanations of royal sovereignty one displays every kind of activity.

The great sovereignty of the three realms:
by pressing down with one's own bold courage, one utterly subdues all beings and displays this through the dance of the horse.

And so on, boundlessly supreme —
equal to and yet not equal to the dharmadhātu,
boundless as the expanse of space,
the supreme bliss of all that is varied is the glory present in every moment of space.
Vajrasattva the Tathāgata,
the glorious sport of delight, emanating in myriad varied forms, plays forth.

With varied aspects and auspicious fortune, with varied aspects of supreme bliss,
through varied aspects of discipline,
one accomplishes the entire realm of sentient beings.
And so on, boundlessly supreme —
equal to and yet not equal to the dharmadhātu,
boundless as the expanse of space,
the supreme source from which all buddhas arise:
the glory present in every moment of space
abides in Vajrasattva.

Through the full accomplishment of the sovereignty of the siddhas, one brings everything to accomplishment in one's own nature.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

This is the sixth chapter, the tantra section on the maṇḍala of the illusory ḍākinī who is the union of all buddhas, from the supreme bliss of the illusory ḍākinī who is the union of all buddhas.

Then furthermore there is what is to be explained.

Vajrasattva, glorious deity,
the supreme of all varied aspects,
is the emanation of every cakra.
In the delight of the supreme secret,
accomplish everything in one's own nature.
In places of solitude
or in one's own pleasure grove and such,
with altogether varied auspicious fortune,
with altogether varied supreme bliss,
all the varied necessary things are to be accomplished as desired.

At supports, hermitages, and temples,
and on all mountain peaks,
through many and varied aspects
one accomplishes the purposes of the buddhas.

At charnel grounds, at divine shrines, and when dwelling at the abodes of the mātṛ goddesses and such,
the purposes of the Vajradhāra will be accomplished in many forms.

In the joyful lotus pleasure grove and at the confluences of rivers, the purposes of the Padmadhāra will be perfectly accomplished.

In the joyful palaces of kings and in the royal pleasure groves,
through many and varied aspects
one accomplishes the purposes of kings.

In castles of many and varied forms, likewise on the banks of rivers,
or wherever it is accomplished in other kingdoms,
one accomplishes the vajra horse.

Through various modes of conduct and through various modes of accomplishment, for the purposes of Vajrasattva one accomplishes in full the maṇḍala and all the rest.

The red lotus of the buddhas,
the varied Vajrapāṇi,
the white color of the lord of the world, the gold of glorious Vajrasūrya — all colors and whatever is available:
the parasol, the victory banner, the ornaments —
all these accomplish the glory of the supreme horse endowed with the vajra.

Whatever the place and retinue are like,
whatever the arrangement and the beings present are like, whatever the arrangement of the retinue is like —

with a cakra supreme in just that fashion one acts.

From the direct vision of the cakras of the deities of Vajrasattva, whatever the examination of merit is like — what is written later is likewise so.

One who is wise draws the maṇḍala with cords, accomplishes the equality of all directions, and by drawing four cords in the eastern, western, and northern directions, one has eight maṇḍalas.

Who can ever perfectly fix precisely what a correct maṇḍala is?
Through the intrinsic nature of the deity by oneself,
the examination of the maṇḍala will be accomplished.

By joining oneself to the deity in one's own nature,
one accomplishes all siddhis.

Even if the rite is excessive or incomplete,
there is no fault — it will be accomplished.

Everywhere varied — the excellent fortune.
Everywhere varied — the one possessing the wheel.
Everywhere varied — for the sake of accomplishment.
The maṇḍala is everywhere varied.

The round maṇḍala of the buddha, like the crescent of the vajra-bearing one,
the lotus form, by the lordship of the lotus,
the jewel form, by the supremacy of the jewel.

However one wishes, whatever is available, whatever the occasion, whatever is comfortable —
the maṇḍala dwells glorious in all forms.
It is that of the supreme horse, the mudrā, the vajra.

One who has not entered the maṇḍala, who has abandoned the sacred pledges (samaya),
and who does not truly know the secret —
even if one strives, nothing will be accomplished.

Do not kill living beings.

Do not abandon the Three Jewels.

Do not give up the awakening mind (bodhicitta).
Do not abandon the auspicious guru.

By accomplishing through oneself with all-various good fortune, one's fortune is excellent.

Possessing the selfless nature of reality —
one who is hostile to the sacred pledges has ill fortune.

Through having thoroughly accomplished existence, the excellently fortunate one becomes a Blessed One (Bhagavān), a buddha.
The ill-fortuned one becomes a hearer (śrāvaka) in this world, passing completely into nirvāṇa.

For the sake of accomplishing all conceptions,
the glorious Vajrapāṇi is of excellent fortune.
Through ardent application to emptiness,
the pratyekabuddhas are of ill fortune.

Through the complete purification of all attachment,
the lord Avalokiteśvara is of excellent fortune.
Through holding wrong views,
non-Buddhists (tīrthikas) in the world are of ill fortune.

For the sake of gathering the supreme holy riches,
the glorious Vajrasūrya is of excellent fortune.
Through not being attached even to one's own child,
all those who practice austerities are of ill fortune.

Through gathering all supreme sovereign dominion,
the glorious supreme horse is of excellent fortune.
Through clinging to what has no self and yet holding onto it, all the sages (munis) are of ill fortune.

For the sake of accomplishing all happiness for oneself, the guru of all is of excellent fortune.
All disciples who hold wrong views and are hostile to the sacred pledges are of ill fortune.

By one who knows clearly
the true meaning of the secret,
in accordance with the word of all buddhas,
one accomplishes buddhahood completely.

When, abiding in the guru of all,
one proceeds to enter the wheel,
to the disciple who desires the maṇḍala —
the supreme infinite true secret:

At the very outset one speaks the secret, asking: "You there — what do you delight in?"
"I delight in excellent fortune," the one entering should also declare.

If one knows this limb of the secret,
one should be introduced according to one's wish.
If one does not truly know the secret,
one should be introduced by the right hand.

Having thus entered the maṇḍala,
one then offers gifts most generously.
By knowing the rite of the secret itself,
the supreme immutable accomplishment is achieved.

To the all-various guru,
one must certainly offer the supreme gifts.
Whatever is most difficult to give away —
that, it is said, is the highest offering.

Whatever is one's most beloved and precious, or whatever is exceptionally distinguished — that very thing, to the guru, one offers with inexhaustible desire.

Or if it is something one desires and may lose, or if it is something the mind truly needs — give that, or render the needed service.
Even if small, that is supreme.

If, however, one possesses excellent things and offers a paltry gift,
one despises the guru of all,
and will always obtain suffering.

A richly adorned young woman, or likewise a beloved wife — offering her and redeeming her with a price is the supreme offering for buddhahood and awakening.

Great mothers, offered and then redeemed again with a price — this is the supreme offering for the union that is the glorious Vajradhara.

Fine pearls, jewels,
a pair of very white cloth,
and likewise white horses —
these are the supreme offerings for the lotus-bearing one.

Royal dominion, wealth, and treasures, assemblies of garments and ornaments, and likewise all manner of worship —
these are the offerings for Vajrasūrya.

Supremely adorned horses,
and supremely adorned elephants, and chariots filled with precious things —
these are the offerings for the king of horses.

All the intrinsic natures of the elements,
and likewise those of the vital force and the root —
the precious empowerment of buddha:
the wise one examines it in all its various aspects.

On the crown of the head, the forehead, the two cheeks, and the back of the neck —
of all the precious buddhas, this is the supreme immutable crown ornament.

All the intrinsic natures of the elements,
and likewise those of the vital force and the root — whether a precious skull crown ornament or the wish-fulfilling gems at the crest of buddhas:
in every case, variously and supremely,
it is to be applied to all teachers and masters.

All realms of sovereignty, utterly pure,
are accomplished without remainder, without exception.
Made from a single wondrous jewel and adorned with varied ornaments in the same way, by the empowerment of the lotus-buddha,

all disciples receive empowerment.

The precious buddha acts as vajra,
and is the vajra for the vajra family.
The body of the buddha of Avalokiteśvara is the jewel of the jewel-holder.
The precious lotus-buddha of the buddhas, and the vajra-jewel likewise —
for the supreme horse (Hayagrīva), all supreme things are gathered into his own empowerment.

Whether cast, crafted, beaten, or painted —
the symbolic mudrās of the various excellent marks are to be examined carefully.

In every case, the various ones of auspicious fortune — the symbolic seal of the self-arisen — the goddesses of the limitless expanse of space,
the supreme bliss:

bow and arrow likewise,
the auspicious fortune of the fortunate one in the same way,
skull-cup and khaṭvāṅga, and the vajra sword likewise.

The lotus sword of Amitāyus, accomplishing the life of all buddhas —
the assembly of all gatherings of goddesses accomplishing assemblies of symbolic mudrās:

arrow, and likewise the head of Brahmā, and likewise the mudrā of the wheel,
the supreme mudrā of the vajra-trident,
the wish-fulfilling tree and the staff,
the lotus, Hayagrīva of great stature,
and the green Hayagrīva likewise,
the accomplished boar's tusk,
the moon and sun likewise —

in a great vessel of various precious things, the mercury of the buddha's form:
all are experienced in oneself, auspicious,
in accordance with the assembly of symbolic mudrās.

Flute and all manner of vīṇā, kumuṇḍa and murajadrum,
flowers, incense, lamps,
and the various fragrances likewise —

these and such boundless supreme things, equal and unequal with the dharmadhātu (basic space of phenomena), the assembly of sacred symbolic mudrās
of the limitless expanse of space:

throughout the expanse of all space, in glory, dwelling in vajrasattva itself —
by the lord of accomplishment, supremely accomplished, all become accomplished in themselves.

Dharma robes and the alms bowl,
and likewise the ringing staff, and books of sacred Dharma —
these are another assembly of symbolic mudrās.

Likewise the mudrā of the pinnacle, cymbals and drums,
the vajra and the precious vessel —
these are another assembly of symbolic mudrās.

Likewise images of buddhas, mirrors and fans,
vajra hail together with clouds,
and likewise the mudrā of the eye,
the blazing vajra and khaṭvāṅga,
the skull-cup bowl likewise, great crimson and compassion,

and great flesh likewise, sharp arrows and likewise hooks,
beer and water likewise,
a staff moved by wind,

cloth and likewise fire,
the glory of the wrathful vajra-king, the devourer of all that is harmful —
the assembly of accomplished symbolic mudrās supremely accomplishing the yogic attainments (siddhis).

Various lotuses: red,
green, likewise white,
blue, golden, and the old stalk —
the seven aspects of the supreme lotus mark, the lotus stalk, the seal of women, and likewise the wheel of Dharma — radiant and glory-bestowing, the vajra and the further assembly of lotus marks — these are gathered together now.

The bow, the arrow, and the sword,
and likewise blazing fire, empowerment treasure and victory banners —
these are the gathered marks of offering.

Likewise the various lotuses and the vajra cross in the same way:
through the accomplished mudrās of the marks,
all dominions are overcome.
All the buddhas and so forth, all things moving and unmoving without remainder — the seal of the marks of all self-arising beings extends to the boundless reaches of the expanse of space.

Thus did the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, Glorious Vajrasattva declare.

This is the seventh contemplation: the mudrā of all maṇḍalas from the union of all buddhas — the Supreme Bliss of the Illusory Ḍākinī.

Now the exposition of further matters:

The glorious deity Vajrasattva, supreme in all his varied forms,
is the emanation of all offerings.

With both right and left hands, turn the index fingers and little fingers into a beautiful gesture.
The glorious left hand uses the swaying method;
the right is made into a triple banner.

On the supreme seat adorned with fringe, oneself as glorious Vajrasattva gazes with smiling eyes — this is the mudrā that stirs the mind.

The buddha-vajra holds the lotus.
If the vajra sun of the three realms (tridhātu) makes even a single gesture of homage, how much more need be said of those who are already full of it.

The wrathful one, the lord, together with the proximate lords, the sun, the moon, Yama (the Lord of Death), and Brahmā — bowing, they pay supreme reverence and will perform all actions.

When homage is paid with the glorious vajra's palms joined,
with a mind that is stirred,
and the offering to the buddhas is well made,
all without remainder will be accomplished without remainder.

By lifting the left eyebrow and filling it with the sound "ru lu ru lu," Brahmā, the proximate lords, and the wrathful ones of the three realms will come to pay homage.

With the palms joined like a lotus in bud, bound at one's own heart with the seal of union,
the thumbs and little fingers spread like petals —
one also makes the prostration of full unfolding.

All the limbs of the body are laid upon the ground in prostration;
at the heart, the mouth, and the crown of the head one joins the palms in homage.

When homage is performed with the glorious vajra swaying method and with smiling eyes,
even the three realms will pay homage —

what need then to speak of those of lesser power?

This is known as the mudrā of prostration.

All the streams of dance, however many,
and every manner of performing actions —
these are the seals of Vajrasattva that accomplish one's own purposes.

Having performed the swaying method,
one dances in whatever style befits,
and with the various circling dances
all offerings are to be presented.

With both the right and left hands,
the index fingers and little fingers are turned into a beautiful gesture;
the left index finger is clenched into a fist,
and the right is formed into a triple banner.

When this mudrā is sealed,
one comes to abide with all the buddhas, and the supreme great sovereign mastery of all the great siddhis is achieved.

This is the mudrā called "Auspicious Companionship with All Buddhas."

Placed with great pride,
one lifts that very identity through the union,
turns it fully toward the direction of the side,
and places it at the crown of the head.

Performing the dance of causing all to descend, having danced and then brought it down,
the body called "Auspicious HŪṂ" is made to present all offerings.

This is the mudrā called "Union with All Buddhas — Auspicious Great Bliss."

With both the right and left hands,
the index fingers and little fingers are turned into a beautiful gesture,
the vajra palms are joined together, and in the same way it is turned to the left.

Through the union, that is lifted and placed at the crown of the head.

With the song called "Auspicious,"
all offerings are to be presented.

This is the Auspicious Vajra Joined Palms — the offering to the buddhas.

With both the right and left hands,
the index fingers and little fingers are turned into a beautiful gesture,
and the vajra palms are released upward.

This is the manner of the offering tormas for all.

Performing the dance in charnel-ground attire,
one dances with this mudrā, and Auspicious Vajra is set forth in fierce array —
all offerings are to be presented.

This is the Skull-Cup Joined Palms of Glorious Vajra Heruka — the rite of all offering tormas.

With both the right and left hands,
the index fingers and little fingers are turned into a beautiful gesture,
and the right and left palms are clapped together —
all offerings are to be presented.

This is the Joined Palms of Glorious Padma, Lord of Dance.

With both the right and left hands,
the index fingers and little fingers are turned into a beautiful gesture,
and the vajra and jewel palms are joined together —
all offerings are to be presented.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra Jewel" — the fulfiller of all wishes.

Scattering upward and bringing down, circling and in the same way laying flat, flowers, incense, supreme lamps,
and the offering of fragrance arise.

Whether full or empty,
or with whatever is at hand,
by accomplishing the samaya in an even, balanced way,
all offerings will be accomplished.

By binding these mudrās,
all buddhas will be offered to.
Even the lord endowed with siddhis,
the very self of all, will be offered to.

Of all the offerings of the self-arisen ones
in the space of the dharmadhātu — equal and unequal, boundless as the expanse of the sky —
there is no supremely noble great wave that has not been made by this and has not been caused to multiply.

There is nothing whatsoever that is not accomplished by the union of all buddhas, by the lord of union with supreme great bliss,
by siddhis, actions, and bliss.

The limitless accomplished offerings, without remainder, without exception, are all accomplished.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva.

This is the eighth chapter of "Glorious Auspicious Samaya Ritual: Union with All Offerings" — drawn from the supreme illusory-bliss ḍākinī chapter of Union with All Buddhas.

Then, moreover, it is further explained:

All the supreme, manifold, and universal mudrās of the glorious deity Vajrasattva are emanations.

The bodhisattva, the very essence of all buddhas, Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss —
in the delight of the highest secret, the self of all ever abides.

In order to be attached to all bliss and to purify all siddhis, Vajrasattva, supreme in bliss,
has a body red like a fish in moonlight.

Because he is attached to all attachment, the Blessed One of great passion —

this mudrā of Vajrasattva blazes with red and manifold light.

In the three realms there is no other jewel, nothing like the buddha-jewel.
The great jewel of all buddhas, crowned with a diadem, is supreme in bliss.
It is not another's wealth, and this cannot be stolen.
It is purified by this divine water,
and by power, essential nature,
and inherent character, that is accomplished.

With a crown adorned with a garland of skulls, bearing the wish-fulfilling gem at the crown,
the lord of a world entirely afflicted —
Abhirati and so forth — is accomplished thereby.

Glorious Vajrasattva in union,
gathered together with all the goddesses,
with all the manifold and auspicious —
all dākinīs are accomplished.

The buddha Vajra-Lotus Bearer, Vajra Sun of the three realms, aroused by the seal of bewilderment,
is engaged in all activities.

Sealed with this mudrā,
one goes, comes, and soars as desired.
All the supreme glorious goddesses —
Vajrasattva is supremely accomplished.

This is called the supreme mudrā "Glorious Vajrasattva, the Supreme Play of Bliss in Auspicious Fortune, Fully Engaged in Supreme Joy."

With the union of right and left, dancing in the manner of bliss,
seated in the bodhisattva's cross-legged posture,
one utterly vanquishes all armies.

This is the cross-legged posture of glorious Vajrasattva.

A face smiling like the color of the moon, purifying all accomplishments, and purifying the desire of the lotus — between the thighs, red and white, the supreme hand like a blue leaf.

Likewise, with the lord of bliss and the lord who touches bliss, bearing thighs white and golden,
with divine substances of variegated supreme colors,
with radiance of many kinds gathered in brilliance, abiding upon manifold lotuses,
all abide in perfect purity.

Supreme among buddhas such as Padma (Amitābha) and the rest, adorned with jewels of many kinds, clothed in robes —
it is the gathering of all buddhas, adorned as with Abhirati and the rest.

Activities, reversals,
and seizures — perform these supremely.
With the embrace-mudrā,
the seizure of all limbs is accomplished.

Sealed with this mudrā,
one goes, comes, and soars as desired.
Glorious sovereign over all desires —
Vajrasattva is supremely accomplished.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra-Arrow, the Supreme Play of Bliss in Auspicious Fortune, Fully Engaged in Supreme Joy."

With attachments of manifold samaya, dancing in the manner that brings down bliss,
the supreme embrace-mudrā of the great supreme deity of the center —
with this mudrā, the yogin
goes, comes, and soars as desired.
Glorious, endowed with the sovereignty of great bliss —
Vajrasattva is supremely accomplished.

This is the mudrā called "The Samaya of Glorious Vajrasattva, the Supreme Play of Bliss in Auspicious Fortune, Fully Engaged in Supreme Joy."

In the manner of displaying the fangs, grasping the vajra-khaṭvāṅga, the mudrā of embrace —
the supreme vajra-cross together with the lotus.

Sealed with this mudrā,
one goes, comes, and soars as desired.
Sovereign and victorious over all yogins —
Vajrasattva is supremely accomplished.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra-Yoga, the Supreme Play of Bliss in Auspicious Fortune, Fully Engaged in Supreme Joy."

Accomplishing the skull-cup of the fully awakened buddha,
with the embrace-mudrā,
glorious Vajrasattva in union —
the great supreme deity of the center.

With this mudrā, the yogin
goes, comes, and soars as desired.
The glorious accomplishment of life and youth —
Vajrasattva is supremely accomplished.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra-Life, the Supreme Play of Bliss in Auspicious Fortune, Fully Engaged in Supreme Joy."

And so on, supreme and boundless —
the dharmadhātu, equal and unequal,
the self-arisen manifold mudrās
of the limitless expanse of space:
in every expanse of sky, gloriously
they abide in Vajrasattva,
and through the supreme accomplishment of the lord of attainments, all descend, are accomplished, and are fulfilled in one's own being.

This is the assembly of root mudrās of the illusory supreme bliss of the ḍākinīs, united with all buddhas.

With the great dances of glorious completion, befitting every tradition of sacred learning,
when the four arrows are fully released,

one becomes victorious over the four māras.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra-Arrow, the Crown of Great Brahmā."

With the manner of lifting and lowering the feet, and the steps of sliding and leaping, praised with the mudrā of the wheel,
one leaps beyond the three realms.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra of Great Power."

Activities, reversals,
and seizures — in their distinctive particulars —
dancing with manifold mudrās, one gathers in the three realms.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra, Lord of the Dance."

Taking hold of any consort whatsoever with the mudrā of embracing her to oneself, and sporting with all women —
this accomplishes everything always, like the wish-fulfilling tree.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra Goddess of Desire."

Acting in the manner of tasting and drinking, one dries up the three worlds together with the fierce ones, the lords, the attendant lords,
the sun and moon, Yama (the lord of death), and Brahmā.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra Horse-Face."

Through the inhalation of the fragrance breathed in by the nose,
together with the fierce ones, the lords, the attendant lords,
the sun and moon, Yama, and Brahmā —
one gathers in the three realms as well.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra Sow."

Through gazing with fixed and longing eyes,
together with the fierce ones, the lords, the attendant lords,
the sun and moon, Yama, and Brahmā —
one devours the three worlds as well.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra, Sun-and-Moon Eyes."

Through tasting all of it oneself,
together with the fierce ones, the lords, the attendant lords,
the sun and moon, Yama, and Brahmā —
even those reduced to ashes are restored to life.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra, Essence of All, Reviving the Three Realms."

The yogin who displays the manner of playing the flute and dances however it arises —
together with Brahmā, Indra (Śakra), and the fierce ones — brings the three destinies under his power.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra Flute, the Wielder of Power."

The yogin who displays the manner of playing the lute
and dances however it arises —
all activities are perfectly accomplished throughout boundless space, and every siddhi is swiftly attained.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra Lute, Bewilderer with Bliss."

The yogin who displays the manner of the small cymbals
and dances however it arises —
all suffering arising from epidemics, demons, and poisonous attachment is swiftly cleared away.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra Small Cymbals, Clearing Away All Suffering."

The yogin who displays the manner of the clay drum
and dances however it arises —
all three dwelling-places without exception are brought down in a single instant.

This is the mudrā called "Glorious Vajra Clay Drum, the Intoxicator."

When all offerings are made through the offerings of mudrā-dance, all the offerings of self-arisen dance are accomplished entirely, without remainder.

Epidemics, poisons, weapon-poisons, magical operations, and the harms of subtle demonic forces —
through the manifold encircling dances,

all become pacified in a single instant.

The fierce ones, the lords, the attendant lords,
the sun and moon, Yama, and Brahmā —
those who have been sealed, stupefied, and consumed are restored to life in a single instant.

And further, these most excellent ones, boundless and beyond limit —
the self-arisen goddess-mudrās of the expanse of space,
equal and unequal with the dharmadhātu,
boundless as the reaches of the expanse of sky —
in every opening of the sky, in all their splendor,
they abide in Vajrasattva.

Through the sovereign perfection of siddhi,
they all descend as one's own nature.

Through the songs of perfect attainment
of the union of all buddhas,
of the illusory ḍākinīs, the supreme bliss —
the unsurpassed siddhi is obtained.

And then this mudrā-wisdom,
the song of the glorious supreme vajra, accomplishes all activities completely and perfects existence to the utmost.

O Vajrasattva, glorious one of great bliss and good fortune —
I beseech you: accomplish and grant realization of this to me!

O you who are the nature of all tathāgatas, the bliss, the supreme bliss of the manifold illusory ḍākinīs — you who are supremely skilled in taming the streams of beings in manifold ways —

I beseech you: grant me accomplishment of this!

A la la ho! Pray show the various dances, the manifold unions of the tathāgatas!

Jaḥ Hūṃ Baṃ Hoḥ!

O you who are embraced by supreme bliss — emanate and transform!
Hūṃ — pray cause the illumination!

A la la ho!

O manifold ḍākinīs of all the tathāgatas, illusory ones — I beseech you: hold and embrace the disciple!

The union of all buddhas,
the supreme bliss of the illusory ḍākinīs —
by this very thing, completely and in every way, may swift accomplishment be attained.

This is called the mudrā of the maṇḍala of the yoga of the ḍākinīs, the union with all buddhas.

That very yoga is the Blessed One,
Vajrasattva, the Tathāgata.
For the complete purification of all liberation, it abides as the glory of the seal of the buddhas.

For the sake of desire or utter purity, like the color of refined gold — for the sake of great passion after non-passion and all the rest — a luster that is white and manifold and clear.

Having fully accomplished the sovereign realm of Dharma, there is nothing superior to the precious Dharma.
Therefore the mind of Great Vehicle awakening, the Victor's vajra and precious jewels —

the touching of all fingers with the right thumb and ring finger, and the left hand formed into a fist:
this is renowned as the root mudrā.

This is the illumination of the Perfection of Wisdom of all buddhas.
It is the arising of the great awakening mind
and the turning of the wheel of Dharma.
When this mudrā is formed,
the manner of the Perfection of Wisdom will be proclaimed throughout the boundless expanse of space.

The arising of the great awakening mind
and the turning of the wheel of Dharma — know this to be buddhahood itself, the supremely and permanently abiding buddha.

Whoever sees this, being endowed with it, and makes offering in every way — they will see the supreme and permanent buddha, seeing and making offering.

The very moment the mind is aroused,
the wheel of Dharma is beautifully turned.

This is the mudrā called Glorious Samaya.

By pressing with the right limb and conquering all with the left limb, sitting in the heroic posture,
all māras are completely subdued.

This is the glorious heroic posture of Vajrasattva.

Holding the vajra fist
and covering it with the left hand — all the mind-accomplishments of all buddhas will be accomplished without exception, leaving nothing out.

Likewise, covering the great vajra fist of the glorious Heruka — all the desirable accomplishments of the hero
will be accomplished without exception, leaving nothing out.

Likewise, when the lotus woman's fist is covered by the left hand —
all the supreme bodhisattva deeds
will be accomplished without exception, leaving nothing out.

When the fist of the holder of the precious jewel
all the accomplishments of the wealth of the buddhas will be accomplished without exception, leaving nothing out.

When the buddha fist is formed and covered by the left hand —
the lifespan of all buddhas will be accomplished, without exception, leaving nothing out.

When the female consort mudrā is bound
all accomplishments will be swiftly achieved,

without exception, leaving nothing out.

When the glorious horse-face fist
all acts of magnetizing will be supremely accomplished,
without exception, leaving nothing out.

When the fist of glorious Siddhi-Eye
all appearances will be supremely accomplished,
without exception, leaving nothing out.

The first is the vessel of all buddhas.
The second is likewise the hero.
The third belongs to Samantabhadra.
The fourth is the inexhaustible vessel.

The fifth is the glory of the buddha endowed with all limbs.
The sixth is likewise the beautiful-faced dhāraṇī goddess.
The seventh is the great cloud.
The eighth is the Eye of Space.

This is the mudrā of all dhāraṇī goddesses.

For those who know these mudrās, the supreme song of the buddha's emanation —
the highest that brings accomplishment, the accomplisher of all activities,
the evoker that firmly establishes accomplishment —
and likewise the various and expansive ones:

Having taken up the song of the sixth melody,
one takes up the song of Devata.

Radiating out to fill world-realms as numerous as the atoms of countless worlds,
the aims of the Victors, as many as the atoms of the most subtle dust, the emanation bodies, as many as those finest atoms of dust — in the bliss-great existence, all Tathāgatas, through their manifold transformations,
let emanations of Tathāgatas as numerous as those atoms come forth — ho!

The union of Vairocana — a la la ho — may accomplishment be achieved this very day!

By taking up these songs,
the union equal to all of space,
the ḍākinī's supreme illusory bliss — accomplishment will undoubtedly be achieved.

Then, together with the four women, through one's own authentic secret, one performs the offering of flowers and the like in accordance with the full elaboration of the rite.

This is the knowledge-mudrā of the Tathāgata.

That very yoga — the Blessed One himself, Vajrasattva, the Tathāgata — blazes forth in the glorious charnel-ground mudrā, for the purpose of purifying aversion to the sacred commitments.

For what is supremely ferocious and savage, peaceful means will not bring benefit;
through the yoga of wisdom and skillful means,
the yoga practitioner attains the supreme bliss and becomes sublime.

The wrathful one who arises from the wrath of the buddhas is supreme in annihilation and destruction.

The blue blazing bodhisattva appears in a blazing red maṇḍala.

It belongs to none other and cannot be taken away.
Filled with the divine substance of water,
it is accomplished through the purity of intrinsic nature and through power and essential identity.

Great garments and great libations, great meat and great honey —
the glorious supreme sovereign, the mudrā of the spirits of all charnel grounds, supremely wrathful, ferocious, and savage, for the purification of the realms of sentient beings —

this is the glorious Heruka's supreme sovereign, the great vajra king.

The head ornament of a garland of skulls and the jewels of the buddhas' crownknots — the accomplishment of every domain of sovereignty is achieved without remainder or residue.

The vajra khaṭvāṅga together with the vajra, accompanied by the sound of the ringing bell — through the various mudrās, the emanations of the descending glorious Heruka:

the Buddha, the vajra, the lotus-holder,
the vajra sun of the three realms — sealed, stupefied, consumed — even those who have become ashes are brought to life.

This is the mudrā named: Glorious Vajra Heruka Descending, Manifold Emanation, Padma Lord of Dance.

In the manner of the technique of a sword's edge, lean against the khaṭvāṅga as a back-support.
In the left hand hold a skull-cup,
in the right hold the triple banner.

The practitioner, through the sky-mudrā, will travel throughout all of space.
Women and the like, along with the supreme jewel —
all things are drawn down from the sky.

Having sealed everything with this mudrā,
by showing the manner of abiding in supreme bliss, everything descends from the sky and moves through it as my own activity.

The wrathful ones with their close-attendant lords,
the sun, moon, and ḍākinīs — an irresistible assembly — drawing all illusions down from the sky, one consumes them entirely without remainder.

The union equal to all of space —
this is the mudrā named: The Fortunate, Glorious Vajra Ḍākinī's Supreme Bliss.

Through the union of right and left,
performing the dance of blissful descent,

with the posture of the half-lotus, legs crossed and pressed against one's own thighs —
the wrathful ones with their close-attendant lords, the sun, moon, Yama, and Brahmā — roused after being sealed and stupefied, they dance and are consumed.

Through that very union,
then pressing the thighs together in bliss,
having properly clasped and tied them up,
one spreads and drinks.

Through those very illusions,
then by the shaking of the thighs, one practices with all the women of fortunate gods and humans.

The union of all pleasurable touch — this is the mudrā named: The Fortunate, Glorious Vajra Fierce Abiding.

Then further, this was excellently taught:

In the maṇḍala of the buddha ḍākinī dwells the glorious Heruka who has descended — the mudrā of many kinds abides there.

The highest of peaceful, wrathful, and bewildering — performing the dance of joy with its transformations, through the union of raising the dead,
the blissful mudrā supremely abides.

Causing bewilderment of the peaceful and wrathful, breathing upward, the body performing the dance —
the supreme accomplished mudrā of the view, through the supreme bliss of the secret union,
the supreme union of fumigating with flowers,
through alcohol, water, milk, cloth, and fire — accomplished —
one seals in a special manner.

Through the union of single-pointed equanimity,
the diligence of union bestows bliss.
Scattering openly and clapping the palms,
through gently breathing upward, gazing to the left and drawing with the hand — embracing in the fashion of giving milk — thus: the dance performed with utter bewilderment, the spent and secret bodies,
the head of Mahābrahmā,
and likewise transcending the three worlds — likewise drawing up from the earth, displaying the manner of one's own mudrā, performing the dance in the charnel grounds, likewise the maṇḍala of wind,
the utterly terrifying burning fire —
the action mudrā supremely abides.

The first is the sealing mudrā of the mother.
The second is she who draws out the heart.
The third is she who causes utter bewilderment.
The fourth likewise is she who lifts up.
The fifth is the mudrā of the one who dances.
The sixth is taught to be that of the killer.
The seventh is the mudrā of the devourer.
The eighth is the action mudrā.

Then, of all these mudrās,
the responses of the mudrā are unsurpassed.
That which conquers the very self of the mudrā —
this is to be taught in particular.

The glorious vajra-lotus, raised up — when the dances are performed and have been performed:
sealed, bewildered, devoured,
even one reduced to ash is made to live.

Then this knowledge of the mudrā —
the Song of the Glorious Vajra Union — the supreme accomplishment of all actions —

this is to be taught in particular.

Gazing, having obtained the seal that transforms into manifold aspects, through manifold embracings that give milk one is made bewildered.

Manifold, displaying the supreme of bliss, all are made to feast.

Manifold, I beseech you: reveal the wondrous supreme bliss.

I beseech you: seal, bewilder, and make to drink.

Supreme bliss, wondrous bliss — enter!

Hūṃ, alalā ho — please grant this!

The supreme bliss of yoga, emanated through illusion —

I beseech you: enter into the pure samaya pledges.

Please conquer over all afflictions.

I beseech you: make all without exception drink.

Please dispel all afflictions.

Through taking up these songs,
the union of all vajras in equality, the ḍākinī illusion, the supreme of bliss —
this will be accomplished without fail.

This is entitled the Vajra Mudrā of the Glorious Heruka.

That very yoga — the Blessed One,
Vajrasattva the Tathāgata —
for the complete purification of all attachment, abides gloriously in the lotus mudrā.

For the accomplishment of the unchanging sublime,
like a perfectly pure crystal sphere,
for the dispelling of all attachment,
a radiance that gathers blazing light of many kinds.

The life of the buddhas adorned with jewels, ornamented with garments and varied ornaments —
through the assembly of all buddhas, it becomes sublime like Sukhāvatī.

Through manifold forms of dance posture, fully transforming and having danced, with the supreme mark of the lotus, together with the lotus,
the hands circle the mudrās like wheels.

The buddha holds the vajra and lotus.
The vajra-sun of the three realms —
through the lotus, fully purified by illusion, the buddhas accomplish awakening.

The skillful means of taming are manifold.

This is the mudrā called: The Fortunate, Glorious Lord of the Lotus Dance.

Through the union of right and left,
one abides in the half-lotus posture —
one sits in the royal cross-legged posture and dispels all suffering.

This is the mudrā called: The Glorious Lotus King Abiding.

With the left hand held in the gesture of pride,
one grasps a red lotus at ease and draws it toward one's own heart —
this is the opening of the lotus petals.

With the left hand held in the gesture of pride,
one grasps a blue lotus at ease and, by drawing it toward one's own heart, one binds the mudrā of woman.

With the left hand held in the gesture of pride,
one grasps a white lotus at ease,
and having bound the mudrā of the wheel,
one fully turns the wheel of Dharma.

With the left hand held in the gesture of pride,
one grasps an indigo lotus at ease, while the right hand dances with full expression —
the glorious mudrā of the three banners.

With the left hand held in the gesture of pride,
one grasps a yellow lotus at ease,
while the right hand, dancing with full expression, raises it aloft in the manner of a sea-creature.

With the left hand held in the gesture of pride,
one grasps the supreme aged lotus
and draws it toward one's own heart —

thus one binds the vajra mudrā.

The pure splendor of clear-seeing vision is the supreme awakening of Tārā.

The vast goddess turns the wheel.

The frowning one is the answer of the mudrā.

She is the great splendor abiding in the lotus.

The three destinies of the sovereign lady of desire — these are the great vidyā goddesses of the Glorious Lotus King.

Now this knowledge of the mudrās,

the glorious song of the Lotus King, accomplishing all actions —

this shall be taught as something extraordinary.

One who holds the supreme forms of all Tathāgatas and the rest in their variety, who possesses the supreme attainment of taming sentient beings of every kind —

O bodhisattva, Lotus of Supreme Delight, please reveal the illusory bliss!

A la la la ho!

O sovereign of dance, joyous, joyous — please perform the joyful dance!

Buddha, vajra-holder, lord, remover of Brahmā's attachment, sovereign lord — lord of sun and moon, a la la la ho!

O lotus illusion, you who tame the manifold through dancing in the manner of pure appearance —

O sovereign of the lotus samaya, please perform the buddha dances!

Purifying all attachment, purify everywhere throughout.

Before the holder of the lotus, O dancer, please perform the dance!

By taking up these songs,

the union of the manifold lotus,

the dākinī, the supreme bliss of illusion —

this will be accomplished without fail.

This is the mudrā of the Glorious Lotus, Sovereign of the Dance.

That very yoga — the Blessed One,

Vajrasattva, the Tathāgata —

for the sake of purifying the supreme jewel,

the glorious sun abides as the mudrā.

Ākāśagarbha, fulfiller of all hopes in all directions, rains down women and supreme jewels and all treasures from the sky.

For those who are extremely fierce and savage, pacification will not bring benefit.

The sun of wisdom and skillful means therefore becomes fierce for the sake of what is sacred.

The worlds that are tamed by ferocity are subdued through ferocity itself.

One displays the form, conduct, bearing, and great majesty of the sun.

The vajra bow and supreme arrow are drawn with great skill.

The eye, bright and clear and accompanied by a smile,
the left opens and gazes upward.

The fierce one, with faculties and with attendant faculties, subdues the sun, the moon, Yama, Brahmā — all three worlds without exception — through ferocity itself.

This is the mudrā called: The Glorious Victor over the Three Realms.

With both knees bound with the vajra,
one sits in the vajra cross-legged posture,
and seated thus upon one's seat,
one destroys all obstacles.

This is the Glorious Vajra Cross-Legged Posture.

Empowerment, and the lord of treasures, and the great offering bearing the supreme victory banner — those who display the various appropriate modes — accomplish their own aims.

Now this knowledge of mudrā,
the supreme song of the king's illusion,
which perfectly accomplishes all activities —
this shall be explained in particular.

Possessing the supreme treasure of the manifold sovereignty over all three realms, mingling face-to-face and waging battle in many distinctive ways, taming the buddhas — with varied forms of mingling, bearing the victory banner of conquest on every side, may Vajra Sun King, the supreme bliss, please display the illusion.

Raining down the various showers of the supreme awakening as clouds upon sentient beings, accomplish all my hopes, swiftly reveal — alalā lā ho!
May the empowerment of the inexhaustible treasury, especially, be bestowed upon me.

All these special, precious ones, for the sake of the jewel-women — among all assemblies of jewels, the jewel-woman alone is supreme;
for the sake of pure, precious jewel-women, all proceed.

Through taking up these songs,
the union of all sovereign realms, the dākinī's illusory supreme bliss —
all this shall without doubt be accomplished.

This is the knowledge of the Glorious Vajra Sun mudrā.

That very yoga — the Blessed One,
the Tathāgata Vajrasattva —
through fierce engagement, the glory of yoga fully resides in the horse mudrā.

Through devotion to the purity of all things,
by the power of faultlessness, manifest openly;
through the skill of utter exorcism,
destroy all the world completely.

To those with attachment, display agitation;
to the malicious, display malice;
to the peaceful, become peaceful;
to the fierce, apply fierceness.

Four faces and four arms, four feet with four hooves — Hayagrīva, the great king:

the supreme lord shall be accomplished.

The left index finger, curled in a fist, holds the glorious lotus in its many forms;
together with the vajra, one achieves the summoning;
let the right be as a third banner.

When this mudrā is sealed,
even one who has fallen most deeply —
at that very instant, fully roused, all liftings are perfectly accomplished.

The auspiciousness of uniting all things in perfect purity.
This is the mudrā called: The Glorious Vajra Summoning.

Through the union of right and left,
performing the mode of extending and contracting,
seated in the wrathful cross-legged posture,
destroy all the world completely.

This is the Glorious Vajra Wrathful Abiding.

Now this knowledge of mudrā —
the song possessing the glory of the supreme horse —
which perfectly accomplishes all activities:
this shall be explained in particular.

Displaying a form desirable for bliss that surpasses a thousand intoxicants, by the power of taming, exceedingly terrifying beyond a thousand Yamas, the peaceful body, moreover, displayed far surpassing a thousand Brahmās — may all Tathāgatas be accomplished as supreme in every maṇḍala.

Suppressed by the power of manifesting through the complete purity of all things,

hi he he he he — subdue all lords, subdue them utterly, subdue them!

Suppressed by the strength of the power of utmost skill, manifesting, overpower the lord.

Great union — hulu hulu — three-eyed one, the three activities accomplished, arise!

Suppressed by the strength of the power of utmost skill, manifesting, overpower the great might.

Union — ruṭa maṭa — from the heart, glorious one, arise, fully arise!

Suppressed by the strength of the power of utmost skill, manifesting, overpower Brahmā.

Great union, from Brahmā, liberatrix, arise — s-mara ṭ!

Suppressed by the strength of the power of utmost skill, manifesting, overpower the lord of joy.

Union of all, rejoice in me — alalā lā ho!

For the liberation of sentient beings who are vicious, wrathful, and utterly fierce,

enter into the practice — alalā lā ho!

Oṃ sumbha ni sumbha hūṃ phaṭ phaṭ.

Whether one acts with a beloved or does not act — even though such deliberations are absent, they are easy.

Such a beloved is an illusion; therefore, it is said: make that one your dear intimate.

Whether one acts with an adversary or does not act — even though such deliberations are absent, they are easy.

Such an adversary is an illusion; therefore, it is said: call that one the courageous one.

By the mere taking up of this song,
the illusory ḍākinī of supreme bliss,
union with the supreme horse,
will without fail be accomplished.

This is the knowledge of the mudrā of all arising.

Pressing the index finger with the thumb, and pressing the index finger with one's own thumb —
this is the mudrā of the glorious accomplished eye.
Make the index finger into the pupil of the eye.

Pressing the vajra palms together evenly, apply them to both vajra eyes in the hollow space within.

This is the glorious vajra eye.

By this, one will accomplish in this very life
all buddhas, likewise all heroes,
and all vajra-holders.

The glorious eye is an accomplishment;
it exercises power over all sentient beings.
The vast manifold siddhis of karmic activity —
every last siddhi is swiftly accomplished.

Pressing the vajra palms together evenly,
curl the tips of the two index fingers,
and rest the tips of the thumbs evenly together —
the hollow must not shift; this is the sacred one.

Having set it well at the crown of the head,
if one guards with this,
all buddha siddhis without exception will be accomplished without remainder.

This is the mudrā of the bodhisattva's crown protrusion.

Open the vajra palms apart upward,
curl the tips of the two index fingers,
and make the two thumbs bite with the canine teeth —
the terrifying vajra yakṣiṇī, accomplished, devours māras and the like,
and likewise causes bewilderment.

Every invocation is perfectly accomplished,
and likewise accomplishes consciousness.

It draws forth treasures,
and likewise seizes all wealth.

The restful one presses upon the glorious goddess,
and the glorious women too are seized,
placed in service,
and one enjoys the company of yakṣiṇīs.

Through this one swiftly becomes the lord of the hosts of yakṣas.

This is the mudrā of the glorious vajra yakṣiṇī.

Pressing the vajra palms together evenly,
accomplish the elbows evenly together.
The four petals of the thumb and little finger —
the spotless lotus, fully blooming.

By this, all misdeeds will be purified.

When misdeeds are purified, one is perfectly accomplished;

one fully awakens to the awakening of a buddha and becomes Vajrasattva.

This is the mudrā of the glorious lotus.

Pressing the vajra palms together,
curling the index fingers back evenly, and the thumbs sheathed in vajra —
this is the jewel of vajra glory.

When this mudrā is sealed,
all the sky is perfectly accomplished:
supreme jewels such as women and others,
and all things from the sky are enjoyed.

Pressing the vajra palms together,
extending the little finger and ring finger evenly, and curling the fingertips of the index fingers —
this is known as the glorious supreme horse.

When this mudrā is sealed,
in perfect connection with the awakening of a buddha, glorious joy pervades all — what need to speak of divine good fortune?

This is the knowledge of the samaya mudrā.

Having assumed the mudrā stamped with the marks of the vajra of body, speech, and mind, through the union of all arising,
let oneself become the deity for oneself.

By this, one will accomplish in this very life
all the glory of the buddhas, likewise all heroes,
and all vajra-holders.

The siddhi of all buddhas as lord — equal and unequal to the dharmadhātu, the boundless expanse of the sky — through the union of all buddhas together, with this illusory ḍākinī of supreme bliss, there is no sacred vastness that fails to be accomplished or remains unchanging.

This is the knowledge of the great samaya mudrā.

Of the glorious union of Vajrasattva, possessed of whatever form and shape — through bliss itself, become the lord of all;
enter into the lord of all.

By this mudrā, the yogin
goes, comes, and soars at will.
Like the king of all buddhas,
Vajrasattva is supremely accomplished.

This is the mudrā known as Vajrasattva of Auspicious Fortune, the Union with All Buddhas.

Without attachment and without non-attachment,
with no object of focus even in the middle,
this illusory union of all women is the supreme vehicle of non-duality.

When this mudrā is applied,
one goes, comes, and soars at will.
The glorious lord of all illusions —
Vajrasattva is supremely accomplished.

This is the knowledge of the mudrā of the goddess of all illusions.

Neither existent nor non-existent,
with no object of focus even in the middle —
the union that is the Perfection of Wisdom:
the awakening of buddhahood is supremely accomplished.

All things have the characteristic of space;
even space itself has no characteristic.
The three realms in their entirety,
without remainder, are like illusion.
Just as illusion, in every instance,
can be seen and can be touched, yet has no truly graspable object —
such is the mode of all wandering beings.

By this mudrā, the yogin
goes, comes, and soars at will.
Women and all other supreme jewels,
all material things from space itself, are enjoyed.
By uniting oneself with what has no inherent existence, entering into union with all of space,
the illusory dākinī of supreme bliss will be accomplished most perfectly and steadily.

Just as this red lotus
is unstained by the fault of attachment, so too the one endowed with yoga will not be stained by the fault of circumstance.

For what is extremely fierce and violent, gentle means will not be of benefit — the union of wisdom and skillful means is supremely powerful for the sake of total victory.

Through devotion to the purity of all things,
manifest in the strength of sinlessness,
by uniting through fierce engagement in union,
all worlds are to be overcome.

This is the knowledge of the union mudrā.

In all the unions there are
and in the manifold acts performed, the glorious seal of Vajrasattva accomplishes all siddhis supremely.

By these action mudrās,
one goes, comes, and soars at will.
The glory of sovereignty in great passion —
Vajrasattva is supremely accomplished.

This is the mudrā known as the Auspicious Samaya of All-Pervading Variety.

By acting and reversing,
by especially seizing,
by acting with every limb,
all wealth is seized entirely.
By embracing, enfolding, and so forth,

the three realms are sealed.

Liberation is performed and slaying is performed;
even one who has died is revived at once.

Through all the enjoyments of union,
the three abodes without remainder are sealed, bewildered, and roused, and wherever they are taken, they are consumed.

By experiencing the bliss of all unions,
the three realms in their entirety
are sealed, bewildered, consumed, and even when reduced to ashes, are made to live.

This is the knowledge of the mudrā of all unions.

The supreme bliss of all goddesses — displaying a beautiful countenance, fully engaged in the experience of bliss,
performing the dance of beautiful vision —
the buddha Vajra-Padmapāṇi,
the vajra sun of the three realms,
seals, bewilders, and consumes,
and even what has been reduced to ashes is made to live.

The skillful woman of great illusion, displaying a beautiful face,
adorned with proper regalia and of the highest vehicle,
performing the dance of beautiful vision —
the buddha Padma-Vajradhara,
the vajra sun of the three realms,
seals, bewilders, and rouses,
and having consumed, makes live again.

In union equal to buddha and awakening, gazing most joyfully and smiling, perfectly accomplishing all existence, gazing into the secret and abiding therein —
the fierce lords, the proximate powers,
together with sun, moon, Yama, and Brahmā,
all existence is accomplished everywhere.

The three families are accomplished.
Endowed with flavor of the tīrthika way and the rest,
transforming the beautiful face,
supreme among tīrthikas, adorned with ritual steps — dancing with the view of the tīrthika way, with beautiful manner and with skillful means,
the fierce lords, the proximate powers,
together with sun, moon, Yama, and Brahmā —
the three realms are all accomplished.

With a face bearing slightly clenched teeth,
a countenance both wrathful and smiling, shifting into wrath, yet smiling still,
gazing clearly and abiding well —
the fierce lords, the proximate powers,
together with sun, moon, Yama, and Brahmā —
the king, having fully prevailed through illusion, accomplishes all three realms.

Intoxicated and enraptured by desire's bliss,
transforming the beautiful face —
this is the supreme face mudrā (seal), and it brings delight to all three realms.

The fierce one with sharp fangs clenched, gazing terrifyingly, consuming the malevolent — through the right-side face mudrā, all three realms are consumed.

Supreme bliss of all attainments (siddhis), gazing with exceeding joy and smiling — through the left-side face mudrā, all three realms are liberated.

At the crown, Hayagrīva, highly secret — horse-faced, green-yellow, the color shining bright — when the lips are pressed with clenched teeth, all the world is filled with terror.
This is known as the face mudrā.

Supreme among all goddesses, bliss of all — pressing the beautiful upper lip —
this supreme smiling mudrā brings delight to all the buddhas.

Enraptured and intoxicated by the bliss of desire, pressing the upper lip in the tīrthika way —
this supreme smiling mudrā
brings delight to all three realms.

Supreme bliss of all unions, setting the beautiful upper lip aquiver —
this supreme smiling mudrā
brings delight to all three realms.

Tasting the flavor of great flesh, pressing the upper lip with teeth —
this supreme smiling mudrā consumes all three realms.

Tasting the flavor of all bliss, beautifying the upper lip —
this supreme smiling mudrā
makes even that which is reduced to ashes live again.
This is known as the supreme smiling mudrā.

Perfectly joined to the experience of bliss, transforming the gazes, half-closed and languid — sealing, bewildering, and consuming:
all three realms are made to live.

The skillful woman, supreme in illusion,
performing the dance of beautiful vision —
sealing, bewildering, and rousing:
all three realms are accomplished.

In the secret union with the buddha, the gaze dwelling utterly at peace and in bliss —
this supreme gaze mudrā brings all women under sway.

With the brow furrowed and shifting into a wrathful scowl, the gaze blazing and transformed —

this supreme gaze mudrā
sets all three realms ablaze.

Wrathful and shifting yet smiling still,
the gaze luminous and abiding in bliss —
this supreme gaze mudrā
perfectly accomplishes all wrathful action.

Endowed with the flavor of the tīrthika way and the rest, performing the dance of the gaze together with the tīrthika way —
this supreme gaze mudrā
sets all three realms dancing and entering in.
This is known as the gaze mudrā.

Abiding in the mudrā of Namas tu sarva-buddhebhyaḥ — every activity and offering, without remainder,
all of it accomplished without exception;
all the offerings of the self-arisen ones,
equal and unequal with the dharmadhātu,
boundless as the expanse of space —
since it is accomplished by a single utterance, those for whom this mudrā of the sacred Dharma has not been performed and has not been transmitted — those vast and holy ones are absent.

Oṃ ru ru sphuru jvala tiṣṭha siddha locanī sarvārtha sādhanī svāhā.

This supreme Dharma mudrā brings all sentient beings under its sway, swiftly draws them in by its power,
and causes them to act as servants.

Subhagāstā Mahānadevī hiri miri riti niriśriye svāhā.

This supreme and sacred Dharma mudrā bestows all the bliss of desire.

Oṃ tāre tuttāre ture svāhā.

Abiding in the Dharma mudrā, accomplishing the awakening of a buddha in its fullness —
what need is there to speak of other women?

Trī bha va ṭā ṭā. Tra ṭa tra ṭa.

All wishes are fulfilled without remainder.

This supreme sacred Dharma mudrā
is that which fulfills all wishes.

Śrī vajra padma bhaṇḍa bha mukha yogīśvara hi hi hi hi hi.

This supreme sacred Dharma mudrā utterly destroys the entire world.
It is the Dharma mudrā that knows.

The secret of voice — by means of high and low tones, modulating the melody and reciting it, and by the supreme ones of excellence in the peaceful season — songs accompanied by hūṃ and the like are taken up, and by all the words, just as one desires,
in whatever way one delights, with all songs —
the mudrā of glorious songs of hūṃ accomplishes Vajrasattva in full.

The supreme goddess among all goddesses performs the dance in the customary manner.
Ka ka la śaṅg bha la and so forth — all songs are adopted accordingly.

The mudrā of songs of oṃ is taken up joyfully in the voice of Brahmā.
Without exception, leaving none behind,
it liberates all sentient beings.

The great fierce laughter of Vajra — expelling breath through the nostrils, deep as the sound of thunder —
when the sound of ru lu ru lu arises, this mudrā seals the yogin through the three realms purified, liberates, and slays,
and brings the dead back to life in an instant.
This is the mudrā called "Fierce Vajra Laughter."

The mudrā of the song called ṭe accomplishes the purification of all.

The mudrā of the song called hi conquers the three realms completely.

Ka ka la lye and the melody of co ra,
likewise the melody that is exceedingly sweet and pleasant, the mudrā of the song of ka ha śa —
it accomplishes the destruction of all.
This is the knowledge of the mudrā of song.

The flute, the single-stringed instrument, likewise the many-stringed and the dense-stringed, and the mudrās of cymbals as taught — all activities are fully accomplished.

By performing the dance in the customary manner,
even without striking, full accomplishment is attained.
For all activities most excellently,
if struck, the fourfold glory is achieved.

Through the mudrā of the essence, the vidyā-mantra,
the diverse forms of activity, and the methods of clearing away and so forth —
all attainments are fully accomplished.

Jaḥ hūṃ baṃ hoḥ. Ruṭṭa maṇṭa. Smarārṭa. Hu lu hu lu. Pra siddhy. Ṭakki hūṃ

This is the examination by clapping the palms together.

Ṭa ghe ṭa ghe. Ṭa ghe ghe. Ṭa ke na ṭa. Gheṃ gheṃ gheṃ. Ṭa gheṃ gheṃ ṭa gheṃ.

This is the continuous drum.

Āṃ āṃ āṃ. Hāṃ hāṃ hāṃ. Bāṃ bāṃ bāṃ. Dhṃ dhṃ dhṃ.

This is the drum of the three samayas.

Dhe khoṃ khoṃ khoṃ khoṃ. Dhe vajra vajra ṇyaṃ. Kong kong kong. Hūṃ bhyo hūṃ bhyo hūṃ bhyo hūṃ bhyo. Ru lu ru lu hūṃ bhyo dhṃ. Khoṃ khoṃ khoṃ. Ḍho. Khoṃ khoṃ khoṃ khoṃ. Ḍhoṃ kauṃ kauṃ kauṃ.

This is the mudrā of the vajra drum of glorious Vajra Heruka.

Padma padma hrī. Padma padma śī. Padma padma hram.

This is the glorious drum of padma.

Trāṃ trāṃ trāṃ. Bha bha bha bha bha bha bha. Ta ṭa tā ṭa ṭa ṭa ṭa ṭa. Tāṃ tā tā tā. Trā trā trā trā trā. Traṃ ṭṃ ke ta dkum tra. Tuṭṭa ttra.

This is the royal drum.

Ṭakki hūṃ jaḥ. Ṭakki hūṃ jaḥ. Ṭakki hūṃ jaḥ.

This is the dignified gait of pride.

Trā ṭṭa trā trā trā trā trā.

Swift and supremely swift.

Ta ṭa bha ta. Ba trun. Ta thā ga te. Ba hūṃ. Ta ṭa bha ta ta bha hi na — this is the glorious sport of the supreme horse.

Ta tā bha ṭa ṭa bhā tam ttra.

This is the mudrā of the drum that is supremely swift.

This is the knowledge of the mudrā of cymbals.

By the union of Vajrasattva with oneself, with both hands bound in vajra —

By striking the vajra finger-snap, all buddhas are gathered in.

By that command alone, with fear, all buddhas together with their retinues and their maṇḍalas assemble — what need, then, to speak of others?

By striking with the left finger-snap,
and by striking gently with the palms, it is accomplished.
The right palm, it is said, gathers everything together.

By the excellent joining of the palms' engagement, following karma in accordance with its proper mode,
by the gentle gathering of the palms,
and by performing song, cymbals, and dance — with the expressions of the heroic, the courageous, the compassionate, the exuberant, the wrathful, the terrible, the unlovely, the wondrous, and the peaceful —

the mudrā is accomplished together with its meaning.

Endowed with the expression of the heroic and the rest, having danced the dance of the various mudrās,
by aligning everything with the nature of oneself,
every invocation is perfectly accomplished.

For Vajrasattva: the heroic.

For the courageous: the Tathāgata, hero among heroes.

For Vajrapāṇi: the compassionate.

For the exuberant: Īśvara, the supreme Lord of the World.

For Vajra Sun: the wrathful.

For Vajra Fierce: the terrible.

For Śākyamuni: the unlovely.

For the wondrous: Arali.

For the supremely peaceful: the ever-present Buddha.

For the pacification of all suffering,
by the intrinsic nature of all things, remain present and bestow your blessing.

A form unsated by the beholding, revealing the nature of all as oneself — grant supremely the accomplishment of what is called "Excellent!"

The supreme of all self-accomplished realizations, the fulfillment of every hope, the supreme by which one becomes a buddha in all instances — it shall bestow the supreme holy yoga.

Through these mudrā engagements, apply your own offering fully.

All the engagements of Vajrasattva, the glorious deity —
the illusions, the mudrā responses to mudrā, and the various manifested mudrās —
in order to fulfill every aspiration of the mind, the supreme offering is to be applied.

Everywhere, of auspicious variety, transform yourself into the master of all.
Through the engagements of the origin and so forth,
the challenger dances with oneself;
then, with whatever challenger is fitting,
all buddhas come to arise.

Then the challenger in turn is transformed into the Great Vajradhara.
The challenger, from that point, in proper mode, is transformed into the supreme arising of the lotus dance.
Then thereafter the challenger too is transformed into the supreme Vajra Sun.
Then once more the challenger is to be transformed into the arising of the supreme horse.
Then the challenger in turn
is perfectly accomplished by the arising of oneself.

Then this knowledge of the mudrā,
the revealer of all vows — the glorious song of Vajrasattva — is to be expounded in particular.

Some appear in form more beautiful than a thousand stainless lunar maṇḍalas.

Some terrify through the supreme rays of ninety billion utterly terrifying suns.
Some appear in the Victor's form, possessed of fine radiance, great splendor, bliss, and peace.

Some reveal embodied form possessed of the supreme voice that places all beings in equanimity.

Vajrasattva, for the sake of accomplishment, expert in taming, from those supreme joys of taming without remainder — may the Arali ones accomplish the union of union: Ruṭa Maṭe, Alala la ho!

In the mode of taming in many forms, the supreme dancer performs the dance.

O Buddha, lord of samaya dance, perform the dance — Alala la ho!

Having danced the supreme dance of the many forms of supreme bliss, may the bliss of liberation also be attained.

By taking up these as song,
the illusory ḍākinī of supreme bliss
who is the union of all buddhas — will without doubt be accomplished.

Having thus danced supremely, whoever among the assembly is defeated by that dance — by that one, the assembly's feast is given to the assembly.

It should be offered together with the fee. By these rites of offering, one will be freed from all wrongdoing, all merit will increase, and it will likewise be protected always. Epidemic, poison, plant poison, harm by ḍākinīs, spirits, māras, and those of the hells — all these will be thoroughly pacified by this. Accomplishments and abundance, joy and likewise lordship, all the holy buddhas, and the supreme mudrās will be achieved. This is the seal-knowledge of the dance.

Supremely joyful, following with passionate delight, sealed with the finest arrow and bow of joy —

By the bliss of union with supreme joy, drunk with rapture, may all bliss be accomplished in me!

Raising the victory banner of the supreme variety of supreme bliss in various forms, with that enjoyment —

O sovereign of supreme joy, by accomplishing the highest life, enter, O Tathāgata! O supreme horse, ho!

Play in the supreme variety of bliss, ho!

Aroused by bliss, sport and play — hūṃ — may you make it manifest!

Alala la ho!

By the illusory ḍākinī of all the Tathāgatas in their many forms, may the disciple be firmly embraced.

Kye ma! May supreme bliss be accomplished!

Kye ma! Grant bliss, grant bliss!

May entry into the sacred be accomplished!

May you become supremely delighted in me!

Alala la ho!

E ma o!

Enter, enter, shi shi, enter!

Surrounded by the ḍākinīs of supreme bliss, enter everywhere!

By taking these up as song, the illusory dākinī of supreme bliss, who is the union of all buddhas, will without doubt be accomplished.

Vajrasattva gathers; vajra jewel, unsurpassed; vajra Dharma is spoken; vajra action will be performed.

Hūṃ — homage to the arrow and bow of vajra action!

Homage to the samaya of glorious Vajrarāga!

Homage to the vajra khaṭvāṅga, utterly terrifying!

Homage to the gloriously resounding vajra bell!

In some forms, extremely fierce, the body appears vividly as a fierce, wrathful woman taming fierce beings.

In some forms, to tame boundless beings, the body holds an exceedingly sharp wheel.

In some forms, utterly blissful and peaceful, unchanging, the body of Brahma's generosity is also displayed.

In some forms, with blazing passion, may the samaya of the lotus king be accomplished in me!

O supreme lord of all empowerment, may the inexhaustible supreme treasury be accomplished in me!

May the supremely great vajra jewel, raising the universal victorious victory banner, be accomplished in me!

In some forms, taking on the appearance of a scholar;

in some forms, as fierce as the time of the final age;

in some forms, as peaceful as the lord of victors;

in some forms, accomplishing desires through the yoga of the supreme horse.

This is the seal-knowledge of the mudrā of the vajra song offering.

White flowers and red flowers, blue and yellow gathered together — this supreme flower mudrā delights in the five qualities of desire. Lac dye of blue-green hue, prepared with four colors, and the five white mudrās — accomplish them all equally, as before. Everything arising from the elements, and likewise life-force and root — beautiful in appearance, fragrant in scent — accomplish them all equally, as before.

The two sandalwoods, musk, camphor, costus, and śalākī — incense compounded with molasses, perfecting all activities. Tagara, fragrant substances, guggul, red clay, camphor, and musk — butter extracted from these substances, made into a lamp-offering, gives rise to radiance.

Sandalwood, saffron, sprkā, camphor, and musk combined — perfected incense becomes the supreme incense mudrā. Kakkolā, cardamom, spikenard, camphor, musk —

— these are finely compounded with acacia and molasses. Cinnamon, patrā, drā, naleśam, and camphor are combined. Together with sahakāra and sweet wood, the purified incense becomes oral incense. This is the mudrā-union of the glorious Vajrasattva.

Red flowers are offered to the buddhas; varied flowers to the Vajra-holder; white flowers to the Lord of the World; yellow flowers to the Sky-born. Sandalwood incense is for the buddhas; duruska for the Vajra-holder; kapita for the Lord Avalokiteśvara; cepog for Vajrasūrya. A garland of lamps is for the buddhas; a lamp set before for the Vajra-holder; a hundred lamps for Avalokiteśvara; a thousand for Vajrasūrya. Sandalwood incense is for the buddhas; saffron for the Vajra-holder; red sandalwood for Avalokiteśvara; camphor for Vajrasūrya. All flowers and all incenses, all lamps likewise, and all perfumes in their entirety — these are fitting to offer to Vajrahaya. This is the knowledge of the mudrā of all offerings.

The coquette, the young woman, the intoxicated one, nectar likewise, the bold one, the firmly desirous, the playful serving-woman — all tastes such as salt and the rest, nectar-like substances such as molasses and the rest — one accomplishes the taste of one's own nature; accomplished fully, without remainder and without lack. Varied foods endowed with flesh and wine, when accomplished, are the finest fortune of joyful enjoyment; the excellence of life is supremely fulfilled.

Ripe āmra, grapes, panasa, kera, arka, and other such fruits — these are the supreme fruit mudrā. One obtains all the fruits of accomplishment.

Smearing with molasses and honey, anoint the āmra and the rest with reverent words. Anoint with butter of sahakāra and the like, anointing with an equal fragrance. With dye made from mustard, lac, and the like, turning the colors to accord, fashion husks of wheat and so forth; at the time of offering, present them. This is the knowledge of the mudrā of fruits with their husk.

When presenting bali to the buddhas, meat and wine are entirely set aside. Song, musical instruments when accomplished, parasols, victory banners, pennants — and bali of varied kinds endowed with flesh and wine is the supreme torma. This is the great fortune of my livestock; the vajra activity, the glorious accomplishment.

Bali-offering and white torma, together with lotus flowers, when offered to the supreme Lord Avalokiteśvara, all needs are fulfilled.

Varied royal foods, endowed with flesh and wine, and fortunate songs and musical instruments are offered to the retinue of Vajrasūrya. All the tastes of every food, the finest flesh and the best of meats, meat preparations and dried meat, and bali are offered to Vajrahaya. This is the mudrā-rite of all offerings and tormas.

With the thumbs in the bodhisattva cross-legged posture, the tips of the two index fingers are bent; the two middle fingers are placed evenly together; the remaining fingers are joined in the gesture of the vajra-palms. This is the buddha-jewel mudrā, the empowerment (abhiṣeka) of the self-arisen ones. All the sovereignties of royal dominion, without exception, are swiftly accomplished without remainder.

On the crown, the forehead, both cheeks, and the nape — one adorns everything with the supreme jewel of all buddhas, the crown ornament. Having bound it with the binding of the crown ornament, swing it so that the edges are released. As though letting the hem of silk flutter, having done so, one claps the palms together.

Buddha, Padma, Vajradhāra, Vajrasūrya of the three realms — by means of this, free of enemies and free of evil, one enjoys one's own splendor. Having performed the protection with this, like the glorious Vajrasattva, the great accomplishment of all buddhas, the sovereignty of the wheel-turning ruler, is perfectly achieved.

Of all the Tathāgatas —

This is the mudrā called the Auspicious Garland of Glory, the Union of the Precious Jewel Crown Ornament. Interlace all the fingers inward. Having brought all the fingertips together, press them down with the vajra of the thumbs — it resembles the hollows of the nostrils and eyes. This, the precious Padma mudrā, confers empowerment upon the great self. All the sovereignties of the realm, without remainder, without exception, are swiftly accomplished.

Apply it to the crown of the head, the forehead, both cheeks, and the nape of the neck. The crown ornament of a garland of skulls — the jewel at the crown of the buddhas blazes forth. Having bound it with the binding of the crown ornament, release it from the edges in a swinging motion. As though letting the hem of silk flutter, having done so, one claps the palms together. Having performed the protection with this, one becomes like the glorious Vajrasattva. The great sovereignty of the three realms, the supreme accomplishment of the wheel-turning rulers, is perfectly achieved.

This is the mudrā of the glorious Vajra Heruka Padma, called the Auspicious Garland of Glory, the Union of the Precious Jewel Crown Ornament.

Join the palms in vajra union. Bring the two hands together in the manner of a precious jewel, joining them as is fitting. Then fully rotate the four fingertips and thumbs, lift them up, and place them well upon the forehead. The victorious lords who are sovereigns of the three realms are accomplished without remainder, without exception.

This is the mudrā of the glorious Vajra Jewel.

With the two fingers of the fully extended hands, bind them at the knuckle of the second finger. The middle fingers bear the tips of the thumbs. Fully rotate the vajra mudrā. Having fully rotated and lifted it, if it is well placed between the brows in a wrathful expression, all the sovereignties of the realm are excellently accomplished — without remainder, without exception. Having performed the protection with this, one becomes like the glorious Vajrakarma. The great sovereign of yoga is perfectly accomplished without remainder, without exception. Mātrkas, witchcraft, and dākinīs too are supremely accomplished. All the accomplishments of the charnel grounds, and all activities, come to be performed.

This is the mudrā of the glorious Vajra Heruka.

The thumbs sit in the hero's cross-legged posture. Hook the tips of the two index fingers. Join the two middle fingers evenly together. The remainder shines as the vajra of joined palms. This vajra jewel mudrā is the empowerment of the self-arisen ones. All the supreme lords of the world are accomplished without remainder, without exception. Having performed the protection with this, one becomes like the glorious Vairocana. The life of all the buddhas is accomplished without remainder, without exception.

This is the mudrā called the Definitive Determination of Immeasurable Life and Primordial Wisdom.

Join the palms in vajra union. Bring the fingers level and hook them outward. Fully extend the two thumbs — this is also called the Vajra Jewel. Placing it swiftly upon the forehead, all wishes are perfectly fulfilled, and all the sovereignties of the realm are supremely accomplished without remainder, without exception.

This is the mudrā of the empowerment of the glorious Precious Jewel.

The buddha jewel, the lotus, likewise the vajra jewel, and the supreme wish-fulfilling precious jewel — the supreme horse is perfectly accomplished. Know this as the mudrā of supreme empowerment by mudrā.

The interlacing of the fingers one with another is explained as the vajra of joined palms. The binding of all the fingers is explained as the vajra binding. Having made the vajra binding, insert the mark of the right thumb — its tip placed inside the index finger of the thumb — and seal it. This is the mudrā of the glory of great bliss, from which all mudrās are self-arisen. The accomplishments of the vast and infinite activities are fulfilled without remainder, without exception.

Having bound the vajra of bliss, insert the middle finger into the interior of the binding. The middle finger bears the tip of the little finger. Fully rotate the vajra mudrā.

By this, all buddhas,
and likewise all heroes,
and all vajra-holders —
in this very life they are accomplished.

This is the mudrā of the vajra of great bliss and glory.

From that, the iron-hook of the middle finger is to be applied to one's own heart center.

This is the mudrā that summons all.

Immediately, by this mudrā, Buddha, Lotus, Vajra-holder, Vajra-Sun — the three realms — having been summoned and brought under sway, one engages in all activities.

This is the mudrā of the glorious vajra iron-hook of great bliss.

Having made the vajra binding, insert the middle finger into the interior of the binding.

The little finger bears the tip of the thumb.

Fully rotate the vajra mudrā.

When through this application even buddhas and bodhisattvas meet no difficulty,

what need is there to speak of other accomplishments,
the supreme of activities, and the infinite and boundless rest?

This is the glorious vajra mudrā of all Tathāgatas.

From the vajra mudrā bound,
join the palms hollow and equipped with the application.
All three realms without exception —
these are caused to descend at once.

This is the glorious mudrā of the descent of the vajra.

From the vajra mudrā bound,
likewise bend the middle fingers inward and recite: "Vajra, vajra" —
the middle finger, the supreme sky-vajra.
When this mudrā is sealed,
one flies, comes, and goes at will.
The glorious lord of all desires,
Vajrasattva, is perfectly accomplished.

This is the mudrā of the glorious vajra-essence.

Remaining in the vajra binding,
the tips of the thumbs are likewise leveled.
Bend the tips of the two index fingers down and bind them as the vajra mudrā.
By this mudrā the yogin
dwells perfectly in all purity.
The awakening mind, the supreme boundless one — all accomplishments are perfectly achieved.

This is the mudrā of the glorious vajra of perfect abiding.

From the vajra-lotus that has been formed,
it rests in the center of the middle-finger binding.
At the tip, level with the little finger, is the arrow-point.
Shoot forth the vajra arrow completely.
When this mudrā is sealed,
Brahmā, Indra (Śakra), and the Gladdener are swiftly stunned by its power, and one accomplishes all three realms.

This is the mudrā of the glorious vajra arrow.

Having fully bound the vajra mudrā, place the middle finger on the outside of the binding.

The seal of the glory of the manifold vajra — all arising is perfectly accomplished.

This is the knowledge of all vajra mudrās.

Having equalized the vowel and consonant series, gather them directly into the sky.

Beneath that, draw the signs:
write all the letters.

Form them into graceful curves with their ascenders and descenders.

The letter ra is to be made as a sprout.

The head circle is to be a crescent,
and the two stop-marks are to be two moons.

This is the supreme and immutable seal of all buddhas, described as the glorious script of the buddhas.

The letters too are supreme and immutable.

If one writes the name of the glorious deity Vajrasattva together with a hymn of praise,

one is liberated from all evil deeds
and all merit is perfectly accomplished.

If one writes the name "Glorious Vajrasattva, Glorious Union," a name of ardent attachment,

one is liberated from all suffering and all happiness is perfectly accomplished.

If one writes the name of attachment for "Glorious Liberation from Great Passion,"

one is liberated from all evil deeds
and dwells perfectly in all liberation.

If one writes the name "Glorious Wrathful One of Stainless Compassion" together with a hymn of praise,

one is liberated from all evil deeds
and the supreme of all accomplishments is also achieved.

If one writes the name of attachment for "Glorious Pure Lotus Passion,"
one is liberated from all evil deeds

and all purity is thoroughly purified.

If one writes the name "Glorious Radiance of the Vajra Sun" together with a hymn of praise,

one is liberated from all evil deeds
and dwells perfectly in all enjoyments.

If one writes the name of attachment for "Glorious Subjugator of the Supreme Steed,"

one is liberated from all evil deeds
and all lordships are supremely accomplished.

Whatever one recites likewise — the vast and boundless accomplishments of action are swiftly brought to completion, each and every one, without remainder.

Now, with regard to whichever deity is supreme among deities, and whichever teacher is the master of each: one recites the names of those respective deities together with words of glory. Having then introduced the student into the maṇḍala, one takes the highest of offerings and confers the vajra-name empowerment — thereby the Tathāgata bestows prophetic assurance upon that one. Through these applications of mudrā one abides perfectly under the vajra name until the heart of awakening is reached, and from there one becomes a buddha.

This concludes the knowledge of the name-mudrā together with hymns of praise.

What is placed upon the crown of the head signifies prostration.

What is touched to the forehead should be understood as the return of salutation.

What is an invitation to the eyebrows is the sign that all buddhas are present.

What is performed with the right hand accomplishes movement through space.

The left hand is the seal-sign of the self-arisen victors.

The accomplishment of moving both eyes:

the left eye signifies an excellent woman,
the right eye signifies an excellent man.

the left signifies a song well received,

the right signifies words well spoken.

The sign of the two nostrils:

both together signify that all buddhas are present.

The right nostril invites incense-offering for oneself,
the left nostril invites fragrance for oneself.

What is done like a licking of the tongue

abides as a seal-sign:

the right is the mudrā of meat,

the left is the mudrā of wine.

the left signifies pleasant touch with a woman,

the right signifies pleasant touch with a man in the same way.

Touching the palate is likewise, and abides as a seal-sign:

it is the supreme speaker of all the conceptualities of the unsurpassed Great Vehicle.

Drawing upward to the heart accomplishes the sign of the self-arisen mudrā, drawing all vajras together and thoroughly gathering saṃsāra.

Touching the center of the navel

abides as a seal-sign:

through the diligent practice of the Middle Way, at the center of the great wheel of Dharma — raising one's own faculty is the seal-sign of the self-arisen ones.

Through bliss arising therefrom

one attains all buddhas.

Both shoulders raised together in praise abide as a seal-sign:

the right is the mudrā of summoning,

the left is for sending away.

embrace wisdom for oneself:

the right accomplishes all things,
the left accomplishes all lordships.

Both right and left fists —
making and releasing the fist:
the right is the mudrā of sealing,
the left is for releasing all people.

Both thighs held firmly together —
right and left alike:
the left signifies keen effort in desire,
the right signifies keen effort in the Dharma.

The signs of the right and left knees as well —
the left is the mudrā of bowing,
the right is the mudrā of full prostration.

Both right and left knees abide fully as seal-signs:
the right is the mudrā of binding,
the left liberates all completely.

Both feet pressing upon the ground —
right and left alike:
the left harms all,
the right defeats all.

There is nothing whatsoever among accomplishments, actions, and bliss that is not accomplished through these.

All actions for one's own benefit are fully accomplished —
each and every one, leaving nothing out.

This concludes the knowledge of the seal-signs.

The sign known as "Atibhu" means prostration.

The expression "Pratindhibhu" should be understood to mean the return of salutation.

The bodhisattva who is without beginning or end, Vajrasattva, the supreme of bliss —
through the buddha-mudrā of bliss, it is said: "E-ma-o — this is bliss!"
"E-ma-o" is the glorious name of bliss.

Whatever is spoken as Vajrasattva —

one is liberated from all wrongdoing, and all bliss is fully accomplished.

Supreme bliss, E-ma-o — bliss — and likewise the lamp, and Shi-shi:

the Sealer, the Deluder,
the Devourer, and the Life-Increaser;
buddha, awakening, the wheel of Dharma, and likewise the Victor over the three realms —

all the scepters of desire are the mudrā of sign-mudrā.

The faces of the horse and the vajra,
and likewise the radiance of the vajra, and the zombie-woman who reduces to ash —
these are the signs of all the buddhas.

The flute, the stringed instruments,
and likewise the single-stringed, the drum that is dense, and the clay drum —
these are the sign-mudrā of the buddhas.

Flower offerings and incense offerings, and likewise the offering of butter-lamps, and the offerings of incense, and aromatic substances —
these are the signs of the enjoyment mudrā.

These and so forth, the limitless supreme:
the dharmadhātu, equal and unequal,
boundless as the expanse of space —
these are the signs of all the goddesses.

The raising of an eyebrow is the four arrows.
Bhaga, liṅga, E-ma-o — bliss.
The skull is explained as the lotus.
The khaṭvāṅga too is the great victory-banner.

The buddha-mudrā abides in the lotus.
It is the nectar of all bliss.

By the sign-mudrā of the buddhas,

The maṇḍala is explained as the wheel.

That itself is explained as the sacred pledge (samaya).

Since all the gods are assembled,
all noble beings are gathered together.

The supreme sacred wheel of the assembly is the gathering of all beloved ones.

By the signs of all the buddhas,
it is said: so too are the beloved ones assembled.

Through the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
all maṇḍalas are explained.

Since all goddesses are gathered together,
all are auspicious with manifold fortune.

Through the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
uniting oneself with all the buddhas,
so as to know all aspects through wisdom,
he is explained as the master of all.

The master of all, fully abiding,
since all the goddesses are assembled,
through the supreme ones of all the buddhas,
it is throughout of manifold good fortune.

The disciple of that master who is accomplished — being accomplished in the wake of the accomplished — by the secret of the sign of the buddhas, is fully explained as the victory-banner.

All other disciples beyond that — those of superior, middling, and lesser rank —
by the signs of all the buddhas
are explained as bodhisattvas.

All the buddhas are the supreme jewel;
the crown ornament is the unchanging, the sacred.
The supreme royal sovereignty of all the buddhas —
so the self-arisen ones have declared.

The crown ornament of a garland of skulls, and the crest-jewels of the buddhas —
by the sign-mudrā of the buddhas
are explained in the manner of the glorious lotus.

The buddhas share one single intrinsic nature,
and likewise the lotus shares one single intrinsic nature.
The empowerment of all, the great empowerment —
so it is declared, since all aims are accomplished.

The accomplishment of the supreme offering is explained as the substance of wealth.
That the heart too is the supreme of wealth — so it is explained as the sign-mudrā of the buddhas.

Camphor and red sandalwood combined are explained as great blood.
The glorious one placed in the center of the assembly is the ground from which all arise.

Cattle made from flour-dough, smeared with red sandalwood, and meat made from ground-flour food —
this is what is called the king's food.

Then the confirmation of accomplishment:
this abides under the name "sacred pledge."

"Supreme bliss, supreme bliss" — so it is said.
By all the buddhas of supreme bliss,
the bliss of the mudrā is proclaimed as supreme.

Likewise E-ma-o, bliss, and luminous awareness too, dwelling fully —
Shi-shi: existence too is existence.
And since all the Tathāgatas also cannot make it pass away,
by the sign-mudrā of the buddhas,
the mudrā is explained as the sacred pledge.

The mudrā too is explained as union,
and union too is explained as the mudrā.
The glorious union of Vajrasattva —

all unions are explained as this.

I am the variegated sacred pledge,
Vajrasattva, supreme bliss.

By the sign-mudrā of the buddhas,
all unions are explained as this.

Its near enjoyments
are all three realms without exception.
Its forms and sounds and fragrances, tastes and touches — intoxicating with bliss.

the dance performed by one's own power —
the emanation of the supreme horse is declared as the supreme sign.

Ḍī — so called — is the ḍākinī (Skt. ḍākinī).
Here in the three realms she is fully examined.
The mudrās of those who move through space are renowned as "sky-goers," the ḍākinīs.
Every manifold mudrā
is one who moves through all of space.
The union of all the buddhas
is renowned as the ḍākinī.

The one who accomplishes lordship over the illusory dance is named Araḷi.
The ḍākinī too is Araḷi —
the sign-mudrā of the buddhas.
The union of all the buddhas,

The seal of the expansion of supreme bliss:

Ema! O bliss — the Enchantress!

Snāngwa is the Devourer.

Hūṃ Śi Śi is the Life-Increaser.

Most steadfast, supremely steadfast, universally steadfast, greatly steadfast —

Buddha Vajradhara,

the Lord of the World, and the Sky-Born:

these will become known, will become pure, will become accomplished.

Upon entering, may you be brought under mastery.

Oṃ Oṃ A A — all is declared —

these are the sign-mudrās of the buddhas.

Becoming one who knows all things, and likewise knowing bliss —
"Om̐ Sarva Vid" is what is said, and these are the sign-mudrās of the buddhas.

Om̐ Ru Ru Sphuru Jvala Tiṣṭha Siddha Locanī Sarva Artha Sādhani Svāhā.

Knowing the accomplishment of the wheel (Skt. cakra) and for the sake of the ultimate peace nearby —
the self-arisen Blessed One, the buddha, the great Vairocana, the sovereign —
these are the sign-mudrās of the buddhas.
This is declared as excellent fortune.

Koṭakṣa. Koṭaba. Koṭabśta. Koṭārika.
Kolakṣa. Kolaba. Kola. Kolabśta.
Kolabhastatthā.

Vajrapāṇi, for his own benefit — whoever recites these names:
to that one, the vajra-holding king,
like a servant, will grant accomplishments.
He will bestow in abundance sovereignty, wealth, and treasures as well.
He will fulfill every wish and likewise render all enemies nothing.
The eye, the ear, the nose,
the tongue and the body likewise —
form, sound, smell,
taste, and likewise touch — for one's own benefit.
The vajra-weapon Bedi,
renowned among enemies:
by this one becomes Vajrapāṇi, and is also called the Vajra-in-hand.
All afflictions are exhausted,
and all enemies are likewise exhausted.
Because Vajrapāṇi subdues them,
he is explained to be a yakṣa.

Heruka, the glorious one, is the great vajra, supreme in reducing to ash and destroying.

He is the great wrathful one of all buddhas —
this is explained as a sign-mudrā.

The blazing vajra, supremely terrifying.
The khaṭvāṅga is the great victory banner.
The skull, the skull-cup, the lotus vessel,
the great blood, and the great honey,
the white thief, the utterly bewildered,
the walking corpse, and the smoke-maker, the fierce one, and the one with a furrowed brow —
these seven goddesses are the signs.

Protect swiftly! Glorious Victorious One!
Scatter like ash, thoroughly!
Haṃ haṃ hrī hūṃ — all thus proclaimed — this is the sign-mudrā of the buddhas.

Sport! Contemplate! Likewise!
Let him sport! Let him be slain!
Mārṭa phaṭ phaṭ — thus it is said —
this is the sign of all buddhas.

The great king, the vajra-holder, the vidyā of the noble sovereign lord —
by the sign-mudrā of the buddhas
this is declared to be excellent fortune.

The king Avalokiteśvara, proclaimed as "Lord of the World" —
by the signs of all the buddhas,
that too is declared excellent fortune.

Purity, accomplishment, and likewise wisdom,
the increase of miraculous power and prosperity,
the one who beholds, and Tārā, the Vast Lady and the Frowning One,
she called the Lotus-Dweller, the Lady Sovereign of the Vajra-Lotus, Padma-Devī of the great family — these are declared by the sign-mudrā of the buddhas.

Ākāśagarbha (the Heart of Space), encompassing all directions, the fulfiller of all hopes — renowned as excellent fortune.

Vajra Sun, the great jewel.

Tvām, baba, ṭaṭa,
and traṭa traṭa — all proclaimed —
this is the sign of all buddhas:
empowerment, treasures,
the pinnacle of the victory banner, the great offering,
the manifold lotus, the all-seeing eye,
and likewise the all-world,
the great awakening mind of all awakening, the manifold vajra unsurpassed —
by the aspiration to purity in all things, causing all worlds to tremble utterly,
the supreme horse, endowed with lotus-glory —
this is shown by the signs as excellent fortune.

By these sign-mudrās,
through the determined practice of maṇḍala engagement,
together with a skilled and knowledgeable companion,
all accomplishments will be achieved.

Know the sign-mudrās. Act with close engagement, they say.
Proceeding in accordance with understanding of the proper mode,
with close engagement toward all accomplishments,
the immutable and supreme will be achieved.

Everywhere, from all sides, in everything,
oneself always, in every aspect —
the vast array of karmic accomplishments, all without remainder, will be swiftly achieved.

Enter into it thoroughly, they say.

By proceeding in accordance with understanding of the proper mode,
the supreme vajra of body, speech, and mind will display its magical manifestations.

Enter into it thoroughly, they say.

By proceeding in accordance with understanding of the proper mode, the dākinī, illusory, the supreme bliss —

all, leaving nothing out, will be achieved.

Train in it thoroughly, they say.

By proceeding in accordance with understanding of the proper mode, all purifications of obscurations and accomplishments
will be achieved, all of them, leaving nothing out.

Rejoice in it fully, they say.

By proceeding in accordance with understanding of the proper mode, all activities of offering — women and precious objects supreme — will be swiftly accomplished.

Overcome it, they say.

By proceeding in accordance with understanding of the proper mode, all the tasks of the wrathful and powerful
will be achieved, all of them, leaving nothing out.

Know the wisdom-mudrā.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva —
whatever form and shape it possesses —

by uniting all in oneself as the vajra, the immutable and supreme is accomplished.

Everywhere, in every way, entirely, oneself always, in all aspects —
the supreme accomplishment of Prasenā is achieved completely, leaving nothing out, without remainder.

The union of all buddhas,
the supreme bliss of the dākinī illusion —
in accordance with the proper mode of true reality, one sees and hears.

From earth, water, fire, wind, and space,
from all the elements in every way,
one sees and hears everything.

All consciousnesses are accomplished,
and one becomes the self of all, entirely.

In all the qualities of desire and in all the activities of consciousness, one sees and knows everything.

Attached with longing to the lotus,
by opening the manifold lotus,
the manifold Prasenā
is seen and heard.

In flowers, incense, supreme lamps,
perfume, and all offerings,
all consciousnesses being accomplished,
one sees and hears everything.

Know the mudrā of consciousness.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva,
whatever form and shape it possesses —

From the supreme ash of the abodes of the māmos, and from charnel grounds and divine abodes,
the protection of all foreheads is to be made as a bindū mark with three finger-lines.
When the directions, the intermediate points, the sky, and the earth are bound,
it is unsurpassed among all protections.

This is the protection called the Glorious Samaya of the Vajra Ash.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva,
whatever form and shape it possesses —

At the bank of the water's reflection where rivers flow into the ocean, with the supreme peaceful water of divine substances,
by sprinkling and pouring,
by performing ablution and anointing,
when the directions, the intermediate points, the sky, and the earth are bound,
it is unsurpassed among all protections.

This is the mudrā called the Glorious Ocean of Stainless Vajra Nectar.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva,
whatever form and shape it possesses —

Within a human skull,
mustard seed is to be cultivated and taken up.
The leaves and mustard oil are to be eaten as food.
Likewise, one anoints the head, and with its fruit,

when the directions, the intermediate points, the sky, and the earth are bound,
it is unsurpassed among all protections.

This is the mudrā called the Glorious Accomplishment of All Aims.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva,
whatever form and shape it possesses —

With the lips well pressed by the teeth, and with the auspicious left shoulder swaying, clearly turning in the manner of a wheel to the side,
when one bestows blessing above and below,
one seals the three pure places.

Those who are difficult to tame and those of evil nature are accomplished in the essential nature of all buddhas.

This is the mudrā called the Glorious Auspicious One, the Blessing of the Sovereign Lord of the Supreme Abode of All.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva,
whatever form and shape it possesses —

By gathering together with all goddesses, entirely and diversely, the auspicious one is fully accomplished in bliss.

The moment this seal is impressed,
all buddhas bestow their blessing.

Through that very blessing,
one comes to meet all buddhas.

Through union with all buddhas,
one becomes equal to all buddhas.

By being equal to all buddhas,
all buddhas are perfectly accomplished.

The union of all buddhas —
this is the protection called the Glorious Auspicious Samaya.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva,
possessing the union of all buddhas in oneself —

well and completely in the manner of the wheel — blessed above and below,
if one performs protection with this,

then all those hard to tame, those wretched beings, throughout the entirety of all three realms, shall receive the blessing of all buddhas.

This is the mudrā called the Glorious Lord of Place, Supreme among All.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva,
through the emanation of Glorious Heruka —
the master of all, throughout all and everywhere:
the protection of all is immovable and great.
Plague, poison, weapon-sickness and disease,
the afflictions of ḍākinīs, demons and spirits, māras and all manner of evil guidance —
all of these are immediately and completely pacified.

This is the mudrā called the Glorious Emanation, the Descent of Glorious Vajraheruka.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva —
whatever form and shape it possesses — through the opening of the manifold lotus,
all shall be accomplished free of obscuration.
Freed completely from all obscurations,
one shall attain all that is pure.
When all that is pure is fully purified,
the supreme and immutable shall be accomplished.

This is the protection called the Vajra Lotus of Wisdom Unobscured with Respect to All Phenomena.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva:
when one enters into the mode of gazing upon the blazing one,
the fire of the supremely blazing vajra becomes utterly terrifying, beyond endurance.
If one performs protection with this,
it blazes like the fire at the end of a cosmic age.
By this, the three lower destinies and all three realms are reduced to dust.

This is the mudrā of the great samaya, the great glorious blazing of the terrifying fire of the Great Vajra, burning beyond endurance.

The glorious union with Vajrasattva:
by acting in accordance with whatever mode is fitting — binding the two vajra fists and employing them as a method of donning armor — two at the crown of the head and two at the brow, two at the chest and two at the back, binding with a vajra garland,
and with the jewels at the crown of the buddhas, bound as a method with streaming ribbons, and released from the edges together with a fringe — having employed the method of flowing ribbons, confirm it by striking the palms together.
If one performs protection with this,
one becomes like the glorious Vajrasattva.
The indestructible and indivisible
vajra body is supremely accomplished.
Plague, disease, poison, and weapon-sickness,
the afflictions of ḍākinīs, demons and spirits,
and all that brings disorder to the limbs — none of these can approach one who is protected by this.

This is the mudrā called the Glorious Vajra Armor.

Here ends the knowledge of the mudrās of all the protections.

Displaying the manner of the Dharma bodhisattva, with the two vajra fists
and a gaze of peaceful contemplation, all plagues and poisons are entirely cleared away.
Binding the two vajra fists,
binding the little fingers as if they were iron hooks, pressing down with the even tips of the index fingers —
this repels all illnesses.
Fully turning and lifting this upward,
it is to be placed comfortably at the brow.
Without remainder, leaving nothing out,
it clears away all suffering.

This is the Glorious Vajra: healing illness of the body at the brow-line.

From the vajra lock that has been made,
the fingers pointing directly toward one another —
without remainder, leaving nothing out,
one is liberated from all pain and affliction.
From child-sickness, phlegm-disorders, and tumors,
and from dropsy and the like — one is freed from all.
Once this itself is accomplished,
no illness whatsoever can cause harm.

This eliminates all pain and affliction.

The accomplished glorious eye bond —
if one wipes both eyes with this,
by this supreme accomplished mudrā, even the blind shall come to see.
Having brought oneself into union,
with the firm vajra fist, drawing it in the manner of a straight line from the head, direct the face straight ahead and drink.
All plagues, poisons, and spirits — seized by the glorious vajra fist, through being in union with one's deity,
if one drinks, all of these are entirely eliminated.

This is the medicine of the brain. Tathāgatagarbha svasiho.

Here, the supreme recitation for the ear —
free from pain, one swiftly finds release.
It is the giver of freedom from all pain.

With the right hand,
if one binds the crown of the head with the thought,
the child shall be healed and free from illness,
protected in all things and finding happiness.
This is the healing of youth.

With the right hand,
form the shape of a nāga's coil.
Displaying the manner of blazing and bringing down, accomplish the works against poison.
Blazing, subduing, binding,
and the poisons that consume — all these it eliminates.

Seized by harm, scorpion bite,
and the restoration of the dead to life — the supreme:
this is the coil mudrā.

With the right thumb and middle finger,
and the fist of the left hand clenched,
if one touches the middle finger,
one shall be freed from all spirits.
This is the rite for curing poison and for spirits.

With the three banner fingers bound together in pairs, with the two middle fingers knotted,
the fingertip crowned with the little finger, bound fully in the vajra mudrā, completely turned and lifted, placed at the interval of the brows —
all works of the ḍākinīs, without exception, every last one of them, shall be accomplished.
With this mudrā sealed, those of all three abodes, without remainder — sealed, stupefied, devoured, even those reduced to ash shall be restored to life.
This is the frown mudrā of the glorious Vajra Heruka, known as the Mother.

With the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
if one rides upon all horses,
the horses shall be healed, free from illness,
the weakly born shall be brought to the end of weakness and become swift.
This is the mudrā of the glorious supreme horse.

With the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
if one rides upon all elephants,
all the elephants shall be healed, free from illness,
the weakly born shall become joyful and willing.
Śrī Vajrasattvā svaṃ siho.
This is the supreme recitation for the ear.
Birds shall be healed and live free from illness,
and shall come to speak in human speech.
This is the healing mudrā for birds.

With the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
if one holds affection for all the prosperous,
the trees shall be free from illness, shall not wither,
and shall always bear flowers and fruit.
From the sacred text on cultivating trees, whatever rite of union is taught — with this mudrā, all of it shall be accomplished just as one wishes in mind.
This is the knowledge of the tree-cultivation mudrā.

Cast by a device, cast without a device, likewise cast by hand,
caught after being thrown,
and the scattering of strength — these are five.
The analysis of the weapons of the self-arisen ones.
Five by five mudrās are fully present.
Explained by the glorious Vajrasattva, those supreme ones shall be taught.

Form, ease of union,
universal union, and serving as a guide, filling, throwing, and clarity.

Pressing the earth with the shuffling of the feet, pressing the earth with the spreading of the feet,
the maṇḍalas too shall be pressed down.
Through extension and contraction, one presses the three abodes.
This is the form mudrā.

Without looseness, with a firm shape, supple and displaying the limbs, broad and full, perfectly pure —
the body mudrā is the one of ease.
By this, pressing upon the body, plague, poison, plant poison, affliction by ḍākinīs, and spirits —
none of these shall ever manage to take hold.
This is the broad and full mudrā.

Drawing toward one's own heart in the manner of attraction, with ease, taking up the bow,

the right hand performing the dance,
and the arrow released — it shall be accomplished.
This is the mudrā of the glorious Victor over the Three Realms.

With the left hand held steady and good, without fault, drawing the right hand in,
the bowstring drawn out gently,
all beings shall be summoned.
This is the mudrā of summoning all.

Filling the ear channel, rounded in the middle,
filled rightly as is fitting,
with the syllable OM alone held in one's own mouth — beings shall be seized.
This is the seizing mudrā.

Having drawn out as is fitting,
and having held according to the rite, there one separates slightly — by filling, all things shall be accomplished.
This is the filling mudrā.

With the bow, the target is to be obscured.
Look with smiling eyes.
The gaze directed toward the bow,
and swiftly released — the supreme is accomplished.
This is the mudrā of conquering with the arrow and bow.

Sharp upon its four sides, and likewise encompassed on all sides — having encircled dominion from the right side, praising it accordingly,
pressing down with the foot and stamping with the hoof,
with the supreme mudrā of ten piercings, the great sovereignties of the three realms are mastered with ease and brought into one's use.
This is the glorious Victor over the Three Realms.

Released forcefully, released evenly, likewise released like lightning, and likewise stirred as lightning —

these accomplish the mudrās and the methods.
This is the mudrā of all methods.

Lowering and to the right, straight and likewise upward thrust — these are the mudrās of reversal, and the three abodes are to be reversed.
This is the mudrā of reversing all without exception.

Planting everywhere and planting firmly, planting all and the upward-thrusting dance — these are the mudrās of seizure, and the three abodes are likewise seized.
This is the mudrā of seizing all.

Throughout all, from every side, for all,
ever, in one's own nature and in every form —
the supreme mudrā of the examination of arrow and bow, unchanging, accomplishes the supreme.
This is the knowledge of the mudrā of all weapons.

Within both ring fingers,
the thumb is to be placed well.
Then, having formed a fist,
the index finger is to be drawn in well.
The vajra-fist, the glorious mudrā —
it abides in the glory of Vajrasattva.
The infinitely vast accomplishments of enlightened activity are all accomplished swiftly without remainder.
This is the mudrā of the glorious vajra-fist.

Having held the vajra-fist well,
I insert it within my thumb.
Since the activities of pacification are supremely accomplished, all are accomplished without exception and without remainder.
This is the fist of all the Tathāgatas.

Having held the vajra-fist well,
the two little fingers are fully extended.
All the activities of the ḍākinīs are accomplished without exception and without remainder.

This is the mudrā of the fist of the glorious Vajra Heruka.

From the striking fist as held,
the middle fingers are placed upon the thumbs.
The glorious lotus-fist is accomplished and is applied to all activities of purification.
This is the glorious lotus-fist.

The supreme fist of vajra and jewel, perfect in all that it bestows, accomplishes one's own purposes and activities without exception and without remainder.
This is the mudrā of the glorious vajra-jewel fist.

Having gloriously held the vajra-fist,
all fingers are entirely gripped.
All activities of courage
are accomplished without exception and without remainder.
This is the knowledge of the mudrā of all activities.

Extending the foot and pressing down,
and the postures of bending and lifting,
by means of the union of right and left,
all forms are to be pressed down.

With the power of the faultless, shamelessly,
having pressed down upon the glory of Vairocana, all awakening is fully drawn in,
and one acts in that conduct for oneself.

With the power of the faultless, shamelessly,
having pressed down upon the glory of the Vajra-holder, all accomplishments are fully drawn in,
and one acts in that conduct for oneself.

With the power of the faultless, shamelessly,
having pressed down upon the glory of the sovereign Avalokiteśvara, all glorious ones are fully drawn in,
and one acts in that conduct for oneself.

With the power of the faultless, shamelessly,
having pressed down upon the glory of Vajra-Sun, all enjoyments are fully drawn in,
and one acts in that conduct for oneself.

With the power of the faultless, shamelessly,
having pressed down upon the glory of the Supreme Noble Steed, all lords of sovereignty are fully drawn in,
and one acts in that conduct for oneself.

The perfections of awakening, accomplishments, dhāraṇīs, the grounds, vidyās and mudrās — having pressed upon these,
one acts in that conduct for oneself.

With the power of the faultless, shamelessly,
having pressed down upon the supreme lord of sovereignty — from the three-eyed one, the three accomplishments are drawn in,
and one acts in that conduct for oneself.

With the power of the faultless, shamelessly,
having pressed down upon the greatly powerful one,
all the heroines are fully drawn in from the heart,
and one acts in that conduct for oneself.

With the power of the faultless, shamelessly,
having pressed down upon the lord of living beings, all the Tārās freed from yearning are fully drawn in,
and one acts in that conduct for oneself.

With the power of the faultless, shamelessly,
having pressed down upon the lord of supreme joy,
all joy is drawn in from every self,
and one acts in that conduct for oneself.

The goddesses of fear and the rest,
the māmakī witchcraft goddesses, and the ḍākinīs — having pressed upon these,
one acts in that conduct for oneself.

Likewise Kubera and the rest,
those who follow the practice of accomplishing vidyās, and the kings of men as well —

having pressed upon these, one acts in that conduct.

All things whatsoever, moving and unmoving,
without exception —
the yogin, being identical with that, presses upon them all,
and acts in that conduct for oneself.

This is the knowledge of the mudrā of the glorious Vajra-Subduer.

A fist held at the heart — this is declared the mudrā of women. Through it, every union with women, without exception, without remainder, is accomplished. Making the gesture of swaying the left hand, then drawing the right hand upward to one's own heart — by this, all women come under one's power.

This is the glorious Vajra-Swaying.

The glorious one who holds the manifold lotus: with the left hand making a striking fist, and with the right hand rising upward, perform the meditative absorption of the Sovereign of Buddhas — all buddhas are caused to leap forth.

With the left hand resounding with the peal of a bell, and with the right hand raising the vajra upward and turning it, all illusions are brought forth.

This is the glorious Vajra-Illusion Sovereign Queen.

The left hand is placed upon the left thigh; with the tip of the right index finger, one holds the supreme lotus; the right hand, palm outward, is placed upon the right thigh. This is the mudrā that removes all non-virtue.

In the manner of drawing to one's own heart, the left hand holds a precious jewel; the right hand holds a jewel, a woman, and the rest, fulfilling every hope. This fulfills all intentions entirely.

In the manner of drawing to one's own heart, one holds the supreme manifold lotus; with the right hand in the Vajra-Swaying gesture, one attains supreme sovereignty.

This is the knowledge of the mudrā of the Sovereign Lady of All Accomplishments.

Thus did the Blessed One Vajrasattva proclaim.

This is the ninth chapter, the Reflection on the Mudrā of the Manifold Commitment in the Union of All Buddhas — the Ḍākinī Illusion, Summit of Bliss — which sets forth all the various aspects.

Then, so that all these manifold things may be accomplished — the knowledge of the mudrā too being fully achieved — by means of the manifold union, the manifold shall be taught.

Through brow, eye, tooth, lip, mouth, body, foot, and hand,
dancing in accordance with proper form,
all mudrās are fully unloosed.

Through the glorious union of Vajrasattva,
gathered together with all the goddesses,
the manifold and fortunate one is brought to accomplishment in supreme bliss.

When one seals with this mudrā,
all buddhas bestow their blessing.
When one is thoroughly blessed,
all buddhas come to gather.

Through union equal to all buddhas,
one becomes equal to all buddhas.
By being equal to all buddhas,
all buddhas are fully accomplished.

Through the very power of the glorious union of Vajrasattva, in every respect, in short,
all mudrās are accomplished each in their own way.
The body that the eye never tires of seeing reveals itself as everything in every form.

Even the perfected noble ones bestow their acclaim:
"Excellent! Excellent!"

Bestowing upon all the very nature of itself as an enjoyment of whatever is desired, the supreme accomplishment of joy arising from perfect fulfillment of every aspiration
is given forth.

From the first, the origin of all,
vast assemblies of offerings arranged in boundless great clouds of offering, perform worship as the very nature of all.

The glorious left hand, swaying gracefully, and the glorious right hand place a lotus cupped at the forehead, while my eyes gaze upward.

This is the complete accomplishment of all mudrās of Vajrasattva.

Accomplishments that soar upward,
and boundless activities, are swiftly accomplished.

When one seals with this mudrā,
none of the three realms are left out:
those sealed and stupefied and consumed,
and even those reduced to ash, are revived.

Thus did the Blessed One Vajrasattva speak.

Altogether auspicious and varied in fortune, this is the mudrā known as the Glorious Vajra-Lotus Upward-Soaring Eye, the mudrā of all variety of forms, and it is called the Response of the Mudrā.

Through the gathering of all buddhas, one is forever endowed with immeasurable life.
One proclaims words of truth reaching to the boundless expanse of space.

The extent of its power and qualities, its praises, along with all thoughts of the boundless and the infinite, and everything of this — none can fully express in words.

Accomplished through its power and nature, perfected always through its essential nature,
it bestows bliss, each one accomplished in its own way.
This is the supreme secret, the highest of the highest.

The victors do not come to purify and cleanse actions for the sake of sentient beings, rendering all things perfectly pure.

In this there is no obstacle, and no māra either.

Through conceptual thought it is not accomplished; one cannot arrive at liberation that way.

I do not become instability and I do not become a māra.

Nor do I bind myself merely for the sake of making things stable.

But if one accomplishes me through one's own bliss, supreme accomplishment will make my teaching manifest.

Thus spoke the All-Variegated One.

The Blessed Tathāgata was ever joyful.

Glorious Vajrasattva spoke well, and all were moved to open praise and great delight.

This is the tenth chapter.

When one offers with the pure lotus of the joyful adherence of the many-aspected, and follows in worship made clear by the bliss of the supreme horse's yoga, the fortunate summit of joy, the sacred yoga of supreme bliss, will be accomplished through the samaya bliss of the supremely excellent nature of bliss.

Thus did the Blessed One, Glorious Vajrasattva, speak.

The Union Equal to All Buddhas, the Ḍākinī Illusory Bliss of

Translator's Notes

- The title in Sanskrit is retained as given in the text; it identifies this as the Uttaratāntra of the Sarvabuddhasamāyoga cycle, a well-known tantra of the Mahāyoga class.

The phrase rendered "the illusory net of the ḍākinī" follows the Tibetan title closely. The Sanskrit Ḍākinījāla corresponds to Tibetan mkha' 'gro ma sgyu ma, "illusory ḍākinī."

The passage discussing ḍā, śaṃ, and the term ḍākinī is a traditional niruktī-style etymological analysis embedded in the tantra itself; this style is standard in tantric literature and is not historical linguistics.

The verse beginning "Neither devoid of attachment nor bound to it, nor yet is the Middle Way apprehended" is doctrinally significant: it asserts a non-dual position beyond both the extreme of attachment and the extreme of its negation, and beyond a merely conceptual Middle Way — a characteristic Yoginī-tantra formulation.

The final verse in the passage is incomplete as given; it ends mid-sentence after "by uniting oneself with all through it," which corresponds to the Tibetan ending at that point.

- The passage contains a section that is doctrinally provocative: the verses stating that no bathing, vows, or austerities are needed, and that one may eat, move, and behave freely, reflect a genuine antinomian strand of Vajrayāna argumentation in which the yoga of self-identification with the deity supersedes external observances. This is a standard position in certain tantric texts and is rendered straightforwardly without softening. The phrase rendered "lord of all the various seals" translates a compound meaning literally "the self, the lord, of all the various seals," emphasizing self-identification with the maṇḍala deity. The title rendered "the illusory dākinī of supreme bliss" is a name or epithet of the tantra or its practice lineage and is kept consistent with the preceding passage.

- The term rasāyana (here transliterated from the Tibetan phonetic rendering རས་ཡེ་ནུ་བ་) is a Sanskrit technical term from both Āyurveda and tantric contexts meaning an alchemical or vital essence practice conducive to longevity, rejuvenation, and bliss; it is used here in its tantric register as a quality of the supreme bliss-nature of buddhahood. The colophon-style phrase midway through the passage marks the close of the second chapter and then immediately resumes with what appears to be a separate hymnic section; this structure is maintained in the translation.

- The phrase rendered "equal to the dharmadhātu and yet unequal to it" translates a deliberate doctrinal paradox: the bliss is simultaneously commensurate with the dharmadhātu (as its natural expression) and incommensurable with it (as beyond all measure). This is likely an intentional non-dual formulation rather than a textual difficulty.

The closing line of the passage is incomplete as given; it ends mid-verse with "the great siddhi of all buddhas," and the translation reflects this without fabricating a conclusion.

"Brahma's entrance-dispelling great lord" is a difficult epithet. The Tibetan reads རྒྱལ་པོ་འཕེལ་བའི་འཇམ་དཔལ་ལྷ་མོ་, which could mean "the great lord who dispels or supersedes Brahma's domain." The rendering is intentionally literal as the precise doctrinal referent is unclear.

- The colophon-like phrase rendered "the fourth chapter: the Reflection on the Glorious Samaya" closes what appears to be a chapter division in a tantric text. The term rendered "reflection" translates rtog pa, which in tantric context can mean "thought," "conception," "section," or "chapter-reflection"; the doctrinal usage here is as a chapter or section heading within a samaya-oriented tantra.

The phrase "the dance of Buddha Supreme Bliss" renders sangs rgyas bde mchog gar bya, where bde mchog (Skt. Śrī Cakrasaṃvara or Paramānanda) functions here as the title of the deity or the quality of supreme bliss associated with the buddha-nature; the precise tantric referent may be Cakrasaṃvara, though the text does not name him explicitly.

The final line breaks off mid-sentence, as in the source passage, and the translation preserves this open ending faithfully.

- The phrase rendered "hexasyllable mantra" translates རྩ་མཁན་མཆོད་པའི་མཆོད་པ་, which refers to the ṣaḍakṣara, the six-syllable mantra. This is most naturally the six-syllable formula associated with Vajrasattva or Avalokiteśvara in tantric contexts; the exact referent depends on the broader ritual cycle of this text.

The compound རྩ་མཁན་མཆོད་པའི་མཆོད་པ་, translated as "vajra-interlocking gesture," is a specific tantric hand gesture in which the fingers interlock in a particular way; the precise Sanskrit equivalent is uncertain but the gesture is well attested in Vajrayāna ritual manuals.

The final partial line "Entirely, on all sides, all things —" represents a genuinely incomplete sentence at the passage boundary and is rendered as such to preserve continuity for the next passage.

- The phrase rendered "Viṣṇu (Indrajit)" translates རྩ་མཁན་མཆོད་པའི་མཆོད་པ་, literally "remover of obstacles" or

"destroyer of what enters," a Tibetan rendering of a divine name. This likely refers to Viṣṇu, though some commentators identify it with Indra's epithet Śakra or a related deity. The identification is not entirely certain and a note in a scholarly edition would be warranted.

The line རྒྱལ་པོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ is difficult. རྒྱལ་པོ་ལྷ་མོ་ ("the great lord of horses" or possibly a transliteration of a divine name) may refer to Hayagrīva or to Śiva in another aspect. The reading remains uncertain.

The final line རྒྱལ་པོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ is an abrupt ending mid-sentence that continues into the next passage; it contains a mantra-invocation and the khaṭvāṅga (a tantric staff-scepter), and is rendered as given.

- The epithets Heruka, Padmanartteśvara (Lord of the Lotus Dance), Vajrasūrya (Vajra Sun), and Ākāśagarbha are kept in Sanskrit as deity names. The phrase rendered "great eternal self" reflects the Tibetan bdag nyid chen po rtag pa, a significant doctrinal term appearing in tathāgatagarbha discourse where the dharmakāya is characterized by the four qualities including selfhood and permanence; this is intentional and not a scribal error. The passage "breathed forth liberation" translates dbugs phyung ba, a technical tantric term indicating a deity's exhaled liberation of beings, here rendered literally as "liberation breathed forth." The phrase "Conqueror of the Three Worlds" translates rgyal ba 'jig rten gsum rgyal, likely an epithet of one of the deity-families rather than a distinct proper name.
- The "great thieving rat" is a striking image that likely refers to a deity or wrathful emanation in the tantric context; it may also be a coded term for a particular siddhi-force that purifies all obstacles, but the precise referent is uncertain.

"Bhīmā" is a goddess-consort figure in this tantric context, possibly an aspect of Śiva's retinue or a deity associated with the "supreme lord" (Śiva). "Rudrāṇī" is the consort of Rudra (Śiva). "The mistress of pleasure and pain among humans" is rendered from a somewhat compressed Tibetan; the phrase "dga' sdug mi yi dbang phyug ma" literally means "the mistress-sovereign of human pleasure and pain."

"Ucchaiḥśravas" is the supreme divine horse of Indian mythology, used here as a tantric symbol of the emanation body and swift liberating activity; the Tibetan "rta mchog" means "supreme horse."

The phrase "equal and unequal with the dharmadhātu" is a deliberate paradox pointing to the non-dual nature that transcends both identity and difference with the basic space of phenomena.

- The term rasāyana (rendered throughout as rasāyana) is a Sanskrit loanword appearing in Tibetan transliteration, referring to a tantric alchemical or vital-essence preparation with soteriological efficacy; it is left in Sanskrit as it is a technical term with no clean English equivalent.

The passage "seeing the fully awakened buddhas — the sun and moon — arising" renders a phrase that may refer literally to the arising of solar and lunar maṇḍalas in visualization practice, or to actual celestial bodies at dawn as auspicious signs; the doctrinal context here is likely the former, but genuine ambiguity exists.

The final verse section shifts to first person in a way that may indicate liturgical speech attributed to the practitioner or to Vajrasattva; the grammar does not definitively resolve this, and the translation preserves the ambiguity.

- The term Arali in the opening stanza appears to be a tantric seed-syllable or deity name used as a ritual invocation rather than a translatable word; it is rendered as a proper name accordingly.

The term ṣaḍava refers to a class of musical mode or musician in Indian musical theory, paired here with gandharva as a class of celestial musicians; both are rendered by their Sanskrit terms.

The four "streams" in the four parallel emanation stanzas — desire, great joy, wrath, and vitality — reflect a tantric schema of taming sentient beings through four corresponding modalities; this is a structurally significant doctrinal pattern.

The seed-syllables and mantra fragments such as Jaḥ Hūṃ Baṃ Hoḥ, Tena Te Te Hūṃ, Ru lu ru lu Hūṃ bhyo Hūṃ, and Hūṃ Śibhiṣ are left as phonetic renderings, as is standard practice for mantra passages in Vajrayāna texts.

The final half-line "By the descent of the Teacher's mudrā" ends mid-sentence, consistent with the passage being marked as a continuation only.

- The phrase rendered "the infinite activities of all offerings, without remainder and without omission" reflects a Sanskrit-style compound construction in the Tibetan; the doubling of negation around "remainder" echoes the preceding passages' refrain and is deliberate.

The empowerment substance described — vermillion, camphor, and red sandalwood — is a standard tantric abhiṣeka element; "tastes gently with the ring finger and thumb" translates a technical instruction for consuming the empowerment substance in a ritualized gesture.

"Drinking the great blood from the heart" is a deliberate, vivid simile for the gravity of the samaya violation: just as blood drawn from the heart destroys the body utterly, so violation of this vow would bring irreversible harm from all the buddha-masters, bodhisattvas, and yogins. This is a standard form of samaya oath in Mahāyoga and Anuttarayoga tantric literature.

- The phrase rendered "do not torment yourself with austerities" and "dwell in ease, just as is comfortable" reflects antinomian Vajrayāna language. The first line, literally "having completely abandoned the notion of self, do not torment with austerities," belongs to a register of tantric instruction contrasting rigid self-mortification with spontaneous, non-grasping conduct. "This is the future buddha" reads naturally as "this practitioner will become a buddha in a future life," though it could also be read as "this is what constitutes the future awakened one."

The phrase translated "accomplished one practices alone with the single one" is genuinely compressed and its referent (likely: the perfected yogin engaging with the single consort or the singular reality) is somewhat obscure; the phrase marks a passage into tantric instructions on practice that the text leaves implicit.

The passage ends mid-verse with "The great sovereignty of the three realms —" as the Tibetan supplied is incomplete at that point.

- The refrain "equal to and yet not equal to the dharmadhātu" renders a deliberately paradoxical formulation. The Tibetan mnyam dang mi mnyam pa holds both terms in tension; this is a standard tantric expression pointing to the non-dual nature of the dharmadhātu, which transcends both identity and difference. The translation preserves the paradox rather than resolving it.

The phrase "the glory present in every moment of space" renders nam mkha' kun gyi skabs na dpal. The word skabs can mean "moment," "occasion," or "opportunity"; here it seems to indicate the pervasive presence of the glorious quality of Vajrasattva throughout all of space and time.

"The dance of the horse" and "the vajra horse" refer to a tantric accomplishment or emanation form. The precise significance within this tantra's system is not established from context alone.

- The phrase rendered "the one possessing the wheel" in the second line refers to a deity holding or identified with the cakṛa, contextually one of the maṇḍala deities enumerated later. The "supreme horse" recurring in the text is Āśvottama or a similar horse-deity figure in the maṇḍala system; it is treated as a proper epithetic name throughout.

"Vajrasūrya" is a direct rendering of "rdo rje nyi ma," meaning Vajra-Sun, a tantric deity. "Vajradhara" renders "rdo rje 'dzin dpal," the glorious Vajra-Holder.

The passage concerning offering women and mothers and redeeming them with a price reflects a conventional tantric dāna formulation found in several Vajrayāna sources; it should be understood as a ritualized gift-and-redemption paradigm within the tradition's symbolic economy, not as a literal social instruction.

- The passage is a dense tantric catalogue of ritual empowerment objects, symbolic mudrās, and their correspondences to buddha families and deities. Several compound terms in the text are highly technical and their precise doctrinal referents depend on specific tantric commentary traditions not specified here. The rendering of "ॐ वायुः पृथ्वी च अमृतं मणिश्च शिवो भूतेश्च योगेश्च" as "those of the vital force and the root" is the most natural reading but could alternatively refer to vital channels in a physiological-yogic sense. The term "पञ्चकलामणिः" is rendered as "mercury" following the alchemical-tantric usage of rasāyana, though it can also mean simply "elixir" or "alchemical preparation." The passage ends mid-catalogue and the translation reflects this.
- The phrase rendered "the vajra cross" for "वज्रसङ्क्रान्तिकारः" refers to the crossed-vajra symbol, the viśvavajra, here serving as a symbolic mudrā emblem consistent with the preceding list. The section heading "This is the seventh contemplation" reflects the colophon marking this as the seventh chapter or section of the text.

The sound "ru lu ru lu" is a phonic formula, likely a bīja-syllable sequence used in ritual invocation, left transliterated as it is a fixed liturgical phrase rather than semantically translatable content.

The phrase རྒྱལ་བོར་དགའ་སྤྲོད་པ་ཡིན།, rendered "placed with great pride," carries the tantric technical sense of divine pride — the practitioner's identification with the deity — which is the standard sense of "pride" in this ritual context.

- The line rendered "a body red like a fish in moonlight" follows the image of 月夜に魚の如く紅き身, literally "a body red-veined like a fish in moonlight," a somewhat unusual tantric description of Vajrasattva's form in this context; the red coloring relates to the passionate or desire-associated aspect being described here, which differs from Vajrasattva's more common white iconographic form. This passage appears to be describing a specific union-form or emanation aspect.

The phrase འཇིགས་པའི་ལོངས་སྤོངས་ཀྱི་ལྷ་པོ་ has been rendered as "the lord of a world entirely afflicted," referring to the buddha-field Abhirati (འབྱིར་ཐིམ་པོ་), the realm of Akṣobhya. The connection drawn here between Vajrasattva, Heruka, and Akṣobhya's buddha-field is standard in the Heruka-cycle tantric context.

- The title-phrases recurring throughout this passage are compound mudrā-names in a tantric ritual register. They follow a fixed formula: "Fully engaged in supreme joy, auspicious fortune, glorious Vajrasattva, the supreme play of bliss" followed by a specific epithet such as Vajra-Arrow, Vajra-Life, Vajra-Yoga, and so forth. These are technical designations of specific mudrās within a Vajrayāna sādhana context and are transliterated closely rather than paraphrased.

The term khaṭvāṅga is a tantric staff-scepter topped with skulls and other emblems; it is retained in Sanskrit as a recognized technical term.

The final stanza is incomplete as the source text ends mid-passage; this is reflected in the translation ending mid-sentence.

- The refrain listing "the fierce ones, the lords, the attendant lords, the sun and moon, Yama, and Brahmā" renders a formulaic Tibetan cluster: "drag po dbang po nye dbang bcas, nyi zla gshin rje tshang bcas pa." The "fierce ones" likely refers to wrathful deity-classes or directional guardians; "lords and attendant lords" to Indra and his retinue. The formula recurs verbatim across several stanzas as a fixed list of cosmic powers brought under control.

The phrase "rdzā rnga" rendered "clay drum" refers to a pottery drum (a type of South Asian drum with a clay body); some editions may read this differently.

"Dbying dug byad" in the line about epidemics is a compressed list: weapon-poisons and magical hexes; the translation unpacks it accordingly.

"Srid pa shin tu bsgrub pa" in the penultimate verse is ambiguous: it could mean "perfects existence entirely" or "thoroughly accomplishes mundane siddhi." The translation follows the more contextually natural reading.

- The passage is a ritual mudrā manual embedded in a tantra, describing a series of hand-seal gestures and their associated accomplishments. The repeated formula "ma lus lus pa med par 'grub" has been rendered "without exception, leaving nothing out" to capture the idiomatic Tibetan emphasis on totality and completeness. The term "dpal grub spyān" rendered as "Siddhi-Eye" is a divine epithet for a tantric deity; no further identification is available from this passage alone. The final sentence is syntactically incomplete in the Tibetan, ending mid-list, and the translation preserves this open construction as the passage continues beyond the extract provided.

- The passage contains densely coded tantric language, and several phrases operate simultaneously on literal, ritual, and esoteric levels. The description of consuming substances "drawn from the sky," the union of right and left, the pressing of thighs, and the reference to drinking what is "spread" after clasping are standard euphemistic registers of Yoginītantra and Cakrasaṃvara-cycle literature, describing inner-fire and sexual yoga practices in intentionally veiled terms. The translation renders the surface syntax faithfully without forcing a single hermeneutic layer.

The phrase rendered "the Buddha, the vajra, the lotus-holder, the vajra sun of the three realms" enumerates four figures associated with a maṇḍala cycle; the list may reference Vairocana, Vajrasattva, Amitābha or Padmapāṇi, and a solar vajra deity, though the exact identifications depend on the specific ritual context of the parent tantra.

The title "Padma Lord of Dance" renders Padma gar gyi dbang phyug, a recognized epithet within the Heruka cycle.

- The phrase rendered "giving milk" throughout translates a term that in context appears to be a technical euphemism for a tantric yogic action; the literal Tibetan is "making milk" or "causing to give milk," used as a consistent metaphor in this passage.

The petition-verse section shifts into a liturgical or invocatory register, with a series of honorific imperatives directed toward a deity; this is rendered as supplicatory address accordingly.

The mantra syllable sequence "Hūṃ alalā ho" is preserved as a seed-syllable and exclamatory formula without translation, as is standard for tantric bīja.

- The term rendered "gesture of pride" translates རྒྱལ་ལྡན་པུ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་, literally "being proud" or "posturing with dignity." In tantric mudrā literature this denotes a specific hand gesture characterized by a bearing of regal self-display. No single established English equivalent exists; "gesture of pride" is the most faithful rendering.

The phrase རྒྱལ་མཚན་གསུམ་གྱི་མཚན་ལྷན་པོ་ ("the glorious mudrā of the three banners") is a somewhat obscure tantric term. The three banners likely refer to symbolic insignia of the three buddha families or three aspects of the deity's glory; the rendering is literal and the specific referent is not entirely transparent from context alone.

The final verse is incomplete as given in the source passage; the translation ends mid-sentence accordingly.

- The song-verses in this passage belong to a tantric liturgical genre containing ritual exclamations and seed-syllables that resist full semantic parsing. The interjections alalā lā ho, hi he he he he, hulu hulu, ruṭa maṭa, and smara ṭ are left in transliterated form as they function as vocative mantra-phrases rather than translatable words; the last phrase smara ṭ may be a truncated mantra involving the name Smara (a name of Kāma, the god of desire), but certainty is not possible from the text alone.

The final verse shifts tone abruptly into what appears to be an instruction on the illusory nature of partners in tantric union practice; the phrase "whether one acts or does not act" likely refers to the actual or visualized nature of the tantric consort, a reading consistent with the preceding context of the Vajra Summoning and bliss-teachings.

The line rendered "taming the buddhas" is doctrinally unusual and may instead mean "the discipline of the buddhas" or "taming in the manner of the buddhas"; the ambiguity is genuine and the translation follows the most literal reading.

- The phrase translated as "pressing the vajra palms together" renders རྒྱལ་མཚན་གསུམ་གྱི་མཚན་ལྷན་པོ་, which refers to a tantric hand gesture where the two palms are placed together in a specific vajra configuration. The descriptions throughout are technical mudrā instructions and the anatomical mapping (thumb, index finger, little finger, etc.) follows the Tibetan precisely, though the exact physical gestures can only be fully understood with transmission.

The line རྒྱལ་མཚན་གསུམ་གྱི་མཚན་ལྷན་པོ་ རྒྱལ་མཚན་གསུམ་གྱི་མཚན་ལྷན་པོ་ is syntactically compressed and grammatically ambiguous; the rendering "equal and unequal to the dharmadhātu" follows the most natural reading but a commentarial source would be needed to determine whether these are two separate siddhis or a paradoxical characterization of a single one.

- The epithets "Vajra-Padmapāṇi" and "Padma-Vajradhara" render the Tibetan compounds literally; these appear to be names of specific tantric buddha-forms rather than standard iconographic epithets, and their exact referents may vary by lineage context.

The closing line describes a list of cosmic powers over whom the practice exercises influence: "fierce lords" likely refers to wrathful deity-kings, "proximate powers" to their retinues, and Yama is the lord of death. The passage breaks off mid-enumeration; the continuation follows.

The repeated phrase rendered "goes, comes, and soars at will" translates a stock formula for unimpeded movement through the three dimensions of space, a standard siddhi of the accomplished yogin.

- The passage is a ritual-tantric text describing a sequence of mudrās — the face mudrā, the smiling mudrā, and the gaze mudrā — along with their soteriological or magical effects. The term rendered throughout as "tīrthika" (ཐིར་ཐི་ཁ་) here is used not with its usual pejorative sense of "non-Buddhist adherent" but as a technical ritual or iconographic term within a tantric context, possibly referring to a specific class or flavor associated with a particular deity-type or consort role. The translation preserves this term since no cleaner equivalent fits all occurrences.

The phrase "great flesh" (ཡུལ་ཆེན་པོ་) in the smiling-mudrā section is a technical tantric term typically referring to one of the consecrated flesh substances used in advanced ritual. It is rendered literally here.

The Sanskrit mantras are transliterated as they appear and left in their liturgical form, as is standard for dhāraṇī and mantra passages.

The opening invocatory phrase "Namas tu sarva-buddhebhyaḥ" (homage to all the buddhas) is embedded in the Tibetan in Sanskrit script and is retained in reconstructed Sanskrit in the translation body.

- The passage is a sustained ritual section cataloguing mudrās of sound, song, and percussion instruments, interspersed with syllabic seed-syllable sequences and mantra strings that are transliterated as found rather than translated, since they function as sonic mudrās rather than semantic text. The line "bud med gzhan lta ci zhig smos" literally means "what need is there to speak of other women?" — a conventional hyperbolic formula meaning the mudrā surpasses even the attraction of women; it is rendered literally as the text intends a superlative rhetorical comparison. The final half-verse is incomplete and breaks off mid-sentence, indicating continuation in the next passage.
- The term rendered "challenger" throughout is the Tibetan rGol ba, which in this ritual-dance context refers to a designated opponent or counter-performer in a stylized liturgical dance confrontation. The translation preserves this functional sense.

"Arali" appears both as a divine name assigned to the wondrous expression and as a collective term in the later verse. In tantric context, Arali is a class of female attendant or ḍākinī-like figure associated with bliss. The name is left untranslated as a proper term.

"Ruṭa Maṭe, Alala la ho" and similar exclamatory syllables are untranslatable ecstatic or ritual vocatives; they are retained as-is.

The final line, literally "by that one, the feast-food of the assembly," implies that whoever loses the ritual dance-contest must provide the communal feast. The rendering reflects this.

- The passage contains a series of tantric offering rites, song-verses with untranslated seed syllables and exclamatory particles, and lists of ritual materials with technical Sanskrit plant and substance names. Several substance names require comment. The term rendered "two sandalwoods" refers to red and white sandalwood. "Śalākī" is a plant name left in approximate Sanskrit form as the Tibetan ཤ་ལ་ཀི་ is a transliteration. "Spṛkā" similarly renders སྤྲ་ཀ་, a fragrant substance sometimes identified as Trigonella or a related plant; identification is uncertain. "Tagara" renders ཐག་ར་, a well-known aromatic. The passage ends mid-sentence in the source text, so the translation ends accordingly.
- The names "Vajrahaya" (rdo rje rta) and "Vajrasūrya" (rdo rje nyi ma) are tantric deity names preserved as rendered; rdo rje rta literally means "Vajra-horse" and may refer to Hayagrīva or a related form, but "Vajrahaya" is given here as a direct Sanskrit rendering consistent with the preceding passage's conventions.

The passage "bdag gi phyugs chen skal bzang po" rendered as "the great fortune of my livestock" is unusual in context and may be an idiomatic tantric expression indicating abundant worldly prosperity rather than livestock literally; this reading is retained pending fuller context.

The list of female figures (coquette, young woman, intoxicated one, etc.) likely refers to tantric offering-consorts or flavor-substances personified, a common tantric enumeration; the translation preserves the literal sense without importing a specific interpretive framework.

- The passage is a ritual manual describing a series of hand gestures, each named, with accompanying verses describing their formation and the fruits of their practice. Several of the mudrā names are compound titles of tantric deities or empowerments rather than standard doctrinal terms, and have been rendered descriptively in line with their literal meaning. The phrase rendered "vajra of the thumbs" follows a reading of འཇམ་མཁའ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་ as the thumbs functioning as vajras pressing down. The phrase འཇམ་མཁའ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷ་མོ་, "the thumbs sit in the hero's cross-legged posture," is a technical gesture description whose precise physical configuration would require illustrated commentary to determine with certainty; the translation follows the most natural reading of the terminology.

- The phrase rendered "vowel and consonant series" translates ā-li kā-li, the standard Tantric technical designation for the Sanskrit vowel series (ā-li) and consonant series (kā-li), used here in the context of a seed-syllable or letter-maṇḍala practice. The subsequent lines describe a calligraphic or diagrammatic arrangement of letters with specific orthographic features — "crescent" for the anusvāra head-circle, "two moons" for double vowel-length marks — which reflects Indic letter-form terminology as preserved in Tibetan tantric writing manuals.

The string of deity names near the end (Vajrasattva's epithets: "Glorious Union," "Liberation from Great Passion," "Stainless Compassion," etc.) appear to be names or aspects of a deity maṇḍala; they are translated literally from the Tibetan as there is no established Sanskrit restoration available in standard sources for all of them.

The passage ends mid-sentence; the translation reflects the incomplete state of the source passage as given.

- The passage is a technical tantric text describing a system of body-language seal-signs (gesture mudrās used in coded communication or ritual), attributed to a Vajrayāna context. The signs are systematically enumerated by body part, with right and left sides carrying distinct meanings.

The two quasi-Sanskrit terms "Atibhu" and "Pratiṇḍhibhu" appear to be phonetic renderings of Indic liturgical exclamations or ritual terms. Their exact Sanskrit originals are uncertain; the Tibetan simply glosses them as meaning "prostration" and "return of salutation" respectively.

The final verses open what appears to be a new section on Vajrasattva and the syllable E-ma-o; the passage breaks off mid-sentence. The term rendered "raising one's own faculty" for "rang gi dbang po bsgreng ba" is a deliberately ambiguous tantric expression that may carry an explicitly sexual valence in context, as is common in Anuttarayoga literature.

- Several terms in this passage function as untranslated code-words or mantric syllables within the tantric sign-language system being described. "E-ma-o," "Shi-shi," "Bhaga," and "Liṅga" are retained as such rather than translated, consistent with the preceding passage's treatment. "Bhaga" (the female generative principle) and "Liṅga" (the male generative principle) are technical tantric terms used here as part of an enumeration of sign-mudrās; given the context and the TTS format, they are left in transliteration without gloss. The "khaṭvāṅga" is a tantric staff-trident and is left in Sanskrit. The zombie-woman who reduces to ash renders a technical term for a vetāla-like figure used in certain tantric rites. The offering-substances in the later stanzas, including the clay or flour-dough substitute offerings, reflect standard tantric feast-assembly practices. The phrase "the heart too is the supreme of wealth" likely refers to the heart as a ritual substance as well as a figurative meaning, consistent with the feast-offering context.

- The Sanskrit loanword rasāyana appears here repeatedly as a tantric coded term. In Indian alchemical and tantric contexts it refers both to an elixir or rejuvenating substance and to a secret or inner liquid; the text uses it alongside other substances clearly functioning as coded language for transgressive offering substances and sexual fluids within the twilight language framework of this tantra.

The term "panaśa" is a Sanskrit loanword referring to the jackfruit; similarly "nālikera" is coconut, "āmra" is mango, and "ārūka" is a type of peach or similar stone fruit. These function simultaneously as literal fruits and as coded signifiers within the text's symbolic register.

The phrase rendered "the hardness of desire" for salt is a compressed metaphoric gloss; the Tibetan literally reads "salt is desire that is hard or solid," functioning within the coded language system of the tantra.

The final line of the passage ends incompletely mid-sentence, consistent with it being a continuation passage.

- The passage is from a tantric text of the Hevajra or Cakrasaṃvara cycle tradition, presenting sign-language mudrā explanations, seed-syllable glosses, and dhāraṇī-style mantra strings. Several terms in this section are Apabhraṃśa or mixed Sanskrit-Prakrit technical register that resist standard Sanskrit parsing. Araḷi (appearing as "a ra li") is a tantric term for the ḍākinī or the illusory dance-form; its precise etymology is uncertain and varies across commentaries. The names Ṭakki, Kilikiḷa, and the sea-monster gloss for "loving-kindness" (Skt. maitrī / Tibetan byams pa rendered as chu srin, "sea-monster" or "makara") represent tantric code-language (sandhābhāṣā) where conventional positive terms are re-signified; the rendering follows the Tibetan literally. The mantra string "Om Ru Ru Sphuru Jvala..." is rendered in reconstructed Sanskrit as it appears to be a recognizable dhāraṇī. The final lines listing "eye, ear, nose, tongue, body" appear to be the opening of a list that continues in the subsequent passage.
- The term rendered "Bedi" is a transliteration of what appears to be a Sanskrit name or epithet for a vajra-weapon; its precise Sanskrit form is uncertain and may be a corrupt or abbreviated transmission.

The phrase "the white thief, the utterly bewildered, the walking corpse, the smoke-maker, the fierce one, and the one with a furrowed brow" renders names of the seven goddesses. These are esoteric deity-epithets whose precise iconographic referents vary by tradition; the translation renders them literally as the Tibetan presents them.

"Mārṭa phaṭ phaṭ" is retained as a mantra-formula; the text presents it as a buddha-sign rather than a translatable phrase.

The final line is incomplete in the source passage as given, ending mid-description of Vajrasattva's form; this is noted as a natural continuation point.

- The term Prasenā appears twice as what seems to be a proper name for a specific ritual accomplishment or deity associated with seeing and hearing visions. It may be a Sanskrit loanword rendered phonetically in Tibetan. Its precise referent in this tantric context is uncertain; it likely refers to a scrying or visionary practice and its presiding deity or the accomplishment thereof.

The phrase rendered "the supreme ash of the abodes of the māmos" refers to sacred cremation-ground ash associated with those fierce female spirit-deities, used here as a ritual substance for protective marks.

The "three pure places" in the penultimate mudrā section refers to the three sites of body, speech, and mind, or alternatively to specific bodily locations sealed in tantric consecration ritual.

- The term rendered as "Dharma bodhisattva" likely refers to a specific tantric deity-form or to Dharmadhātu Bodhisattva, but the Tibetan is concise and the exact referent depends on the broader ritual context of this tantra.

The phrase translated as "drawing it in the manner of a straight line from the head" describes a gesture involving the vajra fist moving from the crown downward in a straight direction before the face is directed forward and the blessed liquid is drunk; the precise physical sequence is somewhat compressed in the Tibetan.

"Weapon-sickness" renders the Tibetan compound meaning illness caused by weapons or sharp instruments, a recognized category in tantric medical-ritual lists alongside plague and poison.

- The mantra-like phrases "Tathāgatagarbha svasiho" and "Śrī Vajrasattvā svaṃ siho" are dhāraṇī seed-syllable sequences embedded in the Tibetan text and are rendered in phonetic approximation as they appear; they are not standard Sanskrit grammatical sentences but ritual invocations. "Svasiho" and "siho" may correspond to an abbreviated "svāhā" type ending in a corrupted or archaic transmission.

The term rendered "coil" for gdeng ka refers specifically to a nāga's raised hood or coil posture, which gives its name to this mudrā.

The five-fold classification of thrown weapons and its relationship to "five by five mudrās" is obscure; the passage appears to belong to a technical ritual-military or tantric mudrā taxonomy whose full context is not recoverable from this excerpt alone.

- The phrase rendered "the Supreme Noble Steed" translates "rta mchog dam pa," which likely refers to Hayagrīva (the horse-headed deity), though the text gives no explicit Sanskrit gloss here; this identification is contextually plausible given the surrounding deity-list.

The repeated refrain "shamelessly" renders "ngo 'thon du," which literally means "to the point of being exposed" or "bare-faced"; in a tantric context this carries the sense of acting without hesitation or shame in the ritual seizure of the deity's power. The doctrinal register is that of fierce tantric practice.

The phrase "gung mo bzhag" in the lotus-fist description has been rendered "middle fingers are placed upon the thumbs"; the precise finger position is a technical tantric manual detail and the rendering follows the most natural anatomical reading.

- The phrase rendered "the three-eyed one" refers to Śiva, consistent with the preceding passage's pattern of pressing upon sovereign beings. The "three accomplishments drawn in" follows the refrain structure established throughout.

The term rendered "Sovereign Lady of All Accomplishments" translates a compound meaning the sovereign over all siddhis; the mudrā section heading is a colophon-like label closing a mudrā description series.

The chapter colophon identifies this as the ninth chapter of a tantra whose full title is given as the Union of All Buddhas, Ḍākinī Illusion, Summit of Bliss.

- The final line is an incomplete sentence running into the next passage, so it ends mid-phrase as in the source; this is deliberate and reflects the continuity marker into the following section.

The verse beginning "I do not become instability" represents Vajrasattva speaking in the first person, which is a recognized tantric convention wherein the deity speaks as the practice itself or the accomplishment itself, asserting its own nature and conditions. This first-person voice is preserved as given in the Tibetan.

The epithet "All-Variegated One" renders Kun tu sna tshogs pa, which here functions as a speaker designation, likely a form of Vajrasattva or a related tantric figure in this context rather than a generic description. The identity of this speaker is not entirely unambiguous from the passage alone.
