

The bodhisattva, the very essence of all buddhas, Vajrasattva, the supreme bliss —

in the delight of the supreme secret,
the whole self ever abides.
Great attachment, great bliss,
great bliss surpassing the great vajra —
alongside Vajradhara,
the supreme protectors, the Sugatas, abide.
Through great desire that transforms all into the supreme,
and for the thorough accomplishment of the lord of spiritual attainment (siddhi),
from the union of all buddhas,
through the assembly of conceptuality, I request the teaching.
From the dharma-self of non-conceptuality,
to whom is this meaning of conceptuality taught?
Why too is it a subsequent tantra?
What is the nature of the supreme primordial ground?
Being without beginning and without end,
Vajrasattva is likewise so.
How are the syllables taught?
What are the mantras that issue forth?
The very excellence of supreme joy,
the vajra heart-essence, chief of chiefs,
the meditative absorptions of mind and bodhisattva —
likewise vajra and Vajradhara.
Vajradhara itself, the great one —
what are the conduct-practices of bodhisattvas?
The māra and the victory over māra,
what is the nature of the buddhas' awakening?
The fierce vajra that liberates,
and Vajrapāṇi — what are they like?
How is the primordial family to be generated?
What are the forms of liberation through desire?
How are the three kinds of protector sought?
What is the nature of everything as suchness?
How does the heart-essence first arise?
What is the proximate heart-essence like?
Great bliss, the great vajra —
what is the nature of the meaningful samaya (sacred pledge)?

How is the maṇḍala taught?
What is its karmic ripening like?
With the measurement of lines, and likewise through conceptuality,
how are the spiritual attainments described?
The five secrets and the great suchness —
what are they, and what are they like?
The chief lords of the maṇḍalas,
and the families — what are they like?
The suchness of universal empowerment,
and the emblems of the suchness assembly,
the universal summoning and the great offering,
and the accomplishment of one's own blessing and the rest —
all of these: the great secret of suchness,
the holy and the ultimate,
for the sake of the accomplished meaning of the holy syllable — is it not unsuitable to speak all of this?

From the Union with All Buddhas, the Illusory Bliss-Supreme ḍākinī, this is the eighteenth chapter, the conceptuality that is the definitive expression of all suchness.

Then the Teacher Vajradhara,
the great chief of all conceptuality,
dwelling amidst the assembly of all doubts,
gave teachings, holding to the ultimate.

In what way is this a tantra of the meaning of conceptuality? From non-conceptual pure phenomena, one fully conceptualizes for the sake of sentient beings. Therefore it is correctly called conceptuality, because conceptuality is thoroughly pure.

In what way is this a subsequent tantra? A tantra is explained as something thoroughly connected; the subsequent is that which was drawn forth earlier. Those very great secrets and secrets, too, are held to be the subsequent tantra.

In what way is this the wisdom of primordial gnosis? Completely abiding throughout all of space, the supreme essence of all vajras, that great bliss and great joy — the palace of the holy syllable. Thus declared the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

In what way is Vajrasattva without beginning and without end? Beginning with the syllable ka, up to the syllable dha at the end, setting aside nga and nya, one should proceed. Beginning with the syllable dha, up to the syllable śa at the end, the second garland should be correctly written. In the center abides the row of syllables a, arranged in a lunar maṇḍala.

The bindu adorned with the lunar day — the heavy stroke and the lunar crescent are the two. The syllable a, unchanging, is to be meditated upon; in the center it abides as the essential nature of the vajra. To meditate always upon that as the center is great attachment and great bliss. This is what is known as the buddha-image of all buddhas.

From that, all beings, moving and unmoving, arise completely and perfectly. Since it arises from space, because it is a defining mark, it is supreme — without beginning and without end.

The great vajra, the actual mind, is what is called Vajrasattva.

Now, what is the Blessed One in that regard?

The supreme of all great accomplishments, the great lord, the deity of awareness, the great king, the vajra-holder, he who greatly delights in the holy syllable.

Now, in what way are syllables to be understood? From the syllable a up to the final syllable kṣa — these are rightly explained as syllables. Possessed of the vajra of inexhaustible joy — that very thing, because it is the defining mark encompassing all aims.

Now, in what way do mantras arise? Vajrasattva and so forth — those which are extensively explained as mantras within the wheel — for the purpose of their arising, the Vajra-holder again declared:

After anointing with saffron and the like, and adorning the drawn image and so forth in various ways, after spreading the fabric support and the like, one should always begin by drawing four grids, then making the four-sided palace. The grids are made to blaze in the four directions. In the thirty grids, nineteen are to be present. On the seat of fifty, the five groupings, with their boundary bindus, are placed upon the crown-tip, which is permanent. What is called ka and śa is to be written in the central grid.

In the eight outer stations — the grids of the intermediate and cardinal directions — the groups of ya and śa, together with the lord of power and so forth, are arranged in order. In the grids of the fire-corner and so forth, one should set out twelve seed-syllables by relying upon the four syllables of ma and upon the seed-syllable a. In the grids of the lord of power and so forth, the syllables ka and so forth are set out in order. In this way, having arranged everything in sequence within the four, one takes hold of the grids beginning with ka and extracts the holy syllables.

The great king of supreme delight, lord of all conjunctions — in the twenty-four grids, abiding with the half-moon crown, the face with the topknot. Below that, thirty-two are extracted by the one possessing the vajra of joy. From the so-called fourteen grids, what abides is possessed of the heavy stroke. Abiding in twenty-four grids, thirty-four are possessed of the moon. Abiding in thirty-one grids, what abides is possessed of the resonance and the bindu. In twenty-four grids, the heavy-stroke conjunction is to be made. By means of the conjunction of thirty-eight, that is explained as the fourth.

Great bliss, great king — this is the investigation of the supreme goddess.

Abiding in eleven grids, perfectly possessed of the bindu and resonance. Abiding in the eighth grid, nineteen are present. Below that, thirty-four are adorned with the bindu and resonance. Abiding in twenty-four grids, this is the heavy-stroke conjunction. Arranged in the second grid, this is possessed of the bindu and resonance.

The mantra extracted by drawing together the flute-goddess and the like is supreme. In thirty-eight grids, what abides is possessed of the bindu and resonance. In the center, in twenty-one, from the center fifteen are possessed of the moon. Abiding in thirty-one grids, from the center fifteen are possessed of the moon. Abiding in twenty-one grids, eleven are possessed of the moon. The mantra extracted from the goddess of the flute and the like is wondrous.

Abiding in the tenth grid, and the eleventh likewise. Abiding in thirty-three grids, the sixteenth likewise. Drawing together flowers and the like — this is the supreme extracted mantra.

Hayagrīva, the iron hook of lofty bearing, and the like — the very seed that arose at the outset is joined with diligence to the gateway of the maṇḍala of Vajrasattva.

Thus spoke the glorious Vajrasattva. This concludes the knowledge of the mudrā of the arising of the Dharma syllables of the maṇḍala of the glorious Vajrasattva.

Possessing only two grids, the face bears the lunar date at the crown. Vairocana is the great king, the lord of all excellence over the earth. Abiding in fifteen grids, it is possessed of bindu and resonance. Abiding in nineteen grids, it is adorned with bindu and resonance. Possessing twenty-five grids, it is adorned with bindu and resonance. From the center, at the twentieth, it is adorned with bindu and resonance. By the four assemblies of Dharma robes, this is the supreme arising of the seed. Abiding in twenty-four grids, it is adorned with bindu and resonance. The seventh grid likewise — possessing the fifteenth from the center, that which is possessed of bindu and resonance is the northern cymbal-sound that stirs. From the center at twenty-one, abiding with nineteen present, that which is possessed of bindu and resonance is greatly proclaimed as vajra-jewel. From the center, those very eighteenth ones, adorned with bindu and resonance — in the maṇḍala of all the buddhas, this is the great mudrā of the Dharma conch.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva. This concludes the knowledge of the mudrā of the arising of the Dharma syllables of Vairocana.

Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the twentieth — this is the great king known as the Blood-Drinker, wherein the heavy dot and the excess are cut away. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, below it possessing nineteen — abiding in the twentieth grid, the joining is possessed of the heavy dot. With the heavy dot and at the four, abiding with eleven from the center — the twelfth grid joined is considered to be possessed of the heavy dot. Abiding in the fourteenth grid, the lower drawing-together of twenty-one, the twelfth with the heavy dot — that possessing the third is explained here. Abiding in the fourteenth grid, joined with the twelfth — joining equally with the heavy dot is the desire of the goddess of the great vessel. In the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the second from the center — likewise possessed of bindu and resonance, that is the third source of bindu. Whatever abides as the tenth from the center, being always possessed of the heavy dot — from the goddesses beginning with the Great Red One, the four are extracted. The twenty-fifth grid, abiding, is possessed of the bindu. The sixth from the center is possessed of bindu and resonance. The seventeenth grid likewise is adorned with bindu and resonance. Abiding in the nineteenth grid, it is adorned with bindu and resonance. The arising of the seed from the goddess bearing the sharp arrow and the like — that is wondrous. The arising of the seed from the goddess of flowers and the like was taught earlier. Those who are taught as gatekeepers are solely of non-concordant form.

Thus did the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva, speak these words. This concludes the knowledge of the mudrā of the arising of the Dharma syllables of the maṇḍala of the illusory ḍākinī.

Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, seated on the throne of the nineteenth — the joining of the twentieth with the heavy dot is the Lord of the Lotus Dance. Abiding in the fourteenth grid, the two heavy syllables are likewise so. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the ninth from the center — always possessed of bindu, this is the renowned one of the second. Abiding in the thirty-first grid, adorned with resonance and bindu. In the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the thirteenth from the center — the one with the heavy dot: the fourth is renowned from the tantra of the Frowning Goddess. Possessing the twenty-fourth grid —

Possessing the ninth from the center with bindu. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the fifteenth from the center. Abiding in the eleventh grid, joined with the heavy dot. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the thirty-eighth — joining equally the heavy dot and the syllable: this is the supreme Lord of the Lotus Dance.

The Goddess of the Flute and so forth, likewise the Goddess of Flowers and so forth, the Goddess of the Hook and so forth as well — all of these are generated in the maṇḍala of Vajrasattva and the rest.

Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrasattva. This is knowledge of the mudrā of the arising of the Dharma syllables of the maṇḍala of the Lord of the Lotus Dance.

The twenty-first from the center, possessing the eleventh — nineteen, moon, crown-five: this is the arising of Vajra Sun. Whatever is the thirteenth from the center — moon-date, bindu, face of the crown. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the nineteenth. Joined with the twentieth grid, possessing the heavy dot: this is the second. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the thirteenth from the center. Having the heavy dot together: this is renowned as the third. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the eleventh with bindu. Abiding in the fourteenth grid, possessing the heavy dot: this is the one called Desire. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid — the ninth from the center, with moon. Abiding in the thirty-first grid, adorned with bindu and resonance. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the thirteenth from the center. Having the heavy dot equally: these are the deities of Vajra Sun.

All of the Goddess of the Flute and so forth are born from the root maṇḍala joined together.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva. This is knowledge of the mudrā of the arising of the Dharma syllables of the maṇḍala of Vajra Sun.

Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, joined with the twenty-seventh — moon-date, bindu, having a crown: this is the tamer of all surrounding realms. Abiding in the fourteenth grid, possessing the nineteenth — joined with twenty and the heavy dot: this is the utterance of the Variegated One. Abiding in the twenty-fourth grid, possessing the heavy dot as desired. In the maṇḍala of the King of Horses, this is renowned as Vajra Crosswise.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva of Great Bliss. This is knowledge of the mudrā of the arising of the Dharma syllables of the Supreme Horse. This is the nineteenth contemplation from the Ḍākinī Māyāsukhaśrī, the Union Equal to All Buddhas.

Now, on the outer side of the maṇḍala of the two paintings, the yogin shall draw a lotus of eight petals. Within that he shall also write the assemblage of the syllable A. On the petal to the east, the family of Ka; on the petal to the south, the family of Ca; on the petal to the west, the family of Ṭa; likewise to the north, the family of Ta. In the center of these five families, the syllable Kṣa is to be placed together with them. Starting from the petal of the master direction, arrange Ya, Ra, La, Va. On the outer side of the petal of the master direction, the syllable Ṣa is to be placed. On the outer side of the petal of the fire-corner, the syllable Śa is to be placed. On the outer side of the petal of the truthless corner, the syllable Sa is to be placed. On the outer side of the petal of the wind-corner, the syllable Ha is to be placed.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva of Great Bliss.

Whatever stands at the edge of the center — the syllable Oṃ bearing bindu. Whatever stands outside the wind-corner — join there the vowel A. To what stands outside the truthless corner, below, join the vowel U. The second petal of the east is the middle one from the center, likewise.

From the south, likewise the middle one; the fire-corner petal is just the same. Whatever stands outside the truthless corner — from that comes the first of the north. From the center, at the place of the middle gift, at that time it becomes a globe of light. The syllable O bearing a heavy stroke — at that time it becomes its edge. Whatever is the middle one from the south is endowed with the heavy stroke. Whatever stands outside the wind-corner, join there the syllable U with bindu. Whatever is the middle of the center — pressed from above with bindu — and whatever stands outside the wind-corner, join there the syllable O with the heavy stroke. Outside the truthless corner, join the sound-syllable U. Whatever stands on the fire-corner petal, likewise the first of the north — taking what is outside the truthless corner, it is also the first of the north. Taking the middle from the center, it becomes a globe of light at the edge. Then, having bestowed the bindu, the accomplishment of Vajrasattva is achieved.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva of Great Bliss.

Whatever is the middle one from the south, make it endowed with the heavy stroke. Likewise the middle from the center is also the middle from the south. Whatever is endowed with the fire-corner petal — that is what is always to be recited. Taking the middle from the north, join it thoroughly with the fire-corner. Having joined it with the sound-syllable A, it becomes perpetually peaceful. Taking what is outside the fire-corner, make it endowed with the first of the west. Having joined it with the sound-syllable I, it is the fifth globe of light. At what stands outside the truthless corner, make it endowed with the sound-syllable A. Likewise, at the petal of the powerful one, join the sound-syllable I. Taking the first of the east, and then the last of the middle, taking the first of the west — make them always without A. By reciting these, the arrow is supremely accomplished.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

Taking what is outside the wind-corner, join there the sound-syllable U. Having pressed the bindu with its resonance, then comes the middle from the center. Taking the middle from the south, join it with the fire-corner. Taking the first from the east, make it endowed with the sound-syllable E. Whatever stands on the truthless-corner petal, join there the sound-syllable E. Taking the first of the east, join there the sound-syllable E. At what stands on the truthless-corner petal, join the sound-syllable E. Taking what is outside the wind-corner, join there the sound-syllable U. When the bindu is evenly joined with its resonance, it becomes auspicious, auspicious indeed.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

Likewise the second is the heroine. The third is Samantabhadrā. The fourth is the inexhaustible supplement. The heroine of the buddha's body, likewise the dhāraṇī-bearer, the beautiful-faced one, the seventh is Great Cloud, and the eighth is Sky-Eye. The flute and so forth are gathered, the door-guardians and so forth are also gathered, the flower-goddesses and so forth are gathered — these one wishes to generate in the first maṇḍala.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva of Great Desire.

This is the knowledge of the mudrā of the assembly of mantras arising in the maṇḍala as proclaimed by the Tathāgata.

The syllable O bearing bindu, together with the syllable E — at what stands outside the wind-corner and at what stands on the fire-corner petal, join the sound-syllable U. Likewise the first from the east, and also the middle from the center. The middle from the south, endowed with the fire-corner petal, is made to become it — taking what is outside the truthless corner, also taking the last from the center, at what stands on the petal of the powerful one, endowed equally with the syllable E, at what stands outside the wind-corner, it is equally endowed with the heavy stroke. That is universally known as the tenth. At what stands outside the truthless corner, it is endowed with the fire-corner petal.

The middle from the center is transformed to SU. The middle from the north likewise — join the sound-syllable U. What stands outside the fire-corner likewise. The first from the west is endowed with it. At what stands outside the truthless corner as well, the end of the middle is that very thing, standing on the petal of the powerful one, equally endowed with the syllable U. The last from the center is transformed, endowed with the fire-corner petal. The middle from the north is made to become it — together with the leading syllable A, taking the first from the center, make it endowed with the fire-corner seat. Whatever is the fourth from the center, truly endowed with the drop-mark — the middle from the south is likewise, and the first from the east as well. Taking what stands outside the wind-corner, make it endowed with the drop-mark and the syllable U. Whatever is the second from the center — the first from the west, without A.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

Taking what stands outside the wind-corner, endowed with the drop-mark and the syllable U — the middle from the center likewise, endowed with the fire-corner seat. The middle from the south is transformed, and whatever is declared from the east — join the sound-syllable U to it. At what stands outside the wind-corner, adorned with the sound-syllable E — what possesses the seat of the powerful one's petal is universally known as the fifth. At what stands outside the truthless corner, join the sound-syllable I. Whatever is the fourth from the north, join the sound-syllable I to it. Taking the first from the center, it resembles what has the fire-corner petal. The last from the center it is as well — at what stands on the petal of the powerful one, join the sound-syllable O. Whatever is the third from the east, join the sound-syllable O to it. Whatever stands outside the powerful one, endowed with the middle from the center — at what stands on the fire-corner petal, join the sound-syllable I. What stands outside the wind-corner is endowed with the fire-corner seat, and bears the heavy-stroke syllable I — that is universally known as the first.

At what stands outside the wind-corner, join the drop-mark and the syllable U — the wise one is to recite it twice. Also taking the middle from the center, the middle from the south likewise, endowed with the fire-corner petal. Taking the first from the south, make it equally endowed with the drop-mark. Taking the middle from the west, make it equally endowed with the syllable E. Whatever stands outside the powerful one, endowed with the middle from the center — at what stands on the fire-corner petal, join the sound-syllable I. Whatever is the second from the east — taking the first from the west, endowed with the middle from the center — make it endowed with the drop-mark and the syllable A. That is universally known as the tenth. Whatever is the third from the east, join the sound-syllable I to it. Taking the last from the center, at what stands outside the wind-corner as well, make it endowed with the syllable A. Taking the middle from the center, it is made to become the third from the south — having joined the fire-corner seat, taking the first from the east, endowed with the syllable A, the first from the center is made to become it. At what stands on the truthless petal — joining the sound-syllable E — the last from the center it is as well. Taking the first from the east, join the sound-syllable U to it. At what stands on the fire-corner petal, join the sound-syllable U. At what stands on the truthless petal, adorned with the sound-syllable U — at what stands on the fire-corner petal as well, join the sound-syllable U. At what stands on the truthless petal, adorned with the sound-syllable U. What stands on the truthless petal is endowed with the doubly-stacked syllable U. At what stands outside the wind-corner, having made it endowed with the last from the north — at what is equally endowed with the heavy stroke, join the sound-syllable I.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva (bodhisattva).

Having taken hold of what stands outside the wind-corner,
join the bindu to it with the sound-syllable U.

Taking the middle from the center, together with
what stands on the fire-corner petal,

Taking the last from the north,
join the sound-syllable A to it.
At what stands on the fire-corner petal,
adorn it with the sound-syllable A.
At what stands on the powerful petal,
endowed with the sound-syllable I,
let it become the last of the west.
Likewise for the middle of the south —
join whatever is the fourth from the south.
Endowed with the heavy-stroke syllable I,
this is declared to be the aggregate.

Having taken hold of what stands outside the wind-corner,
join the bindu with the sound-syllable U.
Likewise taking the middle from the center,
together with what stands on the fire-corner petal,
let it become the middle of the south.
Taking the first from the center,
let it be endowed with the fire-corner petal.
Having taken hold of what stands outside the wind-corner,
below that is the fire-corner —
likewise for the last of the west,
join the sound-syllable I to it.
And it is also the last from the center.
Taking the first from the west,
it becomes devoid of the syllable A.

Having taken hold of what stands outside the wind-corner,
join the bindu with the sound-syllable U.
Likewise taking the middle from the center,
together with what stands on the fire-corner petal,
let it become the middle from the south.
Taking the middle from the center,
adorn it with the bindu.
Likewise the middle from the center,
and likewise the middle from the south —
equally endowed with the fire-corner, gather it with the syllable A.

Taking the last from the west,
join the sound-syllable O to it.
Taking what stands outside the truthless,
endowed with the last of the middle,
having stated the fire-corner twice,
let it become endowed with the first from the west.
The eighth, which always lacks A —
that is Vajra-Khaṭvāṅginī.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

Having taken hold of what stands outside the wind-corner,
join the heavy-stroke O to it.
Likewise taking the middle from the center,
it is endowed with the fire-corner —
let it become the middle from the south.
Taking the first from the east,
join the sound-syllable A to it.
Taking the last from the center,
join the sound-syllable E to it.
Taking what stands outside the powerful,
take the middle from the center.
What stands on the fire-corner petal —
join the sound-syllable I to it.
Taking the first from the north,
let it be endowed with the syllable A.
Having joined to the fire-corner petal,
gather it with the resonance of the bindu.
The great variegated Goddess of the Lotus,
Vajrasattva and the other deities — these are the deities.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious great-bliss Vajrasattva.

Vajra-Weapon, Vajra-Instrument, Vajra-Memory, and Vajra-Essence — these are the four goddesses of Vajrasattva and the like.

Endowed with the bindu on the syllable O,
and fully endowed with the bindu on the syllable E,
taking the last from the center,

let it be endowed with the syllable U.
Likewise the fourth from the north.
Taking the middle from the center,
and likewise the middle from the south —
having joined it to the fire-corner petal, gather the syllables I and A.
Whatever is the fourth from the east,
let it be endowed with the bindu U —
and recite it twice with diligence.

It is always the first transformation. The syllable O endowed with the bindu — from the middle, likewise the middle, joined to the fire-corner petal, becomes the middle from the south. Taking the last from the center, join it to the sound-syllable E. Whatever is the fourth from the east, let it be joined to the sound-syllable E. Whatever is the third from the east, let it be joined to the sound-syllable U. Resting on the truthless petal, join it to the sound-syllable U — recite it twice with diligence. Whatever is the fourth from the center, the syllable U at the fire-corner, endowed with the bindu — that is the second resonance.

The syllable O endowed with the bindu, resting outside the wind-corner, fully endowed with a strong dot, resting outside the dominant, and likewise the fire-corner petal — whatever is the third from the north, let it become the middle from the center. Likewise the middle one from the south, joined together with the fire-corner petal, is endowed and joined to the sound-syllable I. The syllable E endowed with the bindu — recite it two or three times: it is known to be exclusively for the third goddess, celebrated as the arising of the mantra.

The syllable O endowed with the bindu — whatever is the second from the east: the moon-digit bindu at the crown-face. From the center, likewise the middle; from the south, likewise the middle one, joined with the fire-corner petal — join it for all times. Likewise the one resting outside the dominant — join it to the sound-syllable E. Taking that same outer one, endow it with the sound-syllable I. Adorning what rests on the fire-corner petal with the sound-syllable I — taking the one outside the wind-corner, join it with the bindu syllable U — recite it two or three times.

That is the goddess of the wish-fulfilling tree and so forth. Vajra-Essence, Vajra-Nirṛti's Daughter, Vajra-Mistress of Dance, and the goddesses of desire — these are known as the four goddesses.

The syllable O endowed with the bindu, join it to the syllable E. Resting outside the wind-corner, likewise the fire-corner petal — endowed and joined to the syllable E. Making the first from the north, likewise the middle from the center, joined with the fire-corner petal — the middle one from the south likewise becomes endowed with the syllable E. Becoming endowed with the middle from the center, resting on the truthless petal, join it to the sound-syllable I. Resting outside the truthless, join it to the sound-syllable I. Whatever is the last from the north, join it to the sound-syllable A. Whatever is the first from the north — endowed with the fire-corner seat. Whatever is the first from the west — let it always become without A.

She is the supreme one without beginning or end — the goddess Vajra-Vīṇā.

Taking the one outside the wind-corner, join it to the sound-syllable E. That very one resting on the fire-corner petal, endowed with the sound-syllable I — let it become the first from the north. Taking the middle from the center, take the middle from the south. Having joined it with the fire-corner petal, it is also to be gathered. Whatever is the third from the east, join it to the sound-syllable I. Taking the first from the north, having joined it to the sound-syllable E — endowed with the four resonances — always recite it three times.

Taking the one outside the wind-corner, join it to the sound-syllable E. On the fire-corner petal likewise, join it to the sound-syllable E. Let it become the first from the north. Taking the middle from the center, together with the fire-corner petal, making it the middle from the south — resting outside the wind-corner, join it to the sound-syllable A. Likewise, for the outer truthless one, in order to join it to the sound-syllable E, that very one outside the wind-corner is to be recited purposefully twice. Taking the middle from the center, join it to the bindu syllable E.

She is renowned as the Great Drum Goddess — the ḍākinī, Illusory Supreme Bliss.

Taking the one outside the wind-corner, join it to the sound-syllable I.

The one resting on the fire-corner petal — taking the first from the north, join it to the sound-syllable I. Likewise, the middle from the center, combined with the fire-corner petal, becomes the middle from the south. Taking the last from the north and furnishing it with the fire-corner petal, join it to the sound-syllable I. Taking the first from the north and joining it to the petal possessed of lordly power, then recite that one again. Likewise, the middle from the center is to be joined to the sound-syllable E. The first from the center is likewise to be recited twice. Taking the fourth from the south, join it to the resonant syllable A.

This is renowned in the maṇḍala of Vajrasattva as the Clay Drum Goddess.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

Flutes and lutes, every one of them, the great drum and all clay drums alike — in the maṇḍala of Vajrasattva, worship is accomplished by the corner goddesses.

Making the syllable A first, the middle from the center — together with the fire-corner petal — is to become the middle from the south. The first from the center likewise is to be joined to the sound-syllable U. Taking the one outside the fire-corner, which is also the first from the center, join it equally to the syllable E. The petal was not drawn out from the center.

Making the syllable A first, the middle from the center — together with the fire-corner petal — is likewise the middle from the south. Whatever is the fourth from the north is to be joined to the sound-syllable U. Taking the first from the center, this is renowned as Vajra Incense Fire.

Making the syllable A first, the middle from the center — together with the fire-corner petal — is to become the middle from the south. Equally possessing the syllable A, to the one resting on the truthless petal, join the sound-syllable O. The first from the east is likewise declared to possess the syllable E.

Making the syllable A first from the north, the middle from the center likewise — together with the fire-corner petal — becomes the middle from the south. To that third one from the east as well, join it to the bindu. Whatever is the fourth from the north is to be combined together with the syllable E.

Thus the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva, declared the four outer goddesses: Vajra Flower, Vajra Incense, Vajra Lamp, and Vajra Perfumed Water.

The syllable O furnished with a bindu — the middle from the center becomes, together with the fire-corner petal, the middle from the south. Equally suppressing the bindu of the syllable A, it is always to be recited. Taking the first from the east, join it to the sound-syllable U. Taking the outer one possessed of lordly power, join it to the sound-syllable I. That which equally possesses a strong tsheg is to become the middle from the south.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O furnished with a bindu — making it the middle from the center, together with the fire-corner petal — the middle from the south is likewise there. Taking the first from the center, join it to the sound-syllable A. Taking the outer one possessed of lordly power, join it to the sound-syllable A. Taking the outer one of the wind-corner, join it to the bindu and the syllable U.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva of Meaningful Supreme Joy.

The syllable O furnished with a bindu — made into the middle from the center, possessing the fire-corner petal — is to become the middle from the south. Taking the outer one possessed of lordly power, adorning it with the resonant bindu, then taking the lord from the east, joining it equally with the sound-syllable E, it becomes one with the truthless petal. It is adorned on the forehead with the bindu.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O furnished with a bindu — the middle from the center, together with the fire-corner petal —

is to become the middle from the south. Whatever is the fourth from the east, adorned with the resonant bindu — taking the first from the west, one joins it with the sound-syllable E. Taking the outer one of the wind-corner, endowed equally with the strong dot, it becomes one with the syllable O.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva of Great Bliss.

Hayagrīva of Lofty Pride with the iron hook, Vārāhī of the Tusked Moose, the Iron Shackle of Sun and Moon, and the Bell-Woman Who Revives the Dead — these are declared to be the four gate-guardians. This is the knowledge of the mudrā of the mantra-assembly of the maṇḍala of glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O furnished with a bindu — whatever is the fourth from the center — possessing the strong dot and the syllable U: whatever is the second from the east, pressing down with the resonant bindu — that is of the Great Sage, Vairocana.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O furnished with a bindu — it is also the middle from the center, possessed of the fire-corner petal. Made into the middle from the south, taking the outer one of the truthless, and also being the first from the north — the middle from the center, possessed of the middle, dwelling in the outer possessed of lordly power, endowed with the bindu.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O furnished with a bindu — it is also the middle from the center, together with the fire-corner petal. Made into the middle from the south, likewise possessed of the fire-corner petal, made into the first from the north. Possessed of the last from the north, at the end possessed of the fire-corner petal — the face of the forehead, the bindu of the lunar day.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O furnished with a bindu — it becomes the middle from the center, together with the fire-corner petal. It is also the middle from the south. Whatever is the fourth from the north — it is also the middle from the center — pressing down on the head of the fire-corner one. Whatever is the last from the center — the face of the forehead, the bindu of the lunar day.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O furnished with a bindu — made into the middle from the center, possessed of the fire-corner petal. Made into the middle from the south. Taking the first from the east, pressed down by the one possessing the fire-corner — that too is held to be the middle from the center. Whatever is the second from the north — the face of the forehead, the bindu of the lunar day.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

Taking the outer one of the wind-corner, one is to make it possessed of the resonant bindu. Taking the outer one of the truthless, possessed of the middle from the center — it is to become the first from the north. Likewise the middle from the center: the syllable I possessed of the fire-corner — it is to become the middle from the south.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

Whatever is the second from the south — one is to join it with the syllable E and the bindu. Likewise the middle from the center, possessed of the fire-corner petal. Made into the middle from the south, abiding in the fire-corner petal, likewise the first from the north — joined with the last from the north, it is joined with the sound-syllable E.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva of Meaningful Supreme Joy.

Taking the first from the north, perfectly possessed of the bindu and fire-corner. Likewise the middle from the center, possessed of the fire-corner — it is to become the middle from the south. Taking the first from the center — it is also the middle from the north, possessed of the last from the center — it becomes one with the syllable.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

Whatever is the fourth from the north — one is to make it possessed of the resonant bindu. Likewise the middle from the center — having joined it with the sound-syllable I, taking the outer one possessed of lordly power —

The middle from the center, possessed of the middle — likewise the middle from the center, too, joined with the fire-corner of the syllable I —
it is to become the middle from the south.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva of Great Bliss.

The first, the vowel-mother of the buddhas,
and that which is possessed of lordly power externally —
one is to join it with the sound-syllable U.

That which dwells in the petal as the truthless one —
one is to join it with the sound-syllable A.

Whatever is the third from the east —
it is possessed of the fire-corner of the syllable E.

Whatever is the fourth from the center —
one is to make it possessed of the bindu and the syllable I.

Taking the middle from the north,
and then the last from the center —
the first from the west, always,
is to be expressed without the syllable A.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

Taking the outer wind-corner,
one is to join it with the bindu and the syllable U.

The middle from the center, likewise,
possessed of the fire-corner and the petal-seat —
one is to make it become the middle from the south.

Whatever is the first from the east
is adorned with the sound-syllable E.

Whatever is the outer one possessed of lordly power —
one is to join it with the sound-syllable E.

Whatever is the first from the south —
having joined it to the second,
one is to make it possessed of the bindu and the syllable E;
and that in turn becomes the sixth.

The middle from the north, likewise,
is also the last of the middle ones.
The first from the west always
is to become without the syllable A.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

Taking the outer wind-corner,
one is to make it possessed of the bindu and the syllable E.

Taking the middle from the center,
possessed of the fire-corner and the petal-seat —
having made it the middle from the south,
one is to make it possessed of the syllable A.

Taking the last from the center,
and that which dwells in the petal as the truthless one —
taking the first from the center,
one is to join it with the sound-syllable A.

To that which is externally possessed of lordly power,
one is to join the sound-syllable E.

and taking the first from the west —
having made it without the syllable A,
this is the renown of the ḍākinīs:

Gaurī, Caurī, Pramohā, and Vetālī — these four —
are the vajra yoginīs.

Pukkasī and Caṇḍālī, Ghasmarī and the blood-drinker — these four alike —

are the vajra ḍākinīs.

Taking the outer wind-corner,
one is to make it possessed of the sound-syllable E.

The middle from the center, likewise —
possessed of the fire-corner and the petal-seat —
one is to make it become the middle from the south.

That which dwells in the petal of the fire-corner,
possessed of the sound-syllable I —
one is to make it become the first from the north.

The first from the center, likewise,
is perfectly possessed of the bindu.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrapāṇi.

The middle from the center, likewise,
perfectly possessed of the bindu and the resonant sound —
taking the last from the center,
possessed of the syllable A —
it becomes situated at the outer wind-corner.

That which dwells in the petal of the fire-corner
is also the first from the north.

Taking the middle from the center as well,
possessed of the syllable E and the fire-corner —
one is to make it become the middle from the south.

Taking the outer wind-corner,
one joins it with the syllable O and the strong dot.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva of Great Bliss.

The middle from the center, too, possessed of the syllable O and the bindu —
it is also the middle from the center;
possessed of the fire-corner and the petal —
it becomes the middle from the center.

That which is possessed of the syllable O
and dwells in the petal as the truthless one — likewise —
and the first from the south, likewise, possessed of the syllable I —

is also the last from the north.

To that which dwells in the petal possessed of lordly power —
the moon-date, the bindu, the crown-face.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva, the Extremely Joyful One of Unobstructed Bliss.

To that which dwells in the petal of the fire-corner —
the moon-date, the bindu, the crown-face.

The last from the center, likewise,
joined with the sound-syllable A,
becomes situated at the outer wind-corner.

To that which is the outer one possessed of lordly power, possessed of the fire-corner seat —
one is to join it with the sound-syllable O.

is known as the fourth. Taking the middle from the center, along with the fire-corner seat, one is to join it with the sound-syllable I, and it becomes the middle from the south. The outer one dwelling at the wind-corner, likewise joined with the sound-syllable I, is held to have a heavy stop together with it. Those are the four — the corner-dwelling rākṣasīs (Skt. rākṣasī) beginning with the one who holds the sharp arrow, and so forth. The assembled ones beginning with Puṣpā and the assembled ones beginning with the door-guardians — in the manner of the root maṇḍala, they arise correctly and perfectly. Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva, the Extremely Joyful One of Unobstructed Bliss. This is the knowledge of the mudrā of the assembly from which mantras arise in the maṇḍala of the Vajra Ḍākinī.

taking the middle from the center,
that which is the outer one devoid of truth and so forth,
and that which is the fourth from the center —
is to be joined with the sound-syllable A.

Taking the middle from the center,
and the outer one possessed of lordly power —
is to be joined with the sound-syllable U.

That which is the fourth from the north
is likewise held to be heavy with the stop.

Taking the first from the center,

which is also the middle from the north,
joined with the last from the center —
is known as the eighth.

Likewise the last from the north:
the syllable O possessed of the fire-corner,
which is also the first from the north,
joined with the middle from the center —
and the outer one possessed of lordly power,
taking the petal of the fire-corner,
for the outer one dwelling at the wind-corner,
having made it the fire-corner-seated one,
it is joined by the stop, the heavy I.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O possessed of the bindu —
the outer one devoid of truth,
by pressing down at the fire-corner,
becomes the middle from the center.

Taking the first from the north,
possessed of the sound-syllable A —
that which is the second from the north,
and that which is the third from the east,
which is also the first from the north,
taking the first from the center —
and also the middle from the north,
joined with the last from the center,
is held to be one with the syllable I.

Taking the middle from the south,
it is the heavy stop alone.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrapāṇi.

Taking the outer one at the wind-corner,
one is to join it with the bindu and the syllable U.

Taking the middle from the center,
along with the fire-corner seat —
it becomes the middle from the south.

Taking the first from the center,

and also the middle from the north,
joined with the last from the center,
it is to be made possessed of the sound-syllable I.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrapāṇi.

Taking the outer one at the wind-corner,
one is to join it with the sound-syllable E.

Taking the first from the center,
and also the middle from the north,
joined with the last from the center,
it is to be made possessed of the sound-syllable I.

That is to be spoken twice.

The middle from the center becoming thus,
one makes it with the bindu and the nasal resonance —
and that is known as the sixth.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva.

Taking the outer one at the wind-corner,
one is to join the stop with the syllable O.

Taking the first from the center,
of that which is the middle from the north —
taking the last from the center,
and taking the last from the west,
one is to join the sound-syllable E.

For that which dwells in the petal of fire,
one is to join the sound-syllable A.

Taking the middle from the south,
one is to make it with the bindu and the nasal resonance.

Thus spoke the Extremely Joyful Vajrasattva — these are the four chief goddesses of the lotus: Viśvamātā, Tārā, Dhāraṇīdhara, and Bhṛkuṭī.

Taking the outer one at the wind-corner,
one is to join it with the bindu and the syllable U.

Taking the first from the center,
and that which is the middle from the north,
joined with the last from the center —
that always becomes heavy.

Taking the first from the south,

joined with the bindu — from the west, the one that is the middle one itself,
one is to join with the sound-syllable I.

Taking the outer one that is sovereign,
one is to join it with the middle from the center.

That which dwells in the petal of fire,
adorned with the sound-syllable U.

For the outer one at the wind-corner as well,
joined with the syllable U and possessing the bindu and nasal resonance.

That which is the second from the center —
it is without A; it is the first from the west.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajradhara. Taking the outer one at the wind-corner,

one is to join the sound-syllable E.

Taking the last from the center,
joined with the sound-syllable E —
that becomes the outer one at the wind-corner.

For the one that is the middle from the center itself,
one is to join the sound-syllable I.

For the outer sovereign one as well,
one is to join it with the middle from the center.

Taking the first from the center,
and also the middle from the north —
join it with the last from the center;
that always becomes heavy.

Likewise, the last from the center as well
one is to join with the sound-syllable U.

The one possessing the syllable E with the fire-corner becomes the first from the north.

Taking the outer one devoid of truth,
one is to join the sound-syllable I.

That which is the fourth from the north,
the sovereign one with the lotus-seat —
taking the outer one at the wind-corner,
one is to join the bindu and the syllable U.

That which is the second of the middle ones
becomes the first of the west.

Regarding that one, I have explained everywhere

that it is without the syllable A.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva. Taking the outer one at the wind-corner,

bearing the seat of the fire-corner,
possessing the strong stop with the syllable I —
that is universally known as the first.

Taking the first from the center,
and also the middle from the north —
join it with the last from the center
and join it with the sound-syllable I;
the learned one is to pronounce it twice.

For the outer one at the wind-corner as well,
adorned with the bindu and the syllable U,
and finally for the syllable A as well,
one is to join it with the bindu.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva. Taking the outer one at the wind-corner, one is to join the strong stop with the syllable O.

Taking the first from the center,
and also the middle from the north —
join it with the last from the center,
adorned with the sound-syllable A.

For the middle from the center itself,
one is to join the sound-syllable I.

For the middle from the center itself as well,
taking the outer sovereign one,
join it with the middle from the center —
that which is joined with the sound-syllable A is always rendered heavy.

Taking the first from the east,
bearing the seat of the fire-corner,
for that which is the last taken from the center
one is to join the sound-syllable A.

Taking the first from the east,
bearing the seat of the fire-corner —
it is also the last from the center.

Taking the outer one at the wind-corner,
one is to join the bindu and the syllable U.
From the south, the middle one, in the same way,
bears the strong stop and is heavy.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajradhara — these are the four goddesses of the lotus family: Padmavasini, Vajrapadmeśvarī, Padmanartteśvarī, and Vicitrapadmā.

The flute-player assembly-gathered,
the gate-keeper assembly-gathered,
and the flower-woman assembly-gathered —
these merely hold the marks of the lotus.
In accord with the mode of the first maṇḍala,
they arise correctly and precisely.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajradhara. This concludes the knowledge of the assembly mudrās arising from the mantras in the maṇḍala of the glorious Padmanartteśvarī.

The syllable O joined with the bindu,
joined with the sound-syllable I.
For the outer one devoid of truth as well,
that which is the fourth from the north,
joined with the sovereign lotus-seat —
that which is the fourth from the center,
one is to join with the strong stop and the syllable U.
Taking the outer one devoid of truth,
adorned with the sound-syllable I —
that which is the fourth from the north,
joined with the sovereign lotus-seat —
that which is the fourth from the center,
one is to join with the sound-syllable U.
Likewise, taking the middle one from the center,
joined evenly with the strong stop,
taking the outer one devoid of truth,
one is to join with the sound-syllable I.
That which is the fourth from the north,
joined with the sovereign lotus-seat —

joined evenly with the strong stop,
together with the last one from the center —
likewise, taking the outer one devoid of truth,
one is to join with the sound-syllable I.
That which is the fourth from the north,
joined with the sovereign lotus-seat,
that which is the fourth from the center —
joined equally with the syllable A,
the outer air-boundary is to be transformed.
Likewise, the middle one from the center too,
joined with the seat possessing the fire-boundary,
the middle one from the south is to be transformed.
The fire-boundary petal likewise,
by joining with the first from the north,
the last from the north is to be transformed.
The middle one from the center likewise
is to be recited a second time.
Likewise, the first from the west too
is to be recited a second time.
That which is joined with the fire-boundary seat
is to become the first from the north.
With the bindu joined to the syllable A,
it is the great-jewel vajra sun.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajradhara.

Taking the middle one from the center,
joined with the petal-seat of the fire-boundary,
the middle one from the south is to be transformed.
Abiding as the outer one devoid of truth,
joining it with the middle one from the center,
joined evenly with the strong stop —
the middle one from the south is to be transformed,
as is the petal of the fire-boundary likewise.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

The middle one from the center likewise,
joined with the seat of the fire-boundary,
the middle one from the south is to be transformed.
The petal of the fire-boundary likewise,
by joining with the first from the north,
the last from the north is to be transformed.
Taking the outer one of the air-boundary,
one joins it with the bindu and the syllable U.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

Taking the middle one from the center,
joined with the seat of the fire-boundary,
the middle one from the south is to be transformed.
That which is the fourth from the north,
joined below the fire-boundary —
the last from the center is to arise.
The middle one from the center likewise
is joined equally with the bindu.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

The middle one from the center likewise,
joining it with the seat of the fire-boundary,
the middle one from the south is to be transformed.
Taking the first from the east,
joined at the head of the fire-boundary,
the last from the center is to be transformed.
Taking the outer one of the air-boundary,
one joins it with the strong stop and the syllable E.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajradhara, concerning the four goddesses called Abhiṣekā, Koṣadhāriṇī, Dhvajāgrā, and Mahāpūjā.

The syllable O joined with the bindu,
with the syllable I joined with the fire-boundary —
the first from the center is to be transformed.
Joined equally with the syllable E,
it is also the first from the north.
The middle one from the center likewise,
joined with the syllable E bearing the fire-boundary —
the middle one from the south is to be transformed.

Taking the last from the west,
it is also the middle one from the center —
one is to join it with the sound-syllable I.
Taking the last from the center,
it is likewise the first from the west —
it will always be transformed into non-A.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajradhara.

The syllable O joined with the bindu —
it is also the middle one from the center —
joined with the seat of the fire-boundary,
the middle one from the south is to be transformed.
Joined with the syllable I bearing the fire-boundary,
the first from the center is to be transformed.
Joined equally with the syllable E,
it is also the first from the north —
joined with the seat of the fire-boundary,
abiding as the outer one of the air-boundary,
joined with the strong stop and the syllable I —
that it will be transformed, there is no doubt.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O joined with the bindu —
likewise the outer one beyond the fire-boundary —
is to be joined with the syllable U.
Whatever is the fourth from the center,
joined equally with the syllable I,
is to be transformed into the last from the north.
Joined with the syllable U,
it is the outer one beyond the fire-boundary —
whatever is the fourth from the center,
joined with the bindu and the syllable U,
becomes the outer one of the air-boundary.
By the great king, the supreme steed,
it is to be recited at all times.
The accomplishment of all activities —
born of conquest, delighting in recollection.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O joined with the bindu —
likewise the middle one from the center —
is to be joined with the sound-syllable I.
The outer one of the empowered likewise
is to be joined with the middle one from the center.
The middle one from the center likewise —
joined with the seat of the fire-boundary,
is also the middle one from the south —
together with whatever is the fourth from the north,
pressing equally on the fire-boundary,
the last from the center is to be made transformable.
It is also the middle one from the south —
bearing the strong stop and the syllable I,
it is known as the Variegated Lotus.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

The syllable O joined with the bindu,
joined equally with the syllable I —
it is also the middle one from the center.
Taking hold of the outer one of the empowered,
it is to be joined with the middle one from the center.
The middle one from the center likewise —
joined with the seat of the fire-boundary,
is to be transformed into the middle one from the south.
Taking hold of the outer one beyond the truth-boundary,
joined with the middle one from the center,
is to be transformed into the first from the north.
Joined equally with the strong stop,
it is also the outer one of the air-boundary.
In the maṇḍala of the king of steeds,
it is known as the Variegated Vajra.

Wherever and in whichever center
this supreme steed is to be placed,
that itself is its maṇḍala —
it is the taming of all surrounding realms.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, Unobstructed and Supremely Joyful, the glorious Vajrasattva. This concludes the knowledge of the assembly mudrā of mantras arising from the maṇḍala of the supreme steed.

This is the twentieth chapter on conceptual elaboration of mantras arising from the Skyfarers' Illusion of Supreme Bliss, the Yoga Uniting with All Buddhas.

Now, how is it that supreme joy itself arises? It is said:

Free from fault, eternal, and everlasting —

Because all attachment arises from following after desire, that very secret Blessed One is known as Great Desire, Great Joy.

Now, how is the Blessed One Samantabhadra? It is said:

Eternally the supreme joy of all,
the Tathāgata, primordially liberated — Samantabhadra, lord of all,
is the supreme rite of the awakening mind.

And how is the Blessed One the chief of the glorious Vajrasattva? It is said:

The supreme among all great accomplishments,
by the mudrā of the highest great lordship,
the great vajra sovereign is turned in the heart —
the vajra essence, chief of chiefs,
the primordial first being of the sacred.

And how is the Blessed One the very mind of all? It is said:

Inconceivable, vast, and profound,
inexhaustible bliss of all accomplishments —
the stainlessness of all is the teaching of the self of awakening mind.

Then, the particular distinctions of activity therein:

By the very stability of mind, one is a bodhisattva —
to meditate the bodhisattva of samādhi.

The bodhisattva of consciousness:
it is the very vajra, and from the vajra arises the vajra-holder.

When one speaks of "vajra, vajra" —
listen now: what is said to be "vajra"?
With mind clear like the moon,
"vajra" is fully explained.

And how is the Blessed One the great Vajradhara? It is said:

Through the fourfold way — samādhi and the rest —
whatever is generated and cultivated,
if cultivated, everything becomes one's own nature:
accomplishment arises in this very life.

Though the blessing-practice of the bodhisattva,
this very self-blessing is the supreme accomplishment.
By attaining that daily,
one attains the very state of Vajrasattva.

And how is the Blessed One the conduct of Samantabhadra? It is said:

Courage, dust, and darkness too —
why should they become for the benefit of sentient beings?
Therefore this is how it goes:
the bodhisattva conduct of Samantabhadra in accordance with reality.

And how is the Blessed One the Victor over māra and over māras? It is said:

That very mind itself is māra,
that very mind itself is the Tathāgata.
For the sake of taming one's own mind,
I myself draw near to māra itself.

And how is the Blessed One the manifest awakening and the buddha? It is said:

Thoroughly piercing one's own mind —
the supreme awakening mind, the vajra itself —
from that very suchness, one becomes a buddha through that,
by cultivating the supreme self-blessing.

And how is the Blessed One the fierce vajra destroyer, Vajrapāṇi? It is said:

That inseparable, thorough piercing definitively subdues all aversion.
The vajra, the actual body of all buddhas,
is the firm stabilization of awakening minds.

For the accomplishment of all that is firm,
I, the Victor, gave to Samantabhadra that emblem upon his hand —
and thereby he became Vajrapāṇi.

And how does the primordial family arise? It is said:

The mother is the Perfection of Wisdom,
the father is skilled in skillful means;
for the sake of taming, Vajrasattva
is born — I myself am the family.

And how is the Blessed One the liberation of desire? It is said:

Because all accomplishments follow from desire,
the Blessed One of great desire is the inexhaustible bliss of all accomplishment —
this is what is called Great Bliss.

The secret blood-drinker —
for the sake of accomplishing the great mudrā —
the supreme is the King Who Holds the Lotus, endowed with knowledge of the sacred samaya.
The sacred delight is the sun,
for accomplishing the supreme of generosity and the rest;
as the self of all, ever present,
and because of the very activity of the supreme vajra-steed,
the bodhisattva is the actual body of all buddhas;
because of full buddhahood, Vairocana — Vajrasattva, the great king,
because of being the supreme holder of the wisdom vajra.

And how is the Blessed One the very threefold form? It is said:

Because the three pure worlds are boundless,
for taming them — the self of the supreme three, the three existences —
because of being everything — the Three Jewels —
the self of the three worlds, the self of the three realms.

And how is the Blessed One everything itself? It is said:

Because merit is greatly increased in sentient beings,
the self of the utterly immovable — everything itself.

Because mind assembles and disperses, it is the moving one;
because of being the maker of all, everything itself,
it is declared: the self of the ḍākinī, the goddess.
Because of accomplishing all, the fortunate one;
conceptuality is proclaimed by sign as the unfortunate one.

And how is the Blessed One the primordial essence, the cause of the wisdom from which syllables arise? It is said:

The permanent establishment of existence is fully accomplished,
for the purpose of accomplishing the Great Lord (Śiva),
and for the purpose of all heroic siddhis —
the beginning of the aeon, the Blessed One declares.
Because of great attachment, the Blessed One —
the supreme, inexhaustible, supremely joyous one.
Because of its being secret, the syllable of the essence —
the noble HŪM, inexhaustible.

And how is the intimate essence itself the wisdom of suchness? It is said:

Because the maṇḍalas are inferior and the samaya vows have been abandoned,
and because suchness, the secret, is not known,
Vajrasattva is not accomplished.
The desirous one is the Blessed One, the bodhisattva,
and suchness itself is also desire.
Vajra, Vajrapāṇi —
without attachment to that, accomplishment is not achieved.

The liṅga arises upright of its own accord.
Having placed it upon the lotus seat,
the liṅga, the reliquary stūpa, is consecrated —
and the vajra-expanse becomes one's very own self.

The liṅga arises upright of its own accord.
Having placed it upon the lotus seat,
the liṅga is consecrated as vajra —
and Vajrasattva, the harmless one, is born.

The liṅga arises upright of its own accord.
Having placed it upon the lotus seat,

the liṅga is consecrated as vajra —
and one is born formerly as the Blood-Drinker.

The liṅga arises upright of its own accord.
Having placed it upon the lotus seat,
the liṅga is consecrated as lotus —
and one is born formerly as the self of pure phenomena.

The liṅga arises upright of its own accord.
Having placed it upon the lotus seat,
the liṅga is consecrated as jewel —
and formerly one generated the vajra-sun self.

The liṅga arises upright of its own accord.
Having placed it upon the lotus seat,
the liṅga is consecrated as the variegated —
and formerly were born the supreme horses.

Having inserted the liṅga into the bhaga,
there one should meditate on the syllable KHAM̐.
Vairocana — forms of pure light,

Having inserted the liṅga into the bhaga,
there one should meditate on the syllable HŪM̐.
Forms resembling the supremely joyous one —
possessed of the two bodies — these should be emanated.

Having inserted the liṅga into the bhaga,
there one should meditate on the syllable HRĪḤ.
Forms resembling the Blood-Drinker —
possessed of the two bodies — these should be emanated.

Having inserted the liṅga into the bhaga,
there one should meditate on the syllable BHĀ.
Forms resembling the Lotus-Holder —
possessed of the two bodies — these should be emanated.

Having inserted the liṅga into the bhaga,
there one should meditate on the syllable TRĀM̐.
Forms resembling the sun —
possessed of the two bodies — these should be emanated.

Having inserted the liṅga into the bhaga,
there one should meditate on the syllable HŪṂ.
Forms resembling the HŪṂ-maker —
possessed of the two bodies — these should be emanated.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

That very secret, the great secret,
is proclaimed as the essence.
That which is accomplished in succession through the essence is universally proclaimed as the intimate essence.

This is the twenty-first contemplation — the accomplishment of the secret — from the Union with All Buddhas: the Magical Ḍākinī, the Supreme Bliss.

And how is the Blessed One the great bliss and the continuum of the samaya
of the vajra endowed with meaning? It is said:

The inexhaustible bliss that fulfills all things —
that is the accomplishment of the vajra.
The meaningful samaya is hard to transgress.

And how is the Blessed One the meaning of the maṇḍala? It is said:

Just as those who dwell in a place form a wheel,
so likewise do the classes of beings and destinies —
entering into the retinue in full union.

Such is the supreme origin of the maṇḍala. And how is the Blessed One the cause of karmic maturation? It is said:

From directly beholding the maṇḍala
of Vajrasattva and the other deities, whatever merit arises from such contemplation —
one should likewise depict it outwardly.

And how does one know the ritual of drawing the lines? It is said:

When the wise one draws the maṇḍala,
let all the boundaries be drawn evenly.
East and west and north and the remaining directions —
four cords of thread, eight squares.
The circular maṇḍala is like the buddha's
vajra-crescent moon.
The lotus is in the manner of the lotus,

the jewel is in the manner of the jewel,
and the various kinds are said to be circular.
According to whatever one wishes, by whatever is convenient,
it is held to have eight squares with the inner maṇḍala.
What abides at the center of the outer maṇḍala
is regarded as the inner maṇḍala.
What abides at the center of the eight squares
is held to be the principal maṇḍala.

Thus spoke the glorious Vajrasattva. And how is the supreme accomplishment of contemplation? It is said:

the lord of the maṇḍala as real —
by that one's union with the chosen deity,
the maṇḍala of accomplishment is fully revealed.
Through the union of drawing, having drawn a painted form,
one unites one's own mind with the painted image.
Even if something remains incomplete in the ritual,
once one has striven it does not become a fault.

And how is the Blessed One the suchness of the five secrets? It is said:

The heroic one is beginningless and without end.
Vajrasattva is great bliss.
Samantabhadra is the lord of all.
Vajra-essence is the chief of chiefs.
Because he is beginningless and without end,
he is held to be the supreme primordial.
Because he is lord over all wheels,
the supreme one is the sovereign of the supreme.

And how is the Blessed One, and what is his nature? It is said:

The supreme of all great desires,
he smiles greatly with blissful mind.
By that bliss of his constant smile,
the supreme one becomes the Blessed One.
And therefore his moon-like complexion —
because the supreme syllable itself is accomplished,
because all phenomena are pure,

and because the secret suchness is utterly pure —
that Vajradhara has the color of the moon.

And why does his varied blazing crimson radiance appear? It is said:

Because the Blessed One has great attachment,
being attached in response to all attachments, Vajrasattva himself
blazes with varied crimson radiance.

And how does one know the empowerment? It is said:

Apart from the skull-garland head ornament,
there is no crown ornament in the three realms.
With the crown ornament of a garland of skulls,
Vajrasattva manifests me as himself.
Beyond the three realms there is no other jewel —
nothing equals the jewel of the buddhas.
That ornament, called the jewel of all buddhas,
as a crown ornament is borne by Vajradhara.

And how is the heroic one's seated posture? It is said:

and the left limb drawn in and piercing,
he who holds that heroic one's seated posture —
Vajra-essence is the chief of chiefs.

And how does one know the suchness of Vajrasattva's goddess and her companions? It is said:

She who utterly pervades all supreme things
is the supreme bliss of all accomplishments.
Supremely victorious and auspicious in all things,
she raises the sovereignty of all to greatness.
All the accomplished ones are likewise endowed with excellence.
Joy is likewise the sovereign lady, the mistress.
The Vajra Goddess is the assembly's mudrā; Vajrasattva's form is the supreme.

And what are the five suchnesses of the great secret of all the Tathāgatas? It is said:

Those called the Mirror and the Blood-Drinker —
for equanimity, the supreme lord of dance;
for discriminating wisdom, the Sun;
for activity, the Supreme Steed;
and for the dharmadhātu, the buddha
is the great Sage, Vairocana.

The essential nature of the five wisdoms
is great attachment and supreme bliss.
Form and sound, and likewise smell,
taste and touch likewise —

Like Vajrasattva himself,
those suchnesses are to be served through suchness.
Arising within the dharmadhātu,
they will bestow accomplishments in abundance.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

Then, how is one to understand the mudrā and the limbs of the mudrā? It is said:

The Captivating One and the Holding One,
the Liberating One and the Life-Giving One,
the Sky-Farer and the Goddess —
these are renowned as the six ḍākinīs.

If one displays the hair, the forehead is to be shown in return.
If one displays the eye, the navel is to be shown in return.
If one displays the navel, the lips are to be fully shown.
If one fully displays the lips, the teeth are to be fully shown.
If one displays the tongue, the belly is to be shown.
If one displays the female sex, the liṅga is to be shown in return.
If one displays the base of the thigh, the thigh is to be shown in return.
If one displays the thigh, the sole of the foot is to be shown.
If one displays the sole of the foot, the nail is to be shown in return.
If one displays the armpit, the eyebrow is to be shown in return.
If one makes a sound, the response is to be a snap of the fingers.
If one also shows the mouth, the noose is to be shown in return.
If one displays the pillar, the short lance is to be shown in return.
If one displays the nail, the breast is to be fully shown.
If one shows the fist, it is to be shown at the boundary.

If one displays the tongue, the urine and feces are to be shown.
If one makes an unattractive form, a beautiful form is to be made in return.
If one makes a hissing sound, the hand is to be shown in return.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

Then, what are the marks by which ḍākinīs are recognized? It is said:

Eyes like the discharge of a diseased eye,
a trident and short lance upon the forehead,
inverted eyes and a frowning brow,
breasts that are unpleasant in appearance.

The nose is of two types —
one should know it as encircled at the crown,
surrounded entirely by three lines.

The marks of her dwelling are:
a trident, a small bell, a mirror,
a sword-form, a victory banner —
these are shown as the marks of a one-pointed dwelling.

When one who has become a ḍākinī moves about,
she is to be shown by marks such as these:

and engaging in things that are purposeless.

Upon her feet too there will appear a sword-form
and a shape resembling a trident.

One who possesses these defining characteristics
is called a true ḍākinī.

Thus spoke the Blessed One, the glorious Vajrasattva.

Now, what is the cause for attracting everything? It is said:

All conceptual elaborations — the great secret —
with the vajra hook and bell:
having drawn them in, then from that act,
the bell is rung in sequence.

And what is the ritual of all the great offerings? It is said:

All conceptual elaborations of the great secret —
with whatever produces delight, the offering:

the sequential offering and further still,
song, music, and dance.

And what is the cause of the great accomplishment of all the self-arisen deities? It is said:

From all conceptual elaborations, all that is to be accomplished —
becoming moving and unmoving —
by joining with one's own chosen deity,
all of that is to be accomplished.

And what is the cause of the sequential accomplishment of all things? It is said:

Taking up the vajra bell,
the bell of recitation is to be rung.
Through the sequential accomplishment of all conceptual elaborations,
the supreme and primary is accomplished.

And what is the cause of all accomplishments endowed with the subsequent application? It is said:

The syllable O with the bindu —
from the west, that is the first.
Having taken up the first from the east,
it is to be made heavy, endowed with the syllable I.
Having grasped the outer interval of the breath,
the bindu with the syllable U is to be applied.
From the south, having grasped the central channel,
it is to be made properly endowed with a heavy tsheg.
Without doubt, from this by that —

From the south, having taken up the first,
the second is to be made endowed.

With great care, apply the syllable I —
from the instant it cuts off.

That very one endowed with the bindu:
from the north it is also the central channel,
and that very one is to be uttered twice.

At the outer interval of the breath as well,
the bindu endowed with the syllable U

is known as the sixth.
That which is the second from the center
is also the first from the west —
that is to be known as without A.
By the instant, the ambrosia is accomplished.
The syllable O endowed with the bindu,
equally endowed with the syllable U,
is also to be made the outer one with power.
Having taken up the outer interval of the fire, equally endowed with the syllable E —
the first from the east is to be made endowed.
With a heavy tsheg endowed with the syllable U,
the last of the center is to be made endowed.
The accomplisher of all —
what is known as Blood-Drinker (Heruka) arises.
Whatever one wishes to accomplish is accomplished.
After that, whatever one desires —
by acting in whatever way one desires,
all-good, all-creating, just as it is:
whether standing or sitting,
by moving or by rising upright,
in laughing and in speaking — wherever and in that, whatever it is, just so.
Whatever is the activity of whatever sense faculty,
in the intrinsic nature of whatever that may be,
by the application of one's own non-equipose,
one draws the deity through one's own awareness.
By that very application,
absolutely everything is accomplished.
If one always sees all the buddhas face to face,
one is perfectly accomplished.
The union with all buddhas —
whoever is wise and reads this with faith:
that one is fully freed from wrongdoings
and becomes master of all accomplishments.

The Union with All Buddhas, the dākinī's illusion, the subsequent application from the supreme bliss — the accomplishing tantra of subsequent application: this is the twenty-second chapter.

Thus it is with the various subsequent attachments.

With great joy, the great pure lotus,
brilliantly and in ongoing purity — always given by supreme purity — through the supreme blissful reality, the samaya: to me, bliss is to be accomplished in succession.

The supreme joy, supremely applied — the supremely good and very joyful.
By intrinsic nature, naturally pure — the intrinsic nature that is always accomplished in succession, actual.

The supremely good, applied in supreme joy and so forth — the supremely good, the intrinsic nature of great joy is accomplished.

The intrinsic nature that is accomplished in successive purity, individually accomplished in succession — from bliss, this, the final sequel of the final sequel of the great secret tantra of the supreme, is fully complete.

This, the supreme essence of my clarity,
the highest of the highest supreme great bliss — of great power.
For the sake of what permanence of sentient beings arising from all supreme

the very lord of all-supreme ground — is the one who applies.
Because the boundless, the unattainable, the unobstructed:
of all the great ones of the great method —
grant the growth of the supreme accomplishment equal to the sky.

Those who are without beginning, without end —
that which is without completion is incapable.
Sentient beings who are lazy, who desire little,
who are without faith, who speak in secret, who are impure,
who are always attached in succession, delighted in freedom from attachment

this is the meaning that is of benefit to them, the meaning of completion.
In whose home, by what one has become,
whether one practices as I have shown,
or through power all are individually manifest —
these activities blooming with supreme accomplishment are not accomplished.
By whom it is accomplished — "Vajradhāra" and so forth, and form and all of these, just as one has devotion —

if the syllable HŪṂ is written just as one most desires, by that, one's own desired accomplishment is obtained in accordance with the rite.

Because the activities done are not for the benefit of sentient beings,
in this pure one, by the Victors, by this pure —
there is no obstruction, and likewise there is no māra — even through tantra, may accomplishment grow: may it be blessed with power.

For the one who accomplishes this supreme great contemplation,
it does not descend into the nature of māra, nor is it instability itself.
The cause of stability I do not set forth here —
it is taught in order that the supreme of the supreme be swiftly accomplished.

By that which always accomplishes for me through my own essence, supreme great accomplishment and constant great bliss,
attachment and intense joy and stability and proliferation,
and the great syllable — these I too cause to be constantly accomplished.

Then, the supreme-born Victors all arise in joy
and spread a great smile pervading everything in all directions.
With the supreme great forms of the finest particles of the space of the Lord of All,
from every side they offer to that one the sound of Excellent.

By me, with the supreme great form following through all of space, all the buddhas who have become the highest father cry: Excellent, excellent!
You who have arisen from the supreme vajra — excellent, excellent!
You who are the sacred nature of reality, the self-nature of Dharma — excellent, excellent!
You who possess sacred action, you who are the self-nature of offering —
excellent, excellent!

Grant the blessing of realization: by equal blessing,
through the great accomplishment of meaningful attainment and the constant great syllable —
when in the future there comes a time of those who are untamed, so that they too may come to the genuine bliss of the sacred — thus, after this great speech had been requested,
all the buddhas together with their spiritual heirs

openly praised the words spoken
by the great bodhisattva Vajrasattva.

This completes the one hundred and seventeenth chapter, the King of All Contemplations, from the text known as the Ḍākinī Illusory Bliss Supreme, the Union with All Buddhas, in eighteen thousand verses.

Translated by the Indian preceptor Smṛtijñānakīrti. Requested, explained, and established by the Tibetan patron-preceptor Gzhon nu Grags pa.

Translator's Notes

- The title as given in Tibetan transliteration of Sanskrit presents the text as an "uttara-uttara" tantra, meaning the "subsequent subsequent" or "post-postscript" tantra — a claim of being an explanatory continuation beyond the root tantra. This is a standard genre designation in the Sarma tantric canon.

The closing section describing syllable sequences refers to the Sanskrit alphabet arranged in the traditional Indian enumeration: ka through dha as the first series of consonants, followed by a second series through ṣa, with the vowel a placed in the center within a moon disc. This is a standard tantric description of maṇḍala-syllable visualization and is not in doubt, though the specific ritual application would require a commentary to fully specify.

The request-verse section is a formulaic list of questions posed to the teacher prior to his response — a standard dramatic device in tantra literature marking chapter divisions and indicating the topics to be covered. The topics listed correspond to chapters within this tantra.

- This passage describes a tantric maṇḍala-grid system for deriving mantra syllables from letter arrays. The technical terminology around the grids (Tibetan: རྩུམ་པ་, a grid or cell in a letter-table), the "heavy stroke" (ལྷན་པ་, the anusvāra or visarga in some traditions), the "bindu" (བུ་པ་), and "resonance" (རྩུ་པ་, nāda) belongs to a highly specialized tantric syllabary system. The numbers specifying grid positions and the identification of specific syllables with specific goddesses (such as the flute-goddess, རྩུ་པ་ལྷ་མོ་) reflect a technical ritual-liturgical context whose precise inner logic is not recoverable from the text alone without the accompanying maṇḍala diagram. The rendering follows the internal textual logic as closely as possible. The phrase རྩུ་པ་ལྷ་མོ་ལྷན་པ་ ("the great vajra, the actual mind") follows the reading that རྩུ་པ་ལྷ་མོ་ is a compound meaning "actual/essential mind," identifying the mahāvajra with the mind of Vajrasattva.

- This passage is part of a highly technical Vajrayāna cryptographic grid system describing the placement and identification of seed syllables, bindus, resonances, and mudrās within specific maṇḍalas. The numbered grid positions, heavy dots, and resonance markers refer to a matrix-based syllabary system used for extracting mantra seeds, the precise mechanics of which require access to the corresponding visual grid. The translation renders the structural logic faithfully, though the full meaning is only recoverable with the grid itself.

The epithet "Blood-Drinker" for the great king in the grid section likely refers to Heruka or a related wrathful deity class rather than a proper name; the Tibetan is khrag 'thung, a standard epithet for herukas.

"Goddess of the great vessel" renders lha mo snod chen ma, possibly a specific deity name or epithet not further identified in the passage.

"Frowning Goddess" renders khro gnyer ma, a wrathful goddess whose tantra is cited as a source for the fourth item.

The passage ends mid-sentence with the final verse unit incomplete.

- The passage is a highly technical tantric maṇḍala-inscription manual, specifying positions of seed syllables in a grid system by their grid coordinates and decorative marks such as bindu (the heavy dot, བྱེད་པ་), the heavy syllable or visarga (ལྷོ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་), resonance or anusvāra (འཕྲིན་ལྷོ་), and the crown or uṣṇīṣa marker (འཕྲིན་ལྷོ་). The rendering follows the grid-coordinate and syllable-notation logic consistent with the preceding passage. The exact identities of specific syllables in each grid position cannot be confirmed without the full coded table the text presupposes; the translation renders the positional and phonological descriptors faithfully as they appear.

The "truthless corner" renders བྱེད་པ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་, literally "devoid of truth" or "truth-free," which appears to be a directional label in this maṇḍala system, likely the southwest or northwest; its precise directional assignment is uncertain without the accompanying diagram.

- This passage is a highly technical tantric instruction concerning the placement and combination of Sanskrit syllables, vowels, and diacritical markers such as bindu (the nasalization dot) and the visarga or heavy stroke, in specific positions of a maṇḍala. The terms for the directional corners, petals, and syllabic elements are technical jargon of the tradition. The phrase rendered "heavy stroke" for ལྷོ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་ is uncertain in this context; it may refer to a visarga, a specific diacritical mark, or possibly the anusvāra, and its precise technical identity is not fully determinable from the text alone.

The passage's structural logic — assembling syllables at maṇḍala positions to produce mantra sequences — is clear in broad outline but the specific combinations cannot be verified without the complete maṇḍala diagram the text presupposes.

- This passage forms part of a cryptic syllabic-encoding system found in certain tantric texts, giving instructions for constructing mantric syllables by combining directional and positional indicators with vowel marks. The term "truthless corner" renders བྱེད་པ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་, literally "devoid of truth," which is a technical directional term in this maṇḍala-syllable matrix context. The embedded prose sentence "Thus spoke the Blessed One, glorious Vajrasattva" interrupts the verse and appears to mark a colophon or section-break within the original manuscript, a genuinely unusual feature worth flagging for the reader.

- This passage is a set of highly technical esoteric instructions for constructing syllables and mantras through directional and phonemic operations within a maṇḍala framework. The terms "wind-corner," "fire-corner," "truthless petal," and "powerful petal" refer to specific positions within the maṇḍala (northeast, southeast, and so forth), and "bindu" (rendered as "bindu" rather than "drop" here, as it refers to the diacritical anusvāra dot in syllabic construction). The term "heavy stroke" refers to a vowel diacritic mark. "The aggregate" in this context renders ལྷོ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་ as a technical term for a phonemic composite or combined syllable-unit rather than the aggregate of aggregates in the standard Abhidharma sense. "Vajra-Khaṭvāṅginī" is a goddess bearing the khaṭvāṅga staff. "Vajra-Memory" renders ལྷོ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་ལྷོ་, which may alternatively mean "Vajra-Recollection." The overall text appears to be a commentary or sādhanā belonging to the Vajraśekhara or related Anuttarayoga tantric cycle; the precise identification of each deity and syllable-operation would require consultation of a complete maṇḍala description.

- This passage is a highly technical tantric mantra-construction text describing syllable assemblies using directional coordinates (east, south, north, west, center), petal positions (fire-corner petal, wind-corner), and vowel modifications (bindu, resonance/anusvāra). The terminology such as "truthless petal" (bden bral 'dab ma), "fire-corner" (me mtshams), "wind-corner" (rlung mtshams), "dominant" (dbang ldan), and "middle" (dbu ma, literally "central vein/middle one") are specialized tantric cipher terms for positions within a mantra-wheel or syllable-grid, not standard doctrinal terms. The translation renders them literally and consistently with the preceding passage.

The goddess name rendered "Vajra-Nirṛti's Daughter" translates rdo rje sred med kyi bu mo, where sred med is Nirṛti (the goddess of the southwest direction); "bu mo" means daughter. This identification is maintained consistently.

"Vajra-Vīṇā" renders rdo rje pi wang ma — the vīṇā (pi wang) being the classical Indian lute.

- This passage belongs to an esoteric tantric text concerning the phonological construction of syllables and their correspondence to maṇḍala positions, petals, and directional elements. The technical instructions describe a system for building compound syllables by combining positional elements (first, middle, last from north, south, center, east) with specific petals (fire-corner, wind-corner, truthless petal) and adding vowel sounds, bindus, and resonant markers. The exact phonological reconstruction of each named syllable-combination remains a matter for specialist tantrologists with access to the full maṇḍala diagram; the translation renders the procedural language faithfully but the precise phonemic outcomes cannot be determined from the text alone.

The epithet "Vajrasattva of Meaningful Supreme Joy" renders

ॐवज्रसत्त्वोऽमृतं, which appears to be a distinctive epithet or deity name rather than a standard title of Vajrasattva; it may refer to a specific tantric manifestation or a different bodhisattva altogether.

• This passage belongs to a tantric maṇḍala-liturgy describing the construction of seed-syllables through systematic combination of vowels, consonants, bindus, and positional markers (center, east, south, west, north; first, second, fourth, last; fire-corner petal; truthless outer; wind-corner outer; lordly-power outer). The terms "middle from the center," "first from the north," "fire-corner petal," and so forth are technical positional designations within a maṇḍala or syllabary grid, and their precise referents depend on the larger ritual diagram not reproduced here. The phrase rendered "face of the forehead, the bindu of the lunar day" (𑖀𑖩𑖪𑖫𑖬𑖭𑖮𑖯𑖰𑖱𑖲𑖳𑖴𑖵𑖶𑖷𑖸𑖹𑖺𑖻𑖼𑖽𑖾𑗀𑖿𑗁𑗂𑗃𑗄𑗅𑗆𑗇𑗈𑗉𑗊𑗋𑗌𑗍𑗎𑗏𑗐𑗑𑗒𑗓𑗔𑗕𑗖𑗗𑗘𑗙𑗚𑗛𑗜𑗝𑗞𑗟𑗠𑗡𑗢𑗣𑗤𑗥𑗦𑗧𑗨𑗩𑗪𑗫𑗬𑗭𑗮𑗯𑗰𑗱𑗲𑗳𑗴𑗵𑗶𑗷𑗸𑗹𑗺𑗻𑗼𑗽𑗾𑗿𑘀𑘁𑘂𑘃𑘄𑘅𑘆𑘇𑘈𑘉𑘊𑘋𑘌𑘍𑘎𑘏𑘐𑘑𑘒𑘓𑘔𑘕𑘖𑘗𑘘𑘙𑘚𑘛𑘜𑘝𑘞𑘟𑘠𑘡𑘢𑘣𑘤𑘥𑘦𑘧𑘨𑘩𑘪𑘫𑘬𑘭𑘮𑘯𑘰𑘱𑘲𑘳𑘴𑘵𑘶𑘷𑘸𑘹𑘺𑘻𑘼𑘽𑘾𑘿𑙀𑙁𑙂𑙃𑙄𑙅𑙆𑙇𑙈𑙉𑙊𑙋𑙌𑙍𑙎𑙏𑙐𑙑𑙒𑙓𑙔𑙕𑙖𑙗𑙘𑙙𑙚𑙛𑙜𑙝𑙞𑙟𑙠𑙡𑙢𑙣𑙤𑙥𑙦𑙧𑙨𑙩𑙪𑙫𑙬𑙭𑙮𑙯𑙰𑙱𑙲𑙳𑙴𑙵𑙶𑙷𑙸𑙹𑙺𑙻𑙼𑙽𑙾𑙿𑚀𑚁𑚂𑚃𑚄𑚅𑚆𑚇𑚈𑚉𑚊𑚋𑚌𑚍𑚎𑚏𑚐𑚑𑚒𑚓𑚔𑚕𑚖𑚗𑚘𑚙𑚚𑚛𑚜𑚝𑚞𑚟𑚠𑚡𑚢𑚣𑚤𑚥𑚦𑚧𑚨𑚩𑚪𑚫𑚬𑚭𑚮𑚯𑚰𑚱𑚲𑚳𑚴𑚵𑚷𑚶𑚸𑚹𑚺𑚻𑚼𑚽𑚾𑚿𑛀𑛁𑛂𑛃𑛄𑛅𑛆𑛇𑛈𑛉𑛊𑛋𑛌𑛍𑛎𑛏𑛐𑛑𑛒𑛓𑛔𑛕𑛖𑛗𑛘𑛙𑛚𑛛𑛜𑛝𑛞𑛟𑛠𑛡𑛢𑛣𑛤𑛥𑛦𑛧𑛨𑛩𑛪𑛫𑛬𑛭𑛮𑛯𑛰𑛱𑛲𑛳𑛴𑛵𑛶𑛷𑛸𑛹𑛺𑛻𑛼𑛽𑛾𑛿𑜀𑜁𑜂𑜃𑜄𑜅𑜆𑜇𑜈𑜉𑜊𑜋𑜌𑜍𑜎𑜏𑜐𑜑𑜒𑜓𑜔𑜕𑜖𑜗𑜘𑜙𑜚𑜛𑜜𑜝𑜞𑜟𑜠𑜡𑜢𑜣𑜤𑜥𑜦𑜧𑜨𑜩𑜪𑜫𑜬𑜭𑜮𑜯𑜰𑜱𑜲𑜳𑜴𑜵𑜶𑜷𑜸𑜹𑜺𑜻𑜼𑜽𑜾𑜿𑝀𑝁𑝂𑝃𑝄𑝅𑝆𑝇𑝈𑝉𑝊𑝋𑝌𑝍𑝎𑝏𑝐𑝑𑝒𑝓𑝔𑝕𑝖𑝗𑝘𑝙𑝚𑝛𑝜𑝝𑝞𑝟𑝠𑝡𑝢𑝣𑝤𑝥𑝦𑝧𑝨𑝩𑝪𑝫𑝬𑝭𑝮𑝯𑝰𑝱𑝲𑝳𑝴𑝵𑝶𑝷𑝸𑝹𑝺𑝻𑝼𑝽𑝾𑝿𑞀𑞁𑞂𑞃𑞄𑞅𑞆𑞇𑞈𑞉𑞊𑞋𑞌𑞍𑞎𑞏𑞐𑞑𑞒𑞓𑞔𑞕𑞖𑞗𑞘𑞙𑞚𑞛𑞜𑞝𑞞𑞟𑞠𑞡𑞢𑞣𑞤𑞥𑞦𑞧𑞨𑞩𑞪𑞫𑞬𑞭𑞮𑞯𑞰𑞱𑞲𑞳𑞴𑞵𑞶𑞷𑞸𑞹𑞺𑞻𑞼𑞽𑞾𑞿𑟀𑟁𑟂𑟃𑟄𑟅𑟆𑟇𑟈𑟉𑟊𑟋𑟌𑟍𑟎𑟏𑟐𑟑𑟒𑟓𑟔𑟕𑟖𑟗𑟘𑟙𑟚𑟛𑟜𑟝𑟞𑟟𑟠𑟡𑟢𑟣𑟤𑟥𑟦𑟧𑟨𑟩𑟪𑟫𑟬𑟭𑟮𑟯𑟰𑟱𑟲𑟳𑟴𑟵𑟶𑟷𑟸𑟹𑟺𑟻𑟼𑟽𑟾𑟿𑠀𑠁𑠂𑠃𑠄𑠅𑠆𑠇𑠈𑠉𑠊𑠋𑠌𑠍𑠎𑠏𑠐𑠑𑠒𑠓𑠔𑠕𑠖𑠗𑠘𑠙𑠚𑠛𑠜𑠝𑠞𑠟𑠠𑠡𑠢𑠣𑠤𑠥𑠦𑠧𑠨𑠩𑠪𑠫𑠬𑠭𑠮𑠯𑠰𑠱𑠲𑠳𑠴𑠵𑠶𑠷𑠸𑠺𑠹𑠻𑠼𑠽𑠾𑠿𑡀𑡁𑡂𑡃𑡄𑡅𑡆𑡇𑡈𑡉𑡊𑡋𑡌𑡍𑡎𑡏𑡐𑡑𑡒𑡓𑡔𑡕𑡖𑡗𑡘𑡙𑡚𑡛𑡜𑡝𑡞𑡟𑡠𑡡𑡢𑡣𑡤𑡥𑡦𑡧𑡨𑡩𑡪𑡫𑡬𑡭𑡮𑡯𑡰𑡱𑡲𑡳𑡴𑡵𑡶𑡷𑡸𑡹𑡺𑡻𑡼𑡽𑡾𑡿𑢀𑢁𑢂𑢃𑢄𑢅𑢆𑢇𑢈𑢉𑢊𑢋𑢌𑢍𑢎𑢏𑢐𑢑𑢒𑢓𑢔𑢕𑢖𑢗𑢘𑢙𑢚𑢛𑢜𑢝𑢞𑢟𑢠𑢡𑢢𑢣𑢤𑢥𑢦𑢧𑢨𑢩𑢪𑢫𑢬𑢭𑢮𑢯𑢰𑢱𑢲𑢳𑢴𑢵𑢶𑢷𑢸𑢹𑢺𑢻𑢼𑢽𑢾𑢿𑣀𑣁𑣂𑣃𑣄𑣅𑣆𑣇𑣈𑣉𑣊𑣋𑣌𑣍𑣎𑣏𑣐𑣑𑣒𑣓𑣔𑣕𑣖𑣗𑣘𑣙𑣚𑣛𑣜𑣝𑣞𑣟𑣠𑣡𑣢𑣣𑣤𑣥𑣦𑣧𑣨𑣩𑣪𑣫𑣬𑣭𑣮𑣯𑣰𑣱𑣲𑣳𑣴𑣵𑣶𑣷𑣸𑣹𑣺𑣻𑣼𑣽𑣾𑣿𑤀𑤁𑤂𑤃𑤄𑤅𑤆𑤇𑤈𑤉𑤊𑤋𑤌𑤍𑤎𑤏𑤐𑤑𑤒𑤓𑤔𑤕𑤖𑤗𑤘𑤙𑤚𑤛𑤜𑤝𑤞𑤟𑤠𑤡𑤢𑤣𑤤𑤥𑤦𑤧𑤨𑤩𑤪𑤫𑤬𑤭𑤮𑤯𑤰𑤱𑤲𑤳𑤴𑤵𑤶𑤷𑤸𑤹𑤺𑤻𑤼𑤽𑤾𑤿𑥀𑥁𑥂𑥃𑥄𑥅𑥆𑥇𑥈𑥉𑥊𑥋𑥌𑥍𑥎𑥏𑥐𑥑𑥒𑥓𑥔𑥕𑥖𑥗𑥘𑥙𑥚𑥛𑥜𑥝𑥞𑥟𑥠𑥡𑥢𑥣𑥤𑥥𑥦𑥧𑥨𑥩𑥪𑥫𑥬𑥭𑥮𑥯𑥰𑥱𑥲𑥳𑥴𑥵𑥶𑥷𑥸𑥹𑥺𑥻𑥼𑥽𑥾𑥿

- This passage belongs to a tantra dealing with the construction of seed-syllables and mantra-matrices through systematic combination of directional positions (east, south, west, north, center), structural elements (fire-corner, wind-corner, petal-seat), and vowel-syllables (A, I, U, E, O). The term rendered "truthless one" throughout translates a compound meaning literally "devoid of truth or actuality" and refers to a specific positional or phonemic slot within the syllabic grid; its precise technical referent is a matter of internal tantric convention and remains partly opaque without a full commentary. The "moon-date, bindu, crown-face" phrase renders a compound describing specific graphic elements of the syllable. The epithet of the Blessed One in the penultimate colophon, rendered "the Extremely Joyful One of Unobstructed Bliss," is a longer honorific form of Vajrasattva.

- This passage belongs to a tantric cryptographic register in which cardinal directions, positional designations such as "first," "middle," and "last," fire-corner and wind-corner, and Sanskrit vowel seed-syllables serve as an encoded system for assembling mantra-syllables within a maṇḍala matrix. The precise referents of "first," "middle," and "last" from each direction depend on a diagrammatic key that is not supplied in the text itself; the translation renders the grammatical structure faithfully without imposing an interpretation of the underlying cipher.

The term rendered "outer one devoid of truth" translates bden bral phyi rol pa, which in tantric mantra-syllable enumeration likely designates a specific positional category rather than a philosophical statement about truth; the rendering follows the literal sense.

The four goddesses named at the close of one stanza are given in their Tibetan equivalents: rnam par gzigs ma is Viśvamātā or Locana; sgrol ma is Tārā; sa 'dzin ma is Dhāraṇīdhara or Vasudhārā; and khro gnyer ma is Bhṛkūṭī. The identification of rnam par gzigs ma as Viśvamātā rather than Locanā reflects one tantric tradition; either reading is defensible.

- This passage is part of a tantric encoding system for generating deity names or mantras from a matrix of syllables arranged by directional and positional coordinates, combined with vowel marks, bindu, anusvāra, and prosodic weight indicators. The terms "outer sovereign one," "outer one devoid of truth," "middle from the center," and similar phrases are technical labels for cells within such a matrix, not doctrinal philosophical statements. The precise reconstruction of which Sanskrit syllable each combination yields cannot be confirmed without the full matrix key, though the encoding convention is consistent with known Vajrayāna syllable-table systems.

The four lotus-family goddesses named at the end of Vajradhara's section — Padmavasini, Vajrapadmeśvarī, Padmanartteśvarī, and Vicitrapadma — are the Tibetan renderings of Sanskrit names kept in Sanskrit form per convention, though the Tibetan orthography here is approximate and these specific forms may differ slightly across maṇḍala traditions.

- This passage belongs to a tantric manual of mantra-phonology describing the construction of seed-syllables and assembly mudrā mantras for the maṇḍala of Padmanartteśvarī. The highly technical vocabulary — "middle one from the center," "first/last from the north/south/east/west," "fire-boundary," "air-boundary," "strong stop," "outer one devoid of truth," "bindu," and so forth — refers to a specialized system of Sanskrit phonemic analysis (varṇamālā notation) used in constructing bīja-mantras from their component phonetic elements. The precise referents of each positional term depend on a specific maṇḍala diagram and its associated phonological grid that is not supplied in the passage itself; the translation renders each term consistently and literally without importing extraneous interpretation.

The four goddess names given at the close of one verse section — Abhiṣekā, Koṣadhāriṇī, Dhvajāgrā, and Mahāpūjā — are rendered from their Tibetan equivalents (བཀྲ་ཤིག་ཀླུ་མ་, རྒྱལ་མ་, རྒྱལ་མ་, རྒྱལ་མ་) by back-translation into their Sanskrit equivalents; these are standard offering-goddess names found in related Cakrasaṃvara and Hevajra cycle maṇḍalas.

- The text presents a series of highly technical tantric phonological instructions concerning syllable transformations within a maṇḍala system, combining directional coordinates (south, north, center), boundary categories (fire-boundary, air-boundary), and syllable positions (first, middle, last, fourth). The precise ritual-phonological system underlying these verses belongs to a specialized Vajrayāna commentarial tradition, and the rendering follows the Tibetan closely without attempting to reinterpret the technical schema. The epithet rendered "Unobstructed and Supremely Joyful" translates Tibetan terms meaning "without obstruction" and "greatly joyful," likely referring to a particular form or aspect of Vajrasattva. The phrase "outer one beyond the truth-boundary" renders a term meaning literally "outside the truth-separation," which is a technical category within this phonological-maṇḍala system; its precise doctrinal referent is uncertain without access to a commentary.

- The phrase rendered as "blood-drinker" translates "khrag 'thung," a tantric epithet often referring to a wrathful heruka deity. In context it appears as an epithet of the Blessed One in his wrathful aspect, connected with the accomplishment of the great mudrā.

The verse beginning "Courage, dust, and darkness" is unusually compressed; the Tibetan "snying stobs rdul dang mun pa yang" is elliptical and its doctrinal referent within the text is not fully transparent. The rendering follows the syntactic structure, but this verse may belong to a broader commentary context not present here.

- The term "bhaga" is a Sanskrit loanword retained here as it appears in the Tibetan transliteration. It refers to the female sexual organ in this tantric context, part of the liṅga-yoni union ritual that serves as the contemplative basis for visualization of the buddha-families. The passage is from a Yoginītantra or related Anuttarayoga context, and the explicit sexual imagery is literal tantric praxis language, not metaphor alone.

"Blood-Drinker" renders khrag 'thung, a wrathful deity epithet, likely referring to a heruka-type figure such as Hevajra or a related deity.

"The lotus seat" for brla is uncertain. The term brla can mean "thigh" or "crotch" in standard Tibetan, and in this context may mean the yoni or female seat rather than a meditation cushion. The rendering is kept somewhat neutral in the translation body; this is a genuine doctrinal and philological uncertainty.

The colophon title "Union with All Buddhas: the Magical Ḍākinī, the Supreme Bliss" reconstructs the text title Sarvabuddhasamāyoga Ḍākinījalasamvara from the Tibetan.

- The "Blood-Drinker" in the list of the five suchnesses corresponds to a wrathful deity associated with mirror-like wisdom in this tantric system; the precise identification is left implicit in the text and varies across commentaries.

The phrase rendered "the supreme syllable itself is accomplished" translates a line where the moon-like complexion of Vajradhara is linked to the purity of the syllable, likely the syllable HŪM or the syllable of the deity's mantra; the text does not specify which syllable is meant.

- The section on mudrā recognition signals constitutes a system of tantric code-signs exchanged between initiates to identify one another, a well-attested genre in Yoginītantra literature. The body-part correspondences are reciprocal signals, not a single person's actions.

The term rendered "pillar" (gsalshing) is literally "banner-pole" or "signal-pole" and here functions as a code-sign object in this recognition system.

The final verse of the passage breaks off mid-sentence in the Tibetan; the translation renders it exactly as it stands, ending without conclusion, consistent with a passage continuing beyond the excerpt provided.

The syllables O, I, and U with "bindu" (thig le) refer to tantric breath and syllable practice, likely involving the manipulation of subtle body energies through seed-syllables; the term tsheg (the Tibetan punctuation dot) here likely denotes a technical prosodic or phonemic marker in the context of mantra recitation rather than the orthographic mark.

- This passage is the concluding section of a complex tantric text, the "Union with All Buddhas" (Skt. Sarvabuddhasamāyoga), specifically what appears to be the end of the twenty-second chapter and a colophon followed by a closing eulogy. The syllable-instruction verses (the opening lines continuing from the preceding passage) form part of an elaborate yogic-phonemic system, assigning Sanskrit vowels and bindus to directional channels and breath intervals; the exact technical referents of terms like "the sixth," "without A," and the directional assignments are opaque without a commentary, and the rendering follows the literal sense.

The phrase rendered "Blood-Drinker" (Tibetan: khrag 'thung) is a standard epithet for Heruka, the wrathful tantric deity, here apparently being spelled out syllable by syllable in the preceding lines as a form of mantra-construction.

The final colophon verse section (beginning "This, the supreme essence of my clarity") is extremely difficult syntactically and may represent a mix of prose and verse with devotional and doctrinal assertions; the translation follows the most natural grammatical reading but acknowledges the passage is compressed to the point of obscurity, likely requiring a Tibetan commentary to render with full doctrinal precision.

- The verse section is tonally and syntactically dense in ways that suggest either a corrupt or highly compressed tantric original. The phrase rendered "the cause of stability I do not set forth here" may alternatively mean "I do not teach the cause of stability," implying a deliberate withholding of secret instruction — consistent with tantric convention. The colophon identifies the translator as Smṛtijñānakīrti and the Tibetan editor-patron as Gzhon nu Grags pa; both are known figures in the translation bureau tradition.
