This text is known in English as The Hundred and Eight Names of the Noble Jambhala, corresponding to the Sanskrit Ārya-jambhala-nāma-aṣṭaśataka and the Tibetan 'Phags pa gnod 'dzin gyi mtshan brgya rtsa brgyad pa. It belongs to the genre of name-litanies (nāmāṣṭaśataka) dedicated to a specific deity, in this case Jambhala, the wealth-bestowing yakṣa lord associated with prosperity and protection, whose epithets are recited as a devotional and ritual practice. Such texts typically combine praise with an implicit invocation of the deity's qualities and powers, intended for recitation to secure blessings, particularly material abundance and protection from want. Positioned within the Kangyur as Toh 771, this work falls among the tantric or ritual literature associated with minor deities, reflecting the broader Buddhist tradition of dhāraṇī and nāma texts used for devotional and apotropaic purposes.

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
