

This short text, known in Tibetan as the Dhāraṇī for Pacifying Anger (likely cor

Toh 789 · Derge Kangyur

This short text, known in Tibetan as the Dhāraṇī for Pacifying Anger (likely corresponding to a Sanskrit title such as Krodha-śamana-dhāraṇī), belongs to the genre of dhāraṇī literature—collections of mantric formulas and accompanying ritual instructions attributed to the Buddha's word. It opens with the promise that reciting the dhāraṇī before an angry person will pacify their wrath and draw them near, followed by the mantra itself, invoking the Blessed One who bears the uṣṇīṣa, and then a series of practical applications: reciting it over substances such as ox bezoar or eye-liner to bring pleasing effects on those one meets, over water to secure food, or while holding one's robe to gain favor when entering an assembly. As such, it represents a compact ritual manual combining a protective mantra with instructions for its varied worldly uses, particularly for subduing anger and hostility and generating goodwill. Catalogued as Toh 789, it is found in the Kangyur among the dhāraṇī texts, reflecting the broader tradition of short protective and apotropaic scriptures preserved within that section of the canon.

If recited in front of an angry person, their anger will certainly be pacified and they will come to you. The dhāraṇī for pacifying anger is complete.

Homage to the Three Jewels.

Namo bhagavate uṣṇīṣāya dhāre rante svāhā.

Even without formal accomplishment through practice, all actions will be accomplished by this. If one recites it one hundred and eight times over ox bezoar and applies a dot to the forehead, whomever one looks upon will become pleased. If one recites the mantra one hundred and eight times over eye-liner and applies it to the eyes, whomever one meets will become pleased. If one recites it seven times over a handful of water and drinks it at dawn, one will obtain food. If going into an assembly, hold the hem of one's own robe with the left hand and recite the mantra twenty-one times...

Translator's Notes

- The term གུ་འཕྲུ་གུ་ (giu wang) is a Tibetan transliteration of the Chinese term for ox bezoar (niuhuang), a substance used as a yellow pigment in ritual practice; rendered here as "ox bezoar." The passage breaks off mid-sentence at the end of the source text, so the final instruction is left incomplete as in the original.

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.