The Noble Dhāraṇī Called Circumambulating the Support of the Three Jewels

(Sanskrit: Ārya-pradakṣiṇa-trātrāyāya-nāma-dhāraṇī; Tibetan:

འཕགས་པ་དཀོན་མཆོག་གི་རྒྱེ་ལ་བསྐྱོད་བ་བྱའཁོའ་ཞུས་ཞེས་བྱ།) is a short dhāraṇī text belonging to the tantric or spell literature of the Kangyur, transmitted as Toh 776. Opening with homage to the Buddha Śākyamuni, it presents a brief mantra formula whose recitation is said to be equivalent to circumambulating and paying homage to the Three Jewels throughout the ten directions and three times, thereby purifying negativities accumulated since beginningless time. The text further promises that through this simple practice one swiftly attains buddhahood and overcomes enemies and obstructing forces, exemplifying the genre of protective and merit-generating dhāraṇīs found throughout the canon. As such, it represents a concise ritual formula intended for everyday devotional and purificatory use rather than an extended doctrinal exposition.

It is complete. In the language of India: Ārya-pradakṣiṇa-trātrāyāya-nāma-dhāraṇī. In the language of Tibet: The Noble Dhāraṇī Called Circumambulating the Support of the Three Jewels.

Homage to the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, the Arhat, the Perfectly Complete Buddha, Śākyamuni.

Oṃ namo daśadika trikāla sarva ratna trayāya, mama pradakṣa supradakṣa, sarva pāpaṃ viśodhani svāhā.

By reciting this dhāraṇī one time, one comes to have paid homage to and circumambulated the Three Jewels of the ten directions and three times. All negative actions accumulated since beginningless time are purified. One swiftly attains the awakening of a buddha. Enemies and obstructing forces...

Translator's Notes

- The passage ends mid-sentence ("Enemies and obstructing forces...") as the source text breaks off there. The mantra syllables are transliterated Sanskrit and left untranslated per convention for dhāraṇī/mantra material.
