

Purification of Offerings

Dakṣiṇāpariśodhanī · Toh 777 · Derge Kangyur

ཡན་ལཱ་མཐོང་ས་སྤྱོད་བ

This text, Toh 777 in the Kangyur, is a dhāraṇī scripture whose title—rendered from the Sanskrit as Dakṣiṇīpariśodhanī and in Tibetan as Yon yongs su sbyong ba, meaning something like "Purification of Offerings"—identifies it as a short protective and purificatory work. It belongs to the broad class of dhāraṇī and mantra literature found throughout the Kangyur, texts recited or employed ritually to safeguard practitioners and to cleanse offerings or merit made to the Buddhist community. The closing lines preceding its colophon indicate that reciting or applying its formula protects one from being harmed by malevolent forces and frees one from all manner of illness and possession by spirits, reflecting the apotropaic and purifying aims typical of such incantations. As is common for these concise ritual texts, it likely circulated as part of a larger collection of dhāraṇīs invoked for protection, healing, and the purification of religious observances.

It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
