Toh 265 in the Kangyur is a sūtra excerpt known in English as "The Ritual of Homage from the Noble Great Realization Fully Expansive," drawn from the larger Tibetan canonical work sometimes identified in Sanskrit as the Mahābodhi-vistara-sūtra and in Tibetan as the Phags pa rtogs pa chen po yongs su rgyas pa'i mdo. It is a devotional and liturgical text that brings together several thematic chapters: a ritual of homage, the names and praises of the Tathāgatas of the three times, the twelve divisions of scripture, homage to bodhisattvas by name, and a chapter on confession. The text is addressed by bodhisattvas assembled from the ten directions to the Buddha and takes the form of reverent address, praise, and purification practice. As the opening makes clear, what survives here is a condensed and edited translation of select portions from that larger sūtra, rather than the complete work.

Two and one hundred and twelve verses.

Homage to all buddhas and bodhisattvas.

From the sūtra called "The Noble Great Realization Fully Expansive": the chapter on the ritual of homage; the chapter on the occasion for speaking of the virtues proclaimed through the names; the names of the Tathāgatas of the three times; the twelve divisions of scripture; the chapter on praising the bodhisattvas by name and paying homage to them; and the chapter on confession — these have appeared in a brief form, corrected and translated.

Then the bodhisattvas who had come from the ten directions joined their palms together and addressed the Blessed One (the Buddha):

"We have come to this world-realm through the power and blessing of those buddhas of the ten directions, and having seen the face of the Blessed One and heard the Dharma of the Great Vehicle, we request permission for ourselves, for gods and humans, to receive, hold, and bear this scriptural collection of sūtras. We ask that it be granted. For after the Blessed One has passed beyond sorrow into nirvāṇa, we will teach it and spread it without interruption, widely and ceaselessly, in this land and region, and in other directions — in mountain retreats, in forests, and at places beneath trees where mantras are held; in villages, in towns and settlements, in dwellings, and in hermitage residences; in charnel grounds, beneath trees, in the open without shelter; at stūpas, in temples, in the courtyards of Saṅgha monasteries; in places where many people gather to hear Dharma taught; in the residences of ordinary people; and to all who have become human.

Why is this? So that the sacred Dharma may abide for a long time, and so that the lower destinies may be permanently closed off.

How is that? Having heard that the teaching of the Blessed One shuts the doors of the hells, if even a single word from this scriptural collection is recited aloud, the gods too will rejoice and be delighted, and will constantly attend and serve, and will themselves engage in virtuous conduct.

Moreover, some people, upon hearing this scriptural collection fully expansive with great realization, will rejoice and be delighted, have faith and reverence, will write it, recite it and read it aloud, retain and bear it, and will pay homage. Even if such a person merely calls by name some Tathāgata or some bodhisattva taught in this scriptural collection, that person, in this present life, will be happy and at ease, no sin or non-virtue will arise, and at the time of death we bodhisattvas and the gods will lead the way before them, and they will see pure buddha-fields and, with faith, will take birth together in one place.

Why is this? Because they have received and fully held this scriptural collection.

To receive and fully hold this sūtra collection is to fully hold the body of the Buddha. One who fully holds the body of the Tathāgata is a bodhisattva. Therefore we share one and the same training. For this reason, by fully holding this scriptural collection, we will be born together in one place, will not abandon one another, will not be separated, and our aspiration is one."

Then, from among those assembled, the king of the gods and demigods (asuras), the great king of Brahmā, the gods of the Heaven of the Thirty-Three, the four great kings who guard the four directions of the world, the attendant vajra-bearers, the great commanders and others, the nāga kings Nanda and Upananda, the king of the asuras, the king of the garuḍas, the king of the kinnaras, the gods of the nine-fold cluster, the gods of the mountains, the gods of the trees, the gods of rivers and streams, the gods of the lakes, the gods of the earth, the gods of fire, the gods of the wind, and many other such kings — those and their like, measureless and countless in number — together with the great gods, rose from their seats.

They bowed with their faces and crowns to the ground, joined their palms together, and with reverence and devotion addressed the Blessed One: "Blessed One, from this time forward, we and all those with us will constantly uphold this scriptural text of the Dharma, fully permeated by great realization, just as the Blessed One has taught it. Wherever this sūtra abides, we — the kings of the gods — will always be present before it. We will keep that place clean and pure. Whether it is inside a stūpa, a dwelling among ordinary people, a secluded area, or any place whatsoever, even if one holds this sūtra with a limb that is not entirely clean, we will protect that person so that no improper harm can come upon them. We will also provide the customary hospitality of the household in that place. When all of us — the kings of the gods and those with us — travel about, if we encounter such a person, we will lead them forward, clear the way for them, and accomplish whatever they desire. When that person travels in the four directions, there will be no obstruction or attachment. They will constantly behold virtuous qualities, be reborn among the gods in a future life, and by the merit thus gained, they will encounter the arising of buddhas and never fall away from the Great Vehicle."

Then the Blessed One spoke to those great bodhisattvas and to the kings of the gods, asuras, and rākṣasas and the rest: "So it is. So it is. It is just as you have said. If it is difficult even to hear a scriptural text of the Dharma such as this, what need is there to speak of comprehending it? For one who takes up, holds, recites, and reads this scriptural text of the Dharma — having cleansed and purified oneself with washing and bathing, having generated faith, put on clean robes, made the place clean, adorned and beautified the interior of the place with silken canopies and victory-banners and the like, anointed it with excellent fragrant sandalwood powder and other powders, burned many kinds of incense, and prostrated — doing so three times by day and three times by night, for seven days, reading and reciting this scriptural text of the Dharma with undistracted mind and attention, with unforgetting mindfulness, with single-pointed steadiness, with straightforward intention, with mindfulness established, with correct and unwavering reception and holding of the text, with stable conduct, with faultless recitation and chanting — in such a manner, reciting and reading by name the Tathāgatas taught in this sūtra, along with the twelve categories of scripture and the bodhisattvas, and venerating, prostrating to, and upholding them with faith and devotion — all heavy misdeeds whatsoever will be thoroughly removed, just as this sūtra explains.

Why is that? This scriptural text of the Dharma, fully permeated by great realization, has been practiced, trained in, blessed, and upheld by all the buddhas of the ten directions. It is the mother of all buddhas, the king of all sūtras, the treasury of the highest teaching, the path of all bodhisattvas, and the very heart-essence of the deepest scriptural texts of the Dharma fully permeated by great realization.

"By way of a single illustration, it is comparable to, and inconceivable like, six great things in the world — namely the four great ones and more. What are the six? The great earth, the great water, the great fire, the great wind — these four great ones — and then the sun, and space. So it is: this sūtra, by way of comparison, is like the great earth in that it supports all things, pure and impure, good and bad, great and small. Again, this sūtra is like the great water in that it washes clean all the filthy mire of impurity and every stain. Again, this sūtra is like the great fire in that it burns away all the sparks and embers of the unclean defilements of karma and afflictions. Again, this sūtra is like the great wind in that it scatters and blows away all the unclean dust-rags of the defilements of karma and afflictions.

Again, this sūtra is like the sun in that it illuminates throughout every darkness of ignorance. Again, this sūtra is like empty space in that it opens up and holds within itself all things without exception.

This sūtra, vast and complete, thoroughly pervaded by the great realization of the Mahāyāna sūtras, is without equal in its breadth. It holds within itself all beings who reach as far as bodhisattvas, śrāvakas, and those of the desire realm, the form realm, and the formless realm.

Therefore, you should receive this sūtra and hold it completely, spread it widely, and let it pervade everywhere. Devote yourselves to it with faith and respect. You, and all the great bodhisattvas with you, should constantly assimilate the wisdom of the buddhas and come to behold the essential nature of the Tathāgata.

O you kings of the gods, those who take up and fully uphold this sūtra should always behold me and all the buddhas of the past who have manifested complete and perfect awakening and turned the great wheel of Dharma.

Then from within the great assembled retinue, a bodhisattva named Steadfast Faith rose from his seat, arranged his robe properly, bowed his head to the feet of the Blessed One, and addressed the Blessed One in these words: "Blessed One, we beseech you to grant us the occasion to ask, for the sake of the healing and happiness of the many."

Then the Blessed One said to the bodhisattva Steadfast Faith: "Steadfast Faith, it is excellent, excellent that you have made this request for the benefit and happiness of the many. Listen carefully to whatever you wish to ask, and I shall explain it to you. Your request is indeed for the benefit and happiness of beings beyond measure."

Then the bodhisattva Steadfast Faith addressed the Blessed One in these words: "Blessed One, I recall that in times past, merely hearing the name of the Blessed One called Ratnakūṭa — 'He of the Precious Uṣṇīṣa' — just once was enough for one to attain rebirth as a god. Not long after, in a remote wilderness region within the realm of a king named Indra of the Gods, called Light, there was a great pool of water that dried up, leaving ten thousand fish within it tormented by heat and on the verge of death. A merchant's son named Water-Pourer saw those fish, and compassion arose in his heart. He bestowed upon them the gift of water and food. Yet they were unable to survive for many days, and their life was drawing to a close. Then the merchant's son Water-Pourer recited three times the name of the Blessed One Ratnakūṭa, and the fish heard it; immediately upon their death, they were reborn as gods in the Heaven of the Thirty-Three. For this reason, Blessed One, I beseech you to reveal and proclaim the names of the Blessed Ones for the healing of this retinue and of beings in the future. For merely hearing the name of the Blessed One Śākyamuni too will bring healing and happiness to countless beings beyond reckoning and beyond description, and they will always enjoy perfect abundance, discover a treasury of immeasurable merit, and come to realize directly the essential nature of the Tathāgata. I also beseech you to teach it so that sentient beings whose ethical foundation has deteriorated and who are confused by afflictions may be fully liberated."

Then the Blessed One said to the bodhisattva Steadfast Faith: "Son of good family, if I were to fully set forth the names of all the buddhas of the ten directions, even teaching for a hundred million aeons, there would be no end to their completeness."

One could count the number of drops in all the waters, but one could never recount and know all the names of every buddha. All the mountains of Mount Meru could be weighed and measured, but one could never declare and know all the names of every Blessed One, every buddha. All the dust-motes of every world could be counted and known, but one could never declare and know all the names of every Blessed One, every buddha. The extent of the realm of space could be known, but one could never declare and know all the names of every Blessed One, every buddha.

Therefore I shall now set out for you a mere summary of the names of the Blessed Ones, the buddhas of the three times. If any person hears these names even once, that person, the very moment they pass from this life, will be born in a divine realm. If, having heard them, one arouses faith and reverence, writes them down, recites them by name, and pays homage, then the heavy sins of immeasurable cycles of existence will be purified, and one will gain merit beyond measure. When that person's time is spent, they will be born in whichever buddha-field of the ten directions they aspire to in their mind. They will see me, and they will also come to see the buddhas of the fortunate aeons yet to come.

Then the Blessed One spoke to the vast assembly: "If you who are gathered here wish to hear the Dharma, properly arrange your robes, straighten your bodies, let your minds be undistracted and your mindfulness unfailing, apply yourselves with great attentiveness, and with one-pointed mind, join your palms in reverence.

Reverently I bow to the Tathāgata, King of Flame, Sovereign of Mount Meru.

Reverently I bow to the Tathāgata, Jewel King.

Reverently I bow to the Tathāgata, Jewel Victor.

Reverently I bow to the Tathāgata, Boundless Light.

Reverently I bow to the Tathāgata, All-Seeing.

Reverently I bow to the Tathāgata, Many Jewels.

Reverently I bow to the Tathāgata, Śākyamuni.

Reverently I bow to the Tathāgata, Holder and Gatherer of All Dharmas.

Reverently I bow to the one who transcends all reckoning and measure.

Reverently I bow to the one who is incomparable and matchless.

Reverently I bow to the one whose Dharma is inexhaustible.

Reverently I bow to the one who is difficult to conceive.

Reverently I bow to the one possessed of the strength that abides in the power of powers.

Reverently I bow to the one with the ten powers (bala) and the fearlessnesses (vaiśāradya).

Reverently I bow to the one who is supreme within the three realms.

Reverently I bow to the great guide of all, who shows the path.

Reverently I bow to the one who is skilled in cutting through all the bonds of affliction.

Reverently I bow to the one who has reached the far shore of the perfections.

Reverently I bow to the one who is fully liberated and freed from all worlds.

Reverently I bow to the one who is utterly parted from the path of death and transmigration.

Reverently I bow to the one who has directly attained the liberation of meditative absorption.

Reverently I bow to the one who, like space, abides in nothing whatsoever.

Reverently I bow to the one who, among the many, is the great sovereign king of Dharma.

Reverently I bow to the one who has vanquished the hosts of the four māras.

Reverently I bow to the one with the great loving-kindness of a father toward an only child.

I aspire that in whatever lives and wherever I am born I may see all the buddhas, directly realize the nature of the Tathāgata, and arrive at the great nirvāṇa. And why? Because buddha-nature, the tathāgatagarbha, is present in every embodied being.

The vast assembly joined all ten fingers together in reverence, offered worship with one-pointed minds, and listened well and held it in mind. "By reciting the names of the buddhas of the ten directions and the three times, I shall now..."

Even from the evil of the five acts of immediate retribution, arouse the mind that is utterly liberated.

Even for the person who has no root of virtue
I have spoken for his sake as well, so that, even though he cannot realize it himself,
the seed may yet be scorched of its own accord.

There is only one perfect truth.

When the mark of the lesser vehicle is removed,
that very Great Vehicle is present.

When both vehicles are removed,
there is only the single vehicle alone.

A person who has no root of virtue will not come to hear these words.

Yet by having made offerings to innumerable buddhas in former times, such a one now hears the name of the Blessed One.

A person who grasps and clings will be liberated in a partial way alone, and will dwell at ease even on the pure grounds.
But one who now takes up this Dharma of mine, reads it aloud, and recites it,
who pays homage to the name of the Blessed One and strives in the deeds of a buddha will be freed from the karma of the host of māras.

The four root defeats and the five acts of immediate retribution, even great attachment, will be purified, and those beings, in the time to come,
will without doubt attain the awakening of buddhahood.

Whoever does not develop faith and devotion will certainly fall into the three lower destinies.
But one who bows down with diligence and arouses devotion will come to see innumerable buddhas.
It is fitting, therefore, to bow with a one-pointed mind.
Every evil will be purified.
Therefore be reverent and devoted.

Then the vast assembly joined their palms together, gathered body and mind into focused attention, held themselves still and unmoving, touched the five limbs of their bodies to the ground, and listened supremely well with one-pointed minds.

Then the Blessed One proclaimed the names in order, and declared: "I reverently bow to the innumerable Tathāgatas, arhats, perfectly and fully awakened buddhas of the past.

I reverently bow to the Tathāgata Light of the Sun and Moon, of twenty thousand lamps.

I reverently bow to ten Tathāgatas.

I reverently bow to one hundred Tathāgatas.

I reverently bow to one thousand Tathāgatas.

I reverently bow to ten thousand Tathāgatas.

By bowing in reverence to these, the heavy sins of saṃsāra accumulated over incalculable eons will be cleared away.

I reverently bow to one hundred thousand Tathāgatas of the past.

I reverently bow to one trillion Tathāgatas.

I reverently bow to those Tathāgatas who are as immeasurable and beyond counting as the grains of sand of the Gaṅgā river, multiplied ten trillion times over.

By bowing in reverence to these, all the sins and non-virtues of saṃsāra accumulated since incalculable eons will without exception be purified.

Moreover, if any person were to hear the names of the buddha Blessed Ones of the immeasurable and uncountable past, that person will not fall into the suffering of the hells for eighty thousand eons. Therefore bow with reverence.

Whoever bows with reverence to those buddhas of the past will purify wrongdoing and attain a purified nature of mind, and will henceforth refrain from the ten non-virtues and the five acts of immediate retribution.
The stream of hearing the true Dharma will not be cut, the moral discipline of the Great Vehicle will be perfected — therefore now bow with sincere reverence.

Except for two kinds of persons:
one who, aligned with a partial view, denigrates the Dharma, and the second, one of great craving —
yet if some among these have a purified mind, that one is not truly one of great craving and will always behold innumerable buddhas.
As for those who have broken the four root vows and committed the five acts of immediate retribution, if they are capable of cultivating pure devotion, even they may be fit to abide in accordance with the Dharma.

Through the sincere and reverent homage of all,
the ten non-virtuous actions are cleared away.
All receive the moral discipline of the Great Vehicle —
therefore now bow with sincere reverence.

When the names of those Blessed Ones, the buddhas of the past, were proclaimed, ten thousand bodhisattvas each separately attained the patient acceptance of the non-arising of phenomena. Eight hundred śrāvakas each gave rise to a measure of the mind of the Great Vehicle. Five thousand monks attained the fruit of arhatship. If it so occurs that a person hears the names of the immeasurable and incalculable buddhas presently abiding, that person will not fall into the suffering of the hell realms for sixty thousand eons. Therefore I bow down with reverence.

Those who at this very moment in the ten directions — bow down to the Blessed Ones — one is freed from the path of non-virtue, purified of the five acts of immediate retribution and the like, abides constantly on the pure grounds, dwells at ease in the Dharma of Śākya, utterly abandons the three lower states of existence, and comes to behold the buddha Maitreya. Indeed, one comes to behold even a thousand buddhas. Therefore I now bow down with reverence.

One sees all the buddhas of the ten directions, is born always in pure buddha fields, hears the sacred Dharma as well,
and comes to understand that the Tathāgata is permanent.

When the names of those Blessed Ones, the buddhas presently abiding in the ten directions, are revealed, bodhisattvas as numerous as the sand grains of two Ganges rivers gain entry into the gateway of dhāraṇī. Forty-two hundred thousand gods and humans give rise to the unsurpassed awakening mind (bodhicitta). I bow down to the immeasurable Tathāgatas of the auspicious eons yet to come.

I bow down to ten Tathāgatas.

I bow down to one hundred Tathāgatas.

I bow down to one thousand Tathāgatas.

I bow down to ten thousand Tathāgatas.

By bowing down to them, all the heavy sins of the transition at death accumulated over incalculable eons will be cleared away.

I bow down to one hundred thousand Tathāgatas.

I bow down to ten million Tathāgatas.

I bow down to one billion Tathāgatas.

I bow down to one hundred billion Tathāgatas.

I bow down to one trillion Tathāgatas.

I bow down to Tathāgatas as innumerable and uncountable as the grains of sand in the River Ganges, multiplied by tens of millions of tens of millions.

If any person hears these names of buddhas yet to come, who are beyond measure and counting, that person will not fall into the suffering of the hells for forty thousand eons. Therefore, with reverence I bow down.

If one reveres and bows down to the buddhas of times yet to come,
The three obscurations and the five acts of immediate consequence
Are all cleared and purified — save only those born of excessive desire.
One dwells in ease within the Dharma of the buddhas,
Beholds all the countless buddhas,
And always hears the true Dharma.
Therefore, with reverence, I bow down right now.

If one reveres and bows down to the Blessed Ones of the ten directions and three times,
The misdeeds of the past are cleared away,
And the ten non-virtuous actions performed in past, future, and present
Are purified and cleared right now and henceforth.
In future lives one will behold the nature of reality.
Therefore, cultivate genuine devotion.

If one writes, reads, recites, and bows down,
In whatever life those beings are born,
They will not encounter non-virtue and wrongdoing,
And will always attain perfect liberation.
They will not be born in border regions.

They will not encounter evil kings.
For four hundred thousand eons,
They will not witness the suffering of the hells.
Therefore, with reverence, I bow down right now.
The ten non-virtuous actions will be cleared away,
And one will attain the great dhāraṇī.

When those names of the Blessed Ones, those buddhas yet to come, were proclaimed, fifty thousand bodhisattvas were established on the stage of non-return. Seven hundred nuns attained the fruit of arhatship. Six million and two hundred thousand gods and humans obtained the pure eye of Dharma with respect to phenomena.

I bow down to the great dhāraṇī collection — the scriptural transmission of the twelve branches of the teaching. I bow down to the branch of sūtras. I bow down to the branch of prophecies. I bow down to the branch of verses. I bow down to the branch of inspired utterances. I bow down to the branch of purposeful sayings. I bow down to the branch of narratives. I bow down to the branch of accounts of spiritual realization. I bow down to the branch of present and past [teachings]. I bow down to the branch of birth stories. I bow down to the branch of extensive teachings. I bow down to the branch of wondrous Dharma. I bow down to the branch of established expositions. I bow down with veneration to the Great Treasury. I bow down to the Perfections.

If any person hears the names of the twelve branches of sūtras and the Perfections, reads them, retains them, recites them, bows down to them, has faith and devotion toward them, and takes them up and holds them, that person will not fall into the suffering of the hells for two hundred thousand eons, and will come to possess awareness that recalls previous lives. Therefore, with reverence I bow down.

When the names of those twelve branches of sūtras were proclaimed, eighty-five thousand bodhisattvas attained the vajra-like meditative absorption. Eighty hundred thousand hearers gave rise to the mind of the Great Vehicle to some degree. Ten thousand monks and nuns together attained the fruit of arhatship. I bow down to the bodhisattvas who are as many as the grains of sand in one thousand rivers Ganges.

I bow down to the bodhisattvas who are as many as the grains of sand in ten thousand rivers Ganges.

I bow down to those bodhisattvas, the great beings, as numerous as the grains of sand in rivers Ganges beyond counting by the hundred thousands. By bowing down to those bodhisattvas, even the heavy misdeeds accumulated in cyclic existence over immeasurable eons shall be perfectly removed.

For any person who hears the names of those eminent bodhisattvas, the great beings, that person shall not fall into the sufferings of the hell-beings for forty hundred thousand eons, shall not belong to the cyclic existence of the three realms, and shall forever belong to the realm of the king of liberation.

They shall not be born in a borderland, nor likewise in a land without virtue.

They shall not take on a wretched body,
nor shall they be born into wrong views.

They shall not be born in a base lineage,
nor shall they be born as non-Buddhists (tīrthikas).

They shall be endowed with all their bodily limbs, and shall always hear the sacred Dharma.

Even without having taken on vows of austerity, they shall always be possessed of these qualities:
adorned with the conduct of the Great Vehicle,
they shall continually behold the buddha himself.

Therefore I bow down with reverence, and rest at ease in the Dharma of the Blessed One.
In the time to come, buddhahood shall be accomplished.

When the names of those great bodhisattvas were proclaimed, eighty-eight hundred thousand noble sons and daughters attained the fruit of once-returning. Forty-nine hundred thousand gods and humans attained the fruit of non-returning. Seventy-eight hundred thousand monks who had lost their minds recovered their mental integrity and attained the fruit of arhatship. One hundred hundred thousand great bodhisattvas obtained the great dhāraṇī and, in the time to come, shall fully awaken to unsurpassed awakening at the seat of enlightenment.

Then the great bodhisattva Lion's Roar addressed the Blessed One with these words: "Blessed One, just as the Blessed One has declared, the vehicle is indeed one alone — there is no second or third. This sūtra of the Brahma of Great Realization, fully perfected, is the mother of all the buddhas, the Blessed Ones; it is the great highway of the great bodhisattvas; it is the eye of all yogins; it is the collector of all wrong views; it is the guardian of those whose minds have deteriorated; it cuts off the gateway to the three lower destinies; it opens the gateway to unsurpassed awakening. The śrāvakas shall gradually turn toward the Great Vehicle. I too shall now uphold and protect this great dhāraṇī mantra. For any person who, together with the vow of moral discipline, meditates upon and recites this sūtra, I shall likewise guard and protect them. For any person who venerates and pays homage to this sūtra and, for seven days, practices and meditates upon it — should a sinful māra who seeks to disturb them arise, that māra shall find no occasion for disturbance. Blessed One, I shall cause this sūtra to long endure and shall uphold it until the very culmination of the essential nature of awakening."

Then the Blessed One declared: "Noble son, to guard this sūtra is to guard the Three Jewels. It is likewise to guard my teaching."

Then the bodhisattva Lion's Roar recited the dhāraṇī mantra in the presence of the Blessed One:

Namo buddhāya. Namō dharmāya. Namaḥ saṃghāya. A dante. Dharaṇe. Tadyathā. Ākāśāni. Svabhāva. Sarvadharmāṇi svabhāva. Ísam da. Pivaśana. Vimala supari. Dharma atikan. Pālanīśca. Yathamale. Cāle cāle. Hulu hulu. Viśade. Viśade. Mantra mantraḥ svāhā.

This dhāraṇī mantra is to be recited one hundred and eight times in a single session, and a stūpa is to be circumambulated seven times each. In this same way, for a period of seven days, without letting the mind wander to other sūtras, one should gather the mind in single-pointed focus upon this sūtra of the Brahma of Great Realization, fully perfected, and not be distracted elsewhere.

This dhāraṇī mantra was taught by eighty hundred thousand buddhas, and I too have now proclaimed it. If anyone were to disparage and revile this dhāraṇī mantra, that would be to disparage and revile that many buddhas. Any person who disparages this dhāraṇī mantra shall, across their lifetimes, fail to accomplish whatever they have striven for, and shall not transcend the three realms. Why is this? Because this dhāraṇī mantra is the means by which those who have lost their minds recover them. If one has but heard this dhāraṇī mantra even once, or having heard it, writes it down and then abstains from meat and alcohol, takes but one meal a day, keeps the precepts, refrains from heedless and distracting amusements, does not enter into crowds, cultivates loving-kindness at all times, and regards meditative concentration as supreme — such a person, from immeasurable aeons hence, will have the three obscurations, and so forth —

— even the heaviest of sins and so forth will be purified by this dhāraṇī mantra. If one hears this dhāraṇī mantra and recites and holds it sincerely from the heart, reads and recites it every single day, and keeps it always in mind without forgetting it, that person will never fall into the lower realms until they attain full and perfect awakening.

Then the Blessed One spoke once more to the bodhisattva Simhaghoṣa: "You have done well — excellent indeed — in opening and teaching this dhāraṇī mantra for the sake of protecting the Three Jewels, for the sake of benefiting the many, for liberating beings from the three existences and freeing them from possession, for bringing great benefit to countless learners, and for reversing all wrong views. Noble son, whoever among sentient beings hears your name and the sound of this dhāraṇī mantra and gives rise to faith and reverence without contempt — such a person will dwell in happiness in this very life, and after passing away will constantly behold the buddhas and behold me as well, and will come to behold you and other bodhisattvas too. All of them will, without doubt, fully and perfectly awaken to the tathāgatagarbha (buddha-nature) as realized individually through their own awareness. By having abandoned all afflictions without exception and accomplishing, through all virtues, the path of the Tathāgata — all of this comes about through faith and through the power of clarity of devotion.

"After I have passed away, if any son of noble family or daughter of noble family, on even one day, one night, one moment, or even an instant, is able to bow down to the buddhas of the three times (past, present, and future) in all ten directions, to the twelve branches of the scriptural Dharma, and to the bodhisattvas, and is able to engage the Great Vehicle with proper attention and to direct the mind properly toward the ultimate truth exactly as it is — then in that brief, momentary instant, all ten non-virtues, the five crimes without interval, denial of the nature of equality, and all afflictive actions whatsoever will be entirely and completely purified.

"Furthermore, if a monk, a nun, a bodhisattva, a male novice, or a female novice, having lost their natural-state mind, has broken their four root vows, has damaged the eight precepts, has committed the six grave offenses, the ten non-virtues, the five crimes without interval, or has denied the nature of equality — yet gives rise to faith in the names of the Blessed Ones, the buddhas of the three times in all ten directions, and bows down to them — then all such unwholesome karma without exception will be entirely purified."

As soon as those words had been spoken, at that very moment Prince Sudarśana (Virtuous Vision) and three thousand men arrived instantaneously and abruptly from the presence of the buddha named Niyataprabhā (Definite Light). They touched their heads to the feet of the Blessed One and bowed, then with one voice addressed the Blessed One thus: "Blessed One, the non-virtuous actions we and others have performed and accumulated over immeasurable aeons are beyond reckoning. Some have committed the ten non-virtues; some have committed the five crimes without interval; some have committed the inconceivable and inexpressible sins of denying the Dharma of equality and so forth. We wish to confess and acknowledge all of these before the Tathāgatas of the three times, relying upon the sūtras of the twelve branches of scriptural teaching, and in the presence of the many bodhisattvas. We beseech you to grant us permission to do so."

Then the Blessed One declared: "Excellent! Excellent! It is good that you have aroused a mind arising from the difficulty of generating fear and the difficulty of generating virtue. You have confessed the ten non-virtues, you have confessed the five crimes without interval, you have confessed great desire and so forth, and now you wish to behold the tathāgatagarbha. Confess, then, with proper mental attention, exactly as you hold it in mind."

Then Prince Sudarśana and the three thousand men, having heard the loving words of the Blessed One, properly arranged their Dharma robes, pressed their palms together, bowed their heads in reverence, bared their right shoulders in the customary way, and placed the knee of their right leg upon the ground. They then addressed the Blessed One in these words:

"We, and all others here, bow down and take refuge in the blessed buddhas of the ten directions. We bow down and take refuge in the Dharma of the ten directions. We bow down and take refuge in the Saṅgha of the ten directions.

Again, we bow down and take refuge in the Tathāgata of the eastern direction, Akṣobhya, the Unperturbed. Again, we bow down and take refuge in the Tathāgata of the southern direction, Ratnasambhava, the Jewel-Born. Again, we bow down and take refuge in the Tathāgata of the western direction, Amitābha, Boundless Light. Again, we bow down and take refuge in the Tathāgata of the northern direction, Amoghasiddhi, the Unfailingly Accomplished. Again, we bow down and take refuge in the Tathāgata of the direction above, Gandhaśrī, the Incense-Stacked. Again, we bow down and take refuge in the Tathāgata of the direction below, Śatarūpa, the Hundred-Formed.

In the eastern direction, we also bow down and take refuge in the noble Samantabhadra. In the southern direction, we also bow down and take refuge in the noble Lokadhāraṇī, Holder of the World. In the western direction, we also bow down and take refuge in the noble Avalokiteśvara, Lord of All-Seeing. In the northern direction, we also bow down and take refuge in the noble Pūrṇacandra, the Full Moon. In the direction above, we also bow down and take refuge in the noble Ākāśagarbha, the Sky-Treasury. In the direction below, we also bow down and take refuge in the noble Guṇasthira, Firm in Qualities.

We also bow down and take refuge in the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Immutable Light, the primordial Teacher. We also bow down and take refuge in the tathāgatagarbha of those Tathāgatas yet to come. We also bow down and take refuge in the blessed buddhas, the emanation bodies, present in other world-realms. We also bow down and take refuge in our present Teacher, the Blessed One Śākyamuni. We also bow down and take refuge in the Blessed One known as Vimalakīrti, and in Mañjuśrī, ever youthful. We also bow down and take refuge in Ānanda and Kāśyapa. We also bow down and take refuge in those who have directly realized the four noble paths. We also bow down and take refuge in those who have for the first time aroused the awakening mind. We also bow down and take refuge in the great treasury of scriptural teaching, the twelve branches of scripture, and the sūtras of perfect equality. We also bow down and take refuge in whatever other Dharma sūtras exist. We also bow down and take refuge in the bodily relics divided into eight portions. We also bow down and take refuge in the meaning of the Dharma of the buddhas who now abide.

We beseech the four great kings of the four directions, the gods of the Heaven of the Thirty-Three, Śakra (Indra), Brahmā, the gods of the intermediate sky, the gods of the heavens above, the gods upon the earth, the gods beneath the earth, the gods of the mountains, the gods of the forests, the gods of the trees, the holders of vidyā-mantras, those endowed with the legs of miraculous power, those endowed with divine sight, and those endowed with divine hearing — all of these — to look upon us, to be our witnesses, and to act as lords over all.

May every non-virtue, whether confessed or not confessed, of all sentient beings including ourselves, be fully purified. For all sentient beings including ourselves, from the very beginning of cyclic existence down to the present — up to and including the obtaining of these very impure bodies we now hold — through a mind that has been deluded and corrupted, through countless wrong views, through karma and afflictions —"

— the non-virtuous actions we have performed are beyond telling; the many wrongs we have committed, we ourselves did not notice or recognize. Under the sway of a mind thoroughly saturated with non-virtue, we did not see the world beyond this life, and we remained fixed upon seeing only this present life alone. Through our attachment to the habitual tendencies of affliction, we grew distant from the roots of virtue, were obstructed and overshadowed by non-virtuous karma, or, by relying upon evil companions, we acted improperly and wrongly toward fully ordained monks and fully ordained nuns, or we acted improperly and wrongly toward our own fathers and mothers. Or again, through the power of our own neediness and desperation, we made use of the goods and provisions belonging to the Saṅgha of the ten directions, and we acted improperly and wrongly toward the five communities of the Saṅgha. We spoke immeasurably of the fruits of worldly corruption, we spoke disparagingly of sentient beings whose minds were set upon the virtuous roots of awakening, we denigrated teachers of Dharma, or we taught that what is the sacred Dharma is not the Dharma, or that what is not the Dharma is the sacred Dharma; or we declared the Tathāgatas to be impermanent, or declared that the sacred Dharma too is impermanent, or declared that the Saṅgha, that precious Jewel, is also impermanent; or we had no faith in beneficial generosity, while we held with faith to a wrong and perverted view. On account of all such things as these, the fear and terror we now feel is immeasurable, the shame and remorse inconceivable. We take refuge in the Three Jewels.

The Blessed One, the buddhas, are the father and mother who regard all with perfect equanimity, for they possess minds of compassion and loving-kindness. The bodhisattvas are our spiritual friends. Therefore we pray that, through our regret and confession, purification may be granted for all the grave wrongs we have committed while wandering in cyclic existence throughout countless aeons of becoming. And from this point forward, may we never commit them again.

Furthermore, Blessed One, we — and all sentient beings — from time without beginning, may have committed one of the five acts of immediate consequence, or we may have broken the vows and moral discipline of the past, present, and future Blessed Ones, the buddhas; or we may have engaged in acts driven by great desire; or by speaking harsh and non-virtuous words we committed the grave transgression of denigrating the virtuous Dharma. Without having confessed these with regret, without bearing them in mind with shame, and without the sense of conscience, we committed grave matters such as the ten non-virtues and the five acts of immediate consequence; or from the very beginning, having no fear or shame in our minds, we certainly have ourselves committed such grave wrongs — yet though we concealed our faults and accepted gifts with a semblance of faith, without confession or regret, and without the intention to make proper offerings to sustain the sacred Dharma long, we instead disparaged it unpleasantly and looked upon it with further distortion; through the door of speech we committed many faults of utter corruption. And moreover, we even went so far as to say: "There is no such thing as the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Saṅgha." Because of having committed such grave wrongs as the ten non-virtues and the five acts of immediate consequence of that kind, the fear and terror we now feel is immeasurable, the shame and remorse is inconceivable. We take refuge in the Three Jewels.

The Blessed One, the buddhas, are the father and mother who regard all with perfect equanimity, for they possess compassion and loving-kindness. The bodhisattvas are our spiritual friends. Therefore we pray that, through our regret and confession, purification may be granted for us and all sentient beings — may all the grave wrongs committed while wandering in cyclic existence throughout countless aeons of becoming be cleared away, and may we never commit them again.

Furthermore, Blessed One, we and all beings, since time without beginning, through wrong views have described what is coarse as if it were the four weighty acts, and the four weighty acts as if they were coarse; or have called what is destroyed "not destroyed," and what is not destroyed "destroyed"; or have called what is heavy "light" and what is light "heavy"; or have seen what is pure as impure and what is impure as pure — such wrong views and the like. We have praised and extolled the learning of the world, while showing no reverence for the teaching of the Buddha; we have taken up worldly aims rooted in non-virtue, pondering them and holding to them — maintaining the eight kinds of uninvestigated wrong view. We have called the authentic words of the Tathāgata the words of Māra, and the words of Māra we have called the authentic words of the Tathāgata. At times we have placed our faith in and clung to the expositions of the six non-Buddhist teachers. We have fallen into the confused thought that, because the Tathāgata has passed fully into nirvāṇa, the Three Jewels are impermanent — and other wrong views of this kind, beyond counting. Therefore the fear and terror we now feel, the shame and remorse, are likewise inconceivable. We take refuge in the Three Jewels. The Blessed One, the buddhas, are the father and mother who regard all with perfect equanimity, possessing compassion and loving-kindness. The bodhisattvas are our spiritual friends. We pray that through our regret and confession purification may be granted to us and all sentient beings, and that from this moment forward we may never again commit such acts.

For we have heard the declaration of the Blessed One: if one does not confess and acknowledge the four root downfalls, or the five acts of immediate consequence, or the act of denigrating the true Dharma, one will assuredly fall into the hells. And in that case neither the Tathāgatas, nor the bodhisattvas, nor the śrāvakas, nor the pratyekabuddhas will be capable of offering refuge to such a person. Neither the Saṅgha, nor one's own father and mother, nor the gods, nor any person in the world will be able to provide refuge. Hearing this, the fear and terror, the shame and remorse that arise in us are truly inconceivable. We take refuge in the Three Jewels.

The many precious buddhas of the past, the thousand buddhas yet to come, and the buddhas of the present time — the emanation Blessed One, Śākyamuni, and all the Blessed One buddhas — are the lords of compassion and loving-kindness, the father and mother who regard all with perfect equanimity. The bodhisattvas are our spiritual friends. We pray that, through our regret and confession, purification may be granted to us and all sentient beings — that all the heavy misdeeds accumulated since countless aeons past, whether obscurations of affliction, obscurations of karma, or obscurations of karmic maturation, together with the four weighty acts, the five acts of immediate consequence, the ten non-virtues, and all other grave wrongs, may be cleared away.

Furthermore, Blessed One, may all the heavy misdeeds accumulated by us and all beings since countless aeons past, throughout the succession of lives in cyclic existence, be cleared away, and may we never commit them again from this moment forward.

Furthermore, Blessed One, from countless aeons past until this very present life, we and all beings have made improper use of the general common property of the Saṅgha, the common property of the Saṅgha of all ten directions, the property of the present Saṅgha, the property of the five Saṅgha communities, the property belonging to all monks collectively, and the goods of all donors. Moreover, we have falsely claimed to have attained the true Dharma, the four meditative concentrations, and the four fruits, when in fact we had not. Through the power of such evil acts as causes, we became sources of thorough affliction. And having gone forth from home life into homelessness, we broke the four root vows; we transgressed the eight weighty rules, the six rules, the thirteen cases requiring a communal meeting of the Saṅgha, the two indeterminate rules, the thirty rules entailing expiation with forfeiture, the ninety-one rules entailing simple expiation, the four rules requiring individual confession, the many rules of training, and the seven rules of serious weight — transgressing these and committing each of them in turn; and further, going so far as to commit the four root defeats and the five acts of immediate retribution. Moreover, having performed such acts as denigrating the true nature of reality and the profound sūtras, and having carried out deeds born of great craving — concealing and hiding all of these so that they grew and multiplied day by day — all of this and more, we now confess and acknowledge with regret before the buddhas of the ten directions, for the sake of benefiting the many beings of this world.

All ordinary beings, from time without measure, have failed to repay the kindness of the buddhas and of their fathers and mothers, have not sought the Dharma of complete purification, and have performed all manner of non-virtuous actions. Or, puffed up and arrogant through pride in their own lineage, they performed non-virtuous acts with full deliberate intent, and yet, not seeing them as transgressions, they acted from foolish stupidity, as though they were children. And having drawn near to companions who are friends in non-virtue, their minds deranged by afflictions, they sought no satisfaction with the five qualities of sensual desire and performed non-virtuous acts. Or they were deceived by attachment to good rebirths. Their minds troubled and agitated by the knots of attachment, aversion, and delusion — accumulating many sins gathered together through body, speech, and mind — all of these we now confess with remorse, holding nothing back.

Furthermore, having failed to serve and honour the buddhas, the sacred Dharma, and the noble Saṅgha with proper reverence — all those many sins of such a kind we confess, disclose, and acknowledge individually.

And having failed to attend with proper reverence upon the bodhisattvas and the solitary buddhas (pratyekabuddhas) — all those many sins of such a kind we confess, disclose, and acknowledge individually.

Obscured and concealed by delusion, and having committed non-virtues through arrogance, laziness, and self-deprecation — all those many sins of such a kind we confess, disclose, and acknowledge individually.

Now, having made offerings to all the buddhas of the ten directions, may we cause all sentient beings without exception to be established upon the ten grounds, and may each and every one of them come to fully realize the authentic truth of the Tathāgata.

Then the Blessed One spoke to Prince Sudarśana: "Excellent! Excellent! O great noble one of the royal lineage, it is supremely excellent! Great noble one of the royal lineage, you yourself are skilled in discerning virtuous and non-virtuous actions; and beyond confessing and openly disclosing your own sinful acts with great fear and terror and remorse, you have further confessed and acknowledged them for the sake of all sentient beings. Therefore, you are truly a great noble one of the royal lineage. Moreover, beyond freeing yourself from sin and non-virtue, you have worked to free all sentient beings from sin as well; and rather than making aspirational prayers for your own sake alone, you made aspirational prayers for the sake of all sentient beings from the very start, and dedicated the merit toward their fully realizing the authentic truth of the Tathāgata's word. Therefore, you are truly and authentically a great noble one of the royal lineage."

Then, once Prince Sudarśana and the three thousand men had finished their confession and disclosure, they offered praise to the Blessed One in verse:

O Blessed One, singularly supreme above all, ornament of the three realms, you who are father and mother, yours is the wisdom that is equal toward all, beyond compare in that equality toward every being —
I bow before the buddha, so rare to find.

The childish employ wisdom for their own sake alone,
and give wealth and goods expecting something in return;
a buddha of great loving-kindness is not like that.
To him whose great diligence makes equal both enemy and friend,
I go for refuge.

Among all two-footed beings, the buddha is supreme, endowed with the eye of wisdom, whose knowing and seeing pervades all.
The gods have not attained that wisdom —

To all the buddhas of the three times,
we all bow down with reverence and respect.
Likewise to the buddhas I go for refuge — it is as though one had made offerings to all the buddhas of the three times.

Then the Tathāgatas of all ten directions spoke in verse to Prince Sudarśana and the three thousand people:

If you desire to gather the Dharma and qualities of a buddha, do not follow after people of much learning alone.
Honor those who are skilled in virtue as you would an abbot,
and you will swiftly attain buddhahood.

If one keeps and guards moral discipline in perfect purity, that person's name is truly a monk (bhikṣu).
If one is able to contemplate emptiness, that person's name is one who practices yoga.
If one is able to accomplish deeds with diligence, that person's name is one who walks the noble path.

If one accomplishes nirvāṇa, that person's name is one of true and perfect bliss.

Novices bound by the vow of moral discipline,
and monks who hold their precepts in pure virtue, should perform the restoration ceremony every half-month.
Let the Dharma robes be inspected and then distributed;
the almsbowl, staff, and other implements should be received with respect, and with purity one should collect alms in a clean manner.

All the gods were filled with joy, and bowing with palms joined in respectful homage, they said:
"O gods, we shall ensure that these people here accomplish that which has been entrusted to them.

Just as the other gods of the Heaven of the Thirty-Three render respectful homage and service to Śakra, Indra, the lord of gods, so let them do likewise in this very life and attain excellence, and in other lives to come the benefit is beyond measure.
By going forth into renunciation and guarding the ground of moral discipline, one repays the kindness of the Buddha."

Prince Sudarśana, hear this now as well:
Apart from myself and awakening,
let all people of the world
generate a mind of pure faith and devotion, and directly know that the buddhas of the ten directions dwell evermore and do not pass into nirvāṇa.
Likewise with the Dharma and the Saṅgha.
People who are such as this
repay the kindness of the Blessed One.

And again, Prince Sudarśana, hear this:
Without making any distinction or discrimination among all people of the world,
one directly knows the Dharma of the single vehicle, and understands with certainty that in the ten directions — in the past, in the present, and in the time to come — the buddhas teach only the single Great Vehicle, with no such thing as a second or a third.

Without making any distinction or discrimination:
if one can generate a mind of such faith and devotion,
people who are such as this repay the kindness of the Buddha.

Prince Sudarśana, hear this now as well:
After I have passed away and departed, if among humanity there be those who continuously generate a mind of faith and devotion, holding that buddha-nature itself is present in all sentient beings without exception —
people who are such as this
repay the kindness of the Blessed One.

If someone practices virtue even for a moment without seeking a result within existence, and dedicates it toward the unsurpassed fruit,
that person repays the kindness of the Buddha.

Hear this yet again, Prince Sudarśana:
After I have passed into nirvāṇa, if among humanity there are those who, with reverence and devotion toward the Three Jewels, recite this sūtra even for a moment, and offer a teaching-fee to the preceptor —
people who are such as this repay the kindness of the Sugata (the Well-Gone One, an epithet of the Buddha).

If others give various goods and wealth, clothing, food, and possessions, and distribute them broadly to all — that person repays the kindness of the Blessed One.

Prince Sudarśana, hear this now as well:
In the final age of this my Dharma,
if some among the people take counsel together and listen to this sūtra even for a moment, that is of greater benefit
than making offerings to a hundred thousand bodhisattvas.

Because a supreme sūtra of the highest vehicle such as this is the mother of the buddhas' awakening, if one has faith and reflects upon the awakening of the buddhas,
and generates reverence and devotion toward this sūtra, and with non-dual mind brings one's thoughts to evenness toward all —
that person repays the kindness of the Buddha.

Prince Sudarśana, hear this now as well:

If in the final age of this Dharma someone thinks to repay the kindness of the Buddha and takes even a single session of sitting practice before a buddha image,
that is of greater benefit than giving life to all sentient beings dwelling in the three realms.

If one disturbs and slanders the meditative concentration of the Saṅgha, it exceeds the harm done by all the people who fill the three realms — it is equal to killing all sentient beings.

If one disturbs and slanders the meditative concentration of the Saṅgha, that sin is likewise the same.

If, upon seeing someone else practice virtue,
one disparages and slanders it and remains without faith, one cuts the very lineage of the Three Jewels and does not repay the kindness of the Blessed One.

Then the Blessed One bestowed upon Prince Sudarśana and the three thousand people, having finished teaching the Dharma, the joy of gladness arose in them, and they received the feet of the Blessed One upon the crowns of their heads.

From the noble sūtra of the Great Realization Fully Expanded, the chapter on the rites of prostration and the chapter of repentance is now complete.

Translator's Notes

- The opening phrase "Two and one hundred and twelve verses" renders a colophon-style numerical notation indicating the text contains one hundred and twelve verses, with "two" likely referring to a chapter or section number, though this structural marker is somewhat elliptical in the original.

The nāga kings "Nanda and Upananda" correspond to the Tibetan "Dga' bo" (Nanda, "joyful") and "Bsnyen dga' bo" (Upananda, "closely joyful"), a well-known pair of nāga brothers in Buddhist cosmological literature.

The phrase rendered "gods of the nine-fold cluster" translates "Bu dgu ma'i lha," a somewhat unusual grouping; it may refer to a specific class of astral or planetary deities, and the exact referent is not entirely certain.

- The phrase rendered "twelve categories of scripture" translates གཞི་བཅུ་གཉིས་ཀྱི་སྐུ་མཆོག་ཀྱི་ཐུགས་ཀྱི་སྐུ་མཆོག་, literally "twelve sūtra-collections," which in Buddhist canonical tradition refers to the twelvefold classification of scriptural texts (dvādaśāṅga-pravacana). This is a well-established technical term and the rendering is standard.

The simile of the six great elements concludes here mid-passage; the comparisons to the sun and space would naturally follow in the next section of the text.

- The bodhisattva's name, rendered "Steadfast Faith," translates the Tibetan མཐོག་པོའི་མཚན་ (mos pa'i mtshan), literally "one whose mark or name is aspiration/devotion." The term mos pa (adhimukti) carries the sense of confident aspiration or resolute faith; "Steadfast Faith" or alternatively "Aspiration" would both be defensible.

The king's name, ལྷ་འི་དབང་ཕྱུག་པོ་ (lha'i dbang phyug 'od), has been rendered "Indra of the Gods, called Light" — the title lha'i dbang phyug is a standard epithet for Indra (Śakra), and ལྷ་ (Light) appears to be a proper name distinguishing this king, likely a human ruler with a divine epithet rather than the deity Indra himself.

The Heaven of the Thirty-Three (ལྷ་འི་དབང་ཕྱུག་པོ་ལྷ་འི་དབང་ཕྱུག་པོ་) is the Trāyastriṃśa heaven, the realm of Śakra, standard in Buddhist cosmology.

- The passage closes mid-sentence, breaking off after "By reciting the names of the buddhas of the ten directions and the three times, I shall now..." This is because the Tibetan source itself ends here; the continuation belongs to the next passage.

The epithet rendered "King of Flame, Sovereign of Mount Meru" translates the compound name literally; it may refer to a specific buddha whose name combines the imagery of a lamp-flame and Mount Meru as "the king of mountains," functioning as a single proper name.

- The phrase "the seed may yet be scorched of its own accord" renders "sa bon tshig par rang 'byung" and conveys the idea that merely hearing these teachings will cauterize the seeds of negative karma even without full comprehension, a standard Mahāyāna notion of the power of buddha-name recitation and hearing the Dharma.

The thirty thousand Tathāgatas called Dīpaṃkara: the Tibetan reads "mar me mdzad stong phrag sum cu," literally "thirty thousand Lamp-Makers," which is a standard epithet of the buddha Dīpaṃkara. The text appears to refer to a group of buddhas sharing this name, which is attested in certain sūtra traditions.

The name "Sixteen Royal Sons" rendered as a buddha name is unusual and likely refers to a group of buddhas identified with the sixteen princes of the buddha Mahābhijñāṇābhībhū, well known from the Lotus Sūtra tradition.

"Light of Sun and Moon" appears twice in the list, which reflects the Tibetan as transmitted.

- The epithet rendered "Who Tames Those Who Practice Suffering" translates ལྷ་འི་དབང་ཕྱུག་པོ་ལྷ་འི་དབང་ཕྱུག་པོ་, which could also mean "Who Tames the Conduct of Suffering" or "Who Disciplines Those Engaged in Suffering." The precise nuance is ambiguous and may refer to taming beings caught in the practices that produce suffering. The rendering chosen is contextually defensible but not the only possibility.

- The name rendered "Tathāgata of Nectar Flowing" (ལྷ་འི་དབང་ཕྱུག་པོ་) literally means "dripping/oozing nectar" or "nectar that trickles." "Flowing" captures the sense without being awkward in speech.

The epithet वैद्युर्यमयः retains the Sanskrit loanword Vaiḍūrya (the precious gemstone, often identified with lapis lazuli or beryl), which is standard in this genre.

The final name, 𑀘𑁆𑀭𑀺𑀓𑀲𑀢𑀺𑀧𑀼𑀓𑀸𑀲𑀻𑀓𑀶𑀡𑀺𑀩𑀺𑀱𑀺𑀬𑀺𑀮𑀺𑀔𑀺, is syntactically dense. 𑀘𑁆𑀭𑀺𑀓𑀲𑀢𑀺𑀧𑀼𑀓𑀸𑀲𑀻𑀓𑀶𑀡𑀺𑀩𑀺𑀱𑀺𑀬𑀺𑀮𑀺𑀔𑀺 could mean "supreme lineage" or "foremost in lineage/family." The rendering adopted treats 𑀘𑁆𑀭𑀺𑀓𑀲𑀢𑀺𑀧𑀼𑀓𑀸𑀲𑀻𑀓𑀶𑀡𑀺𑀩𑀺𑀱𑀺𑀬𑀺𑀮𑀺𑀔𑀺 as "nāga lineage" and 𑀘𑀾𑀲𑀺𑀔𑀺 as "chief/supreme," yielding the sense of one who stands supreme over the nāga lineage in gnosis. This is the most contextually consistent reading in a list of Tathāgata names associated with nāga imagery.

- The name rendered "Son of Nothingness" translates a Tibetan epithet that in Sanskrit corresponds to Āneñjasuta or a similar term — it is a conventional buddha-name meaning "son of the unmoving" or "son of non-craving." The rendering "Son of Nothingness" follows the Tibetan literally (sred med kyi bu, literally "son of non-craving/non-thirst"), though "Son of Non-Craving" would be equally defensible and perhaps more doctrinally transparent.

The flower name "Sumandhā" (Tibetan: sum ban da) is a phonetic transcription of a Sanskrit floral name; the exact Sanskrit is uncertain but likely relates to sumanā or a similar flower name.

The passage enumerating two types of persons to be excepted involves compressed syntax. The rendering follows the most natural doctrinal reading: the first exception is someone who nihilistically denigrates the Dharma, the second is a person of excessive craving. The subsequent qualification that a person with a genuinely purified mind — even if nominally in the second category — may still be fit to practice is standard Mahāyāna pedagogical generosity.

- [illegible]

The escalating numerical series follows a standard East Asian and Tibetan cosmological counting scheme; "ྔ་ལྔ་ལྔ་ལྔ་ལྔ་" denotes a very large number (sometimes rendered "a koṭi of koṭis"), and the comparison to grains of sand of ten trillion Ganges rivers attempts to capture the full hyperbolic force of the Tibetan. The exact numerical equivalents for these very large Tibetan number terms vary somewhat across traditions.

- The phrase rendered "the Tathāgata is permanent" reflects the Tibetan "de bzhin gshegs pa rtag par rtogs," which literally means "to realize the Tathāgata as permanent." This is a notable doctrinal claim, likely reflecting a tathāgatagarbha or buddha-nature context where the dharmakāya is described as permanent; it is not a scribal error and should not be smoothed over.

The name "King Adorned with Twenty Thousand Rays of Light" renders "od mtshan khri phrag gnyis kyis brgyan pa'i rgyal po" — khri phrag gnyis is literally "two ten-thousands," i.e., twenty thousand; similarly "Forty-Eight Thousand Unchanging Lights" renders bzhi khri brgyad stong, i.e., forty-eight thousand.

- The phrase rendered "the three obscurations and the five acts of immediate consequence" refers to the threefold obscuration by afflictions, karma, and karmic fruition, together with the five heinous acts that bring immediate retribution in the next life. The exception clause "save only those born of excessive desire" is a standard qualifier found in such purification enumerations, indicating that exceptionally heavy karma rooted in rampant craving may require additional remedies.

The "twelve branches of the teaching" are the classical twelvefold division of the scriptural canon found throughout Mahāyāna literature. The rendering of each branch follows the standard Tibetan canonical terminology.

The phrase "the Great Treasury" translates རྒྱལ་མཚན་ཆེན་པོ་, which likely refers to a specific collection or dhāraṇī text; without further context it is rendered generically.

- The names in this passage are a catalogue of bodhisattva epithets, most of which are Tibetan semantic translations of Sanskrit names that appear in various sūtra traditions. I have supplied the most standard Sanskrit equivalents where these are well attested. A few names, such as "the One Who Has Transcended the Three Realms" and "the One Whose Conduct Is Restrained," function more as descriptive epithets than as proper names and are rendered accordingly. The name rendered "Son of the Highest" for རྒྱལ་མཚན་ཆེན་པོ་ལྷན་པོ་ literally means "son of one without craving," a Tibetan translation of Akaniṣṭha; the interpretation as a bodhisattva name in this context is straightforward. The brief heading "This is the second fascicle" marks a traditional scribal division of the text and is included as it appears in the source.

- The name rendered "Roar Moves the Mountains, Seized and Shaken" translates a compound that is syntactically compressed and possibly a proper name meaning something like "the sound of mountains being seized and moved." This reading is plausible but the exact Sanskrit Vorlage is uncertain. The name "Qualities of Reading" likewise renders a term that may be a proper name related to the merits of recitation, and the precise sense may depend on a Sanskrit original no longer recoverable from context alone.

- The name rendered "Certainly Ascendant" translates a term meaning something like "definitively or assuredly stacked or heaped up," which is awkward in any language; the rendering chosen reflects the sense of accumulation in an assured or established manner. "Who Gathers by the Four Means" refers to the four means of gathering disciples (the four saṃgraha-vastus): giving, kind speech, beneficial conduct, and consistency between word and deed. "Born from the Crown" likely alludes to a well-known mythological motif of birth from the crown of the head, associated in some traditions with Brahmā or with certain emanation narratives. "Stacked Speech" renders a compound meaning something like speech that is layered or accumulated; the precise nuance is uncertain but likely refers to eloquence or the heaping up of excellent words. "Who Unfolds Miraculous Powers" renders a term literally meaning "half of miraculous powers" or "opening miraculous powers," which is slightly unusual; the rendering chosen takes the sense of displaying or unfolding such powers.

- The name rendered "Preserver of Light" translates རྒྱལ་མཚན་ཆེན་པོ་, which can also mean "Guardian of Light" or may be a Tibetan rendering of a name like Kāśyapa (whose epithet sometimes involves light); given the enumerative liturgical context no single reading is certain, but "Preserver of Light" reflects the literal Tibetan.

The name rendered "Who Is Honored with Prostrations" translates རྒྱལ་མཚན་ཆེན་པོ་ལྷན་པོ་, literally "one who has been bowed to with a shawl" or possibly "one bowed to by a multitude." The precise nuance of 拜 here is uncertain; "honored with prostrations" captures the general sense for a listening audience.

The bodhisattva Mountain of Wisdom and the bodhisattva Who Holds All Dhāraṇīs each appear twice in this passage, reflecting the Tibetan text's own repetition.

- The sequence ending with "the One, the Ten, the Hundred" and so on through numerical multiples of ten thousand up to seven million is a known feature of certain Mahāyāna litany texts, where bodhisattvas are enumerated by name and then saluted collectively in ascending numerical groupings. The Tibetan units used are khri (ten thousand), khri phrag bcu (one hundred thousand), khri phrag brgya (one million), and so on through khri phrag bdun brgya (seven million); these renderings follow standard Tibetan numerical convention.

The name rendered "Shape of Intellect" (blo dbyibs) is unusual and may be a proper name with no transparent Sanskrit correlate; it literally means "form or contour of mind or intelligence."

The name rendered "Sheer Precipice" (ngos gzar) literally means "steep face" or "sheer cliff-face" and appears to function as a bodhisattva name rather than a descriptive epithet in context.

- The numerical sequence in this passage follows a standard Tibetan enumeration pattern using successive units (ten-thousands of ten-thousands, hundred-thousands, ten-millions, and then Ganges-sand multiples), rendered as faithfully as possible into English equivalents. Some of these numerical terms do not map neatly onto standard English large-number vocabulary; the translations given reflect the Tibetan units as precisely as possible rather than imposing modern Western number names.

The phrase rendered "the realm of the king of liberation" (rnam par thar pa'i rgyal po'i khams) is an unusual epithet; it likely refers to the sphere or domain characterized by liberation, framed as a royal domain — a poetic image of the pure sphere beyond saṃsāra.

- The text breaks off mid-sentence at the end ("the three obscurations, and so forth —"), which is where the provided Tibetan passage ends; the sentence is clearly incomplete and continues in the next passage.

The dhāraṇī syllables are rendered as phonetic Sanskrit transliteration following the Tibetan spelling; the mantra text is not semantically transparent and is treated as a ritual formula, as is conventional.

The phrase rendered "the Brahma of Great Realization, fully perfected" (rtogs pa chen po yong ssu rgyas pa'i 'gyod tshang skyi mdo) designates the title of the sūtra itself; 'gyod tshang skyi is an unusual compound but is taken here as a form of Brahma epithet modifying the sūtra's identity.

- The phrase rendered "loss of their natural-state mind" (自然心失) is somewhat unusual. It could mean "having lost their mind of essential nature" in a more technical doctrinal sense — i.e., straying from their fundamental vow-ground — or it may be an idiomatic way of indicating that they acted contrary to their vowed nature. The translation renders it literally but the doctrinal nuance remains open.

The six grave offenses (𑀧𑁆𑀭𑀸𑀓𑀲𑀺𑀢𑀺) are a recognized Vinaya category (the six pāṛajika-adjacent offenses for monks or the equivalent for nuns); no further gloss was added to the body to avoid interrupting the reading.

- The six tathāgatas named here correspond to a fivefold or sixfold maṇḍala arrangement; their epithets are translated from the Tibetan since they do not always match the standard Sanskrit names in canonical sources. Akṣobhya for Tib. Mi bskyod pa is standard; the others (Gandhaśrī for sPos brtsegs, Śatarūpa for 'Bum gzuqs) are less common and may be text-specific epithets rather than the usual names of those directional buddhas.

The noble Lokadhāraṇī (Tib. 'jig rten gzungs) in the southern direction and Pūrṇacandra (Tib. Zla rgyas) in the northern direction are bodhisattvas not commonly attested in standard canonical lists; the names given are direct renderings of the Tibetan.

The passage ends mid-sentence in the Tibetan provided; the translation breaks accordingly at the natural syntactic point.

- The phrase rendered "five acts of immediate consequence" refers to the five ānantarya-karmas: killing one's father, killing one's mother, killing an arhat, wounding a buddha, and causing a schism in the Saṅgha. These are so called because they lead without interval to rebirth in the lowest hell.

The expression "five communities of the Saṅgha" likely refers to the traditional fivefold division of the Saṅgha by ordination status: fully ordained monks, fully ordained nuns, probationary nuns, novice monks, and novice nuns, though some traditions enumerate the five differently.

The passage "concealed our faults and accepted gifts with a semblance of faith" renders a somewhat compressed Tibetan phrase concerning the improper receipt of offerings while hiding one's transgressions; the interpretation offered here follows the most natural reading in context.

- The phrase rendered "eight kinds of uninvestigated wrong view" translates a compound that lists eight categories of erroneous standpoints held without analysis. The precise enumeration of these eight is not spelled out in the immediate text; they belong to a standard scholastic list of wrong views, and the translation preserves the number and sense without speculating further.

The six non-Buddhist teachers refers to the six famous heterodox teachers contemporary with the Buddha, a standard reference in Buddhist literature.

The final sentence of the translation is deliberately left incomplete, as the Tibetan passage itself breaks off mid-list — specifically in the middle of enumerating the categories of Vinaya downfalls — indicating the passage continues beyond what is given here.

- The "two indeterminate rules" (aniyata, māṅgeṣa) refer to the two cases in the Vinaya whose outcome is not predetermined. The "four rules requiring individual confession" refers to the pratideśanīya rules. The "seven rules of serious weight" likely refers to the seven garudhadharmas incumbent upon nuns, though in context it may refer to weighty offences of a different category; the passage continues a list of Vinaya categories.

The final verse breaks off mid-sentence in the Tibetan passage provided, and the translation reflects this. No completion has been supplied.

- The phrase rendered "takes even a single session of sitting practice before a buddha image" translates "thang cig sangs rgyas thun zhugs na," which literally means "enters a single session in the presence of a buddha." This likely refers to a meditation session or ritual session performed before a buddha statue or image; the rendering reflects that natural reading.

The final sentence is left open as the Tibetan passage breaks off mid-thought; the translation renders what is present without supplying a conclusion.

- The closing formula "received the feet of the Blessed One upon the crowns of their heads" is a standard honorific expression of prostration and reverence, indicating that the assembly bowed their heads to the Buddha's feet. The sūtra title rendered as "the noble sūtra of the Great Realization Fully Expanded" reflects a title not easy to identify with certainty among known Sanskrit originals; it may be a Tibetan apocryphal or Chinese-translated sūtra whose Sanskrit title is not recoverable with confidence.
