

Single-Portion Examination of the King of Glorious Purification

Pariśodhanatejorājaparikalpaikadeśa · Toh 484 · Derge Kangyur

ཡེངས་སུཌཱོ་བ་གཟུངས་ཀྱི་ཕྱི་ལོ་བཟང་པ་པལྱོས་གཙག་པ་

Toh 484 in the Kangyur is a tantric ritual text known in Tibetan as Yongsu Jongwa Ziji Kyi Gyalpo, which translates into English as the Examination of the King of Glorious Purification. It belongs to the class of tantric literature and concerns the performance of fierce or wrathful ritual action, known in Sanskrit as abhicāra, prescribing detailed instructions for constructing fire-pits and ritual platforms in liminal spaces such as charnel grounds and the dwellings of butchers and demons. The text as preserved in the Kangyur represents a single-portion examination, suggesting it formed part of a larger tantra or cycle of related teachings. It was translated from Sanskrit into Tibetan by the Indian abbot Śāntaṃgarbha together with the Tibetan translator monk Jayarakṣita, and subsequently edited and finalized by the ācārya Rinchen Chok according to the later standardized Tibetan terminology.

Here ends the single-portion examination of the King of Glorious Purification.

Translated and revised by the Indian abbot Śāntaṃgarbha and the Tibetan translator monk Jayarakṣita; thereafter edited and finalized by the ācārya Rinchen Chok in accordance with the new standardized terminology.

Charnel grounds, the homes of butchers,
the haunts of demons — in such places
the rite of fierce action (abhicāra) is performed.

The fire-pit: the lowest, middle, or best — made nine forearms wide, or three cubits, or nine spans — upon that platform, measured and built,
draw it triangular, like a spearhead.

Anoint the hearth-channel with grain flour, sesame flour, and poison
so that it becomes utterly black.

In the center, draw a nine-pronged vajra,
blazing black and fierce.

At the corners above, mark it with a three-pronged vajra
and a cross-shaped vajra.

On the outer border, draw
clubs and skull-staffs

and swords blazing intensely.

Beyond that outer border, skeletal forms marked with the mudrā-symbols of the Sugatas and the rest — of a color like a dark thundercloud, upright and supreme,
seated upon a human corpse, three-pronged and possessing a garland of iron rings.

Having thus invited the fire deity (Agni) of such form,
burn with a wrathful mind facing south.

Using as fuel-wood wood that is exceedingly noxious and thorny, anoint all the following substances with poison —
flesh, blood, iron filings,
bone ash, poison, long pepper,
great-smelling herbs, scent-water, and the like —
and, having burned a hundred thousand times,
that person's wealth and prosperity,
their relatives, retinue, and servants,
their children and spouse —
all these shall be abandoned, and, stripped of life,
they will experience unbearable suffering.

The rite of fierce action is complete.

Translated by the Indian abbot Śāntaṃgarbha and the Tibetan translator monk Jayarakṣita.

May there be benefit to all.

Translator's Notes

- The text describes an abhicāra (fierce or hostile) fire ritual (homa), a category of tantric rite intended to harm an enemy. The colophon appears twice in slightly different forms, likely because this section circulated as a semi-independent unit appended to a longer tantra. The phrase "lowest, middle, or best" for the fire-pit refers to the three grades of the triangular homa-pit used in wrathful rites. "Long pepper" (Tibetan: skye tshe) renders the plant Piper longum, a common ritual and medicinal ingredient. The closing Sanskrit phrase svāpari hitā bhavantu is slightly irregular but is rendered as the conventional benediction "May there be benefit to all."

Colophon

This is an AI-generated translation from the AI Stupa project. It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Where a published translation exists — above all from 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha (84000.co) — that translation is definitive and should be preferred; please consult it instead. These translations are released into the public domain (CC0) in the spirit of spreading the Dharma to all corners of the earth.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.