The Recitation of the Names of the Tathāgatas: A Garland of Ornaments of the Fortunate Eon, in Sanskrit Tathāgatanāmasaṅgītikālpikabhadrālaṃkaramāla and in Tibetan De bzhin gshegs pa'i mtshan brjod bskal bzang rgyan gyi phreng ba, is a devotional work in verse honoring the thousand buddhas who appear in our present world age, the Fortunate Eon. It opens by recalling how, in a distant eon, the thousand sons of the universal monarch Dhṛtarāṣṭra were prophesied to become the buddhas of this eon, and then recites their names stanza by stanza, each stanza closing with the refrain "to them I pay homage." Its closing verses praise the benefit of hearing these names with reverence, which is said to burn away misdeeds, free one from the suffering of the lower realms, and lead in the end to nirvāṇa, and its colophon names the Kashmiri paṇḍita Śākyaśrī as its author, who translated it together with the Tibetan translator Jampé Pal, with a later revision by the Sakya Lotsāwa. It is Toh 1169 in the Tengyur, where it belongs to the section of praises (stotra).

In Sanskrit: tathāgata nāma saṅgīti kālpika bhadra alaṃkara māla nāma
In Tibetan: The Recitation of the Names of the Tathāgatas Called A Garland of the Ornaments of the Fortunate Eon

I bow my head in homage to all the buddhas.

In the eon Beautiful Appearance, in the realm Fully Adorned,
The thousand sons of the universal monarch Dhṛtarāṣṭra
Were prophesied by the buddha Jewel of Infinite Qualities,
King of Manifold Arrays, to become victors in this Fortunate Eon.
Having paid homage to those thousand buddhas
And to the two miraculously born brothers as well:

Though for each of the victors their land, caste, and light, their father, mother, and son,
Their attendant, their foremost in wisdom, and their foremost in miraculous power,
The size of their assembly, their lifespan, and how long their teaching remains,
Their relics and stūpas, and how they generated the mind of awakening,

Fifteen points for each, have been taught at length,
Here I shall reverently recite their names alone.

The names of the thousand buddhas who appear in this Fortunate Eon:
Whoever hears them and is reverent burns away all misdeeds,
Sees all the Victors, leaves behind the suffering of the lower realms,
And, endowed with patience, through a succession of the highest happiness, attains nirvāṇa.

Well urged by the kindness of the bodhisattva King Supreme Joy,
The great paṇḍita of Kashmir composed this work,
Which surpasses others in five respects.
Even so, I confess every fault and misdeed, one by one.

This virtue that I have made with great effort and a devoted mind,
And all virtue without limit,
I give to all beings; may all of them, held always
In the Victors' care, swiftly attain omniscience.

The work entitled The Recitation of the Names of the Tathāgatas: A Garland of Ornaments of the Fortunate Eon, composed by the Kashmiri paṇḍita Śākyaśrī, is complete. It was translated by that same paṇḍita and the translator Jampé Pal. Later, the Sakya Lotsāwa also made some corrections and translations and finalized it.

Translator's Notes

• The names of the buddhas are translated by their meaning, except for those widely known by their Sanskrit names and those formed from the names of gods; the Indian forms of most of them cannot be identified with confidence from the Tibetan alone. The names of the eon, the realm, and the buddha who gave the prophecy in the opening verses are likewise translated by meaning.
Because the verse runs the names together, the division into separate names is uncertain in a few places, and a few rare names, such as Long Pennant and Abiding There, are rendered tentatively. The name given as Free of Strife takes an unusual spelling as the word for strife.
• As in the earlier pieces, these names of the buddhas of the Fortunate Eon are translated by their meaning, except where the Tibetan is the standard rendering of a well-known Sanskrit name (Bhagīratha, Jīvaka, Vairocana, Aśoka, Kāśyapa, Akṣobhya, Rāhula, Mañjughoṣa, Siddhārtha). In these names □□□□□□ means "mass, heap," not the doctrinal "aggregate." Where the verse runs names together without a conjunction, the division into separate names is sometimes uncertain. A few readings are tentative: □□□□□□□ is taken as □□□□□□□□, "Free of Pride"; □□□□□□□□□, obscure as written, is read as □□□□□□□□□, "Beautiful Eyes"; □□□□□□ is read as □□□□□□□, "Soaring Lotus"; and in the line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ the division is unclear and □□□ is read as □□□, "satisfy." □□□□□□□ here is "Lord of Dharma"; the name □□□□□ ("Lord of the Earth") does not itself occur in this piece.
• As in the earlier pieces, these buddha names are translated by their meaning, except where the Tibetan is the standard rendering or transcription of a known Sanskrit name (Varuṇa, Bhagīratha, Candana, Aśoka, Ratnapāṇi, Acala, Gautama, Utpala). The verse runs names together without conjunctions, so where one name ends and the next begins is sometimes uncertain, notably in the line □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□, given here as "Ocean of Purity, Possessing Jewels, Possessing Nothing." The word for beryl is written with its first syllables doubled (□□□□□□□□□□□□), an evident copying slip; it is read as beryl (vaiḍūrya), giving "Beryl Essence."
• As in the earlier pieces, the buddha names are translated by their meaning, except where the Tibetan is a standard rendering of a known Sanskrit name (Acala, Bhagīratha, Gaganaghoṣa, Deva, Ūrṇā). Where the verse runs names together without a conjunction, the division between names is sometimes uncertain. □□□□□□□ is read as the verse contraction of □□□□□□□□□, "sorrowless," just as □□□□□□□ in the closing verse stands for nirvāṇa. In the closing verses □□□ means "names," as in the title, not the major marks. The bodhisattva king who urged the composition (□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□) cannot be identified with confidence, so his name is translated by its meaning, "King Supreme Joy."

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.
