Toh 790 · Derge Kangyur

Toh 790 in the Kangyur is a short dhāraṇī text, likely known in Sanskrit by a title corresponding to something like Tshig Tsanpé Zungs in Tibetan, meaning the "Dhāraṇī of Powerful Words," a protective incantation belonging to the Kangyur's dhāraṇī literature. Following the customary homage to the Three Jewels, the text presents a mantra formula beginning with the syllables "tadyathā, oṃ ale kāli ale kāli mucite," intended to be recited or invoked so that one's speech becomes forceful and authoritative when addressing an assembly. Such texts typically function as ritual aids, offering practitioners a means to gain confidence, eloquence, or persuasive power through the recitation of sacred syllables. As is common with dhāraṇī works in the Kangyur, this text is brief, formulaic, and oriented toward practical application rather than philosophical exposition, reflecting the broader tradition of protective and empowering incantations attributed to buddhas or bodhisattvas.

If one goes among an assembly, one's words will become powerful and authoritative.

This completes the Dhāraṇī of Powerful Words.

Homage to the Three Jewels.

Tadyathā. Oṃ ale kāli ale kāli mucite

Translator's Notes

- This passage is a fragment spanning the end of one dhāraṇī text and the opening of another. The mantra syllables (tadyathā, oṃ ale kāli ale kāli mucite...) are left transliterated rather than translated, per standard practice for mantra/dhāraṇī material, and the passage breaks off mid-mantra as it does in the source.

It was produced by a careful, doctrine-aware process aiming at a high degree of accuracy, but it has not been reviewed by a human translator and may contain errors. It is offered as a provisional translation for those texts of the Tibetan Buddhist canon that have not yet received an authoritative human translation. Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.

May whoever encounters these words derive great benefit.
