Toh 487 in the Kangyur is a Mahāyāna tantric text known in Sanskrit as the Śrī Paramādi Nāma Mahāyāna Kalārāja and in Tibetan as Dpal Mchog Dang Po, rendered in English as The Glorious Primordial, with the fuller title The King of Conceptual Elaboration of the Great Vehicle. It belongs to the tantric division of the Kangyur and is associated with the Perfection of Wisdom, as indicated by its opening homage to the Blessed Lady Prajñāpāramitā. The text unfolds in the classic sūtra style of "Thus did I hear," presenting the Buddha as a supremely empowered figure endowed with the vajra blessing of all the Tathāgatas, sovereign over the three realms, and master of all mudrās and wisdoms. As a tantra concerned with the gnosis, samayas, and yogic realization connected to Prajñāpāramitā, it represents a distinctive meeting point between the Perfection of Wisdom literature and Mahāyāna tantric practice.

In the language of India: Śrī Paramādi Nāma Mahāyāna Kalārāja. In the language of Tibet: The Glorious Primordial — a tantra known as The King of Conceptual Elaboration of the Great Vehicle.

Homage to the Blessed Lady, the Perfection of Wisdom (prajñāpāramitā).

Thus did I hear. At one time, the Blessed One — endowed with the vajra blessing of all the Tathāgatas, possessed of all the distinct varieties of samaya and wisdom, crowned with the jewel diadem of all the precious gems of all the Tathāgatas and thereby consecrated with sovereignty over the three realms, endowed with the omniscient gnosis of all the Tathāgatas, the sovereign lord of great yogins, having realized in his heart the equality of all the mudrās of all the Tathāgatas and performing manifold activities — the one of great compassion who performs the enlightened deeds that fulfill without exception every wish of every sentient being throughout the entirety of the realm of beings, great Vairocana, the Eternal, abiding in the equality of the three times, he in whose body, speech, and mind all Tathāgatas abide as vajra, praised and extolled — adorned with great jewels and precious gems, hung with bells of various colors, beautified by silk banners and garlands of flowers, tassels, nets, half-nets, and moons stirred by the wind — dwelt in the palace of the gods of the Heaven of Wielding Others' Emanations, lords over all the desire realms, together with eight hundred million bodhisattvas, namely:

the bodhisattva, great being Vajrapāṇi; the bodhisattva, great being Avalokiteśvara; the bodhisattva, great being Ākāśagarbha; the bodhisattva, great being Vajramuṣṭi; the bodhisattva, great being Mañjuśrī; the bodhisattva, great being who, the very moment the awakening mind arose, turned the wheel of Dharma; the bodhisattva, great being Ākāśakośa; the bodhisattva, great being who utterly destroys all the powers of Māra — together with these and the rest of the eight hundred million bodhisattvas, great beings, surrounding him and facing toward him.

And he taught the Dharma — good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, excellent in meaning, excellent in words, unmixed, perfectly complete, perfectly pure, perfectly clarified — and correctly revealed this method of the Perfection of Wisdom called "The Gateway of the Pure Essential Nature of All Phenomena."

In this way: that place of perfect joy, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of the arrow of attachment, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of contact, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of the bond of the beloved, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of sovereignty and power over all, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of view, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of joy, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of craving, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of pride, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of ornament, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of giving satisfaction, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva.

That place of pure appearance, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of bodily bliss, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of pure form, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of pure sound, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of pure fragrance, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva. That place of pure taste, the pure abode — that is the abode of the bodhisattva.

Why is this so? It is because all phenomena are pure in their essential nature. Since all phenomena are empty by their essential nature, the Perfection of Wisdom is perfectly pure.

Vajra Hūṃ.

O Vajrapāṇi, for one who accomplishes the abode of the pure essential nature of all phenomena — even if such a person hears this teaching of the Perfection of Wisdom but a single time, all cognitive obscurations (jñeyāvaraṇa) will be severed until the heart of awakening (bodhi), and even if one has accumulated the afflictive obscuration, the Dharma obscuration, and great karmic obscuration, one will never again be born in the lower destinies such as the hells and the like. And whatever sins have been committed will be purified of suffering immediately upon their commission. Whoever holds this teaching, reads it daily, recites it, and applies it to mind with proper attention will, in this very life, attain the vajra meditative absorption of the equality of all phenomena (samādhi), thereby becoming sovereign over all phenomena. One will come to experience joy, delight, and supreme bliss in all phenomena. Through the sixteen qualities of a great bodhisattva (mahāsattva), one will attain Tathāgatahood itself or the state of Vajradhara.

Then the Blessed One, Vajrapāṇi — the perfect maṇḍala of the Great Vehicle realization of all Tathāgatas, the supreme mind contemplating the entirety of the vajra-expanse, victorious over all three worlds without remainder throughout all three realms, moving to tame the entire realm of sentient beings without exception, accomplishing every aim, Vajrapāṇi of boundless infinity and great commitment, attended by the many great beings of vajra-secrecy — taught the meaning of this teaching of the Perfection of Wisdom. With face fully smiling, taking his left hand and brandishing the primordial great vajra, he held it pointed at his own heart, and in that manner of holding, he spoke this heart of his own suchness, known as the great commitment of the vajra of great bliss, the meaningful vajra:

Hūṃ.

Then, by the mere utterance of these words, all Vajradharas of all Tathāgatas, together with all world-systems, were delighted with firm and steadfast delight. They were summoned and introduced into the great maṇḍala of the Blessed One Vairocana, bound by the great commitment, brought under authority, and all spiritual attainments were accomplished.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana sealed himself with the mudrā of great bliss-embrace and entered and remained in the meditative absorption called the secret vajra of all Tathāgatas.

Then Vajrapāṇi of great secrecy entered into the meditative absorption called the wisdom-vajra that illuminates the maṇḍala, the arising of the vajra-commitment of great secrecy, and proclaimed this great maṇḍala called the great consecration of the vajra-expanse, the suchness of the great commitment:

Now shall the true teaching be declared.

This most excellent great maṇḍala — its suchness is the great primordial commitment, and it is called the vajra consecration.

It is square in shape, with four gates, entirely surrounded by corridors.

It is perfectly endowed with four stairways, blazing with radiant rays of light, dense with brilliance.

The chambers of the maṇḍala

At the intervals of the gateway borders, half-moons are perfectly installed, adorned on all sides with precious gems.

Banners of varied and brilliant crests, hung with the finest bells set trembling by the wind, festooned with garlands of flowers, and graced with mirrors — thus shall the outer maṇḍala be drawn.

Within it, a wheel equal in size to the eight maṇḍalas shall be delineated with vajra-lines and is declared the vajra wheel.

At its centre, an image of a buddha shall be placed as is fitting:
smiling, of moon-white complexion, supreme in holding the vajra in a graceful gesture, adorned with a vajra garland and so forth, blazing with densely gathered rays of varied brilliance, seated upon a lotus throne — whether fashioned according to tradition or assembled in full.

Reciting one's own essence-mantra throughout,
one shall at that time examine the maṇḍala.

Vajrasattva and the other bodhisattvas shall be correctly placed by their very essence-mantras.

Having traversed with the force of the vajra,
all the maṇḍalas are gathered together completely, and they may be set in place or drawn — this is to be shown to the entire assembly.

In front, Vajrasattva, bearing the crest ornament of all buddhas, zealously sharpening the vajra-weapon, shall be placed in the definite colours of red and white.

To the right of the buddha,
Vajra Kīlikīla,
embracing with all his limbs,
of the nature of the vajra and the radiance of the sun,
shall be placed.

Behind, Vajra Desire,
holding the banner of the makara (sea-dragon), of blue-white complexion —
so shall the wise one place him as is fitting.

To the left, Vajra Haughty One, holding two vajras of haughtiness, grasping both vajras of the haughty gesture, shall be placed, resembling refined gold.

At the intervals flanking the buddha, marked with flowers and so forth, with palms well placed upon the crown of the head — great offerings shall be set there.

At the intervals of the outer maṇḍala, the hosts of goddesses shall be placed.
At the very centre of each gateway, assemblies of forms, marks, and so forth shall be placed.

The eight buddhas endowed with their own maṇḍalas —
Vajradhara and the rest — shall be drawn.
Throughout the entire vajra wheel,
the buddhas shall be encircled by Vajradhara.

At the stations of the outer maṇḍala,
the Lord of Desire shall be drawn.
In front, the King who Conquers the Three Worlds, and the supreme Brahmā of Desire, the Pacifier.

Then from this, the elaborate ritual for entering this great maṇḍala and so forth arises. Regarding that, the ācārya who has entered this ritual as described from the very beginning is: the ācārya of the great vajra, and the ācārya of all maṇḍalas, who knows all commitments (samaya), who understands all phenomena (dharmas), who accomplishes all activities, who has accomplished all attainments (siddhi), who has been blessed by the Blessed One Vajrasattva, who has received all empowerments, who is endowed with omniscience, and through whom all offerings and all maṇḍalas of the world and beyond the world come under dominion and are accomplished — all whose mudrās as well are accomplished by being bound by oneself. Even if there are faults along the path of all commitments, they will not be diminished or broken, and they will be understood as blessed. Even without formal training, omniscience will arise. All activities such as making offerings will be accomplished. In brief, whatever the highest of attainments (siddhi) one aspires to in this very life, just so will one attain buddhahood itself or the state of Vajradhara. Why is this? Because the Blessed One Vajrasattva dwells in the heart of this one, and for the sake of what is meaningful, having been invoked, bound by commitment, and brought under dominion — being fully pleased, he himself becomes the vajra master and, having entered and accomplished the practice, it will be brought to completion.

Then, sealing with the vajra mudrā and gazing with the primordial vajra gaze, the practitioner recites the essence mantra once and accomplishes the great maṇḍala. Next, having performed recitation once with the mudrā of Vajra Allure and made prostration, he dons red clothing, takes up a garland of flowers, anoints his face with perfume, and, with palms joined in the vajra gesture, performs the vajra dance while circumambulating. He takes flowers to his heart and enters the presence of the deity. Having entered, again, through the vajra dance and circumambulation, he generates fervent longing and continues to recite the essence mantra. Then, gazing at the Blessed One with the vajra gaze, he remains in that state and accomplishes the Blessed One.

At that point the Blessed One Vajradhara (Vajrapāṇi), delighted, will grant the vision of himself. His eyebrows will move, and his entire body — or individual limbs — will move, and his complexion will turn red. His face, which is of the nature of rays of light, or his entire body, will become manifest. He will also display immeasurable miraculous powers. The Blessed One will then grant a vision of himself, or even bestow the supreme attainment. From that time forward, one will obtain all attainments day by day. By the mere fact of having entered this presence, one will be rendered invincible and will not be slain. All attainments, all excellences, all primordial wisdoms, and all activities will be accomplished by the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi.

Then, having perfectly worshipped him, one receives empowerment under the vajra name. The hero's vajra is offered to the Blessed One, and then, having recited the essence mantra and the Blessed One grants a vision, one says, "Now bestow it yourself," and receives it oneself. At that very instant the supreme attainment — whatever one has wished for in mind — will be fulfilled. Or else, through one's own practice over six months, the supreme attainment of whatever one has wished for in mind will be accomplished. Thus spoke the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi.

The conferral of the vajra name empowerment and so forth are likewise done in the same way. The blessing and all that follows are also performed, and then one enacts the ritual according to whatever rite one desires, bringing it to completion, and the practice of the secret of the great maṇḍala is performed once.

Then the disciples are to be introduced. First, the vajra master seals them with the mudrā of the primordially joyful vajra and introduces them. Having entered, they likewise make prostration, and with the essence mantra and words expressing whatever aspiration they hold, the great seal accomplished through the accomplished Blessed One is to be effected. Through that accomplishment of the Blessed One, that very sign will arise; upon recognizing it, the great seal itself will be accomplished. All attainments will also be accomplished, and through this entry the vajra master himself will likewise be accomplished in the same way.

Then, having likewise received the vajra and performed the rest accordingly, the vajra master conducts this full elaborate rite for the vajra disciples and teaches them the binding of the mudrās. For all those who are devoted to the samaya of all Tathāgatas and so forth, the elaborate entry rite of one's own chosen deity is likewise performed, and in the same way all attainments wished for in mind will be accomplished. For those who have faith in other deities, the elaborate entry rite is performed in the same way, and accomplishment will come about in the same way.

Then, all those who have entered the rite are to be fully satisfied with food, tastes, essences, and all manner of sustenance, and they are to be honored with dancing, singing, and laughter as one knows how to offer them, along with sons, daughters, friends, companions, relatives, and those who are connected by kinship.

In this regard, here one should not make distinctions between those who are suitable vessels and those who are not, for the reason that all sentient beings without exception, leaving none out, are sealed with the mudrā of the sameness of vajra Dharma through vajra union, which bestows this great bliss vajra commitment and fulfills all desires in their entirety. This is the great maṇḍala.

Then the rite proceeds. Beginning on the fifteenth day of the lunar month, one binds the greatly joyful vajra mudrā in the presence of Vajrapāṇi and, without becoming weary in the slightest, first performs the consecration and so forth, recites with vajra words, and recites continuously until the end of one month — and in doing so, one will have performed the preliminary approach. After that, all attainments will be accomplished in accordance with Vajrapāṇi's command.

Then, for those who wish to draw or have drawn a cloth painting: first draw it with the mudrā of vajra-drawing, and after that everything may be done as one likes. In all maṇḍalas as well, one is to begin with precisely that same method. In the center, the Blessed One is to be depicted in accordance with the rite, and in the manner of the great maṇḍala, the eight great bodhisattvas are to be drawn. Then, beginning on the fifteenth day of the lunar month, one binds the great mudrā and, just as in the preliminary approach, recites accordingly. On the night of the fifteenth, without the slightest weariness, and without loosening the mudrā, one is to perform the recitation. Then, at dawn, the Blessed One will appear smiling, radiant with a brilliance like the moon, and will bestow the supreme attainments of buddhahood itself, and of being a vajra-holder, and so forth.

There is also another rite: one draws the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, surrounded by the eight great bodhisattvas, and in all directions one draws the Tathāgatas and all the vajra-holders. Then, by practicing in the same manner, all attainments — buddhahood itself and the rest — will be accomplished.

On cloth, one draws the Blessed One together with Vajrapāṇi and, standing before it, remains in the great initial mudrā and performs recitation one hundred thousand times. When the hundred thousand recitations are complete, one will attain Vajrapāṇi himself. By drawing the Tathāgata, the sole hero, one will in the end attain full awakening.

Now, the activities accomplished by mere reading, and those accomplished by mere entry into the maṇḍala, are as follows. To please all Tathāgatas: by offering all pleasures of desire and so forth. To please the great vajra-holder: by embracing and making sounds of joy with Vajrasattva (Skt. vajrasattva). To please all bodhisattvas: by immeasurable recitation. To please all vajras: by reciting one's own essence mantra. To cause all sentient beings — gods and others — to feel affection: by reciting one hundred thousand times in all circumstances. To protect oneself: by reciting once over mustard seeds. To protect others: by vajra-circling. To protect all: one single repetition in the mind suffices. To bind all boundaries, directions, and maṇḍalas: by gazing, or by means of mustard seeds and so forth. To cause all sentient beings to be paralyzed: by reciting while holding the breath. To cause all sentient beings to fall drowsy: by squeezing the vajra. To cause all sentient beings to be confused: by reciting with eyes closed. To slay all: by splitting the vajra. To seal all sentient beings: with the vajra ḍākinī mudrā.

To draw out and extract all vital essences: by reciting with the mind. To consume all sentient beings: by rising and reciting swiftly. To terrify all sentient beings: with the vajra-terror mudrā. To summon all wealth: by reciting over gold. To summon all wealth and grain: with the vajra-yoginī mudrā. To cause all to feel passionate attachment: by reciting while singing the kakalā song accompanied by the striking of a lute. To pierce all and cause attachment in all: with the vajra-arrow mudrā. To sweep away all: by pleasing the Tathāgatas of all directions. To make firm the binding of the wicked: by pressing firmly and decisively upon the heart. To accomplish all that is malevolent: by embracing with the vajra. To scatter all ornaments: by scattering with a blazing gaze. To satisfy all: by placing the vajra fist upon the heart. To illuminate darkness: by gazing eastward with the vajra and then circling. To bring ease to the body: by reciting one's own name. To make all forms appear: with the supreme mudrā of vajra form. To hear all sounds: by means of the vajra lute. For the sake of various pleasant fragrances: by a song sung through the breath of the nose. To transfer all food and drink and all essences: one should transfer them with the vajra. For all invocations of descent: by reciting with palms joined, a bell, and a song. To cause all to dance: by reciting while oneself dancing. To cause all to sing: by reciting while moving the tongue. To cause all to speak: with the vajra lips. To bring all down and cause them to respond: by means of the vajra descent. To be freed from all spirit-afflictions (grahas): with the vajra-sprout mudrā. To cause all spirits to take hold: by reciting with the wrathful one, the lord of the assembly, in a state of great delight. To cause all epidemic diseases to take hold: by spirits of the vajra family. To dispel all epidemics: by dispelling with the vajra gaze. To spread all poisons: with the vajra poison-gaze mudrā. To destroy all poisons: with a peacock's plume. To consume all poisons: with the vajra-nectar mudrā. To ruin all māras and all other hostile forces without exception: by reciting immeasurable times in an agitated manner. To be freed from all spirit-afflictions of the ḍākinīs: with the mudrā of wielding the great vajra. To destroy all mudrās: by hurling the vajra. To summon, to introduce, and to tame all ḍākinīs: by holding the mudrā of the vajra khaṭvāṅga. To destroy the maṇḍalas, the pledges (samaya), the essences, the mudrās, the secret mantras, the vidyās, and all secrets of all the māmo spirits: by the fierce vajra syllable PHAṬ. To make all māmos and all ḍākinīs into obedient messengers: by reciting in a wrathful state at the abode of the māmos, one hundred thousand times. To shatter the power of all māras: with the fierce vajra laughter called HA HA. To vanquish the entire army of enemies: one should recite fully over the vajra and then hurl it. To be liberated from all conflicts: with the vajra-victory-banner mudrā. To bind all: by tying a knot in a garment. To release all: by means of the syllable MU. To destroy all zombies and all animated mechanical contrivances: by means of the vajra-terrifier. To release all iron fetters: with the vajra needle tube. To perfectly kindle fire: with the vajra fire-crystal. To perfectly produce water where there is no water: with the vajra water-crystal.

To cause abundant provisions to arise from the sky — food, drink, clothing, ornaments, and all manner of requisites — one should gaze into the sky and recite one hundred thousand times. To manifest from the sky all visible forms such as the body of a buddha, one should gaze into the sky and recite while mindful of the buddha. To reveal in the sky through syllables the truth of prophetic declarations concerning the past, the future, and the present, one should write the syllable A and recite one hundred thousand times over it. To reveal truly from all divination mirrors prophetic declarations concerning the past, the future, and the present, one should invoke all vajra divination mirrors. Likewise, to see all truths with the eye, one should recite one hundred thousand times upon one's own eye. To hear them with the ear, one should recite one hundred thousand times upon one's own ear. To smell with the nose, one should recite upon the nose. To speak with one's own tongue, one should recite upon the tongue. To touch with the body, one should recite upon the body. To know with the mind, one should recite one hundred thousand times in the mind. To display all wonders, one should accomplish the body of a buddha. To display all illusions, one should recite one hundred thousand times over a bundle of peacock feathers. To bring all under one's service, one should recite one hundred thousand times in a peaceful place. To give answer to all, one should use the vajra of the vajra HŪM-maker. To display all miraculous powers, one should use the mudrā of the vajra of miraculous powers. To display all magical manifestations, one should use the mudrā of vajra meditative absorption. To display from all things — one's own body and every other entity — buddhas, Vajrasattva, and all animate and inanimate things, one should use the various miraculous transformations of the vajra. To summon all gods, one should use the vajra circumambulation. To cause all nāgas to follow, one should recite at the lake of the nāga king. To dispatch all yakṣas, one should use the vajra command. To tame all spirits, one should recite while suppressing and angering the Great God. To repel all hail, one should use the mudrā of the vajra protector of existence. To repel all lightning, one should use the mudrā of the vajra with furrowed brows. To bring down rain, one should recite at the lake of the nāgas. To cut off rain, one should perform the libation of stainless water. To produce clouds, one should draw a nāga and fumigate with incense. To disperse clouds, one should use the vajra sky-eye. To cause an ever-flowing gathering of very cool water in a place where there is none, one should use the mudrā of the vajra nāga. To know all treasures, one should pour water into a vessel. To excavate all treasures, one should use the vajra implement. To find all treasures, one should use the vajra of wealth. To obtain all royal dominions, one should use the mudrā of vajra empowerment. To become lord of the earth, one should use the mudrā of the empowerment of Vajrasattva. To accomplish all maṇḍalas, one should use the mudrā of the vajra wheel. To accomplish all mudrās, one should use the samaya mudrā of great bliss. To accomplish all samayas (Skt. samaya), one should use the mudrā of the vajra of supreme joy. To accomplish all siddhis (Skt. siddhi), one should use the mudrā of the iron hook of vajra pride. To demonstrate the accomplishment of all that is as yet unaccomplished, one should use the mudrā of the vajra of accomplishment. To accomplish all vajra vidyādhara holders, one should use the mudrā of the vajra vidyādhara. To accomplish all vajras, one should use the mudrā of the supreme of all vajras. To accomplish all bodhisattvas, one should use the mind vajra.

To accomplish vajradhara itself, one should use the mudrā of the vajra bodhisattva. To accomplish buddhahood itself, one should use the mudrā of vajra wisdom.

Here ends the great king of reflections called "The Suchness Vajra of the Great Samaya, drawn from the Great King of Reflections of All Samayas of Great Bliss, Vajra of Meaningful Accomplishment" — the great samaya suchness vajra. This is the reflection of the vajra bodhisattva.

Then the Blessed One Vairocana declared this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom called "Accomplishing the perfectly complete awakening of the peaceful nature of reality of all Tathāgatas." Because of vajra-solidity itself, the perfectly complete awakening of vajra-sameness is great awakening. Because of being of a single aim, the perfectly complete awakening of the sameness of aim is great awakening. Because of the thorough purity of essential nature itself, the perfectly complete awakening of the sameness of phenomena is great awakening. Because of being wholly non-conceptual toward all things, the perfectly complete awakening of the sameness of all is great awakening.

Vajrapāṇi, whoever hears, retains, reads, and meditates upon these four manifestly accomplished dharmas — even though that person may engage in every kind of wrongdoing — will, until reaching the very heart of awakening, be utterly freed from all lower rebirths.

Then, having thus declared this, the Blessed One, holding the gesture of the wisdom fist, extensively demonstrated this very state of meaning, and smiling with a gentle expression, declared this essence of the sameness of all phenomena: "Āḥ."

Then, by that very utterance alone, all the Tathāgatas were caused to perfectly assemble. In every direction from the Blessed One they abode in the manner of the great maṇḍala of the vajra bodhisattva, and the eight great bodhisattvas abode laughing with great laughter in the eight directions of the outer maṇḍala.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Vairocana, entered the meditative absorption called "Blessing the vajra maṇḍala of all Tathāgatas," and declared this great maṇḍala of the great samaya called "The Suchness Vajra of All Tathāgatas."

Draw the outer maṇḍala in the manner of the great maṇḍala of the vajra bodhisattva, and in its center draw a three-lined wheel. Directly before the Blessed One, upon a supremely arranged multicolored lotus, at the hub of that wheel, place the Blessed One, the Tathāgata of great permanence, fashioned from earth and other materials. In all the directions of that, place or draw eight Tathāgatas fashioned from gold and other materials. Then with discs of colored powder, draw the Tathāgatas together with the vajradhara as they abide in the wheel of the maṇḍala. In the four cardinal directions and the four intermediate directions of the outer maṇḍala, arrange the eight bodhisattvas as they are. Place four full vases at the gates, and set up the symbols of awakening. Beginning from the east, place a vessel completely filled with the six flavors along with grain shoots, and filled with gems, gold, precious stones, cloth, and other things; and place a seat that is soft and supremely comfortable; and place an image of a buddha.

Then, just as described, if one puts on robes and enters the practice having bound the vajra mudrā of all Tathāgatas, even without a teacher oneself, one will be blessed by the Blessed One and all the Tathāgatas. From that point forward, one will be invincible with regard to all the reflections and all the siddhis of all the Tathāgatas, and will attain freedom from all obscurations. Thereafter, the disciple is likewise to be introduced. Once entered, one should present the five-pronged vajra and also confer empowerment by the vajra name. Then one should instruct that these samaya vows be observed:

For the benefit of all sentient beings
and to protect the entirety of the teaching, through the practice free from conceptual thought,
all should act in whatever way is comfortable.

Then, in accordance with however many of the four signs are present, one should give accordingly, in keeping with the level of fortune. This is the maṇḍala of the great samaya.

Then, for the accomplishment practice: on cloth one should draw the Blessed One Vairocana smiling, and one should fully hold the fist mudrā of all the Tathāgatas. Everything else should be done in the manner of the maṇḍala of the great samaya. Then, in the same way, the supreme bodhisattva is to be accomplished, and likewise the supreme siddhis. Furthermore, on cloth one should draw the Blessed One alone, the hero; then, reciting one hundred thousand times before this image with vajra speech while fully holding the fist mudrā of gnosis, if one recites thus from the very first night, one will attain the Perfection of Wisdom, become a bodhisattva who has accomplished all siddhis, and from that point will become a Tathāgata.

Then, even without prior accomplishment practice, by the mere act of entering the maṇḍala the activities will be accomplished, as follows: for the offering to all the Tathāgatas, it is by presenting all the well-being of however many Tathāgatas there are. For the offering to all buddhas and bodhisattvas, it is by presenting oneself. For the offering to the Three Jewels, it is by the recitation of flowers and so forth. For the offering to all sentient beings, it is by the recitation of loving-kindness toward all. For the gathering of all phenomena, it is by reciting the four lines of the Perfection of Wisdom. For the taming of all māras, it is by firm and definitive recitation. For receiving the empowerment of all the Tathāgatas, it is by presenting all ornaments and binding oneself. For attaining all the natures of reality, it is by gazing at the vajra-lotus. For attaining the activity siddhi of all the Tathāgatas, it is through the supreme activity of all vajras. For the supreme attainment of buddhahood itself, it is by means of the great mudrā of the suchness of the gnosis-vajra fist.

This concludes the king of tantric meditations called "The Vajra Samaya of the Suchness of All Tathāgatas," from the Great King of Tantric Meditations of the Samaya of the Vajra of Great Bliss with Meaningful Purpose. This is the Tathāgata's tantra.

Then the Tathāgata Śākyamuni, the tamer of all who are untamed, spoke again this accomplishment of the Perfection of Wisdom called "The Victor's Gathering, Which Triumphs Through the Equality of All Phenomena." Through the very absence of conceptual elaboration of attachment, there is the absence of conceptual elaboration of aversion. Through the absence of conceptual elaboration of aversion, there is the absence of conceptual elaboration of delusion. Through the absence of conceptual elaboration of delusion, there is the absence of conceptual elaboration of all phenomena. Through the absence of conceptual elaboration of all phenomena, one should understand the Perfection of Wisdom to be the absence of all conceptual elaboration.

Vajrapāṇi, whoever hears, holds, reads, or meditates upon this method of the Perfection of Wisdom — even if that person were to slay all sentient beings born in the three realms by the power of taming them — will not be born in the lower destinies, and will swiftly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi, extensively teaching the meaning of this nature of reality, bound the mudrā of the meditative absorption known as "the Vajra Victorious over the Three Worlds," and with a wrathful furrowing of the brow, eyebrows raised, gazing with blazing lotus-face in fierce laughter, gnashing fangs, he remained in the posture of the right foot drawn up, and from that posture proclaimed this heart-essence known as the Vajra Hūṃ:

Hūṃ!

At the mere utterance of this, all the lords of the three worlds — beginning with Īśvara (Śiva), the Sovereign of Desire of the entire three-fold world — were properly summoned and caused to fall, then brought into the maṇḍala and made fully defeated, bound and brought under power, tamed and thoroughly tamed. Having been confounded and then bound with sacred pledges, the great sovereign lord of the three worlds, together with his consort, was pressed down and subdued beneath both feet.

Then those lords let out a great cry throughout all three worlds: "O great Vajradhara, protect us fully! Do not crush us! We take refuge in you here. We shall accomplish whatever sacred pledges and commands you give." All the mātṛkās likewise were tamed and bound with oaths, the maṇḍala was dispersed, all mudrās and sacred pledges were dissolved and shattered, all harmful spirits were repelled, and all illness, plague, harm, poison, and evil destinies were dissolved and shattered. Crying out with a great sound, and with words that terrify through great fear, they all went for refuge to the Blessed One himself.

The Blessed One then smiled openly, brought them into the maṇḍala, bound them with sacred pledges, and conferred empowerment with vajra and jewel. He consecrated their own emblems with the vajra, and furthermore conferred upon them the empowerment of vajra names. Then, for the benefit of all sentient beings without exception, he established them in the outer vajra family.

Next, from the Vajra of the Wrathful One, there emerged a being of vajra nature, resembling Vajrapāṇi himself, bearing various colors, ornaments, and weapons of many kinds, with transforming vajra fangs gnashing, lips pressed tight with great force, eyebrows impossibly fierce and wrathfully contracted, eyes and hair and topknot blazing, a terrifying face, bearing in hand vajra, iron hook, lasso, weapons, arrow, club, sword, khaṭvāṅga, long knife, and chopper — the great Wrathful One arisen from the Hūṃ. He remained in the form of the original maṇḍala of the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi.

Those gods and others were then consecrated by their own maṇḍalas and established in the outer maṇḍala. The harmful spirits and the rest remained in the outer ring of the maṇḍala.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata of all tathāgatas, entered meditative equipoise in the meditative absorption called "the Wrathful Vajra of the Method of Great Compassion," and proclaimed this great maṇḍala called "the Vajra Blessing, Victor over All Three Realms":

Now, what is to be properly explained:

The supreme vajra maṇḍala,
Known as the Victor over the Three Realms,
Which subdues and disciplines through great taming —
By the method of the first maṇḍala
The outer maṇḍala is to be drawn.
Its inner wheel
Corresponds to the eighth maṇḍala.
In its center, the great Wrathful One,
Vajrapāṇi, is to be placed,
Adorned with a garland of buddhas and so forth,
His hue resembling a blue utpala lotus —

His face bears slightly bared fangs, Wrathful yet with a laughing visage.
With his left leg extended he is beautifully seated,
Drawn together by the vajra hūṃ-mudrā.
His left foot presses down with excellence —
That activity belongs to the great Lord of Power.
His right hand is placed supremely
Upon the breast of the austerity-repeller.
Blazing with the radiance of interlocked flaming garlands,
The wrathful ones are to be established
Throughout the realms, including earth and the rest.

The wheel, too, that is blazing with interlocked flaming garlands —
The skilled one should draw it blazing with interlocked flaming garlands.

In the places of the outer maṇḍala,
In the assemblies of the outer maṇḍala,
The four symbols of the wrathful ones —
The bow, the arrow, the sword,
And likewise the wheel with three raised points —
Are to be drawn at every gate.

The spirits dwelling outside
Are filled with various tormas offerings,
And blue victory-banners are hung with bells,
Their peaks adorned with manifold colors.

Then, for those entering here: having wrapped all their limbs in a pair of blue cloths, and having been seized in a wrathful state with the vajra-pledge mudrā, they enter. The Blessed One then bestows consecration as master of the vajra family. From that point onward one is completely freed from sins and the like, and becomes able to cut down and benefit all who are inimical, unruly, obstinate, and all non-Buddhists (tīrthikas), victorious over everything, and all accomplishments are achieved.

Then the student is likewise admitted, the essence-mantra is given, and this is to be performed in all the maṇḍalas as well.

Next, presenting a blazing four-pointed sharp vajra, and conferring the vajra-name empowerment, one bestows the vajra conduct. The verse is:

This is the vajra of Vajrapāṇi,
The tamer of the vicious.
For the subduing of all who are unruly,
You too must always hold it fast.

Then it is to proceed in the same way: this is the vajra maṇḍala.

Then, for the practice: on cloth, making the Blessed One as the wrathful lord, and performing all the great bodhisattvas through the rite of the vajra maṇḍala, gods and mātrkāś are to be depicted in all directions. Then for the great practice likewise the same; and similarly for the supreme accomplishments, making the Blessed One on cloth exactly as he is, one forms the mudrā with both hands before him and recites one hundred thousand times.

Henceforth, with the syllable hūṃ alone, all worldly and supramundane activities are accomplished. Even without prior practice, all activities can be performed with a single recitation: attracting all, hooking, inserting, binding, releasing, subjugating, rendering mute, stupefying, deluding, causing sleeplessness, sealing, bringing down, striking, concealing, and healing — and so forth.

For destroying all: through the vajra wrathful one who brings an end.

For sealing all: through recitation with the wrathful glance.

For demolishing all: demolish with the wrathful vajra.

For definitively pressing down all: strike in that direction with the vajra and the wrathful one.

For curing all diseases: through the fine piercing vajra.

For extracting the hearts of all: extract through the wrathful mind.

For cutting down all who are vicious: rotate the vajra in wrath.

For fierce and wrathful necessities: through the iron-implement fire offering in wrath.

For annihilating all mārās: through the fire offering of one's own seed-syllable.

For expelling all yakṣas: by laughing "ha ha" and reciting.

For subjugating all nāgas: by striking with the vajra and reciting.

For causing all gods to fall: through the goddess Vajra-Feller.

For subjugating, taming, pressing down, slaying, and disciplining all lords of the gods: through the vajra that tames the three existences.

For making the son of Vaiśravaṇa follow in one's wake: press down upon the son of Vaiśravaṇa and recite wrathfully.

For pressing down evil bodies and scattering splendor: through the vajra hero.

For subjugating the gods of desire: recite wrathfully before the gods of desire.

For causing Brahmā to fall: through the mudrā of the greatly joyful vajra.

For destroying Viṣṇu: by splitting with the vajra wheel.

For taming the Great Lord (Śiva): by splitting with the vajra trident.

For slaying all the mātṛkā spirits: through the host of rākṣasī of the wrathful vajra.

For scattering and destroying the mudrās, sacred pledges, Dharma, and secret attainments of all outer maṇḍalas: through the fearsome sacred pledge of the malicious wrathful vajra.

For destroying mountains, trees, houses, temples, towns, stūpas, divine abodes, men, women, elephants, horses, and all else: by touching the eye with the gaze of the wrathful vajra.

For raising all downfalls: through the raising of the wrathful vajra.

For moving all things: through the yoginī of the wrathful vajra.

For scattering all things: by scattering with the fist of the wrathful vajra.
For generating all terrors: through the gaze of the wrathful vajra.
For slaying all armies: through the yakṣiṇī of the wrathful vajra.
For defeating, crushing, deluding, blinding, sealing, and slaying all armies of enemies: through the inauspicious rākṣasī of the wrathful vajra.
For slaying all great persons such as kings and the like: through the fire offering performed on the wood of the hollow tree using one's own blood.
For destroying all gods: by striking the images of all the gods with a kīla.
For burning all lords of the gods: through the fuel-wood of the images of all the gods.
For causing all lands to sink by releasing a stream of one's own blood: through the lower mudrā of the wrathful vajra.
For slaying all beings of the three realms: through the terrifying mudrā of the vajra.
For achieving complete victory over all three worlds: through the supreme wrathful vajra that is victorious over all three worlds.
For bringing down, hooking, inserting, subjugating, and definitively pressing down all three realms: through the wrathful mudrā of Vajrasattva.
For causing all three realms to become enamored, hooking them, inserting, binding, sealing, subjugating, pressing down, and accomplishing all: through the wrathful vajra of great bliss, the wrathful one of the vajra sacred pledge.

Here ends the great king of contemplations called "The Vajra Sacred Pledge of Victory over the Three Realms," from the great king of contemplations called "The Great Bliss Vajra Amogha Sacred Pledge." This is the contemplation of the Victorious One of the Three Worlds.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, having attained the pure essential nature of reality (dharmatā), further proclaimed this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom known as "The Wisdom Mudrā of Avalokiteśvara — the Sameness of All Phenomena":

Through the very purification of all attachment, all aversion in the world likewise becomes completely purified.

Through the complete purification of all defilements, all wickedness in the world likewise becomes completely purified. Through the complete purification of all phenomena, all sentient beings in the world likewise become completely purified. Through the complete purification of all knowing, the Perfection of Wisdom in the world likewise becomes completely purified.

Vajrapāṇi, whoever hears, holds, recites, and meditates upon this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom — even while dwelling amid all attachment and all defilements — will not be stained by the faults of attachment, by defilements, or by adventitious afflictions, just as a lotus is unstained. And they will swiftly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

Then the great bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara, the Sovereign of Sight, expounded this very meaning still more extensively, and with a radiant, wide smile — gazing upon the lotus as its petals open and it remains unstained by the defilements of attachment and the like — he proclaimed, for the sake of all beings, this essence called "The Lotus of Manifold Forms":

Hrīḥ.

And as soon as this was proclaimed, from that great lotus there arose all the reflected images of the Tathāgatas and the rest, having the form of a Blessed One, bearing the mark of the lotus, and they took up their places in the arrangement of the first maṇḍala of the Blessed One Avalokiteśvara, the Sovereign.

Then the Blessed One Avalokiteśvara, the Sovereign, entered the meditative absorption called "The Wisdom Mudrā of the Lord of Wisdom Who Beholds All Phenomena," and proclaimed this great maṇḍala called "The Taming of All Beings."

Within the second inner maṇḍala, proportionate to the outer maṇḍala, draw it likewise as a square, complete with gates and corner sections.

Then, having laid down four lines in the manner of an eightfold maṇḍala, draw an eight-petalled lotus in red pigment. In its center, place the Blessed One. In front of him, place the Blessed One Great Lotus of Passion, red in body color, holding the form of a lotus, bearing a great lotus together with arrow and bow. To his right, place the Blessed One Great Lotus, the Wrathful Sovereign, holding the form of the Great Lord. Behind him, place the Great Lotus holding the form of Viṣṇu, black in body color. To his left, place the Great Lotus, the Lord of Abhirati, holding the form of Brahmā, white in body color. At the right-hand corner interval, place the Great Lotus, the Holder of the Earth. At the second interval, place the Great Lotus holding the form of the ocean water deity. At the third, place the Great Lotus having the form of the sun. At the fourth, place the Great Lotus holding the form of wind.

At the corner intervals of the outer maṇḍala, place the four goddesses Śrī, Hrī, Gīti, and Dhī — each holding her own emblem in the right hand and a lotus in the left.

At the gates, place the emblems of attachment, aversion, delusion, and nirvāṇa respectively — that is to say, the form of a woman, the form of a serpent, the form of a pig, and the form of a lotus.

Then, having dressed in white garments and covered the face with white cloth, bind on the great mudrā of the great lotus together with a flower, enter, and cast the flower. Whichever deity's place it falls upon, that is the one to propitiate. Then take up the lotus, confer empowerment by empowering with the name of the lotus, and recite these words while gazing at the petals of the lotus:

Just as this red lotus is not stained by the fault of color but remains pure within the mud, so too with attachment, aversion, and the rest.
If one thus meditates upon phenomena,
the wise one, even while possessed of afflictions, will swiftly attain buddhahood itself, fully freed from all afflictions.

By contemplating this meditative absorption, one will attain lordship over all Tathāgatas. Thereupon the name "the Blessed One Avalokiteśvara" was conferred. From that point forward, all things pertaining to one's own being become utterly pure and auspicious, and all attainments will be experienced right up to the heart of awakening, and one will swiftly attain buddhahood. The elaborate ritual for introducing disciples is the same. This is the wisdom maṇḍala.

For accomplishment practice, in the same way, through two drawn-cloth images all attainments will be obtained. Then, for bringing all beings under one's sway without performing the full accomplishment, one should recite the lotus mantra one thousand times and bestow it. For the subjugation of all, one uses the wrathful mudrā of the great lotus. For bewildering all, one uses the great lotus of the sow. For purifying all afflictions, one uses the mudrā of the great meditative absorption of the great lotus named Clear Vision.

For becoming lord over all grounds, one sits in cross-legged posture upon the earth, performs one hundred thousand recitations, and at the conclusion recites throughout an entire night without interruption. For causing all waters to descend, one draws a nāga, sits upon it, and performs one hundred thousand recitations. For illuminating all, one uses the light of the great sun in the darkness. For summoning, sending forth, binding, and bringing all winds under control, one uses the supreme wind of the great lotus.

This concludes the great king of tantric discernment called "The Vow of Purifying All Afflictions," from the great king of tantric discernment called "The Vow of Meaningful Vajra of Great Bliss." It is the tantric discourse on taming beings.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata who is lord over all three realms, further explained this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom, called "The Essence of Wisdom," which has arisen from the empowerment of all Tathāgatas:

Bestowing empowerment causes one to obtain sovereignty over all three realms. Bestowing wealth causes all hopes to be completely fulfilled. Bestowing Dharma causes one to obtain the equality of all phenomena. Bestowing material goods causes one to obtain all the happiness of body, speech, and mind.

Then the bodhisattva, the great being Ākāśagarbha (Essence-of-Space), smiling radiantly, bound the garland of empowerment with precious vajras upon his own head, and while extensively demonstrating this very meaningful teaching, he spoke this essence called "The Precious Commitment of All Empowerments":

Trāṃ.

Then, by the mere utterance of these words, from that jewel of the Blessed One there arose all the implements and treasures pertaining to every empowerment and so forth, and the Blessed One remained in the form of a bodhisattva itself, in the manner of the primordial maṇḍala.

Then the Blessed One entered into meditative absorption named "The Precious Vajra of All Empowerments," and he spoke this maṇḍala called "The Precious Wish-Fulfilling Jewel Commitment," which fulfills all wishes.

The outer maṇḍala: within a construction made in the manner of the primordial maṇḍala, an eight-sided jewel rests upon eight jewel pillars in the arrangement of an eight-part maṇḍala, entirely encircled by jewel tendrils. One should draw it adorned with a precious vajra fence and battlements, and with garlands of flowers, banners, parasols, and fly-whisks.

In the center one should place the Blessed One seated upon a horse throne, binding himself with the empowerment garland, his face radiant and smiling, with the complexion of a young woman.

Before him one should place the bodhisattva known as "The Precious Empowerment of All Tathāgatas," holding a crown of precious vajra-jewel.

To the right one should place the one holding a great precious jewel staff, the treasure that bestows the wealth of the Great Precious One.

To the rear one should place the one holding a precious volume of the Great Dharma.

To the left one should place the one known as "Tasting the Great Precious," holding all food and drink.

In the corner intervals one should place the offering goddesses, holding precious parasols, victory banners, drums, and life-pillars.

At the outer boundary one places filled vases. At the gateways one should place the emblems of empowerment and so forth. The outside is to be thoroughly pervaded with parasols, victory banners, pennants, and streamers.

Then, having entered by holding the mudrā of vajra-jewel in the same manner, from that point onward one will attain all accomplishments (siddhi), beginning with the accomplishment of all wealth. And having thus entered, one binds the empowerment garland, takes up the jewel, and confers the empowerment of the jewel name; then, having offered all gifts, one withdraws again. The rite for introducing a student is likewise the same.

This is the Vajra-Jewel maṇḍala. The practices and accomplishments are likewise the same.

Now, to obtain all empowerments without performing the practice: this is through the empowerment garland of the vajra-jewel. To completely fulfill all wishes: this is by performing incalculable recitations each day at sunrise. To know the meaning of all phenomena: one should gaze into the stainless sky and recite. To obtain all food and drink and so forth, and to obtain all tastes: each day the Blessed One performed one thousand recitations, drawn from the sky according to one's heart's desire. To obtain the supremely lofty: one should hold a parasol and perform one hundred thousand recitations. To obtain great victory: this is through the supreme precious victory banner. To obtain great fame, great renown, and a great name: each day one recites while gazing in all directions. To obtain great lordship: this is through the mudrā of the precious life-pillar.

This concludes the great king of tantric investigation called "The Precious Commitment of All Empowerments," from the great king of tantric investigations of the Great Bliss, the Vajra of Meaningful Fulfillment, the commitment of investigation. This is the tantra of the Jewel family.

Then the Blessed One, who had obtained the wisdom seal (jñānamudrā) of all Tathāgatas, who holds the fist of all Tathāgatas — the Tathāgata Eternal — also explained this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom called "The Vajra: Blessed by the Wisdom Seal of All Tathāgatas."

Whoever fully holds the body-seal of all Tathāgatas will become all Tathāgatas themselves. Whoever fully holds the speech-seal of all Tathāgatas will obtain all phenomena. Whoever fully holds the mind-seal of all Tathāgatas will obtain all meditative absorptions. Whoever fully holds the vajra-seal of all Tathāgatas will obtain the supreme vajra accomplishment, making all body, speech, and mind into vajra.

Whoever hears this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom, whoever holds it, reads it, recites it aloud, or meditates upon it will obtain all accomplishments, all excellences, all knowledge, and all aims, and will make all body, speech, and mind into vajra. Having obtained the supreme vajra accomplishment, they will swiftly and fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

Then the great bodhisattva Vajra-Fist, fully holding the vajra mudrā of the great commitment, taught this matter extensively. Smiling radiantly, he spoke this essence called "The Commitment of the Accomplishment of All Vajra-Firm Mudrās." Āḥ.

Then, by the mere utterance of these words, the Blessed One Vajrasattva, with all mudrās, sealed all Tathāgatas and all sentient beings with the supreme accomplishment, making them Vajrasattvas themselves. The Blessed One Vajra-Fist, moreover, drew forth from the vajra of all body, speech, and mind the commitment-beings of all mudrās — the great mudrā and the rest — and they came to abide in the manner of the primordial maṇḍala.

Then the Blessed One, the bodhisattva Vajra-Fist, entered into meditative absorption called "The Vajra of the Wisdom Seal of All Tathāgatas," and proclaimed this great maṇḍala called "The Vajra Commitment of All Mudrās."

Draw the outer maṇḍala first with preparatory lines, and inside, draw the wheel with vajra guidelines. Likewise, in the center of that, lay out the eight inner maṇḍalas with lines. In the center, place the Blessed One Vajra-Fist with both hands forming the commitment mudrā and with a fully beaming countenance. In front of him is the one called Supreme Vajra Body, who holds the vajra in an embracing manner. To the right is the one called Vajra Tongue, holding the supreme vajra of the tongue. Behind is the one called Samādhi Vajra, who holds the vajra. To the left is the one called Vajra Vajra, holding it in an embrace. At the southeast corner is the one called Mudrā Fist; the second is called Jewel Fist; the third is called Dharma Fist; the fourth is called Action Fist. Each holds their own mudrā and attributes. At the gateways, draw the goddess-figures of the mudrās — Vajra Embracer and the rest.

Then, by fully holding the commitment mudrā and entering it oneself, one becomes the master of all mudrās. From that point forward, all accomplishments will be obtained through meaningful activity. As the sovereign of the wisdom of all mudrās, one will swiftly, ever so swiftly, fully awaken to unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening.

Having entered into that, one should receive the bound-mudrā empowerment from the Blessed One. Granting the vajra-name empowerment, one proclaims these words:

Joined like a reflection of the vajra of body, speech, and mind, proclaimed as "All Mudrās" —
the commitment that bestows all accomplishments.

The student who abides there is likewise so.

It is the maṇḍala of all mudrās.

The accomplishments and practices are likewise so.

The tasks not yet accomplished are likewise so as well.

For accomplishing the binding of all mudrās, one uses the Vajra-Fist at the heart. For accomplishing all mudrās, one uses the great vajra fist. For accomplishing all commitments, one uses the vajra wish-fist. For drawing all sentient beings with affection, one uses the fist of great vajra passion.

For bringing all under one's power, one uses the vajra-laugh fist. For binding all, one uses the vajra-bound fist. For restraining all, one uses the vajra-chain fist. For silencing all, one uses the vajra-murmur fist. For squeezing all, one uses the vajra-bound fist. For slaying all, one uses the vajra-wrathful fist. For devouring all, one uses the vajra-yakṣa fist. For destroying all, one uses the vajra-definite-squeeze fist. For splitting all, one uses the vajra-split fist. For causing all to descend, one uses the vajra-descent fist. For causing all to dance, one uses the vajra-dance fist. For causing all to speak, one uses the vajra-strike fist. For causing all to rise up, one uses the vajra-focus fist. For silencing and confusing the hosts of others' armies, one uses the great vajra-confusion fist. For liberating all mudrās, one uses the vajra-liberation fist. For destroying the mudrās of all vajra ḍākinīs, one uses the vajra fist of Hūṃkāra. For separating the mudrās of all malevolent ones, one uses the vajra fist of Hūṃkāra. For binding all mudrās, one uses the vajra fist. For making all mudrās into vajra, one uses the vajra fist. For sealing all, one uses the vajra-mother fist. For grinding all to powder, one uses the excellent vajra fist. For utterly destroying all, one uses the ferocious vajra fist. For destroying and completely vanquishing all, one uses the sovereign vajra fist. For dwelling and remaining within water, one uses the vajra-pressing fist. For displaying many forms, one uses the vajra fist of the manifold vajra. For the accomplishment of invisibility, one uses the invisible vajra fist. For the arising of moving and unmoving things, one uses the vajra-space fist. For the accomplishment of moving through the sky, one uses the vajra-bound fist. For the accomplishment of holding awareness, one uses the vajra-sword fist. For the accomplishment of making offering to all Tathāgatas, one uses the vajra-action fist. For accomplishing omniscience, one uses the vajra-wisdom fist. For the accomplishment of all wealth, one uses the vajra-wealth fist. For being master of all mudrās, one uses the vajra-mudrā fist. For the accomplishment of all karmic actions, one uses the all-vajra fist. For accomplishing all maṇḍalas, one uses the vajra-holder fist. For revealing the accomplishments of one's own past, future, and present, one uses the supreme vajra-hook fist. For becoming a vajra-holder oneself, one uses the vajra-pride fist. For becoming a buddha oneself, one uses the fist of the vajra of all Tathāgatas.

This concludes the great tantric king called the Commitment of All Mudrās through the Fist, drawn from the great tantric king of concepts called the Great Bliss Vajra Amogha Commitment. This is the chapter on the fist.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata in whom all phenomena are free of conceptual elaboration, again taught this method of the Perfection of Wisdom called Rotating Letters Like a Wheel. All phenomena are empty by way of being without essential nature. All phenomena are without characteristic mark by way of being without characteristic marks. All phenomena are without aspiration by way of being without aspiration.

Through the Perfection of Wisdom being utterly pure, all phenomena are luminous by intrinsic nature.

Then the Blessed One Mañjuśrī in youthful form extensively taught this very meaning, and with a smile, with that sword, impressed upon all the Tathāgatas, and proclaimed this supreme heart of the Perfection of Wisdom: A.

Then, by that very proclamation, all the Tathāgatas were gathered together and abided in the manner of the primordial maṇḍala.

Then Mañjuśrī in youthful form entered into meditative absorption called the Sword of Non-Elaboration, arising from the essential naturelessness of all phenomena, and proclaimed this maṇḍala called Rotating Letters Like a Wheel.

Within an outer maṇḍala of whatever size, draw a wheel, and upon it write in sequence the garland of letters beginning with A. Then draw the lines in the manner of the eightfold maṇḍala. At its center, place the Blessed One Mañjuśrī as a youth, bearing youthful appearance and smiling, sky-blue in color, with four hands, pressing with the sword upon all the Tathāgatas. In front of that and in the other directions, place the forms of the Tathāgatas. In the outer quadrants, place the four Perfections of Wisdom in whatever scriptural transmissions one has received. At the gates, place four emblems, namely: a sword, a lance, a begging bowl, and a book.

Then consecrate the ritual master with the mudrā of the sword and of the book in the same way. Then, taking up the sword, confer the empowerment by the name of the sword, bestowing the empowerment, and proclaim this Dharma in these words:

Always keep this sword in hand,
And speak according to this method of wisdom.
By applying it to the buddhas in the sky above,
Accomplishment will swiftly come to pass.
To protect the teaching of the buddhas
And to protect the multitude of sentient beings,
Slaying with this incurs no sin
And pure merit will be obtained as well.
For disciples also it is the same:

Through the accomplishments of the fully perfected Perfection of Wisdom,
They will swiftly manifest complete and perfect awakening
In unsurpassed, perfectly complete enlightenment.

This is the maṇḍala of Dharma. The practice is the same. Even without performing the practice, the activities will be accomplished in the same way:

For attaining the meditative absorption of emptiness, it is by meditating on the sky as all-pervading. For attaining the meditative absorption of signlessness, it is by meditating on the absorption free of signs. For attaining the meditative absorption of wishlessness, it is by meditating on wishlessness. For attaining the dharma-gnosis naturally luminous, it is by meditating on the Perfection of Wisdom. For cutting through all mental afflictions, it is by meditating on the Dharma. For attaining the gnosis of the definitive meaning of all letters, it is by meditating on the gnosis free of conceptual elaboration. For seeing in all situations the activity of Dharma performed by letters, it is by meditating on the essential nature of the letters beginning with A. For attaining the awakening of all Tathāgatas, it is through the mudrā of the vajra sword.

This concludes the chapter of the great tantric king called the Commitment of the Great Vehicle of Concept, the Great Bliss Vajra Amogha Commitment, entitled the Commitment of Rotating Letters Like a Great Wheel. This is the tantra of Mañjuśrī.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata gathered within the wheel of all Tathāgatas, again taught this method of the Perfection of Wisdom called Entering the Great Wheel.

Entering into the equality of vajra is entering into the wheel of all Tathāgatas. Entering into the equality of meaning is entering into the wheel of the great bodhisattvas. Entering into the equality of all phenomena is entering into the wheel of the sacred Dharma. Entering into the equality of all is entering into all wheels.

Then the bodhisattva, immediately upon generating the mind of awakening, turned the wheel of Dharma, extensively teaching this meaning of the nature of reality, and with countenance fully smiling, turned the vajra wheel. He then spoke this heart-essence called the Commitment of Entering All Vajra Wheels: HŪṂ.

As soon as this was spoken, all sentient beings of the three realms, possessing the essence of all Tathāgatas, entered into all maṇḍalas. From the mind of the Blessed One, the commitment beings of all maṇḍalas arose completely and abided just as they are in the manner of the maṇḍala.

Then the Blessed One entered into the meditative absorption called the Mudrā of Thoroughly Entering All Wheels of the Bodhisattva Vajra Wrathful One, and taught this wheel-maṇḍala called the Commitment of Entering All Great Maṇḍalas.

The outer maṇḍala is to be made just as it is. In the inner maṇḍala, the vajra wheel is to be drawn, and a rotating vajra wheel is to be placed in the center. All the bodhisattvas, beginning with Vajrapāṇi, are to be placed in every aspect in the manner of the first maṇḍala. At the outer boundaries, four maṇḍalas of the vajra family are to be drawn. At the gates, four emblems are to be placed, namely the form of Vajrasattva, the form of the Vajra Wrathful One, the form of Avalokiteśvara, and the form of Ākāśagarbha.

Then, through the mudrā of the vajra wheel, throughout all maṇḍalas, the attainment of buddhahood itself and vajra-holding itself will come to be accomplished.

Then the wheel is to be taken up and the empowerment of the name of the wheel is to be received, and one is to be introduced into the families of the four secret maṇḍalas upon which the lines have been drawn. The introduction of the disciple is likewise the same. This is the maṇḍala of the vajra wheel. The practice is likewise the same.

For entering into all maṇḍalas without practice, it is by means of the vajra wheel: it is to be placed by putting it into one's own mouth. For entering into the great maṇḍala, it is by means of the great vajra wheel. Likewise, for entering into the mudrā maṇḍala, it is by means of the wheel-mudrā of all Tathāgatas. Likewise, for entering into the commitment maṇḍala, it is by means of the wheel of the great commitment. For entering into the action maṇḍala, it is by means of the wheel of all vajras.

Likewise, for the activities of attraction, subjugation, obtaining aims, sealing, cutting, introducing, making offerings, and taming the ferocious, it is through the mudrās of the eight great bodhisattvas bearing wheels in their left hands.

This concludes the great tantric king called the Commitment of Concepts, the Great Bliss Vajra Amogha Commitment, namely the great royal tantra of concepts entitled the Vajra Commitment of All Maṇḍalas. This is the tantric chapter of the Vajra Wheel.

Then the Blessed One set forth this manner of the Perfection of Wisdom called the Elaborate Ritual of All Offerings to All Tathāgatas, the Supreme Among All Vessel Offerings.

The very act of generating the awakening mind is the elaborate ritual of offering to all Tathāgatas. The thorough protection of the entire realm of sentient beings is the elaborate ritual of offering to all Tathāgatas. The thorough upholding of the sacred Dharma is the elaborate ritual of offering to all Tathāgatas. Transcribing the Perfection of Wisdom, causing others to transcribe it, holding it, reading it, reciting it, teaching it, listening to it, reflecting on it, meditating on it, and making offerings to it — all of this is the elaborate ritual of offering to all Tathāgatas.

Then the great bodhisattva Ākāśagarbha, revealing that very meaning in full, smiled radiantly and spoke this heart-essence called the Meaningful Commitment of All Actions. Oṃ.

Then, by the mere utterance of this, the elaborate ritual of all offerings spread throughout the entirety of the sky, filling the realm of space without remainder. The Blessed One then dwelt in the manner of the great maṇḍala in the guise of the bodhisattva Ākāśagarbha. Thereupon, the bodhisattva Ākāśagarbha entered into the meditative absorption called the Blessing of the Elaborate Ritual of All Offerings, and proclaimed this maṇḍala called the Supreme Vajra Offering, the Meaningful Commitment.

As with the outer maṇḍala, so likewise within: eight columns of precious jewels are erected, and at the center the Blessed One is placed, bearing various weapons, with a smiling countenance, his body and limbs of a moonlike hue, adorned with the five colors and so forth. In all directions around him, the commitment beings are to be placed — namely, Vajrapāṇi, Lokeśvara, and the remaining eight bodhisattvas, holding the awakening mind, meditative absorption, empowerment, and mudrā, proclaiming emptiness, drawing the maṇḍala, performing all offerings, and thoroughly protecting all sentient beings. These are placed, exactly as they appear, in the manner of holding the peerless elaborate ritual of offering. At the outer cardinal directions, flowers and the like are placed; at the gateways, the four emblems — a staff, gold, pearls, and jewels — are set.

Then, through all these vajras, all offerings are obtained. One then enters, takes up the manifold vajra, and confers empowerment by means of the name of the manifold vajra. Having conferred empowerment, the fourfold offering is performed — that is, all actions of body, together with gesture, speech, mind, and consciousness, are elaborated into the dharmadhātu, and offering is made by means of all the elaborate rituals of offering; the offerings of vajra and mudrā are unified into one. The rite of introducing disciples is likewise performed in this way. This is the action maṇḍala.

The accomplishment practices and the siddhis are likewise performed in the same way.

Even without performing the formal sādhana, for the offering of awakening mind, one meditates on the vajra at one's own heart. For the offering of meditative absorption, one meditates on everything as pure. For the offering of empowerment, it is through the various vajra empowerments. For the offering of mudrā, it is through all the manifold vajras. For the offering of emptiness, it is through the scriptural authorization of the syllable A and so forth. For the offering of the maṇḍala, it is through the various vajra wheels. For all offerings, it is through the manifold vajra. For the offering of taming the ferocious, it is through the wrathful ones.

For the offering of flowers and so forth, it is through recitation.

Here ends the Great Royal Tantra of Intention called "The Samaya of the Vajra of Definite Accomplishment of Great Bliss," the Great Royal Tantra of Intention called "The Samaya of the Manifold Vajra of Definite Accomplishment." This is the tantra of intention of Ākāśagarbha.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata who is able to tame all the ferocious, once again taught this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom called "Essence of Wisdom: the Taming of All Sentient Beings Through the Complete Grasping of the Fist of Wisdom." Because all sentient beings are equality, wrathfulness is equality. Because all sentient beings are tamed, wrathfulness is tamed. Because all sentient beings are the nature of reality, wrathfulness is the nature of reality. Because all sentient beings are vajra, wrathfulness is vajra. Why is this so? Because the taming of all sentient beings is awakening itself.

Then the bodhisattva who utterly vanquishes all the powers of Māra, in order to teach that very meaning extensively, smiled radiantly and, with the mudrā of the vajra fang and in the form of a vajra yakṣa, spoke this essence called "The Laughter of the Vajra Wrathful One." The syllable Ṇya.

Then, as soon as this was spoken, the bodhisattvas who tame all the ferocious arose from the mind of the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi and took their places in the manner of the primordial maṇḍala. Then the bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi, entering the meditative absorption called "Wrathful Vajra: Taming Through All Skillful Means," proclaimed this yakṣa maṇḍala called "Vajra: the Taming and Blessing of All the Ferocious."

In the mode of an outer maṇḍala, draw the outer maṇḍala. Within it, in the inner arrangement, draw a fine, square maṇḍala with four gates, endowed with four measuring lines, depicted in five colors. With eight pillars standing in the fore, it is fully endowed with a blazing maṇḍala. In its center, place, as is fitting, a vajra yakṣa: with fangs biting down in vajra fashion, with the radiance of a tangled garland of flames, with a terrifying blue complexion, and with a face clearly laughing "Ha Ha!" All around it, place extremely fearsome yakṣas. The foremost of these and the rest bear the names of Vajrapāṇi and so forth. At the borders of the outer maṇḍala, draw the fang mudrā. At every position of the gates, place the vajra emblems.

Then, when one enters and so forth, having entered with the vajra fang mudrā and the laugh "Ha Ha!," one will become able to tame all the ferocious and will swiftly attain the state of Vajradhara itself. Then, having entered, one takes up the vajra fang, confers empowerment with the vajra name, and presses the vajra into the yakṣa itself. Then from the mouth of the vajra yakṣa there will arise the sound called "Ha Ha!" Then it should be known that the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, has accomplished all protection through the wrathful identity of Vajrapāṇi, the lord of yakṣas.

Then all the mudrās are to be bound and practiced. Thereafter, having made offerings and fully satisfied in the same way, one recites this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom once and then withdraws. Likewise, the detailed rites of binding the mudrās and the rest are to be performed in all the maṇḍalas beginning with the first. This is the maṇḍala of Vajrapāṇi. The sādhana practice and the spiritual attainments are likewise the same. Without performing the sādhana, it is also just as at the outset.

For taming all the vicious, the mudrā of Vajra-Tusk is employed. For taming all sentient beings, one tames them through wrathful laughter, uttering "Ha ha!" For causing those who have fallen from the detachment of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas to undergo transgression, the fire offering of the Dharma robe and patched cloth is used. For dispelling all empowerments, the fire offering of the powder of all the elements is used. For sealing all things, the mudrā of the vajra fist is employed. For cutting off all things, an image is made and then stabbed. For completely destroying the maṇḍala of all the unruly, one takes up the vajra and proceeds. For completely destroying all offerings, one recites with wrathful fury. For causing all to be terrified, one gazes upon them with the fierce gaze.

This completes the great king of tantric texts called Vajra Samaya, from the great king of tantric texts called the Samaya of Great Bliss, Vajra with Meaningful Accomplishment. This is the tantra of Vajra the Yakṣa.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, abiding in the sameness of all phenomena, again taught this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom called the Supreme of All Phenomena. Since all phenomena are sameness, the Perfection of Wisdom is sameness. Since all are the very aim, the Perfection of Wisdom is the very aim. Since all are the very aim, the Perfection of Wisdom is the very aim. Since all are the very action, the Perfection of Wisdom is to be understood as the very action.

Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi entered into the meditative absorption called the Maṇḍala of Consecration of the Samaya of Meaningful Accomplishment for all Tathāgatas and all bodhisattvas, and uttered this heart-essence called the Samaya of All Meaningful Accomplishment: Hūṃ. Then by the mere utterance of this, all the Tathāgatas and the rest, along with all the maṇḍalas, arose from the heart and entered into that great vajra maṇḍala of the suchness of samaya. Then Vajrapāṇi bowed reverently at the two feet of the Blessed One and proclaimed this great samaya maṇḍala.

Draw the great maṇḍala, and in the eight sites of the maṇḍala place separately the maṇḍalas such as Vajra Victorious over the Three Realms and the rest. Then the Blessed One Vajrapāṇi entered into the meditative absorption called the Vajra Consecration of All Samayas, and proclaimed this maṇḍala called the Vajra of All Samayas. Draw an outer maṇḍala in the form of a great maṇḍala, and in its center draw a vajra wheel, and in the sites of the wheel draw the great maṇḍala and the rest. For all of them, draw the grid of the eightfold maṇḍala, and the great bodhisattvas are to be placed. In the outer maṇḍala, the outer vajra family members are to be drawn in correspondence as appropriate. At the gates, the emblems of the four families are to be placed. Then all the maṇḍala rites are to be elaborated in the manner of the great vajra maṇḍala of the suchness of the great samaya.

This completes the great king of tantric texts called the Samaya of All Bliss, from the great king of tantric texts called the Samaya of the Suchness of the Vajra of the Great Samaya. This is the tantra of the Collected Families.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata Vairocana, again taught this mode of the Perfection of Wisdom called the Consecration of All Sentient Beings. Since the great bodhisattva Samantabhadra is the intrinsic nature of all things, all sentient beings possess the tathāgatagarbha (buddha-nature). Since all have been empowered through the vajra essence, all sentient beings possess the vajra essence. Since all speech has gone forth into renunciation, all sentient beings possess the Dharma essence. Since engagement in the activities performed for all sentient beings is applied to them, all sentient beings possess the karma essence.

Then the outer vajra families (the vajra clans arrayed beyond the center) raised a clanging sound and extensively displayed the meaning of the nature of reality, and presented the essence. Then the great Lord of the Vajra presented this essence of his own suchness: Tṛ.

Now the maṇḍala shall be described. It is a great maṇḍala, perfectly circular, with three lines, having four gates; at each corner a trident shall be drawn. In the center, the Great Lord shall be depicted. On all the sides the eight assembled ones shall be drawn, that is to say: the Great Black One, the Joyous Lord, the Great Bell, and the Lord of Dance are placed at the cardinal directions. At the corners are: the Auspicious Skull, the Lord of Ferocity, the one bearing the khaṭvāṅga staff, and the Lord with Bull's Ears. At the intervals between the lines, all the hosts of the spirit-mothers shall be drawn in their proper positions. At the gates are: the Lord of Clubs, the Lord of Heads, the Tinkling Bell, and the Great Fierce One. On the outside, spirits and syllables shall be drawn.

Then the master, having bathed his body with pure ashes and donned clean robes, shall place the mark of the trident. Having entered, he shall recite the essence. Then the disciple likewise shall be brought in, the trident placed in his hand, and the Dharma shall be taught:

For the benefit of all sentient beings,
and to protect all the teachings,
and to be the master of all desires, remain engaged in wrathful activity.

Then, having trained in the wisdom of mudrā, the ritual cake shall be offered. From that point onward, fearlessly experiencing all attainments (siddhi), all excellent happiness, and all mental ease, one becomes an object of worship in the wrathful world. The great maṇḍala of the peaceful short lance is called the Mark.

Then all the spirit-mothers bowed to the Blessed One and, in one voice, presented this essence of their own suchness called the samaya of hooking, inserting, slaying, and accomplishing all at the outset: Bhyo.

Now this maṇḍala shall be described. It is a square maṇḍala with four corners, having a gate to the north, drawn with lines. In the center, the Great Black One in the act of dancing shall be placed. In the cardinal directions and at the corners, eight spirit-mothers shall be drawn, namely: the Fierce One, the Brahma-woman, the Viṣṇu-woman, the Young Woman, the Black One, the Great Black One, the Flesh-Eater, and the Demoness. At the outer corners of the maṇḍala, four wrathful ḍākinīs shall be drawn: the Peaceful One, Veruṇḍā, the Fierce One, and the Terrifying One. Their symbols are: the trident, the garland, the wheel, the bell, the skull with blood, the staff with rattling rings, the fang, and the khaṭvāṅga staff. The gate-guardians have: the skull, a chain of bones, the vulture, and the cat.

Then the master of the mudrā, who is pure in his Dharma conduct and dressed in clean robes, who is above reproach whether he eats all things or makes use of all things, shall enter with the mudrā of the peaceful messenger and recite the essence. Then from the center of the maṇḍala a great Bhyo shall be heard. Then all others, apart from the master, shall enter and receive whatever has come to be obtained there, with the exception of the malefic samaya. Then the disciple, holding flowers in hand, with his eyes covered by a cloth, shall be introduced with the mudrā of the Great Black One, and the great samaya "Bhyo" is spoken into the ear. Then, startled, the disciple drops the flowers. Wherever they fall, that deity is to be propitiated as the disciple's supreme deity. Even if the flowers do not fall naturally, they are still to be let fall deliberately. From that point on, one becomes capable of inspiring awe, and each yogic attainment will be individually obtained. Then the cloth covering the eyes is removed and the maṇḍala is revealed.

Having made offerings with the mudrās of incense and so forth, the essence and the individual emblems are to be bestowed. Then the samaya is to be taught:

Sealed are all sentient beings,
and those who violate the samaya are to be consumed.
The mantras are not to be revealed — the samaya grants the accomplishment of yoga.

The fierce samaya, with its spear-point and the seal of the Mātṛs:
if you transgress it, your heart will be shattered forever.

From this moment forward, whoever consumes the great flesh will, before long, attain yogic accomplishment. Whoever refuses to consume it will have no spiritual attainment. And if the samaya is not transgressed, not even the entire assembly will be slain.

The wisdom of the mudrās is to be trained in. Having performed the dance of the mudrās and made offerings, one is to present the torma (ritual offering cake), and having satisfied all with food, drink, enjoyment, and the like, one then departs.

This is the maṇḍala of the mudrā called "the samaya of all attainments."

Then, with the three fingers used in making honey and so forth, one pays homage to the Blessed One and in a single voice presents this essence of one's own suchness: Svā. Then the maṇḍala of this is to be described:

An outer maṇḍala is to be drawn with four corners and four gates.
Within it, an inner maṇḍala is to be drawn in the shape of a bow.
In the center of that, the three fingers and the three supreme ones are to be placed.

The honey-maker, the victory-maker, and likewise all their objects —
this is called the one who accomplishes.

Clad in armor, adorned with ornaments,
holding a skull as emblem,
wearing divine garments and garlands, smiling slightly and wrathful,
seated upon a lion throne, resplendent with a maṇḍala of light — granting all attainments, perfectly pure,

the three are like the three supreme existences.
At the gates and in all the directions, assemblies and the rest are well arrayed.

The accomplisher, the greatly increasing yakṣa,
the fierce one, the supreme wrathful one, the slayer.

On the outer tips of the banner-posts, bells and garlands everywhere;
filled vessels together with the supreme flesh;
tormas along with all spirits without exception.
Songs are to be sung,
music is to be played,
and likewise the master performs the dance,
entering with all the mudrās.

Having entered, with faith in the practice,
one bows again and again,
and with offerings of all flowers recites the accomplishment and the suchness itself.

The three worlds, the three supreme existences, the three lower destinies, the three offerings, the three forms — accomplished through the auspicious hidden one:
always so for all attainments.

Then, reciting the essence once, one hooks with the index finger of the right hand of all the mudrās bent into a hook and draws inward. Then the garlands fitted with bells are shaken. All are brought down and introduced in the same way. Then this samaya is to be recited:

If the samaya is transgressed, you will go to the destiny of one who has slain a father, or to the destiny of one who has slain a mother —
to that very destiny you will go.

Always rely upon the holy.
Completely abandon what is not holy.
Do not reveal the suchness to others.
Always practice the three fingers.

This is the samaya.

Then one is to celebrate with song, dance, music, laughter, joy, eating, and delight. Mudrā and dance and outer musical offerings having been performed, the master departs together with those mudrās, and the wisdom that is to arise is to be declared. From that point on, all attainments, all excellences, and all prosperities will be accomplished. This is the samaya maṇḍala.

Then the consort, having been received, prostrates to the Blessed One and offers this, the essence of her own suchness: Hūṃ.

Now the maṇḍala of this is to be explained. Draw a circle around the entire maṇḍala, and at the four lines make four wheels. In those maṇḍalas, at the four gates, place the images of four goddesses who gaze outward, as follows. Gaiety looks to the east, striving with bow and arrow in hand, red in color. Slayer looks to the south, holding a sword and shield in hand, black in color. Sow looks to the west, holding a golden treasury in hand, golden in color. Accomplisher, called the Pacifier, looks to the north, holding a knife and flesh in hand, white in color. At the four outer gates, the symbolic emblems are to be placed.

Then the master, ringing the bell and entering with the left hand accompanied by the khaṭvāṅga, enters and recites the essence mantra. Then the offering of mudrā and dance is to be taught. From that point on, all attainments desired by the mind will be bestowed. All will be worshipped. One will be invulnerable to all spirits including ḍākinīs. This will also generate wealth. One will satisfy every desire that is wished for, draw forth all treasures, and become capable of accomplishing all attainments. The introduction of a student is the same. All of those and all of these will be accomplished. This is the karma maṇḍala.

From the Great King of Tantric Chapters of the Samaya of Great Bliss Vajra Amogha, the chapter on the outer Vajra Family is complete. This is the chapter on the four maṇḍalas of the outer Vajra Family.

Then the Blessed One, the Tathāgata, endowed with qualities that are boundless, limitless, and ultimate, in order to utterly consecrate this ritual to its culmination, taught this method of the Perfection of Wisdom, called Consecration Vajra, which is the culmination of the sameness of all phenomena.

Because the Perfection of Wisdom is itself boundless, all Tathāgatas are themselves boundless. Because the Perfection of Wisdom is itself limitless, all vajras are themselves limitless. Because the Perfection of Wisdom is itself manifold, all phenomena are themselves manifold. Because the Perfection of Wisdom is itself without culmination, all actions are themselves without culmination.

Whoever hears, retains, reads, teaches, proclaims, and meditates upon this method of the Perfection of Wisdom, having reached the inexhaustible culmination of the conduct of buddhas and bodhisattvas, and having exhausted all obscurations, will swiftly become a Tathāgata or a Vajradhāra.

Then all the Tathāgatas assembled and, in order to swiftly accomplish this enumeration of Dharma as meaningful and unobstructed, gave their approval to Vajrapāṇi, saying "Excellent!" In verse:

Excellent, excellent, great being!
Excellent, excellent, great bliss!
Excellent, excellent, Great Vehicle!
Excellent, excellent, great wisdom!

This ritual has been well spoken.
By all buddhas and Vajradhāras,
this vajra sūtra — supreme in discipline, fruitful in result — has been consecrated.

It is the peerless king of rituals.
Those who hold to these teachings — no māra nor any other force shall prevail against them or harm them.

All buddhas and bodhisattvas, and every supreme spiritual attainment — just as all the buddhas have declared, they shall be swiftly and unobstructedly obtained.

Having thus spoken, in order to accomplish the secret, Vajrapāṇi's teaching was
by all the supreme buddhas and the sky-dwellers, praised and extolled with full approval.

This completes the chapter on the Perfection of Wisdom from the Great King of Tantras of the Samaya of Great Bliss, Vajra, and Meaningful Accomplishment.

Translated by the Indian preceptor, the Ācārya Śraddhākaravaman, and the great editor

Translator's Notes

- The Sanskrit title preserved in the colophon, Śrī Paramādi Nāma Mahāyāna Kalārāja, reconstructs most naturally as "The Glorious Primordial, a text called the King of Kalā of the Great Vehicle." The term Kalārāja is unusual; "King of Conceptual Elaboration" renders the Tibetan ཀལ་རཾ་རཾ་ཀལ་རཾ་རཾ་, which is the translator's rendering of Kalārāja in this context. The Sanskrit kalā can mean "part, digit, fraction, or art," and the relationship between kalā and Tibetan ཀལ་རཾ་རཾ་ is itself an interpretive choice in the Tibetan translation tradition. The Tibetan title "Glorious Primordial" renders ཀལ་རཾ་རཾ་ཀལ་རཾ་རཾ་ as a proper name of the tantra.

The series of "pure abodes" in the final section presents a deliberately paradoxical structure in which afflicted states — attachment, craving, pride, the bond of the beloved — are identified as the bodhisattva's pure abode. This is characteristic of the antinomian rhetoric found in certain Mahāyāna and proto-tantric texts, where afflictions are not suppressed but recognized as the very locus of the path.

- The passage lists an unusual threefold obscuration scheme alongside the standard two: cognitive obscuration, afflictive obscuration, and "Dharma obscuration" plus "great karmic obscuration." The "Dharma obscuration" here may refer to a textual variant or a tantric-specific enumeration distinct from the standard twofold Madhyamaka schema; this is worth noting for doctrinal comparison.

The phrase rendered "the sixteen qualities of a great bodhisattva" refers to a specific tantric enumeration not elaborated here in the text; the number sixteen is explicit in the Tibetan.

The final verse section begins mid-sentence in the Tibetan and the translation reflects this, ending at the break point as given in the source passage.

- The figure "Vajra Kīlikīla" renders the Tibetan phonetic transcription of a Sanskrit name (kīlakīla or kīlikīla), which may refer to a specific wrathful deity of the vajra family associated with binding or pinning; the precise iconographic identification varies across commentarial traditions.

The phrase rendered "even if there are faults along the path of all commitments, they will not be diminished or broken" is a notably strong claim about the ācārya's soteriological immunity. The Tibetan is unambiguous, but the doctrine is consequential: full entry into this maṇḍala and its empowerment is said to confer an irreversibility even where samaya infractions occur.

The final sentence of the prose passage is left syntactically open (ending mid-clause with "having been invoked, bound by commitment, and brought under dominion"), faithfully reflecting that the Tibetan passage itself is incomplete here and continues in the next section.

- The phrase rendered "anoints his face with perfume" translates a Tibetan compound that could also mean "applies scented paste to the face" — a common tantric offering gesture; the rendering is unproblematic in either reading. The passage "the hero's vajra is offered to the Blessed One" refers to the ritualized presentation of the vīra-vajra as part of the empowerment sequence; "hero" here is a standard honorific for the adept. The final list of honored persons follows a formulaic Sanskrit-derived sequence common in tantric feast contexts.

- The phrase rendered "making sounds of joy with Vajrasattva" translates a term suggesting erotic or intimate embrace accompanied with vocalization, consistent with the tantric context of union practice described throughout this passage. The clause is kept at its doctrinal face value rather than euphemized or over-explained.

The activities listed in the final portion — paralyzing, causing drowsiness, confusing, slaying — are the classical set of tantric "wrathful" or "fierce" actions (Skt. abhicāra), here presented alongside pacifying and magnetizing activities, which is standard in this genre of ritual literature.

- The term rendered "zombies" translates a word meaning a corpse that has been reanimated, a classical Indian concept sometimes described as a vampire-like animated corpse used in ritual contexts. The translation "zombie" is used for intelligibility in a spoken context, though "animated corpse" would be more literally precise.

The word rendered "animated mechanical contrivances" refers to magically or mechanically animated constructs, a category of ritual-technological objects known in tantric and Indian magical literature; the precise referent is somewhat uncertain.

The "lord of the assembly" is a standard epithet of Gaṇapati or a wrathful deity presiding over spirit-hosts; the precise deity intended here is not entirely certain from context alone.

- The phrase rendered "suppressing and angering the Great God" translates lha chen po mnan nas khros pas, referring to the tantric ritual subjugation of Maheśvara (Śiva); "the Great God" here follows from the established gloss in the preceding passage. The compound rdo rje bsnnyems pa'i lcags kyu, rendered "iron hook of vajra pride," is a standard tantric implement-mudrā name; bsnyems pa carries the sense of dignified bearing or self-possessed pride as a quality of the deity. The word pra sen (rendered "divination mirrors") in pra se na thams cad refers to a scrying or divination medium, likely a reflective surface used in mirror divination; the Sanskrit loanword prasena is used in Indian tantric contexts for this practice.
- The phrase rendered "holding the gesture of the wisdom fist" translates "ye shes kyi khu tshur yongs su 'dzin pa," referring to the mudrā known as the jñānamuṣṭi or "wisdom fist," a specific hand gesture in which the index finger of the left hand is enclosed by the right fist — a distinctive Vairocana iconographic attribute here used narratively.

The colophon-like sentence ending "this is the reflection of the vajra bodhisattva" closes the preceding section-chapter before a new section begins with Vairocana's teaching; the structural transition is preserved as written.

The final sentence is syntactically incomplete in the Tibetan as given, ending mid-construction; the translation renders it faithfully as a clause continuing into what follows.

- The phrase rendered "by the power of taming them" glosses the Tibetan "by the power of the dominion of taming," meaning the act of slaying is reinterpreted as a form of subjugating or liberating sentient beings through the tantric power of this practice — a standard antinomial hyperbole in tantric literature signifying that even such an extreme act, performed within the context of this practice's transformative force, does not produce negative rebirth.

The title "Vajra of Great Bliss with Meaningful Purpose" renders the Tibetan epithet that likely corresponds to a Sanskrit compound along the lines of Mahāsukhavajrāmoghasamaya; the precise Sanskrit reconstruction is uncertain.

- The passage describes a dramatic subjugation rite in which Vajrapāṇi subdues Maheśvara (here called Īśvara, literally "the Sovereign," a name of Śiva) and the lords of the three worlds. This is a well-known narrative in the Vajrayana corpus and is treated here with full tantric register.

The term rendered "mātṛkās" (Tibetan: རྒྱུ་མཚན་) refers to a class of fierce female spirits or mother-goddesses. The rendering preserves the Sanskrit for precision, as the Tibetan term is a calque.

The phrase "eighth maṇḍala" likely refers to a specific numbered maṇḍala within the larger ritual system of the text; without access to the full ritual context, its precise referent cannot be determined here.

- The phrase rendered "austerity-repeller" translates a feminine figure associated with the defeat or reversal of ascetic practice; this is a deity or figure whose precise identity in this tantric system is not entirely transparent from the text alone, and the phrase is accordingly rendered descriptively rather than as a proper name.

The passage moves fluidly between verse and ritual prose; the transitions have been rendered accordingly, with verse portions set as verse lines and prose instructions as flowing paragraphs.

- The term rendered "hollow tree" for མཆོག་མཆོག་མཆོག་ is a specific ritual material; it refers to a tree that is hollow or dry inside, used as fuel in wrathful fire offerings. The precise identification of the species or type varies by commentarial tradition.

The phrase མཆོག་མཆོག་མཆོག་མཆོག་མཆོག་, literally "great king of contemplations" or "great king of discursive procedures," is a standard tantric formula for a chapter or section title within a larger tantra. The term མཆོག་མཆོག་ here carries the sense of a ritual-doctrinal elaboration or chapter rather than ordinary conceptual thought.

- The four goddess names Śrī, Hrī, Gīti, and Dhī are transliterated from what appears to be Sanskrit names rendered phonetically in Tibetan as མཆོག་མཆོག་མཆོག་མཆོག་. The reading "Gīti" and "Dhī" involve some uncertainty in the precise Sanskrit reconstruction, though the sequence likely follows a standard set of offering goddesses.

The passage ends mid-verse, as the source text itself breaks off at that point. This is not a translation omission but a genuine break in the supplied passage.

- The phrase rendered "the great lotus of the sow" likely refers to a mudrā associated with Vārāhī or a sow-faced form of the great lotus deity; the text is terse and the precise ritual referent is unclear, though the translation follows the literal Tibetan.

The title "Essence-of-Space" for Ākāśagarbha is retained from the preceding context as established.

- The phrase rendered as "the Tathāgata Eternal" translates "de bzhin gshegs pa rtag pa," which likely refers to a specific tantric buddha-figure whose name means "the Eternal Tathāgata." This is an unusual construction but follows the syntax naturally; it may alternatively be read as a participial description of the Blessed One himself as "the ever-present Tathāgata," though the former reading is more consistent with the register of the text.

The phrase "great king of tantric investigations" renders "rtog pa'i rgyal po chen po," a standard tantric colophon formula. "Rtog pa" here means tantric inquiry or investigation in the sense of the Sanskrit vicāra or vikalpa as used in tantra titles, not ordinary conceptual thought.

The passage ends mid-sentence, reflecting the supplied excerpt only.

- The passage is a ritual-prescriptive text describing a maṇḍala layout and empowerment procedure. The figure-names — Vajra Body, Vajra Tongue, Samādhi Vajra, Mudrā Fist, Jewel Fist, Dharma Fist, Action Fist, Vajra Embracer — are technical deity-names rendered literally from the Tibetan; they correspond to deities of the Vajradhātu-type maṇḍala system. The term rendered "commitment-beings" translates the standard Vajrayāna distinction between wisdom-beings (jñānasattva) and commitment-beings (samayasattva); the latter are the visualized or iconographic forms drawn forth in the ritual.

- The term rendered "vajra-murmur fist" translates མཆོག་མཆོག་མཆོག་, which is onomatopoeic or reduplicative and suggests a hushed or inarticulate muttering; the exact technical significance is uncertain. The expression "vajra-confusion fist" renders རྡོ་རྗེ་མཆོག་གི་ཁྲི་ལྗོངས་ཀྱི་ཁྲི་ལྗོངས་, where ཁྲི་ལྗོངས་ can mean to confuse, scatter, or bewilder; "confusion" is adopted here for consistency with the preceding passage's use of "confusing." The colophon-like sentence naming the text as drawn from the "Great Bliss Vajra Amogha Commitment" is treated as a chapter-closing formula rather than a scribal colophon, which is consistent with the genre. The closing transition into a Perfection of Wisdom passage on the three doors of liberation — emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness — represents a distinct new section of the larger tantra.

- The verse line "nam mkhar sangs rgyas sbyor ba yis" is somewhat compressed. The rendering "by applying it to the buddhas in the sky above" follows the most natural reading in context, where the sword is wielded in a sky-direction gesture toward the assembled buddhas as in the preceding ritual action. An alternative reading would be "by joining it in union with the buddhas in the sky," suggesting a tantric union of wisdom-sword and buddha-forms, but the contextual reading is preferred.

The phrase "འཁྲུག་པའི་ལྗོངས་ཀྱི་ཁྲི་ལྗོངས་ཀྱི་ཁྲི་ལྗོངས་" literally means "killing with this will not become sinful." This is a doctrinally significant claim: the sword used in this ritual context, employed to protect the Dharma and sentient beings, does not generate negative karma. This antinomian logic is characteristic of tantric literature and is rendered straightforwardly without editorial comment in the body.

- The phrase rendered "placing it into one's own mouth" translates the Tibetan literally and refers to a ritual insertion of the vajra wheel into the mouth of an uninitiated practitioner as a substitute for full maṇḍala entry, a procedure attested in related Yoga-tantra ritual literature. The precise procedural context remains somewhat opaque without a commentary.

The figure "Vajra Wrathful One" renders rdo rje khro bo, which may refer to Vajrakrodha, a specific wrathful deity in this maṇḍala system, or function as a generic epithet; no Sanskrit equivalent is supplied in the text.

- The phrase rendered "the realm of sentient beings" translates རྣམ་ཐོས་ཀྱི་ཁྲི་ལྗོངས་, literally "the entire constituent/realm of sentient beings," which in this context means the totality of living beings rather than a cosmological realm.

The phrase རྡོ་རྗེ་འཁོར་ལོ་ལྔ་པ་, literally "Lord of the World," is a standard epithet of Avalokiteśvara (Lokeśvara); it is rendered here as Lokeśvara to maintain consistency with the tantric register without doubling as Avalokiteśvara, since the text lists him as a separate figure alongside Vajrapāṇi among the eight bodhisattvas.

- The phrase rendered "The Blessed One, the Tathāgata, has accomplished all protection through the wrathful identity of Vajrapāṇi, the lord of yakṣas" is densely compressed in the original. The passage states that the Blessed One Tathāgata, as the guardian of all, is to be understood as having accomplished identity with the wrathful Vajrapāṇi, lord of yakṣas. The reading "accomplished all protection" follows the compound srungs ba po, "protector of all."

The section colophon identifying this as "the tantra of intention of Ākāśagarbha" reflects the larger text-cycle of which this chapter forms a part.

- The passage contains a repeated sentence in the original Tibetan text, "Since all are the very aim, the Perfection of Wisdom is the very aim," appearing twice in succession. This appears to be a scribal dittography in the source, but it has been retained faithfully as given.

The term rendered "Vajra-Tusk" is a literal reading of rdorje mche ba, a wrathful deity form. The rendering "Vajra with Meaningful Accomplishment" throughout corresponds to the tantric epithet don yod pa, equivalent to Sanskrit Amogha, meaning "unerring" or "unfailing in its aim," here left as a descriptive phrase to suit the TTS context.

- The epithets of the eight assembly members (Great Black One, Joyous Lord, Great Bell, Lord

• The passage "谁食大肉" literally means "whoever eats the great flesh," referring to the ritual consumption of meat in tantric feast practice. The identity of "the three fingers" throughout the passage, used both as a ritual gesture and as a metonym for the Three Jewels placed at the center of the maṇḍala, carries deliberate doctrinal ambiguity that the text does not resolve.

• The four goddesses named in the maṇḍala description — Gaiety, Slayer, Sow, and Accomplisher or Pacifier — are technical names of Tantric gate-guardians. The Tibetan terms are dGa'-ba-mo, gSod-ma, Phag-mo, and Grub-pa-mo / Zhi-ba-mo respectively. "Sow" (Phag-mo) is a well-known Tantric deity name usually left in Tibetan or Sanskrit (Vajravārāhī-related); it is rendered here literally as the text treats it as a descriptive name within the list.

- The final lines are a colophon. "Sky-dwellers" renders mkha' bcas pa, referring to the assembly of celestial beings present, a standard colophon formula grouping buddhas and sky-dwelling deities. The colophon is cut off mid-sentence at "great editor" (zhu chen), which would normally be followed by the Tibetan translator's name; the passage as supplied ends there. The full title of the tantra, rendered here from the Tibetan, is a long compound: "Great King of Tantras of the Samaya of Great Bliss, Vajra, and Meaningful Accomplishment" — this is a technical tantric title and has been preserved as closely as possible.

Just as the Bodhi tree now standing at Bodh Gayā neither is nor is not the same tree beneath which the Buddha attained awakening, so too this stupa is intended as the next generation of stupa — dependently arising according to the conditions of its environment, and ceaselessly proclaiming the Dharma for the benefit of all sentient beings.
